AND the aforesaid William Archbishop of Canterbury, William Bishop of St. Asaph, Francis Bishop of Ely, John Bishop of Chichester, Thomas Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Bishop of Peterborough, and Jonathan Bishop of Bristol, being present here in Court in their own Persons, pray Oyer of the Information aforesaid; and it is read to them, which being read and heard by them the said Archbishop and Bishops, the said Archbishop and Bishops say, that they are Peers of this Kingdom of England, and Lords of Parliament, and each of them is one of the Peers of this Kingdom of England, and a Lord of the Parliament, and that they being (as before is manifest) Peers of this Kingdom of England, and Lords of Parliament, ought not to be compelled to answer instantly for the Misdemeanor aforesaid, mentioned in the said Information exhibited here against them in this Court; but they ought to be required to appear by due Process in Law issuing out of this Court here upon the Information aforesaid, and upon their Appearance to have a Copy of the said Information exhibited against them, and reasonable Time to imparle thereupon, and to advise with Counsel learned in the Law, concerning their Defence in that Behalf, before they be compelled to answer the said Information: Whereupon, for that the said Archbishop and Bishops were imprisoned, and by Writ of our Lord the King, of Habeas Corpus, directed to the Lieutenant of the Tower of London, are now brought here in Custody, without any Process upon the Information aforesaid issued against them, and without having any Copy of the said Information, or any Time given them to imparle, or be advised, they pray Judgment, and the Privilege of Peers of this Kingdom, in this Case to be allowed them; and that they the said Archbishop, and Bishops, may not be compelled instantly to answer the Information aforesaid, &c.

ROBERT SAWYER.
 HEN. FINCH.
 HEN. POLLEXFEN.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with your Lordship's Favour, this, in an ordinary Person's Case, would perhaps be thought not fair Dealing, or that which (it being in the Case of these Reverend Prelates) I shall not now name; to make all this Debate and Stir in a Point of this Nature; to take the Judgment of the Court after three or four Hours arguing, and when the Opinion of the Court has been delivered, then to put in a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court—

Sir Rob. Sawyer. It is no such Plea.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is so in Effect; but certainly it is such an Irregularity, and such an unfair way of proceeding as would not be endured in an ordinary Case; and I hope you will give so little Countenance to it, as to reject it, and make them plead according to the usual Course and Way of Proceedings. Certainly a Plea of this Nature, after so long an Argument, would be reckoned nothing but a Trick.

Mr. S. Pemberton. We hope the Court and you are not of one Mind, Mr. Attorney, in this Matter; we desire the Court to receive the Plea.

Mr. Att. Gen. With Submission, the Court is not bound to receive Pleas that are put in purely for Delay, as this is; for the Judgment of the Court has been already given in the very Matter of this Plea; and for rejecting a Plea, it is done every Day; if a Man puts in a meer trifling dilatory Plea, the Court may reject it. Does this Plea contain any thing in it, but what has been argued and debated pro & con, and settled by the Court already? If they will put in any Plea in Chief they may, but such a Plea as this, I hope shall not have so much Countenance as to be received by the Court.

Mr. Pollexfen. Do you demur to it? if you please, Mr. Attorney, we will join in Demurrer with you.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, there will be no need of that.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Surely the Court will never give so much Countenance to it, as to receive it.

Mr. Finch. If you will please either to reply or demur, Mr. Solicitor, we are here to maintain the Plea.

Mr. Soll. Gen. If you were here, you would say the same thing that we do. My Lord, this Plea is, that my Lords the Bishops are not bound to plead instantly; so that 'tis not a Question, Whether they ought to answer, or not to answer, but whether they ought to answer immediately, and what do they say more? They would have an Imparance, and Time to consult with their Counsel what they shall plead, which is all but one and the same Thing; and what is the Reason they give for this? They induce it thus, These Noble Persons are Peers of the Realm, and so ought not to be compelled to plead immediately: This, if I mistake not, is the Sum of their Plea. Now pray, my Lord, what sort of Plea is this? It is not a Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, though it do in a sort decline the Justice of the Court: Is it a Plea in Abatement? No, it is not; for it is only to gain Time: And do they now offer any thing more for themselves, than what was said by their Counsel before? only that we are Peers of the Realm, and that such is the Privilege of Peers, that they ought to have an Imparance, and Time to plead, and that they ought not to answer presently. My Lord, this Matter hath been long agitated in the Court already; your Lordship, and the Court, have given your Judgments, and we know your Lordship, and the Court, will not admit of Tricks to delay the King's Causes. We all know the Term is a short Term; and what I said in the Beginning upon this Matter, I say again, it is the Interest, and for the Honour of my Lords the Bishops (if they understand their own Interest, and value their Honour) to have this Cause tried as soon as may be; but this Trifling and Tricking is only for Delay: For what Issue can be taken upon this Plea? Certainly none. And if we should demur, what will be the End of that, but only to get Time to slip over the Term? If there were any thing worth the considering in this Plea, and that had not been already debated and settled, then it might concern us to give some Answer to it; but we have spent three Hours, by my Watch, in the Dispute, and the Matter having been over-ruled already, it is Time to have an End of it. Sure the Court will never be so treated by these Persons that are of Counsel for my Lords the Bishops, for it cannot be thought that my Lords the Bishops do it of themselves; and whether the Court will be so served, we submit to your Lordship. Certainly you will not receive such a Plea as this, especially it being in Paper, you will never countenance such a Practice so far as to give these Lords Time to trifle with the Court. If any such thing as a Plea be tender'd to the Court, it ought to be in Parchment; and if they would have an Imparance, there ought to have been an Entry of a Petit Licentiam interloquendi, upon the Roll, but not such a Plea as this; for this in effect is no more than desiring an Imparance, which if it be granted of course, upon such a Prayer entered upon the Roll, you take it of course; but if it be not of course, you cannot come in by way of Plea, it must be by Suggestion upon the Roll, and a Conceditur entred. If this be admitted as a Precedent, every Man hereafter that comes in upon any Information, will take advantage of it, and plead such a Plea as this; and if you grant an Imparance in this Case upon this Plea, you must grant an Imparance in every Case. Certainly the Law is not to be altered, the Methods of Proceedings ought to be the same in every Case. And I hope you will not make a particular Rule in the Case of my Lords the Bishops, without a special Reason for it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. We put in this Plea, my Lord, and are ready to abide by it; and we say that, according to the Course of the Court, it ought to be received.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, but good Mr. Serjeant, 'tis in the Discretion of the Court whether they will receive it or not; for the Matter has been in Debate already, and has received a Determination; the Court has over-ruled them in this very Point already, and there is no more in this Plea than was in the Argument before, and therefore it ought to be rejected as a frivolous Plea.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Here is a Plea offered in Writing, and in Paper; the Court sees what it is, and I hope you will give no Countenance to it.

Mr. Pollexfen. I do hope, my Lord, you will not judge this is a frivolous Plea; I think our Case is such, that you will not do that; if you think fit you may over-rule it, but I hope you will not refuse it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. The Court will certainly refuse a frivolous Plea, and they may do it.

Mr. Pollexfen. But, Mr. Solicitor, I hope the Court will consider of it, whether it be a frivolous Plea or not. It is true, there has been a Debate about the Course of the Court, and there has been an Examination of the Clerk of the Office, and the Court has gone upon his Certificate; but yet still perhaps it may remain in Doubt, and it being a Question of such a Consequence as this, it may very well deserve the Court's Consideration. There never was a judicial Settlement of it that I know of yet; nor do I know any way of having it satisfactorily settled, but by the Judgment of the Court entred upon Record. Here we offer a Plea that contains the Matter in Debate, and this Plea will appear upon Record; and if upon Consideration of the Plea your Lordship shall think fit to over-rule it, and be of opinion against the Plea, then will you, by your Resolution, in a judicial way, settle the Question that has hitherto been in Controversy.

L. C. J. Mr. Pollexfen, I would ask you whether the Counsel have dealt ingenuously with the Court or no in this Matter, after four Hours Debate, and the Opinion of the Court delivered, to come and sum up all the Arguments in such a Plea as this, and so put us upon debating it over again?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, certainly this has been done before, without Offence. After we had moved for a Thing which was denied upon Motion, it is no such great Disrespect to the Court, with Submission, to put the same Matter into a Plea, for the judicial Opinion of the Court.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That, without all Question, has been done a great many times.

Mr. Soll. Gen. How many times have you been accused of playing Tricks, Sir Robert Sawyer?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Not so many as you, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I don't ask it as if I questioned it; for I assure you, I don't doubt it of your Part at all.

L. C. J. Pray, Gentlemen, don't fall out with one another at the Bar: we have had Time enough spent already.

Mr. Pollexfen. Truly, my Lord, I would not trick with the Court in any Case, nor on the other side would I be wanting to advise, and do for my Client what I am able, and lawfully may. We have laboured all we could to get Time for my Lords the Bishops to imparle to this Information; and we have been the more earnest in it, because it concerns us, who attend this Bar, to take what Care we can that the Course of the Court may be observed; but as for this Matter, we suppose this Practice of the Court is not in Law a good Practice. Now what Way in the World has any Man to bring this so in question, as to have a judicial Resolution of the Court about it, but by such a Plea? We take it, that it is usual and legal for us to have an Imparance, and a Man would imparle, but the Court upon Motion refused to give him an Imparance. Is it not, think you, very fit for the Party to have this judicially entered upon Record? where all this Matter will appear, and the Party may be relieved by Writ of Error, if the Judgment of the Court should be wrong; but truly I cannot see how the Court can refuse the Plea; for if so be a Plea be pleaded, they have their Liberty to answer it on the other side by a Replication, or else to demur, and the Judgment of the Court may be had upon it one Way or other; but the Court will never go about to hinder any Man from pleading where he may plead by Law. Here is a Plea put in, and the Court sure will take no Notice what is the Matter of the Plea, till the other Party have either replied or demurred. The same thing may happen in any other Plea that is pleaded, and the Party will be without Remedy upon a Writ of Error, because the Plea being rejected, there does nothing appear upon Record.

Truly

Truly for the Court to reject and refuse the Plea, would be as hard as the refusing of the Imparlance, and we know no Way we have to help ourselves.

Mr. Soll. Gen. You might have entered your Suggestion for an Imparlance upon the Roll, and then it would have appeared upon Record, and if the Court had unjustly denied it you, you would have had the Benefit of that Suggestion elsewhere. Truly, my Lord, I think if any thing be tricking this is, for it is plainly ill pleading.

Mr. Finch. Then pray demur to it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. No, Sir, 'tis fencing with the Court, and that the Court won't suffer. It is only to delay; and if we should demur, then there must be Time for arguing; and what is the Question after all, but whether you would be of the same Opinion To-morrow, that you are To-day?

Sir Robert Sawyer. I would put Mr. Solicitor in Mind of Fitz-Harris's Case, which he knows very well: He put in a Plea, and we for the King desired it might not be received; but the Court gave him Time to put it into Form, and I was fain to join in Demurrer presently, and so may these Gentlemen do if they please.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Yes, Sir Robert Sawyer, I do know the Case of Fitz-Harris very well; I was assigned of Counsel by the Court for him; we were four of us, and there was a Plea put in, but no such Plea as this. There was an Indictment of High-Treason against him, in which Case it is agreed on all Hands, that the Party must answer presently; but because he suggested here at the Bar, says he, I have Matter to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court, and shewed what it was. I was impeached before the Lords in Parliament for Treason, for the same Matter of which I am here accused. The Court did give him Time to put this into Form, and we were assigned his Counsel to draw it up for him, and accordingly we did put that Matter into a Plea, that we were here indicted for one and the same Treason for which we were impeached in Parliament, and that that Impeachment was still depending, and so we rested in the Judgment of the Court, whether we should be put to answer it here. This was a Plea that carried something of Weight in it, and not such a trifling one as this. It is true, Sir Robert Sawyer, who was then Attorney-General, did press the Court to over-rule it immediately; but it being a Matter of some Importance, the Court would not do that, but had it argued solemnly by Counsel on both Sides, and at last there was the Opinion of three Judges against one, that the Plea was no good Plea. But what is that to such a trifling Plea as this?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, favour me a few Words about that Case of Mr. Fitz-Harris. It is true, there was a Plea put in, and it is true also, that that which brought that Plea to be argued, was the Demurrer that was put in by Sir Robert Sawyer, who was so zealous and hasty in the Matter, that because the Court did not presently over-rule the Plea, as he desired, he immediately demurred, before the rest of the King's Counsel could offer at any thing about it; and thereupon it was put to the Judgment of the Court, and no doubt must be argued, and spoke to on both Sides; but where Pleas are really in Abuse of the Court, the Court never gives any Countenance to them: Nay, truly I have known another Course taken; I am unwilling to mention a Case that happened much about that Time too in this Court, because of that Regard I have to my Lords the Bishops, but Sir Robert Sawyer remembers it very well, I am sure: It was the Case of one Whitaker, who for a Thing like this, putting in a trifling Plea, not only had his Plea rejected, but something else was ordered. I could shew the Precedent, but that I am more tender than to press it in this Case, because there the Court order'd an Attachment to go against him; but I will put these Gentlemen in Mind of another Case, and that is the Case of a Peer too: It is the Case of my Lord Delamere, which they cannot but remember, it being in the highest Case, a Case of Treason. When my Lord Delamere was arraigned, and to be tried for High-Treason, he put in a Plea before my Lord Chancellor, who was then High Steward, and Sir Robert Sawyer, who was then Attorney-General, prayed the Lord Steward, and the Peers, to reject it, and the Court did reject it (as we hope the Court will do this), and would never so far delay Justice as to admit of a Plea that carried no Colour in it, and there was no Demurrer put into the Plea, but it was absolutely refused. My Lord, in this Case we have had the Judgment of the Court already, and therefore we must now desire that this Plea may be rejected.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we have now gone out of the Way far enough already; it is Time for us to return, and bring the Case into its due Methods. We pray your Lordship to reject this Plea.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, we are in your Judgment, whether you will receive this Plea or not.

L. C. J. You shall have my Judgment presently; but my Brothers are to speak first.

Mr. Just. Allyn. Mr. Pollexfen makes it a Question, whether this Plea may be rejected nor not, or whether it ought to be received, and the Court give their Judgment upon it.

Mr. Just. Powell. Truly I do not know whether the Court can reject this as a frivolous Plea.

L. C. J. Surely we may, and frequently do.

Mr. Att. Gen. You do it every Day; 'tis a frequent Motion: If a frivolous Plea be put in, before it be entered upon Record as a Plea, the Court may refuse it, if they see Cause.

Mr. Just. Allyn. Truly if it may be, this appears to me a frivolous Plea.

Mr. Just. Powell. I do not know how the Court can reject any Plea that the Party will put in, if he will stand by it, as they say they will here; and I cannot think this a frivolous Plea, it concerning the Privilege of Peers, and Lords of Parliament.

Mr. Just. Allyn. Brother Powell, I would be as tender of the Privileges of Parliament, and speak with as much Respect of the Privileges of the Peerage, as any body else; but for the Matter of the Plea, truly it appears to me, that the Peers are named in it only for Fashion sake, and it is frivolous.

Mr. Just. Powell. The Matter of the Plea, except only their being said to be Peers and Lords of Parliament, was spoke to before, but it was only aliter, and by way of Motion; but now it may come before us for our Judicial Determination.

Mr. Just. Allyn. Pray let the Plea be read again. [Which was done.]
Mr. Just. Allyn. This Plea is no more but that which has been denied already upon solemn Debate; and if it be in the Power of the Court to reject any Plea, surely we ought to reject this. Indeed I know not what Power we have to reject a Plea; but if we have Power, this ought to be rejected.

Mr. Just. Powell. I declare my Opinion; I am for receiving the Plea, and considering of it.

Mr. Just. Holloway. I think as this Case is, this Plea ought not to be received, but rejected, because 'tis no more than what has been denied already. I am not ashamed to say, that I should be very glad and ready to do all things that are consistent with my Duty, to shew Respect to my Lords the Bishops, some of whom are my particular Friends; but I am upon my Oath, and must go according to the Course of Law.

L. C. J. We have asked, and informed ourselves from the Bar, whether we may or can reject a Plea; and truly what they have said, hath satisfied me that we may, if the Plea be frivolous; and this being a Plea that contains no more than what has been over-ruled already, after hearing what could be said on both Sides, I think the Court is not bound to receive the Plea, but may reject it, and my Lords the Bishops must plead over.

Mr. Att. Gen. We pray they may plead in chief.

Clerk. My Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, is your Grace guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Archbishop of Cant. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, is your Lordship guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Bishop of St. Asaph. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of Ely, is your Lordship guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Bishop of Ely. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of Chichester, is your Lordship guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Bishop of Chichester. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells, is your Lordship guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Bishop of Bath and Wells. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of Peterborough, is your Lordship guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Bishop of Peterborough. Not guilty.

Clerk. My Lord Bishop of Bristol, is your Lordship guilty of the Matter charged upon you in this Information, or not guilty?

Bishop of Bristol. Not guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I pray the Clerk may join Issue on the Behalf of the King, so that we may come to Trial; and we would have these Gentlemen take Notice, that we intend to try this Cause on this Day Fortnight; and we pray Liberty of the Court, that we may try it at Bar.

L. C. J. Are you not too hasty in that Motion, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we should indeed make it the Motion of another Day; but we do now tell them this ex abundanti, because my Lords the Bishops are now here, and will, I suppose, take Notice, that we do intend to move it another Day.

Mr. Soll. Gen. We now give them Notice, that we intend to move.

Sir Robert Sawyer. For that you need not trouble yourselves; we are very desirous it should be tried at Bar, and that as soon as you please.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well then you take Notice it will be tried this Day Fortnight.

L. C. J. Well, what shall we do with my Lords the Bishops?

Mr. Att. Gen. They areailable, no question of it, my Lord, if they please.

L. C. J. Then, my Lords, we are ready to bail you, if you please.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We desire your Lordship would be pleased to take their own Recognizance.

L. C. J. What say you, Mr. Attorney? I think that may do well enough.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with all my Heart; we will do it.

L. C. J. In what Penalty shall we take it?

Mr. Att. Gen. One thousand Pound I think, my Lord, his Grace, and five hundred Pounds a-piece the rest.

Sir Robert Sawyer. What Necessity is there for so much?

Mr. Att. Gen. Look you, Sir Robert Sawyer, to shew you that we do insist upon nothing that shall look like Hardship, what my Lords have been pleased to offer concerning taking their own Recognizance, we agree to, and what Sums the Court pleases.

Mr. Soll. Gen. It is all one to us; we leave it wholly to the Court.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Only I have one thing more to beg of your Lordship, on the Behalf of my Lords the Bishops, that you will please to order, that in the Return of the Jury there may be forty-eight returned.

Mr. Att. Gen. I tell you what we will do; Sir Samuel Asty shall have the Freeholders Book, if you please, and shall return twenty-four.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Eight and forty has been always the Course, when the Jury is returned by Sir Samuel Asty.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I pray the Officer may return the Jury, according as is usual in Cases of this Nature.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you admit of a Trial at Bar, Gentlemen?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Yes, and try it when you will.

L. C. J. They say it shall be this Day Fortnight, and let there be a Jury according to the usual Course.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We pray it may be in the Presence of the Attorneys or Solicitors on both Sides.

L. C. J. What is the usual Course, Sir Samuel Asty? Do you use to return twenty-four, or forty-eight, and then strike out twelve a-piece, which I perceive they desire for the Defendants?

Sir Samuel Asty. My Lord, the Course is both ways, and then it may be as your Lordship and the Court will please to order it.

L. C. J. Then take forty-eight, that is the fairest.

Mr. Att. Gen. We agree to it; we desire nothing but a fair Jury.
Sir. Rob. Sawyer. Nor we neither; try it when you will.
L. C. J. Take a Recognizance of his Grace my Lord of Canterbury in 200 l. and the rest of my Lords in 100 l. a-piece.
Mr. Att. Gen. What your Lordship pleases for that, we submit to it.
Clerk. My Lord of Canterbury, your Grace acknowledges to owe unto our Sovereign Lord the King the Sum of 200 l. upon Condition that your Grace shall appear in this Court on this Day Fortnight, and so from Day to Day, till you shall be discharged by the Court, and not to depart without Leave of the Court. Is your Grace contented?
Archbisp. of Canterbury. I do acknowledge it.
Clerk. My Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, you acknowledge to owe unto our Sovereign Lord the King the Sum of 100 l. upon Condition that your Lordship shall appear in this Court on this Day Fortnight, and so from Day to Day, until you shall be discharged by the Court, and not to depart without Leave of the Court. Is your Lordship contented?
Bisp. of St. Asaph. I do acknowledge it.
[The like Recognizances were taken of all the rest of the Bishops, and then the Court arose.]

FRIDAY, June 29th, 1688.

Clerk. CRIER, make Proclamation thrice.
Crier. O yes! O yes! O yes! Our Sovereign Lord the King straightly charges and commands every one to keep Silence, upon Pain of Imprisonment.
Clerk of the Crown. Call the Defendants.
Crier. William Lord Archbishop of Canterbury.—Archbisp. Here.
Crier. William Lord Bishop of St. Asaph.—Bisp. of St. Asaph. Here.
[And so the rest of the Bishops were called, and answered severally.]
Clerk. Gardez vosres Challenges.
Swear Sir Roger Langley.
Crier. Take the Book Sir Roger. You shall well and truly try this Issue between our Sovereign Lord the King and William Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and others, according to your Evidence. So help you God.
The same Oath was administered to all the Jury, whose Names follow, viz.
Sir Roger Langley, Bar. Jessery Nightingale, Esq. Nicholas Grice, Esq.
Sir William Hill, Knt. William Withers, Esq. Michael Arnold, Esq.
Roger Jennings, Esq. William Avery, Esq. Thomas Done, Esq.
Thomas Harriot, Esq. Thomas Austin, Esq. Rich. Shoreditch, Esq.
Clerk. You Gentlemen of the Jury who are sworn, hearken to the Record: Sir Thomas Powys, Knight, his Majesty's Attorney-General, has exhibited an Information, which does set forth as followeth,

MEMORANDUM, That Sir Thomas Powys, Knt. Attorney-General of our Lord the King, who for our said Lord the King in this Behalf prosecutes, came here in his own Person into the Court of our said Lord the King, before the King himself at Westminster, on Friday next after the Morrow of the Holy Trinity in this Term; and on the Behalf of our said Lord the King, giveth the Court here to understand and be informed, That our said Lord the King, out of his signal Clemency, and gracious Intention towards the Subjects of his Kingdom of England, by his Royal Prerogative, on the 4th Day of April, in the third Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at Westminster in the County of Middlesex, did publish his Royal Declaration, entituled His Majesty's Gracious Declaration to all his loving Subjects for Liberty of Conscience, bearing Date the same Day and Year, sealed with the Great Seal of England; in which Declaration is contained, James R. prout in the first Declaration before recited.

And the said Attorney General of our said Lord the King, on Behalf of our said Lord the King, further giveth the Court here to understand and be informed, That afterwards, to wit, on the 27th Day of April, in the fourth Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, our said Lord the King, out of his like Clemency, and gracious Intention towards his Subjects of his Kingdom of England, by his Royal Prerogative, did publish his other Royal Declaration, entituled, His Majesty's Gracious Declaration, bearing Date the same Day and Year last mentioned, sealed with his Great Seal of England; in which Declaration is contained, James R. Our Conduct has been such, &c. prout in the second Declaration before recited.

Which said Royal Declaration of our said Lord the King last mentioned, our said Lord the King afterwards, to wit, on the 30th Day of April, in the fourth Year of his Reign aforesaid, at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, did cause to be printed and published throughout all England; and for the more solemn Declaring, Notification, and Manifestation of his Royal Grace, Favour, and Bounty towards all his Liege People, specified in the Declaration last mentioned, afterwards, to wit, on the 4th Day of May, in the fourth Year of his Reign, at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, our said Lord the King in due manner did order as followeth.

At the Court at Whitehall, 4th of May, 1688.

By the King's most Excellent Majesty, and the Lords of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council.

IT is this Day ordered by his Majesty in Council, That his Majesty's Gracious Declaration, bearing Date the twenty-seventh of April last, be read at the usual Time of Divine Service, upon the twentieth and twenty-seventh of this Month, in all Churches and Chapels within the Cities of London and Westminster, and ten Miles thereabout; and upon the third and tenth of June next, in all other Churches and Chapels throughout this Kingdom. And it is hereby further Ordered, That the Right Reverend the Bishops cause the said Declaration to be sent and distributed throughout their several respective Dioceses, to be read accordingly.

W. BRIDGMAN.

And further, the said Attorney General of our said Lord the King, on behalf of our said Lord the King, giveth the Court here to understand and be informed, that after the making of the said Order, to wit, on the 18th Day of May, in the fourth Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King, at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, William Archbishop of Canterbury, of Lambeth in the County of Surry; William Bishop of St. Asaph, of St. Asaph in the County of Flint; Francis Bishop of Ely, of the Parish of St. Andrew Holbourn in the County of Middlesex; John Bishop of Chichester, of Chichester in the County of Sussex; Thomas Bishop of Bath and Wells, of the City of Wells in the County of Somerset; Thomas Bishop of Peterborough, of the Parish of St. Andrew Holbourn in the County of Middlesex; and Jonathan Bishop of Bristol, of the City of Bristol, did consult and conspire among themselves to diminish the Regal Authority, and Royal Prerogative, Power and Government of our said Lord the King, in the Premises, and to infringe and elude the said Order; and in Prosecution and Execution of the Conspiracy aforesaid, They the said William Archbishop of Canterbury, William Bishop of St. Asaph, Francis Bishop of Ely, John Bishop of Chichester, Thomas Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Bishop of Peterborough, and Jonathan Bishop of Bristol, on the said eighteenth Day of May, in the fourth Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King aforesaid, with Force and Arms, &c. at Westminster aforesaid, in the County of Middlesex aforesaid, falsly, unlawfully, maliciously, seditiously, and scandalously did frame, compose and write, and caused to be framed, composed and written, a certain false, feigned, malicious, pernicious and seditious Libel in Writing, concerning our said Lord the King, and his Royal Declaration and Order aforesaid, (under pretence of a Petition) and the same false, feigned, malicious, pernicious and seditious Libel, by them the aforesaid William Archbishop of Canterbury, William Bishop of St. Asaph, Francis Bishop of Ely, John Bishop of Chichester, Thomas Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Bishop of Peterborough, and Jonathan Bishop of Bristol, with their own Hands respectively being subscribed, on the Day and Year, and in the Place last mentioned, in the Presence of our said Lord the King, with Force and Arms, &c. did publish and cause to be published; in which said false, feigned, malicious, pernicious and seditious Libel is contained, The humble Petition, &c. prout before in the Petition, to these Words [reasonable Construction] in manifest contempt of our said Lord the King, and of the Laws of this Kingdom, to the evil Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the Peace of our said Lord the King, his Crown and Dignity, &c. Whereupon the said Attorney General of our said Lord the King, on Behalf of our said Lord the King, prays the Advice of the Court here in the Premises, and due Process of Law to be made out against the aforesaid William Archbishop of Canterbury, William Bishop of St. Asaph, Francis Bishop of Ely, John Bishop of Chichester, Thomas Bishop of Bath and Wells, Thomas Bishop of Peterborough, and Jonathan Bishop of Bristol, in this Behalf, to answer our said Lord the King in and concerning the Premises, &c.

T. POWYS.
 W. WILLIAMS.

To this Information the Defendants have pleaded Not guilty, and for their Trial have put themselves upon their Country, and his Majesty's Attorney General likewise, which Country you are. Your Charge is to enquire whether the Defendants, or any of them, are guilty of the Matter contained in this Information that hath been read unto you, or not guilty. If you find them, or any of them guilty, you are to say so; and if you find them, or any of them, not guilty, you are to say so, and hear your Evidence. Crier. make Proclamation.

Crier. O yes! If any one will give Evidence on Behalf of our Sovereign Lord the King, against the Defendants, of the Matters whereof they are impeached, let them come forth, and they shall be heard.

Mr. Wright. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Information exhibited by his Majesty's Attorney General against the most Reverend my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and six other Honourable and Noble Bishops in the Information mentioned; And the Information sets forth, That the King, out of his Clemency and benign Intention towards his Subjects of this Kingdom, did put forth his Royal Declaration, bearing Date the fourth Day of April, in the third Year of his Reign, entituled, His Majesty's Gracious Declaration to all his loving Subjects for Liberty of Conscience; and that afterwards, the twenty-seventh of April, in the fourth Year of his Reign, he published another Declaration, both which have been read to you; and for the further Manifestation and Notification of his Grace in the said Declaration, bearing Date the twenty-seventh of April last, his Majesty did order, that the said Declaration should be read on the twentieth and twenty-seventh of May in the Cities of London and Westminster, and ten Miles about; and on the third and tenth of June throughout the whole Kingdom: And that the Right Reverend the Bishops should send the said Declaration to be distributed throughout their respective Dioceses, to be read accordingly. But that the said Archbishop and Bishops the eighteenth of May, in the said fourth Year of his said Majesty's Reign, having conspired and consulted among themselves to diminish the King's Power and Prerogative, did falsly, unlawfully, maliciously, and scandalously make, compose, and write a false, scandalous, malicious and seditious Libel, under pretence of a Petition; which Libel they did publish in the Presence of the said King; the Contents of which Libel you have likewise heard read. To this they have pleaded not guilty: You, Gentlemen, are Judges of the Fact; if we prove this Fact, you are to find them guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard this Information read by the Clerk, and it has been likewise opened to you at the Bar; but before we go to our Evidence, perhaps it may not be amiss for us, that are of Counsel for the King, now in the Beginning of this Cause, to settle the Question right before you, as well to tell you what my Lords the Bishops are not prosecuted for, as what they are. First, I am to tell you, and I believe you cannot yourselves but observe, that my Lords are not prosecuted as Bishops, nor much less are they prosecuted for any Point or Matter of Religion, but they are prosecuted as Subjects of this Kingdom, and only for a Temporal Crime, as those that have injured and affronted the King to his very Face; for it is said to be done in his own Presence. In the next Place, they are not prosecuted for any Nonfeasance, or not doing or omitting to do any thing, but as they are Actors, for censuring of his Majesty and his Government, and for giving their Opinion in Matters wholly relating to Law and Government: And I cannot omit here to take Notice, that there is not any one thing that the Law is more jealous of, or does more carefully provide for the Prevention and Punishment Punishment of, than all Accusations and Arraignments of the Government. No Man is allowed to accuse even the most inferior Magistrate of any Misbehaviour in his Office, unless it be in a legal Court; though the Fact is true. No Man may say of a Justice of Peace to his Face, that he is unjust in his Office. No Man may tell a Judge, either by Word or Petition, you have given an unjust, or an ill Judgment, and I will not obey it; it is against the Rules and Law of the Kingdom, or the like. No Man may say of the great Men of the Nation, much less of the great Officers of the Kingdom, that they do act unreasonably or unjustly, or the like; least of all may any Man say any such thing of the King; for these Matters tend to possess the People, that the Government is ill administered; and the Consequence of that is, to set them upon desiring a Reformation; and what that tends to, and will end in, we have all had a sad and too dear bought Experience: The last Age will abundantly satisfy us, whither such a Thing does tend. Men are to take their proper Remedies for Redress of any Grievances they lie under, and the Law has provided sufficiently for that. These things are so very well known to all Men of the Law, and indeed to all the People of England of any Understanding, that I need not, nor will not, stand any longer upon it, but come to the Matter that is now before you, Gentlemen, to be tried. The Fact that we have laid we must prove, rather to keep the Formality of a Trial, than to pretend to inform you, or tell you what you do not know: It is publickly notorious to the whole World; but because we must go on in the regular Methods of Law, we shall prove the Facts in the Order they are laid in the Information. First, we take Notice, that his Majesty, of his great Clemency and Goodness to his People, and out of his Desire that all his Subjects might live easily under him, (of which I think never Prince gave greater or more plain Evidence of his Intentions that Way) the fourth of April, 1687, he did issue forth his Royal Declaration for Liberty of Conscience. This Matter, without all Question, was welcome to all his People that stood in need of it; and those that did not could not but say, the Thing in the Nature of it was very just and gracious; but presently it must be surmised, that the King was not in Earnest, and would not, nor could not, make good his Promise: But to take away all Surmises, his Majesty was pleased by his Declaration of the twenty-seventh of April last, not only to repeat his former Declaration, but likewise to renew his former Promises to his People, and to assure them that he still was, and yet is, of the same Opinion that he had at first declared himself to be of; nay, we further shew you, that to the End that this thing might be known to all his People, even to the meanest Men, who, it may be, were not willing or able to buy the Declaration, and that the King himself might be under higher Obligations, if it were possible, than his own Word, he was desirous it should be repeated in the Churches, and read in that sacred Place, that all his People might hear what he had promised, and given his own sacred Word for; and he himself might be under the solemn Tie and Obligation to keep his Word, by remembering that his Promises had, by his own Command, been published in the Time of Divine Service, in the House of God; and thereupon was the Order of Council made, that has been likewise read to you, which does direct, that it should be read in all the Churches and Chapels in the Kingdom; and you have heard, and we shall prove, what a Return his Majesty has had for this Grace and Kindness of his: You'll find, when they come to read that which they call a Petition, all their Thanks his Majesty had for his Favour and Goodness to his People, 'tis only hard Words, and a heavy Accusation, such as a private Person would be little able to bear. I will not aggravate the Matter, but only say thus much, that his Majesty, who was always a Prince of as great Clemency as ever this Kingdom had, and who was represented for all that as a Prince of the greatest Cruelty, before his Accession to the Crown, by his Enemies, is now accused by his Friends for this Effect of his Mercy. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, his Majesty resented this ill Usage so far, that he has ordered, and thought fit to have a publick Vindication of his Honour in this Matter, by this Trial; and we shall go on to our Proofs, and we do not doubt but you will do his Majesty (as you do all other Persons) Right.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will go on to prove the Parts of this Information; and we will proceed according to the Method which Mr. Attorney has opened, and which is pursuant to the Order of the Facts laid in the Information. Give us the first Declaration under the Great Seal; the Declaration of the 4th of April, 1687.

[The Declaration was delivered into the Court.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read the Date of it first.

Clerk reads. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the 4th Day of April, 1678, and in the third Year of Our Reign.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read the Title of it, Sir.

Clerk. It is entituled, His Majesty's Gracious Declaration to all his loving Subjects for Liberty of Conscience.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is it under Seal? Is the Great Seal to it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Give it down to Sir Robert Sawyer, that he may see it; for I would have every thing as clear as possible.-----Sir Robert Sawyer, will you have it read?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, we would save as much of the Time of the Court as may be.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then pray put in the second Declaration of the 27th of April last.

Clerk reads. Given at Our Court at Whitehall, the 27th Day of April, 1688, in the fourth Year of Our Reign; and it is entituled, His Majesty's Gracious Declaration.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that under the Great Seal too?

Clerk. Yes it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Deliver that down likewise, that they may see it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We are satisfied, you need not read it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then where is the Order of Council for the reading of it?

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Sir John Nicholas.-----There he is.

[Sir John Nicholas sworn.]

L. C. J. Come Mr. Attorney, what do you ask Sir John Nicholas?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hand the Order to Sir John Nicholas.-----Is that the Order of Council, Sir John?

Sir John Nicholas. The Book, Sir, is not in my Custody.-----There is the Register that keeps it, he has it here to produce.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Mr. Gantlett.

[Mr. Gantlett sworn]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that the Council-Book?

Mr. Gantlett. Yes, this is the Council-Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then turn to the Order of the fourth of May, the King's Order of Council for the reading the Declaration.

Mr. Gantlett. There it is, Sir.

[The Book delivered into Court.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read it, I pray.

Clerk reads. At the Court at Whitehall, the fourth of May, 1688.-----and so reads the Order of Council.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have one Thing that is mentioned in the Information, that this Declaration was printed; if that be denied, we will call Henry Hills, his Majesty's Printer, because we would prove all our Information as it is laid.

L. C. J. You must do so, Mr. Solicitor; you must prove the whole Declaration.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Crier, call Henry Hills.

[He was called, but did not presently appear.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Bridgman.-----Though these Declarations prove themselves, we have them here printed.-----But swear Mr. Bridgman.

[Mr. Bridgman sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew Mr. Bridgman the two Declarations.

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We ask you, Sir, if the two Declarations were printed?

Mr. Bridgman. What Declarations do you mean, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You know what Declarations I mean well enough; but we'll ask you particularly. You know the Declaration that was made the 4th of April, in the third Year of the King.-----was it printed?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, it was printed by the King's Order.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was that of the 27th of April in the fourth Year of the King, printed?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, they were both printed by the King's Order.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then the next Thing in Course is the Bishops Paper.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Bridgman, pray let me ask you one Question; Did you ever compare the Print with that under Seal?

Mr. Bridgman. I did not compare them, Sir Robert Sawyer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He does swear they were printed by the King's Order.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Good Mr. Solicitor, give me Leave to ask him a Question.-----Can you swear then that they are the same?

Mr. Bridgman. I was not asked that Question, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Come then, Mr. Bridgman, I'll ask you.-----Do you believe they are the same?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that an Answer to my Question?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We must ask him Questions as well as you, Sir Robert.-----What say you, Do you believe it to be the same?

L. C. J. You hear Mr. Solicitor's Question, answer it, Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, my Lord, I do believe it.

L. C. J. Well, that's enough.

Mr. Att. Gen. If there were Occasion, we have them here compared, and they are the same.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. With Submission, my Lord, in all these Cases, if they will prove any Fact that is laid in an Information, they must prove it by those that know it of their own Knowledge.-----Do you know it to be the same?

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's very well, Sir.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Ay, so it is, Mr. Solicitor. It is a wonderful thing, my Lord, that we cannot be permitted to ask a Question.-----Do you know it to be the same, Mr. Bridgman, I ask you again?

Mr. Bridgman. I have not compared them, I tell you, Sir Robert Sawyer.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then that is no Proof.

L. C. J. Would you have a Man swear above his Belief? He tells you he believes it is the same.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that Proof of an Information?

L. C. J. Well, you'll have your Time to make your Objections by and by.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then swear Sir John Nicholas.

Sir John Nicholas. I am sworn already.

Mr. Att. Gen. I see you have a Paper in your Hand, Sir John Nicholas; Pray who had you that Paper from?

Sir John Nicholas. I will give you an Account of it as well as I can.

Mr. Pollexfen. Before they go to another thing, my Lord, we think they have failed in their Proof of their Information, about the Printing this Declaration.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where is Mr. Hills?

Mr. Just. Allynbone. They have laid, that it was printed by the King's Order; and it is such a Matter, Mr. Solicitor, as you may clear, if you will, sure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is Mr. Hills; now I see him.

L. C. J. I was going to give Order, that you should send to the Printing-house for him.

Mr. Just. Allynbone. They may put this Matter out of Doubt too, if they will, on the other Side; for I see they have a Copy in Print, and there's the Original; they may compare them if they please.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I am very glad to hear such a strong Objection.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We would clear the Way for you, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, you put Straws in our Way; we shall be able enough to clear it without your Help. Swear Mr. Hills, and young Mr. Graham here.

[Hills and Graham sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Graham, did you compare any of these printed Declarations with the Original?

Graham. Yes, I did compare some of them, and did make Amendments as I went along.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew one that you have compar'd with the Original.

Mr. Att. Gen. Hills is here himself, we'll ask him. Are you sworn, Sir?

Crier. He is sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, were the King's Declarations for Liberty of Conscience printed, both of them?

Hills. Ay, an't please you, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. You printed them, I think?

Hills. Yes, I did print them.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Hills, you say they were printed: Upon your Oath, after they were printed, did you examine them with the Original?

under Seal?—Hills. They were examined before they were printed.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Did you examine them?

Hills. I did not, here's one that did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who is that?—Hills. It is Mr. Williams here.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear him.

[Williams sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you hear, Williams? Do you know that the King's Declarations for Liberty of Conscience, two of them, one of the 4th of April, and the other of the 27th of April were printed?

Williams. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you examine them after they were printed, by the Copy they were printed from?—Williams. I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where had you the Copy? Who had you it from?

Williams. I had it from Mr. Hills.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Williams, did you examine them with the Original under the Great Seal?—Williams. The first Declaration I did.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The second Declaration is the main.

Williams. The second was compos'd by the first.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Why, is there no more in the second Declaration than there was in the first?—Williams. Yes, there is, Sir.

Mr. Rob. Sawyer. Did you examine that with the Original under the Great Seal?—Williams. No, I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can any one tell who did examine it under the Great Seal?

Mr. Finch. Pray, what did you examine it by, Mr. Williams?

Williams. By a Copy that I receiv'd from Mr. Hills.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we will go on; and we desire Sir John Nicholas to give an Account where he had that Paper that he has in his Hand?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, it does not appear that the Copy that was printed is the true Copy of the Declaration.

Mr. Att. Gen. He says he had it from Mr. Hills.

Mr. Finch. Pray, Mr. Hills, what did you examine that Copy by which you gave to Mr. Williams?

Hills. I had the Copy from Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Finch. Did you examine it with the Original under the Great Seal?

Hills. I did not examine it, I had it from Mr. Bridgman.

Mr. Finch. What, was it under Seal?

Mr. Bridgman. It was the Original signed by the King.

Mr. Finch. But I ask you, was it under Seal?

Mr. Bridgman. Not under the Great Seal it was not, it was the very Declaration the King signed.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But it ought to be compared with the Original, or it is no good Proof that it is the same.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Robert Sawyer, you understand Collation better, sure, you should be assur'd of such weak Objections as this.

Williams. We never bring our Proof to the Great Seal.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But if you will have it Proof at Law, you must have it compared with the Original.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you think there is any great Strefs to be laid upon that? We only say it was printed.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But you have made it part of your Information, and therefore you must prove it.

L. C. J. I think there's Proof enough of that; there needs no such Nicety.

Mr. Pollexfen. Well, my Lord, we must submit, let them go on, we won't stand upon this.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then pray let me go on. Where had you that Paper, Sir John Nicholas?

Sir John Nicholas. I had this Paper from the King's Hand.

L. C. J. Put it in.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who had you it from, do you say?

Sir John Nicholas. From the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. About what Time had you it from the King, Sir?

Sir John Nicholas. I had it twice from the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was the first Time, Sir?

Sir John Nicholas. The first Time was in the Council, the 8th of this Month.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What became of it afterwards?

Sir John Nicholas. The King had it from me the 12th, and the 13th I had it from the King again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, deliver it this way into the Court: We will now go on, and prove the Bishops Hands to it. This is the Paper upon which we bring this Information: Gentlemen, it is all the Hand-writing of my Lord Archbishop, and signed by him and the rest of the Bishops.

Mr. Att. Gen. I suppose my Lords the Bishops will not put us to prove it, they will own their Hands.

L. C. J. Yes, Mr. Attorney, their Counsel will put you to prove it; I perceive your best way is to ask nothing of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we will desire nothing of them. We will go on to our Proofs. Call Sir Thomas Exton, Sir Richard Raynes, Mr. Brooks, Mr. Recorder, and Mr. William Middleton.

[Sir Thomas Exton appeared, and was sworn.]

L. C. J. What do you ask Sir Thomas Exton?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray convey that Paper to Sir Thomas Exton.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew that Paper to Sir Thomas Exton.—Sir Thomas, I would ask you one Question: Do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury?

Sir Tho. Exton. I'll give your Lordship what Account I can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, answer my Question; Do you know his Hand-writing?

Sir Tho. Exton. I never saw him write five Times in my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I ask you, upon your Oath, do you believe that to be his Hand-writing?

Sir Tho. Exton. I do believe this may be of his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe all the Body of it to be of his Hand-writing, or only part of it?

Sir Tho. Exton. I must believe it to be so, for I have seen some of his Hand-writing, and this is very like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What say you to the Name? Do you believe it to be his Hand-writing?—Sir Tho. Exton. Yes, Yes, I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any of the rest of the Names that are upon that Paper?—Sir Tho. Exton. No, I do not.

L. C. J. Do you for the Defendants ask Sir Thomas Exton any Question? Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then call Sir Richard Raynes.

Sir Tho. Exton. My Lord, Sir Richard Raynes has been sick this Month, and has not been at the Commons.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have no need of him. Call Mr. Brooks.

[Mr. Brooks sworn.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray shew Mr. Brooks that Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Brooks, I ask you this Question; Do you know my Lord Archbishop's Hand-writing?—Mr. Brooks. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray look upon that Paper; do you take that to be my Lord Archbishop's Hand?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, my Lord, I do believe it to be my Lord Archbishop's Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. What say you to the whole Body of the Paper?

Mr. Brooks. I do believe it to be his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you say to his Name there?

Mr. Brooks. I do believe this Name is his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. William Middleton.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Brooks, don't go away, but look upon the Names of the Bishop of St. Asaph, and my Lord of Ely.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Bishop of St. Asaph's Hand-writing?

Mr. Brooks. I have seen my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of St. Asaph's Hand-writing, and I do believe this is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look you upon the Name of my Lord of Ely; do you know his Hand-writing?

Mr. Brooks. My Lord, I am not so well acquainted with my Lord of Ely's Writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But have you seen his Writing?

Mr. Brooks. Yes, I have.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Writing do you think?

Mr. Brooks. It is like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his Hand?

Mr. Brooks. Truly I do believe it.

Sir George Treby. Did you ever see him write?—Mr. Brooks. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But he has seen his Writing.

Sir George Treby. How do you know that it was his Hand-writing that you saw?—Mr. Brooks. Because he own'd it.

L. C. J. How do you know it, do you say?

Mr. Brooks. I know it, I say, because I have seen a Letter that he writ to another Person, which he afterwards own'd.

L. C. J. What did he own, Mr. Brooks?

Mr. Brooks. That he wrote a Letter to another Person, which I saw.

Sir George Treby. To whom, Sir?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Have you the Letter here, Sir?

Mr. Brooks. No, Sir, the Letter was writ to my Lord Bishop of Oxford.

Sir Geo. Treby. Can you tell what was in that Letter?

Mr. Att. Gen. What is that to this Question? You ask him how he knows his Hand-writing; and, says he, I did not see him write, but I have seen a Letter of his to the Lord Bishop of Oxford.

L. C. J. And he does say, my Lord of Ely own'd it to be his Hand that is there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, my Lord, that's a Mistake; he own'd a Letter that he had writ to the Bishop of Oxford to be his Hand-writing, and by Comparison of this with that, says he, I take this to be his Hand-writing.

Mr. Brooks. That is my Meaning, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, speak out, and tell us what are the Reasons that make you say you believe this to be the Bishop of Ely's Writing.

Mr. Brooks. Because it resembles a Letter that I have by me of his Writing to the Bishop of Oxford.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you say he own'd that Letter to be his?

Mr. Brooks. My Lord Bishop of Oxford did answer it, and I waited upon the Bishop of Ely with the Answer, and he did own it.

Sir George Treby. How did he own it, Sir?

Mr. Brooks. I had some Communication with my Lord of Ely, about the Substance of that Letter, and therefore I apprehended he own'd it.

Mr. Just. Powell. That's a strange Inference, Mr. Solicitor, to prove a Man's Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have more Evidence; but let this go as far as it can.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Certainly, my Lord, you will never suffer such a Witness as this?

L. C. J. Brother Pemberton, I suppose they can prove it otherwise, or else this is not Evidence.

Mr. Just. Powell. So they had need, for it is a strange Inference of Mr. Solicitor, that this is a Proof of my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing.

Mr. Just. Holl. The Bishop of Oxon was dead before any of this Matter came in Agitation.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will bring other Proofs.—Call Mr. Chetwood and Mr. Smith.

[Mr. Chetwood and Mr. Smith sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Chetwood, we would know of you if you know my Lord Bishop of Ely's Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I never saw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's not an Answer to my Question: Do you know his Hand-writing?—Mr. Chetwood. I do not certainly know it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you seen any of it?

Mr. Chetwood. I have seen my Lord of Ely's Writing, that has been said to be his.

L. C. J. But surely you had better take a Witness that has seen him write.

Mr. Just. Powell. I think 'tis hardly possible for a Man to prove his Hand, that has not seen him write.

L. C. J. I think 'tis better Proof indeed, to bring some that has seen him write.

Mr. Chetwood. My Lord, 'tis a long Time since I saw my Lord of Ely's Writing.

L. C. J. Pray bring some other Proof, if you have it.

Bishop of Peterborough. My Lord, we are here as Criminals before your Lordship, and we are prosecuted with great Zeal: I beg your Lordship that you will not be of Counsel against us, to direct them what Evidence they shall give.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. My Lord of Peterborough, I hope I have not behaved myself any otherwise hitherto than as becomes me: I was saying this (and I think I said it for your Lordship's Advantage), that this was not sufficient Proof; and I think, if your Lordship observed what I said, it was for you, and not against you.

Bish. of Peterborough. It was to direct them against us, how they should give Evidence.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord of Peterborough, sit down, you'll have no Wrong done you.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We that are of Counsel will take Care of that; and pray, my Lord, will you please to pass it by?

L. C. J. We are not used to be so serv'd, and I will not be used so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordship pleases to pass that by; for what your Lordship said was in Favour of my Lords the Bishops; but I see they do not take it so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Chetwood, do you look upon the Name of my Lord of Ely; do you believe that to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I do believe it is.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That's very well, when he says he never saw him write.

Mr. Just. Powell. What is the Reason of that Belief of his I would fain know?—Mr. Chetwood. I have formerly seen his Hand, I think it was his; but I never saw my Lord of Ely write his Hand.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then the Question is, whether this be Evidence?

Mr. Finch. How do you know that that which you saw formerly was my Lord of Ely's Hand?—Mr. Chetwood. I have no such Certainty as positively to swear that that was his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will go on to other Proofs, and if we want better Evidence at the End, we will argue with them.

Mr. Chetwood. I am not certain that what I saw was my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing, because I never saw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do very well to shew your good Affection.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Smith, I would ask you this Question, Do you know my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing?—Mr. Smith. I have seen it often.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon the Name of my Lord of Ely in that Paper; do you believe it to be my Lord's Hand-writing, or no?—Mr. Smith. I did not see him write it, Sir; I cannot tell whether it is or no.

L. C. J. Did you ever see his Name?

Mr. Smith. Yes, but it was a great while ago, and here are but seven Letters, and I cannot judge by that: I was better acquainted with his Hand-writing heretofore.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, answer me; Do you believe it to be his Writing, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I believe it may, for I did not see him write it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But my Question is, Do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I say I was better acquainted with it heretofore than I am now.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But pray answer my Question: Do you believe that to be my Lord of Ely's Hand-writing, or do you not?

Mr. Smith. I believe it may, Sir.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Why do you believe it?—Mr. Smith. I have no other Reason to believe it, but because I have seen something like it.

Mr. Just. Powell. How long ago is it since you saw him write?

Mr. Smith. I have not seen him write, so as to take Notice of it, for some Years: I could better judge of it when he writ his Name Turner, than now it is Ely, because there was more Letters to judge by.

[Mr. Middleton sworn.]

L. C. J. Here's Mr. Middleton, what do you call him for?

Mr. Sol. Gen. To prove many of their Hands.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray shew him that Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. First, Mr. Middleton, do you know my Lord Archbishop's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. I have seen his Grace's Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his?

Mr. Middleton. It is very like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Middleton. I do believe it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Bishop of St. Asaph's Hand-writing?—Mr. Middleton. I never saw it as I know of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you say to my Lord of Ely? His Name is next.

Mr. Middleton. It is like his Lordship's Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it, or do you not?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it, that's all I can say.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Cannot you tell whether you believe it, or not believe it?

Mr. Middleton. I do believe it is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you ever see him write? For I would clear this Matter beyond Exception.

Mr. Middleton. I have seen his Lordship write, but I never stood by him so near as to see him make his Letters.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it, I believe it is his.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You did not guide his Hand I believe.—Do you know my Lord of Chichester's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. Sir, I am acquainted with none of their Hands, but with my Lord of Canterbury's, and my Lord of Ely's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord of Peterborough's Hand-writing?

Mr. Middleton. I had my Lord of Peterborough's Writing two Years ago for some Money, but I cannot say this is his.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his?

Mr. Middleton. I never took Notice of it so much as to say, I believe it to be like it; I never saw it but once.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know any other of the Names there? What say you to the Bishop of Bristol's Name?

Mr. Middleton. I saw once my Lord of Bristol's Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What say you to that Writing there?

Mr. Middleton. It is like it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe it to be his, or no?

Mr. Middleton. Truly, that I cannot say, for I never saw it but once.

L. C. J. You never saw him write, did you?

Mr. Middleton. No, my Lord, I never did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we will call Sir Thomas Pinfold, and Mr. Clavel—Sir Thomas Pinfold is there, swear him.

[Sir Thomas Pinfold sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Thomas Pinfold, do you know my Lord Bishop of Peterborough's Hand-writing?

Sir T. Pinfold. Truly, not very well; I never saw but one Letter from him in my Life: Shew me his Hand, and I will tell you—[Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, Sir, what say you to it?

Sir T. Pinfold. Then upon my Oath, I say, I cannot well tell upon my own Knowledge that it is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask you, do you believe it to be his Hand?

Sir T. Pinfold. Sir, upon the Oath that I have taken I will answer you, that upon this Account, that I have heard there was a Paper delivered by my Lords the Bishops to the King, and this Paper that you offer me, I suppose to be the same; upon that Score I do believe it, but upon any other Score I cannot tell what to say.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask you upon your Oath, Sir, do you believe it is his Hand-writing or no?

Sir T. Pinfold. Sir, I have answered you already, that upon my own Knowledge I cannot say it is his Hand-writing; but because I have heard of such a Paper, I do believe it may be his.

L. C. J. Did you ever see my Lord Bishop write?

Sir T. Pinfold. I have been in his Chamber several Times when he has been writing, but I had more Manners than to look upon what he writ.

L. C. J. Did you never see him write his Name?

Sir T. Pinfold. I do not know that I ever saw him write his Name, but I have seen him writing, I say, and so my Lord Bishop may have seen me writing, but I believe he does not know my Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have seen him write you say?

Sir T. Pinfold. I tell you, Mr. Solicitor, I have been in his Chamber when he has been writing, but I had more Manners than to look over him. Mr. Just. Powell. Then you did never see any of that Writing?

Sir T. Pinfold. I cannot say I did, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did you never see any of his Writing but that Letter you speak of?—Sir T. Pinfold. No, not that I remember.

Mr. Just. Powell. Mr. Solicitor, you must call other Witnesses, for this does not prove any thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. We will go on—Swear Mr. Clavel.

[Mr. Clavel sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Bishop of Peterborough's Hand-writing, or no?—Mr. Clavel. I have seen it many Times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know it when you see it?

Mr. Clavel. I believe I do, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray look upon that Paper, and upon your Oath tell us, Do you believe that Name to be his Writing or no?

Mr. Clavel. I do believe it is, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray look upon the rest of the Hands there, do you know any of the other Names?—Mr. Clavel. No, I do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you ever seen any of their Writing?—Mr. Clavel. It is probable I may have seen some, but do not now remember it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think you are a Bookseller, Mr. Clavel?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, I am so, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I suppose you have had some Dealings with them in the Way of your Trade. Did you never see any of their Writing?

Mr. Clavel. I have seen the Names of some of them, but it is so long since, that I cannot remember.

L. C. J. Did you ever see my Lord of Peterborough write?

Mr. Clavel. I cannot tell whether I ever saw him write his Name or no; but I have had several Letters from my Lord of Peterborough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is that his Hand-writing?

Mr. Clavel. I cannot say it is, I believe it is.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have had Letters from him you say?

Mr. Clavel. Yes, and it seems to be like his Hand.

Mr. Polluxfen. But you never saw him write his Hand you say?

Mr. Clavel. I cannot say I ever did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. These Letters that you have received from my Lord of Peterborough, did he own them? Do you think they were counterfeit, or of his own Hand-writing?

Mr. Clavel. I suppose he has owned them, Sir.

Mr. Just. Powell. But you must answer directly, Sir, Did he own them?

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did those Letters concern? Were they about Books, or what?—Mr. Clavel. They were sometimes about one Business, sometimes about another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was the subject Matter of any of these Letters about Money, and was it paid you? Did you receive, or did you give any Account of it?—Mr. Clavel. They were about several Businesses.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Clavel, you must give us as particular Account as you can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, upon those Letters were the Things done that those Letters required?—Mr. Clavel. Yes, they were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you do your Part?—Mr. Clavel. Yes, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, I would ask you, Do you believe that Name of my Lord Bishop of Peterborough to be the Hand-writing of my Lord Bishop?

Mr. Clavel. I believe it is.

Mr. Just. Powell. Do you know that those Letters that you say you received from my Lord, were of my Lord's own Hand-writing? Do you swear that?—Mr. Clavel. My Lord, I cannot swear that.

Mr. Finch. Do you know whether the Letters that you received, as you say, were written by my Lord himself, or by his Secretary?

Mr. Clavel. I have received Letters from him, and his Secretary too. Sir George Treby. But were you present with him when he writ any Letters with his own Hand?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do not mean a Letter to yourself sure, Sir George?

Sir George Treby. No, Sir, I say any Letters.

Mr. Clavel. I have been present with my Lord often, but I cannot say I have seen my Lord write.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. He has here told you, he has had several Letters of my Lord's own Hand, and from his Secretary too.

Mr. Just. Powell. He has said it, but you see he says he never saw him write.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have given Evidence against my Lord Archbishop, Lord Bishop of Ely, St. Asaph, Peterborough, and Bristol.

Mr. Just. Powell. Certainly, Mr. Solicitor, you mistake—But go on—

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have given Evidence I say against them, Sir, but whether it be sufficient Evidence, we shall argue by and bye—Call Mr. Hooper and Mr. Chetwood again. [Mr. Chetwood appeared.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells?

Mr. Chetwood. I have seen it twice or thrice, but it is a considerable Time since I did see it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you believe that is his Hand-writing?

Mr. Chetwood. I never saw him write his Name in my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray look upon the Name, and tell us what you believe of it.

Mr. Chetwood. I believe it may, but I do not certainly know it to be his Hand; I rather believe it is my Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells his Hand, than I believe that other to be my Lord of Peterborough's.

Sir George Treby. Do you believe that to be my Lord of Peterborough's Hand, or no?

Mr. Chetwood. I say, I rather believe that this is the Bishop of Bath and Wells his Writing, than that which is above it or below it, to be their Writing; but truly I do not distinctly know my Lord Bishop of Bath and Wells his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Hooper.

L. C. J. You are very lazie in this Matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Witnesses are unwilling, and we must find out the Truth as well as we can. [Mr. Hooper did not appear.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. James and Mr. Powell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know my Lord Bishop of Bristol's Writing, Mr. James?

Mr. James. Yes, I believe I do, but I am not so certain, because my Lord writes several Times several Hands.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew him the Paper: Is that my Lord of Bristol's Hand?

Mr. James. I cannot say it is or no.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you believe?

Mr. James. It looks like his Hand, and that's all I can say.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But pray hearken, and answer to what I ask you; you are prepared for one Question it may be, and I shall ask you another: Upon your Oath, Do you believe it to be the Hand-writing of my Lord of Bristol?

Mr. James. Upon my Oath, I can only say it looks like it, that's all.

L. C. J. Did you ever see him write?

Mr. James. Yes, my Lord, I have seen his Hand-writing, several Times, and it is like his Hand-writing, that is all I can say.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir, remember you are upon your Oath, and answer my Question.

Mr. James. Upon my Oath, I know no more than that, Sir William Williams.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I ask you, Sir, whether you believe it to be his Hand or not?

Mr. James. My Lord, it looks like his Hand, and it may be his Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you do think and believe one way or other: What do you believe?

Mr. James. It may be his Hand for what I know, and it may not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It may be your Hand.

Mr. James. No, Sir, it cannot be mine, I am sure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you believe?

Mr. James. I believe it may be his Hand, or it may not be his Hand, that is all I can say.

L. C. J. Come, Sir, you must answer fairly. Do you believe it to be his Hand, or do you not?

Mr. James. Yes, I do believe it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are very hard to believe, methinks.

Mr. James. No, I am not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You do very well now, Mr. James; when you do well, we'll commend you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. Nathaniel Powell. [Mr. Powell was sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, let's know what's your Name?

Mr. Powell. My Name is Nathaniel Powell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray do you know the Hand-writing of my Lord Bishop of Chichester?

Mr. Powell. I have not seen the Paper, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know his Hand-writing?

Mr. Powell. Yes, I believe I do.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look upon that Name of his.

Mr. Powell. I did not see my Lord write that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who says you did? No body asks that of you; how you answer! Pray Sir, remember your Oath, and answer seriously, Do you believe it to be his Writing or no?

Mr. Powell. I believe it is like my Lord's Hand-writing, but I never did see him write it.—Mr. Sol. Gen. No body says you did.

Mr. Powell. Therefore I cannot swear positively it is his Hand.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We do not ask that neither.

Mr. Powell. I cannot tell whether it be his Hand or no.

L. C. J. Sir, you must answer the Question directly and seriously: Do you believe it, or do you not believe it?

Mr. Powell. I cannot tell what to believe in the Case.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then I ask you another Question, upon your Oath, Do you believe it is not his Hand?

Mr. Powell. I cannot say that neither.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Once again, I ask you, upon your Oath, Do you believe it to be his Hand? I ask you plainly, and let Mankind judge of you.

Mr. Powell. I tell you, Sir, I cannot tell what to believe.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, if these Things be endured, there will be an End of all Testimony, if Witnesses do not answer fairly to the Questions that are asked them.

VOL. IV.

Mr. Just. Powell. Truly to me, for a Man to swear his Belief in such a Matter, is an extraordinary Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He is obliged to answer Questions when they are fairly put to him.

Mr. Pollexfen. I think that is a hard Question, not to be answered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Make your Exceptions to the Evidence if you please.

L. C. J. First he says, he knows his Hand; then he says, he has seen him write; and then he says, he did not see him write this; but he shuffles, he won't answer whether he believes it or not.

Mr. Pollexfen. The Question is, Whether Belief in any Case be Evidence?

Mr. Sol. Gen. If they have a Mind to a Bill of Exceptions upon that Point, let them seal their Bill, and we'll argue it with them when they will; in the mean Time we'll go on, and that which we now pray, my Lord, is, That this Paper may be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have given sufficient Evidence sure to have it read, therefore we desire it may be read.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, before this Paper be read, we hope you will let us be heard to it: We think that what they desire (to have this Paper read) ought not to be: For what is all the Proof that they have given of this Paper? They have a Proof by Comparison of Hands, which in a criminal Case ought not to be received: And besides, my Lord, what is that Comparison of Hands that they have offered? Some Persons come here and say, they cannot tell whether it be their Hands, they believe it may or may not, for aught they know; how shall we convict any Man upon such a Testimony as this? Can we have our Remedy against him for Perjury, for saying, he believes it to be our Hand? Therefore here is not any Evidence to charge us. For first, It is only a Comparison of Hands; and secondly, That Comparison is proved in such an uncertain Manner: Some of them tell you, they do not know what to believe; another tells you, I believe it is rather such a Lord's Hand, than the others are such a Lord's Hand; I believe 'tis rather his Hand than that above it, or that below it. What sort of Proof is all this? Therefore we pray it may not be read, till they prove it better.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, spare me a Word or two in this Matter for Evidence sake; there is a great Deal of Reason we should take Exceptions to the Evidence that has been given: For truly, I think I never heard such a Sort of Evidence given before. It is a Case of as great Concernment as ever was in Westminster-Hall; and for them to come to prove Hands only by those that saw Letters, but never saw the Persons write, this, I hope, will not amount to so much as a Comparison of Hands. Your Lordship knows, that in every petty Cause, where it depends upon the Comparison of Hands, they use to bring some of the Party's Hand-writing which may be sworn to, to be the Party's own Hand, and then it is to be compared in Court with what is endeavoured to be proved, and upon comparing them together in Court, the Jury may look upon it, and see if it be right; and never was there any such a Thing as this admitted in any poor petty Cause, that is but of the Value of forty Shillings. And therefore as to this Evidence, First, We say Comparison of Hands ought not to be given at all in the Cases of Criminals; and I believe it was never heard of that it should. In the next Place, if it be admitted to be Evidence, yet it is not such an Evidence, as that by Comparison of Hands the Jury can take Notice of it; for in such Manner of Proofs by Comparison of Hands, the Usage is, that the Witness is first asked, concerning the Writing he produces, Did you see this writ by the Defendant, whose Hand they would prove? If he answers, Yes, I did, then should the Jury upon Comparison of what the Witness swears to, with the Paper that is to be proved, judge whether those Hands be so like as to induce them to believe that the same Person writ both; and not that the Witness should say, I had a Letter from such a Person, and that is like the Hand of that Letter, therefore I believe it to be his Hand: My Lord, I hope this shall never be admitted for Evidence in this Court.

L. C. J. I do take it, that the Witness himself is Judge of the Comparison; for if he does know the Party's Hand, and a Paper be offered him to prove the Party's Hand, he is to compare it in his own Mind.

Mr. S. Pemberton. It never was admitted to be so, that I know of, my Lord, or ever read of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You may remember several Cases about that, particularly Sidney's Case.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, hear me a little as to that: It is a Point of very great Moment, whether in the Case of a Misdemeanor, either in an Indictment or Information, it be good Evidence to offer Comparison of Hands; and that this Court did adjudge quite contrary upon an Indictment of Forgery against my Lady Carr, appears in Syderfin's Reports: They went to prove her Letters written by her to Cox; the Court rejected it, and gave their Judgment here, that it was no Evidence; and that for this Reason, because of the evil Consequences of it: For, said they, it is an easy Matter for any Man's Hand to be counterfeited; that they sure will agree, for frequent daily Experience shews how easily that may be done: Is it not easy then to cut any Man down in the World, by proving it like his Hand? And proving that likeness by comparing it with something that he hath formerly seen? This strikes mighty deep; the honestest Man in the World, and the most innocent may be destroyed, and yet no Fault to be found in the Jury or in the Judges; if the Law were so, it would be an unreasonable Law. Next, my Lord, for the Case of Sidney, that was a Case of Treason. Now in the Case of Treason there is always other Evidence brought; and this Evidence comes in but as a collateral Evidence, to strengthen the other; but in this Case it is the single Evidence, for aught that appears, for there is nothing more, for aught I can see, in the Case, but whether this were their Hands, and proved only by what another believes: Now shall any be condemned by another's Belief without Proof? Surely, my Lord, that was never Evidence yet to convict any one; so that their Proof fails in both Points; for first, it ought to be considered, whether Comparison of Hands be Evidence in a Case of Misdemeanor? And next, if it be Evidence, whether you will take it, that the Belief of a Man that brings nothing to compare with it, or never saw the Party write, but has received Letters, and says, This is like it, and therefore he believes it to be his Hand, be good Evidence as a Comparison of Hands.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, they are pleased to mention—

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Serjeant, you have been heard already, and you are not to reply upon us; or if you would, we must be heard first.

X x

Mr.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I would only speak to that Case of Sidney: My Lord, that Case differs from this totò Carlo, the Writing was found in his Possession, in his Study; there was the Proof that nailed him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You shall see how we'll apply it by and bye.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, favour me a Word in this Matter: That there is stronger and weaker Evidence, no Man doubts; but that which these Gentlemen say, that in this Case there is no Evidence, must needs be a Mistake. If they mean that it is not so strong an Evidence as is possible to be given, I agree with them, it is not: For if we had brought three or four Men that had seen them write this very Paper, and put their Names to it, that had been a stronger Evidence than this that we have given; but whether we do not give such a sort of Evidence as may induce the Jury to believe that this is their Paper, and their Hands to it, we submit. They say, this is such a Method as never was taken; but I admire that that should be said by Men of their Experience and Knowledge in the Law; for is there any thing more usual, or any other Course taken for the Proof of Hands, than for a Witness to say, He knows the Hand of the Party very well, for he has often seen his Hand-writing, or received Letters from him? And if you shew him the Thing that you would prove to be his Hand, and he says, I do believe this to be his Hand, for this Reason, because I have had other Things of his Writing; certainly, in the Experience of any Man that has practised, this is an Evidence that is given every Day, and allowed for Evidence. For the Case of Mr. Sidney, which your Lordship has heard mentioned, it is certainly very apposite to this Purpose; it is insisted upon and pretended, That that was Evidence, because it was found in his Study: But without all doubt, that would not be the Reason: For may not a Book of another Man's writing be found in my Study? And he insisted upon it in his own Defence: But the Answer was, That it should be left as the Question, Whether the Jury would believe it upon the Evidence that was given, of its being his own Hand-writing: And so in this Case, though it be not so strong Evidence as if we had brought those that had seen them write it; yet Evidence it is, and whether it be sufficient to satisfy the Jury, may be a Question; but no Question, it is good Evidence in Law.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is a wonderful Thing, they say, that such Evidence should be offered: But truly, my Lord, it is a much stranger Thing to hear Mr. Serjeant Pemberton say, it was never done before; and then to make that Remark to your Lordship upon the Case of Sidney, which I'll put to your Lordship and the Court as a Case, and let him contradict me if he can; and then we shall see how far it goes. Sidney was indicted for High-Treason; and the Treason insisted upon was, a Writing supposed to be his, it being found in his Study: The Question was, Whether it was his Hand-writing or no? There was no positive Evidence that it was his Hand-writing; there was no Evidence produc'd that prov'd it to be his Hand-writing; for there was no one that swore that they saw him write it; there was nothing proved but the Similitude of Hands. Ay, but, says Mr. Serjeant Pemberton, it was found in his Study. Will Mr. Serjeant Pemberton be content, that all the Libels that are found in his Study, shall, for that Reason, be adjudged to be Libels, to be his Hand-writing, and he to be a Libeller for them? I think he will make a severe Declaration against that, and he would have very good Reason for it: Certainly that which was Evidence in one Man's Case, will be Evidence in another. God forbid there should be any such Distinction in Law; and therefore I conclude, that this is good Evidence.

Mr. S. Pemberton. The Court went upon this, That it was found in his Study, and compared with Letters and Bills of Exchange produced in Court, which were sworn to be of his Hand-writing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I was by all the Time; for I was ordered to attend him in the Tower; and therefore I can tell what passed as well as any body. My Lord, they proved no more as to that Libel, but only by Comparison of Hands; they had no other Proof in that Case, but by comparing the Hand-writing; and that was insisted upon to be a mighty fallible Thing: That which they would have for us to compare, Paper with Paper, it is true, would make the Proof somewhat stronger, if we could, in such a Case as this, be able to produce such Evidence: But I appeal to your Lordship, and shall leave it to the Jury, to consider which is better Evidence; these Men that have been produced, that have been conversant with these Lords, and acquainted with their Hand-writing, and who (as your Lordship sees) are not willing Men to give Evidence, they avoid it as much as they can; and they swear it all to be the Hand-writing of the Archbishop of Canterbury, as they believe; which is as far as any Man can swear. One says, the whole Body of the Paper is my Lord of Canterbury's Hand, and he knows it very well; so that we are not upon a single Name, but a whole Paper that contains many Lines; and this is as much as can be proved by any one that did not see the Thing written. Then, my Lord, for the rest of the Company, the Evidence is not so strong against every one of them, as it is against my Lord Archbishop; but is strong enough certainly to convict them of what we accuse them of: And pray, my Lord, what was the Objection in Sidney's Case, but what has been mentioned here? That any Man's Hand might be counterfeited. I remember in that Case, there was one Mr. Wharton, a young Gentleman, then in the Court, that undertook to the Court, that he would counterfeit that Hand presently; and he that was to swear the Comparison, should not know which was the one, and which was the other; which certainly was a stronger Case than this: And I see some of the Gentlemen that are now standing at the Bar, who pressed this Matter very hard against Mr. Sidney, and Mr. Sidney lost his Life upon that Comparison of Hands; though Mr. Wharton did testify how easy a Matter it was to have a Man's Hand counterfeited, and we all know was a Man of Value and Quality; so there is a Precedent for Mr. Serjeant Pemberton, that never heard of this Law before. They say the proving of Similitude of Hands is no Evidence, unless you prove the actual Writing; what a Condition then will England be in, when Witnesses are dead? Is it not the most common Practice that can be, to produce Witnesses to prove such Men are dead, whose Names are set as Witnesses to Deeds; and they swear, they believe it to be the Hand-writing of those Witnesses? Can there be any greater Evidence of such a Case, unless it be the Confession of the Party himself? My Lord, we are now only upon reading this Paper. We have been heard, and they have been heard; now we pray the Paper may be read.

Mr. Recorder. We pray it may be read.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. If your Lordship please-----

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are not to be replied upon, Mr. Serjeant.

L. C. J. You have spoke Brother Levinz, and you have spoke, Brother Pemberton, and I would willingly hear you what you have to say; but we must not have vying and revying, for then we shall have no End.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. I would offer your Lordship some new Matter, which has not been touched upon yet, why it is not to be read:

L. C. J. What's that, Brother?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. All the Proof that has been given, whatsoever it amounts to, has been only of its being written, but no Proof has been given of its being written in the County of Middlesex, where the Information is laid, and the Matter is local.

Mr. Sol. Gen. First read it, and then make your Objection.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, as to the Evidence that has been given, I would only put your Lordship in Mind of one Case; and that was the Case of Sir Samuel Barnardiston: And the great Evidence there, was the Proof of its being his Hand-writing; and that being proved, was sufficient to convict him of a Libel; for they could not believe Sir Samuel Barnardiston was guilty of making Libels, unless they were proved to be his Hand-writing.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. He owned them to be his Hand-writing.

L. C. J. If you do expect my Opinion in it, whether this be good Evidence, and whether this Paper be proved or no, I am ready to give it.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I desire to be heard before the Opinion of the Court be given.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If there be not Proof enough to induce the Jury to believe this is their Paper, yet sure there is enough to read it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we have not been heard to this yet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why, is this fit to be suffered?

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor, I am always willing to hear Mr. Finch.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I hope your Lordship, and the Court, are not to be complimented into an unusual Thing!

Mr. S. Pemberton. It is not a Compliment, but Right and Justice.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Certainly it is Right and Justice, that there should be some Limits put to Men's speaking, that we may know when to have an End.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Solicitor does mistake the Right, my Lord, for we desire to be heard to this Point, as not having spoke to it yet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, let me make my Objection to your being heard: For I believe you and I have been chid several Times, for speaking over and over the same Thing.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This that we now offer, is not to the same Point that we have spoken to already.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are now speaking to the reading of the Paper, and you have spoken to it already.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. If the Court will please to hear us, we have that to offer against the reading of the Paper, which has not been offered yet.

L. C. J. Sir Robert Sawyer, I take it, it is in the Breast of the Court to hear when they will, and as much as they will, and whom they will; for if three or four have been heard of a Side to speak what they will, the Court may very well depend upon the Learning of those three or four, that they say what can be said upon the Point, and that's enough; but if six or seven desire to be heard over and over to the same Thing, certainly the Court may stop at three or four, if they will.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This is a new Objection that none of us have been heard to yet.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, that which I offer is not contrary to the Rules of Law, nor contrary to the Practice of the Court; nor was I going any way to invade that Privilege which Mr. Solicitor claims of making Objections, and not receiving an Answer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What a fine Declamation you have now made! I never claimed any such Right; but I oppose your being heard over and over to the same Thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let's come to some Issue in this Matter.

L. C. J. I will hear you; but I would not have you introduce it with a Reflection upon the King's Counsel.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, if you impose that upon him, you stop his Mouth; for some Men cannot speak without Reflection.

L. C. J. On the other Side, pray, Mr. Solicitor, give us leave to hear fairly what they have to say; for I perceive he cannot offer to speak, but you presently stop his Mouth.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, that which I was going to say, is another Matter than any thing that has been yet offered: We say, that this Paper ought not to be read; for that they are obliged by Law to prove their Information; and consequently, having laid a particular Place where the Thing was done in the Information, they ought to prove that this was done in that place. The Evidence that they have given, is of my Lords the Bishops writing this Paper; and they have laid it to be done in Middlesex. And this, with Submission to your Lordship, is local; and they must prove it to be written in Middlesex, where they have laid it, or else they fail in their Proof. This is another Objection, which as yet hath not been spoken to: That if there be a Proof of their Hand-writing, yet there is no Proof where that Hand was written; and therefore they are not yet got so far, as to have it read against my Lords.

Mr. Att. Gen. For that Point, my Lord, we say, This would have been as properly said after the Paper had been read, when they come to make Objections against our Proof, by way of Defence: And, with Submission, it had been more proper then, than it is now: For what are we now doing? My Lord, we are proving that such a Paper was subscribed by my Lords the Bishops; and Sir John Nicholas gives you an Account, that he had it from his Majesty at the Council; and that certainly is in the County of Middlesex; and it will concern you to prove that it was written elsewhere.

Mr. S. Pemberton. That's very well, Mr. Attorney; sure you do not think as you speak!

Mr. Att. Gen. Here is a Paper composed and written by you, that Sir

John Nicholas says he had from his Majesty: How he came by it, I suppose you will tell us by and bye. This is your Hand-writing, that I think we have proved sufficiently; this is found in the County of Middlesex, and you come and tell us, that we must prove that it was written in the County of Middlesex; and it is taken to be written where it was found, unless you prove the contrary.

Mr. S. Pemberton. That's pretty Doctrine indeed, and very new.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, here's an Objection made too timely: We are now upon reading of this Paper; and the Question is, Whether it shall be read, or not be read? Surely we have given Evidence enough to induce the Court to read it; and it is another Question, that will come time enough afterwards, where it was written?

L. C. J. Truly, I do not think it was proper for you to stand upon the Place where it was written as yet.

Mr. S. Levinge. When we are upon an Information of a Fact in Middlesex, will you hear them give Evidence of a Fact in Yorkshire?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are not to be driven by these Gentlemen; we are to be directed by the Court.

L. C. J. I think truly it is yet too early to make this Objection.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Surely, my Lord, this is our Time to oppose the reading of it, as not proved.

Mr. Just. Powell. Mr. Solicitor, I think you have not sufficiently proved this Paper to be subscribed by my Lords the Bishops.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Not to read it, Sir?

Mr. Just. Powell. No, not to read it; it is too slender a Proof for such a Case. I grant you, in Civil Actions a slender Proof is sufficient to make out a Man's Hand, by a Letter to a Tradesman, or a Correspondent, or the like; but in Criminal Causes, such as this, if such a Proof be allowed, where is the Safety of your Life, or any Man's Life here?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We tell you a Case where it was allowed; and that is Mr. Sidney's Case; a Case of Treason, and printed by Authority: We tell you nothing but what was done another Day.

L. C. J. I tell you what I say to it: I think truly there is Proof enough to have it read, and I am not ashamed, nor afraid to say it; for I know I speak with the Law. Say what you will of Criminal Cases, and the Danger of People's Lives, there were more Danger to the Government, if such Proof were not allowed to be good.

Mr. Just. Powell. I think there is no Danger to the Government at all, in requiring good Proof against Offenders.

L. C. J. Here's my Lord Archbishop and the Bishop of St. Asaph, and my Lord of Ely, their Hands are proved: It is proved to be my Lord Archbishop's Writing by Mr. Brookes, and he proves my Lord of Ely's Hand by Comparison, and so my Lord of St. Asaph's. Now, Brother Pemberton, there's an Answer to your Objection, it being proved that it is all my Lord Archbishop's Hand. Then they come and say, We'll prove the Hands of the others by Comparison; and for that they bring you Witnesses that say, they have received Letters from them, and seen their Hand-writing several times; and comparing what they have seen with this very Paper, says the Witnesses, I do believe it to be his Hand. Can there be a greater Evidence, or a fuller?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Admit it be a full Evidence against my Lord Archbishop, what's that to the rest? There's no Evidence against them.

Mr. Just. Allyn. Brother Pemberton, as to the Objection you make of comparing of Hands, it is an Objection indeed, I do agree; but then consider the Inconvenience which you and Mr. Pollexfen do so much insist upon: If a Man should be accused by Comparison of Hands, where is he? He is in a lamentable Case; for his Hand may be so counterfeited, that he himself may not be able to distinguish it. But then you do not consider where you are on the other Side: That may be an Objection in Matters of Fact, that will have very little Weight, if compared and set altogether: For, on the other side, where shall the Government be, if I will make Libels, and traduce the Government with Prudence and Discretion, and all the Secrecy imaginable? I'll write my Libel by myself, prove it as you can; that's a fatal Blot to the Government; and therefore the Case is not the same, nor is your Doctrine to pass for current here, because every Case depends upon its own Fact. If I take upon me to swear I know your Hand, the Inducements are to myself, how I came to know it, so as to swear it. Knowledge depends on Circumstances: I swear that I know you, but yet I may be under a Mistake; for I can have my Knowledge of you no other Way but from the Visibility of you, and another Man may be so like you, that there is a Possibility of my being mistaken; but certainly, that is Evidence, good Evidence. Now here are several Gentlemen that swear as to my Lord Archbishop's Hand-writing: I do agree, as to some of the others, that the Evidence is not so strong; for what that Man said, that he did believe it was rather such a Lord's Hand, than that which went before, or that which came after, it is of no Weight at all, and so some of the others; but it is positively proved against my Lord Archbishop and one or two more; so that that's enough to induce the reading of this Writing.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Good my Lord, let me give my Opinion.

L. C. J. Ay, with all my Heart, Brother.

Mr. Just. Holloway. My Lord, I think as this Case is, there ought to be a more strong Proof; for certainly the Proof ought to be stronger and more certain in criminal Matters, than in civil Matters: In civil Matters, we do go upon slight Proof, such as the Comparison of Hands, for proving a Deed, or a Witness's Name, and a very small Proof will induce us to read it; but in criminal Matters we ought to be more strict, and require positive and substantial Proof, that is fitting for us to have in such a Case; and without better Proof, I think, it ought not to be read.

L. C. J. You must go on to some other Proof, Mr. Solicitor; for the Court is divided in their Opinions about this Proof.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we will come to the Confessions of my Lords the Bishops; and I hope that will be believed by all Mankind.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, we did forbear that Evidence, and would not have proceeded this Way, if we had had fair Play on the other Side.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Attorney, give us Leave to defend our Clients all the Ways we can: I think we do nothing but what is fair; the Court you see is divided, therefore we did not without Reason insist upon it.

L. C. J. You must go on as you can, for they will put you upon it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mr. Blathwayt.

[Mr. Blathwayt sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray hand the Writing to him. [The Writing shewn to him.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you seen that Writing formerly, Sir?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did you hear my Lord Archbishop say about that Paper?

Mr. Att. Gen. And the rest of my Lords the Bishops?

Mr. Sol. Gen. First we'll ask, as to my Lord Archbishop; Did he own it to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I believe this to be the Paper that my Lord Archbishop did own to be subscribed by him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was it owned by him?

Mr. Blathwayt. On the Council-day, the 8th of this Month.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where was it owned? because we would obviate that Objection of the County.

Mr. Blathwayt. It was at the Council-Table at Whitehall.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What say you to the Bishop of St. Asaph? Did he own it?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, all my Lords the Bishops did own it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Name them particularly. What say you of the Bishop of Ely?—Mr. Blathwayt. In the same manner, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Bishop of Chichester?

Mr. Blathwayt. In the same manner.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Bishop of Bath and Wells?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Bishop of Peterborough?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And the Bishop of Bristol?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So, we have proved they all owned it.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Could not this have been done at first, and saved all this Trouble?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Have you done with Mr. Blathwayt, Mr. Attorney, that we may ask him some Questions?

Mr. Att. Gen. Ask him what you will.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray Mr. Blathwayt, upon what Occasion did they own it? You are sworn to tell the whole Truth: Pray tell all your Knowledge, and the whole Confession that they made.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I am called here by a Subpoena to answer on Behalf of the King; my Lord, I am ready to do my Duty, and I beg of your Lordship that you would please to tell me what is my Duty; for whatsoever I shall answer, I shall speak the Truth in.

Mr. S. Pemberton. There is nothing desired, but that you would speak the Truth.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I am easily guided by your Lordship what I ought to answer to.

L. C. J. What is it you ask him, Brother Pemberton?

Mr. S. Pemberton. We desire Mr. Blathwayt to tell the whole Discourse that passed at the Council, when he says my Lords the Bishops own'd this Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's a very pretty Thing indeed!

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Blathwayt, you must answer them what they ask you, unless it be an ensnaring Question, and that the Court will take Care of.

Mr. Blathwayt. If your Lordship please to ask me any Question, I shall readily answer it.

L. C. J. You must answer them.

Mr. S. Pemberton. We ask you upon what Occasion they came to own their Hands? what Discourse was made to them, and what they answered?—Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I beg your Lordship's Directions.

L. C. J. Come, tell it, Sir.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, the Occasion was this: This Paper was read in Council, and I had the Honour to read it before the King; and it having been read before his Grace the Archbishop, and my Lords the Bishops, they were asked, whether they did own that Paper? And, my Lord, they did own it.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Mr. Blathwayt, was that the first Time that my Lords the Bishops came in?—Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I was not asked that Question.

L. C. J. What would you have, Sir Robert Sawyer?

Sir R. Sawyer. We would have an Account what passed at the Council?

L. C. J. Would you have all the Discourse betwixt the Council and my Lords the Bishops?

Mr. S. Pemberton. All that relates to their Accusation, my Lord, their whole Confession, and what was said to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you think, Mr. Serjeant, that when we call a Witness, you are at Liberty to examine him to every impertinent thing?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we desire they may only ask reasonable and proper Questions.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Mr. Solicitor, he is sworn to answer, and tell the whole Truth, and that's all we ask of him.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Sir, I will ask you a plain Question upon your Oath; Did not my Lord Archbishop, and the rest of my Lords the Bishops, at first refuse to own it, or to answer whether it were their Hands or not?

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is not a fair Question, Sir Rob. Sawyer; 'tis a leading Question.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Then I ask you in short, What did they refuse? I am sure that is a fair Question; for God forbid that any should hinder the King's Evidence from telling Truth.

Sir Robert Sawyer. And God forbid that half Evidence should condemn any Man.

L. C. J. God forbid the Truth should be concealed any way.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, Sir, when they were first asked, whether that was their Hands or not, what Answer did they give?

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I have begg'd the Favour of my Lords the Judges to tell me what I am to answer, and what Questions are proper for me to answer to?

L. C. J. You must answer any Questions that are not ensnaring Questions.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Blathwayt, you are upon your Oath to testify the Truth.

Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I am not acquainted with the Methods of Law; I desire my Lords the Judges would instruct me.

Mr. Just. Allyn. Answer to the Question that they ask you.

L. C. J. We observe what they ask you; we'll take Care that they ask you nothing but what they should.

Mr. Blathwayt. I desire the Question may be repeated.

Mr. S. Pemberton. When they were first asked if it were their Hands, what Answer did they give the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. His Grace the Archbishop and my Lords the Bishops at first did not immediately answer whether the Paper were theirs or no.

Mr. S. Pemberton. What did they say?

Mr. Blathwayt. They said, they did humbly hope if they were put to answer, no Advantage should be taken against them.

Mr. S. Pemberton. What did they say farther at that Time concerning his Majesty's Pleasure?

Mr. Sol. Gen. That's a leading Question, Mr. Serjeant Pemberton; you cannot leave your Way of leading Witnesses.

Mr. S. Pemberton. It is a very strange thing; if we ask a Question that's general, that's excepted to: if we ask any Question in particular, then they find Fault with us, that it is a leading Question; so that we can never ask a Question that will please them. Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, what did they say concerning the King's Pleasure, whether they would answer if the King commanded them?

Mr. S. Trinder. How can it be material what they said?

L. C. J. It is material that it should be asked, and that it should be answered.

Mr. S. Levinz. You are to tell the whole Truth, Sir. Pray tell us what did my Lords the Bishops say about submitting to the King's Pleasure.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What is that to the Purpose?

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Solicitor, his Oath is to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth, and therefore he must answer my Question.

Mr. S. Pemberton. You are mighty loth, Mr. Solicitor, to let us hear the Truth: I would not willingly lead him in any thing; and I cannot see that this is any leading Question, unless his Oath be against Law, which says he is to tell the whole Truth.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do beg your Lordship's Favour of a Word in this Thing. It is certain if they ask any thing that shall take off the Evidence that was first given, that it is not true, I cannot oppose it; but if they ask Questions only to enflame, and to possess People with foolish Notions and strange Conceits, that is not to the Fact that we are now trying—

Sir Rob. Sawyer. 'Tis only to have the Truth out that we do it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. There is no body here that will be enflamed, Mr. Attorney; I have asked a fair Question, the Court has ruled it so.

Mr. Blathwayt. I shall readily answer any Question that the Court thinks fit.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Sir, by the Oath you have taken you are to tell the whole Truth.

L. C. J. Is he to tell you all that was done at the Council-Board that Day?

Mr. S. Pemberton. No, my Lord, only what passed there about my Lords the Bishops Confession of the whole of that Matter.

Mr. Blathwayt. There has been so much said between the asking of the Question and this Time, that I desire it may be repeated, that I may know what to answer to.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I ask you in short, Sir, What did my Lords the Bishops say at the Time of their appearing in Council concerning the King's Pleasure, whether they should answer or not?

Mr. Blathwayt. The first Time my Lords the Bishops came into the Council, they were asked the Question, whether they did own that Paper? They did immediately answer, They humbly hoped, as they stood there as Criminals, his Majesty would not take the Advantage against them; but however they would obey his Majesty's Command.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Were they commanded to withdraw?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes; thereupon they were commanded to withdraw, which they did.

Mr. S. Pemberton. When they came in again, what Questions were asked them?

Mr. Blathwayt. They came in several times, more than twice, I have reason to remark this, that they did so: Do you mean the second Time, Sir?—Mr. S. Pemberton. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Blathwayt. The second Time they seemed unwilling to own the Paper.

Sir Robert Sawyer. And what did they do the third Time?

Mr. S. Pemberton. But first let us know what more was done the second Time.

Sir George Treby. How was that Unwillingness of theirs overcome?

Mr. S. Pemberton. When they express'd their Unwillingness, what did they say farther?

Mr. Blathwayt. If I remember right, they said as they did the first Time, they humbly hoped his Majesty would not take Advantage against them.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Then what did they say the third Time?

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray were they asked whether they published it?

Mr. Blathwayt. As to the publishing it, it was laid before them, and I think they were asked the Question, whether they published it?

Sir Robert Sawyer. And what Answer did they make?

Mr. Blathwayt. I remember his Grace, and my Lords the Bishops, did not own they had published it, but they denied it.

Sir George Treby. After they discovered their Unwillingness the second Time, what followed next?

Mr. Blathwayt. They did withdraw after the second Attendance.

Mr. S. Levinz. But what was said to them? Was that all that was said to them the second Time?

Mr. Blathwayt. I have said two Things already, that they were unwilling to answer, and that they denied the publishing.

L. C. J. This is a strange Usage of a Witness, to put him to tell every thing that was said.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I would ask you this Question, Sir, When they came the second Time, whether they did desire to know if it were his Majesty's Command that they should own it?

L. C. J. That I must not permit you to ask, Brother; that is to lead the Witness.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, he will not answer general Questions; I have asked him all along general Questions, and I cannot get an Answer from him to them.

Mr. Blathwayt. I am ready to answer any Questions that the Court thinks I should answer; I am not backward to answer according to my Duty.

L. C. J. Let one of you ask a Question at a time, and not chop in one upon another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In all the Trials that ever I have been in, in all the Cases of Criminals, the King's Witnesses used to be treated with Respect, and not to be fallen upon in this manner.

L. C. J. He shall be sure to have all Respect paid him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He is in Office under the King.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I do not think that Mr. Blathwayt does believe I would shew him any Disrespect more than he would shew me.

Mr. Att. Gen. I beg one Word, my Lord.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, what do you say?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I say I do oppose the asking of this Question, not but that every Man has a Right to cross-examine a Witness, but if they ask such a Question, let them tell us what Use they would make of it.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney-General, for that Matter—

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, if you please, I'll give Mr. Attorney an Answer.

L. C. J. Brother Pemberton, I was speaking to Mr. Attorney, and pray hear me; I will not ask you what Use you'll make of the Question you ask; but do you ask fair and regular Questions, and I'll take Care you shall have an Answer to them.

Mr. S. Pemberton. I will deal plainly with the Court, and tell you what Use we intend to make of our Question. If they answered under a Promise from his Majesty, that it should not be given in Evidence against them, I hope they shall not take Advantage of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I say that it is a very unmannerly Question; but however it shall be answered.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Why so, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, it is to put something upon the King, which I dare hardly name.

L. C. J. We do not know what Answer will be made to it yet, but it does look like an odd kind of Question.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Men will be so pressing, I, for the King, desire the Question may be entered.

Sir Robert Sawyer. What do you mean, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I know very well what I mean, Sir; I desire the Question may be recorded in Court.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Record what you will; I am not afraid of you, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Are you afraid of the Law?

Mr. S. Pemberton. No, nor of you neither.

L. C. J. Pray be quiet, Gentlemen.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, answer, whether there was any Promise made to my Lords the Bishops from the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I take the Question to be, whether the King was pleased to make my Lords the Bishops any Promise of not taking Advantage of what Answer they made?

Mr. Att. Gen. That is the Question.

Mr. Blathwayt. As that Question is stated, there was no such made.

L. C. J. Look you, he tells you there was no such Promise made. There is an Answer to your Question, Brother.

Mr. S. Levinz. We made no such Question; but the Question I would ask is this:—

Mr. Sol. Gen. For the Satisfaction of the Court, repeat what you said just now, Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt. I take the Question to be, whether the King made any Promise to my Lords the Bishops, that no Advantage should be taken of what they said? And I said, the King made no such Promise.

Mr. S. Pemberton. We did not ask you the Question, but we only told you what Use we would have made of another Question.

Mr. Pollexfen. Mr. Blathwayt, I see you can very well distinguish what Questions are to be answered. I ask you in short, upon your Oath, when they were first called in, what was said to them, and what was answered by them?

L. C. J. Here has been a great deal of Wrangling, but this is a fair Question, and may reduce us to Order again. Tell us over again from the Beginning, what passed when my noble Lords the Bishops came in the first, second, and third Time, when they were examined about this Paper?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I shall comply with your Lordship's Directions. I apprehend I am to answer together concerning the first, second, and third Comings of my Lords the Bishops into the Council. The first Time, as I said before, the Lords the Bishops were unwilling to own the Paper, and did say, they humbly hoped his Majesty would not take Advantage against them, but that they were ready to obey his Command. The second Time they were called in they did repeat it again, that they hoped his Majesty would not take Advantage against them: After that there was mention made of the Paper being published, I remember my Lords the Bishops said they had not published it—

Sir Robert Sawyer. Is that all?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have no Mind to hear all, I think.

L. C. J. How did you expect to be answered your Questions, if you interrupt them? Go on, Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I said last, that they having prayed the King that no Advantage might be taken against them for what they should say, there was no mention made of the Paper its being published, and my Lords the Bishops did say they had not published it; and his Grace my Lord Archbishop said it was written with his own Hand, and that he had not made use of his Clerk.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that all you can remember that passed at that Time?

Mr. Blathwayt. This is the Substance of what I remember.

L. C. J. Was this the third Time?

Mr. Blathwayt. No, that was the second Time, my Lord.

Mr. Pollexfen. If there be not some Order in this Evidence, my Lords, we shall not be able to observe any thing upon it.—Pray what was done afterwards?

Mr. Blathwayt.

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord Chancellor, upon their coming in, did require them to answer, whether they did own that Paper or not? My Lords the Bishops did own the Paper.

Mr. Pollexfen. Do you remember in what Words or Expressions, as near as you can, they did own it?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is this a Practice to be endured?

Mr. Finch. Why? He may apprehend and take that to be an owning of it, which was not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Has not he sworn the Manner of it, and almost the very Words?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. We desire nothing of him but that he will tell us what Words they said when they owned it.

Mr. Blathwayt. It was the third Time that they came in that they owned it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Why? What did they say?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord Chancellor required them to answer, whether they owned the Paper or no.

Mr. S. Pemberton. What did they say then?

Mr. Blathwayt. As near as I can remember, his Grace and the Lords the Bishops did own the Paper.

Mr. S. Pemberton. What Words did they own it in? Tell the Manner of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What's this to the Purpose?

Mr. Finch. Mr. Blathwayt, did you take Notes of what passed there?

Mr. Blathwayt. I answer, Sir, I did not take Notes, for I attended the King at his Elbow, and did not take Notes. Mr. Finch, you know the Manner of the Council in such Cases very well.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we ask you for the King, because they shall not enflame People by such an Expression, In what Words did they own it, if you can remember?

Mr. Blathwayt. Sir, I have declared my Memory as well as I can; whether the other Clerks come to be examined, if they can tell any more, let them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But we will have no Discourse to enflame the World: Did the King promise or declare that no Advantage should be taken of their Confession?

L. C. J. I would ask him that Question, What was the Manner that my Lord Chancellor express'd himself in to them, when they came in the third Time?

Mr. Blathwayt. As soon as my Lord Chancellor had required them to declare whether they owned that Paper, as well as I remember, his Grace took the Paper in his Hand, and it was handed over, or shewed to my Lords the Bishops, and they owned and declared so, just as if they should lay it before the Court, just so. I do not recollect myself of all the Circumstances that passed; I only can tell you the Substance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He does not remember what they said particularly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Solicitor, I know well enough what they mean by the Question; I know they would fain possess the World with a Belief that there was such a Promise made them, and yet they are prosecuted notwithstanding that Promise: Therefore I do ask you, Mr. Blathwayt, and for the King's Honour I must ask it: Did the King make any Promise or Declaration, that no Advantage should be taken, or Use made of it?

Mr. Blathwayt. The King did not make any Promise or Declaration that no Advantage should be taken, or Use made of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He only put them upon it, whether they did own it or not?

Mr. Att. Gen. I ask you upon your Oath, Did my Lord Archbishop own it to be his Hand-writing?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, he did, and said he writ it with his own Hand, and would not let his Clerk write it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he own the whole to be his Hand-writing, or not?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did every one of the Bishops own their Names subscribed to it?—Mr. Blathwayt. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we pray now that it may be read.

L. C. J. I suppose now they will be content it should be read.

Mr. Finch. If your Lordship please to favour me one Word, I think it cannot yet be read; and my Objection is this—

L. C. J. I thought you had made all your Objections before, as to the reading of it.

Mr. Finch. Pray, my Lord, spare us. Here are two Parts of this Information; the one is for consulting and Conspiring to diminish the King's Royal Prerogative, and for that End they did make and write a seditious Libel: The other Part is, that they did publish this seditious Libel. We are hitherto upon the first Part, the Making and Writing of it. Both Parts are local; until they have proved the Making and Writing of it to have been in Middlesex, it is not Evidence upon this Information.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We have proved it written and published in Middlesex.

Mr. S. Pemberton. The Contrivance and Writing of a Libel is in itself penal, and they may be punished for it, if they be found guilty. Now if they could give an undeniable Evidence concerning the publishing of it, that is nothing to this Point; but if they should not give such Evidence, or any Evidence at all of the Publication, yet if it be proved that it was written and contrived by them, they would be guilty for so much, if it be a Libel; and this we say is local, as well as all the rest: And therefore we insist upon it, that the Writing and Contriving must as well be proved to be in Middlesex, as the Publication, for all is local.

L. C. J. There is no publishing yet proved.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. It is true, my Lord, here is nothing of a Publication yet, with your Lordship's Favour; for their Answer to his Majesty in Council was, that they did not publish it: All that is said yet is, that they owned the Paper to be their Hands. My Lord, does the owning of that own that it was written in the County of Middlesex? or that it was contrived or made there? No surely, upon this Evidence the Place is clearly at large. My Lord, this might have been done in the County of Surry, or Somerset, or any other County: Their Information is, that they did consult and contrive to diminish the King's Prerogative at Westminster in the County of Middlesex, and there they did write, and cause to be written, this Libel, and there they did publish it. Suppose it should be granted that it is proved that this is the Archbishop's Hand-writing, and these are their Names to it, is there any one Evidence that any thing of this was done in Middlesex? And, my Lord, that is the Thing they are to prove.

Vol. IV.

Mr. Sommers. If your Lordship please, all Matters of Crime are so local, that if it be not proved to be done in the County where it is laid; the Party accused is as innocent as if he never had done the Thing; and, with Submission, it is the very Point of the Information; that it be proved they are guilty of the Fact in the Place where it is laid to be done.

L. C. J. This is the same Thing over and over again; but I am content to hear you; Mr. Sommers, at any Time: I have told you my Opinion about reading of the Paper already, if you'll have it again you may.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, good my Lord, spare us before it be read.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Mr. Pollexfen, you have not yet had the Directions of the Court for the reading of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, when this Paper is read, which we pray it may be, we will answer their Objections, but at present we say they are out of Time.

Mr. Pollexfen. Good Lord, what a strange thing is this! We object against the reading of it, and you'll answer us after it is read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Certainly, my Lord, we have done enough to prove that this is a Paper owned by them in the County of Middlesex, and we pray it may be read.

L. C. J. Truly I am of the same Mind I was before, that it is too soon to make the Objection, and that the Paper ought to be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We submit to your Rule.

Mr. Pollexfen. If it be the Will of the Court, I have nothing to say.

Mr. Just. Powell. My Lord, the Contrivance and Publication are both Matters of Fact, and upon Issue joined, the Jurors are Judges of the Fact, as it is laid in the Information; but how can they be Judges of a Matter of Fact done in another County? And it must be presumed, in favour of Innocence, not to be done in this County, but in another; except they prove it.

Mr. Att. Gen. We are not yet ripe for arguing that Point.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are speaking only to the Court now for the reading of this Paper, and the Jury are not Judges of that, whether the Paper ought to be read or no; that is merely a Matter of Law, and under the Direction of the Court; and therefore I pray, since it is now in your Lordship's Judgment, whether that Paper should be read; that you would please to order it to be read.

L. C. J. I can only give you my own Opinion, let my Brothers give theirs.

Mr. Just. Holloway. There is no body against the reading of it, my Lord. I suppose my Brother Powell is not against it's being read.

Mr. Just. Powell. But they say the King's Counsel must make it out first, that the writing of it, and the conspiring about it, was in the County of Middlesex, or there can be no Judgment, so much as to read it.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, if the Objection be saved to us, we shall not so much oppose the reading it, only we would not be surprized in Point of Time.

Mr. Just. Powell. Nay, if they consent to the reading, we have no Reason to hinder it.

L. C. J. Brother, I believe they know well enough what they have to say for their Clients; let the Paper be read.

Clerk reads. The humble Petition of William Archbishop of Canterbury—Sir Rob. Sawyer. Read the whole Petition; pray, my Lord, that the whole may be read. Read the Top first, Sir, to whom it was directed.

L. C. J. Read the whole.

Clerk reads.

To the KING's Most Excellent MAJESTY.

The humble Petition of William Archbishop of Canterbury, and of divers of the Suffragan Bishops of that Province, now present with him, in Behalf of themselves and others of their absent Brethren, and of the Clergy of their respective Dioceses,

Humbly sheweth,

THAT the great Averseness they find in themselves to the distributing and publishing in all their Churches your Majesty's late Declaration for Liberty of Conscience, proceedeth neither from any Want of Duty and Obedience to your Majesty (our Holy Mother, the Church of England, being both in her Principles and in her constant Practice unquestionably Loyal; and having, to her great Honour, been more than once publicly acknowledged to be so by your Gracious Majesty), nor yet from any Want of due Tenderness to Dissenters, in relation to whom they are willing to come to such a Temper as shall be thought fit, when that Matter shall be considered and settled in Parliament and Convocation; but amongst many other Considerations, from this especially, because that Declaration is founded upon such a Dispensing Power as hath been often declared illegal in Parliament, and particularly in the Years 1662, and 1672, and in the Beginning of your Majesty's Reign; and is a Matter of so great Moment and Consequence to the whole Nation, both in Church and State, that your Petitioners cannot in Prudence, Honour or Conscience, so far make themselves Parties to it, as the Distribution of it all over the Nation, and the solemn Publication of it once and again, even in God's House, and in the Time of his Divine Service, must amount to, in common and reasonable Construction.

Your Petitioners therefore most humbly and earnestly beseech your Majesty, that you will be graciously pleased not to insist upon their Distributing and Reading your Majesty's said Declaration:

And your Petitioners (as in Duty bound) shall ever pray, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we shall leave our Evidence here, and hear what they can object to it.

Mr. Finch. Have you no farther Evidence, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. We leave it here for the present.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Gentlemen of the Jury desire to see the Petition.

L. C. J. Shew it them.

[The Petition was shewn to the Jury.]

Y y

Mr.

Mr. Finch. But will you give no further Evidence, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. I tell you, we'll leave it here, till we see what you say to it.

Mr. Finch. There is nothing that we should say any thing to.

Mr. Att. Gen. Make your Advantage of it; if it be nothing, we can have nothing.

L. C. J. What say you for the Defendants, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, in short, we say, that hitherto they have totally failed; for they have not proved any Fact done by us in Middlesex, nor have they proved any Publication at all.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. They have given no Evidence of any thing.

L. C. J. Pray Gentlemen, speak one at once, and then we shall understand the better what we hear.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we say, they have given no Evidence of the Conspiring, Writing, or Publishing in Middlesex: Nay, as to the Publication, there is none at all proved.

Mr. Finch. Here is no Proof of any Publication, nor of the Writing or Making in Middlesex; so that there is no Proof at all against my Lords the Bishops.

L. C. J. You heard what Mr. Blathwayt said; they owned it in Middlesex.

Mr. Finch. That is not a Publication sure, or any Evidence where it was done.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Suppose, my Lord, that I own in Middlesex, that I robb'd a Man in Yorkshire, will that make me guilty in Middlesex?

Mr. Att. Gen. But if you had stole a Horse in Yorkshire, and had that Horse in Middlesex, and owned it, I doubt it would go hard with you in Middlesex.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Serjeant thinks he has put a very home Comparison; but we shall shew how little significant it is by and bye.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, in the first Place, we insist upon it; here is no Proof in this Case at all, as to the doing of any Fact at all in the County of Middlesex: In the next Place, this Information and Petition do not agree; for they have brought an Information, and set forth, that my Lords the Bishops, under pretence of a Petition, did make a Libel, and they have set forth no Petition at all; all the petitionary Part is omitted. If I will take part of a Man's Words, and not the Whole, and make a Libel of that Part, certainly that is very disingenuous and injurious: For that Part that I omit may alter the Sense of the whole. They here ought to set forth the Petition, with the Direction to the King, and the Prayer at the End, whereby it will appear what the whole is, and what was desired by their Petition. But, my Lord, to make this Matter a little more clear, whatsoever they say of its being my Lord Archbishop's Hand, we shall prove that if it were so, it could not be done in Middlesex; for we shall prove that my Lord of Canterbury hath not been in Middlesex for three or four Months before.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray let the Information be read, then you will see the Variance.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is not the latter Part, we acknowledge, in the Information.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There may be, and is, a sic continetur, and there is no Objection in that at all.

L. C. J. It is sic continetur, and that's-----

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The Truth of it is, this Information hath made a very deformed Thing of it, has left it neither Head nor Tail: They stile it a Petition, but it is without any Direction to any body, and without any Prayer for any thing; and without those two it cannot be told what it is.

Mr. Just. Allybone. Sir Robert Sawyer, if I mistake not, it is said only under pretence of a Petition.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. There may be more in the Paper than in the Information; and if all were in, one Part might explain another.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So there may be more; and I wonder to hear that Objection from Sir Robert Sawyer, who has exhibited so many Informations for Libels in Pieces taken out of Books.

Mr. Recorder. All that we alledge in the Information is contained in the Paper, and that's enough for our Purpose; we are not bound to recite the whole.

L. C. J. Indeed I think it is no material Objection at all.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Truly I think it is very material in this Case: Here's a Petition that is preferred to his Majesty; take the whole Petition together, and, say they, it is a reasonable Petition; chop off the Direction and the Prayer, and then here's nothing but the Body of a Petition, without Beginning or Ending; or if a Man will say any thing concerning the King, and do it by way of Petition to himself, that will alter the Case mightily from a Paper spread about, that should contain only the Body of the Petition, and nothing else.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray read that Part of the Information.

Mr. Pollexfen. If so be there be an Information, and that Information charges a Man with a pretended Petition, and the Evidence comes and proves a Petition both Top and Bottom, that is not the Petition in the Information: for that lacking the proper parts of a Petition, is called a pretended Petition, but that which is proved, is proved a real one.

Mr. Serj. Ballock. My Lord, there is nothing in this Objection, as this Record hath it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, give us Leave to state it on our Side, as they have done on theirs, and it will be the better understood upon the reading: I hope it is not come to that Pass that they would have it. Sure these Gentlemen have not forgot altogether the Practice that has been so frequent in this Court: If there be an Information for a Libel, is there any thing more frequent, than only to recite the material Part? Sure they may say, in such a Libel is contained so and so, without setting forth the whole Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How many Trials have we had here, wherein there has been only a Clause taken out of a Book? as particularly, Baxter's Bible, and Johnson's Book, and all by Virtue of a sic continetur.

Mr. Finch. That comes not up to our Objection here.

Mr. Just. Powell. Let us hear the Record read, and then we can judge of it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We pray, Sir, the Information may be read.

Mr. Att. Gen. We are here upon all Occasions chopp'd in upon, and I do not know, how they come to take this Liberty; I am sure other People had it not in former Times, when these Gentlemen stood where we do: As soon as ever we offer to speak, presently there are two or three upon us.

L. C. J. Let me hear them, Mr. Attorney, make their Objection, and let the Record be read, and that will answer that Objection.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as for that other thing, they come and tell us, we have set forth a Petition; we say no such thing; in the Information we say, you composed a certain Libel pretensu Petitionis, in which are contained such and such Things; and now I pray let it be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, hear me a little first: Take the Information as we have laid it, and I believe there are twenty Precedents that I could give you in an Instant of late Days Practice: So was the Information against Mr. Baxter; so was the Information against Mr. Johnson; so was the Information against Dr. Eades; and so was the Information against Sir Samuel Barnardiston. They are all in this Form, sic continetur; so that as for that Matter, we are well enough. But here's another thing, say they, You do not set out the Petition; we say, it is a Libel, and it is not the Name we rely on, but there is such a Libel; so we in our Information call it: If it be not a Libel, then are they very innocent; and whether it be or no, is now in Judgment before your Lordship; but if it be as we say, then it is not the speaking ill Things in the Body of a Petition, and then giving it a good Title, and concluding it with a good Prayer at the End of it: 'Tis not, I say, any of these that will sweeten this Crime, nor alter, nor alleviate it at all; if there be that which is seditious and libellous in the Body of it, call the Paper what you will, and smooth it with a Preamble, or a Conclusion, that will not make it any thing less a Libel; these Things are plain and manifest. We say there is such a Thing done, a Libel made, pretensu Petitionis, do you call it what you will: but we say, these, and these Things are a Libel upon the King and the Government: We have proved our Case, we have proved there was such a Paper under their Hands; we have proved it was owned in Middlesex, and then we are in your Judgment, whether this be not Evidence sufficient to convict the Defendants?

L. C. J. But they do make an Objection about the writing and contriving of it, that it is not proved to be in Middlesex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, our Information does not go with a continued Clause, that they framed a Libel, ut sequitur in hæc verba, but we only say, they made a Libel pretensu Petitionis; and then we say, In quo quidem Libello continetur so and so; we do not tie ourselves up to a particular Recital of all that's in the Paper.

L. C. J. Read the Record.

Clerk. Reads.

Ipsi iidem Willielmus Archiepiscopus Cantuariensis (and the rest) dicto decimo octavo die Maii, Anno Regni dicti Domini Regis nunc quarto supra dicto, vi & armis, &c. apud Westmonasterium prædictum in Comitatu Middlesexie prædicto illicite malitiose seditiose & scandalose quoddam falsum fictum perniciosum & seditiosum Libellum in scriptis de eodem Domino Rege & Regali Declaratione & Ordine prædictis pretensu Petitionis fabricaverunt composuerunt & scripserunt & fabricari componi & scribi causaverunt, & eundem falsum fictum malitiosum perniciosum & seditiosum Libellum per ipsos prædictos Willielmum Archiepiscopum Cantuariensem (and the rest) manibus suis propriis respective subscriptum die anno & loco ultimo mentionatis in præsentia dicti Domini Regis nunc vi & armis, &c. publicaverunt & publicari causaverunt; in quo quidem falso ficto malitioso pernicioso & seditioso Libello continetur. The humble Petition of, &c.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. It is quite another thing; that which is produced, from that which is in the Information, by this leaving out a Part; for here is the Prayer omitted, and the Direction.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, I think there is nothing in the Case, but this mighty Objection of the County; and, says Mr. Serjeant Levinz, if my Countryman confesses in this County, that he stole a Horse in Yorkshire, you shall not try him in London, but in Yorkshire, because, by his own Confession, the Fact is in another County.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. I did not put the Case so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But take the Fact of the Case as it is here: My Lord, the Bishops come in Middlesex and own this Paper; my Lord Archbishop owns it to be his Writing, and the rest of the Bishops own their Hands: If they had done as Mr. Serjeant's Yorkshire-man did, and said, We own we did this, but it was in the County of York, then it would have been like the Case that these Gentlemen put; but here we are in a plain Case of another Nature: My Lord Archbishop comes here in Middlesex, and owns that he writ the Paper, the other Bishops they signed it: Now it does lie certainly in their Knowledge where this was done, and they should have declared then; but they have owned it as their Paper, and the signing and writing of it, which is enough for us.

Mr. Finch. I own this to be my Paper, therefore I writ it in the County of Middlesex: Is that a Consequence? I am very glad they are no better at their Inferences.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They have owned the Thing in Middlesex that we insist upon, and they have not owned it with any Qualifications: If they had said, it was done in another County, then you must have taken it to be as they said it; then if they do not distinguish the Place of the Fact, your Lordship can only take it to be where they owned it; it would be supposed to be done in that Place; for when they owned the Fact, it will be supposed, if they do not say where it was done, that it was done where they owned it, because the King can't tell where it was done; but the Evidence comes out of their own Mouths, they may give Satisfaction where it was done, for they know it; and till that be done, the Supposition is against them, that it was done in the Place where they owned it; and that is a plain Case, where soever a Man is to speak of his own Fact. Indeed, if I publish the Writing of another Person which is libellous, then there must be a particular Proof of the Place, because it is not my own Fact; but if these Lords publish a Libel that they make themselves, it is their own Knowledge, and in their own Power to tell where it was done, because it is their own Act and Deed. It is true, if my Lords had published a Paper that was contrived by some of their Counsel, it had been some Excuse, and they must only have suffered for that Publication in the Place where it was done; but they are here for writing this they have owned in this County, and therefore it lies upon them to prove it done elsewhere. There is another Objection, my Lord, made, that here is no Evidence of a Publication. My Lord, I take it to be a Publication in itself: Is it possible for a Man to write a Libel? to set his Name? and part with it? and it coming to the Hands of the King, that this is not a Pub-a Publication? It is not their saying, we did not publish it, that will excuse them; for can there be a greater Publication in itself than this, when Men have set their Hands to it, and owned their Names? What makes the Fact in this Case? If a Deed be denied to be factum of such a one, what is the Proof of it, but setting the Hand and Seal, and the Delivery? There is owning the Paper, and setting their Hands is a Publication in itself, and therefore they cannot make any such Objection. My Lord, if there were Occasion, we have Authorities enough to this Purpose, and we will give them Scope enough if they will argue this Matter; and if they have any Evidence, we desire to hear what they can say to it.

Mr. Att. Gen. As for this Matter of Fact, my Lord, if I take it right, they do not controvert the Publishing, but, say they, pray make it out, where it was written or composed. I confess, this would be a Business worth the while, for all Persons that act in this Manner, and are concerned in making of Libels, to understand for their Advantage. No Man doubts in the Matter of Treason, but it is local: Then put the Case, a Man is found in Middlesex with a treasonable Paper in his Pocket; I do not make a Comparison, as if this was such a Paper, I hope I am not so understood; but I only put it as a Case, and that the Law is so, is beyond all Controversy; then the Man is indicted here in Middlesex, for framing and composing such a treasonable Libel, and he comes to be tried, and, says he, pray prove where I made and composed it; for though you found it in my Pocket in the County of Middlesex, yet I might do it in the County of York; and, upon my Word, this had been a very good Defence for Mr. Sidney, who was indicted, convicted, and attainted, for making a treasonable Paper which was found in his Study; might not he have put the same Objection? Might not Mr. Sidney have said (it was great Pity he did not understand it), pray prove where I did it, for I did it elsewhere than in this County—

Mr. Sol. Gen. He did say it, I remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I would not hear any Answer given to this, for it would make the King in a very woful Case: Here is a Paper that is found in the County of Middlesex, and this is there owned by you to be written and subscribed by you; pray do you prove it, that it was written elsewhere.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, we will do it, we will be governed by Mr. Attorney for once.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. We will prove that my Lord Archbishop was not in Middlesex in seven Months before; and truly I think Mr. Attorney's Case of a Paper found about a Man, or in his Custody, will not come up to our Case; for was this Paper found about us? Surely that is not pretended.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Your Lordship sees by the very Frame of the Petition, that this Petition, which they call a Libel, was made after the King's Order concerning reading this Declaration. Now we shall prove that my Lord Archbishop, whose Hand-writing they prove this to be, was not out from Lambeth-house in two Months before, nor till he was before the Council.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Which was long after that Time when it was made.

Mr. S. Pemberton. So that this cannot be written in the County of Middlesex.

Call Francis Nicholls.

[Mr. Nicholls was sworn.]

Sir Robert Sawyer. Do you remember the 18th of May last?

Mr. Nicholls. Yes, Sir.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray how was it with my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury at that Time; and before that, did he go abroad?

Mr. Nicholls. My Lord, I am very sure that my Lord his Grace of Canterbury, whom I have served in his Bed-chamber these seven Years never stirred out of the Gate of Lambeth-house since Michaelmas last.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Till when, Mr. Nicholls?

Mr. Nicholls. Not till the Time he was summoned before the Council.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Now I hope we have given them a full Proof that it could not be in Middlesex.

Call Thomas Smith.

[Mr. Smith was not examined.]

Mr. Finch. Truly, my Lord, I think that what we have proved, or what Proof we further offer of my Lord of Canterbury's not being in Middlesex for so long a Time, is ex abundanti, and we need it not; for with humble Submission in Point of Law, it is incumbent upon them that are to prove the Charge in the Information, to prove where it was done; because the Locality of it is Part of the Thing, they ought to prove it. In its Nature it is local, there is a Place assigned in the Information, and unless they prove it was done in the Place that they have laid, they have not proved the Charge in the Information. Now, my Lord, they have not made Proof of that, and for Proof of Publication, I think they have offered none to your Lordship; they never did call it so yet, and truly I never did hear or know that the owning of their Hands at the Council-Table was a Publication of a Libel: It is owning the Writing, but it is not an owning where the Writing was made; but where it was written, and where it was made, is of Necessity to be proved. Before the Charge upon a Record, in a Court of Justice, can be said to be made out, it is a local Charge, and in Justice, the Locality must be proved, or the Information fails. My Lord, they have offered no Proof to it, and they have not yet gone to the second Part of the Information; for as to the Publication of it, there is not a Tittle of Proof offered, but only the owning of their Hands upon their Examination at the Council, and no Man did ever think that the answering a Question, and owning a Paper at the Council-Table, upon a Question put by the King himself, was a Publication of a Libel.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. Pray, my Lord, hear me a Word to that: Tho' the Thing be never so local, yet there must be some Place where a Thing that was done, was done. Then if nothing else appears but what was done in Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, unless they shew the contrary, that must be the very Place where it was done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here is a great deal of Prevarication in this Matter, and I would observe to your Lordship how they do use the Court ill in it: Pray, my Lord, what is it we are upon? We are proving that these seven Lords, the Bishops, signed this Paper; and I think we have proved it sufficiently out of their own Mouths: But, say they, it was not signed in the County of Middlesex, but in the County of Surry. All this is but Imagination, and they would have the Court to imagine it too: For how do they prove it? They would have your Lordship and the Jury believe, that it was signed elsewhere, because my Lord Archbishop has not been out of his House in some Months before: It is all but Inference, and Argument, and Imagination. But still, Gentlemen, do you answer what I objected to you? Does it not lie in their Power to shew where it was signed? Here are six more, besides the Archbishop, where was it signed by them? Here are six of the Bishops, that it does not appear where they signed it; but they confess at Whitehall, in Middlesex, that they did set their Hands.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Ay, they did so, and what then?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ay, and ay too; if they did so, the Presumption and common Intendment upon such Evidence is, that it was done in the Place where it was owned; and the rather, for that Reason that I said before, that it lies in their Knowledge; and therefore it is incumbent upon them to prove, that it was not in the County of Middlesex: So that this Objection I take rather to be an Invention of the Counsel than the Truth of the Fact, because they that can make this out, do not. And as to what they say of my Lord Archbishop, that he has not been out of Doors for so long, who can prove such a Thing? Certainly my Lord was able to come, for any thing that appears; he has been here twice, and he was able to come to the Council-Board: But when all is done, my Lord Archbishop is certainly able to put this Matter out of Doubt; for he may easily prove it, if the Fact be so; and that will satisfy the Court and every body, that it was signed by him at Lambeth, if he designs to deal sincerely with your Lordship and the Court, and the Jury; but certainly it is not to be proved by a Circumstance, such a one as this is, but he ought to give your Lordship and the Jury Satisfaction about this Fact: He ought to say, 'Tis true, I did sign it, but it was at Lambeth house; that indeed would be a down-right Stroke to us: But to go upon a Supposition, that because my Lord Archbishop was not out of his House for so long together, therefore they are all not guilty, is a very hard and foreign Inference. My Lord, there's another Matter that they insist upon; and that is about the Publication; that is as plain as any thing can be, that here is a full Proof of a Publication; for if the Paper be Libellous, wherever that Paper is, that is a Publishing; wherever the Paper travels, how far soever it goes, it is a Publication of it by these Persons that signed it. I believe no body thinks that this should fly into the King's Hand, but somebody brought it to him; and certainly, my Lord, if your opinion should be, that this Paper is Libellous, then wherever it is, it is a Publishing, which is our Offence; wherever it is found, it is a Publication; for there is the Mistake of these Gentlemen, they fancy, that unless there was a Publick Delivery of this Paper abroad, nothing can be a Publication; but I rely upon it, they setting their Names to it, made it their Paper; and wherever it was afterwards found, that did follow the Paper wherever it went; and was a Publication of it, it was in their Power, being their own Contrivance; it was made and formed by themselves, and no body will believe, when it was their own Hands that they put to it, that any body else could have any Power over it: For aught appears, no body else was at work about it, and when there were so many learned Prelates that had signed such a Paper, no one can believe they would let it go out of their Hands, but by their Consent and Direction: Is not this a Proof of the Publishing? Do they give your Lordships any Evidence that they had stifled this Paper? If they had so done, they had said something; but will any body believe that this Thing was done in vain? Can any body assign a Reason why so solemn a Thing as this should be done to no End and Purpose? Why a Paper should be framed that rails at the King's two Declarations? Why a Paper that gives Reasons why they could not read it in their Churches, and signed with such Solemnity by all these Noble Lords; we submit this to you in point of Law; and the Law is plain in it, that if this Paper be Libellous, and it is found in the County of Middlesex, there is a Publication of that Libel. I shall mention to your Lordship that Case of Williams, which is reported in the second Part of Roll's Reports; Mr. Finch made use of it in the Case of Sidney; it was the great Case relied upon; and that guided and governed that Case (as I apprehend) from the Verdict and Judgment that was given in it. This Case was 15 Jacob. It seems Williams was a Barrister of the Inner Temple; and it seems, being an high Catholic for Opinion and Judgment, he was expelled the House; and he being so expelled (being a sort of a Virtuoso) wrote a Book called Balaam's Ass; and therein he makes use of the Prophet Daniel, and he makes Application of it according to his own particular Fancy. He writes there, that this World was near at an End; and he said, Those ill Days were come that that Prophecy spoke of; and because of the Impurity of Prince, and Priest, and People, and other Things that happened, those were the worst of Days, and therefore the last; and that certainly we had the worst Prince that ever was in the World: When he wrote this Book, what does he do? He was a little more close than my Lords the Bishops, and pins it up, or seals it up, and it was brought to the King; and what is this more than the Case before your Lordship? They indeed say, I do this by way of Advice to the King; so said he, I do this by way of Advice to the King, for God forbid that any of this should happen to the King; and so what he does, was by way of Advice, and he prayed God to avert it from him. Here was as good a Prayer as there is in this Paper, and there was a good Design; he made use of the Prophet Daniel, and applied his Words. Well, what was done upon it? This was never published; for the Question was before the Court, whether this sealing of it up, and not delivering it to any other body, were a Publication? The Court was of Opinion, that the very Writing of it was a Publication; they did not value the Delivery of it to the Prince, but it was proved he writ it, and that made it Treason. My Lord, we have Cases enough in my Lord Hobart for this Matter; Sir Baptist Hicks's Case, and my Lady Hatton's Case; there was only a Letter sealed up and delivered to the Party.

L. C. J. You need not trouble yourself about that, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If the Case then be thus, I take it, it will turn upon this Fact; they have given your Lordship no Proof where this Paper was Signed by them: Here are seven Persons that had a Hand in it, and here is only one Person whom they have insisted upon to be infirm, and kept his House House for a great while together. We say the Publishing follows the Libel wherever it goes; the Libel is in the County of Middlesex, they have confessed it in the County of Middlesex, and they did not distinguish when it was done. Then if they will not distinguish upon the Evidence, no Man ought to distinguish, but ought to presume it was done in that Place where they owned it.

Mr. Att. Gen. I did not apprehend we were got so far, that they opposed us in the Publication.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Yes, we did, for you have given no Evidence of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Surely, my Lord, for that we have given a sufficient Evidence, and they have given some Proof of it, as to my Lord Archbishop; that because he had not been from Lambeth, therefore he did not publish, nor could cause it to be published; for your Lordship sees by this Information, they are not only to answer the Publicavit, but also the Publicari causavit; for do you doubt, Gentlemen, of the Law in this Case, that if I compose a Libel in Surry, for Example, and send a Person over into Middlesex, I am not guilty of the Publishing?

Sir Robert Sawyer. That is not your Case, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Finch. That were clear if it were so, but it is not so.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord Archbishop's Case signifies nothing, if we shew it was published in Middlesex, and you give no Evidence to the contrary but it might be there; and I am sure as to the rest of my Lords the Bishops, there is no Evidence at all given. Here is a Petition that we say is a Libel; they, it may be, will make that a Question: This is delivered to the King's own Hand in the County of Middlesex, and there are as many Cases as any one Man can name, that this amounts to a Publication by the Party; for if I send a Letter by the Post sealed, that no body can see but the Party himself, and he that writ it, it is adjudged over and over again it is a Libel.

Mr. Just. Powell. That you need not labour, Mr. Attorney, for that's the Case of Williams of Essex; but how do you apply it to the Case now before us?

Mr. Att. Gen. That's an Answer to their Objection as to the Publication.

Mr. Just. Powell. But what say you to the first Part? You have not proved that it was written in Middlesex.

Mr. Att. Gen. There is the Case of Barrow and Lewellin in Hobart, and likewise the Case of Sir Baptist Hicks, which is reported both in Hobart and in Popham; and in Popham, towards the End of the Case, there is a remarkable Passage. Says that Case, If it should not be punishable at the Suit of the King, there would be no Remedy; for the Party cannot bring an Action, because he can be no Witness for himself, and it is only known betwixt them two; but a Witness for the King he may be, to prove his own Receipt of the Letter, and the Party's Hand.

Mr. Just. Powell. You need not labour that Point, I'll tell you, Mr. Attorney; for the Law is very clear in that Point, I think, if you bring it home to your Case.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then here's the Case, in short, my Lord; that my Lords the Bishops have caused to be made and written this Petition, they are made Parties to it by setting their Names, and this is a continued Act: Whatsoever is written there is my Lord Archbishop's Writing, wherever it goes, as I'll put a Case that's very well known. If I take away Goods from a Man in the County of Cumberland, and I am found with them in the County of Middlesex, it is a continued Act, and makes all but one Felony, and I shall be tried here in Middlesex for it. If a Man write a Thing in one County, and it is sent and dispersed in another County, that still continues to be his Fact, though it may be the first Part was not in the same County with the other: But suppose all this while that Part should not affect my Lord of Canterbury, the causing it to be published does.

Mr. Just. Powell. Do you think, Mr. Attorney, that writing in one County is such a continued Act, that he may be said to write it in another County?

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir, I take it, where there is a complicated Crime of writing and publishing a Libel, and the beginning of it is in one County, and the carrying it on is in another, that is a continued Act, and may be tried in either County.

L. C. J. It is all one Act of Libelling, as they say.

Mr. Just. Holloway. In Cases of Felony 'tis so; taking in one County, and being found with the Goods in another, it is Felony in either County.

Mr. Just. Powell. But in that Case they are two Felonies; for it is Robbery in the one County, and but bare Felony in the other.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Suppose that my Lords the Bishops signed this Paper in another County, and my Lord Archbishop consents to have it sent into Middlesex, is not this a Causing it to be published in another County?

Mr. Just. Powell. Yes, it may be, if you prove his Consent.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then suppose further, which may very well consist with my Lord Archbishop's Evidence of his not being out of Lambeth in so long Time, the rest of the Bishops might sign it in Middlesex, or it may be in that Place; and then they carry it by my Lord's Consent over hither into this County; Is not this a Causing it to be published? The Delivery with his Consent certainly is a Proof of that, for our Information goes two ways; for Making, Contriving, Writing and Publishing, that's one; and then for causing it to be Made, Contrived and Published, that's the other. And if I prove that he caused it to be published, he may be found guilty as to that Part, and not guilty as to the other; for the Information is not so entire, but that the King has his Choice. If the Archbishop had not signed it, or written it, but had caused it to be published, he may be found guilty of so much: But if he be guilty of any one of these things, it is enough; and if he be guilty of none of the other things laid in the Information, yet if he be guilty of causing it to be published, by his consenting that the rest of the Bishops should do it, that will be enough to maintain this Information. Then, my Lord, is there any Evidence brought against what we have proved, that he did not consent?

Mr. Just. Powell. But where was this Consent of his given, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, good Sir, give me your Favour, I think I am in a plain Case.

Mr. S. Pemberton. So you are truly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why, good Sir, you ought to make out the Locality, if you'll take Advantage of it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. That's very well, indeed! This is the first Time I ever heard that Doctrine.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I cannot help that, but certainly the Law is plain: We have proved there was such a Fact as this was done, and they do not go about to prove that it was done elsewhere than where we have laid it; for if they did, their Witnesses would be cross-examined by us; and then we know what would become of them, then the Truth of the Matter would come out: Therefore I would make all this conflare. The Archbishop might be at Lambeth, and yet guilty in Middlesex, by his Concurrence with what was done in Middlesex: And I say, my Lord, this is natural, upon the Evidence that has been given, because when they were interrogated at the Council, and confessed the Paper to be theirs, they made no such Explanation of their Confession, of which they can make any Advantage in their Defence. Here has been nobody produced that proves any thing to be done out of Middlesex; so that still if he's guilty of the Fact proved, he must be guilty in Middlesex.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. And it does not appear, in this Case, but that my Lord Archbishop might write the same Thing in Middlesex, though he was at Lambeth so long as the Witness speaks of.

Mr. Just. Powell. How do you make out that, Brother?

Mr. Serj. Baldock. He might do it when he came over to the Council.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. He must do it after it was presented.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. Might he not be so long here on this Side the Water, as to make such a short Thing as this, before it was delivered? Half of a Quarter of an Hour would have done it.

L. C. J. That's a Thing not to be presumed, Brother, especially since he is proved not to have been in Middlesex so long together.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Serjeant is mightily mistaken, for it is not pretended, that it was delivered at the Time when the Archbishop, and my Lords the Bishops, were before the Council.

Mr. Recorder. Either the Making and Contriving, or the Publishing of this Libel will do upon this Information; Sir Bartholomew Shower, for they shall be taken to be one continued complicated Act, and then the Party may be tried in either of the Counties, as the King will; as in the Case of Treason, it has been over and over again adjudged, that if a Man does one Act of Treason in one County, and afterwards goes into another County, and does another Act of Treason, the Jury of either of the Counties may enquire of the Fact done in the other. If they then should take those two as several Acts, they were several Offences, and they may be found guilty of the one and acquitted of the other; but if they are taken as one continued Act, they are but one Offence, and the Jury of either County may try it. If then, in this Case, the Jury of this County may take Notice of the Publication which was here, as certainly they may, if they will agree, as the Law certainly is, that the Writing of a Letter will be a sufficient Publication, if the Matter be libellous. And there are Multitudes of Precedents for that; and that the bare setting of a Man's Hand has been adjudged to be a Publication: Then give me leave, my Lord, to bring it to a similar Case: Suppose a Man write a scandalous Letter from London, to a Judge or Magistrate in Exeter, and sends it by the Post, and the Letter is received from the Post at Exeter, and there opened; would any Man make a Question whether the Gentleman that sent the Letter may not be indicted and prosecuted for a Libel at Exeter, where the Libel was received?

Mr. Just. Powell. There's no Question of that, Mr. Recorder; that comes not home to the Fact in our Case: Undoubtedly in the Case that you put, the Law is as you said, but it is far different from this Case.

L. C. J. There's nobody opposes the Publication, but the framing of it, where it was made.

Mr. Recorder. Supposing then the Party were at Exeter, and he were interrogated before the Magistrate, whether it were his Hand or no, and he should own it to be his Hand, can any body doubt whether his owning that to be his Hand, would be a sufficient Evidence to prove a Publication?

Mr. Just. Powell. But is that any Evidence where it was written? Or if it be not proved that it was received at Exeter, would that be a Proof of a Publication at Exeter?

L. C. J. They do not deny the Publication.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We do deny that there was any Publication; and they have proved no Place where it was made.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we are not for turning my Lords the Bishops out of the Way of proof that is usual in such Cases; let them take it if they will, that this was contrived and made in Surry. But can they publish it in Middlesex, without committing an Offence? and that is it we stand upon: We are not for laying a greater Load upon my Lords the Bishops than our Proof will answer.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We thank you for your Compliment, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Is this a fair Way of interrupting us when we are speaking? Durst any one have served you so when you were in the King's Service? We would make our Duty as easy as we can to my Lords the Bishops, and it may be easier than other Men would have made it. But, my Lord, let it be a doubtful Case, that we cannot tell which County it was made and contrived in, if it were made and contrived in another County; yet when they brought it into Middlesex, there was a Publication in Middlesex; and if my Lord of Canterbury consented to it, and if he caused it to be published, how came any body ever to get him off from that causing of it to be published? Here is a Paper that must be supposed to be my Lord Archbishop's Paper: Now either the World must look upon it to be an Imposture put upon my Lords the Bishops, or a real Paper made by them. If it were an Imposture and an Affront put upon the Bishops, they ought to make it out for their own Vindication, and to prove themselves innocent: If they do that, they do well, and they ought to have Satisfaction made them by those that have so highly injured them; and the King cannot be better pleased, I am sure, than to find them so: But if Men will look one way and act another, they must expect to be dealt with accordingly. Will any Man that has heard this Evidence, and sees that these

Gentlemen

Gentlemen will not go the right Way to work to prove their own Innocence, believe them to be not guilty? This plain they contrived it and signed it; for can any one imagine that they set their Hands to a Paper that was not formed and contrived by themselves? Then let it go, That this was done in another County, and we cannot punish the Writing of it in this County; yet still they are guilty of causing it to be published in this County, and for that we may punish them here: We will be content with having that found that we have proved, which certainly is an Offence.

Sir Robert Sawyer. We oppose that, Sir.
Mr. Sol. Gen. You oppose it! I know you'll oppose common Sense; we don't speak to you, we speak to the Court. We are content with what is plain, and do not desire to insist upon any strained Construction: We say this is natural Evidence for us; if this thing be a Libel, as we say it is, then the causing it to be published is an Offence. The Publication, we say, was here in Middlesex, and of that there is a clear Evidence, because it was found there, and came from the King's Hand, to whom it was directed, and it could not come to the King's Hand out of their Custody, without their Consent: This, we say, is a clear Evidence of causing it to be published, let the rest go as it will, because we will take the easiest part of the Case, and not go upon Strains.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. The greatest Question is, I think, now come to the publishing—

L. C. J. The Court is of Opinion, that its coming to the King is a publishing.

Mr. Just. Powell. Ay, my Lord, if it be proved to be done by them.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Before the Court deliver their Opinion, we desire to be heard.

L. C. J. Brother, you shall be heard in good Time, but let them make an end on the other Side, and when the King's Counsel have done, we'll hear you.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, upon the Question of Publishing, it has been insisted upon, and the Court seems to be very much of the same Opinion, that the Writing of it is a publishing: That it is without Controversy, if the Writing of it fell out to be in Middlesex, where the Information is laid; but that they would not have to be so by Argument, because the Archbishop had kept in at Lambeth so long. But, suppose that it were so as they would have it, that is only as to the Archbishop, he being the Writer of it; but yet, notwithstanding that, the other six might subscribe it in Middlesex, taking it, that there is such a Face in their Argument as they would have it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We will lay no greater Load on the other six than we do upon my Lord Archbishop, and we say, they are all guilty of the Publication in Middlesex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. Pray, Sir, spare me. This Paper was in the Archbishop's Custody and Power, he taking of it himself; and regularly it could not have come out of his Custody, in common Supposition, but it must come with his Consent. It was afterwards in the power of the other six, they had it to subscribe; whereas the Subscription was non constat; they, it may be, can prove it themselves, but I will only deduce this Argument; That if it after comes into Middlesex, it must be taken by Presumption to be subscribed by them there, and published; it must be taken by Presumption so to be.

L. C. J. No, Brother, we ought not to do any thing by Presumption here.

Mr. Just. Powell. No, no, by no means, we must not go upon Presumptions but Proofs.

L. C. J. I will not presume it to be made in Middlesex.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. But it is proved to be published in Middlesex.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, with Submission, there is no Evidence of the Publication.

Mr. Att. Gen. That the Court is to judge of.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, good my Lord, what Instance of a Publication have they given?

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Court has heard the Evidence, we leave it there.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Was it their owning and acknowledging it was their Hands, when the King asked them the Question at the Council-Table? Surely the King's Counsel won't pretend that was a Publication, when it was done at the King's Command! It was certainly the King that published it then, and not my Lords the Bishops.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well said.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Don't you remember that, when Mr. Blathwayt said the King gave it to be read, and it was shewed to the Bishops?

L. C. J. I remember what Evidence Mr. Blathwayt gave of the Passages at the Council-Board very well, and I know what Mr. Attorney did press about the King's promising to take no Advantage.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, Mr. Attorney is on the other Side, he did not press it.

L. C. J. Sir Robert Sawyer, I mean; I beg both your Pardons, Gentlemen, I think I have done Injury to you both.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we say there is no Evidence at all, that ever this was sent to the King by the Archbishop, or any of my Lords the Bishops: And as for the Cases that they have put, they might have put five hundred Cases, and all nothing to the purpose.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So they might, and done just as others had done before them.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. And so are these; for here is the Question, We are in a Case where the Publication is that which makes it a Crime: Now I would have them, if they can, put me any such Case, and then apply it to this. In Williams's Case, the Question is quite otherwise, and so in any Case of Treason it must be: Wherever there is an Overt-Act proved, it is the treasonable Intention, and the ill Mind of the Traitor, that is the Crime; and the Treason (the Overt-Act) is only to be the Evidence of it. In that Case of Williams, with Submission, my Lord, the Publication was not at all necessary, but the very secretest Act that could be done by him (if it were an Act) is an Evidence of the Mind; and so the sending of the Book to the King himself, though nobody else did see it, was an Evidence of the Crime of Treason, yet it could not be called a Publication. But in the other Case of Sir Baptist Hicks, which was in the Star-Chamber, about sending a Letter of Challenge, it was plainly resolved that it was no Publication of the Letter, and that was not the Ground of the Judgment given against him there, that it was the Publication of a Libel, but the very Fact was a particular Offence; for, said the Court there, if you will send a Letter to a private Man, and that is a Letter that will provoke him to break the Peace, that is an Offence punishable in the Star-Chamber; but that is not the Reason which is alledged, because no Action will lie for want of Proof, but quite the contrary; because they may produce the Porter or Party that brought it, and prove it that it came from this Man's Hands; and I do not question but that in the King's-Bench at this Day, if a Man will write a Letter privately, to provoke another Man to fight, there will lie an Information, but not for a Libel; for there it will be necessary for to make an Offence, that there may be a Publication; for that is the very Form of the Crime, and upon that Ground were all those Judgments against Libels in the Star-Chamber. My Lord, I agree to write a Letter to the King of another Person, or to make a Petition to the King concerning another Person, as of my Lord Chancellor, or the Judges, or the like, to complain to the King of them scandalously, with a provoking and reviling Language, that is a Publication; and so if I write a Letter to one Man of another; if there be Scandal in a Letter, that is a Publication of a Libel; and that is the Difference that has been always taken, where it is essential to make it a Libel, that there be a Publication, such a Publication must be proved; and the Delivery of a Letter to a Man that concerns himself, is no Publication; but in this Case they have not so much as proved that it was delivered to the King.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, with your Lordship's Leave, I take it, that they have given no manner of Evidence of a Publication; to say, the Writing and subscribing of their Names to a Paper, is a Publication of that Paper, is such a Doctrine truly as I never heard before. Supposing this Paper had lain in my Study, subscribed by me, but never went further; would this have been a Publication? They never said any such thing. As to Algernon Sidney's Case, there was no Colour for it, that it should be a Publication; but it was an Overt-Act of Treason to compose such a Book. They have proved by our Confession here, that we have subscribed this Paper; they would take it now, that therefore it must be presumed we sent this to the King, and so surmise us into an Information for making and publishing a Libel, which we sent to the King; but they do not prove it all. My Lord, there are a thousand Ways that it might come into Middlesex, and perhaps come to the King's Hands too, without our Knowledge of Delivery; and sure you will not presume these noble Persons, without Evidence, to be guilty of such an Offence as this is suggested to be! So that, my Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, 'tis impossible for you to find this a Publication in Middlesex; and for the other Thing (the writing this Paper) they that would make it an Offence, must prove where it was done.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, The Answer that I shall give to what has been said on the other Side, is very short: The Cases that have been cited are all Law, but not one Tittle to this Purpose. In Sir Baptist Hicks's Case, and Williams's Case, it was proved they all sent them to the Places whither they were directed; but is there a Tittle of Proof that these Bishops sent it here? In all those Cases they must send it either by a Porter or a Carrier, and they send it as their own Act; and when it comes there, by their sending, that is sufficient Proof of their Act in the Place whither it is sent: And for Sidney's Case, there was Treason in the very Libel and Book that he made; and he was not indicted for Publishing, but for Treason, in the Place where it was found, because it was found in his Possession; But was this ever in my Lord Archbishop's Possession in Middlesex, or the rest of the Bishop's, and were they publishing of it? If it had, then it had been their Act clearly: But that is the Thing wherein they are defective, that they do not prove that my Lords the Bishops sent or brought it here; but upon the Question asked them by the King, they acknowledged it to be their Hands: So that, my Lord, there is no Proof of any Fact done here, but an Acknowledgment of a Fact done, nobody knows where, upon the King's Question here in Middlesex: Is that any Proof of this Information?

Mr. Finch. Pray, my Lord, spare me a Word on the same Side; let us see what the Evidence is. The Evidence is this, That the King brought the Paper to the Council-Table, and the Bishops owned their Hands to it: This is the Effect of the Evidence, and all that is to prove the Forming and Making a Libel in Middlesex, and the Publication of that Libel. And what is therefore inferred from thence? Why, having proved that the King brought the Paper to the Council-Table, and the Bishops owned their Hands; therefore, First, the Bishops made this Libel in Middlesex. Secondly, they brought it to the Council-Table, and published it at the Council-Table, or else there is no Proof at all: For here is nothing of Evidence given of any Fact, but because they acknowledged it, therefore they made it, therefore they gave it to the King in Middlesex: This were good Evidence if they had had the Help of a Supposition to make it good; but they want that, nor must any such thing be admitted; but I think they are such gross, false Consequences, that I doubt not you'll be of Opinion, here's no Proof of a Publication in Middlesex, and then there is no Proof at all against my Lords the Bishops.

Mr. Pollexfen. I must confess, I hear them say, two Acts prove a Publication in this Case; the one is, the Writing of the Libel, and the Subscribing. If so, then I think, upon the Evidence that has been given, the Court must needs be satisfied, that the Writing of it was in Surrey: The next is their owning their Hands: for there is no Act done that appears, or any Evidence against them of any Act done, from the Time of the Writing, to the Time that they were asked, is this your Hand? Surely no Man would ever think this to be a Publication, where one is asked by Authority, whether such a Paper be his Hand, and he acknowledges it in Answer to that Question! To turn this to be a Crime, I think it can never be done, nor never was before. Then there is nothing in the Case, that they can hold to for Evidence, and Proof against my Lords the Bishops, but the Writing; and that is apparent to have been in Surrey, or otherwise they must hold that the Answer to the King's Question, This is my Hand, is a Publication. But truly, my Lord, I think neither of these will do: But, my Lord, to me this is a great Evidence in itself against the Proof of a Publication, the Care and Wariness that has been used, that there should be nothing at all of this Matter known, from the Time that it was written, to the Time that they came to be examined and summoned to appear as Offenders. My Lord, the Nature of Libels is to publish publish and proclaim Scandal and Defamation, or else it loses its End, and consequently its Name. This, as it stands upon their Evidence, is a monstrous Proof for my Lords the Bishops, against the King's Counsel; for it seems a very private Matter, so cautiously and warily carried, that there is not any Evidence of the Fact, but only the Names of the Persons that writ it, till they come to be examined by the greatest Authority. Is this your Hand? And then they own it to be. How can this be taken to be a Publication? And it will be a Thing of wonderful Consequence, if an Answer to a Question put by Authority, should amount to a Crime, as it would in this Case: That would be, as if Authority, that should be employed to do Right, would be turned to do the greatest Wrong; for it is the Duty of all Men to answer when examined by a lawful Authority, and it would never be offered at, sure, in any other Case. If a Man comes before a Magistrate, and confesses any thing, that indeed is Evidence, but is not a Crime; for there is a great deal of Difference between Evidence and the Crime; but that this should be both an Evidence and a Crime too, is, I think, a very strange Construction; and for the other Part (the writing of it) I suppose the Court is satisfied that it was in another County.

Sir George Treby. I desire your Lordship to spare me a Word, which I think has not been observed by the Counsel that have spoke before. The Question that remains, is, Whether my Lords the Bishops did publish this Paper? This is a Matter of Fact that lies upon the Prosecutors to prove. Now I think they are so far from being proved that the Bishops did publish it, that, on the contrary, they have proved that their Lordships did not publish it. The Evidence they have offered for this Matter is a Confession. This Confession is testified by Mr. Blathwayt, and he says the Bishops were asked at the Council whether they did subscribe and publish this Paper, and that their Answer was, that they did subscribe, but not publish it.

Now a Confession must be taken together, and must be admitted to be entirely true by them that produce it; they shall never be allowed to take out and use one Piece, and wave the rest.

Why then by this Evidence of Confession, taken as it ought, it appears that the Bishops, though they did subscribe, did not publish the Paper: So that, I say, the King's Counsel have hereby plainly proved, that the Bishops did not publish this Paper, and yet this is the only Evidence upon which they would infer that they did publish it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Look you, it does lie upon you, Gentlemen, to prove it was done elsewhere than in Middlesex.

Mr. Finch. Sure Mr. Attorney is in Jest!

Mr. Att. Gen. No, I am in good Earnest; all the Proof that we have given has been in Middlesex, and you can best tell whether you did it in Middlesex or no.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we have done as to this Objection; for we say they have not proved their Case.

L. C. J. Mr. Finch, you may observe (and I am sure you do observe as well as any Body in all Cases), but I say, you may observe that they are off of every thing but causing it to be published; now that does lie upon the King's Counsel to prove, that my Lords the Bishops did cause it to be published; for their owning their Hands does not amount to Publication.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, we are upon this Point with them, whether here be any Evidence of a Publication at all?

Mr. Just. Powell. Pray let us clear this first; for if there be no Publication, there can be no causing of it to be published.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if you think fit, we shall go on, and reserve this Point till afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They may make Objections, if they think fit.

L. C. J. So they may, and they say if these Objections are with us, we need go no farther.

Mr. S. Pemberton. But, my Lord, if they be not with us, we have a Reserve to give a farther Answer to it, and to offer Evidence against the Evidence they have offered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. With all our Hearts, give in Evidence what you can.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, pray, my Lord, let us go on to answer this Objection.

L. C. J. Pray do, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord and Gentlemen of the Jury, I would first observe how far we have gone. That there was such a Paper written is clear beyond all Question, and written by my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and that it was signed by the rest of the Bishops, but not in the County of Middlesex, and that this Paper was published, is agreed on all Hands.

Mr. Just. Hol. No, they do not agree to that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do I say it was published by them? But there was such a Paper published.

Mr. S. Pemberton. No, we say it was never published at all.

L. C. J. Pray, Brother Pemberton, be quiet; if Mr. Attorney in opening does say any thing that he ought not to say, I will correct him, as I would do any Body that does not open Things right as they are proved; but pray don't you that are at the Bar interrupt one another, it is unbecoming Men of your Profession to be chopping in and snapping at one another. — Go on, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. I say, that the Paper is proved to be written and signed by my Lords the Bishops; that I take for granted; and that the Paper so signed and written is now published to the World, is also evident; but the Question is, Who it was done by, or who caused it to be done? We are reduced to that Question. Now, first, it is agreed on all Hands, that if I send a Letter to a private Man containing scandalous Things in it, though there is no Proof more, but that it was sent sealed, and received by the Party; in that Case it was a Fault punishable in the Star-Chamber, as a Crime: But now that this was received by the King, and written by them, there is no room for Doubt; for you hear it was produced by the King at the Council Board, and they asked upon it, If it were their Hands? That the King did receive it, there is no room for Question, or that they did write it; but the Question is, from whom the King had it? I am sure they must shew that somebody else did it; and unless they do shew that, I hope there is no manner of Question but it came from them, and they did it; though no Man living knew any thing of this Matter, but whom they thought fit to communicate it to; yet still they putting the King upon the Necessity of shewing this Power, in order to his obtaining Satisfaction for it, or else he must remain under the Indignity without Reparation, it ought to be put upon them to clear the Fact; for if he does not produce it, then must the King put up the highest Injury and Affront that perhaps a Man can give the King to his Face, by delivering a Libel into his own Hands; and if he does produce it, then say they, That is not our Publication. We prove it to be your Writing and Signing, and we prove it to come from the Hand of the King against whom it was composed; for we say it is a Libel against his Majesty, his Government and Prerogative: If then all those Cases that have been cited be Law, then sure there never was a stronger Case in the World than this; and I hope the Law goes a little farther in the Case of the King, than it does in the Case of a private Man. No Man must think by Policy to give private Wounds to the Government, and disparage the Administration of it, and then, when he is called in Question about it, say he, Pray prove that I published it, or else you shall not punish me for it. We prove you framed it, and writ it, and signed it, and we prove it came to the King's Hand, of whom it was composed. Must we produce two Witnesses of the Delivery of it to the King? Surely there will be no need of any thing of that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have reduced it now to a very narrow Question; for, as Mr. Attorney has said, my Lord, there is no Doubt but that my Lords the Bishops are the Authors of this Paper; there is no Doubt but they signed it, and there is no Doubt but that their signing of it, though it were at Lambeth, as they say, is a Publishing of it: But, however, this is plain and manifest, that this Paper was published; and that this was published in Middlesex, this is as plain too: Now then there is nothing left but this Question, whether my Lords the Bishops, who framed the Thing, who wrote the Thing, who signed the Thing, were not the Occasion or Cause of its Publication, or privy or consenting to it? My Lord, I will reduce it to a very plain Point; for we are upon a rational Question, before a rational Court, and a rational Jury, whether these Lords did all of them, in the County of Surry, consent to the Publishing of this Paper in Middlesex? For it is published in Middlesex (that we see); and if they are guilty of that Part of the Information of causing it to be published, now what do they say to it? Say they, it is agreed, that it is published in Middlesex, but it is not proved to be published by us.

L. C. J. No, they do not say so; they agree it was in Middlesex, but not published.

Mr. Just. Powell. Mr. Solicitor, they do agree it was in Middlesex, but not published to be sure, nor by them.

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor, I'll tell you what they stand upon; they say you ought to prove it to be delivered to the King by the Bishops, or somebody employed by them; for upon that went the Resolution that was in Williams's Case, that he sent it to the King; but here is nobody that proves that it was delivered to the King in this Case, so that how it came to the King non constat.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There will be the Question between us, whether this be not a Publication?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, Mr. Solicitor, prove your Case before you argue it.

L. C. J. First settle what the Case is, before you argue it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I'll put you the Case. Here does appear in Middlesex a Paper that is a Libel in itself, and this Libel is proved to be written and formed by these Persons; this Libel coming into Middlesex, the Question is, whether they are privy to it? I say, in point of Presumption it must come from them.

L. C. J. I cannot suppose it; I cannot presume any thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I speak of that which is a common Presumption, a natural Presumption, what we commonly call a violent Presumption, which is a legal Presumption, and has always been allowed for Evidence. Now whether there be not such a Presumption, in our Case, as to induce your Lordship and the Jury to believe that it cannot be otherwise; or at least to put the Labour upon them, to shew how it came out of their Studies, and how it came to the King's Hands; for it is in their Power to shew the truth of this Matter, how it was; if they do not, the Presumption will lie upon them. That the Paper came to the King, that is plain enough; and its coming to the King's Hands, is a plain Proof of a Publication in Middlesex; and who should bring it to the King, but these Gentlemen in whose Power it was? There is no Man undertakes to say, he lost it, then what else is to be believed, but that it came from them? I speak of common Supposition and Belief; they may very well shew it, if it were not so. All that we can say in it is, here is a Paper in Middlesex, this you agreed was once your Paper, and in your Power, pray shew what became of it, it lies upon you to clear this Doubt.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, there is but this Question in the Case; the Question is not, whether the owning it be a Publication, but, whether here be any Evidence that they did deliver it to the King? Now if they did deliver it to the King, that will be agreed to me to be a Publication.

Mr. Just. Hol. No doubt of it, if you can prove it.

Mr. Recorder. Pray, Sir, spare me: That they did it, you have this Evidence: first, that they were the Authors of this Paper by their own Confession, that this was in the County of Middlesex, and that when they were asked concerning it, they owned it to be their Hand-writing. Now whether you can in the least question, after all this, their delivering of it to the King, or that it came to the King's Hands without their Knowledge or Consent, is that which lies before your Lordship for your Judgment.

L. C. J. I will ask my Brothers their Opinion; but I must deal truly with you, I think it is not Evidence against my Lords the Bishops.

Mr. Just. Hol. Truly I think you have failed in your Information; you have not proved any thing against my Lords the Bishops in the County of Middlesex, and therefore the Jury must find them not guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. I'll put you but one Case, my Lord: A Man has an Opportunity secretly to deliver a Libel into the King's Hands, when nobody is by, and so there can be no Proof of the Delivery.

Mr. Just. Powell. 'Tis a dangerous thing, Mr. Attorney, on the other side, to convict People of Crimes without Proof.

Mr. Att. Gen. But shall a Man be permitted thus to affront the King, and there be no way to punish it?

L. C. J. Yes, there will sure, but it will be a very strange Thing if we should go and presume that these Lords did it, when there is no sort of Evidence of it; 'tis that which I do assure you I cannot do: We must proceed according to Evidence, and Forms and Methods of Law; they may think what they will of me, but I always declare my Mind according to my Conscience.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. But as to that other Point, whether their owning of it be a Publication, has not been particularly spoke to.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, and Mr. Solicitor, if there were enough to raise Doubt in the Court, so as to leave it to the Jury, I would sum up the Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we know it is with the Court, these Lords insisted upon it, that it was a great while in their Hands; but it seems as far as our Evidence has gone hitherto, their Confession went no farther than that it was their Paper, and we must not extend their Confession further than it was; but I think we shall offer a fair Evidence that they did deliver it in the County of Middlesex.

L. C. J. Indeed, indeed, you ought to have gone to this, Mr. Solicitor, before the Court gave their Opinions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray call Mr. Blathwayt again. [Mr. Blathwayt called.

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor, unless you are sure that Mr. Blathwayt is a Witness to the Publication, 'tis but spending the Court's Time to no Purpose to call him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are sure of nothing, my Lord; but we must make use of our Witnesses, according to our Instructions in our Briefs.

[Then Mr. Blathwayt appeared.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Blathwayt, you were sworn before?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. You were present when this Paper or Petition was delivered by the King, at the Council-Board?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, I was so, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember any thing of the Bishops acknowledging their Delivery of it to the King?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Blathwayt, I would ask you, was there any mention in Discourse with my Lords the Bishops, how that Paper came into the King's Hands? Was there any mention of what it was done for, upon the Account of Religion, or how?

Mr. Blathwayt. I don't remember any thing of that, Mr. Solicitor (at which there was a great Laughter).

L. C. J. Pray let us have no Laughing, it is not decent; can't all this be done quietly without Noise? Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, let me ask you, Do you remember there was any Discourse how that Writing came into the King's Hands?

Mr. Blathwayt. I received it from the King's Hands, and I know it was presented to him by my Lords the Bishops.

L. C. J. How do you know it was presented to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. I heard the King say so several Times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray mind my Question, Sir: First I ask you who produced the Paper at the Council-Table?

Mr. Blathwayt. The King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What said the Bishops when that Paper was shewed them?

Mr. Blathwayt. Then, as I remember, they were asked, whether that was the Paper that they delivered to the King?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then what said the Bishops?

Mr. Blathwayt. They at first scrupled to answer, and they said it might be made use of to their Prejudice if they owned it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, consider again; was that the Question put to my Lords the Bishops, whether that was the Paper that was presented by them to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. I do think, to the best of my Remembrance, that my Lord Chancellor did ask them to that Purpose, I cannot speak to the very Words.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And upon this, what Answer did they make?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lords the Bishops scrupled to answer the first and second Time, as I told you before, but they did own it was the Petition that they presented to the King, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did the Archbishop do any thing to own it?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, both my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury and the rest of the Bishops did own all the same Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was this done at Whitehall?

Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, at the Council-Table.

L. C. J. Pray recollect yourself, and consider what you say: Did they own that that was the Paper they delivered to the King?

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, my Lord, give us leave to ask a Question to clear this Matter; was the Question put to them, whether it was the Paper that they delivered, or whether it were their Hands that were to it?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I do not exactly recollect the Words.

L. C. J. But pray tell us, if you can, what the Question was?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I do not remember the very Words; but I think if Mr. Serjeant Pemberton be pleased to repeat his Question, I shall give him a satisfactory Answer, as well as I can.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Sir, that which I ask you is this, Whether the Question that was put to my Lords the Bishops at that Time was, Whether this was the Paper that they deliver'd to the King, or whether those were their Hands that were to it?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, I did always think that it was a plain Case, that that was the Paper that they deliver'd to the King; and my Lords the Bishops did never deny but that they gave it to the King, and I had it from the King's Hands.

L. C. J. But we must know from you (if you can tell us) what the Question was that was put to my Lords the Bishops; were they asked, Whether those were their Hands that were to that Paper? or was it, Whether they delivered that Paper to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. As to the first Part, that they owned 'twas their Hands, that I am sure of; but as to the other, I do not remember what the Words were.

[At which there was a great Shout.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Blathwayt, recollect yourself, you say the King produced it.-----Mr. Blathwayt. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember that the King asked them any Question upon the producing of it?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord Chancellor asked them, if those were not their Hands to the Petition?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was there any other Matter in Discourse, whether that was the Paper that was delivered by them to the King?

Mr. Blathwayt. I cannot so positively say what were the Words that my Lord Chancellor used.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Pray do not twist a Man so, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you are not to untwist a Man neither, Mr. Serjeant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember that the King said any thing of the Paper being delivered to him?

Mr. Blathwayt. The King has said it several times; I believe I have heard him say it ten times at least.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he say it at that Time?

Mr. Blathwayt. I cannot positively say that he did, Sir.

Mr. S. Pemberton. He cannot answer it; why will you press it?

Mr. Blathwayt. My Lord, here is the Clerk of the Council that was then in waiting, he took Minutes, and perhaps can remember more than I.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here they cry he cannot answer it, as if they could tell what he can answer better than himself. Pray, Mr. Bridgman, was there any Question to this Purpose, either from my Lord Chancellor, or from the King, whether that was the Paper that was presented by my Lords the Bishops, or delivered to the King? For I see you are very nice as to Words, and you do very well; but was there not a Question to that Purpose?

Mr. Bridgman. Sir, I do not remember; for I speak to the best of my Remembrance in all this Matter. I say, I do not remember that that Question was asked in those very Words, but I do remember something was said to that Purpose, but by whom I cannot particularly say.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. To what Purpose?

Mr. Sol. Gen. It is very strange that they won't let the Witness speak, but are continually interrupting him.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Mr. Solicitor, no body interrupts him.

L. C. J. Why, do not I behave myself between you all as I ought to do? Pray, Sir Robert Sawyer sit down, you cannot be contented when the Man does you no Harm.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray consider, did my Lords the Bishops say any thing, or was there any Discourse concerning the Paper, whether it was delivered to the King or no?

Mr. Bridgman. Mr. Solicitor, I have told you as near as I can what I do remember. I know not by whom it was said, but that Question, or to that Purpose, was asked, whether that was the Petition they delivered? but I do not remember whether the Question was directly asked, or answered; there was something about it, and several Passages there were; but whether spoken by my Lord Chancellor, or who, I cannot remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say there was that which sufficiently denoted a Question to that Purpose, and they said nothing against it.

Mr. Bridgman. No, there was no Denial of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I see you do not remember the Particular, nor do we desire it of you.

Mr. Bridgman. They did not deny it, nor confess it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, in your Apprehension, did they own that they delivered that Paper to the King?

L. C. J. You must not ask that, Mr. Solicitor, it is not a fair Question to ask him what he apprehended.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He said it before himself.

L. C. J. But his Apprehensions are no Evidence, and it is a sort of a leading Question which we must not allow of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then if your Lordship do not like it, I will not ask it; but I will ask him another Question.

L. C. J. Ay, ten if you will, so they be fair ones.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it upon the first or second Time of their being examined?

Mr. Bridgman. I cannot tell, it was not the first Time, all of it, I believe; for at the first Time my Lords the Bishops made some Scruple of answering or owning any thing; and whatsoever they owned, they said, they hoped it should not be made use of to their Prejudice. I remember no Reply that was made, nor any thing farther, only my Lord Chancellor said, they were not to capitulate with their Prince; but they were required to answer the Questions that were asked them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What were those Questions?

Mr. Bridgman. I have told you already, as well as I can remember.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But did you take it upon the main that they owned the Delivery of that Paper to the King?

Mr. Just. Powell. Mr. Solicitor, you have been told you are to ask no such Questions.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Nor never was there such wire-drawing of a Witness in this World before.

L. C. J. Pray sit still, Sir Robert Sawyer, you are not to teach us what we are to do; Mr. Solicitor must ask Questions that are proper for him, and not such as these; but the Court must correct him, and not you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Bridgman is very cautious, and he is to be commended for it; but we would get the Truth out of him if we could. Pray, Sir, if you can remember, recollect yourself, whether by any Question to that Purpose, it was believed that they did own the Delivery of the Paper to the King.

Mr. Bridgman. I told you, Mr. Solicitor, as to that at first, that I do not remember the very Words of the Question; but I believe there was no body doubted that that was not the Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You speak well in your way; but these Gentlemen are very unwilling you should tell your Opinion.

L. C. J. His Opinion is no Evidence, therefore you must not ask any such Questions, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Bridgman. As soon as the Petition was delivered, within a few Hours after I saw it, the King shewed it to several People, and he said, it was the Petition the Bishops had delivered; he took it into his own Custody, and afterwards commanded me to write a Copy of it, and there was no Copy made of it but that one; but notwithstanding that, I do remember I did see a Copy of the Petition, within a Day or two after it was presented about the Town.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray how many Days was this before the Discourse in Council upon their Examination?

Mr. Bridgman. How many Days was what, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. When the King gave the Paper to be copied?

Mr. Bridgman. It was upon the Sunday.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But you say, as you believe, it was in a few Hours after the Paper was delivered to the King that you did see it?

Mr. Just. Powell. But what makes him say, that this was delivered to the King, but only Hearsay?

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Solicitor, will you produce that which is Evidence, and not spend our Time in that which is not?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I would make no more of it than it is.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. 'Tis a shameful thing to offer such things in a Court of Justice.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. 'Tis a Practice that ought not to be endured.

L. C. J. Pray, Brothers, be quiet, or I'll turn him loose upon you again, if you'll not be quiet: What is the Matter? Cannot you let us alone? We shall do every body right. Come, to shorten this Matter, I ask you but this one Question, and that may satisfy any one that has common Honesty about him: Do you remember whether or no they were asked, if that was the Petition that they delivered to the King?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, I have answered that Question as directly as I can; I do not positively remember that that was the Question.

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor-General, you must be satisfied when proper Questions are fairly answered, and therefore, pray, be quiet.

Mr. Att. Gen. However, we pray we may ask the Clerks of the Council; it may be they may remember more.—Sir John Nicholas, you were at the Council-Table that Day my Lords the Bishops were examined about this Paper?

Sir John Nicholas. Yes, Sir, I was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did you observe that the King produced the Petition?

Sir John Nicholas. No, indeed, I did not see it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe any thing that passed there in Discourse?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you observe any Questions that were asked the Bishops, either by the King or by my Lord Chancellor?

Sir John Nicholas. I think my Lord Chancellor did ask them, if that was their Hands to the Petition, and they owned it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember whether they owned, that they delivered that Paper to the King?

L. C. J. I'll ask you, Sir John Nicholas, Did my Lord Chancellor ask them this Question, Is this the Petition you delivered to the King?

Sir John Nicholas. I do not remember that.

[Then there was a great Shout.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Here's wonderful great Rejoycing that Truth cannot prevail.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. No, Mr. Solicitor, Truth does prevail.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You are all very glad that Truth is stifled, Mr. Serjeant.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. Pray, Sir John Nicholas, let me ask you one Question; Was there any Discourse about delivering that Petition to the King?

Sir John Nicholas. Indeed I do not remember it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There's Mr. Pepys, we'll examine him.

[Mr. Pepys sworn.]

L. C. J. Come, I'll ask the Questions; Were you at the Council-Board when my Lords the Bishops were committed?

Mr. Pepys. Yes, I was.

L. C. J. What were the Questions that were asked, either by the King, or by my Lord Chancellor?

Mr. Pepys. My Lord, I would remember as well as I could; the very Words, and the very Words of the Question, were, I think, My Lords, do you own this Paper? I do not remember any thing was spoken about the delivering; but I believe it was understood by every Body at the Table, that that was the Paper that they had delivered.

L. C. J. Well, have you done now? But to satisfy you, I'll ask this Question; Was this Question asked, My Lords, was this the Paper you delivered to the King?

Mr. Pepys. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, do you remember whether the King himself asked the Question?

Mr. Pepys. You mean, I suppose, Mr. Attorney, that these were the Words, or something that imported their delivering it to the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Pepys. Truly I remember nothing of that.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you observe any Discourse concerning their Delivery of it to the King?

Mr. Pepys. Indeed, Mr. Solicitor, I do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mr. Musgrave.

[Mr. Musgrave sworn.]

L. C. J. You hear the Question, Sir, what say you to it?

Mr. Musgrave. My Lord, I will give as short an Account of it as I can: The first Time after his Majesty had produced the Petition, and it was read at the Board, his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and the other Six Reverend Lords the Bishops, were called in, and it was asked of them, if they owned that, or if it was their Hands? My Lord Archbishop, in the Name of the rest, did decline answering, upon the Account that they were there as Criminals, and were not obliged to say any thing to their own Prejudice, or that might hurt them hereafter; but if his Majesty would command them, and if he would promise that no Advantage should be made of whatsoever they confessed, then they would answer the Question: His Majesty made no Answer to that, but only said he would do nothing but what was according to Law; whereupon the Bishops were ordered to withdraw, and being called in a second Time, the Petition was shewn to them, and they were asked if they did own it, or if it was their Hands? And I think my Lord Archbishop did then say, we will rely upon your Majesty, and some such general thing was said, and then they did all own that it was their Hands: I cannot say the Petition was read to them.

Mr. Just. Powell. Mr. Blathwayt, as I remember, said it was the third Time.

Mr. Musgrave. It was the second Time, to the best of my Remembrance.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, was there any Question to this Purpose; Is this the Paper you delivered to the King?

Mr. Musgrave. I do not remember that ever any such direct Question was asked.

Mr. Just. Allyn. But, as my Brother Pemberton did very well before distinguish, there is a great deal of Difference between the owning the Subscription of a Paper, and between the owning of that Paper. Mr. Pepys did say that they did own the Paper, and upon my Word that will look very much like a Publication.

Mr. Musgrave. I remember, my Lord, there was at the same Time a Question asked, because several Copies had gone about the Town, whether they had published it? And my Lord Archbishop did say, he had been so cautious, that he had not admitted his own Secretary, but writ it all himself; and the rest of the Bishops did say, they did not publish it, nor ever gave any Copies of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I confess, now it is to be left to the Jury upon this Point, whether tho' there were not a positive Witness that was by when the thing was done, yet upon this Evidence the Jury can find any otherwise than that the thing was done; truly, I think, we must leave it as a strong Case for the King: I could have wished, indeed, for the Satisfaction of every body, that the Proof would have come up to that; but we must make it as strong for the King, upon the Evidence given, as it will bear. Now, my Lord, take all this whole Matter together, here is a Paper composed, framed, and written by seven learned Men, and this must be written by such Persons, sure for some Purpose. It is directed as a Petition to the King, and this Petition did come to the Hands of the King (for the King produces it in Council), and my Lord Archbishop, and the rest of the Bishops, owned their Hands to it. Then the Question is, my Lord, whether or no there be any Room for any body living to doubt in this Case, that this was not delivered by my Lords the Bishops to the King, though it be not a conclusive Evidence of a positive Fact; yet unless they shew something on the other side, that may give way for a Supposition to the contrary, that it came out of their Hands by Surprise, or that any body else delivered it to the King, without their Knowledge or Consent, here must needs be a very violent Presumption that they did do it; and when nothing of that is said on their side, can any Jury upon their Consciences say, that it was not published by them? And it being found in Middlesex, though it might be written and composed in Surrey, yet surely we have given a convincing Evidence, that either they published it, or caused it to be published in Middlesex.

[Pray call Mr. Graham.]

Crier. He is gone out of the Hall.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, there is in Law a Presumption that is Evidence, though there be no positive Proof.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. But not in an Information for a Libel.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is a meer Question of Fact; there is no Difficulty in the Law of it at all; for it is plain, if these Lords, or any of them, did consent and agree to the publishing of this Paper in Middlesex, they are guilty of this Information; and whether they are guilty or not guilty, we do rely upon the Circumstances proved, which are violent: First, that they were the Men that contrived, and set their Hands to it; and so were the Authors of it, is undeniable; for they have owned it: Men of their Learning and Parts never did any such thing in vain: And then that they were concerned in the publishing of it in Middlesex, we offer for Proof that which was said by Mr. Pepys and Mr. Blathwayt, who, though they do not come directly and expressly to the formal Words of such a Question, yet they tell you, especially Mr. Blathwayt, that they did apprehend it, and it was the Collection of all their Thoughts, and they took it for granted, as a Thing that every body was satisfied in, that they did deliver that Paper to the King. I must confess, and agree, there is no Proof of the Delivery of it by my Lords the Bishops to the King; but we know very well, that it is no Wonder, when a Paper is Libellous, that Men should use all the Skill they can to publish it with Impunity: And this is a Thing that was done after some Time of Premeditation and serious Consultation; for it was some Days after the Order for reading the Declaration was published, that this was framed and delivered, and it concerned them to be wary (as it seems they have been); but take this altogether, my Lord, the Paper being found in the King's Hands, it is in these Persons Power, and it lies upon them, to make it out plain, what became of this Paper, which once lay in their own Hands and Custody? They can give an Account of it, they can give Light unto it. If they do not, I shall submit to the Jury, whether this is not sufficient Evidence to convict them; especially when, being examined, they did not make that their Excuse. They never said, this Paper indeed we signed, but we did not intend to publish it, we intended to stifle it; that had been some Excuse: But for them to say now, they did not present it to the King, I must submit to the Jury, whether they will believe upon this Evidence, that these Lords, the Bishops, did present it, or cause it to be presented to the King; then they are guilty of this Matter: And I leave it to them, and their Consciences, what they will think upon the whole.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, if your Lordship please---

L. C. J. What, again? Well, go on Sir Bartholomew Shower, if we must have a Speech---

Mr. Recorder. Nay, my Lord, I would not trespass upon your Lordship.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, here is an Information against my Lords the Bishops: I think I need not trouble myself to open all of it, because I see you are Men of Understanding, Men of great Diligence, and have taken Notes yourselves, some of you; therefore I shall say only something of the Proof that is required in such a Case, and of the manner of the Proof that has been given in this Case, and then tell you my Opinion in Point of Law. Here is an Information brought by Mr. Attorney-General, on Behalf of the King, against these Reverend Fathers of the Church, the Archbishop and the rest; and it is for publishing a seditious Libel, under the Pretence of a Petition, in which are contained the Words that are seen. Gentlemen, the Information is long; it tells you, that the King, out of his Gracious Clemency to all his loving Subjects, and for other Considerations, had thought fit to publish a Declaration of Indulgence, that all his loving Subjects might have Liberty of Con-

Confession, upon the 4th of April, in the third Year of his Reign, and that this was set forth by the King; and that the King, of his farther Grace, about the 27th of April then next following—

Mr. Finch. I humbly beg your Lordship's favour.

L. C. J. What say you, Mr. Finch?

Mr. Finch. I ask your Pardon for breaking in upon you when you are directing the Jury. I know I should not do it, but I hope you will not be angry with me for it.

L. C. J. If I thought you did any service to your Client, I should willingly hearken to you.

Mr. Finch. That which I humbly offer to your Lordship, is only to remember your Lordship where we were.

L. C. J. Go on, Sir.

Mr. Finch. I would only say this, my Lord, the Question is, whether this be Evidence or not?

L. C. J. I am sorry, Mr. Finch, you have that Opinion of me, as to think I should not leave it fairly to the Jury.

Mr. Finch. I only speak it, my Lord, because if it be Evidence, we have other Matters to offer in Answer to that Evidence, and in our own Defence.

L. C. J. If you have more to offer, why did you conclude here; and let me begin to direct the Jury? But since you say you have other Matter to offer, we will hear it.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, we submit to your Lordship's Direction.

L. C. J. No, no, you do not; you say you have further Matter to offer.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we shall rest it here.

L. C. J. No, no, I will hear Mr. Finch. Go on, my Lords the Bishops shall not say of me, I would not hear their Counsel; I have been already told of being Counsel against them, and they shall never say that I would not hear their Counsel for them.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. My Lord, we beseech your Lordship go on with your Directions; for all that Mr. Finch said, was only that this was not sufficient Evidence.

L. C. J. No, Brother, he says you have a great deal more to offer, and I will not refuse to hear him. The Court will think there was something more than ordinary, therefore I will hear him; such a learned Man as he shall not be refused to be heard by me, I'll assure you. Why don't you go on, Mr. Finch?

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I beg your Pardon for interrupting you; but all that I was going to say would have amounted to no more than this, that there being no Evidence against us, we must of Course be acquitted.

Mr. Just. Hol. My Lord did intend to have said as much as that, I dare say.

L. C. J. Well, Gentlemen of the Jury, we have had Interruption enough—

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I must beg your Pardon for interrupting you now; and I am very glad these Gentlemen have given us this Occasion, because we shall now be able to clear this Point. There is a Fatality in some Causes, my Lord, and so there is in this; we must beg your Patience for a very little while, for we have Notice that a Person of a very great Quality is coming, that will make it appear, that they made their Addresses to him, that they might deliver it to the King.

L. C. J. Well—you see what comes of the Interruption, Gentlemen, now we must stay—

[Then there was a Pause for near half an Hour.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, put the Case that a Man writes a Libel in one County, and it is found in another, is not he answerable, unless he can shew something that may satisfy the Jury how it came there?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Ought he not to give an Account what became of it?

L. C. J. No: Look you, Mr. Attorney, you must look to your Information, and then you will find the Case that you put does not come up to it: It is for Writing, Composing, and Publishing, and causing to be Published, and all this is laid in Middlesex: Now you have proved none of all these Things to be done in the County.

Mr. Att. Gen. They did in Middlesex confess it was theirs.

L. C. J. Ay, but the owning their Hands is not a Publication in Middlesex, and so I should have told the Jury.

Mr. Finch. I beg your Lordship's Pardon for interrupting you.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, my Lord, does it not put the Proof upon them, to prove how it came out of their Hands into the King's Hands?

L. C. J. No, the Proof lies on your Part.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, give us your favour to dismiss us and the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, our Witnesses will be here presently.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sure, my Lord, the Presumption is on our Side.

Mr. Just. Powell. No, the Presumption is against you; for my Lord Archbishop lived in Surry, and it is proved was not out of Lambeth-House since Michaelmas, till he came before the Council.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Pray, good my Lord, we stand mightily uneasy here, and so do the Jury, pray dismiss us.

L. C. J. I cannot help it, it is your own Fault—

[Then there was another great Pause.]

L. C. J. Sir Bartholomew Shower, now we have Time to hear your Speech, if you will.

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, there is no Body come, nor I believe will come.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, he will come presently; we have had a Messenger from him.

[Call Mr. Graham.]

Crier. He is gone, and said he would come presently.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, he will bring our Witnesses with him—

[Then there was another Pause.]

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, this is very unusual to stay thus for Evidence.

L. C. J. It is so; but I am sure you ought not to have any Favour—

Mr. Solicitor, are you assured that you shall have this Witness that you speak of?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Yes, my Lord, he will be here presently.

L. C. J. We have staid a great while already, and therefore it is fit that we should have some Oath made that he is coming.

VOL. IV.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Crier tells you, that Mr. Graham did acquaint him, that he would return presently.

L. C. J. Give him the Book.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Let your Left-Hand give your Right-Hand the Oath [The Crier sworn.]

L. C. J. By the Oath that you have taken, Did Mr. Graham tell you, there was any further Witness coming in this Case?

Crier. Yes, my Lord, he did; he went out of the Hall, and returned when your Lordship was directing the Jury, and he asked me what the Court were upon; and I told him you were directing the Jury, and then he said, my Lord Sunderland was a coming, but he would go and prevent him; and afterwards he returned, and finding your Lordship did not go on to direct the Jury, he said he would go again for my Lord Sunderland, whom he had sent away, and he is now gone for him, and he said he would bring him with him presently.

L. C. J. Well then, we must stay till the Evidence for the King comes, for now there is Oath made that he is coming—

[And after a considerable Pause the Lord President came.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we must pray that my Lord President may be sworn in this Case, on Behalf of the King.

[The Lord President Sworn.]

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with your Lordship's Favour, I would ask my Lord President a Question: Your Lordship remembers where we left this Cause; we have brought it to this Point, That this Petition came to the King's Hands; that it is a Petition written by my Lord Archbishop, and subscribed by the rest of my Lords the Bishops; but there is a Difficulty made, whether this Petition thus prepared and written was by them delivered to the King, and whether my Lords the Bishops were concerned in the doing of it, and were privy, or Parties to the Delivery? Now that which I would ask your Lordship, my Lord President, is, Whether they did make their Application to your Lordship to speak to the King?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did they make their Application to your Lordship upon any Account whatsoever?

Lord President. My Lord, my Lord Bishop of St. Asaph, and my Lord Bishop of Chichester came to my Office, and told me, they came in the Names of my Lord Archbishop of Canterbury, and four others of their Brethren, and themselves, with a Petition, which they desired to deliver to his Majesty, and they did come to me to know which was the best way of doing it, and whether the King would give them Leave to do it or not? They would have had me read their Petition, but I refused it, and said, I thought it did not at all belong to me, but I would let the King know their Desire, and bring them an Answer immediately, what his Pleasure was in it; which I did. I acquainted the King, and he commanded me to let my Lords the Bishops know, they might come when they pleased, and I went back and told them so; upon which they went and fetch'd the rest of the Bishops, and when they came, immediately they went into the Bed-Chamber, and into another Room, where the King was. This is that I know of the Matter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. About what Time was this, pray my Lord?

Lord President. I believe there could not be much Time between my coming from the King, and their fetching their Brethren, and going in to the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They were with the King that Day?

Lord President. Yes, they were.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was this before they appeared in Council?

Lord President. Yes, it was several days before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then I think now, my Lord, the Matter is very plain.

Mr. Just. Allyn. Did they acquaint your Lordship that their Business was to deliver a Petition to the King?

Lord President. Yes, they did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And they would have had my Lord read it, he says.

Mr. Att. Gen. And this was the same Day that they did go in to the King?

Lord President. The very same Day, and I think the same Hour; for it could not be much longer.

L. C. J. Now it is upon you truly; it will be presumed to be the same, unless that you prove that you delivered another.—Pray, my Lord, did you look into the Petition?

Lord President. No, I refused it; I thought it did not concern me.

Mr. Just. Powell. Did you see them deliver it to the King, my Lord?

Lord President. I was not in the Room when it was delivered.

Mr. Just. Powell. They did open their Petition to your Lordship, did they?

Lord President. They offered me to read it, but I did refuse.

L. C. J. Will you ask my Lord President any Question, you that are for the Defendants?—Sir Rob. Sawyer. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we must beg one Thing for the sake of the Jury, if your Lordship can turn yourself a little this Way, and deliver the Evidence you have given over again, that they may hear it.

Lord President. My Lord, I will repeat it as near as I can; I think I shall not vary the Sense. The Bishops of St. Asaph and Chichester came to my Office, I do not know just the Day when, but it was to let me know, that they came in the Names of the Archbishop, and four others of their Brethren—Is it necessary I should name them?

L. C. J. Do it, my Lord, if you can.

Lord President. They were the Bishops of Ely, Bath and Wells, Bristol, and Peterborough: They came to let me know, in the Name of the Archbishop, those four, and themselves, that they had a Petition to deliver to the King, if he would give them Leave, and desired to know of me which was the best way to do it. I told them I would know the King's Pleasure, and bring them Word again: They offered me their Petition to read, but I did not think it fit for me to do it, and therefore I refused; and would not read it; but I went immediately to the King, and acquainted his Majesty with it, and he commanded me to let them know they might come when they would, which I immediately did: They said they would go and speak with some of their Brethren that were not far off: In the mean time I gave order that they should be admitted when they came, and they did in a little Time return, and went first into the Bed-Chamber, and then into the Room where the King was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And this was before they came and appeared at the Council?—Lord President. Yes, it was.

Mr. Polluxen. Your Lordship did not read any thing of the Petition?

Lord President. No, Sir, I did not; I refused it.

Mr. Polluxen. Nor does your Lordship know what Petition was delivered to the King?

Lord President. I did not know any thing of it from them then.

L. C. J. Now you may make your Observations upon this two Hours hence: Now we shall hear what Mr. Finch had further to offer, I suppose.

[Then my Lord President went away.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. I think now it is very plain.

L. C. J. Truly, I must needs tell you, there was a great Presumption before, but there is a greater now, and I think I shall leave it with some Effect to the Jury. I cannot see but here is enough to put the Proof upon you. They came to the Lord President, and asked him how they might deliver a Petition to the King? He told them he would go see what the King said to it. They would have had him read their Petition, but he refused it: He comes and tells them the King said they might come when they would. Then those two that came to my Lord President went and gathered up the other four (the Archbishop indeed was not there) but they six came, and my Lord President gave Direction they should be let in, and they did go into the Room where the King was. Now this, with the King's producing the Paper, and their owning it at the Council, is such a Proof to me, as I think will be Evidence to the Jury of the Publication.

Mr. Polluxen. Then, my Lord, thus far they only can go; the Archbishop was not there, and so there is no Evidence against him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. As to the Writings, we have given Proof against him, for it is all his Hand.

Mr. Polluxen. That still is in another County, and there is nothing proved to be done by my Lord Archbishop in Middlesex; and next, for the other six Lords, my Lord President does not say that this is the Petition that they said they had to deliver to the King; nor did he see them deliver any thing to the King; but that is still left doubtful, and under your Judgment, so that it stands upon Presumption, not upon Proof, that this is the same, and left under Consideration.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we will leave it fairly to the Jury upon this Fact.

Mr. Polluxen. If so, then we desire to be heard in our Defence.

Sir Robert Sawyer. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard this Charge which Mr. Attorney has been pleased to make against my Lords the Bishops, and that is this, That they did conspire to diminish the Royal Authority, and Regal Prerogative, Power, and Government of the King, and to avoid the Order of Council; and in Prosecution of this, they did falsely, maliciously and seditiously make a Libel against the King, under Pretence of a Petition, and did publish the same in the King's Presence.

This, Gentlemen, is a very heinous and heavy Charge; but you see how short their Evidence is: The Evidence they bring forth is only, that my Lords the Bishops presented the Paper to the King in the most private and humble Manner they could: That which they have been so many Hours proving, and which they cry up to be as strong an Evidence as ever was given, proves it to be the farthest from Sedition in the doing of it that can be: and you see what it is, it was a Petition to be relieved against an Order of Council, which they conceive they were aggrieved by. They indeed do not deal fairly with the Court nor with us, in that they do not set it forth that it was a Petition.

L. C. J. That was over-ruled before.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. I do not insist upon it now so much an Exception to the Information, as I do the Evidence. They set this forth to be a scandalous Matter, but it only contains their Reasons, whereby they would satisfy his Majesty why they cannot comply in a Concurrence with his Majesty's Pleasure; and therefore they humbly beseech the King, and beg and request him (as the Words of it are) that his Majesty would be pleased not to insist upon their distributing and reading of this Declaration: So the Petitioners, on Behalf of themselves and the whole Clergy of England, beg of the King that he would please not to insist upon it.

Gentlemen, you may observe it, that there is nothing in this Petition that contains any thing of Sedition in it; and it would be strange this Petition should be Felo de se, and by one Part of it destroy the other. It is laid indeed in the Information, that it was with Intent and Purpose to diminish the King's Royal Authority; but I appeal to your Lordship, the Court, and the Jury, whether there be any one Word in it, that any way touches the King's Prerogative, or any Title of Evidence that has been given to make good the Charge. It is an Excuse barely for their Non-compliance with the King's Order, and a begging of the King with all Humility and Submission, that he would be pleased not to insist upon the reading of his Majesty's Declaration upon these Grounds, because the dispensing Power upon which it was founded, had been several times in Parliament declared to be against Law, and because it was a Case of that Consequence that they could not in Prudence, Honour, or Conscience concur in it.

My Lord, Mr. Attorney has been pleased to charge in this Information, that this is a false, malicious, and seditious Libel: Both the Falsity of it, and that it was malicious and seditious, are all Matters of Fact, which, with Submission, they have offered to the Jury no Proof of, and I make no Question but easily to demonstrate the quite contrary.

For, my Lord, I think it can be no Question, but that any Subject that is commanded by the King to do a Thing which he conceives to be against Law, and against his Conscience, may humbly apply himself to the King, and tell him the Reason why he does not that thing he is commanded to do, why he cannot concur with his Majesty in such a Command.

My Lord, that which Mr. Attorney did insist upon in the Beginning of this Day (and he pretended to cite some Cases for it) was, that in this Case, my Lords the Bishops were not sued as Bishops, nor prosecuted for their Religion. Truly, my Lord, I do not know what they are sued for else: The Information is against them as Bishops, it is for an Act they did as Bishops, and no otherwise; and for an Act they did, and do conceive they lawfully might do with relation to their Ecclesiastical Polity, and the Government of their People as Bishops.

The next Thing that Mr. Attorney offered was, That it was not for a Non-feasance, but for a Feasance. It is true, my Lord, it is for a Feasance in making of the Petition, but it was to excuse a Non-feasance, the not reading according to the Order; and this sure was lawful for all the Bishops as Subjects to do; and I shall shew it was certainly the Duty of my Lords the Bishops, or any Peer of this Realm, to do the same in a like Case. It was likewise said, they were prosecuted here for affronting the Government, and intermeddling with Matters of State; but I beg your Lordship and the Jury to consider, whether there is one Title of this mentioned in the Petition, or any Evidence given of it. The Petition does not meddle with any thing of any Matter of State, but refers to an Ecclesiastical Matter, to be executed by the Clergy, and to a Matter that has Relation to Ecclesiastical Causes; so that they were not busy-bodies, or such as meddled in Matters that did not relate to them, but that which was properly within their Sphere and Jurisdiction.

But after all, there is no Evidence, nor any Sort of Evidence that is given by Mr. Attorney, that will maintain the least Title of this Charge; and how he comes to leave it upon this Sort of Evidence I cannot tell; all that it amounts to is, That my Lords the Bishops being grieved in this Manner, made this Petition to the King in the most private and respectful Manner; and for him to load it with such horrid black Epithets, that it was done libellously, maliciously, and scandalously, and to oppose the King and Government, 'tis very hard; 'tis a Case of a very extraordinary Nature, and I believe my Lords the Bishops cannot but conceive a great deal of Trouble, that they should lie under so heavy a Charge, and that Mr. Attorney should draw so severe an Information against them, when he has so little Proof to make it out.

My Lord, by what we have to say to it, we hope we shall give your Lordship and the Jury Satisfaction, that we have done but our Duties, supposing here has been a sufficient Evidence of the Fact given, which we leave to your Lordship and the Jury.

My Lord, we say in short, That this Petition is no more than what any Man, if he be commanded to do any thing, might humbly do it, and not be guilty of any Crime: And, my Lord, as to the Matter of our Defence, it will consist of these Heads:

First, We shall consider the Matter of this Petition.

Secondly, The Manner of the delivering it, according as they have given Evidence here; and,

Thirdly, The Persons that have delivered this Petition. And we hope to make it appear, beyond all Question, that the Matter contained in this Petition, is neither false nor contrary to Law, but agreeable to all the Laws of the Land in all Times. We shall likewise shew you (tho' that appear sufficiently to you already) that the Manner of delivering it was so far from being seditious, that it was in the most secret and private Manner, and with the greatest Humility and Duty imaginable. And then as to the Persons, we will shew you that they are not such as Mr. Attorney says, who meddle with Matters of State, that are out of their Sphere; but they are Persons concerned, and concerned in Interest in the Case, to make this humble Application to the King. And when we have proved all this Matter, you will see how strangely we are blackened with Titles and Epithets which we no ways deserve, and of which, God be thanked, there is no Proof.

For, my Lord, for the Matter of the Petition, we shall consider two Things.

The First is, The Prayer, which is this; They humbly beg and desire of the King, on Behalf of themselves and the rest of the Clergy, that he would not insist upon the Reading and Publishing of this Declaration.

Surely, my Lord, there is nothing of Falsity in this, nor any thing that is contrary to Law, or unlawful for any Man that is pressed to any thing, especially by an Order of Council; and this is nothing but a Petition against an Order of Council; and if there be an Order that commands my Lords the Bishops to do a Thing that seems grievous to them, surely they may beg of the King that he would not insist upon it.

As for this Matter, they were so well satisfied about it, and so far from thinking that it was any Part of a Libel, that they left it out of the Information, and so have made a deformed and absurd Story of it, without Head or Tail, a Petition directed to no body, and for nothing, it being without both Title and Prayer; so that this is plain, it was lawful to petition.

Then, my Lord, the next Thing is, the Reasons which my Lords the Bishops come to acquaint the King with; why in Honour and Conscience they cannot comply with, and give Obedience to this Order; and the Reasons, my Lord, are two.

The first Reason that is assigned, is, the several Declarations that have been in Parliament (several of which are mentioned) that such a Power to dispense with the Law, is against Law, and that it could not be done but by an Act of Parliament; for that is the Meaning of the Word Illegal, that has no other Signification but unlawful; the same Word in Point of Signification with the Word Illicit, which they have used in their Information, a Thing that cannot be done by Law; and this they are pleased to tell the King, not as declaring their own Judgments, but what has been declared in Parliament; though if they had done the former, they being Peers of the Realm, and Bishops of the Church, are bound to understand the Laws, especially when (as I shall come to shew you) they are made Guardians of these Laws; and if any thing go amiss, and contrary to these Laws, they ought to inform the King of it.

My Lord, the next Thing is, Because it is a Thing of so great Moment, and the Consequence that will arise from their publishing of this Declaration, and that too, my Lord (for the latter I shall begin first with) there can be no Question about, or any Pretence that this is libellous or false; for certainly it is a Case of the greatest Consequence to the whole Nation that ever was, therefore it cannot be false or libellous to say so.

My Lord, I would not mention this, for I am loth to touch upon Things of this Nature, had not the Information itself made it the very Gift of the Charge.

Charge; for the Information (if there be any thing in it) says, that it was to diminish the King's Prerogative and Regal Power in publishing that Declaration.

Now, my Lord, what the Consequence of this would be, and what my Lords the Bishops meant by saying, it was a Cause of great Moment, will appear, by considering that which is the main Clause in the Declaration, at which my Lords the Bishops scrupled, which is the main Stumbling-block to my Lords, and has been to many honest Men besides, and that is this:

"We do likewise declare, it is our Royal Will and Pleasure, that from henceforth the Execution of all and all manner of Penal Laws, in Matters Ecclesiastical, for not coming to Church, or not receiving the Sacrament, or for any other Non-conformity to the Religion established; or for or by reason of the Exercise of Religion in any Manner whatsoever, be immediately suspended; and the further Execution of the said Penal Laws, and every of them, is hereby suspended."

Here the Lord Chief Justice speaking aside,

L. C. J. I must not suffer this; they intend to dispute the King's Power of suspending Laws.

Mr. Just. Powell. My Lords, they must necessarily fall upon the Point; for if the King hath no such Power (as clearly he hath not in my Judgment), the natural Consequence will be, that this Petition is no Diminution of the King's Regal Power, and so not seditious or libellous.

L. C. J. Brother, I know you are full of that Doctrine; but however, my Lords the Bishops shall have no Occasion to say, that I deny to bear their Counsel. Brother, you shall have your Will for apace, I will bear them, let them talk till they are weary.

Mr. Just. Powell. I desire no greater Liberty to be granted them, than what in Justice the Court ought to grant, that is, to bear them in Defence of their Clients.

Now, my Lord, this Clause either is of some legal Effect and Signification, or it is not. If Mr. Attorney, or the King's Counsel, do say it is of no Effect in Law, then there is no Harm done; then this Petition does no ways impeach the King's Prerogative, in saying, it has been declared in Parliament, according as the King's Counsel do agree the Law to be.

But, my Lord, if it have any Effect in Law, and these Laws are suspended by Virtue of this Clause in the Declaration; then certainly, my Lord, it is of the most dismal Consequence that can be thought of, and it behoved my Lords, who are the Fathers of the Church, humbly to represent it to the King.

For, my Lord, by this Declaration, and particularly by that Clause in it, not only the Laws of our Reformation, but all the Laws for the Preservation of the Christian Religion in general are suspended, and become of no Force; if there be such an Effect in Law wrought by this Declaration as is pretended; that is, that the Obligation of Obedience to them ceaseth; the Reason of it is plain, the Words cannot admit of such a Quibble as to pretend, that the suspending the Execution of the Law, is not a suspending of the Law; for we all know the End of every Law, in its primary Intent, is Obedience to it; that of the Penalty comes in by the way of Punishment and Recompence for their Disobedience.

Now, my Lord, if this Declaration does discharge the King's Subjects from their Obedience to, and the Obligation from those Laws; then pray, my Lord, where are we? Then all the Laws of the Reformation are suspended, and the Laws of Christianity itself, by those latter Words, [or for or by reason of Religion in any Manner whatsoever] so that it is not confined to the Christian Religion, but all other Religions are permitted under this Clause; and thus all our Laws for keeping the Sabbath, and which distinguish us from Heathens, will be suspended too.

My Lord, this is such an Inconvenience as, I think, I need name no more; and it is a very natural Consequence from that Clause of the Declaration; it discharges at once all Ministers and Clergymen from performing their Duty in reading the Service of the Church; it discharges their Hearers from attending upon that Service.

When a Law is suspended, the Obligation thereof is taken away; and those that before thought themselves bound to obey, now conclude they are not so obliged; and what a Mischief that will be to the Church, which is under the Care of my Lords the Bishops, your Lordship will easily apprehend.

These Things, my Lord, I only mention, to shew the great and evil Consequences that apparently follow upon such a Declaration, which made my Lords the Bishops decline obeying the Order, and put them under a Necessity of applying thus to the King, to acquaint him with the Reasons why they could not comply with his Commands to read this Declaration to the People, because the Consequences thereof were so great, it tending naturally to lead the People into so great an Error, as to believe those Laws were not in Force, when in Truth and Reality they are still in Force, and continue to oblige them.

And that being the second Reason in this Petition, I come next to consider it, to wit, that the Parliament had often declared this pretended Power to be Illegal; and for that we shall read the several Records in Parliament mentioned in their Petition, and produce several ancient Records of former Parliaments that prove this point; and particularly in the Time of Richard the Second, concerning the Statute of Provisors, where there were particular Dispensations for that Statute, the King was enabled to do it by Act of Parliament, and could not do it without.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir Robert Sawyer, go to your Proofs, and reserve your Arguments till afterwards.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, I do but shortly mention these Things; so that, my Lord, as to the Matter of this Petition, we shall shew you, that it is true and agreeable to the Laws of the Land.

Then, my Lord, as to the Manner of delivering it, I need say no more, but that it is plain from their Evidence, that it was in the most private and humble Manner. And, as the Lord President said, Leave was asked of the King for them to be admitted to present it: Leave was given, and accordingly they did it.

We come then, my Lord, to the third Thing, the Persons, these noble Lords; and we shall shew they are not Busy-bodies, but in this Matter have done their Duty, and meddled with their own Affairs. That, my Lord, will appear.

First, By the general Care that is reposed in them by the Law of the Land: They are frequently in our Books called the King's Spiritual Judges; they are entrusted with the Care of Souls, and the Superintendency over all the Clergy is their principal Care.

But, besides this, my Lord, there is another special Care put upon them by the express Words of an Act of Parliament; for, over and above the general Care of the Church, by Virtue of their Offices as Bishops, the Act of 1 Eliz. Cap. 2. makes them special Guardians of the Law of Uniformity, and of that other Law in his late Majesty's Reign; where all the Clauses of that Statute of 1 Eliz. are revived, and made applicable to the present State of the Church of England. Now in that Statute of 1 Eliz. there is this Clause:

And for the due Execution hereof, the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and all the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, do, in God's Name, earnestly require all the Archbishops, and Bishops, and other Ordinaries, that they do endeavour themselves, to the Utmost of their Knowledge, that the due and true Execution hereof may be had throughout their Dioceses and Charges, as they will answer before God, for such Evils and Plagues whereunto Almighty God may justly punish his People, for neglecting this good and wholesome Law.

This is the Charge that lies upon the Bishops, to take Care of the Execution of that Law; and I shall pray by and bye, that it may be read to the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is very well, indeed! To what purpose?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. So that, my Lord, by this Law it is plain, that my Lords the Bishops, upon pain of bringing upon themselves the Imprecation of this Act of Parliament, are obliged to see it executed; and then, my Lord, when any thing comes under their Knowledge, especially if they are to be Actors in it, that hath such a Tendency to destroy the very Foundation of the Church, as the Suspension of all the Laws that related to the Church must do, it concerns them that have no other Remedy, to address the King, by Petition, about it.

For that Mr. Attorney, my Lord, has agreed, that if a proper Remedy be pursued in a proper Court, for a Grievance complained of, tho' there may be many hard Words that else would be scandalous, yet being in a regular Course, they are no Scandal: And it is said in Lake's Case, in my Lord Hobart.

My Lord, we must appeal to the King, or we can appeal to nobody, to be relieved against an Order of Council with which we are aggrieved; and it is our Duty so to do, according to the Care that the Law hath placed in us.

Besides, my Lord, the Bishops were commanded by this Order to do an Act relating to their Ecclesiastical Function, to distribute it to be read by their Clergy: And how could they in Conscience do it, when they thought Part of the Declaration was not according to Law?

Pray, my Lord, What has been the Reason of his Majesty's consulting of his Judges? And if his Majesty, or any the great Officers, by his Command, are about to do any thing that is contrary to Law, was it ever yet an Offence to tell the King so? I always look'd upon it as the Duty of an Officer or Magistrate, to tell the King what is Law, and what is not Law.

Cavendish's Case, in the Queen's Time, there was an Office granted of the Return of the Writs of Superfedeas in the Court of Common-Pleas; and he comes to the Court, and desires to be put into the Possession of the Office: The Court told him, They could do nothing in it, but he must bring his Affize. He applies to the Queen, and she sends, under the Privy-Seal, a Command to sequester the Profits, and to take Security to answer the Profits, as the Judgment of the Law should go: But the Judges there return an Answer, That it was against Law, and they could not do it. Then there comes a second Letter, reciting the former, and commanding their Obedience: The Judges returned for Answer, They were upon their Oaths, and were sworn to keep the Laws, and would not do it.

My Lord, The like was done in the Time of my Lord Hobart: We have it reported in Anderson, in a Case where a Prohibition had gone: There came a Message from Court, that a Consultation should be granted; and that was a Matter wherein there were various Opinions, whether it was ex Necessitate, or Discretionary; but there they returned, That it was against Law for any such Message to be sent.

Now here, my Lord, is a Case full as strong: My Lords the Bishops were commanded to do an Act, which they conceived to be against Law, and they declined it, and tell the King the Reason; and they have done it in the most humble Manner that could be, by way of Petition. If they had done (as the Civil Law terms it) Rescribere generally, that had been lawful; but here they have done it in a more respectful Manner, by an humble Petition. If they had said the Law was otherwise, that sure had been no Fault; but they do not so much as that, but they only say, it was so declared in Parliament: and they declare it with all Humility and Dutifulness. So that, my Lord, if we consider the Persons of the Defendants, they have not acted as Busy-bodies; and therefore, as this Case is, when we have given our Evidence, here will be an Answer to all the Implications of Law that are contained in this Information: For they would have this Petition work by Implication of Law, to make a Libel of it; but by what I have said, it will appear, there was nothing of Sedition, nothing of Malice, nothing of Scandal in it; nothing of the Salt, and Vinegar, and Pepper that they have put into the Case. We shall prove the Matters that I have opened for our Defence, and then, I dare say, your Lordship and the Jury will be of Opinion, we have done nothing but our Duty.

Mr. Finch. May it please your Lordship, and you, Gentlemen of the Jury, This Information sets forth (as you may observe upon opening it) that the King having, by his Royal Prerogative, set forth his Declarations that we have read, and made an Order of Council for the reading the said Declarations in the Churches, and that the Archbishops and Bishops should severally send them into their Dioceses, to be read; my Lords the Bishops, that are the Defendants, did consult and conspire together to diminish the Kingly Authority, and Royal Prerogative of the King, and his Power and Government in his Regal Prerogative, in setting forth his Declaration; and that, in Prosecution of that Conspiracy, they did contrive (as it was laid in the Information) a malicious, seditious, false, and feigned Libel, under Pretence of a Petition, and so set forth the Petition; and that they published the Petition in the Presence of the King.

To this Charge in the Information, Not Guilty being pleaded, the Evidence that hath been given for the King, I know, hath been observed by the Court.

Court and Jury, and I know will be taken into Consideration, how far it does come up to the Proof of the Delivery of this Petition by my Lords the Bishops; for all that was said till my Lord President was pleased to come, was no Evidence of any Delivery at all; and my Lord President's Evidence is, that they were going to deliver a Petition; but whether they did deliver it, or did it not, or what they did deliver, he does not know. This is all the Evidence that has been given for the King.

But supposing now, my Lord, that there were Room to presume that they had delivered this Petition set forth in the Information, let us consider what the Question is between the King and my Lords the Bishops: The Question is, whether they are guilty of contriving to diminish the King's Regal Authority and Royal Prerogative, in his Power and Government, in setting forth this Declaration? Whether they are guilty of the making and presenting a malicious, seditious, and scandalous Libel; and whether they have published it, as it is said in the Information, in the King's Presence?

So that the Question is not now reduced to this, Whether this Paper, that is set forth in the Information, was delivered to the King by my Lords the Bishops; but whether they have made a malicious and scandalous Libel, with an Intent to diminish the King's Royal Prerogative, and Kingly Authority? And then, if you, Gentlemen, should think that there is Evidence given sufficient to prove that my Lords the Bishops have delivered to the King that Paper which is set forth in the Information; yet, unless they have delivered a false, malicious, seditious, and scandalous Libel, unless they have published it, to stir up Sedition in the Kingdom; and unless they have contrived this by Conspiracy, to diminish the King's Royal Prerogative and Authority, and that Power that is said to be in the King, my Lords the Bishops are not guilty of this Accusation.

There are in this Declaration several Clauses, which, upon reading of the Information, I am sure, cannot but have been observed by you, Gentlemen of the Jury; and one special Cause hath been by the Counsel already opened to you, and I shall not enlarge upon it.

My Lord, this Petition that is thus delivered to the King, if it be a Libel, a scandalous and seditious Libel (as the Information calls it) it must be so, either for the Matter of the Petition, or for the Persons that delivered the Petition, or for the Manner of their presenting and delivering it: But neither for the Matter, nor for the Persons, nor for the Manner of presenting it, is there any Endeavour to diminish the King's Royal Prerogative, nor to stir up Sedition, nor Reflection upon the King's Royal and Kingly Authority.

The Petition does humbly set forth to his Majesty, that there having been such a Declaration, and such an Order of Council; they did humbly represent to his Majesty, that they were not averse to any thing commanded them in that Order, in respect to the just and due Obedience that they owed to the King, nor in respect of their Want of a due Tendernefs to those Persons to whom the King had been pleased to shew his Tendernefs; but the Declaration being founded upon a Power of Dispensing, which had been declared illegal in Parliament several Times, and particularly in the Years 1662, 72, and 85, they did humbly beseech his Majesty (they not being able to comply with his Command in that Matter) that he would not insist upon it.

Now, my Lord, Where is the Contrivance to diminish the King's Regal Authority, and Royal Prerogative?

This is a Declaration founded upon a Power of dispensing, which undertakes to suspend all Laws Ecclesiastical whatsoever; for not coming to Church, or not receiving the Sacrament, or any other Non-conformity to the Religion established, or for, or by reason of the Exercise of Religion in any Manner whatsoever; ordering that the Execution of all those Laws be immediately suspended, and they are thereby declared to be suspended; as if the King had a Power to suspend all the Laws relating to his established Religion, and all the Laws that were made for the Security of our Reformation. These are all suspended by his Majesty's Declaration (as it is said) in the Information, by Virtue of his Royal Prerogative, and Power so to do.

Now, my Lord, I have always taken it, with Submission, that a Power to abrogate Laws, is as much a Part of the Legislature, as a Power to make Laws: A Power to lay Laws asleep, and to suspend Laws, is equal to a Power of abrogating them; for they are no longer in being, as Laws, while they are so laid asleep, or suspended: And to abrogate all at once, or to do it Time after Time, is the same Thing; and both are equally Parts of the Legislature.

My Lord, in all the Education that I have had, in all the small Knowledge of the Laws that I could attain to, I could never yet hear of, or learn, that the Constitution of the Government in England was otherwise than thus, That the whole Legislative Power is in the King, Lords, and Commons; the King and his two Houses of Parliament. But then, if this Declaration be founded upon a Part of the Legislature, which must be by all Men acknowledged not to reside in the King alone, but in the King, Lords, and Commons, it cannot be a legal and true Power, or Prerogative.

This, my Lord, has been attempted but in the last King's Time; it never was pretended till then; and in that first Attempt, it was so far from being acknowledged, that it was taken Notice of in Parliament, and declared against: So it was in the Years 1662, 1672.

In the Year ---62, where there was but the least Umbrage given of such a dispensing Power; although the King had declared, in his Speech to the Parliament, that he wished he had such a Power, which his Declaration before seemed to assume; the Parliament was so jealous of this, that they immediately made their Application to his Majesty, by an Address against the Declaration; and they give Reasons against it, in their Address: One in particular was, That the King could not dispense with those Laws without an Act of Parliament.

There was another Attempt in 1672, and then, after his Majesty had, in his Speech mentioned his Declaration to them, the Parliament there again, particularly the House of Commons, did humbly address to his Majesty; setting forth, that this could not be done by Law, without an Act of Parliament: And your Lordship, by and bye, upon reading the Record, will be satisfied what was the Event of all this. His Majesty himself was so far pleased to concur with them in that Opinion, that he cancelled his Declaration, tore off the Seal, and caused it to be made known to the House of Lords, by the Lord Chancellor, who, by his Majesty's Command, satisfied the House of it, that his Majesty had broken the Seal, and cancelled the Declaration; with this further Declaration, which is entered in the Records of the House, That it should never be drawn into Example, or Consequence.

My Lord, The Matter standing thus, in respect to the King's Prerogative, and the Declarations that had been made in Parliament; consider next, I beseech you, how far my Lords the Bishops were concerned in this Question, humbly to make their Application to the King.

My Lords the Bishops lying under a Command to publish this Declaration, it was their Duty, as Peers of the Realm, and Bishops of the Church of England, humbly to apply themselves to his Majesty, to make known their Reason why they could not obey that Command; and they do it with all Submission, and all Humility, representing to his Majesty what had been declared in Parliament; and it having been so declared, they could not comply with his Order, as apprehending that this Declaration was founded upon that which the Parliament declared to be illegal; and so his Majesty's Command to publish this Declaration would not warrant them so to do. This they did as Peers; and this they had a Right to do as Bishops, humbly to advise the King.

For, suppose, my Lord (which is not to be supposed in every Case, nor do I suppose it in this. But suppose that there might be a King of England that should be misled. I do not suppose that to be the Case now, I say, but I know it hath been the Case formerly), that the King should be environed with Counsellors that had given him evil Advice; it hath been objected as a Crime against such evil Counsellors, that they would not permit and suffer the great Men of the Kingdom to offer the King their Advice. How often do we say in Westminster-hall, that the King is deceived in his Grant: There is scarce a Day in the Term, but it is said in one Court or other; but it was never yet thought an Offence to say so: And what more is there in this Case?

My Lord, if the King was mis-informed, or under a Misapprehension of the Law, my Lords, as they are Peers, and as they are Bishops, are concerned in it; and if they humbly apply themselves to the King, and offer him their Advice, where is the Crime?

My Lord, these noble Lords, the Defendants, had more than an ordinary Call to this; for besides the Duty of their Office, and the Care of the Church, that was incumbent on them as Bishops, they were here to become Actors; for they were, by that Order of Council, commanded themselves to publish it, and to distribute it to the several Ministers in their several Dioceses, with their Commands to read it: Therefore they had more than ordinary Reason to concern themselves in the Matter.

Next, we are to consider, my Lord, in what Manner this was done: they make their Application to the King by an humble Petition, with all the Decency and Respect that could be shewn; asking Leave, first, to approach his Person; and having Leave, they offered my Lord President the Matter of their Petition, that nothing might seem hard, or disrespectful, or as if they intended any thing that was unfit to be avowed. When they had taken all this Care in their Approach, and begging Leave for it, they come secretly to the King in private, when he was all alone, and they humbly presented this Petition to his Majesty. Now, how this can be called the Publication of a malicious and seditious Libel, when it was but the presenting of a Petition to the King alone; and how it can be said to be with an Intent to stir up Sedition in the People against his Majesty, and to alienate the Hearts of his People from him, when it was in this private Manner delivered to him himself only; truly I cannot apprehend.

My Lord, I hope nothing of this can be thought an Offence: If the Jury should think that there has been Evidence sufficient given to prove that my Lords the Bishops did deliver this Paper to the King; yet that is not enough to make them guilty of this Information, unless this Paper be likewise found to be in Diminution of the King's Royal Prerogative and Regal Authority in dispensing with, and suspending of, all Laws, without Act of Parliament: Unless it be found to be a Libel against the King to tell him, that in Parliament it was so and so declared. And unless the presenting this by Way of Petition (which is the Right of all People that apprehend themselves aggrieved, to approach his Majesty by Petition) be a libelling of the King: And unless this humble Petition, in this Manner presented to the King in private, may be said to be a malicious and seditious Libel, with an Intent to stir up the People to Sedition: Unless all this can be found, there is no Man living can ever find my Lords the Bishops guilty upon this Information. Therefore, my Lord, we will go on, and make out this Matter that we have opened to your Lordship, if Mr. Attorney and Mr. Solicitor think fit to argue the Points that we have opened.

Mr. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, spare me a Word on the same Side. For the first Point, it is a Point of Law; whether the Matter contained in this Petition be a Libel. The King's Counsel pretend it is so, because it says, the Declaration is founded upon a Power the Parliament has declared to be illegal. But we say, that whatsoever the King is pleased to say in any Declaration of his, it is not the King's saying of it that makes it to be Law. Now, we say, this Declaration under the Great Seal, is not agreeable to the Laws of the Land; and that for this Reason, because it does, at one Blow, set aside all the Law we have in England.

My Lord, if this be denied, we must a little debate this Matter; for they are almost all penal Laws; not only those before the Reformation, but since; upon which the whole Government, both in Church and State, does in a great Measure depend.

Especially, my Lord, in Matters of Religion, they are all penal Laws: For, by the Act of Uniformity, which my Lords the Bishops are sworn to observe, and adjured by an express Clause in the Act, no Man is to preach unless he be Episcopally ordained; no Man is to preach without a Licence. If all this be set aside, I confess then, it will go very far in to the whole Ecclesiastical Government. If this be denied, we are ready to argue that too.

L. C. J. They are to do so still.—Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, I am sure the Consequence is otherwise, if this Declaration signify any thing. And if it be the Will of the King, my Lord, the Will of the King is what the Law is. If so be the King's Will be not consonant to the Law, it is not obliging.

My Lord, The Cases that we have had of Dispensations, are all so many strong Authorities against a general, or particular Abrogation. My Lord, that is a Matter of Law, which if it fall out to be any way doubtful, it will be fit to have it debated and settled.

If they will say, that the Penal Laws in Matters Ecclesiastical can be abrogated, or nulled, or made void pro tempore, or for Life, without the meeting of the King and People in Parliament, I must confess, they say a great thing, as it is a Point of great Concern; but I think that will not be said: And all that has been ever said in any Case, touching Dispensations, proves quite the contrary, and asserts what I affirm. For why should any Man go about to argue, that the King may dispense with this or that particular Law, if at once he can dispense with all the Law, by an undoubted Prerogative? This is a Point of Law which we insist upon, and are ready to argue with them; but we will go on with the rest of those Things that we have offered: And first, we will read the Act of Uniformity, made 1 Eliz. that Clause of it, where they are so strictly charged to see the Execution of that Law.

This Act, my Lord, by the Act of Uniformity, made in the Beginning of the late King's Reign, is revived, with all the Clauses in it relating to this Matter. If then this be a Duty incumbent upon them, and their Oaths require it of them; and if they find that the Pleasure of the King, in his Declaration, is that which is not consonant to this Law, what can they do?

Can any thing be more humble, or done with a more Christian Mind, than by Way of Petition, to inform the King in the Matter? For I never thought it, nor hath it ever, sure, been thought by any body else, to be a Crime to petition the King: For the King may be mistaken in the Law, so our Books say; and we, every Day, in Westminster-hall, argue against the King's Grants, and say, he is deceived in his Grants. It is the great Benefit and Liberty which the King gives to his Subjects, to argue the Legality or Illegality of his Grants.

My Lord, when all this is done, to make this to be a Libel, by putting in the Words Malicious, Seditious, Scandalous, and with an Intent to raise Sedition, would be pretty hard.—My Lord, we pray that Clause of the Statute may be read.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What for?

Mr. Pollexfen. It is a general Law, and therefore the Court will take Notice of it; and we pray the Jury may hear it read.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I agree it to be as Mr. Pollexfen has opened; and I agree it to be as Sir Robert Sawyer has opened it.

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. My Lord, we shall put it upon a short Point. My Lords the Bishops are here accused of a Crime of a very heinous Nature as can be; they are here branded and stigmatized by this Information, as if they were seditious Libellers; when, my Lord, it will in Truth fall out, that they have done no more than their Duty; their Duty to God, their Duty to the King, and their Duty to the Church.

For in this Case, that which we humbly offer to your Lordship (and insist upon it, as very plain) is this; That the Kings of England have no Power to suspend, or dispense with the Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom, that establish Religion: That is it which we stand upon for our Defence. And we say, that such a dispensing Power with Laws and Statutes, is a Thing that strikes at the very Foundation of all the Rights, Liberties, and Properties of the King's Subjects whatsoever. If the King may suspend the Laws of the Land which concern our Religion, I am sure there is no other Law but he may suspend: And if the King may suspend all the Laws of the Kingdom, what a Condition are all the Subjects in, for their Lives, Liberties, and Properties? All at Mercy.

My Lord, the King's legal Prerogatives are as much for the Advantage of his Subjects as of himself; and no Man goes about to speak against them: But, under Pretence of legal Prerogatives, to extend the Power of the King to support a Prerogative that tends to the Destruction of all his Subjects, their Religion and Liberties; in that, I think, they do the King no Service, who go about to do it.

But now we say, with your Lordship's Favour, that these Laws are the great Bulwark of the Reformed Religion; they are, in Truth, that which fence the Religion and Church of England, and we have no other human Fence besides. They were made upon a Foresight of the Mischief that had, and might come, by false Religions in this Kingdom; and they were intended to defend the Nation against them, and to keep them out; particularly to keep out the Romish Religion, which is the very worst of all Religions, from prevailing among us; and that is the very Design of the Act for the Tests, which is entituled, An Act to prevent Dangers that may happen from Popish Recusants.

My Lord, if this Declaration should take Effect, what would be the End of it? All Religions are let in, let them be what they will; Ranters, Quakers, and the like; nay, even the Roman Catholic Religion, as they call it, which was intended, by these Acts of Parliament, and by the Act of Uniformity, and several other Acts, to be kept out of this Nation, as a Religion no Way tolerable, nor to be endured here.

If this Declaration takes Effect, that Religion will stand upon the same Terms with the Protestant Religion. Suspend those Laws, and that Romish Religion, that was intended to be prohibited, and so much Care was taken, and so many Statutes made to prohibit it, will come in; and all this Care, and all those Statutes go for nothing. This one Declaration sets them all out of Doors; and then that Religion stands upon equal Terms with the established Religion.

My Lord, we say this farther, that my Lords the Bishops have the Care of the Church, by their very Function and Offices; and are bound to take Care to keep out all those false Religions that are prohibited, and designed to be kept out by the Law. My Lords the Bishops finding this Declaration founded upon a meer pretended Power, that had been continually opposed and rejected in Parliament, could not comply with the King's Command to read it.

My Lord, Such a Power to dispense with, or suspend the Laws of a Nation, cannot with any Shadow of Reason be. It is not long since, that such a Power was ever pretended to by any, but such as have the Legislative too; for it is plain, that such a Power must at least be equal to the Power that made the Laws. To dispense with a Law must argue a Power greater, or at least as great as that which made the Law.

My Lord, it has been often said in our Books, That where the King's Subjects are concerned in Interest, the King cannot suspend, or dispense with a particular Law. But, my Lord, how can the King's Subjects be more concerned in Interest, than when their Religion lies at Stake? It has been resolved, upon the Statute of Simony, that where the Statute has disabled the Party to take, there the King could not enable him against that Act of Parliament: And shall it be said, that by his Dispensation he shall enable one to hold an Office who is disabled by the Test Act?

My Lord, we say, the Course of our Law allows no such Dispensation as the Declaration pretends to: And he that is but meanly read in our Law, must needs understand this, That the Kings of England cannot suspend our Laws; for that would be to set aside the Law of the Kingdom: And then we might be clearly without any Laws, if the King should please to suspend them.

'Tis true, we say, the last King Charles was prevailed upon; by Misinformation, to make a Dispensation somewhat of the Nature of this, though not so full an one; for that dispensed only with some few Ceremonies, and Things of that Nature: But the House of Commons (this taking Air) in 1662, represent this to the King by a Petition. And what is it that they do represent? That he, by his Dispensation, has undertaken to do that which nothing but an Act of Parliament can do; that is, the dispensing with Penal Laws, which is only to be done by Act of Parliament. And thereupon it was thought fit, upon the King's Account, to bring in an Act for it in some Cases.

My Lord, the King did then, in his Speech to the Parliament (which we use as a great Argument against this dispensing Power) say this, "That considering the Circumstances of the Nation, he could wish with all his Heart, that he had such a Power to dispense with some Laws, in some Particulars." And thereupon there was a Bill, in order to an Act of Parliament, brought in, giving the King a Power to dispense; but, my Lord, with a great many Qualifications: Which shews plainly, that it was taken by the Parliament, that he had no Power to dispense with the Laws of himself.

My Lord, Afterwards in 1672, the King was prevailed upon again to grant another Dispensation somewhat larger.

L. C. J. Brother Pemberton, I would not interrupt you, but we have heard of this over and over again already.

Mr. S. Pemberton. Then, since your Lordship is satisfied of these Things, as I presume you are, else I should have gone on, I have done, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. But, my Lord, we shall go a little higher than that, and shew that it has been taken all along as the antient Law of England, that such Dispensations ought to be by the King and the Parliament, and not by the King alone.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, if you will admit every one of the Counsel to speech it before they give their Evidence, when shall we come to an End of this Cause? We shall be here till Midnight.

L. C. J. They have no Mind to have an End of the Cause, for they have kept it three Hours longer than they need to have done.

Mr. S. Pemberton. My Lord, this Case does require a great deal of Patience.

L. C. J. It does so, Brother; and the Court has had a great deal of Patience: But we must not sit here only to hear Speeches.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, after all their Speeches of two Hours long, let them read any thing if they have it.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We will begin with the Record of Richard the Second—Call William Fisher.

[William Fisher, Clerk to Mr. Ince, sworn.]

L. C. J. What do you ask him?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Shew him that Copy of the Record.

[The Record was then shewn him.]

L. C. J. Where had you those, Sir?

Mr. Fisher. Among the Records in the Tower.

L. C. J. Are they true Copies?

Mr. Fisher. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Did you examine them by the Record?

Mr. Fisher. Yes, my Lord.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Then hand them in; put them in.

Clerk reads. Ex Rotulo Parlamenti de Anno Regni Regis Richardi Secundi 15. N. 1.—My Lord, it is written in French, and I shall make but a bad Reading of it.

Sir Samuel Astry. Where is the Man that examined it?—Do you understand French?

Mr. Fisher. Yes, my Lord.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The Record is in another Hand than this; they may easily read it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Who copied this Paper?

Mr. Fisher. I did examine it.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What did you examine it with?

Mr. Fisher. I looked upon that Copy, and Mr. Halstead read the Record.

L. C. J. Young Man, read out.

Fisher reads. Vendredi Lende maine del Almes qu'estoit le premier jour—

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray tell us what it is you would have read?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. I'll tell you what it is, Mr. Solicitor: 'Tis the Dispensation with the Statute of Provisors: And the Act of Parliament does give the King a Power to dispense till such a Time.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Don't you think the King's Prerogative is affirmed by many Acts of Parliament?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. If the King could dispense without an Act of Parliament, what need was there for the making of it?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Serjeant, we are not to argue with you about that yet.

L. C. J. Read it in English, for the Jury to understand it.

Mr. Fisher. My Lord, I cannot undertake to read it so readily in English.

Mr. Just. Powell. Why don't you produce the Records that are mentioned in the Petition, those in King Charles the Second's Time?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. We will produce our Records in Order of Time, as they are.

Sir Samuel Astry. There is the Clerk of the Records of the Tower, Mr. Halstead, will read it very well in French or English.

[Then Mr. Halstead was sworn to interpret the Record into English, according to the best of his Skill and Knowledge; but not reading very readily—a true Copy of the Record in English follows, out of the Rolls of Parliament, in the 15th Year of King Richard the Second, Numero Primo.]

"FRIDAY, the Morrow of All-Souls, which was the first Day of this Parliament, holden at Westminster, in the fifteenth Year of the Reign of our Lord King Richard the Second, after the Conquest, the Reverend Father in God the Archbishop of York, Primate and Chancellor of England, by the King's Commandment, being present in Parliament, pronounced and declared very nobly and wisely, the Cause of the Summons of this Parliament, and said, First, That the King would, that holy Church principally, and afterwards the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and also the Cities and Boroughs should have and enjoy their Liberties and Franchises as well as they had them, and enjoyed them, in the Time of his noble Progenitors, Kings of England; and also in his own Time. And afterwards said, The Summons of this Parliament was principally for three Occasions. The first Occasion was, To ordain how the Peace and Quiet of the Land, which have heretofore been greatly blemished and disturbed, as well by Detraction and Maintenance as otherwise, might be better holden and kept, and the Laws better executed, and the King's Commands better obeyed. The second Occasion was, To ordain and see how the Price of Wools, which is beyond measure lessened and impaired, might be better amended and enhanced. And also, That in case the War should begin again, at the End of the present Truce, to wit, at the Assumption of our Lady next coming, to ordain and see, how and whereby the said War may be maintained at the least Charge of the People. And the third Occasion was, touching the Statutes of Provisors, To ordain and see how our holy Father might have that which to him belongs, and the King that which belongs to him, and to his Crown; according unto that, Render unto Cæsar the Things that are Cæsar's, and unto God the Things which are God's."

Then the other Record of Richard the Second was read as follows, out of the Rolls of Parliament, the fifteenth Year of King Richard the Second, N. 8.

"Be it remembered, touching the Statute of Provisors, That the Commons, for the great Confidence which they have in the Person of our Lord the King, and in his most excellent Knowledge, and in the great Tenderneſs which he hath for his Crown, and the Rights thereof; and also, in the noble and high Discretions of the Lords, have assented, in full Parliament, that our said Lord the King, by Advice and Assent of the said Lords, may make such Sufferance, touching the said Statute, as shall seem to him reasonable and profitable, until the next Parliament, so as the said Statute be not repealed in no Article thereof: And that all those who have any Benefices by Force of the said Statute, before this present Parliament; and also, That all those to whom any Aid, Tranquillity, or Advantage is accrued, by virtue of the said Statute of the Benefices of holy Church (of which they were heretofore in Possession) as well by Presentation, or Collation of our Lord the King, as of the Ordinaries, or Religious Persons whatsoever, or by any other Manner or Way whatsoever, may freely have and enjoy them, and peaceably continue their Possession thereof, without being ousted thereof, or any ways challenged, hindered, molested, disquieted, or grieved hereafter, by any Provisors, or others, against the Form and Effect of the Statute aforesaid, by reason of the said Sufferance in any Time to come. And moreover, That the said Commons may disagree at the next Parliament to this Sufferance, and fully resort to the said Statute, if it shall seem good to them to do it: With Protestation, That this Assent, which is a Novelty, and has not been done before this Time, be not drawn into Example or Consequence for Time to come. And they prayed our Lord the King, that the Protestation might be entered of Record, in the Roll of the Parliament: And the King granted, and commanded to do it."

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Now, my Lord, we will go on—This was in Richard the Second's Time: And a Power is given by the Commons to the King, with the Assent of the Lords, to dispense, but only to the next Parliament, with a Power reserved to the Commons; and to disagree to it, and retract that Consent of theirs the next Parliament.

Sir George Treby. The Statute of Provisors was, and is a Penal Law, and concerning Ecclesiastical Matters too; viz. The Collating and Presenting to Archbishopricks, Bishopricks, Benefices, and Dignities of the Church: And in this Record now read, the Parliament give the King a limited Power, and for the short Time, to dispense with that Statute. But, to obviate all Pretence of such a Power's being inherent in the Crown, as a Prerogative, they declare, (1.) That it was a Novelty; that is as much as to say, that the King had no such Power before. (2.) That it should not be drawn into Example; that is to say, that he should have no such Power for the future.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Now we will go on to the Records mentioned in the Petition; those in the last King's Time, in 1662, and 1672; and that in this King's Time, in 1685.—Where is the Journal of the House of Lords?

[Mr. Walker sworn.]

L. C. J. Is that the Book of the House of Lords?

Mr. Walker. It is the Journal of the House of Lords.

L. C. J. Is it kept by you?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is it kept?

Mr. Walker. In the usual Place, here in Westminster.

Mr. Soll. Gen. What is that?

Mr. Serj. Levinz. It is the Journal of the House of Lords.—But, my Lord, there is one Thing that is mentioned in the last Record that was read, which is worth your Lordship's and the Jury's Observation; That it is declared a Novelty, and a Protestation, that it should not be drawn into Precedent for the future.

L. C. J. That has been observed, Brother: Let us hear your Record read.

Clerk reads.—Die Mercurii 18. die Februarii, 1662.

"His Majesty was present this Day, sitting in the Regal Crown and Robes, the Peers being likewise in their Robes: The King gave Order to the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, to signify to the House of Commons his Pleasure, that they presently come up, and attend his Majesty, with their Speaker; who being present, his Majesty made this Speech following.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I AM very glad to meet you here again, having thought the Time long since we parted, and often wished you had been together, to help me in some Occasions which have fallen out: I need not repeat them unto you, you have all had the Noise of them in your several Countries; and, God be thanked, they were but Noise, without any worse Effects.

"To cure the Distempers, and compose the differing Minds that are yet amongst us, I set forth my Declaration of the 26th of December. In which you may see, I am willing to set Bounds to the Hopes of some, and to the Fears of others; of which when you shall have examined well the Grounds, I doubt not but I shall have your Concurrence therein. The Truth is, I am in my Nature an Enemy to all Severity for Religion and Conscience, how mistaken soever it be, when it extends to capital and sanguinary Punishments; which I am told, were began in Popish Times. Therefore, when I say this, I hope I shall not need to warn any here, not to infer from thence, that I mean to favour Popery. I must confess to you, there are many of that Profession, who, having served my Father, and myself very well, may fairly hope for some Part in that Indulgence I would willingly afford to others who dissent from us. But let me explain myself, lest some mistake me herein, as I heard they did in my Declaration. I am far from meaning by this a Toleration, or qualifying them thereby to hold any Offices or Places of Trust in the Government. Nay, further, I desire some Laws may be made to hinder the Growth and Progress of their Doctrine.

"I hope you have all so good an Opinion of my Zeal for the Protestant Religion, as I need not tell you, I will not yield to any therein, not to the Bishops themselves, nor in my liking the Uniformity of it, as it is now established; which being the Standard of our Religion, must be kept pure and uncorrupted, free from all other Mixtures. And yet, if the Dissenters will demean themselves peaceably and modestly under the Government, I could heartily wish I had such a Power of Indulgence to use upon Occasion."

Sir George Treby. Pray, Sir, read that out distinctly.

Clerk reads.—"I could heartily wish I had such a Power of Indulgence to use upon Occasion, as might not needlessly force them out of the Kingdom; or, staying here, give them Cause to conspire against the Peace of it."

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"It would look like Flattering in me, to tell you in what Degree I am confident of your Wisdom and Affection in all Things that relate to the Greatness and Prosperity of the Kingdom. If you consider well what is best for us all, I dare say we shall not disagree. I have no more to say to you at present, but, once again, to bid you heartily welcome."

Mr. Finch. The next Thing we shall shew you is, that after the King had made this Speech, and wished he had such a Power of Indulgence to use upon Occasion, there was a Bill in the House of Lords brought in, to enable the King to dispense with several Laws: We shall shew you the Journal, where it was read and committed; but further than that it went not.

L. C. J. What Use do you make of this, Mr. Finch?

Sir Rob. Sawyer. You may easily apprehend the Use we shall make of it. (The King, in his Speech, says, He wished he had such a Power) the House of Lords thought he had not; and therefore they ordered a Bill to be brought in, to enable him.—Read the Journal of the Lords of the 13th of March, 1662.

Clerk reads. Die Veneris 13. die Martii, 1662.

"After some Debate, whether the House should be put into a Grand Committee, for the further Debate of the Bill concerning his Majesty's Power in Ecclesiastical Affairs, it was put to the Question; viz.

"As many of your Lordships as would have this House adjourned, and put into a Committee to consider of the said Bill, say, Content; others, Not Content.

"Passed in the Affirmative.

"And then the Lord Chamberlain of the Household was directed to take the Chair, as formerly; which he did accordingly.

"And after Debate, the House was resumed, after the Grand Committee had appointed a Sub-Committee, touching the said Bill."

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This is all in the Journal of the House of Lords about this Matter.—We will now shew you the Bill itself.

Clerk reads. "An Act concerning his Majesty's Power in Ecclesiastical Affairs."

"WHEREAS divers of his Majesty's Subjects, through Error of Judgment, and misguided Consciences (whereunto the Licentiousness of these late unhappy Times have much contributed) do not conform themselves to the Order of divine Worship and Service established by Law; and though his Majesty and both Houses of Parliament are fully satisfied, that those Scruples of Conscience, from whence this Non-conformity ariseth, are ill grounded; and that the Government of the Church, with the Service thereof, (as now established) is the best that is any where extant, and most effectual to the Preservation of the Protestant Religion: Yet hoping that Clemency and Indulgence may, in Time, wear out those Prejudices, and reduce the Dissenters to the Unity of the Church; and considering that this Indulgence, how necessary soever, cannot be dispensed by any certain Rule, but must vary, according to the Circumstances of Time, and the Temper and Principles of those to whom it is to be granted; and his Majesty being the best Judge when, and to whom this Indulgence is to be dispensed, or as may be most consistent with the public Peace, and without just Cause of Offence “ Offence to others; and to the End his Majesty may be enabled to exercise it with universal Satisfaction, Be it Enacted by the King's most Excellent Majesty, by Advice, and with the Consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present Parliament assembled, and by the Authority thereof, That the King's Majesty may, by Letters Patents under the Great Seal, or by such other Ways as to his Majesty shall seem meet, dispense with one Act, or Law, made the last Session of this present Parliament (intituled, An Act for the Uniformity of publick Prayers, and Administration of the Sacraments, and other Rites and Ceremonies; and for establishing the Form of making, and ordaining, and consecrating Bishops, Priests and Deacons, in the Church of England) and with any other Laws or Statutes concerning the same; or requiring Oaths, or Subscriptions; or which do enjoin Conformity to the Order, Discipline, and Worship established in this Church, and the Penalties in the said Laws imposed, or any of them: And may grant Licences to such of his Majesty's Subjects of the Protestant Religion, of whose inoffensive and peaceable Disposition his Majesty shall be persuaded, to enjoy and use the Exercise of their Religion and Worship, though differing from the publick Rule (the said Laws and Statutes, or any Disabilities, Incapacities, or Penalties, in them, or any of them contained, or any Matter or Thing to the contrary thereof notwithstanding.)

“ Provided always, and be it Enacted, That no such Indulgence, Licence, or Dispensation hereby to be granted, shall extend, or be construed to extend to the Tolerating, or Permitting the Use or Exercise of the Popish, or Roman Catholick Religion in this Kingdom; nor to enable any Person or Persons to hold or exercise any Place or Office of publick Trust within this Kingdom; who, at the Beginning of this present Parliament were, by the Laws and Statutes of this Realm, disenabled thereunto; nor to exempt any Person or Persons from such Penalties as are by Law to be inflicted upon such as shall publish or preach any thing to the Depravation, or Derogation of the Book of Common-Prayer, or the Government, Order and Ceremonies of the Church established by Law.

“ Provided also, and be it Enacted, That no such Licence or Dispensation shall extend to make any Priest or Minister capable of any Ecclesiastical Living or Benefice, with Cure, who shall not, before the Archbishop of the Province, or Bishop of the Diocese where he lives, make such Subscription to the Articles of Religion, as is enjoined by the Statute of the 13th of Elizabeth, made for Reformation of Disorders in the Church; Nor shall extend, or be construed to extend to dispense with the Book of Common Prayer: But that the said Book shall be constantly read in all the Cathedral and Collegiate Churches, and in all the Parish Churches, and publick Chapels.”

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Here your Lordship sees what the Lords did in this Matter.—We shall now shew you, out of the Commons Journal, what they did concerning this Speech of the King—Shew the Journal of the 25th of February, 1662.

[Mr. Jodrell sworn.]

L. C. J. Did you examine that, Mr. Jodrell?

Mr. Jodrell. It is the Original Book.

[The Book delivered into the Court.]

Clerk reads. Die Mercurii 25. die Februarii, 15 Car. II. Resolved, That it be presented—

Sir Rob. Sawyer. You must begin above—The House then took into Debate—

Clerk reads. “ The House then took into Debate the Matter touching Indulgence to Dissenters, from the Act of Uniformity.

“ The Question being put, that the present Debate be adjourned till To-morrow Morning.

“ The House was divided.

“ The Yeas went out.

Sir John Goodrick,	} Tellers for the Noes;
and
Sir William Lowther,	} with the Noes 161.
and
Sir Richard Temple,	} Tellers for the Yeas;
and
Sir John Talbot,	} with the Yeas 119.
and

“ And so it passed in the Negative.

“ Resolved, &c.

“ That it be presented to the King's Majesty, as the humble Advice of this House, That no Indulgence be granted to the Dissenters, from the Act of Uniformity—

Mr. Soll. Gen. Does your Lordship think it to be Evidence?

L. C. J. Let them read it, Mr. Solicitor, that we may hear what it is.

Clerk reads on.

“ Ordered, That a Committee be appointed to collect and bring in the Reasons of this House for this Vote, upon the present Debate; to be presented to his Majesty, and that the nominating of the Committee be adjourned till To-morrow Morning.”

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That's all.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Pray, if there be any thing more, read on; you shall not parcel out a Record, and take and leave what you will.

Mr. Finch. Did not you parcel out our Petition?

Mr. Soll. Gen. Read on, if there be any thing about this Matter.

Clerk. That is all.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Turn to the 27th of Febr. 1662.

Clerk reads. Veneris 27. Februarii 15 Car. II.

“ Sir Heneage Finch reports from the Committee appointed to collect and bring in the Reasons of the House for their Vote of Advice to the King's Majesty; and in the Close of those Reasons to add, That the House will assist his Majesty with their Lives and Fortunes: And to pen an Address to his Majesty for that Purpose, the several Reasons and Address agreed to by the Committee in Writing, he read in his Place, and did bring up, and deliver the same in at the Clerk's Table.

“ The first Paragraph was read, and upon the Question agreed to.

“ The second Paragraph was read, and upon the Question agreed to.

“ The third was read, and upon the Question agreed to.”

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Go over that, and go to the Address itself.

Clerk reads. “ May it please your most Excellent Majesty,

“ WE your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal Subjects, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses of the House of Commons in Parliament assembled, having with all Fidelity and Obedience considered the several “ Matters comprized in your Majesty's late gracious Declaration of the 26th of December last, and your most gracious Speech at the Beginning of this present Session, do in the first Place for ourselves, and in the Names of all the Commons of England, render unto your Sacred Majesty the Tribute of our most hearty Thanks for that infinite Grace and Goodness wherewith your Majesty hath been pleased to publish your Royal Intention of adhering to your Act of Indemnity and Oblivion, by a constant and religious Observance of it; and our Hearts are further enlarged in these Returns of Thanksgiving, when we consider your Majesty's most Princely and Heroick Profession relying upon the Affections of your People, and the abhorring all Sorts of Military and Arbitrary Rule; but above all, we can never enough remember to the Honour of your Majesty's Piety, and our own unspeakable Comfort, those solemn and most endearing Invitations of your Majesty's Subjects, to prepare Laws to be presented to your Majesty against the Growth and Increase of Popery; and withal, to provide more Laws against Licentiousness and Impiety, at the same Time declaring your own Resolutions for maintaining the Act of Uniformity: And it becomes us always to acknowledge and admire your Majesty's Wisdom in this your Declaration, whereby your Majesty is pleased to resolve not only by sumptuary Laws, but by your own Royal Example of Frugality, to restrain that Excess in Men's Expences, which is grown so general, and so exorbitant, and to direct our Endeavours to find out fit and proper Laws for the Advancement of Trade and Commerce.

“ After all this, we most humbly beseech your Majesty to believe, That it is with extreme Unwillingness and Reluctancy of Heart, that we are brought to differ from any Thing which your Majesty hath thought fit to propose; and though we do no ways doubt but that the unreasonable Distempers of Mens Spirits, and the many Mutinies and Conspiracies which were carried on during the late Intervals of Parliament, did reasonably incline your Majesty to endeavour by your Declaration to give some Allay to those ill Humours, till the Parliament assembled; and the Hopes of an Indulgence, if the Parliament should consent to it; especially seeing the Pretenders to this Indulgence did seem to make some Title to it by virtue of your Majesty's Declaration from Bredah: Nevertheless, we your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal Subjects, who are now returned to serve in Parliament, from those several Parts and Places of your Kingdom for which we are chosen, do humbly offer it to your Majesty's great Wisdom, that it is in no sort advisable that there be any Indulgence to such Persons who presume to dissent from the Act of Uniformity and Religion established, for these Reasons.

“ We have considered the Nature of your Majesty's Declaration from Bredah, and are humbly of Opinion, That your Majesty ought not to be pressed any further.

“ Because it is not a Promise in itself, but only a gracious Declaration of your Majesty's Intentions to do what in you lay, and what a Parliament should advise your Majesty to do, and no such Advice was ever given, or thought fit to be offered; nor could it be otherwise understood, because there were Laws of Uniformity then in being, which could not be dispensed with but by Act of Parliament.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. This is all that we read this for; your Lordship and the Jury see what is here declared by the Parliament, That the Act of Uniformity, could not be dispensed with without an Act of Parliament.

Next, my Lord, we shall shew you what was done in the Year 1672:—Read the King's Speech the 5th of February, 1672.

[The Journals of the Lords House were delivered in.]

Clerk reads. Die Mercurij, 5. Februarij, 1672.

“ My Lords and Gentlemen,

“ I AM glad to see you here this Day. I would have called you sooner together, but that I was willing to ease you and the Country, till there were an absolute Necessity.

“ Since you were last here, I have been forced to a most important, necessary, and expensive War; and I make no doubt but you will give me suitable and effectual Assistance to go through with it. I refer you to my Declaration for the Causes, and indeed the Necessity of this War, and shall now only tell you, That I might have digested the Indignities to my own Person, rather than have brought it to this Extremity, if the Interest, as well as the Honour of the whole Kingdom had not been at Stake; and if I had omitted this Conjunction, perhaps I had not again ever met with the like Advantage.

“ You will find that the last Supply that you gave me, did not answer Expectation for the Ends you gave it, the Payments of my Debts; therefore I must in the next Place recommend them again to your special Care.

“ Some few Days before I declared the War, I put forth my Declaration for Indulgence to Dissenters, and have hitherto found a good Effect of it, by securing my Peace at home, when I had War abroad: There is one Part in it that has been subject to Misconstructions, which is that concerning the Papists, as if more Liberty was granted to them than to other Recufants, when 'tis plain there is less; for the others have publick Places allowed them, and I never intended that they should have any, but only have the Freedom of their Religion in their own Houses, without any Concourse of others; and I could not grant them less than this, when I had extended so much more Grace to others, most of them having been loyal, and in the Service of me, and the King my Father: And in the whole Course of this Indulgence I do not intend that it shall any way prejudice the Church, but I will support its Rights, and it in its full Power.

“ Having said this, I shall take it very ill to receive Contradiction in what I have done; and I will deal plainly with you, I am resolved to stick to my Declaration.

“ There is one Jealousy more which is maliciously spread abroad, and yet so weak and frivolous, that I once thought it not of Moment enough to mention; but it may have gotten some Ground with some well-minded People, and that is, that the Forces which I have raised in this War were designed to controul Law and Property. I with I had had more Forces the last Summer; the Want of them then, convinces me, I must raise more against this next Spring; and I do not doubt but you will consider the Charge of them in your Supplies.

“ I will

"I will conclude with this Assurance to you, That I will preserve the true Reformed Protestant Religion, and the Church, as it is now established in this Kingdom, and that no Man's Property or Liberty shall ever be invaded. I leave the rest to the Chancellor."

Mr. Serj. Pemberton. Now go to the Journal of the Commons of the 14th of February, 1672.

Clerk reads. Veneris 13. die Februarij, 1672.

"Mr. Powle reports from the Committee appointed to prepare and draw up a Petition and Address to his Majesty, the said Petition and Address, which he read in his Place, and afterwards delivered the same in at the Clerk's Table, and the same being again twice read, is as followeth; viz.

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"WE your Majesty's most loyal and faithful Subjects, the Commons assembled in Parliament, do in the first Place, as in all Duty bound, return your Majesty our most humble and hearty Thanks for the many Gracious Promises and Assurances which your Majesty has several Times, during this present Parliament, given to us, that your Majesty would secure and maintain unto us the true Reformed Protestant Religion, our Liberties and Properties; which most gracious Assurances your Majesty, out of your great Goodness, has been pleased to renew unto us, more particularly at the Opening of this present Session of Parliament.

"And further, we crave Leave humbly to represent, that we have, with all Duty and Expedition, taken into Consideration the several Parts of your Majesty's last Speech to us; and withal, the Declaration therein mentioned for Indulgence to Dissenters, dated the 15th of March last: And we find our selves bound in Duty to inform your Majesty, That Penal Statutes, in Matters Ecclesiastical, cannot be suspended but by Act of Parliament.

"We therefore, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses of your Majesty's House of Commons, do most humbly beseech your Majesty, That the said Laws may have their free Course, until it shall be otherwise provided for by Act of Parliament: And that your Majesty would graciously be pleased to give such Directions herein, that no Apprehensions or Jealousies may remain in the Hearts of your Majesty's good and faithful Subjects.

"Resolved, &c.

"That this House doth agree with the Committee in the Petition and Address by them drawn up to be presented to his Majesty."

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Now turn to the 24th of February, 1672, in the same Book.

Clerk reads. Lunæ 24. Februarij, 1672.

"Mr. Secretary Coventry reports and presents in Writing from his Majesty, his Answer to the humble Petition and Address of this House, which was thrice read, and the Matter debated, and is as followeth; viz.

"CHARLES R.

"HIS Majesty hath received an Address from you, and he hath seriously considered of it, and returns you this Answer, That he is very much troubled, that that Declaration which he put out for Ends so necessary for the Quiet of his Kingdom, and especially in that Conjunction, should have proved the Cause of Disquiet in his House of Commons, and give Occasion to the questioning of his Power in Ecclesiasticks, which he finds not done in the Reigns of any of his Ancestors. He is sure he never had Thoughts of using it otherwise than as it hath been entrusted in him, to the Peace and Establishment of the Church of England, and the Ease of all his Subjects in general; Neither does he pretend to the Right of suspending any Laws, wherein the Properties, Rights, or Liberties of any of his Subjects are concerned, nor to alter any thing in the established Doctrine or Discipline of the Church of England. But his only Design in this, was to take off the Penalties the Statutes inflicted upon Dissenters, which he believes, when well considered of, you yourselves would not wish executed according to the Rigour and Letter of the Law; neither hath he done this with any Thought of avoiding or precluding the Advice of his Parliament; and if any Bill shall be offered, which shall appear more proper to attain the aforesaid Ends, and secure the Peace of the Church and Kingdom, when tendered in due Manner to him, he will shew how readily he will concur in all Ways that shall appear good for the Kingdom."

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Turn to the 26th of February, 1672.

Clerk reads. Die Mercurij 26. Februarij, 1672.

"Mr. Powle reports from the Committee appointed to consider of an Answer to return to his Majesty's last Message upon the Debate of the House, an Answer agreed by the Committee, and drawn up, and put into Writing, which he read in his Place, and then delivered the same in at the Clerk's Table, where it was twice read, and is as followeth; viz.

"Most Gracious Sovereign,

"WE your Majesty's most humble and loyal Subjects, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeses in this present Parliament assembled, do render to your most sacred Majesty our most dutiful Thanks, for that, to our unspeakable Comfort, your Majesty has been pleased so often to reiterate unto us those gracious Promises and Assurances of maintaining the Religion now established, and the Liberties and Properties of your People; and we do not in the least Measure doubt but that your Majesty had the same gracious Intention in giving Satisfaction to your Subjects, by your Answer to our last Petition and Address: Yet, upon a serious Consideration thereof, We find that the said Answer is not sufficient to clear the Apprehensions that may justly remain in the Minds of your People, by your Majesty's having claimed a Power to suspend Penal Statutes in Matters Ecclesiastical, and which your Majesty does still seem to assert, in the said Answer, to be entrusted in the Crown, and never questioned in the Reigns of any of your Ancestors: Wherein we humbly conceive your Majesty has been very much misinformed; since no such Power ever was claimed or exercised by any of your Majesty's Predecessors; and if it should be admitted, might tend to the interrupting the free Course of the Laws, and altering the Legislative Power, which hath always been acknowledged to reside in your two Houses of Parliament.

"We therefore with an unanimous Consent become again most humble Suitors unto your Sacred Majesty, That you would be pleased to give us a "full and satisfactory Answer to our said Petition and Address, and that your Majesty would take such effectual Order, that the Proceedings in this Matter may not for the future be drawn into Consequence or Example."

"The Answer to his Majesty's Message was again read by Paragraphs, and the several Paragraphs to the last were, upon the Question, severally agreed.

"The last Paragraph being read, and the Question being put, that the Word unanimous should stand in the Paragraph,

"The House divided. — The Noes go out.

"Tellers.

"Lord St. John, } for the Yeas, 180.

"Mr. Vaughan, } for the Noes, 77.

"Sir Richard Temple, } for the Noes, 77.

"Sir Philip Howard, } for the Noes, 77.

"And so it was resolved in the Affirmative.

"The Question being put to agree to the Paragraph, it was resolved in the Affirmative.

"Resolved, &c.

"That the whole Address be agreed to, as it was brought in by the Committee."

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Now turn to the Lords Journal, and there your Lordship will see, that the King does communicate this Address to the Lords, and desires their Advice.

Read the 1st of March, 1672.

Clerk reads. Die Sabbati primo die Martii, 1672.

"His Majesty this Day made a short Speech, as follows.

"My Lords,

"You know, that at the Opening of this Session, I spoke here to your Satisfaction; it has notwithstanding begotten a greater Disquiet in the House of Commons than I could have imagined.

"I received an Address from them, which I looked not for, and I made them an Answer that ought to have contented them; but on the contrary, they have made me a Reply of such a Nature, that I cannot think fit to proceed any further in this Matter without your Advice.

"I have commanded the Chancellor to acquaint you with all the Transactions, wherein you will find both me and yourselves highly concerned. I am sensible for what relates to me, and I assure you, my Lords, I am not less so for the Privilege, and the Honour of this House. Afterwards the Lord Chancellor read the several Papers and Addresses of the House of Commons, and his Majesty's Answer thereunto, and opened his Majesty's Proceedings upon them."

The Address of the House of Commons was read.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pass over that, you have read it already.

Clerk reads. The next, his Majesty's Answer to the Address of the House of Commons was read as follows, —

Sir Rob. Sawyer. That hath been read too.

Clerk reads. Then was read the Reply of the House of Commons to his Majesty's Answer, as followeth, —

Mr. Finch. You have read that likewise.

Clerk reads. "Upon this it is ordered, that the Lord Treasurer, Duke of Buckingham, Earl of Bridgewater, Earl of Northampton, Earl of Bristol, Earl of Berks, Earl of Bellingbrooke, and the Earl of Anglesey, do forthwith withdraw, and consider what humble Thanks is fit to be given to his Majesty for his great Favour in communicating this Business to this House, and report the same. And accordingly, the said Lords Committees did withdraw themselves for that Purpose.

"The Lords being returned, the Duke of Buckingham reported what the Committee had prepared to present to his Majesty by way of Thanks, which was read as followeth.

"We the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in Parliament assembled, do unanimously present to your Sacred Majesty our most humble Thanks, for having been pleased to communicate to us what has passed between your Majesty and the House of Commons, whereby you have graciously offered us the Means of shewing our Duty to your Majesty, and of asserting the antient just Rights and Privileges of the House of Peers.

"The Question being put, whether to agree with the Committee?

"It was resolved in the Affirmative.

"Ordered, That his Majesty be desired, that his Speech, and the Papers read this Day, may be entered into the Journal-Book of this House.

"The Lord Treasurer, the Duke of Buckingham, and the Lord Chamberlain, are appointed to attend his Majesty presently, to know his Pleasure, what Time and Place this whole House shall wait upon him, to present the humble Thanks of this House for his great Favour shewed this Day.

"Ordered, that upon Monday Morning next, this House will debate the whole Matter of his Majesty's Speech, and these Papers; and to consider the Points of Privilege, and what else may arise thereupon.

"The Lords that were appointed to attend his Majesty, return with this Answer.

"That his Majesty has appointed this Afternoon at five of the Clock, for this House to wait upon him in the Banqueting House, at Whitehall.

"Ordered, that all the Judges now in Town, shall attend this House on Monday Morning next."

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The third of March, 1672, is the next.

Clerk reads. Die Lunæ 3. die Martii, 1672.

"The Lord Chancellor reported, that the whole House on Saturday last waited upon his Majesty at Whitehall, and presented the humble Address of this House, and his Majesty was pleased to return this Answer.

"My Lords,

"I take this Address of yours very kindly; I will always be very affectionate to you, and expect you should stand by me, as I will always be by you.

"Then the House took into Consideration the whole Matter of his Majesty's Speech on Saturday, and the three Papers which his Majesty acquainted this House withal, and all the said Papers in their Order were read, and after a long Debate, the Question being put,

"Wh

"Whether this House shall in the first Place enter into Consideration of giving Advice to his Majesty?—It was resolved in the Affirmative.

"It is ordered, that this Business shall be taken into Consideration to-morrow Morning, at nine of the Clock, the first Business.

"Ordered, That the Judges now in Town, shall attend to-morrow morning.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. The 4th of March, 1672.

Clerk reads. "Next, the House took into Consideration the Advice to be given to his Majesty, concerning the Addresses made to him from the House of Commons.

"The Address of the House of Commons, and his Majesty's Answer were read, and after a long Debate, the Question being put, Whether the King's Answer to the House of Commons, in referring the Points now controverted to a Parliamentary Way by Bill, is good and gracious, that being a proper and natural Course for Satisfaction therein?" It was resolved in the Affirmative.

Sir Robert Sawyer. The 8th of March, 1672.

Clerk reads. "Die Sabbati 8. die Martij, 1672.

"His Majesty on his Royal Throne, adorned with his Crown and Regal Ornaments, commanded the Gentleman Usher of the Black-Rod to give Notice to the House of Commons, that they attend his Majesty presently.

"The Commons being come with their Speaker, his Majesty made this short Speech following.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"YESTERDAY you presented me an Address, as the best Means for the Satisfying and Composing the Minds of my Subjects, to which I freely and readily agreed, and I shall take Care to see it performed accordingly.

"I hope, on the other Side, you Gentlemen of the House of Commons will do your Part; for I must put you in mind, it is near five Weeks since I demanded a Supply, and what you voted unanimously upon it, did both give Life to my Affairs at Home, and dishearten mine Enemies Abroad; but the seeming Delay it hath met withal since, hath made them to take new Courage, and they are now preparing for this next Summer a greater Fleet, as they say, than ever they have had yet; so that if the Supply be not very speedily dispatch'd, it will be altogether ineffectual, and the Safety, Honour and Interest of England must of Necessity be exposed. Pray lay this to Heart, and let not the Fears and Jealousies of some draw an inevitable Ruin upon us all.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"If there be any Scruple remaining with you concerning the Suspension of Penal Laws, I here faithfully promise you, that what has been done in that Particular, shall not for the future be drawn either into Consequence or Example. And as I daily expect from you a Bill for my Supply, so I assure you, I shall as willingly pass any other you shall offer me that may tend to the giving you Satisfaction in all your just Grievances.

"Next my Lord Chancellor reported, That both Houses waited upon the King Yesterday, and presented him with the Address against the Growth of Popery, and his Majesty hath been pleased to return this Answer.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"I do heartily agree with you in your Address, and shall give speedy Order to have it put in Execution. There is one Part to which I believe it is not your Intention that it should extend; for I can scarce say, those are in my Pay that are presently to be employed abroad; but as for all other Parts, I shall take Care it shall be done as you desire."

After which the Lord Chancellor said, he had somewhat more to impart to the House by the King's Command, which was,

That his Majesty last Night, having spoken with several Members of both Houses, found some Dissatisfaction remaining concerning his Answer to their Address in the Particular of the Officers to be employed abroad, of which Number he had five or six that were of the best Officers of France and Flanders, and being his own Subjects, he had been very solicitous to get; but if that bred any Umbrage, the King commanded him to let them know, that he resolves to give both his Houses full Satisfaction to their desire.

There was another Particular that the Lord Chancellor said he thought fit to acquaint them with, which, tho' it was by his Majesty's Leave, yet it was not by his Command: However, he thought it his Duty to acquaint the House with it (Mr. Secretary Coventry intending to acquaint the House of Commons with the same), That his Majesty had the last Night, in Pursuance of what he then intended, and declared this Morning, concerning the Suspension of Penal Laws not being for the future drawn either into Consequence or Example, caused the original Declaration under the Great-Seal to be cancelled in his Presence, whereof himself and several other Lords of the Council were Witnesses.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Turn to the 10th of March, 1672.

Clerk reads. "Die Lunæ decimo die Martij, 1672.

"Ordered, That what my Lord Chancellor said on Saturday last, concerning his Majesty's causing the vacating his Indulgence under the Great-Seal of England, shall be entered into the Journal-Book of this House as on Saturday last."

Sir Rob. Sawyer. We shall now come to that which pass'd in the Parliament in 1685—Read the 9th of November, 1685.

[The Journal of the Lords, 1685, put in.]

Clerk reads. "His Majesty being on his Royal Throne adorned with his Regal Robes and Crown (the Lords being in their Robes also) commanded the Gentleman-Usher to give Notice to the House of Commons that they immediately attend his Majesty; who being come, his Majesty made the following Speech.

"My Lords and Gentlemen,

"AFTER the Storm that seemed to be coming upon us when we parted last, I am glad to meet you all again in so great Peace and Quietness; God Almighty be praised, by whose Blessing that Rebellion was suppressed; but when I reflect what an inconsiderable Number of Men began it, and how long they carried it on without any Opposition, I hope every body will be convinced that the Militia, which hath hitherto been so much depended upon, is not sufficient for such Occasions, and that there is nothing but a good Force of well-disciplin'd

Vol. IV.

"Troops in constant Pay that can defend us from such as either at Home or Abroad are disposed to disturb us.

"And in Truth, my Concern for the Peace and Quiet of my Subjects, as well as for the Safety of the Government, make me think it necessary to increase the Number to the Proportion I have done. This I owed as well to the Honour as to the Security of the Nation, whose Reputation was so infinitely exposed unto all our Neighbours, by having lain open to this late wretched Attempt, that it is not to be repaired without keeping such a Body of Men on Foot, that none may ever have the Thoughts again of finding us so miserably unprovided.

"It is for the Support of this great Charge, which is now more than Double to what it was, that I ask your Assistance, in giving me a Supply answerable to the Expence it brings along with it: And I cannot doubt, but what I have begun so much for the Honour and Defence of the Government, will be continued by you with all the Cheerfulness and Readiness that is requisite for a Work of so great Importance.

"Let no Man take Exceptions that there are some Officers in the Army not qualified according to the late Tests for their Employments: The Gentlemen, I must tell you, are most of them well known to me; and having formerly served with me on several Occasions, and always approved the Loyalty of their Principles by their Practices, I think them fit now to be employed under me; and will deal plainly with you, that after having had the Benefit of their Services in such Time of Need and Danger, I will neither expose them to Disgrace, nor myself to the Want of them, if there should be another Rebellion to make them necessary to me.

"I am afraid some Men may be so wicked to hope and expect that a Difference may happen between you and me upon this Occasion; but when you consider what Advantages have risen to us in a few Months by the good Understanding we have hitherto had, what wonderful Effects it has already produced in the Change of the whole Scene of Affairs abroad, so much more to the Honour of the Nation, and the Figure it ought to make in the World, and that nothing can hinder a further Progress in this Way, to all our Satisfaction, but Fears and Jealousies amongst ourselves; I will not apprehend that such a Misfortune can befall us as a Division, or but a Coldness between me and you; nor that any thing can shake you in your Steadiness and Loyalty to me, who, by God's Blessing, will ever make you all Returns of Kindness and Protection, with a Resolution to venture even my own Life in the Defence of the true Interest of this Kingdom."

Sir R. Sawyer. Turn to the Commons Journal the 16th of Nov. 1685.

[The Journal of the House of Commons put in.]

Clerk reads. "Die Lunæ 16. die Novemb. 1685.

"Most gracious Sovereign,

"WE your Majesty's most loyal and faithful Subjects, the Commons in Parliament assembled, do in the first Place (as in Duty bound) return your Majesty our most humble and hearty Thanks for your great Care and Conduct in the Suppression of the late Rebellion, which threatened the Overthrow of this Government both in Church and State, and the uttermost Extirpation of our Religion by Law established, which is most dear unto us, and which your Majesty has been pleased to give us repeated Assurances you will always defend and support, which with all grateful Hearts we shall ever acknowledge.

"We further crave leave to acquaint your Majesty, That we have with all Duty and Readiness taken into our Consideration your Majesty's gracious Speech to us; and as to that Part of it relating to the Officers in the Army not qualified for their Employment according to an Act of Parliament made in the 25th Year of the Reign of your Majesty's Royal Brother of blessed Memory, entituled, An Act for preventing Dangers that may happen by Popish Recusants, We do, out of our bounden Duty, humbly represent unto your Majesty, That those Officers cannot by Law be capable of their Employments, and that the incapacities they bring upon themselves thereby, can no ways be taken off but by Act of Parliament.

"Therefore, out of the great Deference and Duty we owe unto your Majesty (who has been graciously pleased to take Notice of their Services to you), we are preparing a Bill to pass both Houses for your Royal Assent, to indemnify them from the Penalties they have now incurred; and because the Continuance of them in their Employments may be taken to be dispensing with that Law without Act of Parliament, the Consequence of which is of the greatest Concern to the Rights of all your Majesty's dutiful and loyal Subjects, and to all the Laws made for the Security of their Religion:

"We therefore, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgesses of your Majesty's House of Commons, do most humbly beseech your Majesty, that you would be graciously pleased to give such Directions therein, that no Apprehensions or Jealousies may remain in the Hearts of your Majesty's good and faithful Subjects."

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, we pray that these half Dozen Lines of the Statute 1 Eliz. may be read.

[A Statute-Book was then produced by Mr. Ince.]

L. C. J. We will have it read out of our own Book.

[Which was delivered into Court.]

Clerk reads. "This is 1 Eliz. Cap. 2. An Act for Uniformity of Religion, &c. Whereabout is it?—Mr. Ince. 'Tis the 15th Paragraph, at these Words—And for due Execution, &c.

Clerk reads. "And for due Execution hereof, the Queen's most Excellent Majesty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal in this Parliament assembled, do in God's Name earnestly require and charge all the Archbishops and Bishops, and other Ordinaries, that they shall endeavour themselves, to the utmost of their Knowledge, that the due and true Execution hereof may be had throughout their Dioceses and Charges, as they will answer before God for such Evils and Plagues, wherewith Almighty God may justly punish his People for neglecting this good and wholesome Law."

Mr. Serj. Levinz. Now, my Lord, if your Lordship pleases, the Charge is a Charge for a Libel, and there are two things to be considered.

First, Whether the Bishops did deliver this Paper to the King? But that we leave upon the Evidence that has been given; only we say, there has been no direct Proof of that.

In the next Place, supposing they did deliver this Petition to the King, Whether this be a Libel upon the Matter of it, the Manner of delivering it, or the Persons that did it?

And with Submission, my Lord, this cannot be a Libel, although it be true that they did so deliver it.

First, my Lord, there is a little Disingenuity offered to my Lords the Bishops, in only setting forth Part, and not the Whole; in only reciting the Body, and not the Prayer.

But, my Lord, with your Lordship's Favour, taking the petitionary Part, and adding it to the other, it quite alters the Nature of the Thing; for it may be, a Complaint without seeking Redress might be an ill Matter; but here taking the Whole together, it appears to be a Complaint of a Grievance, and a Desire to be eased of it.

With your Lordship's Favour, the Subjects have a Right to petition the King in all their Grievances, so say all our Books of Law, and so says the Statute of the Thirteenth of the late King; they may petition, and come and deliver their Petition under the Number of ten, as heretofore they might have done, says the Statute; so that they all Times have had a Right so to do, and indeed if they had not, it were the most lamentable Thing in the World, that Men must have Grievances upon them, and yet they not to be admitted to seek Relief in an humble Way.

Now, my Lord, this is a Petition setting forth a Grievance, and praying his Majesty to give Relief. And what is this Grievance? It is that Command of his, by that Order made upon my Lords the Bishops, to distribute the Declaration, and cause it to be read in the Churches: And pray, my Lord, let us consider what the Effects and Consequences of that Distribution and Reading is: It is to tell the People, that they need not submit to the Act of Uniformity, nor to any Act of Parliament made about Ecclesiastical Matters, for they are suspended and dispensed with. This my Lords the Bishops must do, if they obey this Order; but your Lordship sees, if they do it, they lie under an Anathema by the Statute of Elizabeth. for there they are under a Curse if they do not look to the Preservation and Observation of that Act: But this Command to distribute and read the Declaration, whereby all these Laws are dispensed with, is to let the People know, they will not do what the Act requires of them.

Now, with your Lordship's Favour, my Lords the Bishops lying under this Pressure, the Weight of which was very grievous upon them, they by Petition apply to the King to be eased of it, which they might do as Subjects: Besides, my Lord, they are Peers of the Realm, and were most of them sitting as such in the last Parliament, where, as you have heard, it was declared, such a Dispensation could not be; and then in what a Case should they have been, if they should have distributed this Declaration, which was so contrary to their own Actings in Parliament? What could they have answered for themselves, had they thus contributed to this Declaration? when they had themselves before declared, that the King could not dispense.

And that this was no new Thing, for it had been so declared in a Parliament before, in two Sessions of it, in the late King's Reign, within a very little Time one of another; and such a Parliament that were so liberal in their Aids to the Crown, that a Man would not think they should go about to deprive the Crown of any of its Rights. It was a Parliament that did do as great Services for the Crown as ever any did, and therefore there is no Reason to suspect, that if the King had had such a Power, they would have appeared so earnest against it.

But, my Lord, if your Lordship pleases, these are not the Beginnings of this Matter; for we have shewed you from the Fifteenth of Richard the Second, that there was a Power granted by the Parliament to the King to dispense with a particular Act of Parliament, which argues, that it could not be without an Act of Parliament: And in 1662, 'tis said expressly, that they could not be dispensed with but by an Act of Parliament. 'Tis said so again in 1672. The King was then pleased to assume to himself such a Power as is pretended to in this Declaration; yet, upon Information from his Houses of Parliament, the King declared himself satisfied that he had no such Power, cancelled his Declaration, and promised that it should not be drawn into Consequence or Example. And so the Commons, by their Protestation, said in Richard the Second's Time, that it was a Novelty, and should not be drawn into Consequence or Example.

Now, my Lord, if your Lordship pleases, if this Matter that was commanded the Bishops to do, were something which the Law did not allow of, surely then my Lords the Bishops had all the Reason in the World to apply themselves to the King, in an humble Manner to acquaint him why they could not obey his Commands; and to seek Relief against that which lay so heavy upon them.

Truly, my Lord, Mr. Attorney was very right in the opening of the Cause at first, that is, That the Government ought not to receive Affronts, no, nor the inferior Officers are not to be affronted; a Justice of the Peace, so low a Man in Office, is not. For a Man to say to a Justice of Peace, when he is executing his Office, that he does not right in it; is a great Crime, and Mr. Attorney said right in it: But suppose a Justice of Peace were making of a Warrant to a Constable, to do something that was not legal for him to do, if the Constable should petition this Justice of the Peace, and therein set forth, Sir, you are about to command me to do a Thing which, I conceive, is not legal; surely that would not be a Crime that he was to be punished for; for he does but seek Relief, and shew his Grievance in a proper Way, and the Distress he is under.

My Lord, this is the Bishops Case, with Submission; they are under a Distress, being commanded to do a Thing which they take not to be legal, and they with all Humility, by Way of Petition, acquaint the King with this Distress of theirs, and pray him, that he will please to give Relief.

My Lord, there is no Law but is either an Act of Parliament, or the Common Law; for an Act of Parliament there is none for such a Power; all that we have of it in Parliamentary Proceedings, is against it; and for the Common Law, so far as I have read it, I never did meet with any thing of such a Nature, as a Grant or Dispensation that pretended to dispense with any one whole Act of Parliament; I have not so much as heard of any such Thing mentioned by any of the King's Counsel; but here, my Lord, is a Dispensation that dispenses with a great many Laws at once, truly, I cannot take upon me to tell how many, there may be forty or above, for aught I know.

Therefore, my Lord, the Bishops lying under such a Grievance as this, and under such a Pressure, being ordered to distribute this Declaration in all their Churches, which was to tell the People they ought to be under no Law in this Case, which surely was a very great Pressure, both in Point of Law and Conscience too, they lying under such Obligations to the contrary, as they did; with Submission to your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, If they did deliver this Petition (Publishing of it I will not talk of, for there has been no Proof of a Publication, but a delivering of a Petition to his Majesty in the most secret and decent Manner that could be imagined), my Lords the Bishops are not guilty of the Matter charged upon them in this Information. It has been expressly proved, that they did not go to disperse it abroad, but only delivered it to the King himself: And, in short, my Lord, if this should be a Libel, I know not how sad the Condition of us all would be, if we may not petition when we suffer.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I challenge them to shew us any one Instance of such a Declaration, such a General Dispensation of Laws, from the Conquest till 1672. The first Umbrage of such a Thing is that of Car. II. 1662; but your Lordship hears the Declaration of the Parliament upon it. Before that, as there was no such thing, so your Lordship sees what the Parliament did to enable the King (not to do this Thing, but something like it) in Richard the Second's Time, where you see the Parliament did give the King a Power to dispense with the Statute of Provisors for a Time; but at the same Time declared that very Grant of their own to be a Novelty, and that it should not be drawn into Consequence or Example.

My Lord, we shall leave it upon this Point; To suspend Law is all one as to abrogate Laws; for so long as a Law is suspended, whether the Suspension be Temporary, or whether it be for ever; whether it be at once, or at several Times, the Law is abrogated to all Intents and Purposes: But the Abrogation of Laws is Part of the Legislature, that Legislative Power is lodged (as I said before, and I could never find it otherwise in all our Law) in Kings, Lords, and Commons.

L. C. J. You did open that before, Mr. Finch.

Mr. Finch. With this, my Lord, that my Lords the Bishops finding this Order, made upon them to publish this Declaration, did what in Duty they were bound to do; and unless the Jury do find, that they have done that which is contrary to Law, and to the Duty of their Places, and that this Petition is a Libel, and a seditious Libel, with an Intent to stir up Sedition among the People (we rely upon it) my Lords the Bishops can never be found guilty upon this Information.

L. C. J. Have you now done, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. Yes, my Lord, till they give us further Occasion: If they have any other Evidence to offer, we must answer it; if not, this is the Answer we give to what they have said.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We make no Bargain with you: If you have done, say so.

L. C. J. You must know, that you are not to have the last Word.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You have been three Hours already, if you have any more to say, pray conclude.

Mr. Finch. If they say they have no more Evidence, then we know what we have to do.

L. C. J. If you do say any thing more, pray let me advise you one Thing; don't say the same Thing over and over again; for after so much Time spent, it is irksome to all Company as well as to me.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we have no more Evidence to offer to your Lordship at present, unless they, by offering new Evidence, give us Occasion to reply upon them.

L. C. J. Gentlemen, you shall have all the legal Favour and Advantage that can be; but, pray let us keep to an orderly decent Method of Proceeding.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Pray, my Lord, favour me a Word before we conclude. My Lord, I do find very few Attempts of this Nature in any King's Reign. In the Reign of Henry the Fourth, there was an Act of Parliament that Foreigners should have a free Trade in the City of London, notwithstanding the Franchises of London: After the Parliament rose, the King issued out his Proclamation, forbidding the Execution of that Law, and commanding that it should be in Suspense, usque ad proximum Parliamentum; yet that was held to be against Law.

L. C. J. Sir Robert Sawyer, that which you are to look to, is the Publishing of this Paper, and whether it be a Libel or no. And as to the Business of the Parliament you mentioned, that is not to the Purpose.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, I say, I would put it where the Question truly lies; if they don't dispute the Point, then we need not labour it; but I don't know whether they will or no, and therefore I beg your Lordship's Favour to mention one Case more, and that is upon the Statute of 31 Hen. VIII. Cap. 8. which enables the King by Proclamation, in many Cases, to create the Law; which Statute was repealed by 1 Edw. VI. Cap. 12. That very Act does recite, that the Law is not to be altered or restrained, but by Act of Parliament; and therefore the Parliament enables the King to do so and so: But that was such a Power, that the Parliament thought not fit to continue, and it was afterwards repealed; but it shews, that at that Time the Parliament was of the same Opinion as to this Matter, that other Parliaments have been since.

Mr. Simmers. My Lord, I would only mention the great Case of Tomas and Sorrel in the Exchequer Chamber, upon the Validity of a Dispensation of the Statute of Edward the Sixth, touching Selling of Wine. There it was the Opinion of every one of the Judges, and they did lay it down as a settled Position, that there never could be an Abrogation, or a Suspension (which is a Temporary Abrogation) of an Act of Parliament, but by the Legislative Power. That was a Foundation laid down quite through the Debate of that Case. Indeed it was disputed how far the King might dispense with the Penalties in such a particular Law, as to particular Persons; but it was agreed by all, that the King had no Power to suspend any Law: And, my Lord, I dare appeal to Mr. Attorney-General himself, whether, in the Case of Gibson and Hales, which was lately in this Court, to make good that Dispensation, he did not use it as an Argument then, that it could not be expounded ed into a Suspension: He admitted it not to be in the King's Power to suspend a Law, but that he might give a Dispensation to a particular Person, was all that he took upon to justify him at that Time.

My Lord, by the Law of all civilized Nations, if the Prince does require something to be done, which the Person who is to do it takes it to be unlawful, it is not only lawful, but his Duty, Rescribere Principi. This is all that is done here, and that in the most humble Manner that could be thought of. Your Lordship will please to observe how far it went, how careful they were that they might not any way justly offend the King: They did not interpose by giving Advice, as Peers: they never stir'd till it was brought Home to themselves. When they made their Petition, all they beg is, that it may not so far be insisted upon by his Majesty, as to oblige them to read it. Whatever they thought of it, they do not take upon them to desire the Declaration to be revoked.

My Lord, as to Matters of Fact alledged in the said Petition, that they are perfectly true, we have shewn by the Journals of both Houses. In every one of those Years which are mentioned in the Petition, this Power of Dispensation was considered in Parliament, and, upon Debate, declared to be contrary to Law: There could be no Design to diminish the Prerogative, because the King hath no such Prerogative. Seditious, my Lord, it could not be, nor could possibly stir up Sedition in the Minds of the People, because it was presented to the King in private and alone: False it could not be, because the Matter of it is true: There could be nothing of Malice, for the Occasion was not fought: the Thing was pressed upon them; and a Libel it could not be, because the Intent was innocent, and they kept within the Bounds set by the Act of Parliament, that gives the Subject leave to apply to his Prince by Petition when he is aggrieved.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you done, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. We have done, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I shall be a great deal more merciful to your Lordship and the Jury than they have been, who have spent these four Hours in that which I think is not pertinent to the Case in question: They have let themselves into large Discourses, making great Complaints of the Hardships put upon my Lords the Bishops, by the Order of Council to read his Majesty's Declaration; and putting these Words into the Information of Seditious, Malicious, and Scandalous: But, my Lord, I admire that Sir Robert Sawyer should make such Reflections and Observations upon these Words, when I am sure he will scarce find any one of his own exhibiting, that has so few of those aggravating Words as this has; and therefore that might have been very well spared, especially by him.

In the next Place, my Lord, we are told what great Danger our Religion is in by this Declaration: I hope we have an equal Concern for that with them, or any Person else whatsoever. But, however, I am sure our Religion teaches us, not to preserve our Religion, or our Lives, by any illegal Courses; and the Question is, whether the Course that my Lords the Bishops have taken to preserve, as they say, our Religion, be legal or not? If it be not legal, then I am sure our Religion will not justify the using such a Course for never so good an End.

My Lord, for the Thing itself, I do admire that they, in so long a Time and Search that they have made, should not, which I expected, produce more Precedents of such a Paper as this is. They challenge us to shew, that ever there was any such Declaration as this: I'll turn the same Challenge upon them. Shew me any one Instance, that ever so many Bishops did come, under pretence of a Petition, to reflect upon the King out of Parliament.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. Is that your way of answering, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir Rob. Sawyer, you have had your Time, don't interrupt us; sure we have as much Right to be heard as you.

L. C. J. You have been heard over and over again, Sir Robert Sawyer, already.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, I don't intend to interrupt him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We cannot make them be quiet, they will still be chopping in upon us.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is an Art that some People have always practised, not to permit any body to speak but themselves.

But, my Lord, I say, that those few Instances that they have produced, are nothing at all to this Matter that is now upon Trial before your Lordship and this Jury: Nay, they are Evidences against them; for they are only Matters transacted in Parliament, which are no more to be applied to this Thing that is in Controversy now, than any the most remote Matter that could be thought of; and though they have gone so high in Point of Time, as to the Reign of Richard the Second, yet they have nothing between that and the late King's Reign, to which they at last have descended down.

But, my Lord, I say, that all the Talk of Richard the Second's Time is wholly out of the Case: Truly, I do not doubt but that in Richard the Second's Time they may find a great many Instances of some such sort of Petitioning as this; for our Histories tell us, that at that Time they had 40,000 Men in Arms against the King; and we know the Troubles that were in that King's Reign, and how at length he was deposed: But certainly there may be found Instances more applicable to the Case, than those they produce. As for those in King Charles the Second's Time, do they any ways justify this Petition? For now they are upon justifying the Words of their Petition, that this Power has been declared to be illegal in 1662, 1672, and 1685.

For what was done in 1662, do they shew any thing more than some Debates in the House of Commons, and at last an Address, an Answer by the King, a Reply of the Commons, and then the Thing dies. Pray, my Lord, is a Transaction in the House of Commons, a Declaration of Parliament? Sure, I think, no one will affirm that any thing can be a Declaration of Parliament, unless he that is the principal Part concurs, who is the King: For if you speak of the Court of Parliament in a legal Sense, you must speak of the whole Body, King, Lords, and Commons, and a Declaration in Parliament must be by all the whole Body; and that is properly an Act of Parliament.

Why then they come to the Year 1672, where your Lordship observes, that the late King did insist upon his Right; for after the Dispute, which was in 1662, his Majesty did issue out another Declaration, and when it comes to be debated in Parliament, he insists upon his Right in Ecclesiastical Matters; and though his Declaration was cancelled, yet there is no formal Disclaimer of the Right.

My Lord, after all, how far these Things that they have offered may work as to the Point that they have debated, I shall not now meddle with it, nor give your Lordship any Trouble about it, because it is not at all pertinent to the Case in Question; for I do (after all this Time and Pains that they have spent) take Leave to say, that these Gentlemen have spent all this Time to no Purpose.

L. C. J. Yes, Mr. Attorney, I'll tell you what they offer, which it will lie upon you to give an Answer to; They would have you shew how this has disturbed the Government, or diminished the King's Authority.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whether a Libel be true or not, as to the Matter of Fact, was it ever yet in any Court of Justice permitted to be made a Question whether it be a Libel or not? or whether a Party be punishable for it? And therefore I wonder to hear these Gentlemen to say, that because it is not a false one, therefore 'tis not a Libel. Suppose a Man should speak scandalous Matter of any Noble Lord here, or of any of my Lords the Bishops, and a Scandalum Magnatum be brought for it, though that which is spoken has been true, yet it has been the Opinion of the Courts of Law, that the Party cannot justify it, by reason it tends to the disturbing of the Peace, to publish any thing that is Matter of Scandal: The only Thing that is to be looked into, is, whether there be any thing in this Paper that is reflecting and scandalous, and not whether it be true or no? For if any Man shall Extra-judicially, and out of a legal Court and Way, reflect upon any of the great Officers of the Kingdom, nay, if it be but upon any inferior Magistrate, he is to be punished, and is not to make his Complaint against them, unless he do it in a proper Way. A Man may petition a Judge; but if any Man in that Petition shall come and tell the Judge, Sir, you have given an illegal Judgment against me, and I cannot in Honour, Prudence, or Conscience obey it; I do not doubt, nor will any Man, but that he that should so say, would be laid by the Heels, though the Judgment perhaps might be illegal.

If a Man shall come to petition the King, as we all know, the Council-Doors are thronged with Petitioners every Day, and Access to the King by Petition is open to every Body, the most inferior Person is allowed to petition the King; but because he may do so, may he therefore suggest what he pleases in his Petition? Shall he come and tell the King to his Face, what he does is illegal? I only speak this, because they say, in this Case his Majesty gave them Leave to come to him to deliver their Petition; but the King did not understand the Nature of their Petition, I suppose, when he said, he gave them Leave to come to him.

My Lord, for this Matter we have Authority enough in our Books; particularly there is the Case of Wrenham in my Lord Hobart. The Lord Chancellor had made a Decree against him, and he petitioned the King that the Cause might be re-heard; and in that Petition he complains of Injustice done him by my Lord Chancellor, and he put into his Petition many reflecting Things. This, my Lord, was punished as a Libel in the Star-Chamber; and in that Book it was said, though it be lawful for the Subject to petition the King against any Proceedings by the Judges, yet it must not be done with Reflections, nor with Words that turn to the Accusation or Scandal of any of the King's Magistrates or Officers, and the Justice of the Decree is not to be questioned in the Case; for there Wrenham, in his Defence, would have opened the Particulars where in he thought the Decree was unjust, but that the Court would not meddle with, nor would allow him to justify for such Illegality in the Decree: So in this Case, you are not to draw in Question the Truth or Falshood of the Matter complained against; for you must take the Way the Law has prescribed, and prosecute your Right in a legal Course, and not by Scandal and Libelling.

My Lord, there is a great deal of Difference between not doing a Thing that is commanded, if one be of Opinion that it is unlawful, and coming to the King with a Petition highly reflecting upon the Government, and with scandalous Expressions telling him, Sir, you act illegally, you require of us that which is against Prudence, Honour, or Conscience, as my Lords the Bishops are pleased to do in this Petition of theirs. I appeal to any Lord here, that if any Man should give him such Language, either by Word of Mouth or Petition, whether he would bear it, without seeking Satisfaction or Reparation by the Law.

My Lord, there is no greater Proof of the Influence of this Matter than the Crowd of this Day, and the Harangue that hath been made: Is it not apparent that the taking this Liberty to canvass and dispute the King's Power and Authority, and to censure his Actions, possesses the People with strange Opinions, and raises Discontents and Jealousies, as if the free Course of Law were restrained, and arbitrary Will and Pleasure set up instead of it?

My Lord, there is one Thing that appears upon the Face of the Information, which shews this not to be the right Course; and if my Lords the Bishops had given themselves the Opportunity of reading the Declaration seriously, they would have found in the End of the Declaration, that the King was resolved to call a Parliament in November. Might not my Lords the Bishops have acquiesced under their passive Obedience till the Parliament met? But nothing would serve them but this, and this must be done out of Parliament, for which there is no Precedent can be shewn, and this must be done in such a Manner as your Lordship sees the Consequence of, by your Trouble of this Day.

There is one Thing I forgot to speak to: They tell us, That it is laid malicious and seditious, and there is no Malice or Sedition found; we know very well that that follows the Fact, those Things arise by Construction of Law out of the Fact. If the Thing be illegal, the Law says it is seditious; a Man shall not come and say, he meant no Harm in it; That was the Case of Williams; in his treasonable Book, says he, he, I only intended to warn the King of the Danger approaching, and concludes his Book with God save the King; but no Man will say, that a good Preface at the Beginning, or a good Prayer at the End, should excuse Treason or Sedition in the Body of a Book. If I meet another Man in the Street and kill him, though I never saw him in my Life, the Indictment is, that it was ex Malitia præcogitata, as it often happens, that a Person kills one he never had Acquaintance with before; and in favorem vite, if the Nature of the Fact be so, the Jury are permitted to find according to the Nature of the Case; but in Strictness of Law there is Malice imputed: But, my Lord, I think these Matters are so common, and that is a Point that has been so often settled, that the Form of the Indictment and Information must follow the Nature of the Fact; that I need not insist upon it, if the Act be unlawful, the Law supplies the Malice and evil Intentions.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the King, and I shall take Leave to proceed in this Method: First, I shall put the Case of my Lords the Bishops, and then consider the Arguments that have been used in their Defence, and answer them as much as is material to be answered; and then leave it to your Lordship, and the Jury's Consideration, whether what has been said by these Gentlemen, weigh any thing in this Case.

First, my Lord, I take it for granted, and I think the Matter is pretty plain by this Time, by my Lord President's Evidence, and their own Confession, that it is not to be disputed, but that this Paper was presented by these Lords to the King; I think there is no great Difficulty in that Matter at all, but I just touch upon it, because I would follow them in their own Method.

Then, my Lord, let us take this Case as it is, upon the Nature of the Petition, and the Evidence that they have given, and then let us see whether that will justify the Thing that is done: For the Business of Petitioning, I would distinguish and enquire, whether my Lords the Bishops out of Parliament can present any Petition to the King? I do agree, that in Parliament the Lords and Commons may make Addresses to the King, and signify their Desires, and make known their Grievances there; and there is no doubt but that is a natural and proper Way of Application: For in the Beginning of the Parliament, there are Receivers of Petitions appointed, and upon Debates, there are Committees appointed to draw up Petitions and Addresses; but to come and deduce an Argument, that because the Lords in Parliament have done thus (there being such Methods of Proceedings usual in Parliaments) therefore my Lords the Bishops may do it out of Parliament, that is certainly a Non sequitur, no such Conclusion can be drawn from those Premises.

My Lord, I shall endeavour to lay the Fact before you as it really is, and then consider what is proper for the Court to take Notice of, as legal Proof or Evidence: And I take it, all those Precedents that they have produced of what the Lords did, and what the Commons did in Parliament, is no Warrant for them to shelter themselves under, against the Information here in Question.

Mr. Just. Powell. My Lord, this is strange Doctrine! Shall not the Subject have Liberty to petition the King but in Parliament? If that be Law, the Subject is in a miserable Case.

L. C. J. Brother, let him go on, we will hear him out, tho' I approve not of his Position.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Lords may Address to the King in Parliament, and the Commons may do it, but therefore that the Bishops may do it out of Parliament, does not follow. I heard nothing said that could have given Colour to such a Thing, but the Curse that has been read in 1 Eliz.

But pray, my Lord, let us consider that Evidence they have given: They have begun with that Record in Richard the Second's Time, and what is that? That the King may dispense with the Statute of Provisors till the Meeting of the next Parliament, and a Protestation of the Commons at the End of it, whether that be an Act of Parliament that is Declaratory of the Common Law, or Introductory of a new Law, non constat; and for aught appears, it might be a Declaratory Act: And if so, it is a Proof of the King's Prerogative of Dispensing. It might be an Act in Affirmance of the King's Prerogative, as there are a great many such, we very well know; and generally most of the Laws in that kind, are in Affirmance of the King's Power; so that the Law turns as an Argument for the King's Prerogative, and they have given him that which will turn upon themselves: So it stood in Richard the Second's Time; but whether that be an Argument one way or other conclusive, is left to your Lordship and the Jury.

Ay, but say they, there is no Execution of such a Power till very lately, and the first Instance that they produce, is that in the Year 1662. But your Lordship knows, that before the Reign of Henry the Fourth, there was great Jurisdiction assumed by the Lords in Original Causes: Then comes the Statute of Appeals, 1 Hen. IV. which takes Notice, that before that Time the Lords had assumed an original Jurisdiction in all Causes, and would proceed and determine them in Parliament, and out of Parliament; and it fell out to be so great a Grievance, that it was thought necessary to make a Law against it, that Appeals in Parliament should be abolished and destroyed; and then comes that Law in Favour of the Subject of England, and that settles the Bounds between the King and the Lords in a great Measure. Before that time the Lords were grown very powerful, and where there is a Power, there always will be Applications; and what is the Effect of that Statute, 1 Hen. IV.? For all that we endeavour is, to make Things as plain as can be, that no further Applications, no Accusations, no Proceedings in any Case whatever be before the Lords in Parliament, unless it be by Impeachment of the Commons: So that there is the Salvo; and the Use that I make use of it is this; The Commons, by that very Statute, did abolish the Power that the Lords had arrogated to themselves, and ordered, that they should not meddle with any Cause, but upon the Impeachment of the House of Commons, and establish the Impeachment of the Commons, which is as ancient as the Parliament, for that was never yet spoken against, the Power of the Commons impeaching any Person under the Degree of the Prince; and that is the regular legal Way, and so the Commons asserted their ancient Right, and whatsoever the Lords took Notice of, must come by Application of the Commons; then Conferences were to pass between the Houses; and both Houses by Address apply to the King. This is the proper Way and Course of Parliament, of which my Lord Coke says, It is known to few, and practised by fewer: But it is a venerable, honourable Way: and this is the Course that should have been taken by my Lords here, and they should have stayed till the Complaint had come from the Commons in Parliament, and then it had been regular for them to Address to the King; but they were too quick, too nimble.

And whereas the Statute of Hen. IV. says, That no Lord whatsoever shall intermeddle with any Cause, but by the Impeachment of the Commons, they interpose and give their Advice before their Time: If there be any Irregularity in Parliament, or out of Parliament, the Commons are to make their Complaint of it, and a Man must not be his own Judge, nor his own Carver, nor must every Man create Difficulties of his own, nor set upon petitioning in this sort: But there I lay my Foundation, that in such a Matter as this, there ought to have been the Impeachment of the Commons in Parliament before these Lords could do any thing; and I know nothing can be said for the Bishops more than this, that they were under an Anathema, under the Curse that Sir Robert Sawyer speaks of; and for Fear of that, they took this irregular Course. But some would say, Better fall into the Hands of God than of Men: Some would say so (I say) I know not what they would say; but these being the Methods that these Lords should have taken, they should have pursued that Method; the Law should have carved out their Relief and Remedy for them, but they were for going by a new Fancy of their own.

My Lord, the Law continued thus, and was practised so till 3 Hen. VII. where the Grievance was found, that Offences in the Intervals of Parliament could not be well punished, and then comes the Statute that sets up the Court of Star-Chamber, and there Men were often brought to Judgment and Punishment for their Sins; and though very great Power was given them, yet they arrogated to themselves a greater; and therefore that Court is abolished by the Statute of 15 Car. I. and what is the Reason of abolishing that Statute? Because the Star-Chamber did not keep within their Bounds that the Law set them, but assumed to themselves a larger Power than the Law would allow, and grew very exorbitant and very grievous to the Subject: And another Reason was, which the Statute of 15 Car. I. founded itself upon, because there was nothing that was brought in Judgment before that Court, but might be relieved and remedied in the ordinary Methods of Justice in the Courts of Westminster-Hall: So that upon those two Considerations, because that Court was exorbitant, and because all the Sins and Misdemeanors that were punished there, might be punished in an ordinary Way of Law in another Court, and therefore there was no need of that Court, and so it was abolished, and the Subject was pretty safe. If there was a Crime committed here, a Man might come properly before your Lordship into this Court, and have it punished.

My Lord, they find fault with the Words in the Information, and they say, Why are these Words put in, Seditious, Malicious? If the Matter be libellous and seditious, we may lawfully say, and it is no more than the Law speaks, it results out of the Matter itself; and, if it be a libellous Paper, the Law says, it is maliciously and seditiously done; and these Gentlemen need not quarrel with us, for so are all the Informations in all Times past, and 'tis no more than the Vi & Armis, which is common Form. It may be said, How can the publishing of a Libel be said to be done Vi & Armis? That is only a supposition of Law, and they may as well object to the Conclusion of the Information, that it was contra Coronam & Dignitatem Domini Regis. If it be an illegal Thing, or a Libel, these are necessary Consequences; it is no more than the speaking of the Law upon the Fact.

But, my Lord, let us a little consider, whether this Matter were warrantable, and whether they had any Warrant to do what was done: They pretend it was done upon this Account, That the King had set forth a Declaration, and had ordered them to read it; which to excuse themselves from, they make this Petition, or this Libel (call it what you will), and they use this as the main Argument, That they say the King has done illegally, and they tell the King plainly so, that it is illegal; for they take Notice of this Declaration, and say, it is illegal, because it is contrary to the Declarations of Parliament in 1662, 1672, and 1685.

Pray, my Lord, let us consider a little, whether there be any Declaration in Parliament that they have given Evidence of? Have they read any Declaration of the Parliament in 1662? What is a Declaration in Parliament, but a Bill that is passed by the King, Lords, and Commons? That we know to be the Meaning, and no other. If it pass the Commons, it is no Declaration in Parliament; nay, if it pass the Lords and Commons, it is not a Declaration in Parliament, except it also pass the King. All these Things are Nullities, and the Law takes no notice of them: We have it in our Books over and over, and no Court ought to suffer such Evidence to be given. I know these Gentlemen are very well acquainted with the Authority in Fitzherbert, Title, Parliament. There was such an Act that was said to be by the King and the Lords; but because the Commons did not agree to it, it is declared and adjudged to be a Nullity, and the Court would take no notice of it; and how can any Man call that a Declaration in Parliament, which is only a Vote of the House of Commons, or of the Lords? No, sure, that is one of the Heads I go upon; 'tis not a Declaration in Parliament, unless it be by an Act of Parliament.

Indeed, my Lord, there is another sort of a Declaration in Parliament before the Lords, as they are a Court of Judicature, and that is a fair Declaration too; for if any thing comes judicially before the Lords, either by Writ of Error, or by natural Appeal from any of the other Courts, or by Adjournment, and there be any Judgment given, that is a Declaration in Parliament, and may be fairly so called: So likewise there is another judicial Declaration, which is, when any thing comes before the Lords judicially, upon an Impeachment of the Commons; and they give Judgment upon that Impeachment, that is, a Declaration in Parliament: But to say that there is any other Declaration in Parliament, is to say more than these Gentlemen can make out. If they will shew me any such, I will submit to them, and not speak a Word against my Lords the Bishops; but if these learned Gentlemen cannot shew me any such, then they have not said what was true in this Petition, that it was so and so declared in Parliament.

For let us consider what there is in this Case upon this Evidence; for that in 1662, is only a Vote and Opinion of the House of Commons; and I always understood, and have been told so by some of the Gentlemen of the other Side, that such a Vote signifies nothing: But besides, it seems to be a mistaken Address; for they say in it, that the Declaration in 1662, which they address against, was the first Declaration of that Sort to suspend Laws without Act of Parliament; and yet in the same Breath, they do take Notice of the King's Declaration from Bredab. But here is a mighty Argument used from the King's Speech, that because he wished he had such a Power, this must be declared in Parliament that he had no such Power. Is the Speech of the Prince a Declaration in Parliament? All the Speeches that were made upon the Opening of the Parliament, will you say they are Declarations in Parliament? Then the Chancellor, or the Keeper's Speech, or the Lord Privy Seal's, must be a Declaration in Parliament. Whoever speaks the Sense of the King, if he does not speak that which is Law and Right, is questionable for it, and several have been impeached for so doing; for they look not upon it as the King's Speech, except it be according to Law. Nothing can turn upon the Prince but what is legal; if it be otherwise, it turns upon him that speaks it. I never did hear that a Speech made by the Chancellor (and I will appeal to all the Lords that hear me in it) was a Declaration in Parliament.

Then, my Lord, we come to the Business in 1672, which, with that in 1662, and that in Bredab, shews, that this of the King's is not such a Novelty, but has been done often before. In 1672, the King was in Distress for Money, being entangled in a Dutch War, and wanted Supply: He capitulates with his Commons (you have heard it read) and, upon the Commons Address, he asserts it to be his Right, and makes his Complaint to the Lords how the Commons had used him; for when he gives them a fair Answer, they replied, and there are Conferences with the Lords about it; but at length it all ends in a Speech by the King, who comes and tells them of his present Necessities, and so he was minded to remit a little at the Instigation of the Commons, and he has a good Lump of Money for it. Would this amount to a Declaration in Parliament? Can my Lords the Bishops fancy or imagine that this is to be imposed upon the King, or upon the Court, for a Declaration in Parliament?

Then last of all, for that in 1685, in this King's Time, what is it? The Commons make an Address to the King, and complain to his Majesty of some of his Officers in his Army, * Here Mr. Justice Powell speaking to the Lord Chief Justice.

Mr. Just. Powell. My Lord, this is wide, Mr. Solicitor would impose upon us: let him make it out if he can, that the King has such a Power, and answer the Objections made by the Defendants Counsel.

L. C. J. Brother, impose upon us! He shall not impose upon me; I know not what he may upon you; for my Part, I do not believe one Word he says.

† Here there was a great Hissing.

But what Sort of Evidence is all this? Would you allow all the Addresses of the House of Commons to be Evidence? Give me Leave to say it, my Lord, If you suffer these Votes, these Copies of imperfect Bills, these Addresses, and Applications of one or both Houses to the King, to be Evidence and Declarations in Parliament, then what will become of the Bill of Exclusion? Shall any body mention that Bill of Exclusion to be a Declaration in Parliament? If so, then there is Declaration against Declaration; the Declaration of the Commons against the Declaration of the Lords. I know not what Judgment my Lords the Bishops may be of now, concerning those Things of Votes and Addresses being Declarations in Parliament, but I am sure they have spoken against it heretofore: Nay, I am sure some of them have preached against it.

And if my Lords the Bishops have said, these are Declarations in Parliament, and they are not Declarations in Parliament; and if they accuse the King of having done an illegal Thing, because he has done that which has been declared in Parliament to be illegal, when it was never so declared, then the Consequence is very plain, that they are mistaken sometimes; and I suppose by this Time they believe it.

I dare say it will not be denied me, that the King may, by his Prerogative Royal, issue forth his Proclamation; it is as essential a Prerogative as it is to give his Assent to an Act of Parliament to make it a Law. And it is another Principle, which I think cannot be denied, that the King may make Constitutions and Orders in Matters Ecclesiastical; and that these he may make out of Parliament, and without the Parliament. If the King may do so, and these are his Prerogatives, then suppose the King does issue forth his Royal Proclamation (and such in Effect is this Declaration under the Great Seal) in a Matter Ecclesiastical, by Virtue of his Prerogative Royal; and this Declaration is read in the Council, and published to the World, and then the Bishops come and tell the King, Sir, You have issued out an illegal Declaration, being contrary to what has been declared in Parliament, when there is no Declaration in Parliament; is not this a diminishing the King's Power and Prerogative in issuing forth his Declaration, and making Constitutions in Matters Ecclesiastical? Is not this a questioning of his Prerogative? Do not my Lords the Bishops in this Case raise a Question between the King and the People? Do not they, as much as in them lies, stir up the People to Sedition? For who shall be Judge between the King and the Bishops? Says the King, I have such a Power and Prerogative to issue forth my Royal Proclamation, and to make Orders and Constitutions in Matters Ecclesiastical, and that without the Parliament, and out of Parliament. Say my Lords the Bishops, You have done so, but you have no Warrant for it. Says the King, Every Prince has done it, and I have done no more than what is my Prerogative to do. But this, say the Bishops, is against Law. How shall this be tried? Should not the Bishops have had the Patience to have waited till a Parliament came, when the King himself tells them, he would have a Parliament in November at furthest.

VOL. IV.

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Solicitor, come close to the Business, for it is very late.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I beg your Patience; you have had a great deal of Patience with them, pray spare me a little. I am saying, when the King himself tells them, that he would have a Parliament in November at furthest; yet they have no Patience to stay till November, but made this Application to him. Is not this raising a Question upon the King's Prerogative in issuing forth Declarations? and upon the King's Power and Right in Matters Ecclesiastical? And when I have said this, that my Lords the Bishops have so done, if they have raised a Question upon the Right of the King, and the Power of the King in Matters Ecclesiastical, then they have stirred up Sedition. That they have so done is pretty plain: and for the Consequence of it, I shall appeal to the Case in the 2 Cro. 2 Jac. I. That is a plain direct Authority for me.

Mr. Just. Powell. Nay, Mr. Solicitor, we all very well know, to deny the King's Authority in Temporals and Spirituals, as by Act of Parliament, is High Treason.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I carry it not so far, Sir. We have a gracious Prince, and my Lords the Bishops find it so by this Prosecution: But what says that Case? It is printed in three Books, in Nov 100, in Moor 375, and in Mr. Just. Cro. 371. Says that Case, The King may make Orders and Constitutions in Matters Ecclesiastical.

Mr. Just. Powell. But how will you apply that Case to this in Hand, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will apply it by and bye, Sir; I would first shew what it is: There is a Convention of the greatest Men in the Kingdom.

Mr. Just. Powell. Indeed, Mr. Solicitor, you shoot at Rovers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is the Lord Privy Seal, the Archbishop of Canterbury, and a great many others: It is the greatest Assembly we meet with in our Books, and all of them are of this Opinion, that the King may make Orders and Constitutions in Matters Ecclesiastical.

My Lord, there is another Authority, and that is, from the Statute 1 Eliz. which erected the High Commission Court, and that Statute was not introductory of a new Law, but declaratory of the old Law. The King by his Proclamation declares his Sense to do such and such a Thing; the Court and all Persons there give their Judgment and Opinion upon that Statute, that they looked upon it as the grossest Thing, and the foulest Affront to the Prince, for any Man to bring into Question that Power of the King in Matters Ecclesiastical: 'Tis said to be a very high Crime. Why then, my Lord, what is done in this Case?

Mr. Just. Powell. Mr. Solicitor, pray, when you are applying, apply that other Part of the Case too, which says, that it was a heinous Offence to raise a Rumour that the King did intend to grant a general Toleration; and is there any Law since that has changed it, Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. In the main, Judgment goes another Way. As for that Part, it was Personal to the Prince that then was, of whom they had scandalously reported, that he intended to do such a Thing. They look'd upon it as a Scandal to King James, that it was a sowing Sedition, and stirring up People against the Government, and that will come up to our Case: For as some Men do it on the right Side, others do it on the left; and whoever he be that endeavours to bring a Dislike of the King in the People, that is moving Sedition against the Prince; but that is Personal to the Prince himself, and does not go to his Successors.

Now, my Lord, I come to that which is very plain from the Case of De Libellis Famosis: If any Person, in any Paper, have slandered the Government, you are not to examine who is in the Right, and who is in the Wrong; whether what they said to be done by the Government be legal or no; but whether the Party have done such an Act. If the King have a Power (for still I keep to that) to issue forth Proclamations to his Subjects, and to make Orders and Constitutions in Matters Ecclesiastical, if he do issue forth his Proclamation, and make an Order upon the Matters within his Power and Prerogative; and if any one would come and bring that Power in Question, I say that is Sedition, and you are not to examine the Legality or Illegality of the Order or Proclamation; and that, I think, is very plain upon that Case, in the fifth Report; for it says, If a Person does a Thing that is libellous, you shall not examine the Fact, but the Consequence; whether it tended to stir up Sedition against the Publick, or to stir up Strife between Man and Man, in the Case of private Persons: As if a Man should say of a Judge, he has taken a Bribe, and I will prove it; this is not to be sent in a Letter, but they must take a regular way to prosecute it according to Law.

If it be so in the Case of an inferior Magistrate, what must it be in the Case of a King? To come to the King's Face, and tell him, as they do here, that he has acted illegally, doth certainly sufficiently prove the Matter to be libellous. What do they say to the King? They say and admit, that they have an Averfeness for the Declaration, and they tell him from whence that Averfeness doth proceed: and yet they insinuate, that they had an Inclination to gratify the King, and embrace the Dissenters, that were as averse to them as could be with due Tendernefs, when it should be settled by Parliament and Convocation. Pray what hath their Convocation to do in this Matter?

L. C. J. Mr. Solicitor-General, I will not interrupt you; but, pray come to the Business before us. Shew us that this is in Diminution of the King's Prerogative, or that the King ever had such a Prerogative.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will, my Lord, I am observing what it is they say in this Petition—They tell the King it is inconsistent with their Honour, Prudence and Conscience, to do what he would have them to do: And if these Things be not reflective upon the King and Government, I know no twat is. This is not in a Way of Judicature: Possibly it might have been allowable to petition the King to put it into a Course of Justice, whereby it may be tried; but alas! there is no such thing in this Matter.

It is not their Desire to put it into any Method for Trial, and so it comes in the Case De Libellis Famosis; for by this Way they make themselves Judges, which no Man by Law is permitted to do. My Lords the Bishops have gone out of the Way, and all that they have offered does not come home to justify them; and therefore I take it, under Favour, that we have made it a good Case for the King: We have proved what they have done, and whether this be warrantable or not, is the Question, Gentlemen, that you are to try. The whole Case appears upon Record; the Declaration and Petition are set forth, and the Order of the King and Council. When the Verdict is brought in, they may move any thing what they please in Arrest of Judgment. They have had a great deal of Latitude, and taken a great deal of Liberty; but truly, I apprehend, not so very pertinently. But I hope we have made a very good Case of it for the King, and that you, Gentlemen will give us a Verdict.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Mr. Solicitor, there is one thing I would fain be satisfied in: You say the Bishops have no Power to petition the King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Not out of Parliament, Sir.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Pray give me Leave, Sir: Then the King having made such a Declaration of a general Toleration and Liberty of Conscience, and afterwards he comes and requires the Bishops to disperse this Declaration; this, they say, out of a Tendernefs of Conscience, they cannot do, because they apprehend it contrary to Law, and contrary to their Function: What can they do, if they may not petition?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I'll tell you what they should have done, Sir. If they were commanded to do any Thing against their Consciences, they should have acquiesced till the Meeting of the Parliament.

[At which some People in the Court hissed.]

Mr. Att. Gen. This is very fine indeed! I hope the Court and the Jury will take Notice of this Carriage.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, it is one thing for a Man to submit to his Prince, if the King lay a Command upon him that he cannot obey, and another thing to affront him. If the King will impose upon a Man what he cannot do, he must acquiesce; but shall he come and fly in the Face of his Prince? Shall he say it is illegal? and that the Prince acts against Prudence, Honour or Conscience? and throw Dirt in the King's Face? Sure that is not permitted; that is Libelling with a Witnefs.

L. C. J. Truly, Mr. Solicitor, I am of Opinion that the Bishops might petition the King; but this is not the right Way of bringing it in. I am not of that Mind that they cannot petition the King out of Parliament; but if they may petition, yet they ought to have done it after another Manner: For if they may in this reflective Way petition the King, I am sure it will make the Government very precarious.

Mr. Just. Powell. Mr. Solicitor, it would have been too late to stay for a Parliament; for it was to have been distributed by such a Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They might have lain under it and submitted.

Mr. Just. Powell. No, they would have run into Contempt of the King's Command, without petitioning the King not to insist upon it; and if they had petitioned, and not have shewn the Reason why they could not obey, it would have been looked upon as a Piece of Sullenness, and that they would have been blamed for as much on the other Side.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. After so long a Debate, I shall not trouble you long; most Things that are to be said have been said; but I shall only say this in short: I cannot deny, nor shall not, but that the Subject has a Right to petition; but I shall affirm it also, he has a Duty to obey; and that in this Case, the Power of the King to dispense with Penal Laws in Matters Ecclesiastical, is not a Thing that is now in question, nor need we here have had these long Debates on both Sides. It may be perceived plainly, by the Proofs that have been read, that the Kings and Princes have thought themselves that they had such a Power, though it may be the Parliament thought they had not; and therefore the Declarations of the one or the other I shall not meddle with in this Case. That Power itself which the King has, as King of this Realm, in Matters rather Ecclesiastical and Criminal, than Matters of Property, may somewhat appear by what has been read before your Lordship: But all this will be nothing in our Case, neither has his Majesty now depended so much upon this Thing: The Declaration has been read to you, and what's there said? The King there says, That for those Reasons he was ready to suspend those Laws; and be they suspended. Yet, my Lord, with this too, that he refers it to, and hopes to make it secure by a Parliament: So that there being this, it has not gone, I think, very far; and it not having been touch'd here, it is not a Point of Duty in my Lords the Bishops, as Bishops, that's here enquired into: Whether they should have meddled with this or no, in this Manner, is the Question. That the King is Supreme over all of us, and has a particular Supremacy over them, as Supreme Ordinary and Governor, and Moderator of the Church, is very plain; and, my Lord, it is as plain, that in such Things as concern the Church, he has a particular Power to command them. This is not unknown, but very frequent and common in Matters Ecclesiastical, and Matters of State. It is not here a Question now, whether these Declarations which they were commanded to take care of getting read, were legal or not legal? What Prudence there was, what Honour there was, what Conscience there was, for their not reading it, is not the Question neither: But the Point was, the King as Supreme Ordinary of his Kingdom, to whom the Bishops are subject, does in Council order; and what is it he orders? Their sending out and distributing his Declaration. They were concerned in no more than that, and it had been a very pretty Thing, a small Thing, to send out the King's Declaration to be read by the Clergy. All the Clergy were ordered to read it, but my Lords the Bishops were only commanded to distribute it. This he might do by Virtue of his Power Ecclesiastical. And if this be not an Evil in itself, and if it be not against the Word of God, certainly Obedience was due from my Lords the Bishops: Active Obedience was due from them to do so much as this. It was no Consent of theirs, it was no Approbation of theirs of what they read, that was required. So that if they had read it, or another had read it by the King's Order, especially if that Order be legal, they are bound to do it by Virtue of their Obedience, and not to examine more.

And, my Lord, in this Petition, here they come to relieve, not only themselves that were present, (for I speak to the Preamble, as others before me have spoke to the Conclusion) but they do involve the rest of the Bishops that were absent; for it is in Behalf of themselves, and their Brethren, and all the Clergy of that Province. Now that all these should join in the Petition, is a Thing very uncertain. How does it construe here, whether they were all together, and consented to it, or how all their Minds could be so fully known, that they would be all involved in the Disobedience to this Order of the King? Then, my Lord, What is the Thing they are greatly averse to? There are two Things required in the Order: The Bishops required to distribute the Declaration to the inferior Clergy, and the inferior Clergy are required to read it. Then their Averfeness must be to distribute it, and the others to read it, and so they will be involved; none of whom did ever appear to have joined in it. And then they give Reasons for their Averfeness; and it is true, Reasons might have been given, and good Reasons should be given, why they should not do this in Duty to his Majesty; more gentle Reasons, and other kind of Reasons than those that they have given.

L. C. J. Pray, Brother, will you come to the Matter before us?

Mr. Serj. Baldock. I have almost done, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Powell. The Information is not for Disobedience, Brother, but for a Libel.

Mr. Serj. Baldock. No, Sir, it is not for Disobedience, but it is for giving Reasons for the Disobedience in a libellous Petition, and I am going on to that. The Declaration is said in the Petition to be illegal; which is a Charge upon the King, that he has done an illegal Act. They say, they cannot in Honour, Conscience, or Prudence, do it; which is a Reflection upon the Prudence, Justice, and Honour of the King in commanding them to do such a Thing: And this appearing to have been delivered to the King by my Lords the Bishops, Persons to whom certainly we all owe a Deference, as our Spiritual Masters, to believe what Things they say as most likely to be true; and therefore it having an universal Influence upon all the People, I shall leave it here to your Lordship and the Jury, whether they ought not to answer for it.

Mr. Recorder. Will your Lordship please to spare me one Word?

L. C. J. I hope we shall have done by and bye.

Mr. Recorder. If your Lordship don't think fit, I can sit down.

L. C. J. No, no, go on, Sir Bartholomew Shower, you'll say I have spoiled a good Speech.

Mr. Recorder. I have no good one to make, my Lord, I have but a very few Words to say.

L. C. J. Well, go on, Sir.

Mr. Recorder. That which I would urge, my Lord, is only this: I think, my Lord, we have proved our Information, and that they have made no Answer to it; for the Answer they have made, is but Argumentative, and taken either from the Persons of the Defendants, as Peers, or from the Form of its being a Petition. As Peers, it is said they have a Right to petition to, and advise the King; but that is no Excuse at all; for if it contains Matter reproachful or scandalous, it is a Libel in them as well as in any other Subject; and they have no more Right to libel the King than his Majesty's other Subjects have; nor will the Privilege of their Peerage exempt them from being punished. And for the Form of this Paper, as being a Petition, there is no more Excuse in that neither: For every Man has as much Right to publish a Book, or Pamphlet, as they had to present their Petition. And as it would be punishable in that Man to write a scandalous Book, so it would be punishable in them to make a scandalous, and a libellous Petition. And the Author of Julian the Apostate, because he was a Clergyman, and a learned Man too, had as much Right to publish his Book, as my Lords the Bishops had to deliver this Libel to the King. And if the City of London were so severely punished, as to lose their Charter, for petitioning for the Sitting of a Parliament, in which there were reflecting Words, but more soft—

Mr. Just. Holloway. Pray, good Mr. Recorder, don't compare the Writing of a Book to the Making of a Petition; for it's the Birthright of the Subject to petition.

Mr. Recorder. My Lord, it was as lawful for the City of London to petition for the sitting of a Parliament, as it was for my Lords the Bishops to give Reasons for their Disobedience to the King's Command: And if the Matter of the City of London's Petition was reckoned to be libellous, in saying that what the King had done in dissolving the Parliament, was an Obstruction of Justice, what other Construction can be made of my Lords the Bishops saying that the King's Declaration is illegal? And if the Matter of this Petition be of the same Nature with that of the City of London, your Lordship can make no other Judgment of it, but that it ought to have the same Condemnation.

Mr. Just. Powell. Mr. Recorder, you will as soon bring the two Poles together, as make this Petition to agree with Johnson's Book. They are no more alike than the most different Things you can name.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, I have but one Word.

L. C. J. How unreasonable is this now, that we must have so many Speeches at this Time of Day! But we must hear it; go on, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. My Lord, if your Lordship pleases, that which they seem most to insist upon on the other Side, and which has not been much spoken to on our Side, is, that this Power which his Majesty has exerted, in setting forth his Declaration, was illegal, and their Arguments were hypothetical. If it were illegal, they had not offended; offended; and they offered at some Arguments to prove it illegal: But as to that, my Lord, we need not go much further than a Case which is very well known here, which I crave leave to mention, only because the Jury, perhaps, have not heard of it, and that was the Case of Sir Edward Hale; where, after a long Debate, it was resolved, That the King had a Power to dispense with Penal Laws.

But, my Lord, if I should go higher into our Books of Law, that which they seem to make so strange of, might easily be made appear to have been a frequent and constant Practice.

L. C. J. That is quite out of the Case, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. I beg your Lordship's Favour for a Word or two. If your Lordship please to consider the Power the King has, as Supreme Ordinary, we say, he has a Power to dispense with these Statutes as he is King, and to give ease to his Subjects, as Supreme Ordinary of the whole Kingdom, and as having Supreme Ecclesiastical Authority throughout the Kingdom. There might be abundance of Cases cited for this, if there were Need: The Statute of primo Eliz. doubtless is in Force at this Time, and a great many of the Statutes that have been made since that Time, have express Savings of the King's Supremacy: So that the King's Power is unquestionable. And if they have come and questioned this Power in this Manner, by referring themselves to the Declarations in Parliament, they have done that which of late Days has been always look'd upon as an ill Thing; as if the King's Authority was under the Suffrages of a Parliament. But when they come to make out their Parliament Declarations, there was never a one, unless it be first in Richard the Second's Time, that can properly be called a Parliament Declaration: So that of the several Parliaments is a Matter perfectly mistaken; and if they have mistaken it, it is in the Nature of false News, which is a Crime for which the Law will punish them. More things might be added, but I consider your Lordship has had a great deal of Patience already, and much Time has been spent, and therefore I shall conclude, begging your Lordship's Pardon for what I have said.

L. C. J. I do assure you, if it had not been a Case of great Concern, I would not have heard you so long. It is a Case of very great Concern to the King and the Government on the one Side, and to my Lords the Bishops on the other; and I have taken all the Care I can to observe what has been said on both Sides. 'Tis not to be expected that I should repeat all the Speeches, or the particular Facts, but I will put the Jury in Mind of the most material Things, as well as my Memory will give me Leave; but I have been interrupted by so many long and learned Speeches, and by the Length of the Evidence which has been brought in, in a very broken, unmethodical Way, that I shall not be able to do so well as I would.

Gentlemen, thus stands the Case: It is an Information against my Lords the Bishops, his Grace my Lord of Canterbury, and the other six Noble Lords; and it is for Preferring, Composing, Making, and Publishing, and Causing to be Published, a seditious Libel: The Way that the Information goes is special, and it sets forth, That the King was graciously pleased, by his Royal Power and Prerogative, to set forth a Declaration of Indulgence for Liberty of Conscience, in the Third Year of his Reign; and afterwards upon the 27th of April, in the fourth Year, he comes and makes another Declaration; and afterwards in May, orders in Council that this Declaration should be published by my Lords the Bishops in their several Dioceses; and after this was done, my Lord's the Bishops come and present a Petition to the King, in which were contained the Words which you have seen.

Now, Gentlemen, the Proofs that have been upon this; you'll see what they are. The two Declarations are proved by the Clerks of the Council, and they are brought here under the Great Seal. A Question did arise, whether the Prints were the same with the original Declarations, and that is proved by Hills, or his Man, that they were examined, and are the same. Then the Order of the Council was produced by Sir John Nicholas, and has likewise been read to you. Then they come to prove the Fact against the Bishops, and first they fall to proving their Hands. They begun indeed a great Way off, and did not come so close to it as they afterwards did; for some of their Hands they could hardly prove, but my Lord Archbishop's Hand was only proved, and some others; but there might have been some Question about that Proof. But afterwards it came to be proved, that my Lords the Bishops owned their Hands; which if they had produced at first, would have made the Cause something shorter than it was.

The next Question that did arise, was about the Publishing of it, whether my Lords the Bishops had published it? And it was insisted upon, that no body could prove the Delivery of it to the King. It was proved, the King gave it to the Council, and my Lords the Bishops were called in, and there they acknowledged their Hands; but nobody could prove how it came to the King's Hands. Upon which we were all of Opinion, that it was not such a Publishing as was within the Information; and I was going to have directed you to find my Lords the Bishops Not Guilty: But it happened, that being interrupted in my Directions by an honest, worthy, learned Gentleman, the King's Counsel took the Advantage, and informing the Court that they had further Evidence for the King, we staid till my Lord President came, who told us how the Bishops came to him to his Office at Whitehall, and after they had told him their Design, that they had a Mind to petition the King, they asked him the Method they were to take for it, and desired him to help them to the Speech of the King: And he tells them he will acquaint the King with their Desire, which he does; and the King giving Leave, he comes down and tells the Bishops, that they might go and speak with the King when they would; and, says he, I have given Direction that the Door shall be opened for you as soon as you come. With that the two Bishops went away, and said, they would go and fetch their other Brethren, and they did bring the other Four, but my Lord Archbishop was not there; and immediately when they came back, they went up into the Chamber, and there a Petition was delivered to the King. He cannot speak to that particular Petition, because he did not read it, and that is all that he knew of the Matter; only it was all done the same Day, and that was before my Lords the Bishops appeared at the Council.

Gentlemen, after this was proved, then the Defendants came to their Part; and these Gentlemen that were of Counsel for my Lords, let themselves into their Defence, by notable learned Speeches, by telling you that my Lords the Bishops are Guardians to the Church, and great Peers of the Realm, and were bound in Conscience to take Care of the Church. They have read you a Clause of a Statute made in Queen Elizabeth's Time, by which they say, my Lords the Bishops were under a Curse, if they did not take Care of that Law: Then they shew you some Records; one in Richard the Second's Time, which they could make little of, by reason their Witnesses could not read it; but it was in short, a Liberty given to the King, to dispense with the Statute of Provisors. Then they shew you some Journals of Parliament; First in the Year 1662, where the King had granted an Indulgence, and the House of Commons declared it was not fit to be done, unless it were by Act of Parliament: And they read the King's Speech, wherein he says, he wish'd he had such a Power, and so likewise that in 1672, which is all nothing but Addresses and Votes, or Orders of the House, or Discourses; either the King's Speech, or the Subjects Addresses; but these are not Declarations in Parliament. That is insisted upon by the Counsel for the King, that what is a Declaration in Parliament is a Law, and that must be by the King, Lords, and Commons; the other is but common Discourse, but a Vote of the House, or a Signification of their Opinion, and cannot be said to be a Declaration in Parliament. Then they come to that in 1685, where the Commons take Notice of something about the Soldiers in the Army that had not taken the Test, and make an Address to the King about it: But in all these Things (as far as I can observe) nothing can be gathered out of them one way or the other; it is nothing but Discourses. Sometimes this Dispensing Power has been allowed, as in Richard the Second's Time; and sometimes it has been denied, and the King did once wave it: Mr. Solicitor tells you the Reason, There was a Lump of Money in the Case; but I wonder indeed to hear it come from him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I never gave my Vote for Money, I assure you.

L. C. J. But those Concessions which the King sometimes makes for the Good of the People, and sometimes for the Profit of the Prince himself (but I would not be thought to distinguish between the Profit of the Prince and the Good of the People, for they are both one; and what is the Profit of the Prince is always for the Good of the People) but I say, those Concessions must not be made Law, for that is reserved in the King's Breast, to do what he pleases in it at any Time.

The Truth of it is, the Dispensing Power is out of the Case, it is only a Word used in the Petition; but truly, I will not take upon me to give my Opinion in the Question, to determine that now, for it is not before me: The only Question before me is, and so it is before you, Gentlemen, it being a Question of Fact, Whether here be a certain Proof of a Publication? And then the next Question is a Question of Law indeed, Whether if there be a Publication proved, it be a Libel?

Gentlemen, upon the Point of the Publication, I have summed up all the Evidence to you; and if you believe that the Petition which these Lords presented to the King was this Petition, truly, I think, that is a Publication sufficient: If you do not believe it was this Petition, then my Lords the Bishops are not guilty of what is laid to their Charge in this Information, and consequently there needs no Enquiry whether they are guilty of a Libel? But if you do believe that this was the Petition they presented to the King, then we must come to enquire whether this be a Libel.

Now, Gentlemen, any thing that shall disturb the Government, or make Mischief and a Stir among the People, is certainly within the Case of Libellis Famosis; and I must in short give you my Opinion, I do take it to be a Libel. Now this being a Point of Law, if my Brothers have any thing to say to it, I suppose they will deliver their Opinions.

Mr. Just. Holloway. Look you, Gentlemen, it is not usual for any Person to say any thing after the Chief Justice has summed up the Evidence; it is not according to the Course of the Court: But this is a Case of an extraordinary Nature, and there being a Point of Law in it, it is very fit every body should deliver their own Opinion. The Question is, Whether this Petition of my Lords the Bishops be a Libel, or no. Gentlemen, the End and Intention of every Action is to be considered; and likewise, in this Case, we are to consider the Nature of the Offence that these Noble Persons are charged with: It is for delivering a Petition, which, according as they have made their Defence, was with all the Humility and Decency that could be: So that if there was no ill Intent, and they were not (as it is not, nor can be pretended they were) Men of evil Lives, or the like, to deliver a Petition cannot be a Fault, it being the Right of every Subject to petition. If you are satisfied there was an ill Intention of Sedition, or the like, you ought to find them guilty: But if there be nothing in the Case that you find, but only that they did deliver a Petition to save themselves harmless, and to free themselves from Blame, by shewing the Reason of their Disobedience to the King's Command, which they apprehended to be a Grievance to them, and which they could not in Conscience give Obedience to; I cannot think it is a Libel: It is left to you, Gentlemen, but that is my Opinion.

L. C. J. Look you, by the Way, Brother, I did not ask you to sum up the Evidence (for that is not usual) but only to deliver your Opinion, whether it be a Libel or no.

Mr. Just. Powell. Truly I cannot see, for my part, any thing of Sedition, or any other Crime, fixed upon these Reverend Fathers, my Lords the Bishops.

For, Gentlemen, to make it a Libel, it must be false, it must be malicious, and it must tend to Sedition. As to the Falshood, I see nothing that is offered by the King's Counsel, nor any thing as to the Malice: It was presented with all the Humility and Decency that became the King's Subjects to approach their Prince with.

Now, Gentlemen, the Matter of it is before you; you are to consider of it, and it is worth your Consideration. They tell his Majesty, it is not out of Averseness to pay all due Obedience to the King, nor out of a

Want

Want of Tenderneſs to their diſſenting Fellow Subjects, that made them not perform the Command impoſed upon them; but they ſay, that be- cauſe they do conceive that the Thing that was commanded them was againſt the Law of the Land, therefore they do deſire his Maſteſty, that he would be pleaſed to forbear to inſiſt upon it, that they ſhould perform that Command which they take to be illegal.

Gentlemen, we muſt conſider what they ſay is illegal in it. They ſay, they apprehend the Declaration is illegal, becauſe it is founded upon a diſpenſing Power, which the King claims, to diſpenſe with the Laws con- cerning Eccleſiaſtical Affairs.

Gentlemen, I do not remember, in any Caſe in all our Law (and I have taken ſome Pains upon this Occaſion to look into it), that there is any ſuch Power in the King, and the Caſe muſt turn upon that. In ſhort, if there be no ſuch Diſpenſing Power in the King, then that can be no Li- bel which they preſented to the King, which ſays, that the Declaration, being founded upon ſuch a pretended Power, is illegal.

Now, Gentlemen, this is a Diſpenſation with a Witneſs; it amounts to an Abrogation and utter Repeal of all the Laws; for I can ſee no Dif- ference, nor know of none in Law, between the King's Power to diſ- penſe with Laws Eccleſiaſtical, and his Power to diſpenſe with any other Laws whatſoever. If this be once allowed of, there will need no Parlia- ment; all the Legiſlature will be in the King, which is a Thing worth conſidering, and I leave the Iſſue to God and your Conſciences.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. The ſingle Queſtion that falls to my Share is, to give my Senſe of this Petition, whether it ſhall be in Conſtruction of Law a Libel in itſelf, or a Thing of great Innocence. I ſhall endeavour to expreſs myſelf in as plain Terms as I can, and as much as I can, by way of Propoſition.

And I think, in the firſt Place, That no Man can take upon him to write againſt the actual Exerciſe of the Government, unleſs he have Leave from the Government, but he makes a Libel, be what he writes true or falſe; for if once we come to impeach the Government by Way of Argu- ment, 'tis the Argument that makes it the Government, or not the Go- vernment: So that I lay down that in the firſt Place, that the Go- vernment ought not to be impeached by Argument, nor the Exerciſe of the Government ſhaken by Argument; becauſe I can manage a Propoſi- tion in itſelf doubtful, with a better Pen than another Man: This, ſay I, is a Libel.

Then I lay down this for my next Poſition, That no private Man can take upon him to write concerning the Government at all; for what has any private Man to do with the Government, if his Intereſt be not ſtir- red or ſhaken? It is the Buſineſs of the Government to manage Mat- ters relating to the Government; it is the Buſineſs of Subjects to mind only their own Properties and Intereſts. If my Intereſt is not ſhaken, what have I to do with Matters of Government? They are not within my Sphere. If the Government does come to ſhake my particular In- tereſt, the Law is open for me, and I may redreſs myſelf by Law: And when I intrude myſelf into other Men's Buſineſs, that does not concern my particular Intereſt, I am a Libeller.

Theſe I have laid down for plain Propoſitions; now then let us con- ſider further, whether if I will take upon me to contradicte the Govern- ment, any ſpecious Pretence that I ſhall put upon it ſhall dreſs it up in another Form, and give it a better Denomination? And truly I think 'tis the worſe, becauſe it comes in a better Dreſs; for by that Rule, every Man that can put on a good Vizard, may be as miſchievous as he will to the Government at the Bottom: So that whether it be in the Form of a Supplication, or an Addreſs, or a Petition, if it be what it ought not to be, let us call it by its true Name, and give it its right Denomina- tion, it is a Libel.

Then, Gentlemen, conſider what this Petition is: This is a Petition relating to ſomething that was done and ordered by the Government. Whether the Reaſons of the Petition be true or falſe, I will not examine that now, nor will I examine the Prerogative of the Crown, but only take Notice that this relates to the Act of the Government. The Government here has publiſhed ſuch a Declaration as this that has been read, relating to Matters of Government; and ſhall, or ought any Body to come and im- peach that as illegal, which the Government has done? Truly, in my Opinion, I do not think he ſhould, or ought; for by this Rule may every Act of the Government be ſhaken, when there is not a Parliament de facto ſitting.

I do agree, that every Man may petition the Government, or the King, in a Matter that relates to his own private Intereſt; but to meddle with a Matter that relates to the Government, I do not think my Lords the Bi- ſhops had any Power to do more than any others. When the Houſe of Lords and Commons are in Being, it is a proper Way of applying to the King: There is all the Openneſs in the World for thoſe that are Mem- bers of Parliament, to make what Addreſſes they pleaſe to the Govern- ment, for the rectifying, altering, regulating, and making of what Law they pleaſe; but if every private Man ſhall come and interpoſe his Advice, I think there can never be an End of adviſing the Govern- ment. I think there was an Inſtance of this in King James's Time, when by a ſolemn Reſolution it was declared to be High Miſdemeanor, and next to Treason, to petition the King to put the Penal Laws in Exe- cution.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Brother, I think you do miſtake a little.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Brother, I dare rely upon it that I am right: It was ſo declared by all the Judges.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Puritans preſented a Petition to that Purpoſe, and in it they ſaid, if it would not be granted, they would come with a great Number.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. Ay, there it is.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. I tell you, Mr. Solicitor, the Reſolution of the Judges is, That ſuch a Petition is next Door to Treason, a very great Miſdemeanor.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. They accompanying it with Threats of the People's being diſcontented.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. As I remember, it is in the ſecond Part of the Fo- lio 35, or 37, where the Reſolution of the Judges is, That to frame a Petition to the King, to put the Penal Laws in Execution, is next to Treason; for, ſay they, no Man ought to intermeddle with Matters of Government without Leave of the Government.

Mr. S. Pemberton. That was a Petition againſt the Penal Laws.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. Then I am quite miſtaken indeed, in caſe it be ſo.

Mr. Serj. Trinder. That is not material at all which it was.

Mr. Pollexfen. They there threatened, unleſs their Requeſt were grant- ed, ſeveral Thouſands of the King's Subjects would be diſcontented.

Mr. Juſt. Powell. That is the Reaſon of that Judgment, I affirm it.

Mr. Juſt. Allybone. But then I'll tell you, Brother, again, what is ſaid in that Caſe that you hinted at, and put Mr. Solicitor in mind of: For any Man to raiſe a Report that the King will, or will not permit a To- leration, if either of theſe be diſagreeable to the People, whether he may, or may not, it is againſt Law; for we are not to meaſure Things from any Truth they have in themſelves, but from that Aſpect they have upon the Government; for there may be every Title of a Libel true, and yet it may be a Libel ſtill: So that I put no great Streſs upon that Objec- tion, that the Matter of it is not falſe; and, for Sedition, it is that which every Libel carries in itſelf; and as every Treſpaſs implies Vi & Armis, ſo every Libel againſt the Government carries in it Sedition, and all the other Epithets that are in the Information. This is my Opinion as to Law in general.

I will not debate the Prerogatives of the King, nor the Privileges of the Subject; but as this Fact is, I think theſe venerable Biſhops did meddle with that which did not belong to them: They took upon them, in a pe- titiſonary Way, to contradicte the actual Exerciſe of the Government, which I think no particular Perſons, or ſingular Body may do.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, Have you a Mind to drink before you go?

Jury. Yes, my Lord, if you pleaſe.

[Wine was ſent for for the Jury.]

Jurymen. My Lord, we humbly pray that your Lordſhip will be pleaſed to let us have the Papers that have been given in Evidence.

L. C. J. What is that you would have, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. He deſires this, my Lord, That you would be pleaſed to direct that the Jury may have the Uſe of ſuch Writings and Statute- Books, as may be neceſſary for them to make uſe of.

L. C. J. The Statute-Book they ſhall have.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But they can have no Papers but what are under Seal.

Mr. Serj. Levinz. They may have them by Conſent, and they may have a Copy of the Information.

L. C. J. They ſhall have a Copy of the Information, and the Decla- rations under Seal.

Mr. Pollexfen. If they have thoſe, and the Libel, as they call it, they will not need a Copy of the Information.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we pray that your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to aſcertain what it is they ſhall have.

L. C. J. They ſhall have a Copy of the Information, the Libel, and the Declarations under the Great-Seal.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But not the Votes of the Houſe of Commons, nor the Journals, for they are not Evidence.

L. C. J. No, I don't intend they ſhall.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, we pray they may have the whole Petition.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. That is, with the Direction and Prayer, you mean.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, with all our Hearts.

[Then the Court aroſe, and the Jury went together to conſider of their Verdict, and ſtayed together all Night, without Fire or Candle.]

On Saturday the 30th Day of June, Anno Dom. 1688, about Ten o'Clock in the Morning, the Archbiſhop, and the reſt of the Biſhops, came again into the Court, and immediately after the Jury were brought to the Bar.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Crier, Take the Appearance of the Jury. Sir Roger Langley.

Sir Roger Langley. Here.

Crier. Vous avez, &c.

[And ſo all the reſt were called, and answered.]

[Then Proclamation for Silence was made.]

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Gentlemen, Are you agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Who ſhall ſay for you?

Jury. Foreman.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Do you find the Defendants, or any of them, Guilty of the Miſdemeanor whereof they are impeached, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Not Guilty.

Sir Sam. Aſtry. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath re- corded it—You ſay, the Defendants, and every of them, are not Guilty of the Miſdemeanor whereof they are impeached; and ſo you ſay all?

Jury. Yes.

[At which there were ſeveral great Shouts in Court, and throughout the Hall.]

Mr. Solicitor-General taking Notice of ſome Perſons in Court that ſhouted, moved very earneſtly that they might be committed: Whereupon, a Gentleman of Gray's-Inn was laid hold on, but was ſoon after diſcharged. And after the Shouting was over, the Lord Chief Juſtice reproving the Gentleman, ſaid:

L. C. J. I am as glad as you can be that my Lords the Biſhops are acquitted; but your Manner of rejoicing here in Court is indecent, you might rejoice in your Chamber, or elſewhere, and not here.

[Then ſpeaking to Mr. Attorney, he ſaid:]

Have you any thing more to ſay to my Lords the Biſhops, Mr. At- torney?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

[Then the Court aroſe, and the Biſhops went away.]

CXLV. Proceedings

CXLV. Proceedings in the House of Commons against ROGER PALMER, Earl of Castlemaine, for High Treason, in going Ambassador to Rome, October 26, 1689. 1 W. &amp; M.

THE Attorney General [Sir George Treby] being, on Saturday the 26th of October, 1689, inform'd, that the Earl of Castlemaine, Sir Edward Hales, and other Prisoners of the Tower, were brought by their Habeas Corpus to the Hall to be bail'd, desir'd to know the Pleasure of the House in that Affair; who order'd that they should presently be sent for to their Bar, which was done accordingly; only the said Earl was not there; for he remain'd still in the Tower, saying, it seems, made use of no such Writ: However, the House directed the Governour to bring him up (as he did) the Monday following; and then the Speaker [Henry Powel] said to this Effect.

MY Lord, the House having understood that you went Ambassador to Rome, and also took your Place at the Board as a Privy-Councillor, without taking the Oaths (which are great Crimes, and against Law) they have sent for you to know what you have to say for yourself.

HIS LORDSHIP'S ANSWER.

IT cannot, Mr. Speaker, but put me into more than an ordinary Confusion, when I find myself in this Place as a Criminal; especially, seeing, through the whole Course of my Life, the Glory and Welfare of England has been my chief Aim and Endeavour. You are pleas'd, Sir, to lay so great a Charge upon me, that, without Shuffling or Impertinence, I might ask Time to consider it; yet since I well know how much you value your Time, and since Time also may make what I say suspected more of Artifice than Candor, I shall now, without further Delay, let you and this great Assembly see (where so many of Birth and Quality are met) how far I am from deserving either Censure or Reproach. But, Mr. Speaker, before I go further, I must humbly beg these few Favours of you. First, That you would pardon all Tautologies, or Want of Method, as beginning per chance in the Middle, and ending again where I should have begun. Secondly, That you would not take any Advantage at my Answers, for I shall be ingenuous to the utmost, and hesitate at nothing you shall ask. And Lastly, if, through Inadvertency or Haste, I should say what might shock you, that you would not stand upon the Rigour of the Words, but upon the Sincerity and Clearness of my Explanation.

Be pleas'd then to know, Sir, I was so far from seeking this Employment, that I did not so much as dream it was design'd me; and when I knew it, I us'd my utmost Endeavour to avoid it. My Ignorance of the King's Intentions appears by this, that, in the Year I went to Rome, returning out of the Country, according to my usual Custom after Michaelmas, I found a Protestant, a Person of Note, at my House, who told me, that before I spoke with any Man, he was to bring me to my Lord Sunderland, and from thence I was to go to his Majesty; nor would he scarce afford me Time to put myself in a tolerable Order to attend them. My Lord Sunderland soon hinted to me what the King's Intentions were; and when I recurr'd to his Friendship, I had this Answer, or Words to this Purpose: That if Subjects should refuse their King's Service in every thing that was troublesome or contre Cœur, all Kings would be in an ill Condition; that my Request was beyond his Power, and that he believed I should find his Majesty very positive; and so I did, Mr. Speaker, I'll assure you. Nay, to satisfy you yet more fully of my Backwardness to this Journey; can you think, Sir, that I, that had been at Rome more than once; that had seen the Grandeur of so many Roman Embassies, and knew they exceeded in Splendor and Expence three Times those to any crown'd Head whatsoever, should not be extraordinarily concern'd at an Employment which had for its Subsistence, as the Lords of the Treasury well know, no other Establishment than to Spain or France, which (being 100 l. a Week) amounts only to 5200 l. per Annum?

Having thus, Sir, shew'd you how little fond I was of the Thing, let me now, with Submission, ask you, what could I otherwise do in my Circumstances? For first, I call all that's Good to witness, I never heard of Law against it, nor know of any to this very Day: And yet, on the other Side, I was not only commanded by the King, but knew his Royal and Legal Power of commanding the Service of his Subjects, and most particularly in Embassies, as appears by many old Examples; nay, by a fatal one in this very Century; I mean the Case of Overbury, to which no body here, I'm sure, is a Stranger. In the next Place, Sir, what did I go to Rome for? Why only with a Letter; with a Compliment from a profess'd and open Catholick King to his Holiness, as all Princes of that Communion do in the Beginning of their respective Reigns. Besides, Mr. Speaker, as I know no Law that forbid my Obedience, so I must needs say (and this without cramping, or putting any Bounds to the Legislative Power), that no such Law can be made: For, Sir, the Pope is a very considerable Temporal Prince, whose Territories border on two great Seas, the Mediterranean and Adriatic: If then our Merchants should be by Storm, or other Necessities, driven into his Ports; if Englishmen should be surpriz'd by any Roman Party as they travel in a neighbouring Country, shall our Government (not to mention a Hundred other greater Accidents) want Power to send a Messenger to ransom and compound for them? What Law therefore was there ever yet fram'd, or can be enact'd (let the Commerce or Intercourse between Nations be never so much broken and prohibited) but that a Commander in Chief, a General, and much more a King, may beat a Parley, dispatch a Trumpet; nay, send and receive Letters as often as Occasion does require?

Now, Mr. Speaker, for Religion, I neither had any Commission concerning it, nor transacted with his Holiness about it; and as no body ever did, or could lay any thing of that Nature to my Charge, so for some Confirmation of it, I will appeal even to the Aqua-Fresca Houses of Rome, and to all the Protestant Gentlemen of our Nation there during my Embassy; for though what I tell you, Sir, be a Wonder, yet the honourable Persons who have resided in those Parts, know it to be true, that for a Dish of Chocolate, or a Dish of Lemonade, one may know the Measures and Particulars of an Embassy in that City, as well as we do what passes within these Walls at our Coffee-Houses. I am sure my under Servants have often smil'd at the Grimaces and Mysteries which my Secretaries us'd in the Beginning to make before my Audiences; for they have told them, within few Hours after my Return, almost Word by Word what had pass'd. Give me also Leave, Sir, to add one Truth more, which will assure you that I had no dangerous Intrigue in Hand; and this is, that notwithstanding his Holiness never had the least Imagination or Thought, but that I was as real and sincere a Catholick as any Man living; and the same Thing also I can say of all the Cardinals; and in fine, of the whole Court in general; yet none of them (and every Englishman in Town knew it) but look'd upon me as one that if any Immunity of the Crown were in Question, or any Temporal Concern of the Kingdom touch'd, would stand as much in the Gap, and be in as Diametrical an Opposition as any Person of the Reform'd Religion whatsoever.

You see then, Sir, both how and why I went; nor have I done any thing certainly to merit any Man's Unkindness or Ill will; nay, to lay yet further before you the Hardship I am under, I shall state you a Case not fetch'd out of old forgotten Records, or transacted in an Age distant from ours, but of a Man attainted in this very House, in the Memory of several now sitting, and even whilst I myself had the Honour to be a Member of it. The Case, Mr. Speaker, is Axtel's the Regicide; one whose Crime, I dare say, my greatest Enemies think I abhor in the highest Manner; nor do I mention the Thing in Favour of the Criminal, but in Honour of his grave and worthy Judges. Axtel, you know, Mr. Speaker, was indicted for the Murder of Charles the First; and to shew that he maliciously contrived and abetted it, the King's Counsel urged his commanding in the Hall at the Trial; his placing the Centinels all about; and in short, his performing there the whole Office of Captain of the Guard. The Prisoner answer'd, (but pray, Mr. Speaker, let me beg Pardon, if the Interval of almost thirty Years has made me forget his Words, I am sure the Sense of them I have not. I say, Sir, the Prisoner answer'd) My Lords, I am under great Oppression, I am hardly dealt with. Has Charles the Second been so gracious as to pass over the ordinary Transgressions of his strayed Subjects, and to look upon the Obedience of Soldiers to their then Superiors, as if the Authority had been more legal; And shall I now die (who was under Military Discipline) for that which I must have presently died for, had I not done it; to wit, had I not drawn up my Regiment, kept the Post order'd me, and perform'd the other Duties, the Concourse being great and troublesome? Upon this the Judge reply'd; I confess (considering the King's merciful Resolutions) that your Argument is strong; it has great Weight in it: but, Mr. Axtel, did you no more? Did you only perform the Duty of a commanded Soldier? Who was it, I pray, that animated the Rabble? Who beat the Soldiers for not crying Justice? Who encourag'd spitting in the King's Face? And who barbarously revild and threaten'd a Noble Lady, that in the Transport of her Zeal (when she saw her Sovereign abus'd, when she heard such Blasphemy against him, and all this father'd upon the Nation) made a Noise or Stir in the Court? These Things therefore, Sir, being prov'd against him, he was convicted, condemn'd, and so paid a Debt to Justice, and to the sacred Ashes of that great and just Man.

Now, Mr. Speaker, to Application: And first (after a little Glance on the Tenderness of these Judges, when any Necessity could be pretend'd) let me, with your Pardon, ask you, Shall I suffer as a Transgressor of the Law, were there any, when I must have suffer'd by the Law, had I refus'd his Majesty's Orders and Commands? But, Sir, if you demand, Did I no more than carry a Letter, or go with a Ceremonious How d'ye from the King? I must answer, Yes, and a great deal more too. For my House was an Asylum, a Place of Refuge to all distress'd or oppress'd Fellow Subjects. If Seamen mutiny'd, or had any Contest with their Captains, here a Reconciliation was made, and here they return'd to their Obedience; if the Captains themselves, fraught for the Camera, were delay'd their Money, or misus'd by under Officers, they quickly found Redress; and often, by my Interest, receiv'd more than they themselves expected. And if the Question happened about Quantity, or how Goods were condition'd at Delivery, the Verdict I am sure went still on their Side. Nor was my Care confin'd to Rome only, but reach'd to all the Factories of Italy: For the Consuls themselves, nay every private Person, found both an easy Access to me, and an indefatigable Zeal in their Concerns: So that the Merchants in general that had to do in those Parts, were far from being behind-hand in their thankful Acknowledgments. Nay, one of the greatest Companies in our Nation, I mean that for Turkey, not only return'd me their Thanks very heartily by Letter, but did it again by Word of Mouth after my Arrival Home.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, if the Employment I submitted to were a Fault, I have already not a little suffer'd for it; for I never put Bounds (as our Travellers, as well as my own Officers, fully know) to any Expence that could be imagin'd for the Dignity of the Nation. And give me Leave to tell you also, Sir, that though the Name of Rome may be harsh and ungrateful to your Ears, yet what I did was with a good Intention, and like a true and faithful Englishman. For had I been sent with a Character to Constantinople, where they are Mahometans, or to China, where Gentiles, the Eclat or Figure which I should have endeavour'd to make, would never be consider'd by you as an Honour to their Religion, but our Country; therefore since it is a Disparagement and great Reflection to a Kingdom, to come below, or short of others, in any thing that is Publick and of Note, I cannot but have at least faint Hopes, that you will have some Consideration, some Opinion of an Ambassador, though at Rome, that kept up, to his Power, the Glory and Grandeur of England.

But, Mr. Speaker, not to trouble you longer on the present Head, I'll end when I have told you this: That if I have done amiss in obeying the King's Commands, no Consul that has pursued a Pirate or Banditti at Rome; no private Factor that has follow'd a Debtor thither, nor in short, any Man that has written so much as one Letter to that City, though it were to demand his own, but is a far greater Criminal than myself, and lies at the Mercy of every Enemy, to be indicted as a Contemner and Breaker of the Laws.

Your second Charge, Mr. Speaker, is my being a Privy Counsellor, without taking the appointed Oaths; to which I can truly say, they were never offer'd me; though I must also confess (for I shall be sincere with you in every thing) that I believe, nay, that I am certain, I should not have taken them, had they been offer'd: So that I do acknowledge the Omission a Fault against Law.

[Here the Speaker, thinking that his Lordship had made an End, desir'd him to withdraw; but being inform'd that he had not done, he excus'd the Interruption, and then his Lordship went on.]

I say, Mr. Speaker, I acknowledge this a Fault against Law, were there not several Things of Weight that will, I hope, justify me to you: And here, Sir, I must entreat you not to conceive that I come now to defend, or make good the Dispensing Power, but only to shew you how necessarily I was driven and induc'd to the aforesaid Omission; for, Mr. Speaker, in Controversies and Disputes, what can one do, but recur either to his own Observation, or to the Opinion of learned Men, and Professors in the Science?

In the first Place, then, when I began to examine myself as to the Right the King claim'd and asserted, I saw Non obstantes deem'd Legal, which signified to me Dispensing: I found the Power of continuing Sheriffs own'd for many Ages to be undoubted Law, and yet I knew there was a positive Statute against it: Nay, I remember'd an Act which I myself had in this House given my Vote and Consent to, viz. That about the Regulation of Carriages and Waggon; or if this be not the exact Title, I must beseech you to pardon my treacherous Memory, and 'tis, I'll assure you, the only Traitor I ever yet succoured or supported. I say, Sir, I remember'd this very Act, almost as soon as made, suspended by Charles the Second's Proclamation, without the least Question or Murmur; and I took so much Notice of it, as to make even then this Reflection (and I do assure you upon my Honour 'tis true) That though our Monarchs could not impose and abrogate Laws of themselves, yet they had the Power, I perceiv'd, to respite them.

In the second Place, Mr. Speaker, if I went abroad; I mean, if I consulted the Thoughts and Sentiments of others, I found not only great Men of the Long Robe, but the Judges also themselves, declaring in Favour of this Prerogative; and the Interpretation or Determination of these Sages was always told me to be Law, till a new Law, or a new Explanation should be enacted. What would you then, Mr. Speaker, have me to do, who was call'd to the Board by the King; who could not in Conscience take the Oaths, and yet had no Reason to think I committed, in not taking them, a Crime, seeing the Law was thus openly expounded and publish'd?

And now, Sir, since I have been forc'd to mention my Religion, which I know is a legal fault, and of a high Nature, I must not forget also to celebrate the Goodness of this House, which has pardon'd the Fault, even in the solemnest Way, and by the solemnest Act that ever pass'd since Magna Charta; to wit, The great Act of Oblivion. Give me Leave, Sir, to say this too, for I can justly do it, that being so faithful and so true an Englishman, I neither should, nor could, I am sure, have ever, during my Life, offended my Country, but in my Religion. Pardon also, I humbly beseech you, this Digression, and together with it the Incoherences and Disjunctions all along; nor shall I any ways doubt of it, since you so well know how uneasy and troublesome a long Discourse (which my Circumstances have now required) must needs be to one that wants both Eloquence and Practice.

But, Mr. Speaker, to return where I left, and so conclude: How, Sir, I pray you (and I demand it again of you with great Respect), could I think the Omission, as I said, of the Oaths a Breach of the Laws, when our Guides, who had the Laws in their keeping, told us explicitly, and without Reserve, the said Oaths were not necessary? Shall I then suffer, that had neither Buoy nor Mark to direct me? Certainly no; for if there were a Fault, 'tis not I must suffer, but the Judges, and those knowing and deputed Pilots, that hung out, it seems, the wrong Flag and Signal. I have, Sir, but one Word more to trouble you with, and this I speak in Behalf of all here; nay, in Behalf of all the People of England; That if I now undergo your Severity, and that single Persons (notwithstanding the Determinations and Judgments of our Courts of Justice) must be still responsible, no Man can be safe, no Man can be at rest; for no body that acts can know (as Accidents will often happen) whether he be innocent or guilty.

Mr. Speaker, I am in great Disorder for imposing thus on your Patience; and especially seeing I must yet presume to do it, one thing more occurring to me, as I hope, for your further Service, or at least Satisfaction: And 'tis to let you know how I came to be a Prisoner, and why I continued so thus long. Be pleas'd then, Sir, that I tell you, that as soon as the King first left Whitehall, I thought it Decency to go out of Town; and therefore three Days after I took Coach for Montgomeryshire, where of late I us'd to reside in the Summer Time. On the Borders of that County, at a small Corporation called Ofwestree; I was first stopp'd by the Rabble, and afterwards detain'd with a strong Guard, at my Inn by the Mayor; though no body, as he confess'd, made any Oath against me; and though he had no Orders, as he said, from London for it; nay, after a Month's Restraint, he denied me my Liberty upon Bail, notwithstanding two neighbouring Lawyers, whom I sent for, assur'd him he could not justify the Refusal by Law: I do not, Sir, complain of any Incivility, either from him or the People; for I was us'd with Respect enough; but I judge it extremely fit to let you see how the Liberty of a Subject was willfully invaded by a Magistrate, and how little conscious I was of any Guilt, since instead of Flying, I went to a Place where I was known by every body.

In fine, Mr. Speaker, after a Confinement of seven Weeks, I was sent for up, and brought hither by a Party of Horse; not was I ever question'd or examin'd by any body, but kept (upon the Suspension of the Habeas Corpus Act) at a Messenger's House for three Months; and when the said Act was suspended the last Time, I was committed by my Lord Shrewsbury's Warrant to the Tower, for Suspicion of Treasonable Practices.

His Lordship having ended, retir'd with the Serjeant at Arms to his Room, where, after a little Stay, he was sent for in again; and then the Speaker told him, that since he said his Journey to Rome was with a Letter of Civility to a Temporal Prince, and not about Religion, the House (to be more fully satisfied of it) desir'd to see his Instructions. To which his Lordship thus answer'd.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, though I shall readily acknowledge my own natural Weakness, you will not yet think me so imprudent, as that, in a Time of such Troubles and Distraction, I would keep Papers by me; and especially about Rome, to render myself liable to every malicious Man's Extravagancy and Comment. This therefore caus'd me, Sir, the Night before I went towards Wales, to burn all Papers that came to hand; and truly, some among the rest that I have since wanted: Nay, this I can also justly aver, that I remember not now one Word of those Instructions, having, I'm confident, never read them twice; only this I remember, they were Things of Course, Words of Form, and needed no further Consideration. Yet, Sir, that you may plainly see my Sincerity, and how far I am from any Design of illuding and deceiving you, I shall shew you how you may retrieve them, when I tell you, that Mr. Monsteven brought them me, and that they were drawn, as I take it, by Mr. Bridgman; for I'm certain they came from my Lord Sunderland's office.

But, my Lord, reply'd the Speaker, had you no private Instructions? None, answer'd his Lordship. What, none at all? said Mr. Speaker again. None, I'll assure, Sir, reply'd his Lordship; unless the King's Orders, to demand a Cardinal's Cap for Prince Reinalda of Este, were private Instructions; nor do I certainly know, whether those Commands were in my foremention'd Instructions, or whether I had them by Word of Mouth.

My Lord, said the Speaker, I have another Question to ask you; to wit, Who of the Long Robe told you of the King's Power of Dispensing, and that there was no Necessity of taking the Oaths?

I am, Sir, answer'd his Lordship, infinitely troubled, if I have, through Want of Care, or by any improper Expression, given you Occasion to misapprehend me; for I never ask'd any particular Man of that Profession about this Affair: But my Meaning was (and I hope my Words are not contrary to my Meaning) that the said Power was manifestly and openly declar'd to be Law by Judges and Lawyers; so that I deem'd it no Solecism in Discourse to mention it as if they themselves had told it me.

Then his Lordship retir'd again, and after a long Debate, the House pass'd this Order, That the Earl of Castlemaine stand committed to the Tower by a Warrant from this House of High Treason, for endeavouring to reconcile this Kingdom to the See of Rome, and for other High Crimes and Misdemeanors.

As soon as his Lordship was inform'd of this Vote, he entreated a Member to let the House know, that he had a Word or two more to trouble them with: So that being brought in, the Speaker told him, that the House having Notice he had something further to acquaint them with, was very willing to hear him.

Mr. Speaker, replied his Lordship, I have nothing more to say about the former Matters; but understanding your Pleasure, I thought it my Duty to let you know, how the Custom of the Tower, as to Prisoners, is changed; for in Course heretofore, unless there were a particular Order of State to the contrary, they had the Liberty of the Tower; that is to say, they could walk about at seasonable Hours with a Warder: But now as soon as one is committed, though it be upon bare Suspicion, as I was, he is confin'd to his Lodging, and hindred from the Consolation of seeing his Friends, till, after much Solicitation and Trouble, Leave be granted by the Secretaries. Therefore, Sir, being morally certain that I shall be confin'd again as soon as I return, I humbly desire the Favour of this Freedom; it being also what I hitherto enjoy'd after I had been restrain'd for some Days in the aforesaid Manner.

This said, his Lordship went out, and then was carried to the Tower, where he was made a close Prisoner, as he foretold; though what he moved, occasioned the following Vote.

That a Committee be appointed to bring in a Bill for the better regulating the Imprisonment of the Subjects of this Kingdom, and to settle the Fees of Gaolers. And it was likewise refer'd to them to examine into the Abuses of Gaolers towards their Prisoners which have heretofore been committed.

On Wednesday the 5th of the following February, his Lordship mov'd for his Habeas Corpus, and was brought by the Lord Lucas, the present Governor of the Tower, to Westminster, on the 10th. So that appearing at the King's Bench, his Commitments were read, and Mr. Attorney having nothing to object against his being bail'd, the Court awarded it upon the Security of Thirty Thousand Pounds; that is to say, a Recognizance of Ten Thousand for himself, and Five Thousand a-piece from his four Sureties, which were, John Earl of Bath, Thomas Earl of Ailesbury, Thomas Earl of Suffolk, Charles Lord Lansdown.

CXLVI. Proceedings against JOHN PRICE, Esq; late Receiver of Ireland; and One Hundred other Protestants, at the Assizes at Wicklow in Ireland, for High Treason, against King James; March, 6, 1688-9, 1 W. & M.

JOHN PRICE, Esq; Receiver-General to the late King Charles the Second, having his Country House in the County of Wicklow, at Ballinderry, twenty-four Miles from Dublin, did for the Safety and Preservation of himself and Family, obtain the Lord Deputy Tyrconnel's Protection, as many more of the English Protestants living in the County at the same Time did: For the late King James going away for France, and the Administration of the Government being put into the Hands of his present Majesty, the Lord Tyrconnel gave out Commissions, for the raising a mighty Army, to any Irish Papist that would take one, and promise to Sublist, Maintain and Cloath their Men for three Months. Most of these new Officers are Men of mean Fortunes, not capable of subsisting themselves; their Men live altogether on the English, coming into their Houses in the Day-time, and commanding from them their Meat and Drink; and often robbing them in the Night, stealing away their Cattle. Likewise the Priests of every Parish obliged all their People to furnish themselves with Half-pikes and Skeans, and bring them to Mass, or not presume to appear there, on the Penalty of Excommunication, or a severe Punishment; which caused all the Irish to arm themselves with the aforesaid Weapons; upon which, Robberies, Thefts and other Outrages were daily committed upon the English; particularly in the County of Wicklow, where some Hundreds were got together for that Purpose, who gave themselves the Name of Merry Boys, and had very great Success in their thievish Attempts upon their Protestant Neighbours, that lived hitherto secure in their own Houses. It is observable, what great Power the Romish Clergy have over the Irish; they arm themselves immediately at their Command, and yet to this Day have neither kept them from robbing of the English, nor restored them any thing taken away; which if they had been so minded, they might have done by the same Power. Several of Mr. Price's Neighbours repaired to Ballinderry, to preserve themselves and Goods; but an Order coming out soon after, for the taking away all Horses and Arms from the Protestants, both in City and Country, Colonel Toole, with a Party of his Men, came to demand what Arms and Horses they had at Ballinderry. Mr. Price and the rest having the aforementioned Protection, refused to obey their Orders; and Complaint coming to Dublin, Colonel Sheldon was immediately sent away with a Body of Horse and Foot against Ballinderry. Mr. Price, upon his Approach, presently submitted to him, who thereupon was made Prisoner, and all the rest of the Men that were in the House: But the Prison of Wicklow not being able to contain them, several of them were admitted to Bail, until the following Assizes, which began March the fifth last past, and ended the eighth.

The Prisoners Names that were Indicted for this Treason, are as followeth; viz.

After they were sworn, as usual, they received the following Charge.

Lord Chief Justice Keating's Charge to the Grand-Jury.

GENTLEMEN,

YOU that are here returned to serve on this Grand-Jury, you have this Day before your Eyes the greatest Example, and the firmest Proof that a Gracious Prince can give to the best of Subjects. You see his sacred Majesty King James the Second (whom God long preserve for the Protection of all his good and dutiful Subjects, and for the Subversion and Irradicating of all those who desire the Subversion of his Government, either by Foreign Force or inbred Conspiracy) notwithstanding the great Troubles on his own Person, yet he is not wanting in his Care towards you; and I dare boldly say, it is the last thing he will relinquish in the World, after that of his own Conscience, the Care of his Subjects. He hath sent us with his Commission to enquire into all the Maladies, Diseases, and Sores within your County. He has likewise given us Command to apply the healing Balsam of the Laws, which will preserve the Subject most entirely in his Property. And I am sorry I must tell you, that there was never more need than now at this Time. I am glad at the same Time that I can say, that the Mischiefs fallen on a great part of this Kingdom, and on no part more than on this County, that is under the very Eye of the Government: I say, I am glad it can be said to have arisen, for the most part, from a Rabble of People, who have arm'd themselves without any Direction from the Government, and that with unusual Weapons: I mean Half-pikes and Skeans. Gentlemen, I must tell you plainly, it looks rather like a Design to massacre and murder, than any thing else. They do not belong to the Army, neither are they any part of them; but these are the Vultures, Kites, and Ravens that follow Armies. Soldiers that have travelled Abroad say, Such are not known among them there. I am told, and very well assured, that in Foreign Parts, where these Vultures and Birds of Prey are, it is hard for an Army to lie conceal'd, without being discovered by them; for it is Odds, but that a Horse or a Man drops where such Multitudes of People are. I am very far from laying this to the Charge of any that are under Command; though it is possible that some of them, under the Scarcity they are in, do give their Assistance, or at least Encouragement to these Robbers; otherwise it could not be, that whole Flocks and Doves of Cattle are daily driven away, and yet no one taken or brought to Justice for it. The King is not wanting in his Care; he has given Directions to have the Laws put in Execution, that Criminals may be brought in and punished; and the Government has issued out many Proclamations, but they are grown too familiar with them. You are to enquire into this Matter, in order to bring to Punishment, not only them that steal, but those that receive. I am told that open Markets are set up in this County of Wicklow: A fat Bullock for Five Shillings, and a fat Sheep for One Shilling; but it will fall heavy on them at last. Divines say, that God Almighty oftentimes makes the very Crime to become their own Punishment; and I verily fear, that a few Months will produce a Famine a Famine in this Kingdom; and what succeeds a Pestilence, and the worst of all Pestilences; for it is observed, that a starved Rot is the worst of all Rots; it falls out unhappily at this Season of the Year, when the Cattle are breeding. Under the old Law the Jews were not to seeth the Kid in the Mother's Milk; but these unmerciful Wretches go further than that, sparing none, but destroying old and young, the Increase and all. Pray, Gentlemen, consider of it, and search the Houses of such as you have Reason to suspect, that had not any thing to eat the last Year; go now into their Houses, and you will find whole Carcasses of Beef powdered up: Nay, it may be for Want of Salt, or Money to buy it, lying rotting and stinking. Let me tell you, it will be your Turn next, when they have robbed and spoiled your Protestant Neighbours, they will come to you, unless you take speedy Care to prevent it. The King has done what he can, and the Government what they can; in vain is the Law made, if Offenders be not brought to condign Punishment. You all know there has been an Invasion in England of a foreign Enemy, the Prince of Orange; and the same is designed on this Kingdom: The Effects of an Invasion is not known. Defence is natural to all Kingdoms and States, and therefore the Government has given Directions for raising a greater Army than at any Time heretofore this Kingdom ever had. It was so among the Romans of old, who in Cases of Necessity did Things clear contrary to the Fundamentals of their Laws. The same Necessity has put the King on arming here (in France they have their Ban, and with us our Commission of Array, from sixteen to sixty) but without any Design that the Effects should be to arm the Country with Half-pikes and Skeans. They are fit indeed for the Mountains, or to guard a Man's House, but not to go abroad with at Noonday. Gentlemen, you that are Justices of the Peace, and Officers of the Army, wherever you meet, you ought to secure them, and bind them over, and know by what Authority they dare go abroad with such Weapons. I need not say any thing to you in Defence of the King, for it is really and truly your own Defence; and therefore I shall proceed into the Heads which are prepared for your Enquiry at this Time. Our Business here is like to be very great, and our Time short, and therefore I shall not trouble you with small Things; we have greater Matters than Assaults and Batteries. We have Desolations and Ruins to shew you, and set before you, and without your Care, we are like to fall into the Gulph of Misery and Destruction. The first Thing we have to speak of, is High Treason; we have no Petty Treason in Ireland: If any shall go about to conspire the Death of the King, Queen, or the Heir apparent, the Prince of Wales, this is High Treason at all Times; it was so at Common Law: You must look to this betimes, for if a Blow be once struck here, there can be no retrieving of it. If any one should go about to seize the King's Person, or imprison him, this, Gentlemen, is Treason; there is but few Steps between the Prisons and Graves of Kings; and by all the Observation that I can make out of the English, or Scots, or Irish Histories, where we have had Swarms of murdered Kings, that if once they went into Prison, they seldom ever escaped with Life. Our King has more Reason than any to dread this: His Father, who now is a glorious Martyr in Heaven, lost his Life; and the King himself, ever since his Escape with Colonel Bamsfield from St. James's, has had so many miraculous Deliverances both by Sea and Land, that we may conclude he is Preserved for some mighty Matter, or else Providence had not done such great Things for him; and 'tis but of late that he himself is escaped out of Prison. I am told by Authority, and am ordered to tell you, that he is expected in this Kingdom very suddenly, as a Place of Refuge. He is the first King, I think, since Henry the Second, except Richard, that has been in this Kingdom. It is a great Misfortune that he should be forced to it, but we may look upon it as a great Blessing, that he should think himself safe here, when he cannot be so elsewhere.

To seize any of the King's Forts or Ships of War (for these are the Bulwarks to defend him against his Enemies) this, Gentlemen, is Treason. To hold Correspondence with any of the King's Enemies, or with Rebels in actual Rebellion, or to join with them, this is Treason. You are not to enquire into the Punishment, but to open a Door for the petty Jury to enquire into the Matter of Fact, and what the Law is, shall by the Blessing of God be our Business.

To counterfeit the King's Coin, or clip it (and you have very little of it at this Time, therefore you had need be careful in a more especial Manner) this likewise is Treason.

It is likewise Treason to counterfeit the Great Seal of the King; for 'tis the common Security, by which many hold their Estates, and some their Lives.

The killing of the Chancellor, or any of the Judges or Justices of Oyer and Terminer, in the doing of their Duty, this likewise is Treason, not so much with Regard to their Persons, as to the Work that they are about, they representing the King's Person. The meanest Constable there, if he has his Staff in his Hand, and doing his Duty, he that kills him shall die the same Death as he that kills the best Man that wears Scarlet on the Bench. Gentlemen, I must tell you another Crime, and it looks like a Mark of Infamy on this Kingdom. Murder in England is but Felony, but it has been thought fit to make it Treason here, and they that go out on burning and robbing Houses, they shall be indicted for Treason: And Clerk of the Crown, if any such be here, now take Notice, I will have them indicted for Treason.

The next Thing for your Enquiry is Felony, that concerning the Life of the Subject. For a Man to kill his Fellow Subject, this is Felony, if he does it on a sudden Passion and Heat: A Man may kill another in his own Defence; for 'tis natural for a man to kill rather than be killed, and therefore he shall have his Pardon of Course. But, Gentlemen, this is not in Favour of Duels, and only where there is a great Provocation: There is not a Man but has some Passion about him; but for a Man to go to Bed with Malice, and arise the next Morning and go meet his Fellow Subject and kill him, this is Murder and Treason in Ireland.

The next Thing that is Felony, is concerning the Goods of the Subject; for an honest labouring Man, that by the Industry of his whole Life has gotten a fair Stock for the Maintenance of himself, his Wife and Children, at Night goes to Bed, and next Morning when he arises, he is a Beggar, and wants Bread. Gentlemen, it would make every honest Man's Heart bleed to hear what I have heard since I came into this Country. It is ill in other Parts of the Country, but here they spare not even the wearing Cloaths and Habit of Women and Children, that they are forced to come abroad naked, without any thing to cover their Nakedness: So that besides the Oath you have taken, and the Obligation of Christianity that lies upon you as you are Christians, I conjure you by all that is sacred, and as ever you expect Eternal Salvation, that you make diligent Enquiry. Let it never be said by any of you, that it was your Neighbour, or your Neighbour's Servant did it, and you are sorry for it, but will not trouble yourselves: I tell you it is every Man's Business, and I beseech you look into it.

To break into any Man's House after Night-fall, is Felony. It is a sound Sleep that the labouring Man takes, but the idle Rogue that lies lurking and sleeping all the Day, at Night he arises and seeks whom he may devour. If you were to do the most charitable Work, as building of a Bridge or Chappel, or mending a High-way, how many do you think of these Men with half Pikes and Skeans would come to your Assistance? Not one of them, I'll engage. But if a House or Town be to be plundered, they all run thither. All Riots and Routs are to be enquired into. Numbers of People may meet for their own Defence, if they should hear or see the Country robbing and spoiling, by a riotous Multitude coming to burn and rob their Houses. In this Case they may meet and defend their Goods, and apprehend the Robbers, in order to bring them to Justice; but after all this, they are not to contest with the Government, nor do any thing to the Prejudice of that. I told you, I would not trouble you with unnecessary Matters: All are lost in the greatest of Crimes and Outrages that are committed daily in the Country round about.

If I should go through all the Heads of this Charge, it would take up more time than we have to spend here; and therefore I should shut up all and say no more than this, that every Man do apply himself to his Husbandry and Tillage, to prevent that imminent Danger of an approaching Famine that seems to be coming upon us, and that you make it your Business to search after, and bring to Judgment those Robbers that live on the Mountains; and while you continue to do your Duty, you shall have all the Protection the Government can give you. So upon Complaint of any Justice of the Peace that shall be backward or unwilling to appear against them, Care shall be taken to punish such, and make them Examples. Go together, Gentlemen, and consider of these Things.

[The Prisoners brought into Court.]

Clerk of the Crown. Set John Price to the Bar, Tho. King to the Bar, W. Lewis, James Beacon, William Healy, Tho. Burroughs to the Bar, &c. Hold up your Right Hands.

Clerk. John Price, Tho. King, &c. You stand here indicted, for that you on the 25th Day of February, in the fifth Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord King James the Second, at Ballinderry in the County of Wicklow, with divers other wicked Traitors and Rebels, in a warlike Manner then and there did assemble yourselves, and a cruel and open War and Rebellion against our Sovereign Lord the King, and his faithful Subjects of this his Majesty's Kingdom of Ireland, did raise and levy, and did intend our Sovereign Lord the King to Death and Destruction to bring, and to depose him from his Kingly Authority and Government of this his Kingdom of Ireland: And to fulfil and accomplish these your said traitorous Intentions and Designs, you the said persons with others said wicked Traitors and Rebels, the Day, Year, and Place aforesaid, did arm yourselves with divers warlike Weapons, as well offensive as defensive; and did move and excite divers others the Subjects of our Sovereign Lord the King, to join themselves wickedly and traitorously, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Duty of your Allegiance, and the Statute in that Case made and provided, &c.

Clerk. How sayest thou, John Price, art thou guilty of the Treason that thou standest here indicted, &c. or not guilty?

Mr. Price. Not Guilty.

Clerk. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Prisoner. By God and the Country.

Clerk. God send you a good Deliverance.

Note, The Prisoners were brought into Court in several Parties, to be arraigned, as many as the Dock would hold at one Time.

[The second Time the Dock was filled.]

Clerk Cr. Set William Fulham to the Bar, &c.

[Thady Brine, the High-Sheriff, stood up and said, My Lord, Fulham was cleared.]

Bar. Lynch. Pray, Sir, who cleared him?

High-Sheriff. The chief commissioned Officer that was here; Colonel Sheldon did acquit him.

Bar. Lynch. He acquit him! how could that be? If there be nothing against him, we shall acquit him.

J. Keating. Clerk of the Crown, is he indicted?

Clerk. Yes, my Lord, a Bill of Indictment is found against him.

Pendergrafs, the Sub-Sheriff. My Lord, I will tell you, Mr. Sheriff is mistaken; there was some Boys discharged, and he thinks Fulham is one of those Boys.

Bar. Lynch. Sir, you do well to reflect on your Employer.

High-Sheriff to the Sub-Sheriff. You have done this to get Money for yourself. My Lord, Fulham was not concerned at all, and therefore was discharged.

Prisoner Lewis. My Lord, we are so crowded with a File of Musketeers and a Sergeant, that they take up our Chairs, that we cannot sit down; and they come with their lighted Matches to our very Noses; and last Night a Piece went off in the Room among us: We have not the Convenience of quiet Repose, nor our Friends the Liberty of seeing us. My Lord, we were not born Lawyers, therefore desire we may have our Friends come to us, and Counsel to advise with.

[This Lewis and Lord Galmoy are Brother and Sister's Children, and was offered a Troop if he would turn Papist.]

J. Keating. Mr. Lewis, you have been bred to the Law; but you shall have Counsel allowed you; and you, Mr. Sheriff, you are not to keep them with Fire-Arms, nor with your Soldiers. I saw a Centry at this Door Yesterday, and forbade it—I remember that when Warren, Jephson, and Thompson

Thompson were tried in 1663, for a Design to surprize Dublin Castle, because this was a great Matter, forsooth, they must be guarded with Soldiers----- (They were tried at the King's Bench; and several Persons desirous to see or hear, being gotten up into the Arch in the Wall next the Court of Common Pleas) as they were going up Stairs, a Piece went off, and shot a Man through the Head. I tell you, Mr. Sheriff, that brown Bill is your Guard [pointing at one in Court] the Law knows nothing of Fire Arms; [speaking to the Prisoners] Gentlemen, I must tell you plainly, that I received Directions from my Lord Deputy, by the Attorney General, that you should have all the Justice imaginable.

Bar. Lynch. Mr. Sheriff, you must command those Soldiers to be civil, they are your Guards when you employ them.
Seventy prisoners were arraigned and returned back to Prison; 31 more that were indicted, and upon Bail, did not appear.

Next Day-----Thursday March the 7th, they were again brought to Court to their Trials, and the Jury was impaneled, whole Names were as followeth, Papiests marked thus †; viz.

† Thomas Cowdell.	Daniel Powell.
Philip Craddock.	† Richard Johnston.
John Pew.	† Theophilus Higgins.
† Alexander Higden.	† Nicholas Wall.
† Christopher Talbot.	† Charles Tool.
† Dudley Keogh.	† Charles Birne.
† John Keogh.	† Cornelius Kenan.
† David Toole.	Tho. Elliot.
† James White.	Richard Baker.
† Darby Toole.	† Thady Birne.
† Gerrard Harold.	† Francis Tute.
† Daniel Birne.	† James Moore.
† Patrick Mac Donnel.	† Hugh Birne.
† Patrick O Donnelly.	† Bryan O-Neal.
† Christopher Birne.	† Dennis Cullen.

Jailor, set the Prisoners to the Bar.

Clerk Cr. You good Men that are to try the several Issues between the King and John Price, &c. and other Prisoners at the Bar, that shall be given you in Charge, &c. Jury, look at the Prisoners; Prisoners, look at the Jury.

Clerk Cr. Thomas Cowdell, to the Book.

Prisoner Lewis. I challenge him.

Clerk. What is your Cause of Challenge?

Deputy King's Counsel, Fitz-Patrick. My Lord, before they begin their Challenges, let us know whether they will all agree in their Challenges, otherwise we must be forced to try them severally.

It was at length agreed, that if any one made a peremptory Challenge, the other Prisoners were to be satisfied with it.

[Col. Tool on the Bench, speaking to the L. Chief Justice Keating.]

My Lord, Mr. Lewis has been Sub-Sheriff of the County, and knows all that have Freehold.

J. Keating. It is the better for himself that he does know them.

Prisoner Lewis continued to challenge, until they had gone through the Pannel, and only two Gentlemen that were Protestants, Mr. Craddock and Mr. Pew, were sworn.

Clerk Cr. Mr. Sheriff, a new Pannel---The Sheriff gave in another of eleven in Number, which were all likewise challenged by Mr. Lewis.--- Whilst both the High and Sub-Sheriff were looking about the Court, for to make up a third Pannel, says

L. C. J. Keating. Mr. Sheriff, How many Freeholders have you on the Grand-Jury?

Sheriff. Six or Seven, my Lord.

J. Keating. You have been sparing enough of your Freeholders. The Law requires that all the Grand-Jury should be Freeholders, and have you but six?

Sheriff. There is but very few Freeholders in the County, my Lord.

Counf. Fitz-Patrick. In Cases of Necessity, my Lord-----

J. Keating. You know the Law is so.

Counf. Fitz-Patrick. Yes, there is a Statute for it.

J. Keating. The Prisoner for his Life may challenge twenty peremptorily, without shewing Cause; and the whole World for Want of Freehold-----And shall I put such a one on for his Life? Sir, I will not be hanged for any body.

Fitz-Patrick. Was ever a Judge hanged?

Mr. Hancock, Counsel for the Prisoners. Yes, above twenty in a few Years.

J. Keating. Mr. Fitz-Patrick, I will not be hanged with Justice Bellnap, nor Trifilian neither.

Counf. Hancock. My Lord, they were hanged at Tyburn.

J. Keating. I think they were.---The greatest Part of this County is in the Hands of two or three Men, my Lord Strafford and Rofs.

J. Keating. Who is here that is concerned for my Lord Strafford and my Lord Rofs?

Court. Here is Dr. Hall on the Bench for the Lord Strafford, and the Sheriff is concerned for my Lord Rofs.

J. Keating, Dr. Hall, and you Mr. Sheriff, let me tell you, I do not know but that their Lordships have forfeited their Estates for this Day's Work. In the Act for Plantation, there was Provision made for Freeholds, and there were enough before the Wars. I fear these great Lords have swallowed up the Freeholds their Ancestors made. I only tell you this.

The Sheriff by this Time had drawn up a third Pannel, being eight in Number.

J. Keating. Mr. Sheriff, have you all your Freeholders here?

Sheriff. My Lord, we summoned all here.

J. Keating. On the first Pannel you might have returned forty, because you do not know how far peremptory Challenges will run; and you are obliged after to return a fewer Number when you enlarge your Pannel; but you can never enlarge it farther than it was at first.

Clerk Cr. Birne, to the Book.

Prif. Lewis. I challenge him for Want of Freehold.

VOL. IV.

J. Keating. Mr. Birne, have you a Freehold in this County?

Birne. My Lord, I have a Lease of Lives.

Prif. Westland. I challenge him peremptorily.

Bar. Lynch. What, Sir, do you begin to challenge? This shall not be allowed you, to challenge one upon another.

Counf. Hancock. My Lord, you are Counsel for the Prisoners.

Bar. Lynch. Sir, you are not to tell me my Duty; I will have you to know, Sir, I shall give an Account for myself. I am Judge for the King too, as well as Counsel for the Prisoners; and I am concern'd for the King.

J. Keating. [Turning towards him.] And do you think I am not concerned as well as you?

Bar. Lynch. Yes, my Lord, I speak for you as well as myself.

Counf. Fitz-Patrick. My Lord, they agreed at first, that one Man should challenge for them all---At this Rate we are never like to get a Jury for them. It is but an ill Sign of their Innocency, that they are not willing to come to a Trial.

[Mr. Hancock Counsel for the Prisoners.]

In the peremptory Challenges they agreed (but not in the Challenges for Freehold), and this peremptory Challenge we will stand by.

J. Keating. I will tell you how I understood it: That in their peremptory Challenges, if any one of them challenged, the rest should be concluded by it. Mr. Westland has made a peremptory Challenge, and they are willing to stand by that---However, Mr. Birne, stand by, do not go away, we may call you again. Clerk of the Crown proceed---&c.---which he did, until he ended the third Pannel.

[Sub-Sheriff calls William Baker.]

Answ. My Lord, he has a Freehold.

Baker. My Lord, I have no Freehold.

J. Keating. You see the Sub-Sheriff is a fit Man to be an Officer; he is blind---he is indifferent.

[High-Sheriff calls Peter Ayris.]

Answ. He is on the Grand-Jury.

J. Keating. Mr. Sheriff, why do you call such?

Sheriff. I saw him in Court, and so I called him, my Lord.

J. Keating. There is already but five peremptory Challenges made, so that they may challenge fifteen more peremptorily; and there is but two sworn, so that there wants ten.

Cl. Cr. Sheriff, see if you can get any more.

Sheriff. I see never a Freeholder in the Court.

Counf. Fitz-Patrick. My Lord, the Sheriff ought to be punished for his Neglect.

Bar. Lynch. Sir, why did you not take care to return a Jury of Freeholders? You shall be fined for it.

High-Sheriff. My Lord, I have returned all the Freeholders there is in the County (I sent Yesterday above twenty Miles for one Gentleman here) they are all gone out of the Country.---I hope you do not expect I should go to the North, or Isle of Man, or England, or Scotland, among the Rebels, to summon them.

J. Keating. I do really believe you, Mr. Sheriff; you have done like an honest Man---Mr. Fitz-Patrick, what do you say in this Case?

Fitz-Patrick. My Lord, I cannot tell what to say.

Deputy King's Counf. Hammond. What if there was not one Freeholder in the County, must not Justice be done?

J. Keating. Can we make a Law for it?

Hammond. My Lord, I know that in Case of an Ejectment, a Trial has been removed from one County to another.

J. Keating. Can you by Law go to another County in Case of Life?

Hammond. It appears there is not sufficient Freeholders in this County; the Lands being in some few Hands.

J. Keating. You know the Law is otherwise, and what would you have us that are Judges do? Pray tell us, Sir, what you would be at?

Hammond. We would have it removed to the next County, or another County.

J. Keating. For God's sake, Mr. Hammond, do not put us on making Law.

Bar. Lynch. Mr. Hammond, when did you hear that ever a Matter capital was tried in a Foreign County? In Matters Civil, by Rule of Court, or Order of Chancery it may be, but of a capital Offence it was never known; and we are by our Commission to try Offences committed against the Law in the Counties where the Fact was committed.---We must try them in this County, and cannot remove them from one County to another.

J. Keating. Mr. Hammond, because I would take you off of this new Law that you so much insist on, that in Case of an Ejectment it may be tried in a Foreign County---I tell you it cannot be tried in a Foreign County: We have no Law for it but that of K. James, and the Reason was, because of the Story that was here on Foot; for an Heir Male, if collateral, he carried it against the Heir general. K. James he gave Direction that in that Case it should be tried in a different County. And that my Brother tells you of trying in a different County by Order of Chancery, is this: A Person comes in Chancery, and he suggests that such an one was too potent in such a County, and therefore he desired it might be tried in an indifferent County, or get such a Rule of Court on such a Suggestion. And this was the Case of the Archbishop of-----when he was Bishop of Limerick. And if Walcot might be believed, he said, was the Occasion of his running into Rebellion.

C. There is a Case in Hobart, &c.

J. Keating. I would undeceive you in that Particular: As in the Case of Austen and Colonel Garret Moor. If in the County of Galloway it was Austen's; if in the King's County, it was Colonel Moor's. So that you see, in disputable Cases, the Law has Regard that it be tried by Juries in proper Counties: And truly I think it one of the most reasonable Laws in the World, that a Man shall be tried by his County, by the Neighbourhood; and it has given Ground to a good English Proverb, He that has an ill Name, is half-hanged. A Man's Repute among his Neighbours goes a great Way in this Matter: When his Neighbours shall say they never knew ill by him. And this Man to be carried out of the County of Wicklow, to be tried at Wexford, you may by the same Rule bring a Jury from Tyrone, or the farthest Part of Connaught. There is nothing like what you say in the Law.

Hamond. I do not say that ever I met with such a Thing in the Law.
Bar. Lynch. And do you think that we will make the Precedent?

Hamond. That two or three Persons should have almost the whole County.

J. Keating. Before God, I believe they think they have little enough, whatever you may think of their having too much.

Bar. Lynch. What you say, Mr. Hamond, if there be any thing in it, we shall advise with all the Judges.

The Judges declaring their Opinion, that the Prisoners after being arraigned, could not be admitted to Bail,

Coun. Saxborough to Bar. Lynch. My Lord, you took Bail for Captain Rush at Kilkenny, after his Arraignment.

Bar. Lynch. What, Sir, do you reflect on me? There was no Evidence appeared, and my Brother bailed him as well as I.

Coun. Saxborough. I say he was bailed.

Mr. Hancock. My Lord, Mr. Cooper at Galloway was bailed by your Lordship likewise.

Lord Chief Justice Keating sent privately to Dublin to the Deputy, acquainting him, that if they were left in Prison until the next Assizes, they would certainly perish, they having lost all they had, and the County was not able to maintain them; upon which he received Orders to bail all but seven of the Principal; viz.

John Price, Esq.
Thomas King.
Richard Westland,
William Lewis,

James Bacon,
Joseph Crichtley,
George Crichtley,

Who are kept close Prisoners, in order to their Trial the next Assizes, which will be in this Month of July. Upon the taking these Gentlemen Prisoners, the Soldiers and Rabble plundered and spoiled all the English Families in Balinderry, Redrum, Balina-Glash, &c. and the Irish Women with their Skeans came afterwards and stripp'd the Women and Children naked, leaving them in a most miserable and deplorable Condition, having not left them either Bread, or any Food in several Towns, but carried all away with them. And as an Irishman, a Tanner, declared to several at the Assizes, in the Hearing of this Relator, that one Capt. Tool had for his Share twenty-six Horse-Loads, or more, of Plunder; and the Lord of Louth's Troop of Dragoons that were quarter'd in Wicklow Town, had great Quantities of Woollen and Linnen Cloth, Women's Cloaths, Pewter, and other Goods in Abundance. But the Lord Chief Justice Keating coming there to the Assizes, and having an Account of the extreme Poverty and Misery the Protestants thereabouts were reduced to, did encourage their Petitioning, and where they could find their Cloaths, &c. he endeavoured to help them in the Recovery of them. And Mr. Richard Lamb having ten fat Bullocks taken away by Col. Tool's Men, and brought to Wicklow, and there killed and eaten by the Soldiers, he preferred a Petition to the Court, Col. Tool being present on the Bench.

J. Keating. Colonel Tool, you heard the Petition read; do you know any thing of these Oxen Mr. Lamb had taken from him by your Soldiers?

C. Tool. My Lord, I will tell you how it was: Mr. Lamb had sold the Bullocks to Mr. Price, and as they were driving them to Balinderry, the Soldiers met them and took them away.

J. Keating. But Mr. Lamb was at home at his own House, and not at Balinderry; the Bullocks were to be paid for upon Mr. Lamb's delivering them to Mr. Price at Balinderry; your Soldiers took them away from his Servant several Miles from Balinderry: I see no Reason why Mr. Lamb should not be paid for them.

C. Tool. My Lord, Colonel Sheldon came down soon after with the King's Army, and I advised with him, and he ordered they should be killed for the Army, which was done accordingly.

J. Keating. Pray Colonel Tool, however, Mr. Lamb ought to be paid for them; he was not concerned with Balinderry, but kept his own House.

Coun. Fitzpatrick. My Lord, his House was a Garrison too.

Mr. Hancock. For Shame, Mr. Fitzpatrick, a Thatch'd Cabin a Garrison! I find you are for making all Protestants Rebels that live peaceably at home in their own Houses.

C. Tool. My Lord, I have no more to say to the Matter.

Clerk of the Crown, calling over the Gentlemen of the County, called one — Savil, Gent.

Mr. Savil. Here I am, my Lord, God knows, a poor Gentleman, being robb'd of all, and not a Penny left me to buy a Pint of Drink.

J. Keating. Pray, Sir, when were you robb'd?

Mr. Savil. The last Wednesday they came and took away what little they had left untaken before, my Wife and Children's Cloaths, robbing me of all.

J. Keating. Pray, Sir, what Value may your Loss be?

Mr. Savil. Truly, my Lord, I have not yet computed my Loss, but they have taken away all; I desire your Lordship will discharge me from attending the Court, for I have not wherewithal to subsist while I am here.

J. Keating. Sir, I am sorry for you, I discharge you.

J. Keating. Col. Tool, let the Officers be sent for into Court, to hear this Proclamation read, that is sent down here by the Government.

C. Tool. My Lord, they are here most of them. Here is Captain Archbold, Captain Tool, &c.

Clerk of the Crown read the Proclamation, the Substance whereof was, That they should restore the Protestants such of their Horses again, as were not fit for the King's Service, &c.

J. Keating. Calls for it from the Clerk, and giving it into Col. Tool's Hand, who stood next him on the Bench; Sir, Pray take this Proclamation, and I hope you will take Care that Obedience be given to it.

C. Tool. My Lord, we have received other Orders; Colonel Sheldon, who is our chief Commander, has given Directions to have them kept for Draught for Carriages.

J. Keating. Nay, Sir, if Colonel Sheldon must be obeyed before the Government, I have no more to say, I have done.

C. Tool. My Lord, I shall obey it.

J. Keating. Pray then, Colonel Tool, let the Horses be sent for while that I am here, that what Horses are not musterable may be return'd: I cannot in my Conscience go about to fine Men for not appearing at the Assizes, when they have not a Horse left them to ride on.

CXLVII. The Trial of MAURICE CAVENAGH, EDMUND POOR, and WILLIAM BOWLAND, in Ireland, for Felony, in stealing Cows, March 7. 1688-9. 1 W. & M.

SEVERAL were arraigned for stealing considerable Numbers of Cows, Sheep, &c. but the Evidence against most of them durst not appear to prosecute.

Leagblin Birne indicted for stealing nine Head of Black Cattle from one Cohwell; no Person appearing to prosecute, says

Justice Keating [to the Jury]. Gentlemen, you have nothing against this Man; he was born in the State of Innocency; but the Truth is, the Parties dare not appear against him.

[Witnesses came in against three Fellows; viz. Maurice Cavenagh, Edmund Poor, William Bowland.]

[Clerk of the Crown calling them to come and prosecute, and they appearing.]

J. Keating. You that are Evidences against the Prisoners at the Bar, I charge you, as you will answer it before God, that you neither for Favour or Affection be inclined to spare any of these Villains; and likewise, that you will conceal nothing of the Truth, as you will answer it at the Great Day; for I tell you, the Cries and Groans of the poor Women and Children, and the many Families that are ruined, and in great Distress, will go up to Heaven against you.

Evidence against Edm. Poor. My Lord, when I came to him, and asked him why he stole my Cows, he said, the Devil did make him do it. I spake him fair, and he gave me Money for my Cows.

Poor. Ay, my Lord, and he promised not to trouble me.

J. Keating. It was an unlawful Promise; the Law would not justify him in it; he has done like an honest Man. If you paid the Money out of Conscience, you did well; but I fear it was your Danger of the Halter made you part with your Money; for if twenty-two Shillings and Damnation stood in the Way, I believe you would have kept the Money. I am sure, without Satisfaction, you cannot expect Absolution; the Priest that gave the other Advice for the Maddoge or Skean, will, I suppose, tell you so.

Two Protestant Evidences against Maurice Cavenagh, for stealing several Head of Black Cattle, hearing Judge Keating speak against Skeans, said.

Evidence. My Lord, when we seized him, we took a Skean away from him.

J. Keating. Sir, How durst you carry such an unlawful Weapon?

Cavenagh. My Lord, I am a Butcher, it was a Butcher's Knife.

J. Keating. Ay, I do not question but thou canst butcher upon Occasion. One Hicky spoke. My Lord, He is no Butcher, but one of the greatest Rogues in the County round us. I have been in Pursuit of him several times.

Cavenagh. He is a Murderer, my Lord, do not believe him.

Evidence. My Lord, it was near ten Inches long, thick at the Back, and sharp Point, every way a Skean.

J. Keating. Is that your Butcher's Knife? You are a great Villain, for carrying such a Weapon.

Cavenagh. I was ordered to have a Skean, my Lord.

J. Keating. Pray, Sir, who ordered you?

Cavenagh. The Priest of the Parish.

J. Keating. A Priest, Sir! [turning to his Brother Judge] Do you hear that, Brother?

Bar. Lynch. What Priest, Sir? What Priest? What is your Priest's Name?

J. Keating. Hold, Brother. Come, Sir, I shall not ask your Priest's Name: I believe you will have Occasion to see your Priest soon, to do you a better Office than to advise you to carry Skeans.

[And looking towards Col. Tool, and two Priests on the Bench, next Sheriff Birne.]

J. Keating. A Priest, Gentlemen! A Priest is a Minister, and a Minister of the Gospel; his Doctrine ought to be Peace, for the Gospel is a Doctrine of Peace. When our Saviour came into the World Peace was proclaimed; and when he went out of the World he left it for a Legacy to his Disciples: My Peace be with you. And pray, Sir, tell your Priest so from me when you see him. It is not for Priests to arm or animate such Villains as you are for Mischief. I shall not ask your Priest's Name.

Clancy, an Irish Gentleman. My Lord, he belies the Priest; he is a Rogue.

Cavenagh. I do not: The Priests of every Parish did give Orders to get Half-pikes and Skeans; and they were getting together in Companies in every Parish.

J. Keating. Who were they that were gotten together; such Fellows as you?—Cavenagh. No, my Lord, better Men than I; a great many that are here in Court.

[The Jury withdrawing, and returning soon again, brought Poor and Bowland in guilty, Cavenagh not guilty.]

J. Keating. Gentlemen, you have acquitted the greater Villain; at your Door let it lie.

[The Ordinary being called to give Bowland and Poor the Book, for their Clergy.]

J. Keating. Sir, I expect as true a Return from you, as if I were there myself. The Times are so, that Men must forget Bowels of Mercy. Ordinary, do your Duty: What Place do you shew them?

Ordinary. My Lord, I shew them the fiftieth Psalm.

J. Keating. Let them read the fifth Verse.—This is an Act of Mercy, and I know not why it should not be in Irish rather, the Country Language.

guage. It was formerly in Latin, because the Romish Church hath their Worship in Latin.

[The Ordinary return'd them both, Non legit.]

J. Keating. You William Bowland, and you Edmund Poor, you have been arraigned for stealing of Cows, two several Thefts: It is a great Misfortune and Sin to be guilty of such Crimes at any Time; but yours is so much the worse, because it falls in a Time when there are such general and vast Depredations in the Country, that many honest Men go to Bed possessed of considerable Stocks of black and white Cattle, gotten by great Labour and Pains, the Industry of their whole Lives, and in the Morning when they arise not any thing left them, but turn'd out of all, to go a begging all being, taken away by Rebels, by Thieves and robbers, the Sons of Violence, that make every thing they lay their Hands on their own. On this side the Cape of Good Hope, where are the most brutish and barbarous People we read of, there is none like the People of this Country; nor so great a Desolation as in this Kingdom, at this Day any where to be found, and particularly in this Country. It is come to that pass, that a Man that loses the better Part of his Substance, chooses rather to let that, and what he has besides go, than come to give Evidence: And why? Because he is certain to have his House burnt, and his Throat cut, if he appears against them. Good God! what a Pass are we come to! For what has any Man, if the stronger Hand can take it from him? It is better to live under no Law, than in such a Place. We have lived to see twenty-nine Years of Peace pass over our Heads, and I have sat on this Bench before now: I pray God that my Lenity, and others, has not given Encouragement to these Thieves and Robbers. There may be a Rogue in the Court, or one that is evilly inclined (I know none), but take Notice of this, the Government is at length tir'd with Mercy; they see it does no good, and Examples and Punishments of this Kind are not intended so much in a great Part for the Punishment of the Offender, as for discouraging of others, to make them take Warning by their Example, that, seeing what evil Courses bring Men to, they may reform.

I will not take up Time to tell you how the Benefit of Clergy came; whether in the room of the Cities of Refuge that were in the old Times. I know that Restitution was under the Jewish Law sufficient Satisfaction; and if the Thief could not make Restitution, he was to be sold for a Slave, and the Money given to the Party. But as the World grows old it grows worse, and those Lenitives signify nothing for preventing Thieving and Robbery; for Thieves and Robbers are like a Gangreen in the Commonwealth; they are worse than Drones in the Hive. I cannot tell myself, that under the Circumstances we are in, I should advise to pardon any that are taken in this general Depredation that we are under; and therefore you Bowland and Poor, that might have lived as safely under the Laws as the biggest Man in the Kingdom, and none of your Fellow Subjects durst lay his Hand upon you, but he was liable to answer for it: And thus you might have lived to a fair old Age, and ended your Days in Peace; but you have chosen the quite contrary, for the Law provides likewise for the Punishment of wicked and offending Persons, among which Number you are found by a Jury of twelve able Men of your Country; and therefore the Sentence of the Law is this, That you be both, and each of you, taken from this Place, to the Place from whence you came, and there your Irons to be struck off, and from thence to the Place of Execution, and there you shall be hanged by the Neck till you are dead, and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

And now let me give you Advice: Your Time is short, spend it well, and flatter not yourselves with the Hopes of a Reprieve or Pardon: And for you, Poor, you have shortened the Work of your Life; you have gone a great Way towards Heaven, if that Restitution you made was out of Conscience. Mr. Sheriff, let them have a Confessor sent to them, for Saturday is the Day of their Execution.

[The Women, their Friends, setting up their Cry in the Court.]

J. Keating. They did not cry thus when the Cows were brought Home to them, they were busied then in the killing and the powdering them up. The Copy of a Protection or Pass, given by an Irish Officer to some Notorious Robbers of the County of Wicklow.

I James Byrne, Ensign to Captain Charles Byrne, do hereby certify to you, Terlagh Kelly, Patrick Byrne, and Patrick Mac-Teige, and William Doyle, to save you Harmless from any Misdemeanors whatsoever. As witness my Hand this 24th of April, 1689.

JAMES BYRNE.

The following Letter being sent by the Lord-Deputy to the Judges of Assize, was read in Court to the Grand-Jury, &c.

By the Lord-Deputy General, and General Governor of Ireland.

AFTER Our hearty Commendations, We Greet you well. As his Majesty was graciously pleased to entrust us with the Government of this his Kingdom, so upon the invading of England, and upon receiving certain Information, that the Prince of Orange doth intend also to invade this Realm, We have, for the Defence thereof, raised a considerable Army, far above what could be maintained by the King's Revenue at the best of Times, and when the Trade of this Country was in the most flourishing Condition. This we have done by the King's Command, to support his Regal Authority, Crown and Dignity, and to preserve the Lives, Liberties and Properties of all his Liege People within this Kingdom. And since our Dangers are at Hand, and that we may daily expect the Landing of an Enemy, who intends the Subversion of his Majesty's Government, and the total Destruction of all his good Subjects here, we find ourselves under an absolute Necessity to keep the King's Army still on foot, in order to our Preservation from the approaching Dangers. And tho' we have hitherto with all the Care and Industry imaginable, and by the generous concurrence of the Officers, supported the new-raised Forces without being a Burthen to any of his Majesty's People: Yet considering the Decay of Trade, the great Fall of the Revenue in these distracted Times, the great Charges the Officers have been at in subsisting Men, it cannot be expected that the standing Forces can hereafter be maintained without Supplies. And since the same cannot be done by Parliament, We cannot think of a more effectual Expedient, than by voluntary Subscriptions, by way of Loan, from the People; which, if generously done, with what may be made of the Revenue, may support the Army, and will stop all the Disorders that maybe committed by the Soldiers, which we shall always endeavour to prevent with all the Care and Industry possible. By this, Husbandry may go on as formerly, and we shall be in a Capacity to form the Army, so as that, with the Assistance of Almighty God, we do not doubt to put this Kingdom in a perfect Posture of Defence. We do therefore pray your Lordships to recommend this weighty Matter effectually at the open Assizes in every County when you sit, to all the Inhabitants of such Counties, and to appoint the respective Sheriffs of such Counties to procure voluntary Subscriptions, by way of Loan, from the Inhabitants of such Counties, of some certain Sum of Money from each, to be subscribed to their Names, to be afterwards satisfied by them respectively, in Money, Wheat, Oats or Oatmeal, towards the Maintenance of the Army, to be paid in, or delivered to the respective Sheriffs, or their Order, and in such Places as the said Sheriffs shall respectively appoint, from whom we expect an Account of their Proceedings herein, and a Copy of such Subscriptions as shall be made. We do not doubt but every true and loyal Subject will, according to his Ability, and the Excellency of the Subject Matter, generously and cheerfully contribute towards the carrying on of so great, so necessary, and so glorious a Work. We expect your diligent Care herein, and so we bid you heartily Farewell.

From his Majesty's Castle of Dublin, March 2, 1688.

Your very loving Friend,

TYRCONNEL.

An Answer to the foregoing Letter being drawn up by the Grand Jury and entered into their Book, and presented to Sir Henry Lynch, setting forth the extreme Poverty of their Country, occasioned by the daily Ruin of the English, &c. that they were not in a Capacity to subsist themselves, and therefore not capable to raise any thing considerable for the Army (Chief Justice Keating returning to Dublin, and leaving Baron Lynch to go on to the other Counties, &c.) the said Lynch told the Grand Jury, before he discharged them, that the Writing they had drawn up, was a Reflection and Scandal to their Country, would be taken very ill by the Government, and did not question but it would be brought in hereafter as an Evidence against them, and therefore ordered it should be torn out of the Book; which was done accordingly.

CXLVIII. The Trials of Sir RICHARD GRAHME, Baronet, Viscount Preston in the Kingdom of Scotland, and JOHN ASHTON, at the Old Bailey, for High-Treason, Jan. 17, 1690. 2 W. & M.

Die Veneris, 16. Die Januarij, Anno Dom. 1690.

THE King and Queen's Writ of Habeas Corpora was sent to the Governor of the Tower of London, to bring up the Bodies of Sir Richard Grahme, Baronet, Viscount Preston, in the Kingdom of Scotland, John Ashton and Edmund Elliot, Gent. to the Sessions-House in the Old-Bailey, London; where they were brought between the Hours of Ten and Eleven in the Forenoon; and being placed at the Bar, were arraigned upon an Indictment of High-Treason, found the Day before by the Grand Jury for the County of Middlesex, at Hicks's Hall, in Manner following:

Clerk of Arraignments. "SIR Richard Grahme, hold up your Hand [which he did, and so the other two]: You stand indicted by the Names of Sir Richard Grahme, late of the Parish of St. Anne within the Liberty of Westminster, in the County of Middlesex, Baronet; John Ashton, late of the Parish of St. Paul, Covent-Garden, in the County aforesaid, Gentleman; and Edmund Elliot, late of the Parish of St. James within the Liberty aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, Gent. for that you, as false Traitors against the most Illustrious and most Excellent Princes William and Mary, King and Queen of England, Defenders of the Faith, &c. your Sovereign Lord and Lady, not having the Fear of God in your Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the cordial Love, and true, due, and natural Obedience which every true and faithful Subject of our said Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, towards them our said Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen should, and of Right ought to bear, wholly withdrawing, and contriving, practising, and with all your Strength intending the Peace and common Tranquility of this Kingdom of England to disquiet, molest, and disturb, and War and Rebellion against our said Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, within this Kingdom of England to stir up, move, and procure; and the Government of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen of this Kingdom of England, to subvert, change and alter; and our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, from the Title, Honour, and Royal Name, of the Imperial Crown of this their Kingdom of England to depose and deprive; and our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, to Death and final Destruction to bring and put; you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, the nine-and-twentieth Day of December, in the second Year of the Reign of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are; and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County aforesaid, fallly, maliciously, devilishly, and traitorously, with Force and Arms, &c. with divers false Rebels and Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, did conspire, treat of, compass, imagine, and intend our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are (your supreme and natural Lord and Lady) from the Royal State, Crown, Title, Power, and Government of their Kingdom of England, to deprive, depose, and cast down; and the same our Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, to kill, and bring and put to death; and the Government of this Kingdom of England to change, alter, and wholly to subvert; and a miserable Slaughter among the Subjects of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, within their Kingdom of England, to cause and procure; and an Insurrection, War, and Rebellion, against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, within this Kingdom of England to move, procure, and aid; and the same your most evil, wicked, and devilish Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, as false Traitors, then and there, to wit, the said nine-and-twentieth Day of December, in the said second Year of the Reign of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, with Force and Arms, &c. fallly, unlawfully, wickedly, and traitorously, did propose, consult, and agree to procure and prepare great Numbers of armed Men, War and Rebellion against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, within this Kingdom of England to levy and make; and that you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, afterwards, to wit, the same nine and twentieth Day of December, in the aforesaid second Year of the Reign of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, fallly, maliciously, and traitorously, did prepare, and compose, and then and there did cause, and procure to be prepared, and composed, several traitorous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in Writing, to shew and inform Lewis, then and yet the French King, and his Subjects, then and yet Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, and very many other evil-disposed Persons, and false Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, of and concerning the Number, Force, and Condition of certain Ships, for, and on the Behalf of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen of England, then and there designed and prepared for the Defence of their Kingdom of England, and their Enemies aforesaid to repel and resist; and how some of the same Ships were Manned, and of the Names of the Captains of several of the said Ships; and how the Castles and Fortresses of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, called Portsmouth, South-Sea, and Gosport, within this Kingdom of England, were strengthened and fortified, and how the same Castles and Fortresses, into the Hands and Possession of Enemies and false Traitors against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, might be taken and seized; as also of the Time, Places, Ways, Manners, and Means, by which, when, and where the same Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, this Kingdom of England might invade and infest; and the same Enemies, and the Ships of the Enemies of this Kingdom of England, should fight against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, and their faithful Subjects; as also to procure, provide, prepare, and obtain against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, Assistance and armed Men, our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, from their Royal State and Government of this Kingdom of England to cast down and depose, and to stir up, promote, and procure the aforesaid Lewis the French King (then, and yet an Enemy of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen) this Kingdom of England to invade; and to send Ships within this Kingdom of England, the City of London, of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, to plague; as also to cause very many Subjects of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, to rise, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, within this Kingdom of England, to move, procure, make, and levy. And you, the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, afterwards, to wit, the same Day and Year, at the aforesaid Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, of and for the same your Treasons and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes aforesaid, to execute, fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect into your Hands, Custody, and Possession, then and there secretly, knowingly, unlawfully, and traitorously did obtain, procure, detain, had, concealed, and kept two several Bills of Exchange then before made, for the Payment of several Sums of Money to the Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are; as also very many traitorous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in Writing, then and there composed and prepared with an Intent to shew and inform Lewis, then and yet the French King, and his Subjects, then and yet Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, and very many other evil-disposed Persons, and false Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, of and concerning the Number, Force and Condition of the Ships, for and on Behalf of them our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen of England, then and there designed, and prepared for the Defence of their Kingdom of England, and to repel, and resist their Enemies, and how some of the same Ships were Manned, and of the Names of the Captains of divers of the same Ships, and how the Castles and Fortresses of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, called Portsmouth, South-Sea and Gosport, within this Kingdom of England, were strengthened and fortified, and how the same Castles and Forts into the Hands and Possession of Enemies and false Traitors against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, might be taken and seized; as also the Times, Places, Ways, Manners, and Means, by which, when, and where the same Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, this Kingdom of England might invade and infest, and the Enemies, and Ships of the Enemies of this Kingdom of England, should fight against the same, our Lord and Lady, the King and Queen of England, and their faithful Subjects; as also to procure, provide, prepare, and obtain against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, Assistance and armed Men, to invade this Kingdom of England, and our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, from their Royal State and Government of this Kingdom of England, to cast down and depose, and to stir up, promote, and procure the aforesaid Lewis the French King, then, and yet an Enemy of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, to invade this Kingdom of England, and to send Ships within this Kingdom of England, the City of London, of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, to plague; as also to cause very many Subjects of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, to raise, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, within this Kingdom of England, to move, procure, make, and levy. And you, the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, afterwards, to wit, the thirtieth Day of December, now last past, at the aforesaid Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, concerning, and for the same your Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes aforesaid, to execute, fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, for one hundred Pounds in Moneys, numbred by you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, then and there paid, and deposited, unlawfully and traitorously did hire and prepare, and then and there did cause and procure to be hired and prepared a certain Ship, and three Men; you, the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, with the said Bills of Exchange, and the aforesaid traitorous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in Writing, into the Hands, Custody and Possession of you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, secretly, unlawfully, and traitorously kept, concealed and detained, from this Kingdom of England, unto, and into France, in Parts beyond the Seas, then and yet under the Rule and Government of the said Lewis the French King, then and yet an Enemy of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, secretly to carry and transport, with that Intent, the said Bills of Exchange, traitorous Letters, Notes and Memorandums, and Instructions in Writing there in Parts beyond the Seas, to the Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, and other evil-disposed Persons to deliver and disperse. And the said most wicked Treasons, and traitorous Compassings and Imaginations aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect; as also to cause, promote and procure the aforesaid Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, to invade this Kingdom of England with Ships and armed Men. And you, the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, afterwards, to wit, the thirtieth Day of December now last past, at the aforesaid Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County aforesaid, concerning, and for the same your Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid, to execute and fulfil, maliciously, traitorously, and advisedly, then and there, and diverse other Days and Times, as well before as after, took upon yourselves to very many other Traitors to be aiding and assisting in the Execution of the Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes aforesaid; and then and there, to wit, the same thirtieth Day of December now last past, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County aforesaid, maliciously, secretly and traitorously did hire, and prepare, and then and there did cause and procure to be hired and prepared a certain Boat, and one Man, to the Jurors aforesaid unknown; you, the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, from thence to, and into the aforesaid Ship, so as aforesaid hired and prepared, to carry and convey. And you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, maliciously and traitorously into the same Boat, then and there did enter; and yourselves from thence, in and by that same Boat, unto and into the Ship aforesaid, and there unlawfully and traitorously did cause, and procure to be carried with the Intention aforesaid. And you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, with the same Bills of Exchange, and the aforesaid traitorous Letters, Notes, Memorandums and Instructions in Writing, and in your Hands, Custody and Possession then and there, in and with the Ship aforesaid, did sail, and depart towards the aforesaid Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond the Seas; the same your most wicked, evil, and traitorous Intentions, Purposes, Compassings and Imaginations aforesaid to fulfil, perfect and promote, against the Duty of your Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, their Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. And the Indictment further set forth, that long before the aforesaid nine-and-twentieth Day of December now last past, open War between our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, and the aforesaid Lewis the French King was begun, declared, and waged, and yet is: Which said Lewis the French King, and his Subjects, and the Men of those Parts, then and yet, were, and are, Enemies to our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, and to their Kingdom of England: And that in the Time of the aforesaid War between them our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, and the aforesaid Lewis the French King, you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, being Subjects of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, as false Traitors against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, during the War aforesaid, to wit, the nine-and-twentieth Day of December, in the second Year of the Reign of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, and diverse other Days and Times as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, with Force and Arms, &c. to the aforesaid Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, unlawfully, and traitorously were adhering, and assisting, and in Execution, and Performance

"of the same adhering, you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, then, and there, to wit, the same nine-and-twentieth Day of December, in the second Year of the Reign of our said Lord and Lady the King and Queen that now are, above said, at the aforesaid Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, and traiterously did prepare and compose, and then and there did cause and procure to be prepared and composed, as also into your Custody and Possession, then and there unlawfully, secretly, and traiterously, did obtain, detain, conceal, and keep, divers traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in Writing, to shew and inform the aforesaid Lewis, then and yet the French King, and his Subjects, then and yet Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, of and concerning the Number, Force, and Condition of certain Ships, for and on the Behalf of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen of England, then and there designed, and preparing, for their Defence of their Kingdom of England, and their Enemies aforesaid to repel, and resist; and how some of the same Ships were manned, and of the Names of several of our Captains of the said Ships; and how the Castles and Fortresses of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, called Portsmouth, South-Sea, and Gosport, within this Kingdom of England, were strengthened, and fortified, and how those same Castles and Fortresses into the Hands and Possession of the same Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, might be taken, and seized; as also of the Time, Places, Ways, Manners, and Means, by which, when and where the same Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, this Kingdom of England might invade, and infect; and they the said Enemies, and the Ships of the said Enemies of this Kingdom of England should fight against our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, and their faithful Subjects. And that during the War aforesaid, to wit, the aforesaid thirtieth Day of December now last past, you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, at the aforesaid Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County aforesaid, unlawfully, and traiterously did hire, and prepare, and then and there did cause and procure to be hired and prepared a certain Ship, and three Men, you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, with the same traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in Writing, from this Kingdom of England, unto, and into France in Parts beyond the Seas, then and there under the Rule and Government of the aforesaid Lewis the French King, then and yet an Enemy of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, secretly, during the War aforesaid, to carry, and transport, to the Intent the same traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in Writing there, in Parts beyond the Seas, to the aforesaid Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, to deliver, and disperse during the War aforesaid, in Aid of the said Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, in the War aforesaid: And that you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, during the War aforesaid, to wit, the aforesaid thirtieth Day of December now past, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County aforesaid, concerning, and for the same your Treasons and traiterous Adherings and Purposes aforesaid to execute and fulfil, maliciously, traiterously, and advisedly, then and there did hire and prepare, and then and there did cause, and procure to be hired and prepared a certain Boat, and one Man to the Jurors unknown, you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, from thence to and into the Ship aforesaid, by you as aforesaid, hired and prepared to carry and convey: And that you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, maliciously and traiterously into the same Boat, then and there did enter, and yourselves from thence secretly in and by the same Boat unto and into the same Ship, then and there did cause and procure to be carried, in Prosecution of the Adhering aforesaid. And you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, then and there with the same traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in Writing, in your Custody and Possession being, during the War aforesaid, to wit, the same Day and Year, in and with the Ship aforesaid did sail, and depart towards the aforesaid Kingdom of France, to the Intent the same traiterous Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in Writing, in Parts beyond the Seas, to the said Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, to deliver, concerning and for Aid, Intelligence, and Council, by you the said Sir Richard Grahme, John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, to the same Enemies of our said Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, to give and yield, during the War aforesaid, against the Duty of your Allegiance, against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen that now are, their Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided." How say you, Sir Richard Grahme, are you Guilty of this Feign and High Treason whereof you stand indicted, or Not Guilty?

L. Preston. My Lord, I have something humbly to offer to your Lordships.

L. C. J. Holt. What is it your Lordship would say?

L. Preston. My Lord, I find I stand indicted by the Name of Sir Richard Grahme, Baronet, but I do take myself to be entituled to another way of Trial, as being a Peer of England, by Virtue of a Patent before the Vote of Abdication was made; and it was in a Time when all your Processess, and all your Writs went in the King's Name, and all Officers acted by Virtue of his Commissions. My Lord, this is a Matter that concerns me in Point of Life, Estate, Posterity, and all that's dear to me; and therefore I desire to know whether your Lordships think fit to allow me my Peerage; I offer it, my Lord, with all the Respect and Modesty imaginable.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I apprehend your Lordship to offer against your being tried here, that you are a Peer.

L. Preston. I take myself to be so, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you must make that out to the Court.

L. Preston. I told your Lordships the Ground of my Claim and Apprehension: It is from a Patent I received before the Vote of Abdication, when all Commissions, and all Process, and all the Courts of Judicature run in that Name.

L. C. J. Holt. Where is that Patent, my Lord?

L. Preston. It is in the Hands of the House of Lords.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, we cannot take Notice of that Patent: If your Lordship plead that you were made a Peer by a Patent under the Great Seal of England, you must produce it under the Great Seal, that the Court may see what it is, and whether it be sufficient to justify your Plea.

L. Preston. I hope your Lordship and this Court will enable me to do that, by sending an Order to the Clerk of the House of Lords, to bring the Patent hither; for it is in his Hands.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, that is not in our Power: If your Lordship take yourself to be a Peer, and would thereby stop this Court from proceeding to try you, you must be ready to make it out.

L. Preston. I am ready to make it out: If I had my Patent here, that would make it out. Certainly there is some Authority now in being (I humbly offer it with all Submission and Respect) that may order the Clerk of the House of Lords to attend this Court, and produce this Patent.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, we are not to enable you to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court.

L. Preston. My Lord, I offer it with all Respect to the Court: I am concerned in it for my Life, and my All, and if that be over-ruled, this I hope you will do before you go on, you will hear me by my Counsel.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, it is nothing that you have said; for if your Lordship plead this Plea to the Jurisdiction of the Court, it ought not to be received without shewing your Patent.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire my Counsel to be heard to this Matter.

L. C. J. Holt. I know your Lordship has had the Benefit of Counsel, and I know your Counsel must tell you, that what you say goes for nothing, unless you put in your Plea, and produce your Patent, that the Court may judge upon it.

* Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I have observed what my Lord Preston has mentioned—

L. Preston. Pray, Mr. Solicitor, will you speak out, that I may hear what you say?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I say, I have taken Notice of what your Lordship has offered: It has been most truly observed by the Court, that it is your Lordship's Part to make good your Plea, and it ought not to be expected that any Court should help a Person to plead to its Jurisdiction: But because it should not be pretended that an Advantage was taken against the Prisoner for a Defect in Point of Form, or that any thing was insisted on which should have the least Appearance of a Hardship, and that we may proceed in the most clear and unexceptionable Manner that can be, I must beg leave to observe to your Lordship and the Court, how far this Matter which my Lord Preston has insisted on, has been debated and determined in another Place.

L. C. J. Holt. So; on, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, upon the eleventh of November 1689, my Lord Preston did make some Claim in the House of Lords that he was a Peer of the Realm. The House of Lords demanding of him upon what he founded his Pretence; he said he claimed by Letters Patent from the late King James, which passed the Great Seal before the Time of the Vote of Abdication. The Lords required that those Letters should be produced, which being done, and my Lord Preston insisting upon his Claim to be a Peer of England, the Lords thought fit that Day to commit my Lord Preston to the Custody of the Black Rod. The next Day being the twelfth of November, upon solemn Debate of the Validity of these Letters Patents, and consulting with the Judges then present, the Lords, namine contradicente, did adjudge and declare those Letters Patents to be void and null: And by another Order of the same Date, they did order Mr. Attorney General to prosecute my Lord Preston in the King's Bench for a High Misdemeanor, in presuming to claim Peerage by those Letters Patents. And by a Third, it was ordered, that the Letters Patents should remain in Custody of the Clerk of the Parliament. Thus you see, my Lord, this Matter hath already a solemn Determination in a Court which had the most proper Conscience and Jurisdiction of Claims in this Nature. And they having pronounced their Judgment, I did not think it would have been urged again in this Place. I thought it proper to mention these Things, to shew how it comes to pass that my Lord Preston has not his Letters Patents to produce, and to satisfy every Man that there is no Hardship put upon my Lord Preston, by trying him here, when he ought to be tried by another Judicature. The Lords have given Judgment against these Letters Patents, and have ordered that they shall remain in Custody of the Clerk of the Parliament, and my Lord Preston is not a Stranger to these Transactions; and therefore if my Lord's Counsel had been of Opinion he could have made any use of them, they would have inform'd him he must have taken another Course to have got them, and could not expect this Court should make an Order for him, contrary to the Order of the House of Lords, to take the Letters Patents out of the Hands of the Clerk of the Parliament, and this, to help him to a Plea against their own Jurisdiction. I omitted one thing, that upon the 27th of the same Month of November, upon my Lord Preston's humble Submission and Petition, his Lordship was discharged of his Imprisonment, and the House of Lords were pleased to remit the Order given to Mr. Attorney, for prosecuting him in the King's Bench for the Misdemeanor: So that I cannot but wonder to hear of this Claim of Peerage after that Submission. But there is nothing offered to the Court by my Lord that the Court can take any legal Notice of. If my Lord will plead any thing to the Jurisdiction of the Court, he ought to have his Plea in Form, and be ready with his Proofs to make it good.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord Preston, upon this last Order of the House of Lords, has disclaimed any Right of Peerage when he made his Petition, otherwise he had not been discharged.

L. Preston. My Lord, I beg leave—

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Besides, my Lord, what my Lord Preston offers is a Matter of Record, as all Letters Patents are; and though out of his Hands, he might have had Recourse to the Record of the Enrolment.

L. Preston. For that, my Lord, I must humbly beg of your Lordships a little Time to put myself in a Capacity to plead it in Form. If you will over-rule it, I can say nothing to it; I offer it with all the Modesty and Respect imaginable.

L. C. J. Holt. It shall do your Lordship no Prejudice, my Lord: God forbid but that you should make use of all Advantages that you can invent for your Defence! But, my Lord, we must tell you, what you have offered is nothing that we can take any Notice of, unless you had your Patent to produce; and we cannot give your Lordship Time to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court.

L. Preston. Then if your Lordships are pleased to over-rule this Matter, I submit; but I hope you will give me leave to make all the just Defence I can make for myself. Does your Lordship over-rule me in it?

L. C. J. Holt. I suppose we are all of the same Opinion; if not, I suppose they will declare their Minds.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That which has been said by Mr. Solicitor, was only that you and all the World may be satisfied, that there is nothing of Hardship put upon you. But the Court, if this had not been said, yet could take no Notice of what you say, unless it were pleaded, and pleaded in legal Form. But if the Matter be as the King's Counsel have represented it, That this Patent you now pretend to have, hath already had its Determination in a proper Place; this Court, which is an inferior Court to that of the Lords in Parliament, cannot intermeddle with it. We cannot help you, nor can we set up what was condemned there. So that you can entertain no Hope or Expectation of our doing any thing for you in this Matter, or any Relief or Help by such a Plea.

* L. C. Baron. My Lord Preston, you may remember Sir Robert Atkins. (I am sure some of us that were there present do) that you did decline further insisting upon this Matter in the House of Lords; and thereupon you had that great Favour from the House shewn you, as the King's Counsel have opened.

L. Preston. I did decline it, 'tis true, my Lord: When they had declared it a Misdemeanor, I made my Application to the Court, and therein declared I was sorry for having misdeemeaned myself.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. If your Lordships please, we will read the very Orders of the House of Lords, to satisfy my Lord Preston, that we put no Hardship upon him.

L. Preston. If there be any thing of Hardship upon me in this Case, it is because I think I have a Right to insist upon this Matter, and cannot have an Occasion or Power to have that which I would make my Defence by.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordship shall have a fair Trial, if you will please to put yourself in a Condition to be tried, by pleading to the Indictment.

Mr. Bar. Lechmere. The Lords in Parliament have disclaimed you for being a Peer, and we cannot make you one.

L. Preston. My Lord, I hope your Lordships will put no hard Thing upon me, but give me Leave and your Lordships Help to make my Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. You shall, by the Grace of God, have all the Liberty you can desire to make your Defence; but you must first plead.

L. Preston. Since your Lordships are pleased to over-rule me in this Case, I shall say no more of it. I did not intend to offer any thing that might be an Offence to the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. As I told your Lordship before, so I assure you now again, it shall do you no Prejudice.

L. Preston. Then, if your Lordship please, since the Language is different in which the Indictment is written, from that in which it was read, and some Things may be of different Signification in both Languages, I desire the Indictment may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it in Latin.

L. Preston. I have one Thing to beg of your Lordship before it be read.

L. C. J. Holt. What is it you desire, my Lord?

L. Preston. My Lord, I humbly desire, because I cannot retain all the Contents in my Memory, that my Solicitor may have Leave to stand by me.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Do you all join in this Desire? For if you should each of you severally have it read a great many Times over, they that take Notes in Short-hand may take a Copy of it, as it is read, and a Copy is not to be allowed.

L. C. J. Holt. If we find they desire to be troublesome, we can over-rule them.

L. Preston. I would be guilty of nothing that may give the Court Offence, nor offer any thing that should take up the Time of the Court unnecessarily.

L. C. J. Holt. If they would have it read in Latin, let it be read.

L. Preston. If it be troublesome to the Court, I waive it, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. No, we do not think it troublesome.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton, and Mr. Elliot, do you desire to have it read again?

Ashton, Elliot. We all join with my Lord, and desire it may be read in Latin.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it. [Which was done.]

Cl. of Arr. Juratores pro Domino Rege & Domina Regina, super Sacramentum suum presentant quod—& contra Formam Statuti in eo Casu editi & provisi.

L. Preston. My Lord, I am sorry I have taken up so much of your Time; I thought the Difference of Language might have made some Mistake, which I thought would be of Advantage to me in my Trial: And for the same Reason, I humbly request you will please to order me a Copy of the Indictment.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, That we cannot do; it hath been frequently demanded upon these Occasions, but always denied. I have always known it denied.

L. Preston. Your Lordship will give me leave to say, what your Lordship must needs know much better than I: There is a Statute in the 46th of Ed. III. that doth order a Copy of any Record to any Prisoner, or other Person, if he demand it: And it has been granted, as I am informed, in other Cases, particularly in the Case of Colonel Sidney.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord; it was denied in Colonel Sidney's Case. L. Preston. If I mistake, I beg your Lordship's Pardon: It is a Reasonable late Law made for the Reversal of Mr. Cornish's Attainder. The Parliament do there say, that it was not a legal Trial, because he had not a Copy of the Indictment, and Time given him to prepare for his Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. Truly, my Lord, I do not know how that Matter stands: That Reversal of Mr. Cornish's Attainder is but a private Act of Parliament. I never saw it, nor heard it read, nor can we take Notice of it. But your Lordship is to be tried by the same Methods of Law that all Persons that have gone before you have always been. It has always been the Course, that the Prisoner should not have a Copy of his Indictment: Colonel Sidney had it not; and I remember, in the Case of Sir Henry Vane, in the Year 1662, he demanded a Copy of the Indictment, and it was denied him; and it has been constantly denied ever since in such Cases.

L. Preston. I humbly desire to know, whether it was not granted in the Case of my Lord Russell?

L. C. J. Holt. No, indeed, my Lord; my Lord Russell had it not; I can take it upon me to say that, for I know all the Proceedings in that Cause.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. No, my Lord; never any Man had it, in all my Experience.

L. C. J. Holt. Some of us that are here were of Counsel for my Lord Russell at that Time; and we did not advise him to demand a Copy of the Indictment, for we knew he could not have it by Law.

L. Preston. I am very tender of taking up your Lordships Time unnecessarily, but it stands me upon to do all I can to defend myself; may not I have my Counsel heard to that Point? Because, if it be a Point of Law, though your Lordships are of Counsel for the Prisoner, yet I beg that I may have my Counsel heard to argue it.

L. C. J. Holt. To what Point would you have your Counsel heard?

L. Preston. To that Point, whether I may not have a Copy of my Indictment, according to the 46th of Edward the Third. That is the Point I would have my Counsel heard to.

L. C. J. Holt. There is no such Statute as your Lordship mentions, that gives the Prisoner a Copy of his Indictment.

Mr. Jones. If your Lordship please to hear me for my Lord Preston—

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, Mr. Jones, you are mistaken in this Matter: If my Lord himself will shew that there is any such Statute, we will consider of it; and if it be a Matter that requires Debate, we may assign my Lord Counsel to argue it; but till then Counsel are not to be heard. My Lord Preston, if your Lordship can shew us that Statute, pray do.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire none, if it be not so.

L. C. J. Holt. I have heard a Discourse concerning such a Statute, but I could never find it.

L. Preston. I suppose my Solicitor is here with it; there is such a Statute, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Court over-ruled it in the Case of Sir Henry Vane.

L. C. J. Holt. And so it was, I remember, in another Case; and in none of the Trials that have been since King Charles the Second came in, was ever a Copy given, that I know or heard of.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, this Statute that my Lord Preston mentions, 46 of Ed. III. is printed at large in the Preface to my Lord Coke's Third Report; and has been insisted upon in several Cases in the King's Bench, where the Prisoner has desired a Copy of his Indictment; but a Copy has been always denied; and this Statute has been taken to extend only to Records which may be Evidence for the Subject.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. 'Twas always ruled, that it did not extend to this Matter.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, 'tis a Misconstruction of that Statute, that your Lordship thinks that it gives the Prisoner a Copy of his Indictment: For that Statute says, that all Persons shall be free to make use of the publick Records, and take Copies of them, because oftentimes the Records are Evidences of Men's Estates, and their Titles.

L. Preston. My Lord, an Indictment, I suppose, is a Record?

L. C. J. Holt. But not such a Record as is within the Intent of that Statute.

L. Preston. My Lord, I am tender of taking up your Lordships Time; but since all that is dear to me is at Stake, I desire to this Point I may be heard by Counsel.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, I am satisfied you have had Counsel with you; I have heard, a great many. Does any one of them tell you, that this has been done? If ever any one of them will come and shew us when it has been done, you say something; but I dare say none of them will, or can. Mr. Jones, there, is as like as any body; but I believe he will not say it ever was done.

L. Preston. My Lord, I cannot say my Counsel has told me so, but I have read such a Statute myself; for it stands me upon it, and I believe there is such a Statute, and it will be produced before your Lordships. If your Lordships will insist upon not allowing me a Copy, I desire I may be heard to it by my Counsel; for I take it to be a Point of Law, with humble Submission to your Lordships.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we must not hear Counsel to debate plain Points that have no manner of Question in them: It has been always disallowed; and 'tis a settled Point at Law, and as plain as any whatsoever, that no Copy of an Indictment ought to be allowed to a Prisoner in Felony or Treason.

L. Preston. My Lord, there is a Statute that says, it shall be allowed to all Persons to have Copies of Records, as well for as against the King; and certainly the Indictment is a Record, and a Record of great Consequence to me at this Time; and though my Counsel has not told me when it was done, yet those that I have advised with do say, that the Statute is express.

L. C. Baron. If any doubtful Words be in such a Statute, yet the constant Practice must expound it; and since it has been so often denied, nay always, the Law is now settled, that it is not within the Meaning of that Statute.

L. C. J. Holt. We must go in the Way of our Predecessors; we received the Law from them, and must not contradict the received Practice of the the Judges in all Ages, nor alter the Determinations that have been made in all Cases of the like Nature.

L. Preston. I hope your Lordships intend, and I don't question it, that my Trial should be a legal Trial. If there be such a Statute that gives me a Copy of the Indictment, and the Court deny it me, I am not legally tried.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. If you please to name the Statute, my Lord, it shall be read to you; but you are mistaken if you think there is any thing in that Statute that will do your Lordship Service in this Point.

L. C. J. Holt. See the 46th of Ed. III. Read it.

L. Preston. Here is a Copy of the Record in Court.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is not printed, but it is mentioned in the Preface to my Lord Coke's third Report, and is mentioned no where but there that I know of; but whether there were any such Statute or no, Non constat; for it is not printed. But if it be a Statute, it does not meddle with Things of this Nature, such as Indictments; for you must consider, my Lord, yours is not a Case different from all other Cases of like Nature as to this; but it is the Case of all Men that are tried as you are to be. And if all People were to have Copies of their Indictments to make Exceptions out of them before they plead, instead of Days of Goal Delivery, the whole Year would not be sufficient, but would be spent before they could be brought to their Trial.

L. Preston. My Lord, I am to defend myself as I can by Law, and not to consider what other People's Cases are. It is my particular Case now; what the Case may be as to any other hereafter, or what the general Consequence may be, is not to be considered; but if there be any thing that is legal, that can give me an Advantage in making my Defence, I know your Lordships are too just to hinder me from taking Advantage of it.

L. C. Baron. My Lord, it is no new Thing to demand it; it has been frequently demanded, but it has been always over-ruled.

L. Preston. My Lord, it is now desired, and a Reason is given you that perhaps was not given before: There is such a Law. My Lord Chief Justice says well, it is not printed, but it is a Record, and there is a Copy of that Record in Court. I desired there should be, I am sure.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a Copy of any Record of an Act of Parliament, it shall be read, if it be proved.

L. Preston. Nay, we offer nothing if we don't prove it; but there is such a Record, and the Solicitor is ready to attest it. Pray swear Mr. Whitaker.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Swear him.

Cl. of Arr. You shall true Answer make to all such Questions as shall be demanded of you by the Court. So help you God. Is this a true Copy?

Mr. Whitaker. It is a true Copy.

L. C. J. Holt. Where did you examine it?

Mr. Whitaker. My Lord, it is a true Copy of the Record, I examined it at Mr. Petty's Office in the Tower.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Upon what Number Roll is it?

Mr. Whitaker. There is the Number Roll and all upon the Book.

Clerk Reads. Item pria les Communs que come recorde & queconque chose en la Court le Roy de raison devoient demurer illeques par perpetual evidence & aide de tous partie a ycelly & de tous ceux a queux en nul manner illz atteignent quant, mestier leur fuit. Et ja de nouvel refusent en la Court nostre dit Seigneur de serche ou evidence encontre le Roy ou disadavantage de luy. Que pleasse os deiner per estatute que Serche & Exemplification soit faitz as toutz Gentz de queconque Recorde que les touche en aucun manner auxy bien de ce que chiet encontre le Roy come autres Gentz. Le Roy le voet.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is only Copies of Records that they shall have for Evidence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, your Lordship hears by this Record, you may as well pray that an Exemplification be made of this Indictment as a Copy; for so the Words of this Act run; it is only meant of those Records that were to be given in Evidence. But this Indictment that you would have a Copy of, is not now to be given in Evidence, nor to be exemplified, and so it does not reach your Case.

L. Preston. My Lord, this Indictment is a Record, and a Record against me, and I think it is given in Evidence against me.

Mr. J. Eyres. No, my Lord, it is no Evidence, but an Accusation; it is no Proof at all.

L. Preston. It is always sworn unto.

Mr. J. Eyres. The Witnesses are sworn that testify the Matter of it to the Grand Jury, but the Indictment itself is no Evidence.

L. C. J. Holt. Suppose a Statute be doubtful, as truly I do not take this to be, we are to expound the Statute as it has been expounded in all Ages. It was never thought by any Judges in any Reign, that this Statute did entitle a Prisoner to have a Copy of his Indictment, but always held the contrary.

L. Preston. Will your Lordship be pleased then to allow me Counsel to be heard to it?

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, not Counsel in a plain Case: If the Court apprehend there is any Matter that may be debateable, or whereupon a Doubt may be made, we may assign Counsel, and shall; but never in a plain Case, where there is no Manner of Question.

L. Preston. My Lord, here is a Doubt in this Case.

L. C. Baron. But, my Lord, it's not the Doubt of the Prisoner, but the Doubt of the Court, that will occasion the assigning Counsel.

L. Preston. But the Prisoner may offer his Doubt to the Court, and your Lordships are so just, that you will take Care that the Doubt may be legally resolved.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, it is our Duty to see Justice and Right done, and God willing, it shall be.

L. Preston. And I am bound in Duty to myself, in such a Case, to insist upon all Advantages I can have by Law.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, no body blames you, though your Lordship do urge Things that are unnecessary, or improper; and we shall take Care that it shall not tend to your Lordship's Prejudice. We consider the Condition you are in; you stand at the Bar for your Life; you shall have all the fair and just Dealings that can be; and the Court, as in Duty bound, will see that you have no Wrong done you.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Preston, for this Thing that you now mention, in all Ages, in all our Books, it is the same Thing, and has been in all Men's Cases that have been for their Lives, denied; and this Statute that you bring is quite of another Intent: For it is said, the Records shall remain in Court for perpetual Evidence, and the aiding of all Persons to whom they shall belong. My Lord, this is none of your Case; for God knows, you expect no Aid from this Indictment: But this is meant of all Copies that concern the Estates of Men, that they may have Recourse to their Records, to make out their Evidences to their Estates, or to have them exemplified under the Seal of the Court for Evidence: But to have a Copy of an Indictment, thereby to be enabled to consult with Counsel how to make Exceptions to that Indictment, is a Thing that has been denied in all Ages, by all the Judges that ever were. If any one can say to the contrary, it were something; but shall we now admit Counsel to debate a Thing that has been in all Ages denied, and never admitted so much as once? That cannot be expected from us.

L. Preston. The Act says, That it shall be all Records that shall be an Aid to any Person that shall desire it. Here is no Distinction made of what Kind the Records are to be. If it be for the Aid of any Person, it ought to be granted, and I may be aided by this Record, if I have a Copy of it; and I think it is hard, when I am so much concerned in this Record, that I cannot be help'd to it by this Law.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Constant Experience, has gone according to what we say.

L. Preston. If that be Law, and it has not been demanded, then they are not entituled to have the Benefit of it: But now I demand it, sure it is good Law.

L. C. J. Holt. It is no Question a good Law, but not applicable to your Lordship's Case: I suppose we are all of the same Opinion; if any think otherwise, I desire they would speak.

L. Preston. My Lord, I submit to the Court, but then I desire one Thing. You know my Life, my Fortune, my Reputation, my Posterity, and all are at a Stake, and all that is dear to me must fall with me if I miscarry: Therefore I take Leave to represent, that I have had very short Notice of my Trial. I do assure you, I have not had above six or seven Days Notice: I hope you will not refuse me a little longer Time before I come to my Trial; and I have had no Copy of the Jury yet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If my Lord please to plead to the Indictment, that will be Time enough to move afterwards, and till Issue is joined, it cannot properly be moved for.

L. C. J. Holt. It is not proper to desire Time yet, till you have put yourself upon your Trial, by pleading to the Indictment.

L. Preston. It was granted in Colonel Sidney's Case: He had eight or ten Days granted him after he had pleaded; and in the Act for the Reversal of Mr. Cornish's Attainder, it is given as one Cause for the Reversal, that he had not Time to prepare for his Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, seven Days is very fair Notice. Your Lordship knew when the Sessions would be, and your Lordship might reasonably expect, that you should be tried here: I think truly you have had very fair Notice.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, we have had seven Days Notice of our Trial, 'tis true. This Day Sevensnight, at Night, we had Notice we were to be tried as this Day; but three of the seven, we had not the Liberty of seeing any Friend, or Counsel, or any body, not till Tuesday Night, and that we got with great Application, and great Charge, to get an Order for Counsel to come to us: So that though we had seven Days Notice, yet we have had but three Days in all to consult with any body; and we never have had a Copy of our Jury till this Minute.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We see the Nature of the Thing, and I am sorry that I must say, it is fit that we should take Notice of it. Perhaps the Thing that you are accused of is not true; but if it be true, you see what it is, that there are Letters and Papers preparing for a Design to set all the Kingdom in Confusion. Men that will venture upon such sort of Things, are not to condemn the Law, if it be a little hard upon them; for 'tis the common Preservation that is principally aimed at in Prosecutions of this Nature; and if this Accusation be true, 'tis but just and reasonable, that all Speed should be used to enquire into, and prevent it; and as it falls out in this Case, it is not in our Power to do it. This Sessions is set before this Business is known, and this is an Act done in this County, and therefore the Sessions is the proper Place for the Trial; and so you have the same sort of Proceedings that all other Criminals have, which are very many, though I hope not many of so high a Nature. Seven Days Notice you have had, you acknowledge; if my Lords please we will indulge you as far as we can, and give you Time for your Trial till Tomorrow, but you must plead presently.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we debate the Time of your Trial too early; for you must put yourself upon your Trial first, by pleading.

L. Preston. My Lord, I hope I shall always carry myself as becomes me towards the Court; but I do not really think that you have any Trials that are of so great Concernment, and this sure is a fit Time for me to offer it; for it may be I have a great many Witnesses in the Country, and at Distance from this Place, and one another.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we cannot dispute with you concerning your Trial, till you have pleaded. I know not what you will say to it, for aught I know there may be no Occasion for a Trial. I cannot tell what you will plead; your Lordship must answer to the Indictment before we can enter into the Debate of this Matter.

L. Preston. Will your Lordship give me Leave to move it afterwards?

L. C. J. Holt. You may offer any thing then concerning your Trial: If you can shew any Reason to defer it, it will be proper to do it then.

L. Preston. Truly, my Lord, I think one Reason why my Trial ought to be put off is, because I have Privilege of excepting against so many of my Jury; but if I have not Time to look into the Pannel; I shall lose that Privilege.

L. C. J. Holt. We are not come to that yet, you are to plead now.

L. Preston. Then your Lordships are pleased to over-rule my Claim of Peersage.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we are of Opinion you ought to plead to this Indictment.

Clerk of Arr. What says your Lordship, are you guilty of this High-Treason, or not guilty?

L. Preston.

L. Preston. Not guilty.

Clerk of Arr. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

L. Preston. By God and my Country.

Clerk of Arr. God send you a good Deliverance.

John Ashton. What sayest thou? Art thou guilty of the same High Treason, or not guilty?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I have only this to observe, besides what my Lord Preston has offered: As to the Business of the Act of Parliament, your Lordships have been pleased to over-rule that Plea; but, my Lord, I am told, that if an Indictment be faulty, but even in a Letter, we cannot be found guilty upon that Indictment. Now, if we never have a Copy of that Indictment, how shall we know whether there be any such Fault in it? Your Lordships, who are our Counsel, I suppose have never seen the Indictment, and suppose there be twenty Faults, we have not the Advantage of them, by not having a Copy; and how shall we come to have any Advantage, if neither your Lordships, who are our Counsel, nor we ourselves, can see them? It may turn upon that.

L. C. J. Holt. But we will see it when you come upon your Trial.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That is a Mis-information, for it may be such a Letter as is not material, and it may be such as is material; as I suppose, your Name being Ashton, the A should be left out, it would then be a Question, what there would be to charge you.

Mr. Ashton. We know that it has been so in several Instances.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It may be such an Omission that may make it no Crime, but we must not presently conclude that it is so; but you have heard it read, and so have we; if there had been any such Letter mistaken, it would have been taken Notice of.

Mr. Ashton. As to the reading, there may in the reading of the Indictment be many Words not nicely observed. I suppose the Indictment be right; I say it is possible it may, or it may not; but if your Lordship never see it, who are our Counsel by Law, nor you will allow us Counsel to look into it, if there be forty Faults in it, we have no Advantage of it.

L. C. J. Holt. We must not allow you Counsel to pick Holes in the Indictment; that never was done. If you assign any Reason, we may assign you Counsel to debate any Matter of Law that may arise; but never was Counsel allowed to find out Faults in an Indictment. When you come to your Trial we shall try you upon your Indictment, and if there be any thing considerable, you are to suppose we shall observe it for your Advantage.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, we never had a Copy of the Pannel of our Jury. I pray we may have it.

L. C. J. Holt. That you cannot have till you have pleaded.

L. C. Baron. Mr. Ashton, we have over-ruled my Lord Preston about a Copy of the Indictment: Do you think we shall grant it you, when we have denied it him?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I desire we may have a Copy of the Pannel.

L. C. J. Holt. You must plead first.

Clerk of Arr. Are you guilty of the High Treason, or not guilty?

Mr. Ashton. Not guilty.

Clerk of Arr. How will you be tried?

Mr. Ashton. By God and my Country.

Clerk of Arr. God send you a good Deliverance.

Edmund Elliot. How say you, Are you guilty of the same High Treason, or not guilty?

Mr. Elliot. Not guilty.

Clerk of Arr. How will you be tried?

Mr. Elliot. By God and my Country.

Clerk of Arr. God send you a good Deliverance.

L. Preston. My Lord, I hope now it may be Time to pray that my Trial may be deferred.

L. C. J. Holt. Why would you have it deferred?

L. Preston. Because of the Distance of my Witnesses, and other Things that would be necessary for me to have to prepare me for my Defence; and besides, we have not had a Copy of the Pannel of our Jury, and the Reason of the Law does order, that because it gives us Liberty to except against them, and that we cannot know how to do, unless we inform ourselves of the Men; and therefore I beg that I may have a Copy of the Pannel.

L. C. J. Holt. As for having a Copy of the Pannel, the Court grants it. Let them have a Copy of the Pannel.

Clerk of Arr. Here is one ready for you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There was Direction given that there should be one ready.

Mr. Ashton. We have demanded it every Day since we had Notice of our Trial.

L. C. Baron. You could not have it till there was an Issue joined, and that could not be till you had pleaded.

L. C. J. Holt. And as to the putting off your Trial, I know not to what Time to put it off.

L. Preston. My Lord, I am willing to have this Matter tried as soon as possible, for it cannot but be uneasy to me to lie under these Accusations; but some of my Witnesses live in the Country, at a remote Distance. If it may be, next Term, my Lord, or the next Sessions; for, if I have a Copy of the Pannel To-Night, and am to be tried To-Morrow Morning, how can I provide for my Defence? I cannot be prepared to except against the Jury, and I am sure you will be tender, and consider the Case of a Man, whose Life and Fortune are concerned in this Business.

L. C. J. Holt. To put it off till the next Term, is to remove it out of this Court; that we cannot do; and to put it off till after the Term, will be too long a Time.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We cannot sit here after Monday, because the Term begins on Tuesday.

L. Preston. My Lord, this Term is always a short Term, and if I be tried To-Morrow, it is trying me without giving me Time for my Defence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, there has been all the Care taken that the Nature of the Thing was capable of, to prevent any Complaint of this kind. Order was given, that my Lord and these Gentlemen should have Notice as early as was possible. As soon as ever Mr. Attorney-General had had an Opportunity of looking into the Evidence, Notice was given them, that they should be tried, and that this was the Day appointed for their Trial. But there shall be no contending in a Matter of this Nature for a Day. If it be desired, and the Court please to put it off till To-Morrow, we are contented; but there can be no Reason to put it off for a longer Time. As there is always a Tenderness to be used, and I know will be, and as far as I am concerned, always shall be towards Persons in these Circumstances; so there is a Regard to be had towards the Government and the Publick. I am sure, if the Accusation that is against these Gentlemen is true, the Government is highly concerned that this Matter should come to a speedy Examination, and that Persons that enter into such Designs be brought to Judgment. The Charge in the Indictment is of such a Nature as draws very great Consequences along with it; it concerns no less than the Life of the King and Queen, the Destruction of the Fleet of the Kingdom, and the Invasion of the Realm by the Forces of a Declared Enemy. These are the Things that the Prisoners are charged with; and certainly there ought to be no Delay in the searching into such Matters as these. They have had a Week's Notice of Trial already, and for many Days of that Week, at least they have had as many Counsel to assist them as they desired, and all the Solicitors that they had a Mind to, have had free Access to them; so that they have wanted no Opportunity to prepare for their Trial, that Men in their Circumstances could have. As to what has been said with relation to the Jury, the Law indulges them in the Number of their peremptory Challenges, without being put to shew Cause, and the Court hath granted, them at the very Instant of their Pleading, a Copy of the Pannel; and there is a reasonable Time between this and To-Morrow for their making such Enquiry into the Jury as is justifiable, and fit to be made: But if by Time to look into the Jury, it be meant, that there may be a Time for tampering, that I am sure your Tenderness of the Government will not permit; you will take Care as much that no such thing be done, as you will that they should not be surprized. If your Lordships are pleased that the Trial be put off till To-Morrow, we will be ready To-Morrow to attend it.

L. Preston. My Lord, 'tis a very hard Presumption that Mr. Solicitor makes of our asking a Copy of the Pannel, that it is with a Design to tamper with the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I did not say so, but I said till To-Morrow was Time enough to make a justifiable Enquiry.

L. Preston. But if I be to be tried To-Morrow, I am willing to be tried To-Day, for I am as ready now as I shall be then.

L. C. J. Holt. It may be so, and as ready as you will be after the Term; but I know not what your Lordship means by expressing such Repentment, that because you can't have what Time allowed you would, therefore you will have none, but be tried now.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. You may have Time enough to prepare yourself as to the Jury, certainly, between this and To-Morrow.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord, we that are for the King, have given these Gentlemen Notice long enough to be prepared, if we should try them now; for that's the Time we gave Notice for: But because we would indulge them as far as we could, we are willing that they should have till To-Morrow, and intending them that Kindness, are not ready to try them To-Day, and there can be no Pretence for them to put off their Trial any longer; for there can be no want of Evidence as to the Fact we can charge them with; for all the Evidence that we shall bring against them was taken from themselves, or the greatest Part of it.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what Time will you be ready then?

Mr. Serj. Thompson. To-Morrow Morning.

L. C. J. Holt. Then To-Morrow at Eight o'Clock you are to be tried.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Preston, do but consider you have had seven Days Notice, and To-Morrow makes eight.

L. C. J. Holt. You had Notice for this Day, this Day seven-night.

Mr. Ashton. But we have had only three Days Time to consult with our Counsel, though we desired we might have our Counsel come to us that Day.

Mr. Sol. Gen. They were told, they must apply themselves to the King for that at the same Time.

Mr. Ashton. We did so that Night to my Lord Sidney, then Sunday interven'd, which was no Day for Business, and we could not have our Order. On Monday we could not have it till Night; so that it was Tuesday before we could get any body to us. My Lord, it is a weighty Concern, and all such hasty Proceedings were thought very hard in the late Times, and particularly the denying Mr. Cornish Time; and 'tis one of the Reasons given in the King's Declaration for his coming here into England, the Hardships that the Law laid upon Men in their Trials, which he came to prevent.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Hardship that was upon Mr. Cornish was, that he was taken upon the Tuesday off from the Exchange, and tried before that Day seven-night, and that was hard indeed: But besides, he was taken about his Business off from the Exchange. I know not whether you were about your Business, your lawful Business, when you were taken, God of Heaven knows that. And pray consider, here is a Matter of very great Consequence on the one Side, and on the other: For if Men be plotting against the Government, to give them Time to carry on their Plots will be mischievous on that Side.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, till that be legally proved before your Lordships, that is but a Supposition.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That will lie upon them to prove.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, we are to suppose you not guilty, 'till you are proved guilty.

Mr. Ashton. Then, my Lord, the Law says, we may except against many Persons; what is the End of the giving us a Copy of the Pannel? 'Tis not to be presumed we can do it by their Faces; for what can I say to the Face of one I never saw? We must enquire concerning the Men, and that is a Work of Time; for some of these Gentlemen, I presume, live eight or ten Miles out of Town. Is it possible for me before To-Morrow Morning eight o'Clock to send to thirty-five Men to enquire after them?

L. C. J. Holt. No, nor is it intended you should.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Nay, if you intend to send to the Jury-men, we have no Reason to give you Time.

Mr. Ashton. I mean to enquire after the Men, their Lives, what Religion they are of, what sort of Men they are.

L. C. J. Holt. I suppose they are all Protestants of the Church of England; but suppose they are all Strangers to you, and yet good lawful Men of the County, and there be no Difference between you and them, then they are fit to try you.

Mr. Ashton. 'Tis true, my Lord, but if I have Liberty to except against thirty-five, I ought to know something of them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Yes, and inform yourself as well as you can of them, but not to send to them, that is not to be permitted.

L. Preston. There is another Point to enquire of them, and that is, whether they be Freeholders or not.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. We have neither your Lordship's Affidavit, nor the Oath of any other Person, only an Allegation.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you must expect your Trial To-morrow Morning; we cannot put it off, we are limited in Time, the Sessions can hold no longer than Monday, because of the Term.

Mr. Ashton. Then will your Lordship please to put it off till Monday?

L. C. J. Holt. No, we shall not have Time to do it, it may be a long Trial.

L. Preston. I protest to your Lordships, I cannot be ready To-morrow to make that Defence I desire, and design to make, and which I may make, if your Lordships give me a longer Day.

Clerk of Arr. Here is a Copy of the Pannel for your Lordship.

[It was delivered to the Lord Preston, who gave it to his Solicitor.]

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, we shall not have Time to enquire into the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, we are not bound to do this, but you have it as soon as you have pleaded.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, it will take up five or six Hours in writing of it out, and we must each have a Copy.

Mr. Soll. Gen. They are all joined in one Indictment, and have joint Counsel, and joint Solicitors, as we are informed.

Mr. Ashton. Then I hope you will allow us Liberty till Monday for our Trial.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Court cannot allow longer Time; the Court here can sit no longer than Monday, and here must needs be a great deal of Business to do of the ordinary Business of the Sessions, and when that Day comes, perhaps it will not serve to go through with the Trial, and then it must be adjourned till after the Term, and in the mean while some are in hopes the King of France may come and determine the Matter.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, my Lord, let no Suggestion against us prepossess the Opinion of the Court before we be tried.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I don't suggest any thing, but 'tis in the Indictment alleged against you, and that you are to be tried upon, and if such Things be there suggested, as we would give you all reasonable Time for your Defence, so we must take Care that the Government sustain no Hurt by Delays.

L. C. J. Holt. It is observed by the King's Counsel, that they are Things of very great Consequence, and therefore they press for the Trial.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I cannot believe but that you will be as ready To-morrow, as you can be on Monday.

Mr. Ashton. The Government cannot be prejudiced by putting it off till Monday, sure.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Evidence that is to convict you, lies all on their Side that are for the King, and I cannot imagine where your Witnesses should be, unless they are in France; but you had Reason to expect your Trial, being apprehended in the Manner as you were, and to provide for it.

L. C. J. Holt. The Want of Witnesses is only a Surmise, and a Pretence; for there is no Oath of any Witnesses that they want, or who they are: Indeed, if we had Oath made that they wanted material Witnesses, and to material Points for their Defence, that might be Occasion for our further Consideration; but shall we put off a Trial upon a bare Suggestion of the Want of Witnesses? Sure that was never done.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Name any one particular Man that is your Witness, and the particular Thing that he can prove; for if any of your Witnesses do know any thing of this Kind, it must be Particulars, and not Generals; if you will not name them, it is plain it is only a Pretence you insist upon for Delay.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I insist upon the Point of the Jury, that we have not Time to look after them.

L. C. J. Holt. Then that of the Witnesses is waved.

L. Preston. 'Twas I that desired Time for my Witnesses.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But you neither name them, nor bring us any Oath about them, or of any Thing they can prove for you.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray, don't spend the Time of the Court, nor your own Time unnecessarily, you must prepare for your Trial To-morrow.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, there is not a Person in Court, I believe, but will think it hard that we are so streightened in Time.

L. C. J. Holt. The Time you have had Notice to prepare for your Trial is sufficient.

Mr. Ashton. Mr. Cornish's Case has been complained of as a very hard Case in this very Respect, and we would hope, the King that now is, came to reform such Abuses.

L. C. J. Holt. You have been already told, wherein the Hardship of that Case lay. I am sure yours is not like it; but take Notice we will be sitting here punctually at Eight.

L. Preston. Will your Lordship please to let us have our Counsel come to us, and our Friends?

L. C. J. Holt. Yes sure, you shall have all that is necessary for your Defence that we can allow you, but unnecessary Delays must be avoided.

[Then the Prisoners were taken away by the Keeper of Newgate to the Gaol.]

SABBATH, 17 January, 1690.

THIS Day, between the Hours of Eight and Nine in the Morning, the Court being sat, and those Persons who were return'd upon the Jury were called over twice, and their Appearances recorded; then the Prisoners were brought to the Bar.

Clerk of Arr. You the Prisoners at the Bar, these Men that you shall hear called and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord and Lady, our King and Queen, and you, upon Trial of your several Lives and Deaths; if therefore you, or any of you, will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

VOL. IV.

L. Preston. My Lord, I beg your Lordship will inform me, whether, if I have any thing to offer to the Court, it is proper before the Jury be impannelled, or after.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I don't know what your Lordship has to offer; I think you have nothing to offer why the Jury should not be sworn, for now your Lordship has put yourself upon your Trial, and are going to proceed in that Trial, and the Jury are going to be sworn: If you have any thing to offer, as to them, you may challenge them.

L. Preston. Truly, my Lord, I have something to offer, but it is only what I did humbly offer Yesterday, and that is, That my Warning was so short, that I am not prepared for my Trial. We had not above three or four Days wherein we might consult about it, all the former Time we have been kept close Prisoners; we are now brought here to be tried, without having Time to look into the Pannel of our Jury. The Pannel we had not till Yesterday, and I humbly beg, that I may have some Time to prepare for my Defence.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, this is that which you insisted upon Yesterday. Your Lordship said you wanted Witnesses, and your Lordship did not then mention what Witnesses you wanted, nor was any Oath made of any one that you wanted; and therefore the Court over-ruled you, and wished you to prepare for your Trial, and would not put it off: For if it should not be To-day, but should be put off till another Time, it must be the putting of it off till another Sessions; for we are streightened with it in point of Time, for the Session can last no longer than Monday, and you have had convenient Notice.

L. Preston. Truly, my Lord, I think it is hard, when my Life and Fortune, and all are concerned, that I should be hurried on to a Trial, only because the Court is streightened in point of Time; and yet that is the only Reason that I can perceive why such Hasten is made. I desire a little more Time to prepare myself, and I think it very hard I should be denied; I must submit it to your Lordships: If you will not allow me Time, I cannot make my Defence as I would.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, as to the Shortness of the Time, that is no Objection; you have had convenient Notice; as much Notice as the Law requires, and as much Time as without particular Cause shewn, hath here at any Time been given in such a Case. If indeed there had been any particular Reason offered for putting off the Trial, and you had made it appear by Oath, the Court possibly might have put off the Trial; but because your Lordship only suggested you wanted a Witness, naming neither Person, nor Place, or Matter such Witness should prove, they are of Opinion no Cause appears for such Delay of your Trial.

L. Preston. My Lord, I assure you I am not prepared for my Trial.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, the Court over-ruled this Matter Yesterday, it cannot be put off.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, I would humbly offer your Lordship one Thing before the Jury be called and sworn. By the Law, these Gentlemen at the Bar have the Privilege to challenge peremptorily to the Number of Thirty-five; which is so great a Number, that if each of them severally take Advantage of it (as they may do by Law, and God forbid they should be denied any Advantage the Law gives them) it will be next to impossible to have a sufficient Number of Jurors appear so as that we may proceed in the Trial.

L. Preston. Truly, my Lord, we don't hear what Mr. Solicitor says.

L. C. J. Holt. Do you not? Then I'll tell you what he says, when he has done: Go on, Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, all that I would know of them is, whether they intend to take the Advantage that the Law gives them, of single and particular Challenges; for then they must be tried severally; or whether they will be content that the same Persons that are challenged by any one, shall stand challenged for all three. I leave it to them to take their own Choice; let them do what they please in it.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, Mr. Solicitor tells you what the Law is, that every one of you may challenge five and thirty without Cause; and if the Court should proceed to try you all together, and every one of you should challenge five and thirty, perhaps a sufficient Number will be wanting to try you: The Number challenged will then amount to 105 in all. If so be you agree in your Challenges, that what one challenges shall be challenged by the other two, then the Court will go on, and try you all together; otherwise they will be forced to sever you; therefore he desires to know whether you will join or sever in your Challenges.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Take your own Choice, Gentlemen; and do what you think best.

L. Preston. My Lord, the Matter of Challenging is so great an Advantage to a Man upon his Life, that for my Part I must insist upon that which the Law gives me, to challenge as many for myself as I think fit, to the Number that the Law allows me.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston says he will, as 'tis fit he should, take all Advantages he can: What says Mr. Ashton to it?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I expect the same Advantage.

L. C. J. Holt. You must have it; it is not proposed to preclude you from any Advantage that the Law allows you: If you insist upon that Advantage, you must have it, and then you must be tried severally.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then, my Lord, since they are pleased to declare they will sever in their Challenges, we must desire to sever them in their Trial, and to begin with the Trial of my Lord Preston.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I desire the Liberty to be by when my Lord is tried.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no, that is not to be permitted.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. If you had joined in your Challenges, then you had been tried all together.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That Advantage you lose by severing in your Challenges; you lose the Assistance of each other at your Trial.

L. C. J. Holt. That is the Consequence; but do as you please; set them by.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It may be, they do not so well weigh the Consequence, therefore call them again. Gentlemen, do you consider the Consequence of your not joining in your Challenges? You must not be by, if my Lord Preston be tried by himself, but must withdraw, and thereby you will lose the Advantage of helping one another.

Mr. Elliot. My Lord, I desire to be tried alone.

Mr. Ashton. And so do I, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then, Captain Richardson, take them away.

[Afterwards the Court was informed that Mr. Elliot desired to be tried with my Lord Preston, and thereupon they were called again.]

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen, do you desire to be tried alone, or with my Lord Preston?

Mr. Elliot. My Lord, if you please, I desire to be tried with my Lord.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then we will try my Lord Preston by himself.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Does Mr. Ashton desire it too?

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lord, I desire to be tried by myself.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Then we will try my Lord Preston by himself.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Elliot, the King's Counsel do not think fit to try you with my Lord Preston, without Mr. Ashton; and unless you will all join, you must all be tried severally.

Mr. Elliot. I can only answer for myself.

Mr. Ashton. I am for being tried alone.

L. C. J. Holt. Then my Lord Preston must be tried alone.

[The other two were carried back to Newgate, and the Lord Preston was bid by the Clerk to look to his Challenges.]

Clerk of Arr. John Cane, Esq. Challenged.

William Jacomb, Esq.

Mr. Jacomb. My Lord, I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Holt. How long have you not been a Freeholder?

Mr. Jacomb. Near to four Months.

L. C. J. Holt. Give him his Oath.

Have you no Freehold in the County of Middlesex in your own Right, nor in the Right of your Wife? — Mr. Jacomb. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you must go on to the next.

Clerk of Arr. Joseph Dawson, Esq.

Mr. Dawson. My Lord, I am an antient Man, and not fit to serve upon the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, now you are here, for this Time serve; we will excuse you hereafter.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, we challenge him for the King.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire to know when any one is challenged for the King, whether they must not shew Cause.

L. C. J. Holt. By and by, if there be not enough, they shall shew Cause.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. You shall have all that the Law allows you certainly, my Lord.

Clerk of Arr. Thomas Austin, Esq. Not appeared.

Richard Paget, Esq.

L. Preston. Has this Gentleman any Freehold?

Mr. Paget. Yes, my Lord, I have in the County of Middlesex.

L. Preston. I do not except against him.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, we challenge him for the King.

L. Preston. My Lord, I humbly desire they may shew their Cause.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, Cause is not to be shewn by the King's Counsel till all the Pannel be gone through; and then, if there be not twelve left to try, then they are bound to shew Cause; that is the Law.

L. Preston. My Lord, it is a thing of a very tender Concern to me; I desire to know, if it be not usual that they should assign the Cause, when they challenge any for the King: For if it be not according to Law, it may be a Prejudice to me; and I desire I may have Counsel heard to that Point.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, shall we assign Counsel to dispute Matters not disputable? There is not any more clear Case in all our Law than that: if your Lordship please, you shall have a Book to read, that the King is not bound to shew Cause till the Pannel is gone through.

L. Preston. Then I don't insist upon it.

Clerk of Arr. Walter Bridal, Esq. Challenged.

Clerk of Arr. Richard Marsh, Esq.

Mr. Marsh. My Lord, I desire to be excused; I am not fit to serve upon a Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Why? — Mr. Marsh. I am thick of Hearing.

L. C. J. Holt. Methinks you hear me very well.

Mr. Marsh. Truly, my Lord, I do not hear well.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, you may spare him if there be enough.

L. Preston. My Lord, I do not challenge him; I desire he may be sworn.

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made as usual. Clerk of Arr. Sir Richard Grahme, Hold up your Hand — [Which he did.] — Gentlemen, you that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of Sir Richard Grahme, late of the Parish St. Anne within the Liberty of Westminster, Baronet, together with John Ashton, &c. — prout in the Indictment mutatis mutandis — and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to enquire, whether he be Guilty of this Felony and High Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find that he is Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the Time of the Felony and High Treason committed, or at any Time since. If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty. If you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Knapp. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, This is an Indictment of High Treason against my Lord Preston, who is indicted by the Name of Sir Richard Grahme, Baronet, and stands now Prisoner before you at the Bar; and the Indictment sets forth, that the Prisoner, together with one John Ashton and Edmund Elliot, as false Traitors against our Sovereign Lord and Lady, King William and Queen Mary, not weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, the 29th of December, in the second Year of their now Majesties Reign, at the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in this County of Middlesex, did conspire, consult and imagine, to depose their Majesties from the Throne and Government of these Kingdoms, and to bring the King and Queen to final Death and Destruction, and levy War within this Kingdom, and procure an Invasion to be made here; and that to bring their Treasons to pass, they did prepare and compose, and cause to be prepared and composed divers treasonable Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions in Writings which were to inform the French King and his Subjects, and other Enemies of the King and Queen, of the Number, Force and Condition of their Majesties Ships, and how some of them were Mann'd, and the Names of several of the Commanders of them, and how the Castles and Forts

Fort of Portsmouth, South-Sea, and Gosport, within this Kingdom were fortified, and how they might be seized and surprised by the King's Enemies; as also to inform them of the Time, Places, Ways and Means how they might invade this Kingdom, depose their Majesties, and fight with their Ships against their Majesties Ships, and cause and procure great Forces to be raised against the King and Queen, and send Ships to plague the City of London, and War and Rebellion within the Kingdom to procure; and that they did knowingly and secretly prepare and conceal two several Bills of Exchange for the Payment of Money to the King's Enemies, and got these Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes and Memorandums, into their Custody; and afterwards, the 30th of December, for the Sum of one hundred Pounds, by them, or some of them paid, they did hire a Ship to carry them and the said Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions, into Parts beyond the Seas, to, and among their Majesties Enemies; and did also prepare a Boat, which was to carry them to the Ship, and accordingly they went into the Boat, and went on Board the Ship with the Bills of Exchange, and Papers aforesaid; and being on Board they set Sail, and made away towards France with those Bills of Exchange and Papers, with Intention to disperse them, and to perfect their said Treasons. And the Indictment further sets forth, that there was, and is a War between our King and Queen and the French King, and the People of those Parts, under his Dominions, who are Enemies of the King and Queen. The Prisoner, together with those other two named before, as false Traitors, did adhere to the Enemies of the King and Queen; and to bring about this Treason, they did procure such Bills of Exchange, Letters, Notes, Memorandums and Instructions, and did hire such Ship and Boat to carry them and those Papers into France; and did go on Board the said Ship, and sailed away for France, with Intention to aid and assist the King's Enemies in Counsel and Intelligence, by those Papers, and Bills of Exchange, as I before opened unto you; and this is laid to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of their Majesties, their Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. To this Indictment, Gentlemen, the Prisoner pleaded, he is not guilty; and for his Trial hath put himself upon his Country, which you are. If we prove him guilty, it is your Duty to find him so.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords and Gentlemen of the Jury, the Indictment hath been opened to you at large, and I do not doubt but you have observed it: It consists of two Parts, which are formed upon two several Branches of the Statute of the 25th of Edward III. The one is for compassing and imagining the Deposing and Destruction of the King and Queen; the other for aiding and assisting the King and Queen's Enemies.

Treason, Gentlemen, consists in the Imagination of the Heart; but because that Imagination of the Heart can be discovered no other way but by some open Act, therefore the Law doth require, that some Overt-Act, manifesting that Intention and Imagination, be assigned and proved. I doubt not but you have observed that there are several Overt-Acts of both these kinds of Treason, assigned in this Indictment.

Gentlemen, the general Design of the Conspiracy (as will appear by the Evidence) was this: The King and Queen were to be deposed, and this was to be effected by a French Army, and a French Fleet.

It will be easily granted, that nothing more dreadful can enter into the Imagination of an Englishman, than the Destruction of our Fleet, and the Conquest of the Kingdom by the Arms of France.

But yet it will be part of the Evidence that we shall offer to you, that the Prisoners, and others of the Conspirators seem to be of another Mind; for amongst the Papers which were taken with the Prisoners, you will see one, which is filed, The Result of a Conference, wherein they pretend to shew the Possibility of Restoring King James by the Power of the French King, and yet to preserve the Protestant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom. They themselves went no farther than to think it possible; and I believe it will be hard to persuade any other Englishman, that it is possible, unless one Instance could be given, that the French King ever employed his Arms for setting up any body but himself, his own Religion, and his own Government. I never heard that he did pretend to form any Part of his Glories upon the Virtue of Moderation, or Self-denial. And there can hardly be imagined a greater Instance of Self-denial, than for the French King, after he had destroyed the Dutch and English Fleets, and subdued our Forces at Land, not to make use of his Success, so as to add these three Kingdoms to his Conquests, and possess himself of the uncontested Dominion of the Sea for ever, but only to entitle him, at so great Hazard and Expence, to become a Mediator between King James and the People of England, and, by his Mediation, to establish the Protestant Religion, and the Liberties of the People: And yet, as absurd as this seems, you will find this to be the Result of one of their Conferences. I did never think it was the Part of any who were of Counsel for the King in Cases of this Nature, to endeavour to aggravate the Crime of the Prisoners, by going about to put false Colours upon Evidence, or to give it more than its due Weight; and therefore I shall be sure to forbear any thing of that Nature. But I think it my Duty to give some short Account of the Nature and Course of the Evidence to be produced to you; which consisting of several Sorts, it will be in some sort necessary to open it, that you may the more clearly apprehend it, and with more Ease make your Observations upon it.

Gentlemen, we shall produce in Evidence, as well living Witnesses, as Papers and Writings, which by a strange kind of Providence were taken upon my Lord Preston, and the other two Persons named in the Indictment, when they were apprehended; and therein this Design that I have opened to you, will be made evident beyond all Contradiction.

As to the living Witnesses, the Course of the Evidence will be this. One Nicholas Pratt is the Owner of a Smack, called the Thomas and Elizabeth, he does usually entrust his Wife, Jane Pratt, with the hiring out of this Smack; William Pasely is Master of the Vessel, and has of late been made a Part-Owner, to protect him from being press'd; for it is a Privilege that the Owners of the Vessels claim, not to be press'd.

Some Time since (the Witnesses will tell you the precise Time) this Jane Pratt was sent for to one Mr. Burdet's House in the City, where she met with Mr. Ashton, who desired to know, whether she could undertake to convey him and some others, with Safety into France. She said, she did not doubt but she could do so; and thereupon Mr. Ashton told her, that he and his Friends were Merchants, and Traders, and that they should make great Advantage, to the Value of a Thousand Pounds at least, if they could be there quickly. Their Discourse went no farther at that Time; but Mrs. Pratt was appointed by Mr. Ashton to bring the Master of the Vessel along with her, for he had a Mind to discourse himself with the Master, and they were to meet at the Wonder-Tavern in Ludgate-street; and because there should be no Mistake about the Meeting, Mr. Ashton gave the Woman a Note of Direction in Writing, ready to be produced.

Accordingly, by the 29th of December, Mrs. Pratt and the Master, came to the Wonder-Tavern, where Mr. Ashton met with them, and there they treated of the Price to be given for the hiring of this Vessel to carry them to France, and I think 150 Guineas was the Sum then insisted upon, but no Bargain was made at this Time; but there was a new Appointment to meet the next Day, which was the 30th of December, at Mr. Burdet's House.

The next Day, when she and the Master came thither, they found there together Ashton and Elliot, the two other Persons named in the Indictment, and there this Matter was treated of with great Secrecy in Mrs. Burdet's Bed-Chamber.

And they came to an Agreement that 100*l.* should be the Sum to be paid to Mrs. Pratt for conveying into France, Ashton and Elliot, and two other Persons. So the Contract was originally made for others besides Mr. Ashton and Elliot, and the Money was actually deposited by Mr. Ashton and Elliot in Mrs. Burdet's Hands, and a Six-pence was broken; one Half of which was delivered to Mrs. Burdet to keep, the other Half Mr. Ashton was to take along with him, and when the Master had safely landed them in France, Mr. Ashton was to deliver his Half of the Six-pence to the Master; which being brought to Mrs. Burdet, either by him or Mrs. Pratt, upon the joining of the two Pieces together, the Master was entituled to receive the hundred Pounds.

The next Appointment was to meet at one Mr. Rigby's House in Covent-Garden, and that was to be on the one and thirtieth of December, when the Voyage was to be begun: And the Tide not serving to go through Bridge till late, the Appointment was to meet the later. When they, Mrs. Pratt and the Master, came there, they found only Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot; but before that Time Care was taken to provide a Sculler at Surrey-Stairs, to be ready to carry them on Board the Smack, and the Waterman was appointed to stay in a little Ale-house thereabouts, to be ready when he should be called.

About ten o'Clock at Night four Persons came down together, and went into this Sculler with the Master of the Smack, and made what Haste they could through Bridge till they came to Pickle-Herring Stairs, over-against the Tower, where the Smack lay, and there went aboard the Master and these four Persons, my Lord Preston, a Servant of my Lord Preston's, Mr. Ashton, and Mr. Elliot.

The Smack set Sail immediately after they were on Board, and their Haste made them carry away the Waterman's Coat, which he had lent them whilst they were in the Sculler, and that Accident was the Occasion of discovering who the Waterman was that carried them from Surrey Stairs.

After they were on Board the Smack, they were possessed with great Fear of being surprized. They knew the Nature of the Business they were about, and the Danger they were in, if they should be discovered; and therefore when they were to pass by the George Frigate, a Man of War that lay in the River, they desired the Master to hide them, which he did, by putting them under the Quarter-Hatches, a Place where they could not stand or sit, but must lie along on the Ballast. When they were passed by the George Frigate, they quitted that Place; but when they were near the Block-House at Graves, they grew apprehensive, and they desired to be hid a second Time, which was accordingly done.

And they continued to lie in that Place till they were taken; and it was a happy Thing they did so. The Place was such, that they had not any Possibility of throwing away their Letters and Papers, though they had made Preparation for it in Case of any Accident, having tied them together, and fix'd a Piece of Lead to them, that so if they saw themselves in Danger of being taken, they might easily sink the Packet: But being so close shut up in this Place, that they could not execute their Purpose, the Papers were taken, and will be offered to you in Evidence.

Gentlemen, Captain Billop, by the Order of a noble Lord, now present, was directed to use his utmost Diligence to seize some dangerous Persons, of whose Design of going beyond Sea for some very ill Ends, an Intimation had been given. He got ready a Pinnace well Mann'd, and went in Pursuit of them down the River; and both as he went and return'd, he took Care to search suspected Vessels. When he came to this, he demanded of the Master what Number of Men he had on Board, pretending he came to press Men: The Master told him he had but three, and for those he had a Protection. But the Captain said he must be better satisfied, and must search the Vessel; and in the Search he found these four Persons lying concealed in this secret Place, under the Quarter-Hatches.

As they were taken out one after another, one of the Seamen observ'd Mr. Ashton to take up a Bundle of Papers from off the Ballast, and put it in his Bosom; and near the Place where the Papers lay, he took up two Seals, which after proved to be my Lord Preston's Seals when he was Secretary. Captain Billop being inform'd of this by that Seaman, he put his Hand into Mr. Ashton's Bosom, and took away from him the Bundle of Papers with the Lead fix'd to it.

When they were put on Board the Captain's Pinnace, they all pressed him much, that he would let them go on Shore at Gravesend, pretending want of Refreshment, they not having eaten, and the Night having been cold; but he did not think that proper nor safe, but told them, they should go on Board the George Frigate, and refresh themselves there.

When they came on Board the George Frigate, all the three Gentlemen, and my Lord Preston in particular, were very earnest with Captain Billop to dispose of the Bundle of Papers, mixing extraordinary Promises with great Compliments.

Not

Not prevailing there, when they were returned to the Pinnacle, they renewed their Solicitations, and one of them told him, it would be easy to remove all Suspicion, by fixing the Lead to some other Papers of little Signification, which were found in my Lord Preston's Pocket, which he might produce, and they would without Difficulty pass for the Papers that were taken.

But the Captain was too just to comply with this Proposal. When they found he was not to be moved, you will find from the Witnesses, that their Promises were turned into Threats, and they used another Sort of Language.

When they were brought to Whitehall Stairs, upon their Landing they gave Money to the Master and the Seamen, desiring them to say, they were hired to go for Flanders and not for France.

Gentlemen, These Things which I have open'd, carry a strong Presumption of Guilt, for Englishmen, especially one of that Quality of my Lord Preston, to go into the Country of an Enemy, without any manner of Pass-port, and in such a Manner as they could not expect but to be seized as Spies, unless they were assured, that their Character was so well known there, that they should be look'd upon, not as Persons coming to get Intelligence, but to give it; unless they were well assured of a good Reception when they came there.

But there is no Occasion to leave any Thing to Conjecture in this Case; what is contained in these Papers makes the Design of the Voyage beyond Dispute. I think, Gentlemen, after you have heard the Evidence, you will be very well satisfied, that my Lord Preston, and the other two who stand indicted, were equally concerned in the Papers; they were all alike earnest to preserve them from being seen; they all solicited for the disposing of them, and promised Rewards if they might prevail.

Gentlemen, These Papers are of various Natures.

One I mentioned before, is intitled, The Result of a Conference between several Lords and Gentlemen, both Tories and Whigs; in which it was undertaken to prove the Possibility and Methods of Restoring King James by a French Power, without endangering the Protestant Religion, and the Civil Administration, according to the Laws of this Kingdom.

Another contains Heads for a Declaration to be prepared, in order to be published when the French have had Success at Sea, and are landing; and that is filled with such Pretences as they thought most specious, and most likely to amuse and delude the People.

There is another Sort of these Papers which consists of Letters. These Letters are directed in false Names, and are not subscribed; and it is not to be imagined it should be otherwise. Yet, Gentlemen, (though that is not the present Business) the Hands of the Writers of these Letters are very well known, and the Subject-Matter of them will easily reveal to you for whom they were intended; for though these Letters are most of them written under divers Cants, some under the Colour of Trade, some of them under the Colour of a Law-suit for the Redeeming of a Mortgage, others under the Notion of a Match, and a Settlement to be made upon that Match, yet the real Business is so plain, that you need but hear them read, to see through the Disguise.

Though they begin generally in the Style of Merchants writing to one another, or the like, yet towards the End of the Letters, you will observe Expressions of Duty and Reverence (Terms which do not usually pass in Correspondence between Persons of that Sort) sufficient to shew that somewhat else was intended to be covered in what went before.

Gentlemen, It will appear to you, that some of the Writers of these Letters were of the Number of those who were secured the last Summer, when the French Fleet was upon our Coasts, and you will observe they complain, that by reason of that Restraint the Design was very much hindered, though they have endeavoured to redeem that Loss of Time since their Discharge, and have carried on the Business with more Vigour than ever.

In short, the Design of these Letters is to importune the setting out of the French Fleet with all possible Expedition: They say they must not suffer such a fit Season to be spent unprofitably: That the best Time is between this and the first of March to come to a good Market; and if they come not before the tenth of March, all will be lost. In another of their Letters they say, If the Suit be well solicited and managed, it may come to a final Hearing before the End of Easter Term.

They complain, that there are several indiscreet Letters came from St. Germans, that turn to the Prejudice of the Design. Those Letters are not enough disguised to deceive the People here, but speak too plainly what is to be expected from themselves, and from the French. You will take Notice, that the Letters which all you will hear, are all Bills with high Characters of the Bearer; for which Reason they write in such general Terms, because the Bearer was entrusted with the whole. Some of the Letters say, no Particulars are, or need be expressed, because he will inform them of every thing: Others, that they could not write so much as he could say; and that nothing was wanting, but to allow him a full and fit Season to give an Account of all the Business; and that they entirely depend upon his Account of them, and their Condition.

And, Gentlemen, in one of the Letters the Bearer is filed a Lord; and to whom can that be applied unless to the Prisoner at the Bar?

In another Letter, when they speak of sending the Copper and the Linnen (the Goods pretended for carrying on the Trade) it is added, And what the Meaning of that is, they must refer to the Bearer, who was able to give them a particular Account.

I have mentioned so much of the Papers only that you might have a general Notion of them; that so when you hear them read, you may more readily make your Observations. I assure you, I have been as careful as I could, not to exceed the Truth in opening any Part of the Evidence: But it is your Part to see whether what I have opened be made out in Proof.

There is another Paper that gives an Account of their Majesties Fleet to be sent out this Summer; and there is an Observation at the End of it, that it was hoped it may be out in March. But you will find by other Papers (and particularly by one of my Lord's own Hand-writing) that he was of another Mind, that the Fleet would not be out before June.

Gentlemen, the last Sort of Papers which I will mention to you, are some Memorandums and Notes written by my Lord Preston, wherein he gives an Account of several Things of great Moment; which, as his Memory served him, are put together without Connexion or Method, being only to remind him of them when he should have Occasion to mention them.

He therein gives an Account of the Number and Strength of the English Fleet; how they are Manned, and who are the principal Officers and Commanders, and in what Time they will be out.

He likewise gives an Account of the Number and State of the Dutch Fleet, and how that is to be divided and disposed of.

And with relation to the French Fleet, there is a particular Memorandum, That they must be out at farthest in April, that they must be out so as to separate the Dutch Fleet and ours; that they must be sure to look in at Spithead as they come by, and secure what Ships should be in that Harbour from joining the rest.

There is also a Hint given of those that were most likely to come in to them: And there is Advice in what Place their Fleet should fight ours. They must not come so high as Beachy, where they fought the last Year, but rather choose to fight in the Chops of the Channel.

There is an Account of Portsmouth, how fortified and garrison'd, that it has but five hundred Men; that Gosport had nothing but Palliades about it, and South-Sea-Castle very weak.

There are Memorandums of other Heads proper for a Declaration.

There are the Names of several Persons, some of them with particular Characters, and some without; and amongst the rest, there is the Character given of the Clergy of the City of London, that they are the worst of all others.

Gentlemen, we shall proceed to the Evidence, and first call the living Witnesses, and then read the Papers; and when you have heard what the one can say, and what the other contain, we must leave it to your Consideration, and submit all to the Direction of the Court.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray swear Mrs. Pratt, Jane Pratt.

[Who was sworn with seven or eight more.]

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Mrs. Pratt, pray will you tell us what you know concerning the hiring of a Vessel, and whither it was to go, and by whom it was hired, and for what? Pray tell your whole Knowledge in this Matter.

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdet, may it please your Lordship, sent for me to his House, to hire a Vessel to go for France, and asked me, if I could carry them secure. I told them I could let them have a Smack that would carry them; and, if it please you, my Lord, we met several Times at his House, and at last there was Mr. Ashton there, and Mr. Ashton appointed to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgate-Hill; I think they call it the Wonder Tavern.

L. C. J. Holt. Mistress, pray begin again, and speak out.

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdet sent for me to hire my Smack to go for France, and they asked me if I thought it would carry them secure. I told them yes, I thought it would; and I came several Times about it to Mr. Burdet's House. The Smack was not then come to the Tower, as it did afterwards; and then after they sent for Mr. Ashton, and he met me at Mr. Burdet's, and meeting at Mr. Burdet's, he gave me a Note, to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgate-Hill, and there Ashton met, but Mr. Burdet did not come.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was with Ashton, when you met at the Dog Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. None but a Man of his, as Mr. Ashton said: There we sat about an Hour and an half and did nothing. At length we went away, and appointed to meet at Mr. Burdet's House the next Day at seven or eight o'Clock, and there we met, and the Bargain was made.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Bargain?

Mrs. Pratt. I ask'd 150 l. and they told me that was too much. Says Ashton, I will give you Four-score; says Mr. Burdet, pray encourage them, offer them 100 l. Thereupon he did offer 100 l. and we agreed for 100 l.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Day was that, can you remember?

Mrs. Pratt. We met on the Monday, and the Tuesday we agreed.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What Money was paid?

Mrs. Pratt. Ninety-three Guineas and Sixpence.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was by when the Bargain was made?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Elliot was along with them, Mrs. Burdet, and the Master of the Vessel, at the Agreement.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What is the Master's Name?

Mrs. Pratt. His Name is Pafeley; and there was Six-pence broken, and Mr. Ashton took one of the Six-pences, and Mr. Burdet ordered him to give his Wife the other, and so he did; and when the Money was paid, Mr. Ashton brought in a Paper wrapp'd up, and said, we should see it told out, and he told it out there, and it was ninety-three Guineas and the Six-pence.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Who did they tell you they were to carry into France?

Mrs. Pratt. Truly, my Lord, they said three, that was all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What followed then? Did they give you any Note where you were to come for them?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton bid Mr. Elliot write a Note where they should come; it was at Mr. Rigby's in Covent Garden, at the Seven Stars, and there we were to meet at eleven o'Clock at Night; and when we came there, Mr. Ashton was within, and went out and fetched in some Company. Mr. Elliot came, and two other Gentlemen that I never saw in my Life before.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Mistress, you speak of the breaking of a Six-pence: what was to be done with that?

Mrs. Pratt. My Master was to bring the half of the Sixpence that Mr. Ashton had, to Mrs. Burdet, and then we were to have the 100 l.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had Mrs. Burdet the other Piece?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, Mr. Ashton had one Half, and she had t'other.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Was there any Provision carried on board this Smack?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, there was a Hamper and a Trunk, which were fetched from Mr. Burdet's House; my Man, John Fisher, carried the Trunk, and a Porter carried the Hamper, and I took Care to see it put in the Vessel.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When you came to Covent-Garden that Night, what Discourse had you? and what Enquiries were there made, and by whom?

Mrs. Pratt. Mrs. Ashton comes in, and she said Mr. Ashton was her Husband, and said there was some News from Court; of having Papers in a Hat, and that they had chosen some Lord or other: Something it was, I remember, I can't tell what; but says one Gentleman that stood by, and said, I was chosen the last Year, that signifies nothing; and another said, I missed it; it is only a Christmas Gambol, it signifies little.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What further Discourse had they?

Mrs. Pratt. Mrs. Ashton said she was afraid they should have no very good Luck, for the Cock crowed.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there any Discourse what Advantage they should get by going, or you by carrying of them?

Mrs. Pratt. They said they would help us to the earning of 1000*l.* before Lady-day, if they went this Time safe.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Mistress, recollect yourself; were they to go to Flanders? or where?

Mrs. Pratt. They were to go for France; they were not to go for Flanders.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Time of Night did you depart from Mr. Rigby's?—Mrs. Pratt. About Eleven o'Clock.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. How did they go away from Mr. Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. I did not go with them: Mrs. Ashton kept me; and gave me a Leg of a Goose, and some Drink.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Do you know any thing further?

Mrs. Pratt. No; I think I have told you all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were you hired for France or Flanders; I ask you once again?

Mrs. Pratt. We were hired for France; any Place there where we could touch.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there any particular Port mentioned?

L. C. J. Holt. If you have done with her, will my Lord ask her any Question?

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire she may be ask'd, whether she ever saw me before?—Mrs. Pratt. No, never, my Lord, but in the Tower.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But she says, when they were at Rigby's, there came in two Gentlemen with Mr. Elliot that Night.

L. Preston. I desire to know of her whether I was one of them two?

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord, she does not say your Lordship was one of them.

Mrs. Pratt. No, my Lord, you were not one of them.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then set up Pafeley. Pafeley, what do you know about hiring of this Smack to go for France? I think you are Master of the Smack called the Thomas and Elizabeth, are you not?—Mr. Pafeley. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then, pray, give an Account of the whole Matter.

Mr. Pafeley. The Smack was hired of the Woman, and not of me; and when I came up to London, she told me she had got a Voyage over to France, if I was minded to go; I said, yes; and she appointed me to go along with her to this Mistress what do you call um's House, this Mrs. Burdet; and when she came to this House, there was no body within but Mr. Ashton: Presently after came in Mr. Elliot. After they came in they told us the Things were not ready yet, but they would be ready presently to carry on Board. When these Things were ready, John Fisher carried the Trunk down, and the Porter carried the Hamper, and I went along with them to Billingsgate, and carried them on Board; and when I carried them on Board I went to Billingsgate again, and so we went along to this Mr. Burdet's House; and so when we came up to Burdet's House, Ashton and Elliot were not there present; but we had been there but a little Time ere they came in; and then they came and said to my Owner and me, You shall see the Money told: It was all in Gold but one Six-pence; there was Ninety-three Guineas: And after the Money was told, there was a Sixpence that was broken in half, and the Guineas he rolled up in a Paper, and gave them to Mrs. Burdet, and bid her lay them up; and he gave her one half of the Six-pence, and kept the other half himself; and when I brought that other half that he had, or my Owner, then she was to give the Money to her or me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray what Room of the House was this in at Mr. Burdet's?

Pafeley. It was on the left Hand going in.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was it a Bed-chamber?—Mr. Pafeley. Yes, 'twas.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Time of Night was it, pray?

Pafeley. About Eight o'Clock.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Discourse had you with them there, pray?

Pafeley. They asked me, if I thought they might get well over? I told them yes, I believed they might.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did they tell you what Part of France they were to go to?

Pafeley. No, they named no Place, but any Part in France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Well, go on, tell us what they said further.

Pafeley. So, Sir, they gave us Direction to meet them at the Seven Stars in the little Piazza's in Covent-Garden. When we came there it was Eleven o'Clock at Night, and they were not in the House when we came in, except 'twere Mr. Ashton; but presently after Ashton and Elliot came in, and they sat down; and so in came two Gentlemen more, but what they were, or who they were, I don't know; and they discoursed about Papers shaking in a Hat, and said they should have no good Luck, for the Cock crowed: And after this Elliot and Ashton came out of the House, and called me to go with them; and after we were gone out, Mr. Ashton leaves Elliot, and went away from him, and Elliot bid me go along with him; says he, Come, Master, come along with me. He did not name any Place whither they were to go; but it happened to be Surry-Stairs, and going down, he calls in at the Corner-House, which is an Alehouse, for the Waterman, and bid me go before to the Waterman; and when we came thither the Waterman steps into his Boat, and after him; and when I was in the Boat I went into the Stern, and by that time I was seated in the Stern, there came down four Men; but I never saw my Lord and his Man before they came into the Wherry.

L. C. J. Holt. Who came in the Wherry?

Pafeley. There were all those four, Mr. Ashton, Mr. Elliot, my Lord, and his Man.

L. C. J. Holt. Where was this, do you say?

Pafeley. At Surry-Stairs, there the Boat was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was the Prisoner at the Bar one of them?

Pafeley. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what did you do then?

Pafeley. After we were seated in the Boat at Surry-Stairs, we put off, and went down through Bridge, and going through Bridge we came on Board, the Vessel riding just against the Tower almost, and we went all on Board; and when we came on Board, my Men were all asleep, and being asleep, I call'd them out of the Cabin to hale up the Anchor; and there being very little Wind stirring, we could not get very far, but came just below the Half-way Tree, and then we stopp'd, and I order'd them to drop the Anchor for fear of the Vessels in the River; and the next Morning about Eight o'Clock we weigh'd our Anchor again, and went on till we came near the George Man of War, and there they all of them hid.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who?

Pafeley. All of them; my Lord. There was Ashton, and Elliot, and my Lord Preston, and his Man.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. In what Place did they hide?

Pafeley. In the Quarter-Hatches, under the Hatches where we lie.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did they desire you to hide them?

Pafeley. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What did they say?

Pafeley. They said, that if there should come any Boat on Board to press, I should shew them my Protection; and so there came no Boat then.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How big is this Place they hid in?

Pafeley. 'Tis in the Quarter under, near the Cabin-Hatches.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I ask you what kind of Place it is?

Pafeley. They cannot sit upright, nor stand upright, but they are fain to lie along, or lean upon their Elbows.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Well, go on, what happen'd afterwards?

Pafeley. After that we were pass'd the Man of War, they came up and sat in the Cabin, where we used to eat our Victuals; and when we came to Gravesend, over-against the Black-house, they would go down again and hide, and did so till we pass'd the Black-house, and then they were for coming up again; and then I saw a Boat coming about Tilbury, which made towards us, and thereupon they duck'd down again, and the Hatches were laid down upon them, and there they remained till they were taken.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Where were they taken?

Pafeley. They were taken between the North Black-House and the Little—

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But I mean in what Part of the Ship?

Pafeley. They were taken in that little Place where they were hid.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were the Hatches shut down upon them?

Pafeley. They were.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How long had they been hid before they were taken?

Pafeley. A quarter of an Hour, or thereabouts.

Sir W. W. Did they desire to be hid there?

Pafeley. Yes, they did; and they were hid there.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Now tell us, after such Time as they were taken, what they said, and what you observed.

Pafeley. After they were taken they said nothing to me; my Lord, nor none of them did speak to me after the Boat had taken them.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. But what happened after they were taken?

Pafeley. After they were taken, Captain Billop ordered them to go into the Boat, and us with them; and when we came to Whitehall-Stairs, one of them said to me, Master, when you come upon your Examination, say you were bound for Flanders, and not for France.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Which was that that said so?

Pafeley. 'Twas Elliot, and he gave me Half-a-Crown to bear my Expences that Night, and said he would remember to take Care of us afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did they give any Money to the Seamen?

Pafeley. Yes, Ashton gave one of my Men Half-a-Crown, and bid him say he was bound for Flanders, and not for France; and my Lord's Man gave my other Man Half-a-Crown.

L. C. J. Holt. Was my Lord Preston by when that Money was given?

Pafeley. My Lord was upon the Bridge, but not near me.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. If my Lord have any Questions to ask him, we have done with him for the present.

L. Preston. No, my Lord, I have no Questions to ask him.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Was my Lord Preston by when the Direction was given you, to say you were to go to Flanders, and not to France?

Pafeley. I say, he was upon the Bridge, but was not near me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Discourse had you on Board with any of them?

Pafeley. Very little. They ask'd me if I thought they should go clear, and I told them, Yes, I thought they might.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Clear of what?

Pafeley. Clear of the Vessel's searching. They examin'd me that Night I was at the Seven Stars, if I knew the way of the Swing, on the Back of the Channel, to go clear of the Town; I told them I did not know the Way by the Back of the Sands by Margaret's, but the Swing would not keep them clear of the Town.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there a Note written whither you were to come?

Pafeley. Yes, there was a Note written to meet them at the Seven Stars in the Little Piazza's.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Whereabouts in Burdet's House?

Pafeley. That is in Queen-Street, in the City.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. You, Pafeley, Did the Waterman that brought them on Board leave two Coats behind him?

Pafeley. Yes, the Waterman did leave two Coats; and I put them into my Chest; and afterwards they broke open my Chest, and took them out, and brought them to my Lord Chief Justice's.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we will next produce that Waterman. Set up Charles Betsworth.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Come, will you give us an Account who you carried on board a Smack, and what happened?

Betsworth. I was going over the Water from Surry-Stairs about Seven or Eight o'Clock, and a Gentleman at the Stairs called Sculler, and ask'd me if I would carry him down the River: Said I, How far? Says he, To the Tower: Said I, 'Tis against Tide, and I can't carry you down so low. He said, he would stay till the Tide turn'd: Said I, If I be out of my Bed so long, I deserve to be well paid for it; if you will give me Half-a-Crown, I'll carry you down. Says he, I'll give it you. So then I came ashore, and he ask'd me what my Name was: I told him, Charles Betsworth: Says he, Will you be sure to stay for us? Yes, said I, if you will be sure to come. If I be not at the Stairs, I'll be at that Alehouse there in the Corner. So I staid, and carried a Fare or two over the Water; and about Eleven o'Clock, as I was sitting in the House a Gentleman comes, and calls Charles—and so out I went to my Boat, and took them in. There was one Man, as I suppose, in the Stern, and he that called me out followed me down; and by and bye came three more into my Boat; one of them had a whitish Cloak on, and the other a grey loose Coat, and a red Bag of the Quantity of a Peck; and so we put off, and row'd away; and just under the Temple-Wall, which was all the Words I heard from them that I can remember, says one Gentleman, When do you hear the King goes away? and another made Answer, and said, On Tuesday. So we rowed down through Bridge; and when we were through Bridge, they asked where the Vessel lay; and he that was in the Stern said, it was Southwark-Side, over-against the Tower, and bid me row over thither. And when we came just below Battle-Bridge, that Man said, That is she that rides a-head of us. I looked, and she had a Pennant up. So they were put on board; and as soon as they were on board, she went off; and I rowed up to the Bridge, and went through Bridge, and came up as far as—and there I staid, and took my Sculls and my Staff out of my Boat; and when I took them out, I missed my Cloaths. Says I, God bless me, I have lost my Cloaths; but then I thought it was but a still Tide, and therefore I would try if I could overtake them; for I thought they could not be got far, there being little or no Wind; so I went down to the Place where the Vessel lay, and she was gone; and I enquired of several Smacks that lay there, but could hear nothing; and I rowed as low as Limchouse-Reach; and about Black-Wall and Limchouse-Reach I came up to a Smack that I supposed was she, and cried out, Ho the Smack; and they answered me, So I asked them, if I did not bring a Fare aboard that Smack awhile ago? Then they said, No. I told them, I had brought a Fare aboard some Smack that lay about Horsley-down and Pickle-Herring-Stairs, and they had got two Coats of mine, which I had forgotten; and it had a Pennant up when they went on board, but this had none; so I rowed on further, till I came as far as Barkin-Sherf; and I thought, there being so little Wind, that none could be gone beyond me, and therefore waited to see a Smack with a Pennant coming down, but I could not meet with it; and there I lay all Night in my Waistcoat, and the next Day I came back to Greenwich; and as I came along, I went on board several Vessels to enquire, because I took her for an Attendant upon a Man of War; but I could not hear of my Cloaths, till last Friday was Seven-night two Watermen came, and brought me the Cloaths I lost.

L. C. J. Then you have your Cloaths again?

Betsworth. Yes, I have.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray look upon that Gentleman there, my Lord Preston, are you sure that he was one of them that was in your Boat?

Betsworth. I can't tell that ever I saw him in my Life before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. You, Pafeley, I ask you, Was my Lord Preston one of the Gentlemen the Waterman brought on board your Smack?

Pafeley. Yes, he was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Is that the Waterman?

Pafeley. Truly, my Lord, I can't tell; but the Waterman's Coat was left on board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then let me ask you another Question, Had you a Pennant?

Pafeley. Yes, I had when I came on board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take in your Pennant?

Pafeley. Yes, I did afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Why did you take it in?

Pafeley. They asked me if there was a Pennant, and I told them Yes; and they bid me take it in.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who bid you take it in?

Pafeley. Elliot did; so we took it down.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Will my Lord ask Betsworth any Questions?

L. Preston. No, I have nothing to say to him.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did they carry on board with them, Pafeley?

Pafeley. They had nothing on board but the Trunk and Hamper, that were brought down before from Burde's House; and there was nothing brought in the Boat but only a Leather Bag.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then set up Fisher. I think his Name is John Fisher. You was one of the Seamen that did belong to the Smack, I think?

Fisher. Yes, I was.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray then tell us, who were brought thither, and what happened upon it.

Fisher. About six Hours before they came on board us, our Master came himself on board, and took me along with him; but whither I was to go then I did not know. He carried me to a House in the City, and there gave me a small Trunk to carry, and a Hamper to a Porter; and we went away with them; and he bid us at Billingsgate carry them on board, which we did.

L. C. J. Holt. When was the Trunk and Hamper brought on board?

Fisher. About Six or Seven o'Clock at Night, on Wednesday, I think.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, and what followed?

Fisher. My Lord, and Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot, and my Lord's Man, and the Master, came on board between Eleven and Twelve: There was no more came on board that I know of; but we were asleep when they came on board; and immediately our Master ordered us to hale up the Anchor. Now there was but little Wind stirring; and by that Time we were fallen down as low as the Half-way-Tree, it being still Flood, we could go no farther: So there we were ordered to stop, and we lay by till Morning; and about Eight in the Morning we weighed Anchor again; and about Nine, when we came to the George Man of War, they hid; they desired to go down into the Quarters, and we laid the Hatches upon them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What kind of Place is it that they hid in?

Fisher. They could not stand upright, nor sit upright; but they must lie, or lean upon their Elbows. So when we were got below the Ship, they came up again into the Cabin: And when we came at Graveyard near the Black-House, then they hid again till we were below the Black-House; and then we spied a Boat coming, which made them to keep below; and there they continued till Captain Billop took them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were they all four there?

Fisher. Yes, all four.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. After they were taken, what said they?

Fisher. After such Time as they were taken, and come up to White-hall Stairs, Captain Ashton gave me a Half-Crown Piece, and bid me say, they were going to Flanders, and not to France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But whither were you going?

Fisher. Truly, I did not know where we were to go, till since we came on Shore. I understood nothing till they hid; and then indeed I thought we were going to France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When did any body tell you, you were to go to France?

Fisher. Since we came on Shore.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Will my Lord ask him any Questions?

L. Preston. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then the next Witness we call is one Amonds. Pray tell us what you know of this Matter.

Amonds. May it please you, my Lord, I know nothing concerning my Master's Business; but all that I know of this Business is, That they came on board about Twelve o'Clock at Night; and I was then asleep in the Cabin, and hearing some come on board, and my Master call, I looked out, and there were three or four Gentlemen, and my Master; and he ordered us to set Sail immediately, and make our Way down as fast as we could. There was little or no Wind: So that when we came down to the Half-way-Tree, we were forced to come to an Anchor; and there we rid at Anchor till it was broad Day, when there was a brave Gale to the Westward; and by that Time we got down to Long-Reach, about Nine o'Clock we came to the George Frigate, a Man of War; and they understanding that, desired to hide these Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Holt. What Gentlemen?

Amonds. My Lord Preston, Mr. Ashton, and Mr. Elliot, and the other Gentleman that was with them.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look upon my Lord there, was he one?

Amonds. Yes, that Gentleman was one.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, go on.

Amonds. And so, Sir, after we were passed the Frigate, they came up again, and did not design to go down any more till they see some other Danger. When we came almost to Graveyard, they went down again: When we pass'd the Black-House I was at the Helm; and they were resolving to go to Dinner, and bid that Man, my Fellow, to reach them some Victuals out of the Hamper: And while he was reaching them some Victuals, I see the Pinnace coming towards us: Said I, Here is a Pinnace coming aboard: Says my Lord, and they, We must go down again and hide; and so they did go down again. We apprehended that they were coming aboard to press us, and they had no Mind to be seen. When the Pinnace came near, they waved to us in this Manner, as much as to bid us stay: So we laid the Sail by, and staid for them till they came up; and when the Captain came on board, says he, This is worth our coming on board; here are a Couple of brisk Seamen will do the King Service; I must have them, I think. Says I, I hope not so, noble Captain: Says he, Have you any thing to keep yourselves clear? Yes, says our Master. I am sorry for that, says the Captain. What is it? Says the Master, I have a Protection. Says the Captain, Let us see your Protection: So the Master pulls out his Protection, and shews it. Well, says the Captain, I must look a little further; and away he goes into the Cabin, and takes up the Hatches, where these Gentlemen were. Says the Captain, Hye, hye, who is here? Turn out, says he: But I suppose they did not make so much Haste as the Captain expected; so he called some of his Men on board; and when they came on board, my Lord came out, and the rest of the Gentlemen; and says my Lord to the Captain, I hope you will be so kind as not to take any thing from us. Says he, I'll meddle with nothing but Papers; 'tis Papers I look for; and put his hands in both his Pockets, and pulled out Papers, and put them in his own Pocket; but whether they were new or old, I can't tell: And there was a Watch likewise; but that he gave my Lord again, and said, I'll meddle with nothing but Papers. Then he searched Mr. Elliot; and Mr. Ashton was the last that came out; and there was one of the Captain's Watermen in the Cabin with him; and says he, And please you, noble Captain, that Gentleman put something in his Bosom: Says the Captain, What did you put in your Bosom, or? Nothing, says he, but my Handkerchief.

L. C. J. Holt. Who said so?

Amonds. Mr. Ashton, and shews him his Handkerchief; and afterwards the Captain put his Hand in Mr. Ashton's Bosom, and pulled it out.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What did he pull out?

Amonds. A Roll of Papers, with a Piece of Lead to it.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did you see the Lead fixed to the Papers?

Amonds. I did see it fixed to the Packthread that tied the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What sort of Place is it in which they were taken?

Amonds. They could not sit, nor stand upright in it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had you any Money given you?

Amonds. I had Half-a-Crown given me by my Lord's Man.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it gave you the Money?

Amonds.

Amonds. It was my Lord's Man; he that was on Board the Ship: He gave me Half-a-Crown in Whitehall, and said, I should say we were bound for Flanders, and not for France; but who the Half Crown came from I cannot tell, my Lord said nothing to me at all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you hear any Discourse as they came down?
Amonds. No, I did not mind any thing of Discourse; for I never came among them, unless it were at the Hour of Watching.

L. Preston. Pray did I say any thing to you at Whitehall?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, your Way is to propose your Questions to the Court, and they will ask them for you.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire to ask him, if I said any Thing to him at Whitehall.

L. C. J. Holt. What say you, Did my Lord Preston say any thing to you at Whitehall?

Amonds. No, my Lord, he never said any thing to me at all; it was his Man that gave me the Half Crown, and spoke to me.

L. C. J. Holt. Will your Lordship ask him any other Questions?

L. Preston. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then call your next Witness.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Swear Capt. Billop. [Which was done.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Come, Captain Billop, pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury, where you did apprehend my Lord Preston, and the Circumstances of what happened at their Taking.

Capt. Billop. Sir, I met with them at the upper End of the Hope.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray give us an Account, from the Beginning to the End, what passed; how you came with the Boat, and all that happened at that Time.

Capt. Billop. About two o'Clock, or between one and two, upon the last of December, my Lord Danby came to me at one of the Doors of the House of Lords, and told me his Father would speak with me; and he carried me to my Lord Lindsey's Chamber, where immediately my Lord President came, and told me there were some Persons going for France about Business of dangerous Consequence, and he desired me to use some Means to get them apprehended: I then proposed what I should have to enable me for the Undertaking. My Lord Danby said, there was such a Boat that he would procure me, and my Lord President gave me a Letter to another Person, who was to instruct me further about this Matter. My Lord Danby got the Boat ready, and some Men and Arms in it: But I thought there were not Arms enough; so I borrowed some Arms of my Lord Lucas, and about eleven o'Clock, as near as I remember, we put off from Tower-Wharf. It being very calm, I thought we should be swifter than any Vessel, and should have the Advantage of them all; and therefore run down as far as Gravesend, and I brought several Vessels by the Lee, in which Time I pressed some Barkin Men, two or three of them; and amongst them one that knew the Vessels that lie in the River, having been on Board several; and we did board divers, and took out some Men, having a Pres-Warrant; and he that I had taken of the Barkin Men, after he had passed by several Vessels, seeing this Vessel sailing, told me that was the Thomas and Elizabeth: Whereupon we made up to them, and waving towards them, they staid for us. When we came up, there was standing by the Master two lusty Sailors, and I told him I would take but one of them: He said he had a Protection; I bid him shew it me. When I was come on Board, and had looked upon his Protection, I told him I must look a little further, and went down into the Cabin, and took up the Hatches, and there I found them all four lying together.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What four?

Capt. Billop. My Lord Preston. I did not know him then, nor till afterwards.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who else was there?

Capt. Billop. Mr. Elliot was there, and Mr. Ashton, who were both my former Acquaintance; but my Lord Preston I had forgotten, till one of them called him my Lord, and I asked them what Lord it was; and they said it was my Lord Preston; so then I saluted my Lord: So we rowed up.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, Captain, tell us what happened in the Vessel before you went out of it, after you found them there?

Capt. Billop. I handed my Lord Preston up first; and after he came out of that little Place, which he was forced to creep out of on his Knees, I turned my Lord about, and told him I must search him. He said, he hoped I would not meddle with any thing; I told him I would meddle with nothing but Papers: So I put my Hand in his Pocket, and took all the Papers I could find, and put them in my own Pocket; and taking out a Watch, I delivered it to my Lord again. The next was Mr. Elliot, and I search'd him, and found nothing at all upon him. After that Ashton came up, and one of my Men told me, that Gentleman had put something in his Bosom: Whereupon I gave him a sudden Turn, his Back being towards me, and ask'd him, What was that he put in his Bosom? He told me nothing but his Handkerchief, and pluck'd his Handkerchief out; with that I clapp'd my Hand in, and got the Packet, and took it out, with the Lead fix'd to it. I have the Lead now in my Pocket.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray will you produce it, Sir? [Which he did.

Capt. Billop. This is the Lead, several of my Men saw it when 'twas fix'd to the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What did you do with the Packet?

Capt. Billop. I put it immediately into my Pocket, as soon as I had search'd Mr. Ashton further, and then commanded these Gentlemen all into my Boat, and took all the People that belonged to the Smack with me, after I had brought her to an Anchor, and left two of my Men on Board of her; and there the rid till next Day, when I sent two more of my Men to bring her up; and those two Men I order'd to search all the Parts of the Vessel, and take what they could find; and whatsoever they found, they should carry it to the Tower, to my Lord Lucas; which, I supposed, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Well, Capt. Billop, after such time as you had taken these Papers, and brought these Gentlemen into your Boat, pray what Discourse had you with them? What said they to you concerning the Papers?

Capt. Billop. It was a pretty while before we talked of any thing: The Beginning of our Talk was, I remember, they desired to go ashore at Gravesend to refresh themselves, for it was cold, and they had not eaten any thing. It was my Lord that desired it; but I begg'd his Pardon for that, and told him there was a Man of War that lay at Lorg-Reach, where, as I believed, his Lordship would be very well accommodated with any thing he wanted.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Well, what said they afterwards?

Capt. Billop. My Lord Preston, after I had saluted him, upon knowing who he was, and Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot telling him I was of their Acquaintance, he said he was glad he was fallen into the Hands of a civil Gentleman; and they said they were glad they were fallen into the Hands of an Acquaintance. I told my Lord, I hoped he should never find any thing otherwise than civil from me. My Lord was very civil to me in complimenting, and assuring me he would acknowledge my Favour and Kindness to him.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Aye, what did he say to you?

Capt. Billop. My Lord Preston told me, if ever it lay in his Power to do me Service he would, and he did not doubt but he might; and he used a great many Words and Expressions of Kindness, and his Readiness to do me Service; and amongst the rest, my Lord said once to me, if I would dispose of the Packet-----

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray speak that again.

Capt. Billop. My Lord Preston, in one of his Discourses of his Kindness in doing me Service, had this Expression, as near as I can remember, if I would dispose of the Packet

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What he would do for you, if you would dispose of the Packet?

Capt. Billop. He did not come to any particular Instance of what he would do; but he said he would serve me in any thing that lay in his Power. Mr. Elliot and Mr. Ashton discoursed me several times about it: They courted me, and desired me to throw the Packet overboard; but I told them I would not do any thing of that kind: And Mr. Elliot said, that I might take the Papers that I took out of my Lord Preston's Pocket, and tie the Lead to them, and say that was the Packet, and throw the other overboard. I told him, he took the King's Counsel to be odd People, and very indiscreet, that could not find out such a Thing as that. After this was over, we had a little Interval, and there was a Hamper in the Boat's Stern, and there was some Bottles of Wine taken out, and we drank several times; and by and bye we had some Discourse a little further about the same thing, and they pressed me to throw the Packet away; and one time particularly Mr. Ashton, I remember, said it would be a generous Thing. Billop, if you would go along with us, I think you may do as well there as here.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Whither would he have had you gone with them?

Capt. Billop. He did not name any Place, as I remember.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What Promises did they any of them make you?

Capt. Billop. Mun Elliot whisper'd me several times, Dear Billop, throw the Packet overboard; what Good would it do you to injure so many honest Gentlemen? And Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot said, I had it now in my Power to make myself as great and as rich as I would be.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did any of them say about the Tide turning?

Capt. Billop. Mun Elliot also said, it was impossible the Current, or the Tide could run long this Way, or always this Way.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. When you had refused this that they desired of you, notwithstanding their Promises, pray tell us how they turned their Discourse into Threatnings.

Capt. Billop. Elliot told me, when nothing would prevail, that every Dog had his Day; but I answered, I hoped never to see it your Day: But, however, said I, pray desist from any such Language, for I can't bear it. After that they never ask'd me any thing about it.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Now tell us what you did with these Gentlemen, and these Papers, afterwards.

Capt. Billop. I brought these Gentlemen up to my Lord Nottingham's Office, and delivered the Packet with the Lead fix'd to it, and stood by my Lord Nottingham in the Room till he had opened the Papers, except while my Lord Preston was examined; and when he opened the Papers I stood by, that I might see him make them up again; and I think I took some of them in my Hand, and he said I might read them; but I was uneasy, and not disposed at that time to read many of them; so I did not read them all.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. They were all by when Ashton said you would do generously to go along with them, were they not?

Capt. Billop. Yes, they were all in the Boat.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did not one of them say to you, I know if Captain Billop do serve us, he will do it generously?

Capt. Billop. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was it?

Capt. Billop. It was Ashton.

L. Preston. I desire I may ask Captain Billop a Question.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray, my Lord, put your Question to the Court, and they will ask it him.

L. Preston. I desire to know, my Lord, where it was I said this to Captain Billop, that he would dispose of the Packet?

Capt. Billop. Just after I had first saluted your Lordship, you said you were glad you were fallen into the Hands of a civil Gentleman.

L. Preston. Was it aboard the Boat that I desired you to dispose of the Packet?

Capt. Billop. Yes, and before we came on board the George Frigate, when we drank about, upon the opening of the Hamper; it was in the Boat I am very sure, and before we came on board the George.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston said to you, you say, he would do you all the Kindness that lay in his Power, if you would dispose of the Packet; How would he have you dispose of it? What did he mean by it?

Capt. Billop. I don't remember he used any other Word but that, dispose of the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. But Ashton and Elliot did desire of you a great many times to throw it overboard?

L. Preston. I desire he may be asked this Question. You said you carried these to my Lord Nottingham; Did you see them opened?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I did see them opened, and I saw my Lord as he opened them, lay them one by one, and read them over, and put them up again. And I looked upon several of them, while my Lord Nottingham was reading others; and I stood by the fire, and I see my Lord make them them up, and he tied them with a Piece of Twine, and he clapp'd his Seal upon them, and delivered them to me; and I went immediately and delivered them to my Lord President.

L. Preston. Were you all the while by, while my Lord Nottingham was reading the Papers?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I was by when he opened them, and read them, and staid till he put them up again; and as they came from his Hands, I presently carried them to my Lord President.

L. Preston. Are you sure, or can you swear that these are the same Papers which were taken on board the Smack, that you carried from my Lord Nottingham to my Lord Danby?

Capt. Billop. So many of them as I looked into, I mark'd; and all that I mark'd I can swear to, and no more than them I cannot.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. I think you say all those Papers that you delivered to my Lord Nottingham, you saw my Lord Nottingham seal up, and all them you carried to my Lord President?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I did so; all that my Lord opened at that Time were put together again, and his Seal put to them.

L. C. J. Holt. But my Lord asks you, whether you can swear to the particular Papers?

Capt. Billop. What I read I mark'd, and them I can swear to.

L. C. J. Holt. You say you carried all those Papers to my Lord Nottingham sealed; after he had opened them, to my Lord President?

Capt. Billop. Yes, my Lord, I did see my Lord Nottingham open them; I see him make them up again, and when they were made up, he put his Seal to them, and I carried them to my Lord President.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire Capt. Billop may be asked one Question.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, what is it you would ask him?

Juryman. I desire to know whether the Papers were sealed when he took them and brought them to my Lord Nottingham?

Capt. Billop. No, they were all tied up together with a Tape, or a Twine, I think with both, very fast together.

Juryman. There was no Seal on them when he took them?

Capt. Billop. No; but there were several Letters within the Packet that were sealed.

L. C. J. Holt. Was not the Outside of the Packet sealed?

Capt. Billop. I don't remember the Outside was sealed: There was a Cover, but as near as I remember, they were Folds of Paper fast tied together.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You delivered them as you took them, to my Lord Nottingham?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I never took them out of my Pocket, after I had taken them from Mr. Ashton, till I came to my Lord Nottingham's Office, where I delivered them to him.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Had you ever opened them, or seen them opened, before they came to the Hands of my Lord Nottingham?

Capt. Billop. No, indeed.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then set up Johnson. [Which was done.] Pray tell us what you know of this Matter?

Johnson. I was in my Lord Dunblain's Barge, and I went down with this Captain Billop, and we were on board several Vessels; and we light upon a Ketch, where we pressed some Men. We thought it had been only some Seamen that were to be pressed; we did not know of any thing else. When we had rowed down as far as you have heard, we rowed up again, and searched several little Vessels and Smacks that were in the River, when a Fisherman that we had press'd said, that that was the Vessel the Captain enquired after: And then the Captain bid us take some small Arms, and I took a Pistol and went on Board. The Captain read the Protection, and then said, he must look further. When the Captain look'd into one of the Cabins, and took up the Hatches, I saw a great Piece of Roast-Beef, and my Lord Preston by it, and a Mince-Pie, and a Fowl, and we took the Beef out; but my Lord's Man said, he missed his Knife, it lay upon the Bench: And then came my Lord up, and his Man, and Mr. Elliot; and when Mr. Ashton (the Man with the Pock-holes) came up, he went down again, and pretended to look for his Hat; but when he was down I see him cram something into his Bosom, and I told the Captain, I had seen him put something into his Bosom; and the Captain took him hold by the Buttons of his Coat, and turned him about, and asked him what he put into his Bosom? He said, Nothing but his Handkerchief; and pulling it out of his Bosom, he shewed it to the Captain; but the Captain put his Hand into Mr. Ashton's Bosom, and pulled out the Packet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You say you see him put something in his Bosom when he went down. Did you observe whence he took it?

Johnson. It was upon the Gravel, and there were a Couple of Seals, which he afterwards took up, lying by; and I believe he took up the Packet and forgot the Seals.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray let us see the Seals.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Your Lordship observes, the Packet was not at first in Mr. Ashton's Bosom.

L. C. J. Holt. No, it was not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But he took it up from the Place where the Seals lay, and put it into his Bosom. Pray in what Place did this Packet and these Seals lie?

Johnson. Upon the Ballast, for they had shov'd away the Board.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was my Lord Preston upon the Ballast?

Johnson. Yes, my Lord lay almost upon his Back; he was the first that we saw, and he came out first. They were all four lying together there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who lay next my Lord Preston?

Johnson. My Lord's Footman; Mr. Ashton lay next, and Mr. Elliot lay next.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Where were the Seals then?

Johnson. My Lord was the first that I see come up.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I ask you where the Seals were?

Johnson. The Seals were down upon the Ballast; whether they were my Lord's or no, I cannot tell, or whose they were.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now that we will ask Captain Billop. Are these the Seals?

Capt. Billop. Yes, these are the Seals this Man gave me.

Johnson. I took them from off the Ballast.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did my Lord own these to be his Seals?

Capt. Billop. I did not ask him, that I know of.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Well, Johnson, go on, tell what you know further.

Johnson. After we came to Long-Reach, a Gentleman that had a long Perriwig, a black Gentleman, Mr. Elliot I think they call him, had a pair of Whiskers on when he was taken, and he took a Pair of Scissars and cut them both off; and he said, if ever he lived, he should remember me, having a Tooth out, because I was so sharp upon him to make him come out: And when we came on board the George Frigate, in Long-Reach, my Lord's Man came to me, and said, he would give me something to drink, if I would deliver him the Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. Had you any Discourse with my Lord Preston himself about them?

Johnson. No, it was his Footman that came to me, and said There was no body there but myself and him: I had them, and he would give me something to drink, if I would deliver them; but I delivered them to Captain Billop.

L. Preston. My Lord, may I ask a Question or two of this Witness?

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, my Lord, if they have done with him. What say you, Brother Thompson?

Mr. Serj. Thompson. We shall have done with him presently, my Lord. Pray had you any Money given you?

Johnson. No, but my Lord gave the Ship's Company ten Shillings to drink, and one Piece was a Brais Half-Crown.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What did they say as they went along, as you remember?

Johnson. They had a great deal of Discourse while we rowed. I was at the next Oar to them, but I cannot tell what 'twas.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Who did discourse?

Johnson. Ashton, Elliot, and the Captain.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Cannot you remember what they said, any of them?

Johnson. They did talk together several times; Elliot said he was a-cold, and came and rowed at the Oar a while; and Elliot swore an Oath; says he, They row all as if they were rowing to Prison; but truly I did not much mind their Discourse, I minded my rowing. There were some Victuals handed to us, which we did eat.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Elliot seem to be angry? What did they say?

Johnson. Elliot wished that a Thunderbolt might drop into the Boat several times, and sink it; and when we went through Bridge against Tide, he wished that London-Bridge might have fallen upon our Heads.

L. Preston. Now I would ask him, if your Lordship please, Did you see Ashton take up the Packet?

Johnson. Yes, I did, as it lay by the Seals.

L. Preston. I perceive there seems to be some Strefs laid upon my lying next to Mr. Ashton, and Seals lying by the Packet.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, there has been no Inference made from that yet by the King's Counsel.

L. Preston. My Lord, it is in vain to deny we were all together there.

Johnson. You were the first that I see, my Lord.

L. Preston. We were all together; but there is no such Thing to be gathered from thence as they would insinuate; but I suppose 'twould be deduced from hence, as if this Packet, because it lay near these Seals, should be my Packet.

L. C. J. We have not yet heard, my Lord, what Use they will make of it.

L. Preston. But I desire to take Notice of it, my Lord, and I think it is a very hard Presumption, because we were in one Place, and the Seals at a little Distance from the Packet, therefore the Packet must be presumed to be mine; I hope it shall not be presumed against me.

L. C. J. Holt. Since your Lordship mentions it, I will take Notice a little of it too. It is only a circumstantial Evidence that is made use of against you; how far it will weigh, is to be left to the Jury, when all the Evidence is heard. The Packet is found in the Place where your Lordship lay, and by it Seals that belong to you; one is the Seal of your Office, as Secretary of State, the other is your own proper Coat of Arms.

Juryman. With Submission, my Lord, I desire this Witness may be asked this Question, Whether he saw Captain Billop take the Packet out of Ashton's Bosom?-----Johnson. Yes, I did.

Juryman. And whether he saw Billop deliver the same Packet to my Lord Nottingham?-----Johnson. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Holt. You Gentlemen of the Jury, consider this; he was not then by. Captain Billop tells you, that very Packet which he took out of Ashton's Bosom he carried to my Lord Nottingham; and he tells you, my Lord opened it in his Presence, and he is sure he put all the Papers together again, and set his own Seal upon them, and then he took them from my Lord Nottingham, and carried them to my Lord President.

Johnson. As soon as I came to Whitehall, I was set Centinel over those three Men that came out of the Smack, and was not admitted into the Room.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we must desire, my Lord Nottingham may be sworn.

[The Earl of Nottingham sworn.]

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Where are the Papers?

Earl of Nottingham. Mr. Bridgman, I think you have the Papers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, does your Lordship remember Captain Billop brought a Bundle of Papers to you, and what became of them? Will your Lordship be pleased to give the Court and the Jury an Account of it?

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord, all that I have to say in this Matter is, Captain Billop brought to me a Bundle of Papers tied about with a Pack-thread, to which was fixed a Piece of Lead, I believe the same Piece that was now produced; at least it was one very like it: He brought also a Signet, which I presume I can know again when I see it.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray shew my Lord the Seals. [Which was done.]

Earl of Nottingham. This is the Signet I presume which he brought to me; I am sure he brought just such a one, if not the same. Those Papers, when he delivered them to me, I opened in his Presence, and when I had so done, I read them, and put them up together again, and sealed them with my own Seal, and delivered them to him back again. What

What the Papers are, and what he did with them, I suppose he will give you an Account.

L. C. J. Holt. But your Lordship says, the Bundle of Papers he delivered to you, you sealed up, and delivered to him again.

Earl of Nottingham. All those Papers that he brought to me I did seal up, and deliver back to him again.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, my Lord, were they ever out of Captain Billop's Sight while your Lordship had them?

Earl of Nottingham. Not after they were opened. There was a little Paper that was tied to the Bundle, which fell loose upon the taking away the Lead, and I opened that while he was by; and the Bundle lay upon the Table while I examined my Lord Preston; and after my Lord Preston was gone out, I called in Captain Billop (who went out while I examined my Lord), and I opened that great Packet in his Sight, and read the Papers, and he read some of them; and all the Papers in the great Packet, and the little Paper that was stuck in, I delivered; sealed up, to Captain Billop.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, my Lord, were the Letters in the Packet sealed?—Earl of Nottingham. Yes, there were some of them sealed; and all that I received from him I delivered to him, and no more.

L. C. J. Holt. The Gentlemen of the Jury hear what my Lord says.

Earl of Nottingham. The very same, all, and no more, I say.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Captain Billop, when you had them back from my Lord of Nottingham, pray to whom did you deliver them?

Capt. Billop. To my Lord President.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we must desire my Lord President would be pleased to be sworn.

[The Marquis of Carmarthen, Lord President of the Council, was sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. We must desire the Favour of your Lordship to acquaint the Court, when Captain Billop came to your Lordship, what he said, and what he brought with him.

L. President. Captain Billop did bring me a Bundle of Papers; and he told me he brought them from my Lord of Nottingham; and they were seal'd, wrapp'd up with a Packthread, and seal'd with a Seal, which I knew to be my Lord's Seal. He delivered them to me myself; and these Papers I kept till I shew'd them the King the next Morning. And after I had shew'd them the King, the King delivered them up back to me, having read some of them, and commanded they should be delivered to the Cabinet-Council. A Cabinet-Council was called, and accordingly there I did deliver them, Paper by Paper, and they were all marked by my Lord Sidney, and some I think by my Lord Marlborough; and so I delivered them all together to my Lord Sidney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we desire my Lord Sidney would please to be sworn.

[The Lord Sidney sworn.]

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Will your Lordship please to acquaint the Court and the Jury, what Papers were delivered to you, and by whom, and where those Papers are?

L. Sidney. The Papers that were delivered by my Lord President, I have kept them, my Lord, ever since. As soon as I had them, I read them, and mark'd them with a Letter of my own Name; the Letter H. I have kept them ever since; only one Morning I gave them to Mr. Bridgman to be copied out as soon as he could, and he delivered them me back again, and they have not been out of my Custody since; only the Night before last Night they were sent to Mr. Solicitor to read, and brought immediately to me again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. To whom did your Lordship deliver them to be copied?

L. Sidney. To Mr. Bridgman, I tell you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. So that they were never out of your Lordship's Hands till now, but only in Mr. Bridgman's Hands?

L. Sidney. No, I kept them in my Pocket ever since, only the Night before last, when they were sent to you.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did your Lordship mark them before they were delivered to Mr. Bridgman to copy?

L. Sidney. Yes, I marked them when I received them.

L. Preston. My Lord Chief Justice; your Lordship does observe that Captain Billop swears that they were never out of his Possession till he delivered them to my Lord Nottingham; my Lord Nottingham says he never opened them, but left the Packet upon the Table while I was examining.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray, my Lord, will you speak a little louder, that I may hear you?

L. Preston. My Lord, I am saying, my Lord Nottingham says, that while he was examining me, the Packet lay upon the Table unopened, and were never out of his Eye till he sent them sealed by Captain Billop, and so they come to my Lord President, and they were kept by my Lord President; my Lord President says, my Lord Churchill saw the Papers, and they were in his Possession.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, your Lordship does mistake my Lord President: He does not say that they were in my Lord Marlborough's Hands; but he did communicate them at the Cabinet-Council, where my Lord Marlborough was. He said, indeed, they were in the King's Hands, but he was by all the while.

L. Preston. From that Time they came out of my Lord President's Hands, I know not what may be put in, nor what taken out. These Papers were not sealed, as I hear of, afterwards; and passing through so many Hands, no body knows what may be done to them. Truly, I think it very hard to swear, after all this, that these are the Papers that were on Board the Smack.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Will you please to ask any Questions to satisfy yourself of any of these noble Lords?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I'll put your Lordship right.

L. Preston. With all my Heart, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordship hears what Captain Billop says. He says, he brought them as he took them out of Ashton's Bosom, to my Lord Nottingham: My Lord Nottingham opened them before him, and did deliver them to him again, having made them up: My Lord Nottingham says, the same Papers Captain Billop delivered him, he delivered back again, all, and no more; and Billop says, he carried them to my Lord President; my Lord President shew'd them to the King, and afterwards carried them to the Cabinet-Council; there the same Papers were opened; and there they were marked, some by my Lord Marlborough, and all by my Lord Sidney.

VOL. IV.

L. Preston. Your Lordship will please to observe this: My Lord Nottingham was pleased to say, he opened no Papers till I was called in and examined, and then Captain Billop withdrew. Now, my Lord, I don't know whether the Captain can say that these were the very same Papers that he took in the Smack?

L. C. J. Holt. Captain Billop says, that he saw the Papers opened by my Lord Nottingham.

Capt. Billop. My Lord Preston observes a Thing that is very right, my Lord, that after I had delivered the Packet to my Lord Nottingham, while my Lord was examined, I withdrew; but my Lord Nottingham has given your Lordship an Account, that he had not opened the Packet then, but only the small Letter or Note that lay apart from the rest: But, my Lord, the Packet was in the same Condition when I came in again, upon the Table, as when I left it: My Lord Nottingham, as I believe, had not opened that Packet; for I found it just as I left it, upon the Table.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Nottingham says, he delivered back to Captain Billop all the Papers that he received from him: They were never out of my Lord Nottingham's Presence; nor were they opened, as my Lord says, but in Billop's Presence, nor opened till after my Lord's Examination, except the little Paper that was stuck in, and was loose upon taking away the Lead.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray swear Mr. Bridgman.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, when you received the Bundle of Papers from my Lord Sidney, to whom were they carried, and to whom were they delivered?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord Sidney gave me these Papers to have them copied, and I copied some of them with my own Hand, the others I delivered to Mr. Poultony, and were copied in my Presence in the Office: They were never out of my Sight; and as soon as ever they were copied, I carried them back to my Lord Sidney, and delivered them to him myself.

L. Preston. Were any of them taken from you, Sir?

Mr. Bridgman. My Lord, I say I copied some of them myself, the others were copied in my Sight and Presence, in the Office.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, Sir, let me ask you one Question? Were the same Papers that were delivered to you by my Lord Sidney, re-delivered back again and unaltered?

Mr. Bridgman. I am very sure I gave them all, the same back again, because I read them every one before they were copied.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did you observe my Lord Sidney had mark'd them before you had them?

Mr. Bridgman. Yes, they were all marked before I had them.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire to ask Mr. Bridgman this Question: Pray, Sir, were they sealed up when you sent them to my Lord Sidney?

Mr. Bridgman. No, they were not sealed, they were tied up; but about the Seals I remember when I was in my Lord Sidney's Office.

L. C. J. Holt. The Question is ask'd you, whether you carried them back sealed or no?

Mr. Bridgman. No; they were not sealed when they were delivered to me; but I can safely swear they were never out of my Custody till I delivered them back again; for what I did not copy myself, were copied in my Sight.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. But your Lordship is pleased to observe they were all mark'd by my Lord Sidney before they were delivered unto him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have done with our living Witnesses for the present, and will read the Papers.

Mr. Bridgman. One thing, my Lord, I do remember; as soon as my Lord Sidney received the Papers back again, he looked over every one of them, and read them, and looked upon the Marks.

L. Preston. If your Lordship please, I would beg the Favour to ask one Question of my Lord Sidney: Pray, my Lord, did your Lordship number the Papers?

L. Sidney. No, my Lord, I did not number them.

L. Preston. But your Lordship says upon your Oath and Honour, that those are the very Marks upon them that your Lordship set there?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We are indeed to produce them, and then we shall ask that particular Question.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Sidney will see them, and then he will answer your Lordship's Question.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord Preston, my Lord Nottingham is here a Witness, and his Occasions call him away, have you a Mind to ask him any more Questions?—L. Preston. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What say you, Gentlemen, have you any farther Occasion for my Lord Nottingham?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we must beg his Lordship's Patience, we do not know what Occasion there may be: I desire this Paper may be shewn to my Lord Sidney.

[Which was done.]

L. Sidney. That is my Mark; that Paper I know is one of the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Here are two of them; one of these is the Copy of the other: Both were taken in the same Packet; the one is fairer written than the other.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Gentlemen, the Paper we are now offering to you is that which I mentioned before; it is the Result of a Conference: There were two of them taken in this Bundle; the one of them seems to be the first Draught, the other is a Copy more fairly written; but I think they are both in effect the same: However, they were both taken in the same Packet, and you shall hear them read.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire that before it be read it may be shewn to Captain Billop, to know whether it be the very Paper that he took.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, let Captain Billop look upon it.

Capt. Billop. My Lord, I do not remember that Paper.

L. Preston. Your Lordship observes that Captain Billop cannot swear that this was one of the Papers that he took.

Capt. Billop. All the Papers that I looked into I marked, and all the Papers that I mark'd I can swear to, and no others.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did you look into all the Papers,

3 K

Capt.

Capt. Billop. No, I did not.

L. C. J. Holt. But he swears, all that he brought to my Lord Nottingham were sealed up by my Lord Nottingham, and carried by him from my Lord Nottingham to my Lord President; and my Lord President swears, he delivered them all to my Lord Sidney; and my Lord Sidney swears, this is one of those Papers.

L. Preston. Certainly, my Lord's swearing to a Paper in this Manner cannot be a good Proof. My Circumstances, my Lord, are very hard; and your Lordship, I have heard, ought to be of Counsel for me in any Point of Law; and, my Lord, I humbly desire to know, whether this can be a Proof of a Paper, that he says was taken in a Packet, and yet he can't swear it?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, he does not swear that this was one of the Papers; but the Question is, Whether all these Witnesses together do not prove it? You see how the Evidence runs: All the Papers taken were delivered to my Lord Nottingham; all that were delivered to him were sent back by him sealed, and delivered to my Lord President; my Lord President brought them all to the Cabinet-Council, and delivered them to my Lord Sidney; and this my Lord Sidney says is one of those Papers.

L. Preston. My Lord, I have a very great Honour for that noble Lord; and I am sure, if he had not been upon his Oath, he would have said that which was Truth; but in this Condition that I am in, I must crave Leave to observe every thing that I can for my self; and I cannot but say, these Papers are very oddly managed, and delivered up and down from one Hand to another; I desire your Lordship would please to observe, that these Papers are here brought after a very odd Manner.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord Preston, you are not to sum up the Evidence to the Jury till we have done, nor to make your Observations.

L. C. J. Holt. Brother, my Lord opposes the reading of the Paper, as not well proved.

L. Preston. I do so, my Lord; and I hope your Lordship will advise me, whether you do think it a sufficient Evidence and Proof of these Papers. They are Papers that have been copied out, and sent unsealed from Hand to Hand by some Messengers from one to another; and which now appear to be unsealed, and some of which he that took them cannot swear to.

Juryman. My Lord, we cannot hear one Word that is said.

L. Preston. That is my Misfortune; but I am urging to my Lords the Judges, whether this Paper ought to be read; and I desire your Lordship to advise me, whether it can be admitted as Evidence, being thus oddly proved.

L. C. J. Holt. It is Evidence, surely, my Lord; but the Question is, what Credit the Jury will give to this Evidence? The Jury are Judges of that: But certainly it is Evidence to have the Paper read.

L. Preston. I doubt not but your Lordship will do me Justice, and I readily acquiesce in what your Lordships do appoint.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray, my Lord, see how the Evidence stands about this Matter. First, it is sworn by Billop, that he took a Bundle of Papers; though 'tis true, the Particulars he does not undertake to swear to. Well, what is next? Why, says he, All that was in that Bundle I carried to my Lord Nottingham, and I received from my Lord Nottingham all that I carried to him. What says my Lord Nottingham? He swears I delivered back again to Captain Billop the same Papers he delivered to me, and all, and no more, sealed up with my Seal. When he has it sealed up, what does he do with it? Why, he carries it to my Lord President. Is there any Possibility of creeping out of this Evidence? Well, he delivers them to my Lord Sidney, and my Lord Sidney says, This is one of those Papers. Can there be a plainer Evidence than this? when he says, All he had he carried to my Lord Nottingham; and my Lord Nottingham swears, All he did receive he sent back, sealed by him, to my Lord President; and my Lord President swears, All he received, so sealed, he gave to my Lord Sidney; and my Lord Sidney swears, This is one of those Papers.

L. Preston. But your Lordship will please to observe, they were carried to the King, and they were in the Hands of my Lord Marlborough.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, not out of the Sight of my Lord President. My Lord President says, my Lord Marlborough marked some of them, but they were delivered to my Lord Sidney; and my Lord Sidney does say, They are the same Papers that he had from my Lord President; and my Lord President says, They are the same that were brought him by Captain Billop from my Lord Nottingham; and my Lord Nottingham swears, he sealed them, the same Papers, all, and no more than he received from Captain Billop.

L. C. Baron. Your Lordship should observe where the Defect of the Proof is, and then it may be supplied; for truly, put it all together, I cannot see how there could be a plainer Proof given.

L. Preston. My Lord, I desire to be heard as to this: My Lord President was pleased to say, that some of them were delivered to the King.

L. C. J. Holt. No, they were shewn to the King; but my Lord President was by all the while that the King did read them.

L. Preston. My Lord, where a Man's Life lies at Stake, and all that is dear to him, your Lordship will certainly allow him to make what Observations he can for himself.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, in God's Name, by all Means: You shall have all the Liberty you can desire.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we desire my Lord President will be pleased to look upon those Papers. [Which was done.]

L. President. This is one of the Papers that I received from Captain Billop, and which I shewed to the King, and which I brought to the Cabinet-Council; and this is another of the Papers.

L. Preston. Pray, my Lord, was your Lordship by when his Majesty read those Letters?

L. President. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. Preston. My Lord, I ask it for this End, to know whether they were out of your Lordship's Sight.

L. President. No, never; I was in the King's Cabinet; his Majesty read some of them, and then put them up again, and gave them me; and I delivered them at the Cabinet-Council to my Lord Sidney.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we desire this Paper may be read.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads.

The Result of a Conference between some Lords and Gentlemen, both Tories and Whigs, in which it was undertaken to prove the Possibility and Method of restoring by a Fr. Power, without endangering the Protestant Religion, and Civil Administration, according to the Laws of this Kingdom.

"1. F. Must either oblige or conquer us: If the last, he will find few Helps here; but a bloodier Resistance than ever the Romans, Saxons, or Normans found: It being incredible, how unanimous and obstinate that very Thought renders the People; so that it may make us a Heap of Ruin, but no Nation that can ever help or import any Thing to F.

"2. If K. L. desires to oblige us, and make the Work easy, that he may be at Leisure to ply the Empire or Italy, or to have an advantageous Peace, he must take off the frightful Character we have of him, and shew us he has no such Design as returning our offended K. a Queror upon us, but that he can, and will be our Friend and Mediator; upon which Terms he will find, that many Lords and Gentlemen will speedily shew themselves to his Satisfaction; especially if he makes haste, and loses no approaching Opportunity.

"3. If he incline to this Sort of Sense, he must over-rule the Bigotry of St. G. and dispose their Minds to think of those Methods that are more likely to gain the Nation; for there is one silly Thing or other daily done there, that comes to our Notice here, which prolongs what they so passionately desire. The Methods thought upon are these:

"First, To prevent dangerous and foolish Intelligence, by forbidding all in that Court to write any News hither, and that K. J. only have his Correspondence by whom to hear from, and speak to People here; since Letters so often miscarry, and are filled with nothing but what we should not hear; and what we have are Arguments for the most part against the K's Restoration.

"Secondly, Since there is a great Body of Protestants that never deserted, and that many Thousands are returning, and that they are the natural Weight and Power of these Kingdoms, by having the Heads, Hands and Wealth of their Side, to the Odds and Advantage of at least two hundred Protestants to one Catholic; the K. may think of nothing short of a Protestant Administration, nor of nothing more for the Catholics than a legal Liberty of Conscience; for much more is against all other Notions, to which all private Passions, and artificial Frames in Government, must yield or break. He may reign a Catholic in Devotion, but he must reign a Protestant in Government. Cromwell could not, yet on a broader Bottom, with a victorious Army, subsist or keep what he had got.

"Thirdly, He must give us a Model of this at St. G. by preferring the Protestants that are with him above the Catholics; one being Loyal upon less Ties of Interest; and to tell the Nation here what they are to hope for when he comes.

"Fourthly, He must give Encouragement to Lords and Gentlemen here to come to him, at least Seven or Nine for a standing Council; which will make us here think he is in some Degree ours again, and that we have a Relation to him, and some Interest and Share in him, by the Men of Quality of our own Religion that are with him. This will incomparably facilitate the Matter here; nor will they, when they come, come empty, and in their own Names, which is still better, and will be more satisfactory there.

"Fifthly, To induce this, English Protestants should be encouraged by an Edict of Liberty from the K. of F. to have Chapels at their own Costs, in which to worship God after their respective Ways; by which that K. will make us reflect upon his Conduct towards his Hugonots, rather to flow from the Hazard he thought himself in by their Antimon. and resisting Principles, than a Desire of Persecution.

"Lastly, All other requisite Measures depending upon the Acceptance of this finds, an Answer hereunto is impatiently desired by those that have discoursed the King's Business to this Maturity. So ended with an unanimous Consent, both Tories and Whigs upon this Occasion, that are in a Way of closing in his Interest."

L. Preston. I can very safely swear, my Lord, that I never saw that Paper in my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Come, go on with your Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is another Paper of the same; but the Words that are written short in that, are written at Length in this.

[The Paper was read accordingly, and in the first Blank there was written K. J. in the first Paragraph (France) twice, in the third Paragraph (St. Germans), in the fifth (Mathemat. for Much e mutt), the rest are obvious, and need not be supplied.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray shew my Lord Sidney that Paper. What says your Lordship to it?

L. Sidney. This is one of the Papers that I marked, and that I received from my Lord President.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will my Lord President be pleased to give himself the Trouble to cast his Eye upon that, and see if that be one of the Papers.

L. President. My Lord, I remember it well, it is one of the Papers I received from Capt. Billop.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. This Paper is what Mr. Solicitor mentioned as Heads of a Declaration.

L. Preston. My Lord, I think it necessary to offer one Thing to your Lordships before it be read. I desire Captain Billop should swear it to be one of his Papers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If your Lordship pleases, you observe what has been done already. My Lord President says, 'tis one of those Papers that was sent him by my Lord Nottingham; and my Lord Sidney has sworn, it is one of the Papers he had from my Lord President.

L. Preston. I shall not give your Lordship any more Trouble than needs; I only offer it to your Lordship; I wave it.

L. C. J. Holt. There is Evidence enough to have the Paper read.

Clerk of the Peace reads.

"That the King will return with a Design of making an entire Conquest of his People, is so ridiculous, as well as difficult, that it needs not to be spoken to.

"That

"That the King's Declaration be worded in general Terms, That he will govern by the Laws; that they shall be the Rule of his Actions; that he will endeavour to settle Liberty of Conscience by Law; that whatsoever things were formerly done by him, which occasioned Jealousies in the Minds of his People, shall be left to the Determination of a Parliament, to be formally and regularly called as soon as is possible.

"That he has given sufficient Evidence of his Unwillingness to bring an Army of Strangers into this Kingdom, by refusing the Succours of the King of France offered him, and which were even ready to be embarked upon the first Notice of the P. of Orange's intended Invasion.

"That he brings with him such an Army only as is necessary for his own Defence, and for the Security of such of his loyal Subjects as shall resort to him; that he will dismiss them as soon as he shall have rid the Nation of those Foreigners who have invaded it, and trampled upon the Laws and Liberties of his People.

"The King's large exercising his Dispensing Power gave the great Alarm to the People, and contributed most of all toward the general Defection. Yet when that Power came to be debated in the last Convention, there appeared so many Difficulties in the limiting of it (every body, even the present Judges believing it necessary, that a dispensing Power should be in the K.) that it was let fall, and that Point remains as it was. And without mentioning that, or any other Particular, the K. can be in no Danger by leaving all things which have been the Occasion of Jealousies, to the Determination of Parliament, where, besides the King's professed Friends and Servants, there will not want others who will be glad of Opportunity to ingratiate themselves."

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen of the Jury, if you desire any thing to be read again, or any thing doubtful in it should be explained, tell us, and it shall be done.

Juryman. No, my Lord, there is no Occasion for that. I believe we apprehend these three Papers that have been read.

L. Preston. My Lord, it is necessary the Gentlemen of the Jury should be satisfied in this Point.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Ay, in any Point; and if they desire any Scruple should be cleared, the Court will do it for them.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire to know whether Captain Billop signed that Paper or no?

L. C. J. Holt. No, he did not sign half of them; but unless it be proved, you ought to take it for granted that it is not signed by him.

L. Preston. My Lord, I think it fit the Jury should be satisfied in any Scruple they raise.

L. C. J. Holt. They asked this Question, Whether Captain Billop did sign the Paper? And I told them Captain Billop did not say so; and therefore they are to take it for granted, that he did not.

Juryman. My Lord, we take this last Paper that was read, to be a Paper that was delivered in the Bundle taken from Mr. Ashton to my Lord Nottingham, but not signed by Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Then you take it right.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then the next Paper that we produce is a List of the English Fleet that these Gentlemen were carrying over into France.

L. Preston. That is printed, and to be found in every Coffee-house.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Shew that Paper to Captain Billop. [Which was done.] Can you take it upon your Oath, Captain, that that Paper was in the Packet that was taken in Mr. Ashton's Bosom?

Capt. Billop. That Paper I have marked, and that Paper I swear was in the Packet I took away from Mr. Ashton on board the Smack.

L. C. J. Holt. You are sure of it.

Capt. Billop. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then read it.

Brought in by Admiral Ruffel to the House of Commons, December the 24th, 90. the Fleet whereof 60 Dutch.

Memorandum, The new Ships building, are expected will be ready to be launched by the End of March.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray shew this Paper to Captain Billop. [Which was done.] Pray, Was that Paper there among the others that were taken with these Gentlemen?—Capt. Billop. Yes, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Can you take it upon your Oath, that that Paper was in the Packet that was in Mr. Ashton's Bosom?

Capt. Billop. Yes, my Lord, I can.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray shew him that Paper too. [Which was done.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. And can you take upon you to say, that that was one of the Papers in the Packet?—Capt. Billop. Yes, it was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we desire these may be read.

Clerk of the Peace reads, New-Year's Eve, and it is directed for Mr. Redding.

SIR,
THOUGH the Bearer of this will do us the Justice to assure you, we are as full of Duty, as unfeignedly and unconcernedly yours, as yourself could wish; yet this Gentleman has undertaken.—You will forgive the Presumption, if I do myself the Honour to give you this fresh Assurance in a few Words, which I hope we do by our Accounts.

"I shall omit no Occasions, not neglecting the least, and making zealous Wishes for the greatest, to shew ourselves such as we ought to be,

"Sir, I speak in the Plural, because I write my elder Brother's Sentiments as well as my own, and the rest of the Family, though lessened in Number; yet if we are not mightily out in our Accounts, we are growing in our interest, that is in yours. He that delivers this, will, I hope, entirely to your Satisfaction, represent us, and me in particular, as with all the Devotion imaginable, and unchangeable Affection, Yours, God grant the happiest New-Year,

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Read the other Paper.

Clerk of the Peace. This is dated Decemb. 31, 1690. "I must not let this Bearer depart; Madam, without assuring you —

Mr. Sol. Gen. Hold, Sir, don't read that yet. Here, shew this Paper to Captain Billop. [Which was done.] What say you, Captain Billop? Is that one of the Papers taken from Mr. Ashton?

Capt. Billop. Yes, this is one that I read, and marked.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mrs. Redding.

"Tis impossible for me to express that extraordinary great Satisfaction it gave me this Time Twelve-month, when I had the Honour to receive that Mark of your Favour and Goodness under your own Hand; so I have lived in some Pain for an Opportunity to write you my humblest Acknowledgements and truest Duty, from which, by the Grace of God, I am no more capable of swerving, than of renouncing my Hopes of Heaven: I say this in Behalf of my elder Brother, and the rest of my nearest Relations, as well as for myself: You may entirely depend upon us, not only for a constant Adherence to so well chosen a Principle, but for our utmost Activity to promote your Interest, which are inseparable from our own. I need come to no particulars by this Bearer, who can, and will tell, our whole Heart; and I wish you could see them, how sincerely they are devoted to your Service. God grant you a most happy New-Year, and many, very many, and very happy. Our young Master hath all our best Wishes; he daily gains more Friends, and we get Ground of his Adversaries, New-Year's Eve,

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now read your other Paper of the 31st of December, 1690.

Clerk of the Peace reads, December 31, 1690.

"I must not let this Bearer depart, Madam, without assuring you of my best Respects. I have written by him to a Friend of yours, but depend upon you to give my Note Credit.

"Though my Creditors were no Friends to the Match which has been so long in Treaty; for your Relations have been very hard upon me this last Summer; yet as soon as I could go safely Abroad, I pursued the Business, and do beg you to believe, that no Endeavours of mine shall be wanting to perfect the Settlement. You once put me in Hopes of seeing you before this Christmas; Your Friends are sorry for the Disappointment, pray lose no more Time than is of absolute Necessity. The Bearer will tell you all Things may be now easily settled, if the right Way be taken. I long to hear how your young Daughter does; she will find many Friends, and I hope her Portion will be well secured, God send you a happy New Year, and that I may be merry with you before it be far spent: and I beseech you keep me in the good Opinion of your Friend. I will always make good what I promised to you," [It is directed for Mrs. Charlton.]

Juryman. My Lord, I desire to know who that is directed to.

Clerk of the Peace. 'Tis directed to Mrs. Charlton.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Shew Captain Billop those two Papers. [Which was done.] What say you to them, Captain?

Capt. Billop. My Mark is on the Outside, but there is nothing written in that; I believe it is taken off from the inner Paper.

L. Preston. Pray, my Lord, is this any Proof? I beseech you for God's Sake to have Regard for a Man's Life,

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray shew the Paper to my Lord Sidney. [Which was done.]

L. Sidney. This was one of the Papers I received from my Lord President.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we must beg my Lord President would be pleased to look on it. [Which was done.]

L. President. This was one of the Papers brought me by Captain Billop from my Lord Nottingham, in that Bundle.

L. Preston. Captain Billop does not know the Paper, though his Mark be to it.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is not indeed very material whether he does or no, because he did not read all; but I would observe, that 'tis sworn by Lord Sidney, that this was delivered to him by my Lord President, and sworn by my Lord President, that he had it in that Bundle from Captain Billop.

L. Preston. But, my Lord, it does shew that there may be some Alteration in the Papers; because he having marked it, and marking none but what he read, he does not now own that to be the Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, will your Lordship be pleased to take it as it is. These are two Papers; the one is only the Cover, the other is the Writing; Captain Billop has only marked the Cover, and not the Writing; but my Lord Sidney he has marked the Paper itself, as delivered him by my Lord President, and my Lord President has given you an Account, that it is one of the Papers he received in that Bundle from Captain Billop.

L. Preston. I only mark, that there may be Alterations made in these Papers since they were taken,

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads, December 31, 1690. It is directed to Mr. Jackson,

"THE Bearer can give you so full an Account of all things relating to your estate here, that I need not have troubled you at this Time, but that I am desirous to lay hold of any Opportunity I think safe to assure you of my Service, and that I will never quit your Interest, whatever the rest of the Freeholders do. Your Adversary has been so hard to his Neighbours, that he has extremely disoblged all the old Tenants, and a little Matter would redeem the whole Estate, if you would appear in Westminster-Hall yourself; the best Counsel have a good Opinion

" Opinion of your Title, and will zealously pursue your Instructions: I only beg you would hasten them to us, and that you will appear yourself as soon as is possible: No Time should be lost, and the Cause may be brought to a final Hearing before the End of Easter Term, if it be well solicited. I heartily wish you a happy New Year, and beg you to tell Mr. Charlton, that I long to know wherein I may serve him; and that I will follow his Directions to the utmost, while I live. God keep you and yours."

L. Preston. Pray, Sir, to whom is that Letter directed?

Clerk of the Peace. To Mr. Jackson, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray shew that Paper to my Lord Sidney.

[Which was done.]

L. Sidney. This is one of the Papers I received from my Lord President.

[Then it was shewn to my Lord President.]

L. President. This is one of the same Papers that I received in the Bundle from Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads. December the 31st.

" THE Interruption of the former Correspondency had a very ill Effect many ways; but for that Reason, no Opportunity ought now to be lost, and I hope this will prove a happy one.

" In Trade, as well as in Government, Schemes must be laid; for there is no living from Hand to Mouth any more in Commerce than in Politicks: Lay therefore your Designs probably, and pursue them diligently, and with Vigour; though it be a hazardous Time, yet by venturing boldly, where venturing is advisable, it often returns great Profit.

" There is nothing more to be said, but to give the Bearer fit and full Seasons to tell what he knows, both as to Goods fit for our Market, and when and where to be sent. The Sea will quickly grow so troublesome, that unless you dispatch what you intend for us, you will loose a great Opportunity of Advantage. I hope the Account he has to give of our Negotiations here with the Merchants that deal with us, especially those that have lately brought us their Custom, will both encourage a larger Trade, and excite the utmost Diligence. I will say nothing of myself, it shall be enough that I can live in the good Opinion of one I bear so great a Reverence and Affection for; but for this honest Factor I must own, I can hardly say enough. Truth and Boldness are excellent Qualities in a Servant; and he has shewn both, as Occasion has required him to shew them.

" I have but one Word to add, and pray take it as the truest Mark of unalterable Respect: Choose well, but have to do but with a few; for a Multitude may give, but can never keep Counsel.

" I shall, with more Impatience than becomes me, wait the Result of this, and it will be a great Mark of Goodness to let us have it in the best and safest way.

" Once more; let not the Season spend unprofitably, for a more likely one can hardly come than between this and the 1st of March. Interpret this, I pray, as no private Interest of my own, or partial Motion of any other Person. It is my Sense, my Duty, and my Friendship, which will not let me prevaricate, nor suffer those I love and honour to loose so happy and pressing an Occasion of Advantage. With the best Wishes I close up this, and am, &c."

L. Preston. Pray, my Lord, who is that Paper directed to?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. This is directed to no Body at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Shew that Paper to my Lord Sidney. [Which was done.]

L. Sidney. This was one of the Papers I had from my Lord President.

[Then it was shewn to my Lord President.]

L. President. This is one of the Papers I had from Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is dated December 31, but is not directed to any Body at all.

" IT is a Presumption incident to those that are any where upon the Spot, to think that they know better than those that are not, what is fittest to be done in any Occurrence. This makes me say, that now " is the Time to make large Advantages by Trading, the Sea being freer than two Months past, or we can hope it will be two Months hence.

" This Gentleman is well instructed in our Markets, and what the Goods are we want, and when and where they should be sent. It is most earnestly desired that this happy Opportunity may not be lost, especially by the late Undertakers, and I would not for much, they should receive the least Disgust. They are somewhat positive in their Terms; but they also say, they will be good and constant Customers; and I have more than once seen the Mischief of over-rating, and over-staying the Market. Opportunities are to be used, they cannot be given by Men.

" The Bearer needs nothing from me to recommend him, but he is deserving in our Opinion here, and many will take their Measures by the Usage he finds there; and indeed the pressing Posture of our Trading Affairs will not permit more Experiments. If the several Parcels arrive not, that have been promised, before the 10th of March at farthest (especially the Copper and Linnen, of which the Bearer will be more particular), I am satisfied we shall loose this Summer's Profit. I am the more pressing, because I am well assured of what I write; and if ever I judged right, it is upon this Occasion.

" I have said nothing of another Gentleman that takes this Opportunity to see those Parts; but he has shewn a Zeal and a Sincerity in this Affair equal to most. Jo. is not yet gone, by a Misfortune, but he will follow with a good Postscript in this Affair. Of myself I will say nothing; I hope I need not, for no body without Vanity can be more sincerely and affectionately a Friend and Servant to the Company than myself. I writ at large Yesterday, and cannot write what the Hand that gives this can say; and therefore will write no more, but that with the greatest Respect, I am, &c."

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray shew this Paper to my Lord Sidney.

[Which was done]

L. Sidney. This is one of those Papers I received from my Lord President.

[Then it was shewn to the Lord President.]

L. President. This was one of the Papers in the Bundle I received from Captain Billop.

L. C. J. Holt. Then read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads.

" S I R,

" I Vow to you, I do not repine at having lost all for your Sake, which I got by your Favour; but it grieves me extremely that there is not that left which can secure me from being troublesome to you; for that the thing in the World I would not be. I have told my Lord my Condition. What I desire of you he thinks very moderate, I hope you will. Pray, Sir, be not backward in settling my little Affair, for I have deserved your Care. Your Daughter and I must starve, if this Government can make us. I hope our Interests are not divided, that is, you have an equal Tenderness at least for both. If you think fit to speak what I would have you to this Bearer, he will give me a just Account of it. You know he is obliged to be my Friend, and I believe him grateful, since he ventures so boldly for you. He brings with him some merry Papers. Adieu, for I dare write no more; but pray send a Messenger on purpose to me, that I may know exactly what you will do, and would have me do. If you send upon no other Business, there will be no Danger. Pray, Sir, ask my Lord, and he will tell you how I have been used, and upon what Account. I believe you know it not.

December 29.

" Your Daughter is very well, very tall, and very pretty, as I am told."

L. C. J. Pollexfen. That is not directed to any body neither.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray then shew these Papers to my Lord Sidney, and my Lord President. [Which was done.] They were two.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. These Papers my Lord Sidney swears he received from my Lord President, and my Lord President swears he received them in the Bundle from Billop.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. We pray they may be read.

Clerk of the Peace. December 31. 90.

" WAS my Condition more desperate and uneasy than it is, I desire no greater Satisfaction than to have done my Duty to so good a Master: I wish it was of more use to him; that is not my Fault, nor of those I have acted with. Let it be look'd into what has been foretold both as to Eng. Scot. and Irel. and see if most of it is not come to pass already, and the rest will follow, if not prevented. I wish it may also be considered what Usage we have met with from Men employ'd, and how they have left your Business and Friends; how they managed it you will know from all Hands: Things they could not do, nor durst not undertake, were better undone than not done by them. Men in this Place, and in these Times, must have some Courage as well as Sense to do any thing with People here. It is not my own ill Usage makes me say this, but my Concern for one I wish the best to in the World, and will give my Proofs of this upon all Occasions. I need not enlarge, since all our Grievances are known to him that brings this. For my own part, I will stay here, so long as I can be safe, if with ne'er so great Trouble; but it would be some Comfort to know Men (when driven from hence) may be so; therefore the Reports of People's Usage are terrible as well as of the Indiscretions of St. Germ. Family: We feel the Smart of it by ridiculous Letters falling daily into the Hands of the Government. Their Master and Mistress are little oblig'd by it no more than we: If there is any thing, Sir, you do particularly command me, or depend upon me for, let me know it. I cannot undertake much, nor furnish more. I have still help'd every body, and paid to every thing I could; and if a Twelvemonth ago my Condition was what I then represented, you best know if it has been mended. Use, and considering that of others, makes me grow more contented; and if the Prospect of Misery to us all was any Satisfaction, that it is now plainly seen.

" Pray God bless us all, by restoring every Man his own, and you with long Life.

" He that gives you this, hath furnish'd for your Use to me, &c. two hundred Pounds, which I desire may be repaid."

Mr. Sol. Gen. Read t'other; it is in the same Hand, and was enclosed in the former.

Clerk of the Peace reads. " I only beg, Madam, no ill malicious Report may take any Place in your Thoughts, in regard to me. I value your good Opinion, and will endeavour to deserve it. I can do little towards, but with most heartily for your Happiness. I know no Interest, Madam, but my Master's and yours, nor do I think they are to be made two: If you command me any thing, I will faithfully obey you, as I have ever done him.

" We all depend upon this Bearer's Accounts of us, and our Condition. His Faith and Courage hath been enough experienced.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Here is another Paper, shew that to Captain Billop. [Which was done.]

Capt. Billop. This Paper I did mark, and this was one that was in the Bundle.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What is it Brother? pray open it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. 'Tis a Draught of a Cypher, with an Alphabet of Names, for carrying on the Correspondence.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Your Lordship observes these Matters were designed to be carried under several Sorts of Cants.

L. C. J. Holt. What says Captain Billop to that Paper?

Capt. Billop. That was one of the Papers that I read at my Lord Nottingham's, and mark'd it there.

L. C. J. Holt. Then read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads. For Mrs. Anne Russell, to be left with Mr. Richeson, at the Blue Bear, in Ryder-street, near St. James's.

A --- the King,	H --- Major General Sarsfield,
B --- the Queen,	I --- Lieutenant General Shelden,
C --- the Prince of Wales,	L --- King of France,
D --- the Prince of Orange,	M --- Marshal Luxembourg,
E --- Canon and the Scotch Officer,	N --- Marshal Belford,

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then the next Papers we produce are the Bills of Exchange; Pray shew them to Capt. Billop. What say you, Capt. Billop, were those among the other Papers?

Capt. Billop. Yes they were, I remember very well.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, they are in French, and therefore we must swear a Gentleman that we have here, to interpret: Call Mr. Humphry Levermere.

Mr. Levermere. Here I am.

(He was sworn.)

To Mr. Anthony Pelletier,

Your most humble Servant,

Merchant at Paris.

J. Berionde.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray how much do they all come to?

Mr. Levermere. They come to 500l. wanting but Twelve-pence.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, we have shewn your Lordship part of the Papers that were taken in this Pacquet, but we have reserved three of the Papers till the last Place; and these three Papers, if we had no other, were sufficient to maintain this Indictment, for they are written all with my Lord Preston's own Hand, wherein he gives an Account how the French should invade us, how the Forts may be taken, how London should be plagued, and what a sort of Rascals the Clergy of London are; these are the Contents of the Papers, among other Things. Pray shew them to Captain Billop.

(Which was done.)

Capt. Billop. These were two Papers that were in the Pacquet, and the other little one with them.

L. Preston. My Lord, I would desire your Lordship to observe one Thing, to the best of my Remembrance, Captain Billop said, he only mark'd six of the Papers.

L. C. J. Holt. How many has he sworn to?

L. Preston. I believe he has proved more.

Capt. Billop. I never said so; I mark'd a great many, though not all, but I did not say how many.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Were these Papers taken in the Pacquet?

Capt. Billop. Yes, all three.

L. Preston. Just now he said but two.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Have you look'd upon them all, Sir?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I marked but two of them, but the other little Paper was with them; I read them myself, I remember it very well.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then we pray the Clerk may read them.

(Cl. of Peace reads.) Lady D. 2000l. And 200l. for Shop Debts.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord, we would open this Piece of Evidence before we read it, that it may be understood, and we shall prove it to be my Lord's Hand afterwards. It consists of many Heads and Particulars, without Order or Method, and seems to be no more than Memo-

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Gentlemen, have you any more Evidence?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, We shall now prove these Papers to be my Lord Preston's own Hand. Pray call Mr. Warr, Mr. Townesend, Sir Henry Johnson, and Mr. Bland.

Mr. Townesend sworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray shew Mr. Townesend that Paper. (Which was done) Pray, Sir, whose Hand-writing is that?

Mr. Townesend. I believe this to be my Lord Preston's Hand: I did not see him write it.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Are you well acquainted with my Lord Preston's Hand?

Mr. Townesend. I have seen his Lordship's Hand sometimes.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. How often?

Mr. Townesend. Not very often, but I have seen it sometimes.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray were you Clerk in any Office?

Mr. Townesend. Yes, I am in the Office of the Great Wardrobe, where I have had occasion to see his Lordship's Hand sometimes, and I believe this to be his Hand.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Look upon the t'other two.

Mr. Townesend. I do believe these three Papers are my Lord Preston's Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Those are the three Papers that have been read last, which he says are my Lord's Hand.

Mr. Townesend. I do believe it, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray look upon that Paper, with the little one within it; do you know whose Hand that is?

Mr. Townesend. I did not see it written, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Do you believe you know who writ it by the Hand?

Mr. Townesend. The latter Part looks like my Lord Preston's Hand; but I cannot well say any thing to the other, it is written so small.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then swear Mr. Bland. (Which was done.)

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Give him the Papers. We ask you, Mr. Bland, Whether you were well acquainted with my Lord Preston's Hand?

3 L

Mr Bland.

Mr. Bland. I have seen my Lord's Hand sometimes.
 Mr. Serj. Thompson. Have you looked upon those Papers, Sir?
 Mr. Bland. Yes, I have.
 Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray whose Hand are they?
 Mr. Bland. I do believe these three Papers are my Lord Preston's Hand-writing?
 Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we pray Mr. Warr may be sworn.
 [Which was done.]
 Mr. Serj. Thompson. Do you know my Lord Preston's Hand?
 Mr. Warr. I have seen my Lord Preston write, but not very often; most commonly it was only his Name: But I have seen him write some Letters too.
 Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Sir, look upon those Papers; whose Hand are they do you believe?
 Mr. Warr. This Paper seems to be like my Lord Preston's Hand; the other I cannot say much of, because that which I commonly saw him write was a large fair Hand, and this is a little Hand.
 Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Mr. Warr, look upon these Seals; whose Seals were they?—Mr. Warr. I believe the Seals to be my Lord Preston's; one of them was his Seal when Secretary of State.
 Mr. Serj. Thompson. You were under him in that Office, were you not?
 Mr. Warr. Yes, my Lord, I was.
 Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now, my Lord, we have done with our Evidence, and shall rest here till we hear what my Lord Preston says to it.
 L. C. J. Holt. My Lord Preston, you have heard what has been said concerning the Matter you have been indicted for: What has your Lordship to say for yourself?
 L. C. J. Pollexfen. If the Gentlemen of the Jury desire to see the Seals, they may have them.
 [The Seals were shown to the Jury.]
 Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we have done for the present.
 L. C. J. Holt. Then if your Lordship please, you may make your Defence.
 L. Preston. My Lord, In the first Place I must refer myself again to my Indictment, for I find, my Lord, that the Treasons of which I am accused, were none of them done in the County of Middlesex, and they are laid to be done within this County; I find nothing of that kind proved upon me to be done here; for any Memorandums that they say may be in that Hand, I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will consider, that there was nothing followed upon any of these Things, that may be found in those Papers: And in the next Place, I desire to know, whether they are sufficiently proved to be mine; that is, whether Similitude of Hands is Proof or not against me in such a Case? I humbly offer these Things to your Lordship, and hope your Lordship and the Jury will consider of it.
 L. C. J. Holt. Is this your Lordship's Defence, my Lord?
 L. Preston. My Lord, I leave these Things to the Consideration of the Court and the Jury.
 L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordship insists upon it first, that there is no Act of Treason proved in the County of Middlesex; and then, whether Similitude of Hands be a good Proof to prove these three Papers, or any of them, to be your Hand?
 L. Preston. Nobody saying they see me write them, if I did write them.
 L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, have you no Witnesses, nor nothing that you would use of Evidence for yourself?
 L. C. J. Holt. Would your Lordship disprove any Thing of the Matter that has been proved against you?
 L. Preston. I must deny the whole Fact; but I have no Witnesses or Evidence to offer you.
 L. C. J. Holt. Then your Lordship has no more to say?
 L. Preston. I have not, I must leave it so with your Lordship and the Gentlemen of the Jury.
 Mr. Sol. Gen. We shall offer nothing farther, but leave it wholly to your Lordship.
 L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordship has done then?
 L. Preston. Your Lordship observes none of the Witnesses have declared that I was going into France, nor knew any thing of it. I did not hire the Ship, nor any thing of that kind; though I suppose if they had, it is not Treason; but your Lordship observes there is no such Thing has been sworn.
 L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, as to the first Matter that your Lordship makes a Question upon, Whether there be any Act of Treason proved in Middlesex, that does depend upon the Proof of your Lordship's being concerned in the Papers; for if your Lordship had an Intention in carrying these Papers into France, which speaks a Design to invade this Realm, your Lordship took Boat in Middlesex at Surrey-Stairs, in Prosecution of that Intention, there is an Overt-act in this County of Middlesex.
 L. Preston. Your Lordship, and the Gentlemen of the Jury observe, these Papers were not found upon me.
 L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord; but if it be proved that your Lordship had an Intention to carry these Papers into France, and took Boat in order to go with them into France, in the County of Middlesex, wherever your Lordship acted in order to that Design, that is Treason, and there you are guilty. It is a Treason complicated of several Facts, done in several Places.
 L. Preston. My Lord, I humbly desire to know, whether they have been proved to be my Papers?
 L. C. J. Holt. That is a Question that must be left to the Jury upon the Evidence.
 L. Preston. Nobody swears they are mine, nor were they found upon me.
 L. C. J. Holt. But what I am speaking to your Lordship, is in Answer to your Question about the Place; for you say, that there is nothing proved done in the County of Middlesex: Now the Question is, Whether your Lordship had a Design to go to France with these Papers? If you had, and if your Lordship did go on Ship-board in order to it, your taking Boat in Middlesex in order to go on Ship-board, is a Fact done in the County of Middlesex.
 L. Preston. It is not proved by any Witnesses that I designed to go into France.
 L. C. J. Holt. That is before the Jury upon the Evidence.
 L. Preston. I hope your Lordship, and the Jury will observe 'tis not proved, and in the next Place, there are no Papers taken upon me; with humble Submission, there is no Proof of any such Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, how far your Lordship was concerned in these Papers, and whether you were going with them into France, is to be left upon the Evidence that hath been heard, to the Consideration of the Jury.
 L. Preston. But I humbly submit that.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more to say?
 L. Preston. As to what I offer, that nothing has been proved in Middlesex; I hope your Lordship will take it to be a Point of Law, and then it ought to be argued; and I desire I may have Counsel.

L. C. J. Holt. No, 'tis a Matter of Fact only; but if you please, the rest of my Lords the Judges may give you their Opinion; for this is a Question upon a Supposition that your Lordship was guilty of a Design of going into France, and this with a Purpose to depose the King, and alter the Government; then the Question is upon such a Supposition that you were guilty of that Design, whether you were guilty in Middlesex or no?

L. Preston. My Lord, they have not proved that Design.

L. C. J. Holt. We do not say, it is taken for granted now, but 'tis a Question upon a Supposition. Now, my Lord, I'll tell your Lordship in short my Opinion, the rest of the Judges will tell you theirs: I am of Opinion, if your Lordship had such a Design to go with these Papers into France, and these Papers were formed by you, or you were privy to the Contents of them, then it is plainly proved, that you went into a Boat in the County of Middlesex, in order to carry on this Design, and that will make it a good Indictment, and here is a plain Overt-act of High-Treason in Middlesex.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I am of the same Opinion; for your Fact as to this particular Point in Law stands thus: You are indicted of High-Treason in two Points; one is, For conspiring to depose the King and Queen, and alter the Government: And the other is, for aiding and assisting the French King, and his Subjects, declared Enemies, and in open War against the King and Queen, and to invite the Enemies of the Kingdom to invade the Kingdom. Now this Design, and this Help and Assistance, are written in these Papers; for they are Instructions for the carrying on of this Design. You, my Lord, are the Person that is charged to go with these Papers to help on this Design; you began your Journey in the County of Middlesex, for according to the Evidence, you took Water at Surrey-Stairs, which is in the County of Middlesex, and every Step you made in pursuance of this Journey, is Treason, where-ever it was: So then here is a sufficient Proof of a Fact in Middlesex.

L. Preston. That, my Lord, is a Point of Law, and I humbly desire your Lordship, that I may have Counsel in this Case. It is not proved by any Body, that I said I would go into France; and in the next Place, it is not proved that I had these Papers about me; there has been no Evidence given that I did take Water with an Intention to go with these Papers into France.

L. C. J. Holt. The Jury are to be Judges of that.

L. Preston. Then, my Lord, what have I done? I have not done any Thing within the Danger of any Statute upon which I am indicted; besides, my Lord, what I have to offer further is this, I think I ought to have two credible Witnesses to prove every Fact, and I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will consider, there is nothing but Supposition as to me; and I hope I and my Family shall not be ruin'd upon a Supposition.

L. C. J. Holt. Has your Lordship any more to say?

L. Preston. All the Judges have not given their Opinion.

L. C. J. Holt. The rest will give their Opinions, if you desire it. My Lord Chief Baron, what say you?

L. C. Baron. My Lord Preston, I am called upon, it seems, to give my Opinion in this Case, but this I take it must be left to the Jury, what Credit they will give to the Proof. Your Lordship makes a Question, as the Proof stands, whether there be any thing done in this County? Here are Instructions given to the French King how to invade England, and carry on the War against us. These Instructions are contained in several Papers, and these Papers in a Packet are carried to the Smack, which Smack was hired to go to France. You are found taking Water at Surrey-Stairs, which is in the County of Middlesex, in order to go to the Smack: You did go to the Smack; the Papers were taken in your Company, and were seen lying by your Seals; and the Witnesses swear, they believe some of them to be your Hand; you took care to desire to have them disposed of. Now how far the Jury will believe this Matter of Fact, that is thus testified, is left to them; this seems to be the Proof, and if the Jury do believe it, here is a plain Evidence of an Overt-act in the County of Middlesex.

L. Preston. I do insist upon it, with humble Submission, it is not proved that these Papers were taken upon me, or that I did take Water at Surrey-Stairs to go to France.

L. C. Baron. That must be collected out of all the Circumstances; the Credit of which is left to the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. All the rest of my Lords the Judges are of the same Opinion, as they tell me. Have you any more, my Lord?

L. Preston. I must submit.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, My Lord Preston stands indicted for High-Treason, in imagining and compassing the Deposition, Death, and Destruction of the King and Queen; and for that Purpose did write, or cause to be writ, several treasonable Papers and Letters, designed to go into France, and there to correspond with the French King and his Subjects, who are Enemies to the King and Queen; and to carry with him those treasonable Papers and Letters, containing a Project, and a formed Design how this Kingdom should be invaded by Foreigners. There is another Treason in the Indictment mention'd, and that is for adhering to, and abetting the King's Enemies, there being open War declared between the King and Queen, and the French King.

You have heard, Gentlemen, a very long Evidence, Witnesses have been produced viva voce, and several Papers have been read to you; some of the Papers that have been produced, though they may seem mysterious and canting, yet they are not so very obscure and unintelligible, but if you consider them well, the Meaning of them will appear. Others of them are more express, and do plainly demonstrate a Design, that the King and Queen should be deposed, and that there should be another Prince set upon the Throne, and restored to the Government of this Kingdom.

Gentlemen, There are two other Persons mentioned in the Indictment with my Lord; and tho' my Lord is only now upon his Trial, yet the Evidence which doth affect them, doth also concern my Lord.

You have heard how there was an Intention of some Persons to go to France, and how Mr. Ashton, one of the two others, that stands indicted with my Lord, did treat with one Mrs. Pratt, one of the Witnesses, to hire a Vessel for that Purpose, and it was by the Means of one Mr. Burdett, that lives in the City; they had a Meeting at Burdett's House, where they treated about the Price that should be given for the Hire of this Ship to go to France, but at that Time they did not agree. It was concluded, that the Woman and Ashton and Burdett should meet at the Wander Tavern; but Mr. Burdett not being there, nothing was concluded upon then.

And after that the Woman, Mr. Burdett, and Ashton, and Elliot, met at Mrs. Burdett's; the Woman insisted at first upon 150 l. After they had been treating for some time, the Bargain was made to go to France for 100 l.

Then the next Thing considered was, how this Money should be paid; by Agreement 93 Guineas, and 6d. which made up the 100 l. was deposited in Mrs. Burdett's Hand; a Six-pence broken, one part Mrs. Burdett had, and the other Part of the Six-pence Mr. Ashton had: And when either Mrs. Pratt or the Master of the Vessel did bring back that Part of the Six-pence that Ashton had, to Mrs. Burdett, the Money was to be paid.

After this Agreement, they were appointed to go to the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden, to the House of one Mr. Rigby; and there the Woman, Mrs. Pratt, and the Master of the Vessel, Ashton and Elliot met, and they were that Night to go away, and to take Water at some Place near to go on Ship-board; and having stayed there till it was about ten a-Clock at Night, then they went away into the Strand, and so into Surrey-Street, and took Water at Surrey-Stairs.

But before that they came from Mr. Rigby's, some Persons went to Surrey-Stairs to see for a Boat, and met with that Fellow that was here produced, who was a Sculler, and did hire him to go through the Bridge when the Tide served, and to carry some Gentlemen on Ship-board; they agreed with him for Half-a-Crown, and he was to stay in an House near the Stairs until they came.

And at the Time appointed, Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot, and the Master of the Vessel, came to that Place, and my Lord Preston and his Man with them, to take Water. My Lord Preston was not at Burdett's House at the Hiring of the Ship, nor at Mr. Rigby's; but it is proved by the Master of the Vessel, that he took Water with the rest of them at Surrey-Stairs; that he went with them on Ship-board, and was to go along with them.

Being on Board the Ship, they did appear to have some Apprehensions of Danger, and passing by a Man of War, my Lord Preston, his Man and the other two went under the Quarter-Hatches, where they lay down to prevent themselves from being taken or discovered; and they hid another time when they came near Gravesend, and coming up they seeing a Boat coming towards them, they hid themselves again. Captain Billop, who it seems, was sent to apprehend them, pretended he was to press Seamen, and when he came on Board the Smack, he said he would press the Mariners, who answered they had a Protection: But he being upon his Search, pulled up the Boards of the Quarter-Hatches, and there was my Lord Preston and the other Persons lying down: It was not a Place that was very proper for Gentlemen, or, indeed, for any Passengers, to repose themselves in; it was an uneasy Place, nobody could stand or sit upright in it; nay, there was no convenient Place for lying down, but they must lean upon their Elbows, which Posture those Gentlemen were in; so that their Purpose was plainly to conceal themselves, and their concealing themselves must be because of some Design they were about, which they would not have discovered.

They being taken out from under the Hatches, one of the Witnesses tells you, he saw a Packet lying there, and Ashton, pretending to fetch his Hat, went down, took it up, and put the Packet into his Bosom; and the Witness informing Captain Billop thereof, he caused Ashton's Coat to be searched, and from thence took the Packet, and a Piece of Lead tied to it, which was produced here in Court.

When they were bringing away in Custody, they seemed all of them to be very much concerned about this Packet; some of them, that is, Ashton and Elliot, would have had it thrown with the Lead over-board. My Lord Preston did not say so much, but complimented Captain Billop in this manner, He was glad he was fallen into the Hands of a civil Gentleman, a Person of Worth, and he should always acknowledge his Kindness, and would do him all the Service he could, if he would dispose of the Packet.

My Lord Preston was searched at that time, and Letters of no great Moment taken about him. Ashton and Elliot would have had Captain Billop to take those Letters which were taken in my Lord Preston's Pocket, and tie the Lead to them, and have thrown the Packet over-board, and to report to the King and Council, That those Letters were the Packet that was taken with the Lead; and so have persuaded him to be false to the Trust that was reposed in him.

And Ashton and Elliot used many Expressions to induce him to that Compliance; they told him the Government was unstable, and every Dog had his Day, and the Tide would turn; and that he would deserve very well if he would change Sides, and go with them where they were going; and that he had Opportunity to get any Preferment he would have.

L. Preston. My Lord, I hope your Lordship observes that I said none of all this.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, I do not say you did; my Lord Preston did not say any thing of all this, but only about disposing of the Packet; that his Lordship spoke of to Captain Billop, and complimented him, and promised him Kindness if he would dispose of the Packet.

But, Gentlemen, as there was a Packet taken, so there were two Seals taken at the same Time, and in the same Place, which have been produced and shewn to you; they lay both of them upon the Ballast under the Quarter-Hatches, near the Packet: The one of them is the Seal of my Lord Preston's own Coat of Arms, the other Seal belongs to the Secretaries Office, which Office my Lord once held in the late Reign.

L. Preston. I beg your Lordship would be pleased to observe that the Papers were not taken upon me, and it can be no Treason to have Seals, I suppose.

L. C. J. Holt. Good my Lord, I will not do your Lordship any Wrong: I do not say that the Papers were taken about you, no nor the Seals; but only, that they lay upon the Ballast from whence the Packet was taken: And I say further, That these Seals are not denied by your Lordship to be your Seals; the one is your own Seal of your Coat of Arms, which was taken at that Time, and so I do not your Lordship any Wrong, and by the Grace of God will not.

L. Preston. It is no Crime, I hope, to have Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. I do say, my Lord, the Papers were taken about Ashton, and not about your Lordship; but they lay upon the Ballast where the Seals were, and where your Lordship lay: But how far my Lord Preston is concerned in this Matter, is to be considered by you of the Jury by-and-bye.

Now, Gentlemen, you have heard how earnest Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot were; one of them, to wit, Elliot, with'd a Thunder-Bolt might strike the Boat under Water as they were coming back; and when they came through Bridge, he with'd that London-Bridge had fallen upon them and knock'd them upon the Head.

L. Preston. But I hope that is not to lie upon me neither, for I said no such Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. No: But Ashton and Elliot did say these Things, and how the Case stands as to that in relation to your Lordship, is to be considered. It is proved, they afterwards gave Money to the Seamen, Half-a-Crown a-piece, to two of them, to say they were going to Flanders, and not to France.

Now, Gentlemen, that my Lord was on Board this Vessel, that my Lord was under the Hatches, and that the Papers were taken in this manner, is beyond all Contradiction: So likewise that the Ship was hired for France; that my Lord took Water at Surrey-Stairs, and was taken in this Vessel in that manner that you have heard.

The next Thing, Gentlemen, is about the Papers: I must tell you, though there are several of them that do seem mysterious, yet they are Papers that do shew a very great Design of Deposing the King and Queen, and a Purpose of altering the present Government.

But, Gentlemen, I will mention to you those Papers that are very plain, and leave you to consider what Construction to put upon those that are obscure. There is one Paper that seems to be Instructions and Heads for a Declaration, that is to say, That the King of France must not come with a Design to make an intire Conquest.

L. Preston. My Lord, with Submission to your Lordship, I hope you will please to remember and observe to the Jury, that Paper is not proved to be mine.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, I'll do your Lordship no Wrong, but I cannot speak all my Words at once.

L. Preston. I am sure you will not, my Lord; but I beg leave to put your Lordship in Mind.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, then, Gentlemen, the Paper begins, That the King's Declaration is to be formed in general Terms; that he will govern by the Laws; that they shall be the Rule of his Actions; that he will endeavour to settle Liberty of Conscience by a Law, and that whatsoever was done by him that gave any Occasion of Jealousy, shall be settled by Parliament. That the King hath given sufficient Proofs and Evidence of his not being willing to bring an Army of Strangers into the Kingdom, by refusing the Succours the King of France offered him, and that were even ready to be embarked upon the first Notice of the Prince of Orange's coming. That he brings such an Army only as is necessary for his own Defence, and securing such of his Loyal Subjects as should come to him; and that he will dismiss them as soon as he shall have rid the Nation of those Foreigners that had invaded us, and trampled upon the Laws.

So that, Gentlemen, here is a Paper in this Packet, that has plainly laid open and proved the Design, and shews the Meaning of it was to seduce their Majesties Subjects from their Allegiance; it was to be in such general Terms, making general Promises, hoping thereby that People would be the more easily imposed upon to renounce their Allegiance to their present Majesties.

But, Gentlemen, the Declaration imports farther, that the Realm was to be invaded by Foreigners; and to palliate it, it is pretended, that Foreigners were only brought in to rid the Nation of Foreigners, and you know who are meant by that: So that this Project was only to colour a foreign Invasion; and this Declaration was to direct them how, and upon what Pretences they should invade this Kingdom.

Gentlemen, there is no manner of doubt but this is a treasonable Declaration, and if any Person had this in his Possession, and was going into France to carry, with an Intention there to make Use of it, that is Treason, though it be couch'd under specious Pretences of restoring People to their Liberty: It was plainly a Design to invade England by a French Army.

L. Preston. My Lord, that Paper was not found about me.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no, my Lord, it was not; but, good my Lord, give me your Favour, I will certainly observe every Thing that is fitting; but I tell you I cannot do it all at once.

Then, Gentlemen, there is another Paper found in the Packet, that is said to be the Result of a Conference that was had between divers Lords and Gentlemen, as well Tories as Whigs, as they call them, to prove it possible to restore the late King by French Arms; and how this may be effected, were Proposals made: Yet still it was pretended to preserve the Protestant Religion, and the Civil Administration according to Law.

And that it might be brought to pass, the Credulous were to be imposed upon, and made to believe that the French King would not conquer England for himself; no, but he would conquer it for the late King; he would be at that vast Charge, that great Expence of Men and Arms to restore King James, and make no Profit of it himself.

And it was proposed how to seduce the People of England into a Belief of the French King's Kindness; he was to indulge the English Protestants in France, and let them have the Exercise of their own Religion there at their own Charges; and this to satisfy the English Protestants, that that his Persecution of the Hugonots in France, was not out of Aversion to the Protestant Religion, but only because of their Antimonarchical and resisting Principles. So that they were proposing among themselves what they were to do to make the People believe the French King had no dangerous Design against our Religion and Liberties; and if they could meet with Persons to believe this, that was a probable Way thought upon in this Conference to get a great many Adherents to the French King, thereby this Invasion was to be facilitated, and the whole Project rendered more successful.

There is another thing, Gentlemen, in this Paper, and that is this: They complained of the Mismanagement of their Affairs at St. Germain; that though they did earnestly desire the Restitution of the late King, yet there was always some foolish thing or other that came from St. Germain that obstructed their Design.

What that foolish Thing is, I can't say, it does not appear; but whether it were not too great a Discovery of their Zeal for Popery, and the Advancement of the Popish Religion, is worth your Consideration.

And something is to be done for Satisfaction of the People as to that; and it is advised that there should be Seven or Nine, or such a Number of English Men, that should go over, and be received into Favour at St. Germain, and they should be of the Council there, and these were to be Protestants; and that was to be a Colour and Pretence that the late King was reconciled to the Protestant Interest, because he chose Protestant Counsellors, and had received them at St. Germain, and was advised by them.

This, says the Paper, will make the World believe, he is ours, and that we have gained him; which was to delude a great many of the People of England, that they should not be affrighted in case there should be such an Invasion of England, but invited rather, and encouraged to join with the French when they came.

But, Gentlemen, the three last Papers that have been produced to you, are Papers that do somewhat more nearly concern my Lord Preston.

The first Paper contains several Memorandums: It begins with Lady D. 2000*l.* who that Lady D. is, I must leave it to you to imagine, tho' perhaps it may not be hard to guess.

It takes notice that the English and Dutch were like to join; and these Memorandums do also shew a Design and Purpose of something to be done for the Prevention of that Conjunction. They seem also to be Instructions to be made use of upon going into France to negotiate or transport some Matters of dangerous Consequence.

L. Preston. My Lord, I hope that your Lordship will observe, that these Memorandums are broken kind of Notes, incongruous and incoherent.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, my Lord, they are so, they are but broken things; but I say still, they are Memorandums that were to be used for some Purpose: Now I leave it to the Jury to consider of the Matter of them: What can be plainer than what is there expressed? The French are to come in time, before the Dutch and the English join; they are to watch their Opportunity and come betimes, and they are to fight at the Chops of the Channel, and not to come so far as Beachy.

L. Preston. This is all but presumptive Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. I appeal to your Lordship if it was not in the Paper, and I appeal to the Memory of the Jury, whether I mis-repeat it or not.

The Paper mentions Jennings, and Strickland, and Trevannion, that they were to come from St. Malo's in one Night: the King (meaning the late King) was not to be on board: and there were Ships to lie at Newcastle to plague London: It is easy to understand what they meant. Among these Memorandums, it is made as a Remark, that the London Clergy are the worst. It gives an Account how Portsmouth was fortified, and Gosport, and what Number of Men were in them; and of the State and Condition of our Navy; what rates our Ships were, and how many, and who were to be the Commanders.

L. Preston. I beg your Lordship to observe this is not Treason.

L. C. J. Holt. I shall tell you that my Lord, by-and-bye: I am now stating the Evidence.

Gentlemen, my Lord Preston insists upon it, that these Papers were not found about him: It is true they were not, but it does not therefore follow, that they were none of his Papers: But you have three Witnesses, Mr. Townesend, Mr. Bland, and Mr. Warr, produced to prove these Papers to be my Lord's Hand; Mr. Townesend says, he was acquainted pretty well with my Lord Preston's Hand; he was one of his Clerks in the Office of the Wardrobe; he says, he has seen my Lord write several times, and does believe the Writing to be his Hand; and to the same Purpose says Bland; and Mr. Warr swears to one of the Papers, that he believes it to be my Lord Preston's Hand.

L. Preston. I hope your Lordship will please to observe to the Jury, that this is only a Proof of Similitude of Hands: Nobody see me write them.

L. C. J. Holt. They only say they do believe it to be your Hand: Nobody says they saw you write them; if I omit any thing, pray tell me when I have done.

Gentlemen, there are other Papers which have been produced and read, that are writ in Canting Terms, which yet plainly shew the general Design; they tell the Party, that Counsel are of Opinion, he has a very good Title; they hope he will appear himself, and if the Cause be well solicited, it may come to a Hearing before the End of Easter Term.

There is another Matter mentioned in another Letter which is under the Disguise of Trade, That the Goods must come before the first of March. And another of them says, that unless the Copper and the Linnen come before the Tenth of March, they should lose this Summer's Profit.

Gentlemen, what can be the Meaning of all this?

L. Preston. I know not indeed, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. In another of the Papers it is said, 'Tis thought our Fleet will be ready by March or April, but they believe not till June.

Truly, Gentlemen, I have not been able to take Particulars of every Letter, but I must leave it to your Observation; only there is one of them that makes Mention of acquainting my Lord with the Condition of the Writer, and Direction is therein given to speak to the Bearer; and what other Lord was there, but he, in the Company?

L. Preston. I desire to observe, my Lord, that I was not the Bearer.

L. C. J. Holt. Truly, my Lord, I can't tell who was meant; I must leave it to the Jury to judge of that; but there was no other Lord in that Company.

L. Preston. I give your Lordship Thanks for observing that it was not proved that they were taken upon me before; but I beg your Pardon for interrupting of your Lordship.

L. C. J. Holt. Interrupt me as much you please, if I do not observe right; I will assure you I will do you no Wrong willingly.

Now, Gentlemen, the Question is, in the first place, Whether this be Treason? and I told you before, without Question, if any Persons do go into France to negotiate such a Design as this, or do purpose to go into France, and do any Act in order thereunto, that is High-Treason; and these Letters do import High-Treason as great as can be committed; a Treason against the King and Queen, a Design to invade the Realm, to subvert the Government, to restore another Prince to the Throne by the Assistance of Foreign Force.

There was a Design to delude and impose upon a great many People; and those that would not be deluded into a Belief by these fair Pretensions of Friendship, they were to be subdued by an Army of Foreigners.

Then, Gentlemen, the next Question will be, how my Lord Preston is affected by this Evidence, and whether you have sufficient Proof from what has been offered, to satisfy you, that he is guilty of this Treason or no?

First, my Lord tells you, there has not been a clear Proof that these are the Papers that were taken; for, (saith he) they have been conveyed from Hand to Hand, and therefore possibly there might be some Alteration made in them. You, Gentlemen, are to consider, notwithstanding this Objection, whether the Identity of the Papers be not proved.

Captain Billop tells you, he took them, and in what Manner; and afterwards carried them to my Lord Nottingham, who laid them by for a little while upon his Table, and Captain Billop withdrew (that is part of my Lord's Objection) while my Lord Nottingham examined my Lord Preston: after that, my Lord Nottingham called in Billop again, and Billop swears the Pacquet was not opened, but remained intire in such manner as they were delivered to my Lord Nottingham; and so says my Lord Nottingham. Then Captain Billop saw my Lord Nottingham open it at that time, and he saw all these Papers every one put up again by my Lord Nottingham; so that he could not be deceived; and my Lord Nottingham delivered them to him, and he carried them to my Lord President, all sealed up with my Lord Nottingham's Seal: and my Lord President tells you he opened them, and brought them to the King, and had them back from the King; but they were never out of his Sight while the King read some of them, but he took them all, and brought them into the Cabinet Council, where my Lord Sidney received all these Papers that have been read, and marked them. You have my Lord Sidney's Oath that these are the Papers he had from my Lord President; you have my Lord President's Oath that he had them from Billop, sealed with my Lord Nottingham's Seal; you have my Lord Nottingham's Oath that he had them from Billop; and Billop swears that they were taken in the Smack.

So that it is plain, if you believe this Evidence, that they are the same Papers. Besides, as to several of them, Billop marked them, and swears directly to them. If you believe these Witnesses, as you have no Reason, I think, to the contrary; it is plainly proved these are the very Papers which were taken from the Bosom of Aston, and taken up by him from under the Quarter Hatches in the Smack.

L. Preston. I beg your Lordship's Pardon for one thing.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, what say you, pray? Say what you will.

L. Preston. With humble Submission, there is one thing that I think the Jury ought to take Notice of, That when the Papers were sent from Mr. Bridgman to my Lord Sidney, they were sent by a Messenger.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you are mistaken as to that Objection, for my Lord Sidney did not send them to Mr. Bridgman by a Messenger, but he delivered them with his own Hand, and after he had set his own Mark upon them; and Mr. Bridgman says they were never out of his Sight, he copied them all but two or three, the other Mr. Poultney copied in his Presence, and so he swears he re-delivered them to my Lord Sidney.

L. Preston. With humble Submission, my Lord, if I remember right, they were in a third Hand.

L. C. J. Holt. Never, never.

L. Preston. Did not my Lord Sidney say so, or Mr. Bridgman.

L. C. J. Holt. No, neither my Lord Sidney, nor Mr. Bridgman said so; I suppose the Jury are apprehensive of the Matter; I would not mislead them, I'll assure you, nor do your Lordship any Manner of Injury in the World.

L. Preston. No, my Lord, I see it well enough that your Lordship would not; I am for my Life, and beg your Lordship's Pardon for interrupting of you.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen, the next thing is to consider, whether my Lord Preston be answerable for these Papers, or a Party in this Treason.

First, Gentlemen, I would have you to consider, that there was the hiring of a Vessel for France: It is true, my Lord Preston was not present at the Bargain; but you observe, that my Lord Preston, his Servant, Aston, and Elliot took Water at Surrey-Stairs, on purpose to go on board that Smack.

Now, Gentlemen, whether or no you can intend any other Ways than that my Lord Preston was privy in the Hiring of this Vessel, though he was not present at the hiring of it; for how should my Lord Preston be ready to take Water with them at Surrey-Stairs? Can you imagine my Lord came there by chance, and took a sudden Resolution? If you can imagine that he came only to go on Ship-board, without knowing the previous Design, truly you imagine a very great thing for my Lord's Advantage.

It is plain he went voluntarily, without Compulsion; truly, I think the Evidence is very strong to induce you to believe he was privy to this Design, and that he did know of hiring the Vessel.

L. Preston. I hope your Lordship will observe, at the same Time, that I was never seen before we took Boat.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I have observed it, and I lay that Weight upon the Evidence that I think it will naturally bear, and no more; and leave it to the Jury to consider, whether your Lordship was privy to the Design or no, when they weigh the Circumstances of the Evidence together.

L. Preston. I hope I shall not be condemned upon Presumption and Argument.

L. C. J. Holt. What Weight the Evidence has they will consider.

And then, Gentlemen, there is another thing that I would observe; Why should my Lord Preston, a Noble Man, a Person of his Honour and Quality, put himself in such a Place as he was found in, and that twice? It must fure be out of an Apprehension of some Danger. As for the Seamen, they were secure enough; they were not frightened, because they thought they were protected, and my Lord Preston knew he was not liable to be prest; the Master of the Vessel tells you they were fearful, and therefore hid themselves in a Place they could not stand in, nor sit in, there was the Gravel and Ballast, it was uneasy to them, dangerous to their Health to be there.

Gentlemen, why do Men avoid the Light and put themselves under Covert, unless they have some Evil Design? Persons that are innocent seek not Obscurity.

The Seals were found there, and my Lord does not deny they were his Seals.

L. Preston. I do not deny that: I hope it is no Crime to have such Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay but, says my Lord, that does not affect—because the Papers were not found about me, but were found about Ashton. Gentlemen, if you can imagine my Lord Preston had a different Design from the rest of the Company that were with him, then you may acquit my Lord, and find him not Guilty. But it is left to you to consider, whether he had not the same Design with them. Besides there's mention made in one of the Letters, my Lord, and there was no other Lord but he; and here are Papers prov'd to be my Lord's own Hand, containing several of the Matters of which he stands indicted, and he would have had the Captain to have disposed of the Papers.

Now, Gentlemen, what Account does my Lord give you where he was going? It seems they did pretend at the Time they were taken, and they would have had the Master of the Vessel said, that their Design was for Flanders; but the Witnesses tell you positively, That the Vessel was hired for France.

Truly, Gentlemen, I must leave the Matter to your Consideration, whether my Lord be guilty of this Design or Not Guilty.

There is another thing that my Lord has urged (for I would not willingly omit any thing material on the one Side or the other) he says his Indictment is laid in the County of Middlesex, but the Papers were not taken there, the Ship they went on Board lay at Anchor in Surrey; and when they were taken, it was in the County of Kent, and so there is no Proof of Treason in Middlesex.

Ay, but Gentlemen, give me leave to tell you, if you are satisfied upon this Evidence, that my Lord was privy to this Design, contained in these Papers, and was going with them into France, there to excite an Invasion of the Kingdom, to depose the King and Queen, and make use of the Papers to that End, then every Step he took, in order to it, is High-Treason, wherever he went; his taking Water at Surrey-Stairs in the County of Middlesex, will be as much High-Treason, as the going a Ship-board in Surrey, or being found on Ship-board in Kent, where the Papers were taken.

Gentlemen, I have failed of recollecting several of the Particulars of the Evidence, because they are many; and you will not depend upon my Recollection of Things so very incoherent as some Parts of the Evidence in the Papers are, but upon your own Notes and Observations.

If you do think, having heard this Evidence, That my Lord was not concerned in this Matter, that my Lord had no Design to go into France with these Papers, but that he was an utter Stranger to all these Things, then you are to acquit my Lord. But if you believe my Lord was privy to, and knew of the Hiring of this Vessel, and that he went to carry on the Design contained in these Papers; and that he wrote some of these Letters, and with the others he was acquainted, then you are to find him Guilty.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. My Lord, if you please, I would observe one thing to the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, by all means, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen of the Jury, I shall say but a few Words to you, because indeed my Lord has summ'd up the Evidence very fully, for Matter of Law: I am fully of Opinion there never was a more black nor horrible Treason than is in this Plot that is now discovered; for I think Englishmen have no greater Enemies than the French and the Papists, and you see this is a Plot to bring in both; and therefore I think there was never any thing of greater Consequence to the Government and the Nation, than to have this Plot detected and punished; tho' perhaps never any thing was more improbable than this same Plot, that it should ever take Effect, whatsoever they promised to themselves, and their Desire of having it effected might persuade them to the contrary.

But, Gentlemen, the thing that I would mention about the Matter before you now, is this; Here are three Papers, that by three several Witnesses, acquainted with my Lord's Hand-writing, are testified, as they believe, to be his Hand-writing; if so, then there is an End of all, for therein is a horrid deal of Treason contained. If these Instructions, these Memorandums, these Heads that were written down, were my Lord's, and he did intend to go with these in a Voyage towards France, that will be sufficient of itself, if there were nothing else in the Case to maintain this Indictment.

But, Gentlemen, you have in the rest of the Papers that were taken, A great Character of the Bearer; that the Bearer had done great Things; that the Bearer could inform them fully of every thing; and there should be full and intire Confidence put in the Bearer, and a great many such Phrases.

But, says my Lord, I was not the Bearer, it was Mr. Ashton that the Papers were found about; it does not appear directly who the Bearer was; and they were not found about me.

Now, Gentlemen, pray let us look a little how this Evidence stands:

VOL. IV.

Pray where was this Bundle found? Even upon the Gravel, where my Lord Preston and Mr. Ashton lay; there was it found, and my Lord's own Seal with it.

How, in the Name of God, came my Lord's Seals to be found with other People's Papers, if they did belong to any body else? How came they together in that Place? It may be, he had a mind to leave his Seals behind him, because they would discover his Quality. But why should my Lord Preston have all this Fear upon him? Why should two Men go and take a Ship for themselves and two others; and when they came to take Boat, take in my Lord and his Man, if they were not the two others that were designed? and this to be done at Night in the Dark? Why should my Lord be under such terrible Apprehensions, as to creep into a Hole so unfit for one of his Quality?

Why do you not hear from my Lord some good Account from what Occasion my Lord and his Man were going to France? Or whither else my Lord was really going? for some where or other it was plain he was going.

Gentlemen, no Man goes into an Enemy's Country without some Licence, unless he go upon some ill Design: Fear seldom is without some Guilt; and there appears throughout the whole Management of the Story, that there was a great deal of Fear upon these Gentlemen.

Besides, afterwards, when he is taken, and the Letters taken with him in the same Company, you hear what Endeavours there were to suppress the Truth, even by my Lord's desiring to have the Pacquet disposed of; and my Lord's Man gave one of the Seamen Half-a-Crown to say they were going to Flanders, not to France. I suppose the Man knew how unfit it was to be known that they were going to France: And my Lord's two Companions spared for no Pains to get the Pacquet thrown overboard; tho' all that my Lord said was what great Kindness he would do him when it lay in his Power, if he would dispose of the Pacquet; I suppose that is very easily intelligible.

Gentlemen, there is one thing which is mentioned in one of the particular Letters, that I desire particularly to observe to you, and that is all I shall say to you: Here is a Letter in my Hand that in divers Places has somewhat remarkable; it says, Your Daughter and I must starve, if this Government can make us: That the Party did not repine at all for having lost all for your Sake, which your Favour had bestowed. And in another Place this Letter doth say, Your Daughter grows very tall, and very pretty, as I am told. But that which I chiefly mention it for, is, it's twice mentioned, My Lord will tell you all my Condition, how I have been used; and I have told my Lord my Condition: what I desire of you, he thinks very moderate.

And pray consider and remember, that the first Article of my Lord's Paper, that is taken to be under my Lord's own Hand, there is Two thousand Pounds to the Lady D.

Now if any Body should put these together, do they lack any great Interpreter for? for my part I leave them to you.

Then, in another Place, towards the End of the Letter, it is said, Pray, Sir, ask my Lord how I have been used.

Now this Letter being thus taken, and there is never a one of the rest that was a Lord, do you think any of the rest was meant? I must leave it to you.

If my Lord Preston had produced any Testimony to prove his own good Carriage and Behaviour towards the present Government, it had been very much for his Advantage, and might have had great Weight with you; but when Things appear only in this manner as they do now, I must leave it to you.

Gentlemen, 'tis a great Matter, and of great Moment; if those that conspire against the Kingdom, against the Protestant Religion, and against the present Government, may do it with Impunity, it will be worth the considering what the Consequence of that may be. Your own Consciences require you to do Right and Justice on both Sides; and if you are satisfied he is Not Guilty, you will find him so; if you are satisfied that he is Guilty, you will find him so.

L. Preston. My Lord, may I have the Liberty to say any thing before the Jury go out?

L. C. J. Holt. Your Lordship should have said what you had to say before: It is contrary to the Course of all Proceedings in such Cases to have any thing said to the Jury after the Court has summ'd up the Evidence; but we will dispense with it. What has your Lordship to say?

L. Preston. My Lord, I humbly thank your Lordship; I am not acquainted with such Proceedings.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you know I permitted your Lordship to interrupt me as much as you wou'd, which was never done before in any such Case.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is contrary to the Course of the Court: But yet if you have any thing to say to the Court or the Jury, for this once we permit it.

L. Preston. Gentlemen of the Jury—

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, what you have to say, pray direct yourself to the Court, that we may hear what it is.

L. Preston. My Lord, I only desire the Jury may be informed, that I am a Protestant, that I was baptized in the Religion of the Church of England, and have always lived in it, and hope to die in it. My Lord, 'tis true, things have been urged with Severity against me that are a little hard, in making that, which I hope will amount to but a Presumption, to be a Proof; as in the Case of the Letters that are written in a Cant, and my Intention to go to France, and those Words in the Letter, where my Lord the Bearer is named. But your Lordship observes, That that Letter is not directed to any body, and that is full of Cant as well as all the rest; Why should I be supposed to be the Bearer any more than either of the others, and they were found about one of them? But, my Lord, for the Reason of my going beyond Sea, it was this; I designed to go to Flanders, or any Place I could be driven to, and that ought not to be wondered at; for really I who had lived quietly after the Loss of my Places, upon this Revolution, and suffered great Inconveniences in my Estate, and was retired to my own House, with a Design to live a retired Life, was imprisoned twice in the Tower, and proclaimed a Traitor in every Market Town, without any Indictment; and my Imprisonment tended greatly to the impairing my Health and my Fortune; all this made me very uneasy here: and, my Lord, I went under under a fixed Resolution to go to Flanders, or any Place where I thought I could be quiet.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, your Lordship should have said all these Things before, for it is not the Course to reply upon the Court; if you had had any Thing to say, you know we heard you out of Course, and I let you interrupt me as much as you did think fit, though that has not been allowed at any Time before. But, my Lord, pray let me say one Thing more: Suppose your Lordship did think yourself hardly used, tho' I know not any Reason you had to think so; yet your Lordship must remember, it was in a Time of Danger that your Lordship was taken up before; and you had shewed your Dissatisfaction with the present Government, and therefore they were not to be blamed if they secured themselves against you: But if you had a Mind to retire into the Country, or to go Abroad, was France the only Country you could choose? A known declared Enemy's Country, at open War with the Government?

L. Preston. My Lord, I beg your Lordship's Pardon, if I give any Offence.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, you give me no Offence at all; but your Lordship is not right in the Course of Proceedings; I acquaint you with it, not by Way of Reproof, but by Way of Information.

L. Preston. Then I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will consider, that all that is alledged against me is but Presumption; my Life and Fortune, my Posterity and Reputation, are all at Stake; I leave all to the Jury's Consideration, and the God of Heaven direct them!

L. C. J. Holt. If you go on thus to reflect on the Court, you will make the Court reflect upon you. The Jury hear how the Evidence has been stated; I think it has been done very impartially, and without any Severity to you: Why should you think we would press the Evidence further than it ought to go against you? You are a Stranger to most of us, and I am sure we do not desire your Life; but still we must take care that Justice be done to the Government and the Kingdom, as well as to any particular Person; and Evidence that is given must have its due Weight and Consideration: If any one can design innocently to go into France, at this Time of Day, with such Papers, and in such a Manner, That I leave to the Jury's Consideration.

Then the Jury withdrew, to consider of the Evidence, and the Court adjourned for a little while, and returned in half an Hour; and the Jury came in, and were called over, and appeared.

Cl. of Ar. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Ar. Sir Richard Grabme, hold up your Hand (which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner. How say you? Is he Guilty of the Felony and High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods and Chattels had he?

Foreman. None at all that we know of.

Then the Verdict was recorded.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I think, truly, Gentlemen, you have done according to your Evidence; and though it be a hard Case upon particular Men that have brought themselves into these Inconveniences; yet it is necessary Justice should have its due Course, or else there is no longer Living for any Man in any Society or Government.

Then the Prisoner was carried back to Newgate, and the Court Adjourned till Monday Morning following at Seven o'Clock.

D'e Lune, xix Januarii, 1690.

The Court being sate, the Jury was called over, and the Appearance of those who answered Recorded. Then Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot were brought to the Bar; but Mr. Elliot was ordered to be carried back to Newgate, the King's Counsel resolving to try Mr. Ashton by himself.

JOHN ASHTON, hold up thy Hand (Which he did). Those Men that you shall hear called, and Personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord and Lady our King and Queen, and You, upon your Trial of your Life and Death. If therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Mr. Ashton. Pray stay a little.

L. C. J. Holt. What say you, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I humbly desire your Lordship will allow me the Benefit of Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray let him have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Mr. Ashton. And likewise that you would give my Solicitor Leave to be as near me as possibly he can, only to refresh my Memory, if I should forget any Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. That is a Thing you cannot of Right demand; the other, of Pen, Ink, and Paper, you may.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I shall acknowledge it as a very great Favour.

L. C. J. Holt. That is an Innovation that ought not to be; the Court cannot allow it.

Mr. Ashton. I acknowledge it a Favour; but if the Court thinks it not fit to allow it, whatsoever your Lordship shall order, I readily submit to.

L. C. J. Holt. You shall have Pen, Ink, and Paper; and what is fit for the Court to do, they will do it.

L. C. Baron. If the Witnesses say any Thing that you do not hear, you must speak to the Court, and you shall have them say it over again.

Pen, Ink, and Paper was given to the Prisoner.

Cl. of Ar. Sir William Hedges, Knight.

(He appeared.)

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I would not trouble your Lordship and myself with unnecessary Challenges; I intend to put myself with an intire Dependence upon the first Twelve Men that appear, be they who they will.

L. C. J. Holt. What you please for that Matter, you have your own Choice.

Mr. Ashton. Whoever they are, I submit to them; I know them not.

Cl. of Ar. Swear Sir William Hedges.

(Which was done.)

And so were the Eleven next succeeding in the Pannel; and the Names of the Twelve sworn follow.

Sir William Hedges, Knt.

John Wolstenholm, Esq.

James Boddington, Esq.

Thomas Johnson, Esq.

Ralph Bucknall, Esq.

Lucy Knightly, Esq.

Thomas Cutbbert, Esq.

John Herbert, Esq.

John Tully, Esq.

Thomas Smith, Esq.

William Withers, Esq. and

Daniel Thomas, Esq.

Then the Jury were numbered, and Proclamation made for Information and Evidence in the usual Manner.

Mr. Ashton. Gentlemen of the Jury, if you desire Pen, Ink, and Paper, I hope the Court will take care to provide them for you.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, ay, let the Gentlemen of the Jury have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

(Which was done.)

Cl. of Ar. John Ashton, Hold up thy Hand.

(Which he did.)

Gentlemen, You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause: He stands indicted by the Name of John Ashton, late of the Parish of St. Paul's Covent-Garden, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. For that he, together with Sir Richard Grabme, late of the Parish of St. Ann, in the Liberty of Westminster, Baronet, who stands convicted of High-Treason, and Edmund Elliot, late of the Parish of St. James, in the said Liberty, Gent. For that they, as false Traytors, &c. (Prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis) and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. Upon this Indictment he has been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and the Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is, to enquire whether he be Guilty of the Felony and High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty: If you find him Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the Felony and High-Treason committed, or at any Time since: If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire whether he fled for it: If you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels as if you had found him Guilty: If you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Knapp. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: This is an Indictment of High-Treason against John Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar; and the Indictment, Gentlemen, charges him, That he, as a false Traytor against their present Majesties King William and Queen Mary, his Supreme and Natural Lord and Lady, not weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, did, upon the Twenty-ninth of December last past, together with Sir Richard Grabme, who stands convicted, and one Edmund Elliot, and divers other ill-disposed Persons, unknown to the Jury, did conspire, imagine, and intend to depose and deprive the King and Queen, and to bring them to Death and Destruction, and to subvert and alter the Government; and to cause War and Rebellion within this Kingdom against their Majesties; and to bring these Intentions and Purposes to pass, the Prisoner, with the rest of them, did prepare divers Notes, Papers, Letters, and Memorandums in Writing, which were to instruct the French King, and other Enemies of the King and Queen, of the Number of their Majesties Men of War, how they were mann'd, and the Names of the Commanders of several of them, and to inform them how the Castles and Forts of Portsmouth, Southsea, and Gosport were fortified, and how they might be surpris'd by the King's Enemies; and of the Times, Ways and Means how they might invade the Kingdom, in order to depose the King and Queen; and to procure and incite such an Invasion: And further to bring these Purposes to pass, the Prisoner and the other Traytors did secretly conceal, and detain in their Custody, several Bills of Exchange, for the Payment of Money to the King's Enemies, and the several Letters, Notes and Memorandums before mentioned, which were for the Purposes I before opened to you: And further, to bring these Purposes and treasonable Intentions to pass, they did for One Hundred Pounds hire and prepare a Ship, which was to carry them secretly out of this Kingdom into France, with an Intent there to deliver these Instructions, and Memorandums, and Bills of Exchange into the Hands of their Majesties Enemies; and did hire a Boat to carry them to the Ship, and did enter into it at St. Clement Dunes, within your County, and rowed to the Ship, and went on board the Ship, and there with the Bills of Exchange, Notes and Memorandums, they set sail to go to France, in order to deliver them to the French King, and other Enemies of the King and Queen: And the Indictment doth further set forth, That there hath, and still is, a War between the French King and our King and Queen; and that he and his Subjects are Enemies to the King and Queen and their Subjects; and that during this War, the Prisoner, together with the rest that were before named, were adhering to the King and Queen's Enemies in this War; and in Pursuance thereof, did prepare such Letters and Instructions before opened, and had, and concealed in their Custody, and hired a Ship and a Boat, and went into the Ship, and set sail in order to go for France, to aid and assist the King's Enemies there with Money, Intelligence, and Counsel: And this is laid to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the Peace of the King and Queen, their Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. To this he hath pleaded Not Guilty: If we prove him Guilty, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: The Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted of a very heinous Offence, no less than High-Treason, the greatest Offence that can be committed against any human Law. You have heard the Particulars in the Indictment read. I will not trouble you with any Repetition, but go to open the Evidence according to the Steps that are obvious in the Case.

You

You have heard in general, the Design was to depose this King and Queen, which the Law expounds to be to bring them to Death and Destruction: You have heard it was to alter the Government, and cause a Rebellion in the Kingdom, and to bring in a foreign Power; and these are laid to be the Heads of the Offences that the Prisoner stands charged with.

Gentlemen, the first Step that was made in this Matter was by the Prisoner at the Bar; for there was one Mr. Burdett, which it seems had been one of his Acquaintance, and had undertaken to bring him acquainted with a Person that could furnish him with a Ship; and in order to that, one Mrs. Pratt, had the Management of the Smack which belonged to her Husband; she, by Burdett's Means, was brought to Burdett's House, where she met Mr. Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar, and they had some Treaties about the Hiring of a Ship; the Purpose declared by the Prisoner then, was to hire a Ship to go to any Part of France, and he would give a considerable Reward for it; he said it was for himself and Three more. They did not come to any Conclusion about the Ship, but there was an Appointment made, to have the Master of the Ship to meet with them at the Wander Tavern, in Ludgate-street; and in order to that, Pasley, that is the Master, and the Woman came there and met with Mr. Ashton; but because Mr. Burdett was not there, they came only to this Proposal, One Hundred and Fifty Pounds was demanded for the Hire of this Vessel; but there being no Conclusion then made, they thought it better to do it at Burdett's House; and about a Day after they came to Mr. Burdett's, and then it happen'd that Elliot, one of the Persons that is indicted, but not one before you, came thither too; and at that time it was agreed to give One Hundred Pounds for the Hire of the Ship. Ninety-three Guineas were deposited in Mrs. Burdett's Hands; and there was a Token past betwixt them by the breaking of a Six-pence, one Part whereof was to lie with Mr. Ashton, and the other with Mrs. Burdett; and whenever the Master of the Vessel brought back the broken Piece of Six-pence that Mr. Ashton had, then she was to pay the Money, that being the Sign that they had attained their Ends, and were safely landed in France.

The next Step they take is this, they appoint to meet at the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden; thither the Master of the Vessel and the Woman were to come, and that was near the Time that very Day that they designed to go down; and there was Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot, but the other Person did not appear as yet; there the Seamen were ordered to go along with them, and thence they went down to the Water-Side, to Surrey-Stairs, and the Waterman was called, and in the mean time came my Lord Presford and his Man to them, and they four did go in that Boat, by the Direction of the Master, and were carried on Board his Smack.

After they came on Board (for I would note the particular Circumstances) they were very apprehensive of Danger, for they knew what they went about, their own Guilt gave them Reason of Fear, and when they came near a Man of War, which lay at Anchor in Long-Reach, in the River, they desired the Master to hide them, that they might be safe from any Search, and they were hid and put close under the Hatches for some time; afterwards, when they came to another Place of Danger, it was by the Block-Houses at Gravesend (as they apprehended), there they desired to be hid again; and so they were put in that Place, where they were in very difficult Circumstances under the Hatches, and there they remained till a Pinnace, that had been sent to enquire after them, came and boarded this same Vessel.

Upon it's boarding of them, the Captain made a Search, and found these Gentlemen, my Lord Presford, Mr. Ashton, and Mr. Elliot, and I suppose his Man also, all hid under the Hatches.

Then the next Thing which is observable, Gentlemen, and the great Matter that will shew where the Treason was, is this, There was a Bundle of Papers that was on Board, ready prepared, if they had not been surprized, but could have had an Opportunity for it, to have been cast overboard, and there was Lead fixed to it, to have sunk it; and Mr. Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar, was the Person that concealed this Bundle of Papers betwixt his Body and his Coat, and from thence it was taken by the Captain that took them.

When they were so taken, the Captain, according to his Duty, was bringing the Prisoners to Whitehall, they desired to go on Shore at Gravesend, but the Captain did not think that so fit, but carried them on Board the George Frigate, and then you will hear these Gentlemen did fall into a Treaty with the Captain to suppress these Papers; and one Instance I remember they did tell him, that since there were a Parcel of Papers that he had taken out of my Lord Presford's Pocket, he might take off the Lead and fix it to those Papers, and sink the others; and what should he have for it? They promised him great Rewards, they told him he might be a great Man, he had an Opportunity of making his Fortune; and when that would not do, they used many Threatnings to him, all which will appear in the several Circumstances that the Witnesses will tell you of.

I come, Gentlemen, in the last Place to shew you, That all the whole Conspiracy, all this Treason, did lie hid under this Bundle of Papers that were taken from Mr. Ashton, and so he might well be afraid of having them opened, for there you will find a formed Design to alter this Government by a French Power and Assistance; and they contain so many Particulars, that in regard I would not do the King's Evidence Injury on the one hand, nor the Prisoner on the other, I will forbear repeating the particular Instances.

Gentlemen, you will have all the Letters and Papers read; but in the general, I must needs say, you will find it manifest, that there is a black and wicked Conspiracy to introduce a foreign Power to establish the Protestant Religion, and that by a Popish Interest, and to settle our Laws, Liberties, and Properties by a French Army. And let them pretend what they will for the Protestant Religion, when you hear these Papers read, no-body will imagine it was to any other Purpose (if the Plot had taken Effect) but to have what Religion, what Laws the French King had pleased to impose upon us.

If the Prisoner be Guilty, Gentlemen, of these Matters, I know you will do your Duty; but if he be not Guilty, God forbid that you should find him Guilty.

L. C. J. Holt. Call your Witnesses, Brother.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. We begin with Mrs. Pratt. [She was sworn.]

Sir W. Wil. Look you, Mrs. Pratt, here is another Gentleman at the Bar to be tried, against whom you are called as a Witness.

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, my Lord.

Sir W. Wil. Pray hear what we ask you. Pray do you give the Court and the Jury an Account, what Treaty you had with that Gentleman about a Vessel to go to France, and what was done in it?

Mrs. Pratt. If it please you, my Lord, I was sent for to Mr. Burdett's House in Queen-Street by Cheapside, to know whether he could have a Smack to go for France; I told him Yes, I could help him to one; he told me; there were two or three Gentlemen bound for France, as Merchants to fetch Silk, and I was at Mr. Burdett's two or three Times, and at last Mr. Ashton met me there.

L. C. J. Holt. Look upon the Gentleman, Is that he?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, that is the Gentleman, and he met me there, and meeting with Mr. Ashton, he hired the Vessel; but, first of all, he desired us to meet at the Dog Tavern upon Ludgate-Hill, to make the Bargain, and we did meet there, and were there about an Hour, or an Hour and a half, and Mr. Burdett did not come; and the next Morning Mr. Ashton desired me to meet him at Mr. Burdett's again; and the next Morning I met at Mr. Burdett's, and there we made the Bargain for 100*l*. and there was a Six-pence broke in two Pieces.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was the Hundred Pound paid?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes; but we agreed on the Tuesday Morning, and there was a Six-pence broken in two, and Mr. Ashton had both the Six-pences in his Hand, and the Tuesday Night the hundred Pound was paid at Mrs. Burdett's.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was by?

Mrs. Pratt. There was one Mr. Elliot, and the Master of the Smack, and Mrs. Burdett.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did they pay the Money in Gold or Silver?

Mrs. Pratt. This Gentleman, Mr. Ashton, told the Money, there was 93 Guineas and a Six-pence, and Mr. Ashton gave one half of the broken Six-pence with the 93 Guineas, to Mrs. Burdett; and when the Master of the Vessel brought the other Half of the Six-pence, or I, either of us, we were to have the 100 l.

Sir W. Wil. Pray to what Place did they hire the Ship to go?

Mrs. Pratt. To France.

Sir W. Wil. Who hired the Ship?---Mrs. Pratt. That Gentleman.

Sir W. Wil. Who paid the Money?

Mrs. Pratt. That Gentleman, Mr. Ashton.

Sir W. Wil. To what Hand was the Money paid?

Mrs. Pratt. It was paid in Mrs. Burdett's Bed-Chamber into her Hand.

Sir W. Wil. Who broke the Six-pence?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton, that Day the Bargain was made.

Sir W. Wil. Who carried it away?

Mrs. Pratt. When the Money was paid, Mr. Ashton had one, Mrs. Burdett had the other Part.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. To which Part of France were you hired to go?

Mrs. Pratt. To any Part where they could touch.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray did they give you any Note about any Thing?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, they gave me one Note to meet at the Dog-Tavern, and another to meet at the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who gave you the Notes?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton, and Mr. Elliot.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Look upon that Note.

[Which she did.]

Mrs. Pratt. This to my best Remembrance Mr. Ashton wrote, I cannot well remember the Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Mr. Ashton desire to meet at the Dog-Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and he did meet at the Dog-Tavern; but Burdett did not come.

L. C. J. Holt. When did you meet at the Dog-Tavern?

Mrs. Pratt. On the Monday Night before New-Year's Day.

L. C. J. Holt. When was the Money paid?

Mrs. Pratt. On Tuesday Night, at Mrs. Burdett's.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. After the Money was paid, what did you do the next Day?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton ordered a Note to be written, to meet at the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden, at one Mr. Rigby's.

L. C. J. Holt. At what Time were you to go to Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. A Wednesday Night.

L. C. J. Holt. But at what Time?

Mrs. Pratt. Some Time about Ten o' Clock, and we came there accordingly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who was with you at Rigby's?

Mrs. Pratt. There was the Master of the Vessel, Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot, and two Gentlemen more that I never saw before nor since.

Sir W. Wil. I ask you again, who first treated with you about hiring this Vessel?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Burdett first treated with me about it.

Sir W. Wil. Who next?---Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton.

Sir W. Wil. Who made the Bargain with you?---Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton.

Sir W. Wil. Who paid the Money?---Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton.

Sir W. Wil. What can you say more?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray let me ask you, when you came to Mr. Rigby's, in what Manner did you go away from his House, and what was said at parting?

Mrs. Pratt. Mr. Ashton was not there himself, at first; but he and Mr. Elliot, and two other Gentlemen were there afterwards, and Mr. Ashton's Wife said something about Papers hove in a Hat at Court, and about somebody's being chosen; and one of the Gentlemen said, there was nothing in that, I was one that was chosen last Year.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Ashton and Elliot go out together from Mr. Rigby's?---Mrs. Pratt. I did not see them go.

Mr. Trevor. Had you any Directions from Mr. Ashton to send for a Hamper or a Trunk?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, that was at Mr. Burdett's House.

Mr. Trevor. When was that Hamper and Trunk to be sent for?

Mrs. Pratt. On the Wednesday Night before we went to Rigby's House.

Sir W. Wil. Do you know one Wm. Pasley?---Mrs. Pratt. Yes.

Sir W. Wil. Was he with them?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, he was with them.

Sir W. Wil.

Sir W. Wil. What Occasion brought him thither?

Mrs. Pratt. I carried him to Mrs. Burdett's House.

Mr. Trevor. Pray did the Prisoner desire to see the Master of the Vessel, or speak with him?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and when I brought him, he said he liked him very well.

Mr. Trevor. What is the Master's Name?

Mrs. Pratt. William Pafeley.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Had you any Discourse with Mr. Ashton's Wife after they went away?

Mrs. Pratt. We had little Discourse, only she gave me some Victuals and Drink; and she said she hoped I would not tell of her Husband.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What else did she say?

Mrs. Pratt. She hoped God would deliver them out of the Lyon's Mouth.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did she say any Thing about Cock-crowing?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, she said she thought she should have no good Luck, for the Cock crowed.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who was by in the Chamber when the Money was paid?

Mrs. Pratt. There was the Master of the Vessel by, and Mrs. Burdett.

Juryman. My Lord, I heard her say something of some Papers, which I do not very well understand. Does she know of any Papers that the Prisoner had?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That was only about the Two Notes.

L. C. J. Holt. She talks of Papers being shaken in a Hat, but nothing can be made of it.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. If you would ask her any Questions before she goes, now is your time to do it.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I desire she may stand up again. Mrs. I ask a Question, not so much in Kindness to myself, as Justice to another Gentleman. You say Mr. Elliot writ one of the Notes?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, as I remember, it was that to meet at Mr. Rigby's.

Mr. Ashton. I do it to justify that Gentleman, I take that Note upon myself; and you say I hired the Ship, and Mr. Elliot was by.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Ashton, Mr. Elliot is not now upon his Trial, it concerns you only to ask such Questions as relate to yourself. What is said now concerning Mr. Elliot, goes for nothing against him.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I do it only to do him Justice.

L. C. J. Holt. But you are to ask Questions only for yourself.

Mr. Ashton. Remember, good Woman, you are upon your Oath; and have a Care of forswearing yourself; my Blood is at Stake.

Mrs. Pratt. I am sure I say nothing but the Truth.

Mr. Ashton. Did I ever speak to you of going to France?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, you did.

Mr. Ashton. As I hope for Salvation I did not.

Mrs. Pratt. And another Thing you told me more, if I helped this well away, you would help me to the Earning of 1000*l.* before Lady-Day.

Mr. Ashton. Gentlemen, as to what was said of that kind, of helping her to 1000*l.* is no great Matter to the Thing in Hand; for if I was minded to go out of the Kingdom, it was necessary to use all Arguments I could, to persuade her to help me to go away.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, you must stay your time before you speak to the Jury; make your Observations upon the Evidence to yourself, you shall be heard at large all that you can say in your proper Time.

Mr. Ashton. I do assure myself, my Lord, of all the Favour that can be shown to a Man in my Circumstances.

L. C. J. Holt. You shall have all that is just, I do assure you.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I am glad in the Circumstances I am in, that I am to be tried before your Lordship. But, good Woman, by Virtue of the Oath that you have taken, Did I ever speak to you directly or indirectly of going to France?

Mrs. Pratt. Yes, and you asked for a Hole to hide what you might have occasion to keep secret.

Mr. Ashton. But I ask you about going to France; did I speak to you about going to France?—Mrs. Pratt. Yes, you did.

Mr. Ashton. Then, as I hope to be saved, I never spoke directly or indirectly of going to France to her.

Mrs. Pratt. You were not to go for Holland or Flanders, I am sure.

Mr. Ashton. Nay, I did take it for granted, that you did know before I met you, that we were to go to France; but I never spoke to you of it in my Life, that I am sure of; but I only urge this to let your Lordship know, that Woman has forgotten herself.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton, You will have all lawful Favour; but your Time for arguing upon the Evidence is not come.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You must ask your Questions now, and make your Observations afterwards; you must reserve yourself for that, till after we have done.

Mr. Ashton. But then, my Lord, I shall have too many Things for my Memory to retain; and therefore I beg leave, as they occur to my Memory now, and as the Witnesses go along, to make my Observations.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Mrs. Pratt, Pray, when the Vessel was hired, and you were told it was to go to France, what Persons did Mr. Ashton say were to go with him?

Mrs. Pratt. Three Persons he said were to go, but he did not name them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then set up William Pafeley. [Which was done.]

Sir W. Williams. What can you say of any for the hiring of a Vessel?

Pafeley. I did not know the Vessel was hired before I came thither.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pristee tell us what thou dost know.

Pafeley. The Woman came to me when I was at Billingsgate, and said I must go a little Way along with her; and as we were going, she told me it was to go to M. Burdett's in Queen-Street; and when we came there, Elliot and Ashton were not within: But by that time we had been there a little while in came Mr. Ashton, and presently after him Mr. Elliot; and Mr. Ashton bid the Woman give him the Money out of the Place where it was.

Juryman. My Lord, we do not hear him.

Sir W. Williams. Pray begin again, and speak out.

Pafeley. I met with this Woman at Billingsgate, and she told me I must go a little way along with her.

L. C. J. Holt. That Woman, name her.

Pafeley. Mrs. Pratt; and I went along with her, and askt her where she was going; she said up into Queen-Street: And coming to Queen-Street, we went to Mr. Burdett's House, I was never there in my Life before. When I came there, Ashton nor Elliot were neither of them there; after a little while in came Ashton, and presently after in came Elliot, and he went up Stairs into the Bed-chamber; and being in the Bed-chamber, they brought the Money out, rolled up in a half Sheet of Paper, set up an Edge, and told it out at the Window.

L. C. J. Holt. Who told it?

Pafeley. Ashton told the Money out; and after the Money was told, he pulled out two pieces of a Six-pence, and when he had pulled out the two pieces of a Six-pence, he gives one half to this Mrs. Burdett, and the other half he kept himself; and he bid her pay this same Money, when the other half Six-pence that Ashton kept, came to this Woman, to match that which she had; and after the Money was told, we staid but a small while there, and came down Stairs; and when we came down Stairs we went down to Billingsgate. I think John Fisher was there, and we carried away with us a Trunk and a Hamper; John Fisher carried the Trunk, and another man the Hamper; and after that we had carried the Things on Board, I came up to the House again; and after I came up to the House, they directed us to go to the Seven-Stars in the little Piazza, there was a Note written to direct us, which ordered us to go thither betwixt 10 and 11 at Night. When we came there, I think there was neither of them there present, but by that time we had been there a small Space, in they both came and fate down; and a Gentleman came in and said the Cock crowed, and therefore they should have no good Luck. And then they talked about Papers being tossed in a Hat, I don't know what, and in came two Gentlemen more; just before we went away, to see them; and after those Gentlemen had seen them, they staid but a little while. Says Elliot to me, Master, come along with me; so I went along with him, and we came to Surrey-Stairs, and on the Corner on the Left-Hand, there was an Ale-house. He called the Waterman out of the Ale-house, and he bid me go before, and I went down: and by the Time that I had gotten down, the Waterman came and halled his Wherry to, and I went in, and by that time I was gotten to the Stern, down came Ashby and Elliot, and my Lord, and his Man.

L. C. J. Holt. You mean Ashton, not Ashby?

Pafeley. Yes, my Lord, that is the Man. And after they had got into the Wherry, and were seated, they bid the Waterman put off from Land, and so we went through Bridge; and after we were through Bridge, we got on Board the Smack, and they got into the Cabbin; and when they were got into the Cabbin, I called my Men, and bid them hale up the Anchor, and they did so; it proved to be but little Wind, but that Tide we got below half-way Tree, and were forced there to drop our Anchor, and stay till the next Morning: The next morning we weighed Anchor, and by that time it was Nine a-Clock, we got to Long-Reach, where lay the George Man of War, and there they hid.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And how was the hiding pray?

Mr. Pafeley. It was down in the Quarters under the Hatches.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did they hide?

Pafeley. We reckoned they would come on Board a Preffing, and they bid me shew my Protection.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did they desire to be hid?

Pafeley. Yes; and after we came by the George Man of War, they came up again, and remained afterwards in the Cabbin, till we came almost to Gravesend: A little before we came to Gravesend, they all hid again; and when they were hid, remained hid all, I think, but only Elliot, I think, he popt up; and they were resolved to go eat their Victuals; but then I told them there was a Barge a-coming, and so he went down again, and there they remained till they were taken, for the Barge was on Board presently, and found them there.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What kind of Place was it that they were hid in?

Pafeley. They could not sit, nor stand upright in it, but lay all along, or leaned on their Elbows.

L. C. J. Holt. What did they lie upon there, pray?

Pafeley. There was Ballast, and slit Deal a-top of the Ballast.

Mr. S. Thomp. Well, what happened when the Captain came on Board?

Pafeley. When Captain Billop came on Board, Master, says he, You have got a Couple of stout young Men, I must press them, or to that Effect. I hope not so, Captain, said I. Why what have you to shew, says he? I told him, I had a Protection. Let me see it, says he: So I shews him my Protection, and he looks in it. Well, says he, Master, I must look farther; and went to rights to the Place where they lay, and found them lying all together. After they were taken, and were come out, Captain Billop commanded them into his Boat, and commanded me and my two Men, to go into the Barge; afterwards he set his Man on shore at Hungerford Stairs; and when we came to Whitehall Bridge, the Gate was not opened, and we staid a little while at Whitehall Bridge; and when we came a Shore, Elliot gave me Half-a-Crown, and bid me say, when I came upon my Examination, that we were bound for Flanders, and not for France.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Where were you bound for, pray?

Pafeley. They examined me in the Chamber, when they paid the Money, if I knew they went to France; and I told them, Yes, very well.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Did they desire you to go to any particular Place in France?

Pafeley. No, we were to touch at any Place we could.

Sir W. Williams. Did they mention any thing of Flanders to you?

Pafeley. No, they did not.

L. C. J. Holt. Did any body mention going to France to you?

Pafeley. Yes, they did. They ask'd me, whether I could carry them to France safe.

L. C. J. Holt.

L. C. J. Holt. Who did ask you that?

Pafeley. Elliot or Ashton, one of the two, I cannot directly say which; but if I be not mistaken, it was Ashton.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When came you from Rigby's at the Seven-Stars, who came away with you?—Pafeley. Ashton and Elliot.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Elliot and Ashton both come out with you?

Pafeley. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. And did they part after they were come out?

Pafeley. Yes, Ashton did go away from us presently after we were come out.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. When you came on Board, had you any Discourse with Ashton about going to France?

Pafeley. No, not that I remember.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you go on foot from the Seven-Stars?—Pafeley. Yes.

L. C. J. Holt. And did they part after you come out?

Pafeley. Yes, they did.

L. C. J. Holt. And who went with you, did you say?

Pafeley. Elliot came with me.

L. C. J. Holt. Whither went Mr. Ashton then?

Pafeley. I cannot tell, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did he say to you when he went from you?

Pafeley. He bid me go along with Elliot.

L. C. J. Holt. Was Mr. Ashton there as soon as you?

Pafeley. Not quite; but by that time the Waterman had got the Boat to the Shore, and I in the Stern, they were all come down.

L. C. J. Holt. When Ashton came, who came along with him?

Pafeley. I saw them all upon the Stair-head; I was in the Boat when they came. I never saw my Lord, till he was upon the Stairs.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire to ask him, What the Sum of Money was that was paid at Burdett's?

Pafeley. It was 93 Guineas and Six-pence.

L. C. J. Holt. Who brought it?

Pafeley. It was laid down in the Window.

L. C. J. Holt. But I ask you, who brought it?

Pafeley. I did see Ashton bring it, and lay it down in the Window, and he told it out, and put it up again, and gave it to Mrs. Burdett.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire to know what is the usual Rate to go to Flanders? What may a Smack and three Men deserve?

Pafeley. Truly I cannot tell, I never went upon my own account in my Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Mrs. Pratt, what say you, what is the usual Rate to go for Flanders or Holland?

Mrs. Pratt. I believe they may go for a matter of 20*l.* or 30*l.*

L. C. J. Holt. You hear them, Gentlemen, what they say?

Juryman. Yes; but, my Lord, he says, he gave them Notice the Barge was a-coming: I desire to ask him, Did he know there was a Design to search him or no?

Pafeley. Sir, I knew that there was a Search for Seamen.

L. C. J. Holt. But did you know there was to be a Search, in order to the taking these Gentlemen on Board you? For that is the Question, I believe, the Jury would ask you.

Pafeley. No, I did not know of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But you say, these Gentlemen desired to be hid?

Pafeley. Yes.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And you hid them according to their Desire?—Pafeley. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before you went on Board, had you any Discourse of hiding? Did they ask you for a Place to hide in?

Pafeley. Yes, they did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who did?

Pafeley. Ashton and Elliot both ask'd if there were a Place in the Ship to hide them, and I told them, yes, there was.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton, will you ask him any Questions?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I desire to ask him this Question: Did we desire you to come and hide us, or did you desire us to go down?

Pafeley. You desired this of us, that if we saw any Man of War's Boat we would tell you, that you might be hid.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray repeat that over again, did they desire you to give them Information when any Boat was coming, that they might hide, or did you desire them to hide yourself?

Pafeley. They desired it of me.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then set up Charles Betsworth.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before Betsworth is examined, I would ask Pafeley one Question? Was there any Coat left on Board you?

Pafeley. Yes, there were two Coats of the Waterman's left on Board, and I took them and lock'd them up.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Is that the Man that own'd the Coats?

Pafeley. Yes, it is.

Sir W. Williams. Then, Betsworth, will you give an Account of what you know against the Prisoner at the Bar?

Betsworth. I cannot tell, my Lord, I never saw the Gentleman in my Life before, that I know of.

Sir W. Williams. Prithce hear, Friend, tell what you know of carrying any Gentlemen on Board the Smack.

Betsworth. If it please your Lordship, I was going Home from our Stairs about 7 or 8 a-Clock in the Evening; that is, from Surrey Stairs, and a Gentleman called, Sculler. Said I to him, Sir, where do you go? Says he, As far as the Tower; said I, 'Tis against Tide, I cannot go; it will be Ten a-Clock before it be high Water. Says he, Will you go with us at that Time? Said I, What will you give me? Will you give me Half-a-Crown? then I'll carry you down, for I cannot stay out so late for nothing, Yes, says he, I will give it you. Then I came and brought my Boat to the Shore; he asked me then, What my Name was; I told him Charles Betsworth. Says he, Will you be sure to stay till we come? Yes, said I, if you will be sure to come; and if I be not here, I will be at such a House in Ale-house, that was there by; the Sign of the Swan: So I staid, and carried a Fare or two over the Water; and about 11 a-Clock comes a Gentleman down, and calls Charles, and I went out a Doors down towards my Boat and there comes one Gentleman down, and a kind of a Seaman, as I thought; and the Seaman went into the Stern, and the Gentleman sat down at the Back-board, and there was three Gentlemen more came down the Stairs into the Boat; one had a whitish Cloak, and the other a loose Coat; and they brought a Leather Bag that would hold about a Peck; so I put off with them, and rowed down the River, and all that I heard them say, was, when we came under the Temple, says one of the Gentlemen, When do you hear the King goes away? Says another of them, He goes away a Tuesday; and when we got through Bridge, one of the Gentlemen ask'd where the Vessel lay, and a Man in the Stern said, On Southwark Side, over-against the Tower; and when we came a little below Battlebridge, near Pickle-Herring Stairs, the Master said, There lies the Vessel, and it had a long Pendant and a Top-Sail loose; so they paid me before they came on Board, and when they were got a-board, away rowed I, and when I came to Land to take out my Sculls and Things, there I mist my Cloaths; and I rowed after them, thinking they could not be got far; but when I came to the Place where they went on Board, the Vessel was gone, and I rowed down as low as Limehouse Reach, and in Blackwall Reach I overtook a Vessel, which I thought was the Vessel. I ask'd them who they belonged to, and they said they came from Horseleydown; and I made answer, I brought two Fares on Board a Vessel at Pickle-herring Stairs, and had forgot to take my Cloaths that they had; they made Answer, I brought no Fare on board them; so I rowed on farther beyond Barkinshelf, and because there was no Wind, I thought none could have gone beyond that Place, and therefore resolved to row back again when it was Flood; and I rowed up to Greenwich, but could not meet with the Vessel; and I heard nothing of my Cloaths, till last Friday was Seven-night I had my Cloaths brought to me.

Sir W. Williams. Can you say this Gentleman, Mr. Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar, was one of them that you carried on Board the Smack?

Betsworth. No, I know never a one of them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But you say the Persons that you took in at Surrey Stairs carried away your Cloaths with them.

Betsworth. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then I ask you, Pafeley, is that one of the Persons that he brought on Board your Smack?

Pafeley. Yes, he was.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How many came on Board the Smack?

Pafeley. Four; my Lord Preston, Mr. Ashton, Mr. Elliot, and my Lord Preston's Man.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take in your Pendant?

Pafeley. Yes, I did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When did you take it in?

Pafeley. As soon as we weighed Anchor.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. How came you to take it in?

Pafeley. Elliot spoke to me to take it in.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they mention how many were to go in the Smack?

Pafeley. He said, there were three of them, not four, as I remember, that were to go.

Sir W. Williams. Will you ask him any thing, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. No, Sir: But I desire the Woman may not go out of Court.

L. J. C. Holt. No, no; She shall stay.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then call John Fisher and James Amonds.

(Fisher stood up.)

Sir W. Williams. Pray do you acquaint the Court and the Jury what you know of this Matter, whether you carried any Things on Board the Smack, and what, and who came on Board, and what hapned?

Fisher. My Lord, a matter of six Hours before they came on Board, my Master carried me a-shore, and brought me to Mr. Burdett's House, and gave me a Trunk, and I went with it, and another Man with a Hamper, and brought them on Board; and about 11 or 12 a-Clock, my Master comes and brings Mr. Ashton and the other aboard; and he bid me go forward, and heave up the Anchor, and so I did, and we went down the River; but we could go but a little way because there was no Wind and when we came to Halfway-Tree, the Tide turning, we were forced to cast Anchor again, and stay till the Morning; and in the Morning we weigh'd Anchor again, about 8 a-Clock, and about 9 we came into Long-Reach, where lay the George Man of War, and then Mr. Ashton and they hid; and when we came below them again, they came up again till we came almost near the Black-Houses at Gravesend, and there they hid again; and Mr. Ashton, I think, came up afterwards, and bid me go down to the Hamper, and fetch them up some Victuals for their Dinner, and I went down and fetched up some Beef, and Mr. Ashton took hold of it; and I took a Bottle of Wine or two out; and just before I brought all the Victuals up, the Barge was spied a-coming to us; and then he went down again, and there they hid, and the Piece of Beef was a Top of them. Captain Billop, when he came near, waved his Hat, to bid us lie by; and we did lie by till he came up to us; and when he came up to us, says he, Master, you have gotten a Couple of good likely Men, worth the coming on Board for. Says the Master, I hope, Captain, you won't press them. What have you to keep you clear? Says he, I have a Protection. Have you, says the Captain? Let me see it. So he shewed him the Protection, and he read both our Names in it. Then, says he, Master, I must look farther; and he went down to the Quarter-Hatches, and took them up just where they lay. First my Lord came out; and he searched them all as they came out: Mr. Elliot came out next, and Mr. Ashton staid within, being the last Man. And after he had searched them, and done what he pleased, he got all the Papers and Writings; then he commanded us all to go into the Barge, and they came on Board the George Frigate in Long-Reach. And at the Ship, Mr. Elliot came to us, and bid us say, we were going to Flanders. And after we came to Whitehall, Mr. Ashton gave me a Half-Crown Piece, and bid me say, we were bound for Flanders, and not for France.

L. C. J. Holt. Was that after they were taken, or before?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. When was the first time, that they would have you say, they were bound for Flanders?

Fisher. It was on Board the George Frigate in Long-Reach.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it that bid you say so?

Fisher. Mr. Elliot and Mr. Ashton both, in the Ship's Steerage, where they came to us.

L. C. J. Pellexfen. Where was the next Place that they hid you say for?

Fisher. At Whitehall Bridge. Ashton gave me a Half-Crown Piece, and bid me lay so.

Juryman. Did he speak that aloud, or softly at Whitehall?

Fisher. He whispered it in my Ear.

L. C. J. Holt. Did they ever say they were bound for Flanders, till after they were taken?—Fisher. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What manner of Place was this that they hid in?

Fisher. An ugly Hole, where a Man has no Room to lie along at Ease; he can neither stand upright, nor sit upright.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you see the Waterman that brought them on Board?—Fisher. No.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was there any Waterman's Coat left?

Fisher. Yes, there was two.

L. C. J. Holt. But didst thou see the Boat?

Fisher. We were asleep when they came on Board; and the Boat was put off as soon as ever they came on Board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then as soon as ever they were on Board, you got up the Anchor, and pulled in the Pendant?—Fisher. Yes. We immediately hove up the Anchor, and took in the Pendant.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did any Sculler hale you afterwards, as you were going down?—Fisher. Yes, as we were going down there did.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did you say to him?

Fisher. I was not steering then; but this other Man made Answer.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, Will you ask him any Thing?

Mr. Ashton. When I gave you the Half-Crown that you speak of, what did I say to you?

Fisher. You bid me, when I came to be examined, say we were going to Flanders, and not to France.

Mr. Ashton. What did I say else?

Fisher. You bid me take that Half-Crown for to Night, to help to bear my Charges, and To-Morrow you would take farther Care of us.

Mr. Ashton. I told you, you were Prisoners now, and I gave you that, and told you I would take farther Care of you.

Fisher. You did not say we were Prisoners, but you said you gave me that to help to bear Charges for that Night, and on the Morrow you would take farther Care of us.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then set up James Amonds.

Sir W. Williams. Are you sworn, Friend?—Amonds. Yes, Sir.

Sir W. Williams. Then let the Court and the Jury know what you can say in this Matter.

Amonds. My Lord, they came on Board about 11 or 12 a-clock at Night; I was asleep in the Cabin, and heard a Boat coming aboard, and I turned out, and before I could get out of the Cabin, they were got aboard; and I see no Boat, nor nothing. So says the Master, Go forward and heave up the Anchor; and after we had heaved up the Anchor, I goes into the Ship to tow the Vessel down, because there was no Wind, and we would not let the Vessel go foul on the Ships that were in the River, and a little after we came on Board again; and when I came on Board again, they were all on Board, all Four. After that comes a Waterman, and I was at the Helm steering, and he called out to us, Oh hoe! says he; did not I bring a Parcel of Gentlemen on Board this Smack? Not as I know of, said I. Says he, I carried a Parcel of Gentlemen on Board some Smack that had a Pendant out, and I know not where it is; they carried my Cloaths on Board with them. Said I, I know nothing of it, nor I did not; for I saw neither Waterman nor Boat; so away the Waterman goes, and we went down the River, and when we came to Halfway Tree, we came to Anchor, and my Master went and laid himself down, the Tide being almost done, and there being no Wind, and Mr. Ashton and they lay in the Cabin; and says Mr. Ashton to me, Take Care of us now, and we will take Care of you hereafter; says he, we shall help you to many a Freight, and many a Pound. Ay, ay, said I, you will be taken Care of to be sure at Day-break, or when the Day comes on. About 8 a-Clock, we hove up the Anchor again, and fell down as low as Long Reach, where the George Frigate lay; and when we came there, they went down to hide in the Quarter-Hatches. I steered it down still; and when we were got past that Men of War, the Hatches were taken up, and they came up again out of the Quarters, and sat in the Cabin again, and we had a fresh Gale of Wind, and run down to Gravesend quickly, and when we came near the Block-Houses, said I, We are almost at the Block-Houses; then said they, We will go down and hide a little; and so they did till they were past there, then resolving to go to Dinner.

L. C. J. Holt. What time a-Day was this?

Amonds. About 11 a-Clock, as near as I can guess.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, they did go down to hide then, did they?

Amonds. Yes, they did go down and hide, and came up again, I am sure some of them; I heard some of them in the Cabin.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, what followed?

Amonds. After they were gotten up, and past Gravesend, this Man was sent for Victuals for them, and so he fetch'd them some Roast Beef, and some other Things; and just as the Roast Beef was going into the Cabin, said I, Here comes a Barge off to Pres. So when I cried, the Barge was a-coming, they took the Victuals down into the Quarters, and there lay they, and the Victuals a-top of them. And when the Barge came near us, the Captain waved his Hat to command us to lie by. Said I, We must lie by, for the Barge is coming up to us. And we clapp'd the Helm-a-lee, and lay by; and after we were laid by, the Barge came on Board us. Says the Captain of the Barge, You have got a Couple of likely, good Men, Master, said he. Ay, says the Master, but I hope you wont press them. Says the Captain, Have you got any thing to keep you clear? Yes, if it please you, noble Captain, I have got a Protection. I am sorry for that, says he, and comes on Board, for he staid all this time in the Barge; and smiling upon him, he comes on Board, and says he, Come, let's see your Protection. And the Master shew'd it him and he read it. Says the Captain, I must look a little farther. And he goes into the Cabin, and took up the Hatches, and there lay all these Gentlemen. They were something longer in coming up than he would have them; so says the Captain to his Men in the Barge, Come on Board, and see who is here. And so some of his Men did come on Board; and, to the best of my Remembrance, my Lord was the first Man that came up. And when my Lord came up, the Captain run his Hands into his Coat Pockets, to feel for Papers, as I suppose; and my Lord desired the Captain to be kind, and take nothing away. Says he, I'll take nothing but Papers; 'tis Papers I look for. And he pull'd out a Watch, and gave it him again. After that, Elliot came out; and whether he found any thing upon Mr. Elliot, or no, I cannot tell. Mr. Ashton was the last that came up; and when he came up, a Waterman of the Captain's calls to him, and says, That Gentleman that came up last has put something into his Bosom, but what I can't tell. So the Captain took Mr. Ashton by the Arm, and turn'd him about, and, says he, What did you put in your Bosom? Says Mr. Ashton, Nothing but my Handkerchief; and pull'd out his Handkerchief, and shew'd him. Then the Captain put his Hand in, and pull'd out Papers, with a Piece of Lead tied to them. And that is all that I saw.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But tell us what happen'd afterwards?

Amonds. When that was done, the Captain commanded us all into his Barge; and I rowed, and some of the rest row'd, it being cold Weather, till we came up to London. After we came up to London, they did not say any thing to me, because I was a-rowing till then. It seems they did give them some Money, but they gave me none, not till I came into Whitehall; and then my Lord's Man came to me, and call'd me a one Side; says he, Here's Half-a-Crown, will serve you to Night; and be sure, when you come to be examined, that you say, you were bound for Flanders, and not for France, and you will be taken farther Care of To-morrow.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What manner of Place is that Quarter-Hatches?

Amonds. They could neither sit, nor stand upright in it.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What did they lie upon?

Amonds. There were three or four slit Deals that were laid over the Bal-last, but it seems they had shuffled 'em on one Side when they were taken, for the Ballast lay open.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did the Waterman that brought these Men on Board you, leave his Coat there?

Amonds. I did not see the Boat, nor the Waterman; and therefore I am not able to say any thing about it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came the Pendant to be taken down?

Amonds. I can't tell that; I was in the Skiff when it was taken down.

Juryman. My Lord, I do not well understand how the Papers came to be taken away from Mr. Ashton.

L. C. J. Holt. He tells you, Mr. Ashton was seen to put his Hand with something into his Bosom; and being tax'd with it, he said it was his Handkerchief; and the Captain put in his Hand, and pull'd out a Bundle of Papers.

Juryman. Did he see Ashton take away the Papers from any other Place?

Amonds. No, an't please your Honour, I did not see them till they were taken out of his Bosom.

L. C. J. Holt. Did you see Captain Billop take the Papers from out Mr. Ashton's Coat?—Amonds. Yes, I did.

L. C. J. Holt. Where were they before they spy'd the Barge a-coming?

Amonds. If it please your Honour, I heard 'em talk; I thought they had been up, but it seems there was but one of 'em up when they said, the Barge was coming aboard: I was at the Helm, and heard 'em talk.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you knew nothing of these Papers, but when you saw them taken out of Ashton's Bosom?—Amonds. No, my Lord.

Sir W. Williams. If you will ask him any thing, Mr. Ashton, now you may.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, Friend, had not I been up first, and search'd before the Papers were taken?—Amonds. Not as I know of.

Mr. Ashton. Did not I go down into the Hold to take my Hat, and call to you, and desired that I might go down for my Hat?

Amonds. I can't tell; for when I saw the Papers taken from you, I was in the Stern; I was not down.

Mr. Ashton. Had not I been searched first?

Amonds. Not that I know of, till you were in the Stern.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then swear Captain Billop.

Which was done, he standing up by the Sheriff.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Captain, I suppose you may be heard from that Place.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I desire the Witneses may come down, else I shall not be able to distinguish what he says: It is the proper Place for him I think.

L. C. J. Holt. Let him come down.

Mr. Ashton. I humbly desire, my Lord, that the Witneses may all be obliged to stay in Court.

L. C. J. Holt. Let them all stay.

Sir W. Williams. You are sworn, Sir: Are you not?

Captain Billop. Yes, I am.

Sir W. Williams. Then, pray, will you give an Account where you took these Persons, how you took 'em, what you found, and how you disposed of it?

Capt. Billop. Must I begin from the Beginning?

Sir W. Williams. Yes; Tell your whole Knowledge, in Order of Time, as it fell out.

Capt. Billop. What, from the Time I went out?

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Make it as short as you can.

Sir W. Williams. Yes, you must tell all; for you speak now to a new Jury, and here is another Prisoner at the Bar to be tried.

Capt. Billop. The last of December, about Two a-Clock, or between One and Two, my Lord of Danby came to me at one of the Doors of the House of Lords, and told me, his Father must speak with me; and he carried me up to my Lord Lindsey's Chamber; and in a little time my Lord President came there, and told me, he heard there were divers Persons that had Papers of dangerous Consequence, and were going to France, and desired me to use my Skill for my seizing and securing of the Papers.

Papers. I began then to talk of what was proper for such an Undertaking; and I told my Lord, I thought the best Way was to go to Woolwich or Deptford, and to take a Man of War's Pinnace with us: Upon that, my Lord of Danby being by, said, he knew of a Boat that he could have, which was my Lord Duke of Grafton's; and my Lady Duchess had lent it him, and he would go and get it ready: Upon this my Lord President said, he would give me a Note of the Name of the Vessel, and where she went out; and likewise a Letter to another Person, that would instruct me farther, and shew me the Vessel: Accordingly my Lord President gave me the Letter, and I went away to look for the Person, but could not find him. My Lord Danby came to Tower-Wharf himself with the Boat; and I left a Man there to bring me Word when the Boat came up at the Place where I was; and Captain Stringer and Sir Thomas Taylor came there to me. After my Lord of Danby had told me what I had in the Boat, I told him, I thought there were not Arms enough; and therefore it were best to go to the Tower, to borrow some Arms from thence: When we came to the Tower, my Lord Lucas was not come in; and when I had staid a little Time, he did come in: And when I had acquainted him with my Business, he sent for an Officer of the Guard, and there we borrowed some Arms, a Blunderbuss of his, and a Carbine, and the like; and about Eleven a-Clock, or somewhat past, we put off from Tower-Wharf. It was Calm, and we rowed down towards Gravesend; and we went aboard a Vessel or two; but I was not willing to lose much Time, because I was resolved to take them before they were gotten too far: So we rowed away for Gravesend, where I refreshed my Men, and afterwards went down into the Hope; and I did judge that no Vessel that came from London that Tide could be a-head of me. I went on board several Vessels that lay in the River, in order unto the Pressing of Men; and I went on board all Sorts of Vessels, because I would give no Suspicion of what I was about; and having been on board of several, I pressed two or three Barkin Men; and one particularly, that knew all the Vessels upon the River; and I made him to row very near to me, that I might talk to him; I had got the Names of a great many Smacks, and gave it out, that I would press a Smack to carry for a Tender to my Ship, when the Fleet went out; and naming this Smack that I was to go to search, I told him, I heard such a Smack sailed well, and I had Thoughts of pressing her: He told me, She was old: But said I, She will serve a Summer well enough; and that is it I intend to press, if I can find her. Says he, I'll shew you her, I know her when I see her. So we went on board several Vessels as we went along. And as we were rowing along, before we came to the Next Point by Tilbury-Fort, we saw several Smacks coming down the River; and when we came about the Point, the headmost Smack of all, the Fellow lookt out, and said, Yonder is the Thomas and Elizabeth. Then I called to one of my Men to wave, and bring them to lie by; which they did, and they lay by till I came on board. When I came on board, I saw two lusty Men stand by the Master; said I, Master, you have got two good lusty Fellows that would serve the King; but I'll be kind and civil to you, I'll take but one. Says the Master, I hope not so, for I have a Protection. With that, I came on board, and took his Protection in my Hand, and read it. As soon as I had read it, I ask'd him, If he had no more Men upon Deck than what I saw? He said, No. Then, said I, I must look a little farther. And I went into the Quarters, and took up the Scuttle, and the Hatches, and I saw some Gentlemen lie. Oh, said I, what a pretty Posture is this! Where are we a-going? Gentlemen, you must turn out. The first that came to Hand was my Lord Preston; but I did not know him then, nor some Time after I was in the Boat with him: So I took hold of him, and help'd him up; and when he was up, said I, Sir, I must search you. Says he, I hope you will take nothing from me. Nothing, said I, but Papers. So I searched all his Pockets; and as I found any Papers, I put them into my own Coat-Pocket. And I took his Watch, and pull'd it out, and gave it him again: After that I had search'd him, came up Mr. Elliot the first Man, and the next was Mr. Ashton, who crowded up while Elliot came up, in his Night-Cap. I think, Mr. Ashton, you had your Night-Cap on. So Mr. Ashton goes down again, and puts on a Perriwig, I think; but coming up again, one of my Seamen sees him take something, and put it into his Bosom: He follows Mr. Ashton quick, and pulls me by the Coat: and, says he, That Gentleman has got something in his Bosom: So I took hold of him, and turned him round: Said I, Mr. Ashton, what have you got in your Bosom? Nothing, says he, but a Handkerchief; and immediately he put his Hand into his Bosom, and pluck'd out the Handkerchief, and shew'd me. As soon as he had pulled out the Handkerchief, I put my Hand into his Bosom, and there I met with the Pacquet that had the Lead affix'd to't; and pulling it out, I clapp'd it into my own Pocket; for I thought that was the Matter of Moment that I was to secure. So I ordered them to go into the Boat, and the Master of the Vessel to let go his Anchor: and two Men I left in the Vessel, whom I ordered to search, and to secure what they found till farther Order; and I left two Muskets with them. And after we were in the Boat, they desired to have something handed in, which I gave Order for, a Hamper, and a Night Bag; and away we put off from the Vessel, and rowed up; it was against Tide, and very cold Weather. In a little Time Mr. Elliot called one of the Gentlemen My Lord; then I whisper'd him, and ask'd him who that Lord was; and he told me, It was my Lord Preston. Then I saluted my Lord; and my Lord was pleas'd to say, he was very well satisfied they were fallen into the Hands of a civil Gentleman. So rowing up against Tide, and it being a Westerly Wind, which blow'd very fresh, my Lord desired that I would let them stop at Gravesend, till the Tide turned, that they might refresh themselves. I begged his Pardon, and said, there was a Ship in Long-Reach, the George Frigate, and we would stop there; and I did not doubt but I could command the great Cabin for his Accommodation; and there he might have any Thing that he wanted. My Lord seem'd contented with it: but before we came on board the Man of War, there happen'd a great deal of Discourse betwixt us of several Things.

Sir W. Williams. Pray repeat it, as well as you can remember; what Discourse happened?

Capt. Billop. Truly, my Lord Preston being cold, and the Hamper standing by, says he, Captain Billop, we have not eaten, we will eat, if you will. And there was a Piece of Beef at the Top of the Hamper, and Bottles of Wine; and I opened the Hamper, sitting fairest for it, and handed out the Beef, the Bread, and the Bottles; and after we had eaten what we would, my Lord ordered the rest to be given to the Men that were the Boat's Crew; and after we had done this, and taken out a Bottle or two, and shut up the Hamper again, my Lord Preston drank to me once or twice, and seem'd very well satisfied and pleas'd with his Usage. He told me, he was sensible of my Civilities; and if ever it lay in his Power, he would not forget me. So we drank again, and talk'd again; but before we came to the Ship, my Lord Preston told me, that if ever it lay in his Power, he would be sure to make an Acknowledgment of the Civility I had shew'd him. And, to the best of my Memory, he had this Expression, If there ever was any Thing he could serve me in, he would do it with all his Heart, if I would but dispose of the Pacquet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. What would Mr. Ashton have had you done? What did he say to you?

Captain Billop. Mr. Ashton said, it would do me no Good to injure so many Gentlemen; and desired me that I would throw the Pacquet over-board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he mean by so many Gentlemen?

Captain Billop. My Lord, I cannot tell; but that was his Expression.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Who desired you to throw the Pacquet over-board?

Captain Billop. Mr. Ashton did several Times.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he say to you? What Arguments did he use?

Captain Billop. My Lord, it was so many Times over, and so much Mixture of Discourse we had, that I am not able to tell the Particulars.

L. C. J. Holt. But what Arguments did he use?

Captain Billop. I don't know that he used any more great Arguments, more than what I have told you already.

L. C. J. Holt. Say that again that you said before.

Captain Billop. He said, 'twould do me no Good to injure so many Gentlemen. Prithee, Captain Billop, says he, throw it over-board.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What did he say farther?

Captain Billop. I'll tell you, if you'll give me leave. Mr. Ashton did say, a little after this, with a great deal of Insinuation, Captain Billop, What if you should turn about, and go along with us? No, Mr. Ashton, said I, that I cannot do. Says Mr. Elliot, Prithee, throw the Pacquet over-board. This they did as we came up the River; and 'tis the most that I can remember, 'till we came on board the George; and when we came on board the George, Elliot called me into the Steerage, and desired me, of all Love, that I would dispose of the Pacquet: And he said, that now I had an Opportunity to make myself as Rich, and as Great as I would, and nobody could see it, if I did throw it away. While I was in the Ship, Mr. Ashton, my Lord, and Mr. Elliot were with me in the Steerage. Said I, I shall be taken notice of to be whispering; pray forbear. Ashton then spoke to me again, to desire me to throw the Pacquet over-board. By this Time the Victuals was handed in, and there we eat and drank, and my Lord smok'd a Pipe of Tobacco before the Tide turned; and when the Tide made, we went into the Boat again, and rowed up towards London, and they were using these Sorts of Arguments over and over again. And once Mr. Elliot, I think 'twas, to the best of my Remembrance, told me, Now you have it in your Power to make your Fortune, and may be as great a Man, and as rich a Man as you can desire. And Mr. Ashton said some Words something to the same Purpose: Prithee, said he, throw it over-board: What Good will it do you? So I refusing it, as I did many Times, Mr. Elliot told me, that I might take the Letters that were taken in my Lord Preston's Pocket, and tie the Lead to them, and throw the Pacquet over-board. No, said I, Mr. Elliot; sure you would take the King's Counsel to be a very odd Sort of Men, that they cannot find out such a Thing as this, Prithee, dear Billop, said he, throw it over-board; many Times whispering me in the Ear; and so did Mr. Ashton many Times, saying, You may do us a great Kindness in it. And we drank, and had several Intermixions; and they at me again, and I denied them, and they desired; and then they at it again: And Mr. Elliot then told me, Prithee, dear Billop, throw it over-board. Said I, Mr. Elliot, If I should be so great a Villain to do such a Thing, if ever it was your Day, would you trust me again? Put it to be your own Case. Says he, You have Gentlemen to deal withal. But, said I, I will never put it into your Power. Mr. Elliot seem'd to be angry at this, and said, Every Dog had his Day. Said I, I hope never to see it your Day: But I pray, forbear this Discourse; let me beg that of you; for I do not desire to be provoked to use you otherwise than as Gentlemen. And after that, they never urg'd me more to throw the Pacquet over-board: But Mr. Elliot was angry, and very much disturbed, and wish'd a Thunder-bolt might strike the Boat and sink it. So I brought them up, through London-Bridge, and they said no more about the Pacquet; but Elliot wish'd, that London-Bridge might have fallen on our Heads. At length I brought them to Whitehall; and I put my Man ashore at Hungerford Stairs, that he might get before, and give the Porter Notice at Whitehall-Bridge, that he might open the Gate. I brought my Lord Preston and the rest to the Bridge; and while I was arming my Men, to guard them up to my Lord Nottingham's Office, I suppose they then took the Opportunity to give the Men Money, getting near to them; I know nothing of that: But I carried them up to my Lord Nottingham's, and there I deliver'd them and the Pacquet to my Lord. After some Time, the Pacquet lay upon the Table, and my Lord Nottingham sends me for my Lord Preston. When my Lord Preston came in, I withdrew without bidding, and the Pacquet lay upon the Table unopen'd: And when my Lord Preston came out, I went in on myself, and the Pacquet lay in the same Place and Posture, and not opened. And I stay'd while Mr. Ashton was called in, and my Lord Nottingham asked him a great many Questions.

Mr. Ashton. Pray repeat those Questions, Captain Billop; and what Answers I made.

Captain Billop. Truly, my Memory does not serve me to remember all of them, and I was in a very uneasy Condition at that Time, and would much much rather have been in my Bed, than any where else: For the Night before I went down, I had a Plaister of Spanish Flies put to my Back, and they had raised a great Blister, and it had not been dressed so long, that the Napkin that was applied stuck so to it, that the Flesh was jagged, and I was in a great deal of Pain, so that I did not mind so much as I should have done at another time, what was said.

Mr. Ashton. But pray, Captain, remember as much as you can what pass'd. Capt. Billop. But I'll tell you what I remember; I remember my Lord Nottingham ask'd, who I took the Packet from? And you owned, I took it from you.

Sir W. Wil. Pray, Mr. Ashton, give us leave to have done with him, and then you shall ask him what you please. Pray go on, Captain Billop.

Capt. Billop. Then my Lord Nottingham sent for Mr. Elliot in, and ask'd him whether he was going? And he said for Flanders. My Lord asked him, what he was going there for? He said, He was going to seek his Bread; he was turned out of all at Home, and he had rather go Abroad to seek his Bread, than stay at Home to starve.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Was this the Lead that you took fixed to the Packet? Capt. Billop. Yes, Sir; that is the Lead.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did you take that Lead, with the Pacquet, out of Mr. Ashton's Bosom?

Capt. Billop. This was tied fast to the Packet that was taken out of Mr. Ashton's bosom. These honest Men saw me take it.

Sir W. Wil. Now, if you have a Mind to ask him any Questions, you may.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, Captain Billop, did not you search me before you took the Pacquet upon me?

Capt. Billop. No, not that I remember.

Mr. Ashton. Had not you taken some other Papers from me before?

Capt. Billop. No, Sir; I took none from you but the Pacquet.

Mr. Ashton. Pray recollect yourself, for perhaps my Life may turn upon it: You are as much a Witness for me, as for the King; you are to swear the Truth, and the whole Truth.

Capt. Billop. And I will do you all the Justice I can, I will assure you.

L. C. J. Holt. Answer his Question, Captain Billop.

Mr. Ashton. Was not I the first Man that spoke to you after we came up?

Capt. Billop. No, Mr. Elliot was the first Man that spoke to me, that I knew.

Mr. Ashton. Did not I ask you to give me leave to go down for my Hat?

Capt. Billop. Truly, I don't remember that.

Mr. Ashton. Did not you reply, That the Man should go down and fetch my Hat?

Capt. Billop. 'Tis likely I might, but I don't remember it.

Mr. Ashton. Had not you searched me then, and taken my Papers from me?

Capt. Billop. No, Mr. Ashton; for upon the Oath that I have taken, I took no Papers that I remember, but the Papers that I took out of my Lord Preston's Pocket, and the Pacquet that I took out of your Bosom; for my Lord Nottingham ask'd me, if that Pacquet was all the Letters I took? I told him no; and shewed him the Papers I took out of my Lord Preston's Pocket, and they proved to be of no Consequence, and my Lord Nottingham gave them me again, and I carried them to my Lord Preston.

Mr. Ashton. Did I not go down into the Hole for my Hat?

Capt. Billop. I believe you might.

Mr. Ashton. And was it not after that that you took the Papers out of my Breast?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I believe it was.

Mr. Ashton. Where is your Man that called to you, and said, I put something in my Breast?

Capt. Billop. Here he is by me, if you would ask him any thing?

Mr. Ashton. You say, I spoke to you about disposing of these Papers: Pray, from the Time that we came into your Boat, before we came on Board the George Man of War, did I speak to you?

Capt. Billop. Yes, of the Pacquet you did: You said, What Good would it do me to injure so many Gentlemen?

Mr. Ashton. There pass'd no more than general Discourse before we came on Board.

Capt. Billop. Yes, Mr. Ashton, I'll tell you another Thing you put me in mind of. When you saw that, though you were so eager with me, nothing would prevail, you said, I know Capt. Billop, and have known him many Years; and nothing will prevail on him, if he have no mind to it: And I know, if he will serve us, he will serve us generously, and like a Gentleman.

Sir W. Wil. Speak that again.

Capt. Billop. He said, I know Capt. Billop; if he will serve us, he will do it generously, and like a Gentleman.

L. C. J. Holt. Who said so?—Capt. Billop. Mr. Ashton.

Mr. Ashton. Did I speak to you to dispose of the Papers after we came from on Board the Ship? I suppose you remember it was cold, and the Tilt was call'd for, to be laid over us, and I fell asleep; and you know I never wak'd, nor spoke, till I came to London-Bridge.

Capt. Billop. Yes, yes; we had the Tilt over us.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray speak your Questions out, that we may hear 'em, Mr. Ashton.

Capt. Billop. Mr. Ashton did go to Sleep a while; but he had many times urg'd me, and spoke to me to throw the Papers over-board.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was it that told you, Every Dog had his Day?

Capt. Billop. That was Elliot.

Sir W. Wil. Was there any Discourse about turning of the Tide?

Capt. Billop. Mr. Elliot said, You have now an Opportunity to make your own Fortune, and you may be as Great, and as Rich as you please; for 'tis impossible the Tide can run long this way.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did Mr. Ashton say any thing about going along with them?

Capt. Billop. Yes: You may remember, Mr. Ashton, that you said, Come, go along with us, you may do as well there, or better than you do here.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did he tell you where you were to go with 'em?

Capt. Billop. No, Sir; nor I did not ask him the Question.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, When did you give my Lord Nottingham these Papers?

Capt. Billop. Do you mean that Bundle that I took out of your Bosom?

Mr. Ashton. Yes.

Capt. Billop. As soon as ever I followed my Lord Nottingham into his Room, I pull'd 'em out, and gave 'em him.

Mr. Ashton. Did not you go out of my Lord Nottingham's Room, and give my Lord Nottingham some loose Papers?—Capt. Billop. Yes.

Mr. Ashton. After this, was not my Lord Preston called in to be examined?—Capt. Billop. Yes.

Mr. Ashton. How long was my Lord Preston in the Room while you were out?—Capt. Billop. I can't tell very well.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, Sir, answer that Question.

Capt. Billop. I believe it might be half a quarter of an Hour: I do not think it was much more.

Mr. Ashton. I believe you must remember some sort of Discourse that was betwixt you and Captain Elliot, even to a Quarrel almost. And did you not speak to my Lord Nottingham's Servants, to fetch your Hat out of my Lord Nottingham's Room?

Capt. Billop. Yes, I do remember that.

Mr. Ashton. This must be a good considerable Time: It was all the Time that my Lord Preston was within with my Lord Nottingham, that you were out?—Capt. Billop. Yes, it was.

Mr. Ashton. And all that while was not the Bundle of Papers out of your Sight?—Capt. Billop. It lay upon the Table.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, answer my Question: Was it not out of your Sight?

Capt. Billop. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, yes; it must be, for he was out of the Room.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. When you came into the Room, did you find the Papers in the same Condition?

Capt. Billop. Yes, they were un-opened, except that my Lord had taken off the Lead, and a little Paper fell loose from the rest.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, take Notice of that, Gentlemen.

L. C. J. Holt. But pray don't infer more from thence than it will bear.

Mr. Ashton. It seems some of the Papers were taken out.

L. C. J. Holt. He does not say any such thing, that some of the Papers were taken out.

Mr. Ashton. He says, something was cut, and some Papers fell out.

Capt. Billop. There was a little Paper or two tied to the great Pacquet.

L. C. J. Holt. What became of them?

Capt. Billop. They were cut loose, but not opened.

Mr. Ashton. How can you tell they were not opened?

Capt. Billop. Because I stood by when they were cut.

Mr. Ashton. But how can you tell that; for you see the little Papers taken, and they were loose from the others?

Capt. Billop. They were taken from the great Bundle before I went out.

Mr. Ashton. Had not my Lord opened those Papers before you came in?

Capt. Billop. No.

Mr. Ashton. How can you tell that?

Capt. Billop. I tell you, as near as I can judge, they lay in the same Posture that I left them in.

Mr. Ashton. Was the Pacquet sealed when you took it?

Capt. Billop. No; but it was tied. There were several Letters in it that were sealed; it was tied up very hard.

Mr. Ashton. I do not question but my Lord Nottingham will do me the Justice to say how long he was in the Room.

L. C. J. Holt. You must not comment, nor make your Observations till your proper Time.

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, I desire he may be asked, who was with my Lord Nottingham when my Lord Preston was there?

Capt. Billop. There was Nobody else then.

Juryman. Then 'tis not probable they were altered before Captain Billop came in.

Mr. Ashton. But I hope Probabilities shall not be Evidence to condemn any Man.

Juryman. Those two little Papers you speak of, were they severed from the Pacquet?

Capt. Billop. I cannot tell whether they were or no; they seemed loose upon untying the Bundle.

L. C. J. Holt. Were they cut in your Presence?

Capt. Billop. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot say that I did see them cut.

Mr. Ashton. Pray take Notice of that, Gentlemen of the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. They are Twelve honest Gentlemen, they will do you right.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Observe what the Witness says; he says, That he does not remember that they were cut in his Presence, but he does not say they were not.

Mr. Ashton. If he does not swear they were, it is reasonable to conclude they were not cut in his Presence.

L. C. J. Holt. He says, the great Pacquet was not opened, the two little Papers were loose from the rest of the great Bundle.

Capt. Billop. There might be two or three of them, less or more, I cannot tell.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You will be farther satisfied in this Matter upon my Lord Nottingham's Evidence, I suppose.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. We have done with Capt. Billop for the present. Pray call Johnson. [Who was sworn.]

Sir W. Wil. Were you at the taking of that Gentleman, and the other in the Smack?—Johnson. Yes, I was.

Sir W. Wil. Then pray give an Account of the Matter how it was?

Johnson. We went down in a Pleasure Boat, and went to the Tower, we set through Bridge against Tide, my Lord of Danby was with us; and when we came to Tower Wharf, there they went to the Tower for Arms, and we stayed till Ebbing Water, and rowed to Gravesend; and when we came to Gravesend, we went on Board several Ships, and I thought we were going a-Pressing; and we stayed at Gravesend the Time of the Writing of a Letter, and then we went both into the Boat again, and rowed after a Smack that had gained of us; but that not being the Smack, we turned back again, and then it was High high Water: And when we came to the upper end of the Hope we saw several Smacks coming, and there was a Fisherman on board that said, That was the Smack the Captain enquired after, that was coming down there; and when they came on board, the Captain said, there were two or three brave Men, and he hoped he could spare one of them: and the Master said, he hoped he would take none of them, because they had a Protection, which he shewed to the Captain. Then the Captain went in and bid me take some small Arms, and go on board with him, and told the Master he must look a little further; and the Boards were taken up, and I saw a great Piece of Roast-Beef, and under that, my Lord Preston, and Mr. Elliot, and this Gentleman, Mr. Ashton: My Lord Preston came up first, and Mr. Elliot next to him; and I see this Gentleman take up something and put it into his Bosom, and I told the Captain of it, and he asked him what it was, and he said, Nothing but his Handkerchief, and plucked out the Handkerchief; but the Captain put his Hand into his Bosom, and pulled out something else.

L. C. J. Holt. What was it?

Johnson. It was a Parcel of Papers tied up, with a Piece of Lead tied to it, for I came up close after him, and see him take it up.

Sir W. Williams. What else were there found with the Papers? was not there some Seals?

Johnson. That was afterwards; but when the Captain asked him what he had gotten in his Bosom, he pulled out his Handkerchief, and said, Nothing but his Handkerchief; but the Captain took the other Papers out of his Bosom, and so I went down, and there were the two Seals, and I took them up; and when I came up, Elliot had a pair of black Whiskers on, and he borrowed a Pair of Scissars and cut them off, and said, he should remember me again if ever he lived, he should know me by my Tooth being out. And coming up into Long-reach, Elliot was a cold, and got to the Oar and rowed, and said, You row as if you were rowing to Prison; and he wished that a Thunder-bolt might drop into the Boat, and that London-Bridge might drop down upon his Head. And when we came up to Whitehall, I stood a Guard over them.

Juryman. Did you see Captain Billog take the Packet of Letters from that Gentleman's Breast?

Johnson. Yes, I did.

Juryman. Did you belong to Captain Billog?

Johnson. Yes, I was one of the Boat's Crew.

Mr. Ashton. Had not I been up and searched before?

Johnson. Yes, I think you had been up before.

Mr. Ashton. And then you saw me take up the Pacquet off from the Ballast?

Johnson. Yes, I saw you take it out of the Ballast and put it into your Bosom.

Mr. Ashton. Gentlemen, I hope you will be pleased to take notice of that.

L. C. J. Holt. No doubt of it they will.

Mr. Ashton. Did not that Bundle of Papers that was taken out of my Breast, did not they lie near to the Place where the Seals lay?

Johnson. Yes, it lay just by them.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray set up Captain Billog again (which was done.) When you brought these Papers to Whitehall, Captain Billog, who did you deliver them to?

Captain Billog. To my Lord Nottingham.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. After he received them, what did he with them?

Captain Billog. After he had examined all these Gentlemen, he went to opening of the Papers, and he desired me to stay in the Room till they were opened, which I did; and my Lord looking on some of the Papers said, If this Pacquet had gone, we had quickly been visited by the French. With that I took them up, and look'd into them. My Lord said, I might look into as many Papers as I pleased; but I was very uneasy, and full of Pain, and had more mind to be gone, and be a Bed, than looking into Papers; but several of the Papers I did look into, and several I put my Mark upon; and the next Day at the Council, what of them I did know, I did put my Mark upon.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. After my Lord Nottingham had perused them, what did he do with them?

Captain Billog. My Lord put them up in a Cover, and tied them with a Piece of Twine, and put his Seal upon them, and gave them me, and desired me to carry them to my Lord President; which I immediately did; and, without stopping, carried them to my Lord President.

Mr. Ashton. When was this, Sir? Was it that very Night that we were brought to Whitehall?

Captain Billog. Yes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Then we must desire my Lord Nottingham to be sworn.

The Earl of Nottingham Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Will your Lordship please to give the Court an Account how these Papers came to your Lordship, and how your Lordship disposed of them?

Earl of Nottingham. Captain Billog came to my Office——

Mr. Ashton. I humbly desire your Lordship would please to speak louder; for I cannot hear your Lordship, and I fear the Jury cannot.

E. of Nottingham. I speak as loud as ever I can, but I have a great Cold.

L. C. J. Holt. You may hear my Lord very well, if the Court be but silent.

E. Nottingham. Captain Billog brought to me a Pacquet tied about with a Packthread, to which there was a Piece of a Leaden Pipe fixed, in which Pacquet there was stuck in another Paper; I think there was but that one besides the Cover, but what it was particularly I do not remember: this Pacquet was laid upon the Table while he was by; and I called in my Lord Preston, not being willing to make him stay, and after I had some Discourse with my Lord, to examine him what Account he could give of these Proceedings; then I called in yourself, Mr. Ashton, and Captain Billog was by also, but the Pacquet so tied with the Packthread, I cut open in Billog's Presence with a Pair of Scissars; the same Papers that were in that Pacquet, together with the little Paper that was stuck in, I tied up; I am sure I sealed them in a Sheet of Paper, and gave them back again to Captain Billog to carry them to my Lord President.

Sir W. Williams. Captain Billog, you have already declared, that all you received from my Lord Nottingham you carried to my Lord President.

Captain Billog. All the Papers that I received from my Lord Nottingham, just as I received them, sealed with my Lord's Seal, I went directly to my Lord President's, and gave them him.

VOL. IV.

Sir W. Williams. Pray, my Lord, did your Lordship deliver to Captain Billog all the Papers that you received from him?

Earl of Nottingham. My Lord, all the Papers that Captain Billog brought to me, that were in the Pacquet (for he brought some Letters that he took out of my Lord Preston's Pocket, that were of no Consequence) but all the Papers that were in the Pacquet, I delivered back to Captain Billog, sealed as I received from him, and no more, and no others; for the other Letters, they being from my Lord Preston's Children, and not relating to the Publick; I gave them to him to give my Lord Preston again.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I humbly beseech your Lordship to tell the Court how long my Lord Preston was with your Lordship in the Room?

E. Nott. Truly I am not able to tell you particularly how long it was, I believe it might be about a quarter of an Hour, or scarce so much.

Juryman. Was there no body with your Lordship, when Captain Billog was out, but only my Lord Preston?

E. Nott. No, not that I know of.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I have one Favour more to beg your Lordship, I humbly pray your Lordship will please to tell the Court and Jury what Answer I gave to your Lordship, when you asked me how I came by those Papers?

E. Nott. As near as I remember, the Account that you gave of them was, That you went down again after you were come up, as you said, to fetch your Hat; and that when you did go down into the little Hole to fetch your Hat, you brought these Papers with you.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, this was the Account I did give. Now this very well corresponds with that Man's Evidence, that says he saw me take up the Papers and put them into my Breast.

L. C. J. Holt. He does say so, and this does all very well agree.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we desire my Lord President would be pleased to be sworn.

The Lord President sworn.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, my Lord, will your Lordship please to declare to the Court what Papers Captain Billog brought to your Lordship, and how your Lordship disposed of them?

L. President. Captain Billog did bring me a Pacquet tied with a Packthread, and that was sealed with my Lord Nottingham's Seal, I knew it to be his Seal; and he told me, that my Lord Nottingham commanded him to bring the Pacquet to me. I opened the Pacquet, and perused all the Papers; it was very late, and I locked them up till Morning, and I then carried those very Papers to the King, and in the King's Closet, at Kensington, the King read some of them, and in my Sight, for I never parted from the King, but was by all the while: The King put up all the Papers again, and commanded me to call a Cabinet Council, and to let them be delivered there to the Council; accordingly I did deliver them Paper by Paper, and they were all marked there by my Lord Sydney, who is here present; and they were then delivered into the Hands of my Lord Sydney.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Will you please to ask my Lord any Questions, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, if your Lordship will be pleased to pardon me, I would ask your Lordship, Did any of your Lordship's Servants, or Family read any of these Letters?

L. President. No, not one.

Mr. Ashton. Were they locked up where any of your Lordship's Secretaries, or Servants could come to them?

L. President. No, I lock'd them up in a strong Box in my Closet.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I only desire this Favour further of your Lordship: Your Lordship, at the Committee of the Council was pleased to ask me, how I came by those Papers; I presume you may remember, and I pray your Lordship to declare, what Answer I gave.

L. President. Truly, Mr. Ashton, to tell you Truth, I do not remember the Particulars; I remember you denied every Thing; I can only say that, in the general; but what you said in particular I cannot remember.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Do you put my Lord in mind if you can; see whether he does remember it.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I only desire to ask my Lord President, whether I did not tell him I went down, after I had been search'd, into the Hold, and there I see the Papers lie, and brought them up, and put them into my Breast; they were no sooner in my Hands but Captain Billog had them in his; for the Man called and said, This Gentleman has something in his Breast, and the Captain put in his Hand and pulled it out.

L. President. Truly, Mr. Ashton, I do not remember the Words that you used, but remember you said something to which I made answer, What makes it matter, They were found upon you, and taken out of your Bosom, do you look to it how you came by them. I do not remember what you said, for I cannot remember particular Words, but I believe you might say some such thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, pray, my Lord Sydney, will you be pleased to be sworn.

The Lord Sydney sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will your Lordship be pleased to declare what Papers you received from my Lord President?

L. Sydney. At the Cabinet Council my Lord President delivered a Pacquet of Papers, I received them every one there, and mark'd them, and put them into my Pocket.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Did your Lordship deliver them to any Person afterwards?

L. Sydney. The next Day, or the Day after, I gave them to Mr. Bridgman to copy out, and he delivered them back to me again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, give me leave to ask this Question——

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Your Lordship had mark'd them before you delivered them to Mr. Bridgman to copy?

L. Sydney. Yes, I mark'd them at the Council Table, at my Lord Nottingham's Office.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, those Papers that you mark'd, were the same Papers that my Lord President brought, and delivered in at the Council?

L. Sydney. Yes, the very same.

Juryman. My Lord, shall we have Leave to ask my Lord Sydney a Question?

L. C. J. Holt. Ay; what is it?

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, did the Pacquet come to you sealed? That which was taken from this Gentleman, was it sealed when it came to you?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, it had been opened by my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord President.

L. C. J. Holt. Sir, you are under a Misapprehension of the Matter. My Lord Nottingham, after he had opened them, sealed them up again, and delivered them to Captain Billop; Captain Billop carried them sealed to my Lord President; my Lord President opens them, and lays them up; they were never out of his Possession; he carries them to the King; the King read some of them in his Lordship's Presence; he delivers them at the Cabinet Council to my Lord Sydney; and my Lord Sydney swears he read them there, marked them, and when he had done, put them in his Pocket.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord Sydney, will your Lordship be pleased to look upon these Papers, and see if these be Part of them.

L. Sydney. I know them very well, I have read them ten Times, I marked them at the Council, and that is my Mark.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, are those two Papers that you have in your Hand, Two of those Papers that my Lord President delivered at the Cabinet?

L. Sydney. Yes, that they are.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord President, will you please to look upon them.

(Which his Lordship did.)

L. President. These are two of the same Papers that Captain Billop brought me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we shall desire to have them read; but give me leave to observe to you, That one of them is a Copy of the other; only in the one some Words are written short, that are written out at length in the other.

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, I desire to ask, are they of the same Hand?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, they are of different Hands.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, Gentlemen of the Jury, take Notice, and observe these Papers, for there is a great deal of Matter of great Moment in them; for you cannot expect the King's Counsel should repeat every thing that is in so many Papers as we shall read; it is impossible we should take Notice of all.

L. C. J. Holt. Or I either, therefore pray, Gentlemen, observe what is read, for I shall be able only just to state the Evidence to you.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I hear them say, one of those Papers is a Copy of the other; I desire, the Original may be read, and not the Copy.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Who knows which is the Original?

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Ashton, we don't know which is the Original, or which is the Copy, they are both found together, they contain the same Matter, and the same Words: It may be you can tell which is the Original.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You may look upon them your self, and tell us which is the Original, if you please.

Mr. Ashton. That is very well observed, Sir. That is throwing Water upon a dead Mouse. Then I desire both of them may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Indeed, Mr. Ashton, I think there is a particular Reason why you should not desire to have the Copy read, because least it should prove to be your own Hand-writing.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, let both be read.

Cl. of Peace reads. The result of a Conference —

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray attend, for this is the Scheme of the whole Work.

Cl. of Peace reads. The Result of a Conference, &c.

And the other was likewise read as before.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray let Mr. Ashton see that Paper.

The Paper was handed to Mr. Ashton, being one of the Papers before read.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton, look upon that same Paper a little, satisfy your own Mind a little whose Hand that Paper is in. Look upon it well, I would have you be satisfied about it. Look particularly upon the latter Part of it.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I have looked upon it, I have seen it all.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Come then, give it me back again, and think of it a little in your own Heart.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord Sydney, pray, will your Lordship look upon this Paper.

L. Sydney. This is one of the Papers that was, among the rest, delivered by my Lord President, at the Cabinet.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray shew it my Lord President; What says your Lordship to it?

L. President. This was one of the Papers I gave my Lord Sydney, and was brought to me in the Pacquet by Captain Billop.

Cl. of Peace reads. That the King would return with a Design of making an entire Conquest of his People —

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Pray, my Lord, give me leave, before it be read, to acquaint the Jury what this is, that they may make the better Observations upon it. This, Gentlemen, is the Heads of a Declaration that was intended to be published when the French came; and you will see what it is when it is read. Pray observe it.

Cl. of Peace reads. That the King will return, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. The next Paper is an Account which they had taken with them of the Force of the Kingdom, of the Ships, particularly how many in Number, what Rates, what were in Repair, what out of Repair, and what a Building. Pray shew it my Lord Sydney.

L. Sydney. This is another of the Papers that I received from my Lord President, and marked at the Cabinet.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then shew it my Lord President.

L. President. This is one of the Papers that were in the Pacquet that Captain Billop brought me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord Sydney, look upon these Papers, and tell where your Lordship had them.

The Papers were shewn both to the Lord President and the Lord Sydney.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord President says he received them from Captain Billop, and gave them to my Lord Sydney; and my Lord Sydney says, they are the same he received from my Lord President.

Juryman. Are those the Papers that have been read, my Lord?

Mr. J. Eyres. No, but they both say the same, as to those that have been read.

Juryman. Then pray, my Lord, what are those Papers that are going to be read?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. These are two Letters, Gentlemen, that are written, giving an Account how the Affairs in England stood with reference to the Persons Concerns that they are written to; and there is a particular Passage in one of them, How their young Master prevailed in his Interest, and got Ground of his Adversaries. If you observe them, you will easily understand what is meant by them.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mr. Redding, New-year's Eve, Though the Bearer of this, &c. As before.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mrs. Redding. As before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now we desire my Lord Sydney, and my Lord President would look upon these Papers.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire the former Part of that last Letter may be read again.

Which was done.

L. Sydney. These I had from my Lord President.

L. President. And I had them out of the Pacquet that Captain Billop brought me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. If your Lordship please, I will open them to the Jury. Here are two Letters, in one of them there is an Account given, that they were heartily sorry they were disappointed, and that they had not been here already, but hoped they would be here as fast as they can; that the Match was concluded, the Settlement prepared, and no doubt but the Daughter's Portion would be well secured, if they would come quickly.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Dec. 31, 1690. 'Tis directed for Mrs. Charlton. I must not let this Bearer depart, Madam, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That Letter tells you that the Daughter's Portion would be well secured; this that we now produce will tell you, how it shall be raised. It says, the old Tenants are weary of their Master, and a little Matter, if he would but appear in Westminster-Hall, would redeem the Estate; and the Cause might be brought to a final Hearing before the End of Easter Term, if they made haste, and it were well solicited.

Clerk of the Peace reads. This is directed for Mr. Jackson, Dec. 31, 1690. The Bearer hereof will give you, &c. As before.

Mr. Sol. Gen. We must desire my Lord President, and my Lord Sydney, would be pleased to look upon these Papers.

L. President. I received these from Captain Billop in the Pacquet, and gave it to my Lord Sydney.

L. Sydney. These are some of the Papers I had from my Lord President.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. The Letters we now produce to be read, seem to be written by a Man that was involved in a great Trade, that had great Projects in his Head, and drawn many Schemes in his own Brain how to carry on the Trade; he directs what Sort of Wares he would have sent, what was proper for their Markets, that he had got many a new Customer, and hoped they should not be disoblige; that all must be sent before the First of March, at least before the Tenth, or the whole Summer Profits would be lost.

Clerk of the Peace reads. 31 Dec.

L. C. J. Holt. Read the Superscription first.

Cl. of the Peace. There is no Superscription, my Lord, at all.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, read on.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Dec. 31. The Interruption of the former Correspondence had a very ill Effect many ways, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Gentlemen, doubting that Letter might not be pressing enough, here is another to the same Effect.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Dec. 31. It is a Presumption incident to those that are any ways upon the Spot, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. One would imagine this Letter were written by some Person that used to talk Cant, that he is so ready at it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord President, what says your Lordship to these Papers?

L. President. These two Letters were in the Bundle that Captain Billop delivered to me, and I delivered them to my Lord Sydney.

L. Sydney. These are some of the Papers I had from my Lord President, at the Cabinet.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That first of these Papers is a Letter wherein the Party gives an Account of his own Condition here, and how he would venture to bring about what was desired.

Cl. of the Peace reads. 31 Dec. 1690. Was my Condition more desperate and uneasy than it is, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. This little Paper was inclosed in the other.

Cl. of the Peace reads. I beg, &c. As before.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Now shew this Paper to my Lord President, and my Lord Sydney.

Which was done.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord President, and my Lord Sydney swear the same for this Paper, as for the rest.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. This Paper shews they were going about a Deed that they did not desire to have known; 'tis a Key how to explain their Meaning.

Clerk of the Peace reads. For Mrs. Anne Russel, &c. As before.

Then three other Papers were shewn to, and sworn by the Lord President, and the Lord Sydney, to be Part of the same Papers.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. The Papers that we are going to read are these. Gentlemen, here is a Letter of Recommendation in behalf of one Mr. Orbinet, which is a Name, they pretended of some Person that was at Paris, or to go there, and 'tis written by one Mr. Delivere, to his Correspondent there; and he tells him, the Bearer had something to disclose to him, and that he might have an entire Confidence in him: but the Letter of Recommendation alone, without a Sum of Money, they reckoned would meet with a bad Welcome in France, and therefore they take 500 l. with them, and here are two Bills to pay it.

Then Mr. Humphrey Levermore was sworn to interpret them, being in French, (which he did) and read them as in the former Trial.

Juryman. Were these Bills found in that Pacquet?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Yes, Yes; they are sworn to by both those Lords.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, pray, my Lord, will you please to look upon these Papers?

The Lord President and Lord Sydney both testified, That these were Part of the Papers.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. This next Paper that we give in Evidence is very short. It seems to be a Table for the Memory of the Person that was to carry it? They are short Heads for the Memory, consisting of a great many Particulars; You will make your Observations upon them, and what Judgment you think fit of them.

Mr. Serj. Tremain

Mr. Serj. Tremain. My Lord, I desire to take Notice of these Papers that we are now going to read; you will observe these Things in them, which are worth your remarking, Gentlemen; because these Papers that we now read to you, are of themselves sufficient to prove every Article in the Indictment: For these Papers give an Account of the Ships, their Number and Force, the Forts of the Kingdom, how they are Manned, how they may be surprized, where the French Fleet should Fight, where they should Assault us, how they should hinder the Dutch and English Fleets from joining, what Number of Soldiers would be sufficient, and what Number of Ships in Newcastle to plague the City of London, how to manage this whole Affair; and it gives Characters of the Clergy of England, and particularly of the City of London, and says, they are the worst of Men.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. No, Brother, 'tis the worst of all the Clergy.

L. C. J. Holt. Come read them.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Lady D. 2000l. &c. As before.

The Jury desired to see the last Papers, and had them delivered to them.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then we rest it here, to see what the Prisoner will say to it.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, the King's Counsel have done their Evidence for the King, what have you to say for yourself?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I humbly desire to know of your Lordship, whether all the Letters are read, that were read at the Trial of my Lord Preston?

L. C. J. Holt. What is that material to you, whether they be or not?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I am informed, that there were several Letters, that particularly name my Lord, implying him to be the Bearer, and I desire those Letters may be read.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. With all my Heart, if you do desire it, it shall be read, we do not think it material.

Mr. Ashton. I do desire it; it will be plain, I believe, from hence, that I could know nothing at all of this Matter; and if your Lordship please, my Lord, to observe it, three or four of these last Papers, as Mr. Serj. Tremain observed, were the Ground-Work of all this Business, which refers to Portsmouth and South-Sea, and some other Papers; these, I think, with Submission, were proved to be the Hand of another Gentleman, and I desire it may be proved again to the Jury, by which I think it will be plain, that they do not affect me.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Ashton, it is not proved to be your Hand, nor pretended to be so.

Mr. Ashton. But positively proved to be another's Hand, as I am informed, and 'tis that which Mr. Serj. Tremain observed, was the Ground-Work for carrying on the whole Design. I presume the Witnesses are in Court that proved it then, and I hope your Lordship will be so kind as to let it be proved now; they did prove it to be another Person's Hand upon a Trial not long ago.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a Mind to call any Witnesses to prove the Papers to be another's Hand, you may call them.

Mr. Ashton. I hope the King's Witnesses are now in Court that did prove them to be his Hand-writing, and they'll prove it now I suppose.

L. C. J. Holt. If you have a Mind, you may call them, they have not a Mind to produce them for the King.

Mr. Ashton. I know not where they are, my Lord. Pray Mr. Aaron Smith, be you so kind as to call them.

L. C. J. Holt. You should have sent and subpoena'd them to be here.

Mr. Ashton. Mr. Warr is there, my Lord, I desire he may be asked the Question: and I believe Mr. Blane is in the Court, pray let him be asked.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Warr, you are called by the Prisoner, as a Witness, to prove my Lord Preston's Hand.

Mr. Ashton. Mr. Warr, Mr. Townsend, and Mr. Blane, I desire may be all asked.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, you have insisted upon it, that these Papers were my Lord Preston's own Writing.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I do insist upon it, to know whether they were not proved to be his Hand.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Yes, they were so, 'tis agreed.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. We do grant the King's Witnesses proved, that they did believe them to be my Lord Preston's Hand.

L. C. J. Holt. The King's Counsel do admit, that these three last Papers were not your Hand, but they admit them to be my Lord Preston's Hand, and 'tis very well done of them to admit it; so that now 'tis to be taken for granted, that those three last Papers were my Lord Preston's Hand.

Mr. Ashton. Then, my Lord, I desire the Substance of those Papers may be the more press'd upon the Jury, because Mr. Serj. Tremain observed that the whole Design in the Scheme of it lay in those Papers, and they are not my Hand, but another's; and for what is in them I know nothing, nor am concern'd.

L. C. J. Holt. What have you farther to say, Sir?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You mentioned another Letter, which you did desire should be read.

Mr. Ashton. Ay; two or three where my Lord is nam'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This is the Letter I suppose you mean, the Clerk shall read it.

Clerk of the Peace reads. Sir, I vow to you, I do not repine at having lost all for your Sake, &c. As before.

Mr. Ashton. Gentlemen, I hope you will observe, in that Letter my Lord is called the Bearer; and it tells that he brings Papers with him, by which it is plain, that you cannot imagine I could know any Thing of these Papers. And, Gentlemen, it has not appeared, by any Evidence that has been given, that I knew any thing more, than that they were unfortunately found upon me: But with Submission, I believe there is another Letter, if I am informed right, wherein my Lord is named, and called, my Lord the Bearer.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir, I do assure you now we have to my Observation, read every Letter, and every Paper, that was read on Saturday.

Mr. Ashton. Mr. Solicitor, I am satisfied, for I am confident you would not affirm it, if it were otherwise.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. There is not any Letter that says my Lord the Bearer, but my Lord will give you an Account, so and so; the Bearer will tell you these and these Things. Will you have it read again? You shall if you will.

Mr. Ashton. I am unwilling to take up your Lordship's Time, unless the Jury desire to have it read again.

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, when that Letter was read on Saturday, how was it construed by the Court? How did they take it then?

L. C. J. Holt. We did take it then, because my Lord was mentioned, that he might possibly be the Bearer.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. It is very probable, and so it was understood then, that the Lord mentioned in the Letters was my Lord Preston, and so that my Lord was the Bearer that could give an Account of the Countess's Condition; and in the Beginning of those Papers that are of my Lord's Hand, there is mention'd so much Money for the Lady D—, which is my Lady Dorset, I suppose, that is there meant, and that writ that Letter.

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lady Dorchester.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Dorchester, I cry your Mercy; and it is probable, the same Reason is a Reason still to make it believed that my Lord Preston was meant.

Mr. Ashton. I think my Lord Chief Justice was pleas'd to observe, as I have been inform'd, in giving his Charge to the Jury, that these Papers, some of them naming my Lord, must be meant of my Lord Preston, there being no other Lord but he; and he likewise gave another Reason; says he, They lay by my Lord's Seals that were produced, and therefore it was plain, they could not be Ashton's nor Elliot's.

L. C. J. Holt. No, not so, but my Lord might be concern'd, because my Lord's Seals were there where the Papers were found.

Mr. Ashton. I am wrong inform'd, if those were not the Words my Lord Chief Justice Pollexfen used.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. What do you say were the Words? If you will repeat them, I'll tell you as near as I can.

Mr. Ashton. Your Lordship seem'd to infer, That my Lord being nam'd, and the Bearer in the same Paper, that of Consequence, that must be my Lord Preston, and the Papers must be his; and you did give another Reason for it, to enforce it, that the same Man that saw me take them up, saw them lie by the Seals, which were proved to be my Lord Preston's, from whence your Lordship did say, it is plain they were my Lord Preston's, and that Ashton or Elliot could not be concern'd in them.

L. C. J. Holt. You mistake that Matter, sure there was not any such Word said, for that Evidence that tended to convict my Lord Preston, did by no means tend to acquit you; the Question then was, How far my Lord Preston was concern'd; my Lord insist'd upon it, says he, They were not taken from me, but from Mr. Ashton; there the Question was not about you.

Mr. Ashton. I humbly hope, my Lord, you will forgive me for insisting upon these Matters, because I am for Life.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. I would do you all the Right I can, I assure you, Mr. Ashton: but certainly, there was no such Thing said as you have mentioned.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I do not question but you will do me Right, and I thought so, when I chose the Jury out of the first that appeared, without challenging any.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Sir, pray go on to your Defence.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, my own Defence will be very weak upon the Whole, for I am very illiterate and unskill'd in the Laws, but where I do fail of taking Advantage, to observe what may be for my Advantage, I hope your Lordships will be so kind to me, as well as just (I may call it) to yourselves, being upon your Oaths, as to take Notice of it. My Lord, in the first Place —

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Before Mr. Ashton proceeds, I would observe one Word in a Letter that has been read, which is one of these Papers; it says, I say nothing of another Gentleman that takes Opportunity to see those Parts, but he has shewn a Zeal and Sincerity in the Affair equal to most.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. You hear, Gentlemen, that there is Notice taken of another Person besides the Bearer.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, my Lord, is it any Consequence that I must be the Person that must be meant, or that I must know what the Contents of the Letter was. There was another besides me, and so it is not plain, who was meant; or if I were the Man meant in this Letter, it must not therefore follow that I must know of it.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I did not mention it as a Proof that you were the Person meant, but only to shew that there was another Person besides my Lord taken Notice of in them.

L. C. J. Holt. I must confess, I think Mr. Ashton observes right, it does not concern him, for as well as he was there, there was another, and it is uncertain whether it relates to him or the other, and so it signifies nothing at all; that's my Mind. Pray go on, Mr. Ashton.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, upon the Whole I have this to observe; first as to my Business of going into France, I must ingenuously own it, though I protest to you I never own'd it or named it to the Woman, though she had sworn it, but yet I do now. My Design was to go to France, and I had very great and good Reason for it, I think; I had endeavour'd all Ways I could in the World to procure a Pass to go to France; 'tis very well known, I did Business under Lieutenant-General Worden, that died half a Year ago; his Accounts are now depending, and such Accounts as may be prejudicial in some Points to his Family, to whom I have always own'd, and must, a great Obligation, and would be very glad upon all Occasions to serve it, and all the Branches of it: This was not the Whole nor the only Design I had in going thither, but I had likewise some Business of my own, I have a considerable Sum of Money owing me, if it be necessary to prove it, I can prove it by a Bond from a Person that is there; a great Sum it is, a very considerable one to me at least. And, my Lord, I did think, if I did not go myself, it was impossible for me to do any thing in that Affair; and that was the true and only Reason of my Design in going to France, having been out of Hopes of getting any other Convenience otherways; this was not a Design just now formed, as if I were just now upon some Plot concerning the Publick, but it has been my Design ever since Lieutenant-General Worden died, and he upon his Death-bed engaged me to do it; and I once went down, hoping to have gone from Dover, and there I was apprehended and taken. And, my Lord, I have used all manner of Endeavours to go other ways, but they have always failed me, and this way I hoped would have taken: My Lord, I do own I did hire the Boat, and I did pay the Money; but, with Submission, I think that is not any manner of Treasonable Act, my Lord; perhaps it is an ill Act, but it does not amount in the least to Treason going to the King's Enemies, suppose I went upon that Account, that is no manner of Treason in the World; carrying Papers to the King's Enemies, except it be proved that I was privy to them, and knew the Contents of them, if Lawyers inform me right, is not Treason; then what remains? 'Tis true, I must own the Papers were found upon me, and I believe there is nobody that has heard the Evidence that has been given, but must readily conclude, that I found them in the Place where the Seaman says I took them up; and besides, my Lord, there is not any manner of Proof so much as aim'd at by the King's Counsel in all their Evidence, that I was privy to any one of these Papers; so that, my Lord, I think there is very little proved upon me at all: I had the Misfortune to be taken in this Company that was going where these Papers were taken, it's true, but they have not attempted to prove that I was privy to, or knew any Thing of them at all, nor that I was more concerned than that they were taken in my Stomach; this is all I have to observe upon the Whole: As to the Business of the Indictment, there are great and grievous Aggravations in it, and such as I am not able to comprehend the Meaning of, the Words confound me; and therefore I humbly desire your Lordship to tell me upon what Statute I am indicted.

D: arch-bed

L. C. J. Holt. I'll tell you, Mr. Ashton, you are indicted upon the 25th of Edward the Third, for conspiring, compassing, and imagining the Death of the King and Queen, and for that Purpose going to France, and endeavouring to incite the French King to invade the Kingdom, and telling him how he should do it, and letting him know in what State and Condition the Kingdom was, and how fit to be invaded.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, my Lord, is that at all proved upon me?

L. C. J. Holt. That is the Question that the Jury are to judge of upon the Evidence that has been given.

Mr. Ashton. As to that of compassing the Death of the King and Queen, I am ignorant of Dealings in Law; but I conceive there are several Species of Treason mentioned in that Act of the 25th of Edward III. and as to the imagining the Death of the King, that's only to be proved by some Overt-Act: Now I think nothing at all has been proved of any open Act conducing to prove the Imagination or Compassing the Death of the King or Queen, no manner of Consultation or Treasonable Act at all; and therefore, my Lord, I do not see that there is any great Matter that is proved upon me, and I hope you are of that Opinion too.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Ashton, that you may not go away with a Mistake, any that designed the Deposition of the King and Queen, and the Invasion of the Kingdom, which is proved by any Overt-Act, is sufficient to prove that they compass and imagine the Death of the King and Queen.

Mr. Ashton. I presume it may be so; I believe that may be the Construction of the Law.

L. C. J. Holt. And I make no question but those that you have consulted with have told you as much.

Mr. Ashton. Truly as to Counsel, my Trial has been as hard as ever Man met withal.

L. C. J. Holt. Why do you say so, Mr. Ashton? the Court has not been hard upon you.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I do not complain of the Court, but as to the matter of Time, I had Notice by that Gentleman, Mr. Bale, to prepare for my Trial, and that was on Friday, and not before.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Friday was Sevensnight, you mean, I suppose.

Mr. Ashton. Yes, I do mean Friday was Sevensnight, I was then a close Prisoner, I had not the Opportunity or Liberty of seeing any Christian Soul; I spake to him then, and told him, Mr. Bale, this is very short Notice, pray be so kind as to move my Lord that I may have Counsel; truly he was civil enough, and said, he would do all he could; says he, Will you give me the Names of your Counsel? So I gave him the Names of four and of a Solicitor; but I never heard more of him in the Matter: I did with all my Industry and Skill give my Friends Notice, but I was under great Difficulty, for I had not the Liberty of Pen, Ink, nor Paper, nor a Man to send upon a Message on Saturday; I gave my Friends Notice of it upon Sunday, which was no very good Day for Business, they applied themselves to my Lord Sydney, whose Favour and Kindness I shall always own as long as I live; he gave me all the Dispatch possible, and got me an Order to see my Wife that Day, though it was Sunday; the next Day I made Application to have my Counsel come to me, that was Monday; he with the same Readiness procured that: but it was Tuesday in the Afternoon before I could see any living Soul but my Wife; and some of the Counsel that I desired would not readily come to me, and it was Wednesday before I did see any Body of them, and so I had but Wednesday and Thursday to consult with them in. On Friday I was brought here, and I endeavoured to procure a Copy of the Pannel, that I might inform myself of the Characters of the Men that were to be my Jury; and my Lord, I would desire you would give me Leave to clear one Point, which through Inadvertency slipped from me about the Time that I desired to send to enquire about the Jury. I did not mean, as was apprehended, to send to them to take them off, but I only meant to enquire after their Characters; this was done upon Friday; I had not a Copy of the Pannel till last Friday, when we were Arraigned in Court, it was Two of the Clock before the Pannel was given us, it was between Three and Four when we came to Newgate; we were to come upon our Trial the next Morning by Eight of the Clock; so that before the Copies could be transcribed for us, there were left but six Hours for us to enquire into the Morals of so many Men, of whom some lived eight, some ten, some fifteen Miles out of Town; for my Part I was not able to enquire after any one, and that your Lordship may think, by my taking the first Twelve that appeared, and believing myself innocent of this Matter, I resolved to put myself upon my Trial by any twelve indifferent English Men; I only beg if I have omitted any Thing in reference to myself, or misbehaved myself with respect to the Bench, that you will please to set me right, and consider that I stand here for my Life; and to grant me your pardon for any Thing wherein I have offended your Lordships, to whom, and to the Jury, I refer my Cause: only I beg leave to call two or three Witnesses, I know it hath been allowed before in such Cases, to give some short Account of my Life and Conversation, because it hath been reflected upon me that I was a Papist, because I designed to go into France; but I believe there is not any Man, whose Devotion to the Protestant Religion establish'd by Law, is greater than mine hath been, or to whom that Religion is dearer than to myself.

L. C. J. Holt. You are not accused of any such thing; nobody pretends you are a Papist; but call whom you will.

Mr. Ashton. Pray call Dr. Burgh, Dr. Lake, Dr. Fitz-Williams, and Dr. Davenant. There is Dr. Fitz-Williams; I beg the Favour of you, Dr. Fitz-Williams, to give the Court an Account of your Acquaintance with me, and particularly about my Religion.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. Will your Lordship give me Leave, my Lord?

L. C. J. Holt. Ay; Come, what do you know of Mr. Ashton?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I suppose, my Lord, that he calls me in as a Witness to his Religion and to his Morality, I think so; with my Lord's Permission I will give the truest Testimony I can: I have known him for some Time, he used to be frequently at the Service of the Church in the Protestant Part of the Family at St. James's, where I was Chaplain; during the Time I was there, I observed him to be a frequent Receiver of the Holy Communion; and, as far as I could observe, lived answerable to what he professed to be, a sincere Member of the Church of England, and a serious Christian. For his Sincerity and Zeal for the Protestant Religion, I can give this Instance, he had an Aunt that had a Relation to that Family, one Mrs. Dupee, who he thought did warp a little towards Popery, and he desired me about five Years ago to have recourse to her, and desired to know if she were dissatisfied with any Point of Religion in the Church of England, in Communion with which she lived visibly, and I would do my Endeavour to satisfy her; as I do not doubt but I could, She was desirous to know who was the Person that sent me: I told her I came of my own head in the greatest Part; but I suppress'd the Interposition of Mr. Ashton for several Reasons, and told her, I had great Suspensions of her inclining the other Way; and I had great Reason for it, because of her Husband who was a Papist, and the great Resort of Popish Priests to their Lodgings. She told me then, She was satisfied in every Thing, and if she had any Dissatisfaction she would send for me to give me an Account. Some Months after I came to St. James's to wait, and observing her to be more than usually before from Prayers in the Chapel, I went to her, and asked her the Reason: She told me, it was because she was making some Linnen for her Master King James, which was to be made in haste: But she then designed to go for Flanders quickly; and Mr. Ashton, about that Time, or two or three Days after, told me his Aunt was gone to France, and spoke it with very great Concern, and that he believed, under the Pretence of her calling over her younger Son, she was gone to declare herself a Papist, and he was very much troubled at it. This I know for his Zeal for the Protestant Religion.

L. C. J. Holt. When was this, Doctor?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. This was, my Lord, about five Years ago.

Mr. Ashton. That is, as to the Business of my Aunt, I suppose; I know not how he comes to mention it; but as to my Life and Morals, you can give a later Account.

Dr. Fitz-Williams. My Lord, I have administered the Sacrament to him.

L. C. J. Holt. What Questions do you farther ask him, Mr. Ashton? or can you say any more, Doctor?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, my Lord, I can say no more, but that he received the Sacrament about half a Year ago.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. We have not objected any thing, as to his Religion, at all.

Mr. Ashton. But I know it has been a Reflection that has gone about of me, that I am a Papist, therefore I beg Leave to prove my Religion and Conversation.

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, call whom you will, you shall not be hindered, take what Course you please.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Doctor, you say he has received the Sacrament lately; when was that, and where?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. It was at Ely Chapel, within this six or seven Months.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Have you been lately conversant with him?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. Truly, my Lord, I have not been very lately.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray, what have you heard him say concerning his Affection to King William and Queen Mary?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I do not remember any Thing at all of that.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Have you heard him say any Thing to the contrary?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, I cannot remember that.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. What have you heard him say about his Affection to King James?

L. C. J. Holt. Do not ask him that, there may be a Snare in that Question.

Juryman. You say, Doctor, that he received the Sacrament six Months ago in Ely Chapel: Did you deliver the Sacrament to him there?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. No, I did not.

Juryman. Pray, Doctor, were the Prayers that were used at that Time altered, as they are now, in the Common-Prayer-Book?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I cannot say they were.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did you ever see him drink King James's Health?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I do not use to drink Healths, I came here only to do an Office of Justice and Kindness to Mr. Ashton, to testify about his Religion and Conversation.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But answer the Question, Did you ever see him drink King James's Health?

Dr. Fitz-Williams. I cannot remember I ever did.

Juryman. Was King William and Queen Mary pray'd for in those Prayers?

Dr. Fitz-

Dr. Fitz Williams. I cannot say they were.
Mr. Just. Eyres. But the Jurymen's Question was, Whether King William and Queen Mary were pray'd for? And whether the Prayers were as they are now altered?

Dr. Fitz Williams. My Lord, I say, I don't remember there were any Names mentioned, as the Prayers are now altered.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. That's very well.

Dr. Fitz Williams. I did neither read the Prayers, Sir, nor administer the Communion at that Time.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But you were not at the Prayers, as they are now altered, I perceive?

Dr. Fitz Williams. Yes, I have several times.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Not with that Gentleman, Mr. Ashton?

Dr. Fitz Williams. But I have been an hundred times at the Prayers, as they are now altered.

Mr. Ashton. I desire Dr. Lake, who is there upon the Bench, that he may be asked what he knows of me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. But I have one Question to ask of Dr. Fitz Williams before he goes.

L. C. J. Holt. What will you ask him?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I would ask you, Sir, one Question. Have you taken the Oaths to this King and Queen?

Dr. Fitz Williams. No, I have not, Sir, that's my Unhappiness; but I know how to submit, and live peaceably under them.

Mr. Ashton. But there is one Dr. Lake that has taken them, he'll give you an Account what he knows of me.

Dr. Fitz Williams. If any one can say I have done or acted any thing against the Government, I will readily submit to be punished for it.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Dr. Lake, what say you?

Dr. Lake. My Lord, I have known Mr. Ashton above these sixteen Years, we liv'd together in the same Family several of them; I always observed him to be a Person of exemplary Piety, and singular Devotion; he duly came to the Prayers of the Church twice a Day, and to the Sacrament once a Month; he has taken Occasion, that I know, several times, both at St. James's and at Edinburgh, to testify his Zeal against Popery: and I am apt to think, that he has suffered sometimes for doing so.

Mr. Ashton. Dr. Bursh, Pray, as to my Religion, I beg you to give an Account what you know of me; particularly something you may remember of me, of my perhaps Over-heat against Popery.

Dr. Bursh. My Lord, I have long known Mr. Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar, and, till within these two Years, frequently conversed with him; and while I did so, I believed him a good Protestant, and I have so many Instances of it, and particularly before some upon whom his Fortune depended; but as to any thing of late, I can say nothing, because our Conversation has ceased.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Dr. Bursh, have you known any thing of Mr. Ashton's Conversation for two Years past?—Dr. Bursh. No, Sir.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any thing more, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lord, I have nothing more, unless your Lordship desire any thing more of this Nature.

L. C. J. Holt. Call whom you will.

Mr. Ashton. Here is one Mr. Tomlinson.

L. C. J. Holt. Come, what say you, Sir?

Mr. Tomlinson. My Lord, I waited upon Major General Worden when he was sick, and there read the Prayers of the Church, and Mr. Ashton was a constant Attender upon the Publick Prayers at the Visitation of the Sick, and was very devout; that's all I can say.

L. C. J. Holt. When was this?

Mr. Tomlinson. It was in the Sickness of Major Gen. Worden.

L. C. J. Holt. How long ago was that?

Mr. Tomlinson. It was about half a Year ago.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Were those Prayers as they are altered now, or not?

Mr. Tomlinson. It was only the Visitation of the Sick, and the Collect for the Morning, and Collect for the Evening, because the General's Sickness was such, that he could not bear long Prayers.

L. C. J. Holt. Sir, have you been acquainted with the Prisoner any time?

Mr. Tomlinson. About eight Months.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any more Witnesses, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Then I would have you to answer me this one thing; Why were you so desirous, and used such Importunity, that the Papers should be thrown overboard?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, that is a Point I ought to have spoke to, to clear myself.

L. C. J. Holt. It seems material, and I would not have it forgot, if you can answer it.

Mr. Ashton. I humbly thank your Lordship, and whatsoever my Fate is, I cannot but own I have had a fair Trial for my Life, and I thank your Lordship for putting me in mind.

L. C. J. Holt. And take this other thing with it, Why did you desire Captain Billop to go along with you where you were going?

Mr. Ashton. He has sworn it, my Lord, that I did so, but as I hope for Salvation, if I were to die immediately, I do not know that I spoke to him of any such thing. How was it possible that I should prevail with him? or how was it likely that I should force him to go along with us, when he had about twelve or fourteen Men with him armed, and we unarmed?

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, it was not forcing, it was but persuading him to go.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I do not know any thing of it, I'll assure you; but as for endeavouring to persuade him to throw the Pacquet overboard, I must own I did endeavour to persuade him to it; and, I do presume, there is nobody in Court, that had been engaged with a Person so unfortunate, that would not have done the same thing for any common Friend, not knowing what the Contents of those Papers were, seeing them in that Posture, especially when I saw some body else so near me, so uneasy and concern'd to have them seen.

L. C. J. Holt. Then, Mr. Ashton, there's another thing which you open'd, which I would have you prove; you say you were to go into France upon the Affairs of Col. Worden's Family; first you say Col. Worden had a great Account to make up; how will you make that out?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, if your Lordship please, I will prove here in Court, though it is a sort of Surprise upon me, that there is a great Account depending; I believe I may appeal to Mr. Solicitor himself, who knows that there is a Petition in the House of Commons, now depending, from the Queen's Tradesmen and Debtors, whom she owed 68000*l*. She did assign the Arrears of some growing Rents for the Satisfaction of this Debt: but the King and Government have not thought fit to let it be applied to her Use, or to the paying of those Debts she assign'd it to. Nay, it has gone farther: I can appeal to several Persons, there is one Man by Chance in the Court, that I believe does know that I promised and engaged, and actually have paid a great Part of this Debt; for believing that the Money was good upon the Assignment, I have actually paid some of these Men out of my own Pocket, and perhaps more than became me to venture; I think it may very well call my Discretion in Question.

L. C. J. Holt. Who will you have called, Mr. Ashton?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, here is Mr. Spalding.

L. C. J. Holt. That the late Queen does owe People Money, that I believe is true.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, Mr. Spalding, will you give the Court an Account, whether there is any Money due from the Queen to you?

Mr. Spalding. My Lords, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I have a Debt due to me from the late Queen, as her Coach Harness-maker; it is 470*l*. or something thereabouts, and Mr. Ashton has paid me Part of this Debt; this I do own.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, how long have you been acquainted with Mr. Ashton, Sir?—Mr. Spalding. A dozen Years, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Have you any Intimacy with him?

Mr. Spalding. He and I have been very well acquainted.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Have you seen Mr. Ashton write at any time?

Mr. Spalding. Yes, I have.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Do you know his Hand?

Mr. Spalding. Yes, I think I do.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray how came Mr. Ashton to pay you that Part of your Money?

Mr. Spalding. I press'd Mr. Ashton, and told him my Necessities, and he did advance me this Money.

L. C. J. Holt. How much did he advance?

Mr. Spalding. Almost 400*l*.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. When was it he paid it you?

Mr. Spalding. Almost a Year ago.

L. C. J. Holt. Did he pay it out of his own Pocket?

Mr. Spalding. I believe so.

L. C. J. Holt. I believe so; or was it Money that he had returned to him?

Mr. Spalding. I believe it was out of his own Pocket, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Why do you believe so?

Mr. Spalding. Truly I believe it was out of his own Pocket.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray who was to repay him?

Mr. Spalding. About that very Time we were petitioning the House of Commons, that we might have our Debts secured, and our Money out of the Arrears of Rents due to the late Queen, according to her Assignment; and we so far press'd the Matter that there was a Clause inserted into the Bill for the securing of our Debt; but upon the next Day, or the Day following, the Parliament was prorogu'd.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Which way did he expect to be repaid?

Mr. Spalding. I'll tell you which way, I suppose, my Lord.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Did he not tell you which way?

Mr. Spalding. No, he never told me.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton, did you never tell him how you should be repaid?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I hoped to be repaid, and concluded I should, out of the Arrears of Rent in the Tenants Hands.

L. C. J. Holt. But you are very kind to pay Money out of your own Pocket upon such Hopes.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. Pray, Sir, will you look upon that Paper; do you know the Hand?

Mr. Spalding. No, Sir, I do not.

L. C. J. Holt. I suppose he did compound with you.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. This does shew an extraordinary Kindness towards some sort of People.

Mr. Ashton. If he discounted the Interest to the Time that we reckon'd it would be paid, you know that Prejudice would be to him, and not to me; it may, indeed, prove a Prejudice at last, if the Debt be not paid, because the Receipt is conditional: if it be not allowed him, she shall discount to me again.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Was there no Money return'd over from the Queen, K. James's Queen that was?

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lord, directly nor indirectly, not one Penny. I believe they are not in a Condition to return Money.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, Mr. Ashton, what have you more?

Mr. Ashton. I have nothing more to say, I submit my Cause to your Lordship.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look you, Mr. Ashton, as to some Things that you have mentioned, First, there's nobody questions but you are a Protestant; nay, as far as I discern, so they are all that are concern'd in this Matter. The whole design shews, that they are all so careful of the Protestant Religion, that they design to restore and establish it by the King of France; so that it appears they are all Protestants concern'd in this Project.

Mr. Ashton. Pray, my Lord, who is it that proposes that?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. The Papers that were carrying to France, Mr. Ashton, you have heard them read.

Mr. Ashton. I hope, my Lord, that no doubtful Insinuations or Suggestions are to affect me.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. There is a Gentleman that was called to by the Prisoner, it may be, he knows his Hand; pray, Dr. Fitz Williams, look upon that Paper, you have been acquainted with him many Years, do you know his Hand?

Dr. F. Williams. No, Sir, I do not know his Hand, I never did see him write; I cannot say I ever received a Letter from him.

Mr. Ashton. I entirely submit my Cause to your Lordship and the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you have done, Mr. Ashton?—Mr. Ashton. Yes.

Mr. Just. Eyres. Mr. Ashton, because you cannot reply again upon my Lord Chief Justice, after he has summed up the Evidence; there's another another Thing that I would put you in Mind of, that you may give an Answer to it. Captain Billop swears, before the Papers were found upon you (and it seems to stick upon you) when he was informed by the Seamen, that you had put something in your Bosom, and he ask'd you what it was, you said, Nothing but your Handkerchief: Now, if you knew not what was in the Papers, how came you to deny you had any Thing in your Bosom?

Mr. Ashton. For the same Reason that I would have endeavour'd to have had them thrown over-board; out of Kindness to the Person with whom I happened to be taken.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Consider, Mr. Ashton, what a many strange Things you run upon: First, you would have it believed, that you had a Mind to go into France upon your own Account.

Mr. Ashton. I do own that.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Next then, that you hired a Vessel for you and Elliot. Why would you have Elliot to go with you into France?

Mr. Ashton. I would not have him; he desired the Favour of going.

L. C. J. Holt. Who desired my Lord Preston to go, or did he desire to go with you?

Mr. Ashton. I had not seen Mr. Elliot of three Months before I went into the City to hire the Boat.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Why would you have my Lord Preston go with you?

Mr. Ashton. Why would I have my Lord Preston go with me? My Lord, I hop'd to have got my Passage free with a Person of my Lord's Quality.

L. C. J. Holt. Then you hired this Vessel for my Lord Preston?

Mr. Ashton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. Was it my Lord's Money, or your own that you paid?

Mr. Ashton. The Money I paid; but how I should be repaid I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Would you, for your own Convenience, pay a Hundred Pounds for a Boat to go to France, and yet hope to get your Passage free by taking in my Lord Preston?

Mr. Ashton. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell how it would have been; at the utmost, we could but have paid our Share of it.

L. C. J. Holt. But you can tell me if you will; I ask you, How it was agreed amongst you?

Mr. Ashton. Truly, my Lord, as I hope to be saved, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Holt. Then there is another Thing: Why did you desire one of the Seamen to say, That you were to go to Flanders, and not to France, and give him Half-a-Crown to say so?

Mr. Ashton. I presume, your Lordship knows that it is a Fault, though it be not a treasonable Fault, to go into France?

L. C. J. Pollexfen. But, Mr. Ashton, Truth is the Thing that we are enquiring after; and that is the Thing we would have prevail, and I hope shall in all Cases: If you are not guilty, we hope it will prevail of your Side; if you are guilty, we hope it will prevail on the other Side. Now, how likely is it that you should get into this same Company by Chance, without a previous Agreement? You sent something from Burdet's, a Hamper and a Trunk; and afterwards some other Things went from Rigby's, who is your Father-in-Law.

Mr. Ashton. No, there was nothing at all carried from Mr. Rigby's.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, the Leather Bag, I believe. But another Thing is this, that, if it be possible, you will do well to give an Answer to: Why did you enquire for a Hiding-Place? Why did you ask the Master of the Ship, whether there was a convenient Place to hide in?

Mr. Ashton. As to that Matter, my Lord, I had heard of divers People, that actually had Passes, and were going to Flanders, yet were stopped and brought to Town again. I believe my Lord Nottingham has bail'd many a one, and your Lordship knows it to be so, and has bailed many yourself; and therefore I had great Reason, upon that Account, to endeavour Secrecy as much as I could.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Mr. Ashton, as I remember, you said yourself, you were once before a going over, and had the Misfortune to be stop'd: Now, to venture a second Time without a Pass, was something strange. Why had you not gone and applied yourself to the Secretary for a Pass?

Mr. Ashton. I had made all the Application I could to my Lord Nottingham, I cannot say in my own Name, because I was sure before-hand, I should be denied; but I did by others Hands endeavour to have got a Pass to have gone into Flanders, because it was of extraordinary Consequence to me, as I tell your Lordship, to go quickly.

L. C. J. Holt. If you had such an Occasion to go, and had made it out to the Secretary, and given Security, you might have got it, sure.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. One Word further: Why should you be so much concerned to have these Papers thrown over-board?

Mr. Ashton. Perfectly out of Friendship; and had I been travelling with your Lordship, or any Man else that had been so unfortunate, I would have done the same.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Well, have you any more to say for yourself?

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Mr. Ashton, call what Witnesses you will, and speak as long as you will for yourself, you shall be heard at large.

Mr. Ashton. Mr. Serjeant, I thank you heartily, I have no more at present.

L. C. J. Holt. Then the King's Counsel desire to speak a Word to the Jury.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: It falls out to be my Duty to sum up the Evidence that has been given. I opened the Cause at the Beginning to you, and I opened it at large; and many Particulars there were mentioned, and truly, I do not think we have failed in the Proof of any one; I know you are Men of that Observation, that I need not, nor shall take upon me to repeat all the particular Circumstances; but as near as I can, I shall touch upon the Heads of the Evidence, and do it with as equal Regard to my Duty, and as much Tenderness to the Prisoner, as any one can do.

Gentlemen, in the first Place, you see what the Indictment is for; 'tis for a High-Treason of a very great Nature, no less than the Deposing the King and Queen, and Subverting this Government, and that by a French Power and Interest: If inviting an Invasion, and giving an Account of the Weakness, and where the Strength of the Government lay, carrying Papers to solicit the French to come, and to incite this Nation into Rebellion; that so they might depose this King, and set up the late King James again: If these be High-Treason, as doubtless they are; then, Gentlemen, how far forth the Prisoner at the Bar had a Share in it, I must refer to you from what we have proved.

He is the Man, it seems, that made the first Step; for you may remember it was proved, that he met this Woman at Burdet's, in the City, for the Hiring of this Ship, and after two or three Meetings more, they come to a Conclusion, and 93 Guineas and Six-pence are deposited to make up 100 l. which was the Price agreed upon, and that was actually paid by Mr. Ashton; this is sworn to be so.

The next Thing is, to what Purpose this Money was paid, and the Ship hired; that is directly sworn, it was to carry Mr. Ashton, and two or three more of his Friends, not naming of them, and they were to go for France; one of the Witnesses says, to any Port in France, it was not directly declared to what Part. This, I say, was the Purpose for which the Money was paid, and the Vessel hired; and this was to carry you, Mr. Ashton, and two or three more Friends of his into France.

It is true, Mr. Elliot afterwards did meet Mr. Ashton, and I think was by at the Bargain making, or at leastwise, when the Money was paid; I will not be positive in that, because I would do him no Wrong, he being to make his Defence hereafter.

Mr. Ashton. No, he was not by; I made the Bargain myself.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. Then afterwards I remember one Circumstance: When he hired this Ship, he was to hire a Ship that had a Place to hide in, and so he must needs know upon what Design; I say, by that he must needs know, that there was a Matter of great Moment which he was to transact, for he was to have such a Ship as he might hide in.

After this Ship was hired, then they met in Covent-Garden, and there they take Order with the Man to go down with them to the Stairs, where the Waterman was called; indeed Mr. Ashton did part from them in the Way, but presently after came to them at the Stairs; and there came my Lord Preston and his Man, who, together with Elliot, that was there before, I think before, all embark'd in the Boat, and were carried to the Ship, and made all the Haste away they could for France.

When they were there, and came to a Place of Danger, near a Ship of War, there was Care taken, according as they had enquired of the Master of the Ship before, that they should be hid, and hid they were.

Afterwards, when they were past that Danger, when they came to the Block-House at Gravesend, there they thought fit to hide again, and did so; and there they concealed themselves, till they were surpris'd in that Place by Captain Billop.

My Lord, after such Time as Captain Billop had surpris'd them, he tells you, how he came down after this Smack, you see what happened; my Lord Preston first came up; and after he had searched my Lord Preston, Elliot came up, and he was searched; and after Mr. Ashton was once come up, he went down to fetch his Hat, and there was seen to take up this Bundle of Papers, and there the Papers, upon Search, were found in Mr. Ashton's Breast.

This being so found in his Breast, you have heard what Applications were made by this Gentleman to get these Papers cast over-board, and what Promises were made to the Captain, and what Likelihood there was of making his Fortune, if he would go along with them, or throw away the Packet.

You hear, Gentlemen, that after they came to Whitehall, one of the Men swear, that this Gentleman gave them Money, that they should say, they were not hired for France, but for Flanders.

These, Gentlemen, are the several Circumstances that do appear in this Case, which shew the mighty Care and Diligence that was used to get these Papers suppressed that had been thus taken, or to get them again into their own Custody; and that is a Matter that shews how far this Gentleman was concerned in this Design; and taking all these Things together, I think there can no greater Evidence be given, that Mr. Ashton was in this Contrivance, that he was concerned in the Message, that he was to be sent, and in all this Business that was to be done, was as much Guilty as my Lord Preston, who now stands convicted for it.

And the Court will tell you, Gentlemen, there are no Accessories in Treason, all are Principals: Though it be not actually proved, that this Gentleman did know all these Papers what they were; yet in case he hired a Ship for himself and the Lord, whose Papers they were, to go in, and take such Notice of the Papers, as to take Care of them, to suppress and conceal them, That is an Evidence of his Knowledge of the Importance of them; and if so, he will be equally Guilty of the High-Treason.

L. C. J. Holt. I doubt that.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord, I would not willingly press any Thing further than the Nature of the Thing will bear.

L. C. J. Holt. Pray go on, Brother; we are only talking among ourselves.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. The next Thing is this, that is to be considered, That after such Time as these Papers came to be laid open, what is it that appears among them? Truly, I shall not take upon me to repeat so much as the Substance, much less the Particulars of the several Papers; but, I must say, that there does appear to be a formed Design of Subverting the Government, of deposing this King and Queen, and of bringing us all into War, Rebellion and Blood-shed; all this under a Pretence of Establishing the Protestant Religion, and our Legal Government again (tho' I can see no Means they had to depend upon for it), but by a Popish Interest, and a French Power; and how far that is possible, or probable, to promote such an End, by such Means, I leave to your Consideration.

Gentlemen, you have heard all the particular Papers read; here was the Resolution of a Consult and Conference, where this Project was designed; here were Heads of a Declaration, that was to be framed to make the Credulous believe, what mighty Things should be done upon their New Revolution: You see, what Letters have been produced, and cannot but easily apprehend what is the Import and Meaning of them. I resolve, as I said, not to mention the Particulars, but there is scarce one

Line

Line among them, but what is Treason, for it all tends to this Purpose and Design, to depose the King, and alter the present Government.

Now, upon the whole Matter, Gentlemen, what this Gentleman has said, I confess to me seems strange; he said indeed at first, that he had no Defence at all, or that which was very weak, and so it should seem the Truth was, for you see what his Defence has been.

He says, That he went into France, that he owns that he was going thither; but what was it to do? It was to settle some Accounts with the Family of Colonel Worden, and to receive a Sum of Money that was owing to him by a Person there.

Gentlemen, if the Design had so much Innocency in it, certainly he might have had a Pass; at least, there was no need of hiring a Vessel at such an extravagant Rate; there was no Necessity of hiding in this secret manner, and no Necessity of impossible Suggestions, and proffering Great Rewards for the disposing of, and concealing these Papers.

Gentlemen, You will remember many Particulars more, which have not slipped your Observation; I shall not take upon me to repeat them, but leave them to your Consideration.

Only this I must say, That this is a Treason of a very high Nature, a Treason to depose a King that has ventured all he had, even his Life has been in Danger, and his Blood has been spilt to establish this Government, and our Religion, and our Laws, and yet it seems there are Men that think this may be better done by a Popish Interest and French Power, which I think nobody of either Wisdom or Honesty can imagine, or will engage in, and therefore I leave it to your Determination.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, you understand, that Mr. Ashton is now tried for High-Treason; it is mentioned in the Indictment, to be for conspiring the Death, and deposing of the King and Queen, and for that Purpose he did endeavour to go into France, and to carry divers Proposals in Writing, and several Memorials to shew how this Kingdom might be invaded by the French.

To prove this, the Evidence that has been produced and given by the King's Counsel has been long, and consists of two Parts; Witnesses Viva Voce, they have told how Mr. Ashton designed a Voyage to France, and that he hired a Ship for that Purpose, and several Papers were taken out of his Bosom.

In the first Place the Witnesses tell you, that about the latter End of December last, Mr. Ashton and Mr. Elliot came to Burdett's House, where they met with Mrs. Pratt, and Burdett having before that spoken to her about a Smack that she called the Thomas and Elizabeth.

Then there was a Meeting appointed between her and Mr. Ashton at the Wander Tavern, where they did treat and debate about the Hire of it; afterwards they came back to Burdett's again, and there the Agreement was made betwixt the Woman and Mr. Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar, to have a Hundred Pounds. Ninety-three Guineas and Sixpence was fetch'd down by Mr. Ashton, and told out, and deposited in the Hands of Mrs. Burdett; then there was a Six-pence broken, and one Part Mrs. Burdett had, and the other Part Mr. Ashton had; and when either the Master, or Mrs. Pratt should bring the Part of the Six-pence that Mr. Ashton kept, to Mrs. Burdett, the Hundred Pounds was to be paid.

And this Agreement being made, 'tis positively sworn, that they did ask, Whether there was a Hiding-Place in that Vessel? An Answer was made, There was one; and thereupon a Note was given that the Master and Mrs. Pratt should go to the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden.

Upon Wednesday Night, they went there according to the Directions, where meets Ashton and Elliot; but before that, there was a Boat hired at Surrey-Stairs to carry them down to the Ship through Bridge, over-against the Tower; but the Tide not serving till about Ten o' Clock at Night, they had agreed with a Waterman for Half-a-Crown to carry them, and he was to stay till the Tide served. And when they went out from Rigby's they parted, Elliot and the Master went together, Mr. Ashton did not go with them, but came near about the same time to Surrey-Stairs, where they took Water.

Being aboard, it was observed that all these Gentlemen were very timorous, and seemed to be much frighted at the Sight of any Vessel, from which there was any Apprehension of their being taken notice of; and therefore they went down under the Quarter-Hatches; which is a Place very inconvenient for such Persons, where none could stand or sit upright, but were forced to lie upon the Boards, or upon the Ballast.

It seems some Intimation was given, that some Gentlemen had an Intention to go into France to prosecute some treasonable Design: And Captain Billop being employed to pursue them, which he did in a Pinnace, when he came near the Vessel where they were, he called to the Vessel, and under pretence of pressing Seamen, he went on Board: The Master of the Vessel said he had a Protection from the Admiralty; so that there was no Cause for them to fear pressing; nor indeed was there any for Gentlemen to fear it, they being not liable to be pressed.

When the Captain came near the Ship, and declared his Intent of coming on Board, these Gentlemen were gone under the Quarter-Hatches again. Captain Billop coming on Board, and speaking about pressing of the Men, and saying, There was a Couple that would make good Seamen for the King; the Master shewed his Protection, and then the Captain said he would search further in the Ship, and so he did; and then he pulls up the Boards, and there he finds all these Gentlemen, who were called up one after another, and search'd by the Captain.

Gentlemen, There is one of the Witnesses tells you, that when they were come up, he saw a Pacquet that lay in this very Place under the Quarter-Hatches, unto which was tied a piece of Lead, which Mr. Ashton takes up, and puts in his Bosom, with which the Captain being acquainted, Enquiry is made by him, what Mr. Ashton had there? Mr. Ashton said it was his Handkerchief, and nothing but that which he pulled out: But Captain Billop puts his Hand in his Bosom, between his Coat and his Body, and takes out the Pacquet, and carried these Gentlemen on Board the George Frigate, where they stayed till the Tide served to bring them to Whitehall.

But before they came on Board the Frigate, Mr. Ashton was very importunate with him to throw this Pacquet into the Water; when they were on Board the George Frigate, and in the Cabin alone, they continue their Importunity.

Now, say they, we have you here, and you are alone, pray will you throw this Pacquet overboard? And particularly Mr. Ashton said, it would do the Captain no good to injure so many Gentlemen; and Mr. Elliot would have persuaded the Captain to take the Lead that was tied to the Pacquet, and tie it to some Letters that were taken out of my Lord Preston's Pocket, and throw the Pacquet overboard; and then have informed the King and Council, that those Letters was the Pacquet taken out of Mr. Ashton's Bosom: But the Captain very honestly rejected all their Motions of that kind.

Truly, Gentlemen, my Memory will not serve me to repeat all the Particulars, but I question not your Notes will bring them to your Minds. Mr. Elliot, it seems, was so mightily concerned at their being taken with these Papers, that when they shot London-Bridge, he wish'd the Bridge might have fallen upon them and knock'd them on the Head; and, when they were got through, he wish'd a Thunder-bolt would fall down into the Boat and sink them: That, indeed, was Mr. Elliot, and not Mr. Ashton; but Mr. Ashton was as much concerned about disposing of the Pacquet as Mr. Elliot.

At Whitehall this Pacquet is opened, and you have several Papers produced in Evidence, and read to you; you have heard what Evidence has been given, that these are the very Papers that were in the Pacquet thus taken.

First of all, Captain Billop tells you, he carried them to my Lord Nottingham, and that they lay there in his Office; he withdrew, indeed, while my Lord Nottingham examined my Lord Preston, but the Pacquet was not opened in the Interim, but there was only a Paper stuck on the Outside, that my Lord had taken off before the Captain returned into the Room, and there the Pacquet remained entire. He says, my Lord Nottingham opened the Pacquet, and put up all the Papers that were in the Pacquet in his Presence into a Cover again, and sealed them up with his Seal. My Lord Nottingham says positively, he did put up all the Papers that were in the Pacquet again, all and no more, except the Cover, and that he sealed up and delivered it to Captain Billop.

Captain Billop says, he took these very Papers from my Lord Nottingham, and as he received them, carried them without opening to my Lord President.

My Lord President says, he locked them up, unopen'd, in a close Cabinet in his Closet-Room, where nobody comes; there they were that Night, and the next Day he carried them intire to the King, and some of them were read by the King, in the Presence of my Lord President; and they were all taken away by his Lordship, no more nor no less; and my Lord President brought them all to the Cabinet Council, where they were read, and were delivered to my Lord Sydney.

My Lord Sydney swears, These Papers now produced, are the same Papers he had from my Lord President; and my Lord President swears, That they are the same he received by Billop from my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Sydney mark'd them.

So that there can remain no Doubt of these being the same Papers, that were contained in the Pacquet, that was taken out of the Bosom of Mr. Ashton.

Then, as to the Matter of the Papers, I think it is plain, beyond all Contradiction, that the Import of them is Treasonable: They shew a Design of invading the Kingdom by a foreign Force, and of deposing the King and Queen from the Government, and of setting the late King upon the Throne.

It is agreed, as it is mentioned at a Conference between several Noblemen and Gentlemen, that were of the Whig and Tory Party, as they call them, that the late King was to be restored, though by a French Power.

It was impossible for them to effect it by going plainly to Work, and saying in plain Words, the French should invade us. It was to be done in this Manner.

The French King must pretend by all Means to be our Friend, and a Mediator betwixt the late King and the People of England, and this was out of Design plainly to get a Party of the Kingdom to join with them, the most credulous and inconsiderate Sort of People, who, when they shall be seduced into a Belief of the French King's great Kindness, it was not doubted but there would be a Conjunction between them and the French Forces, to restore the late King.

And to procure such a Persuasion in the People, the French King was to shew himself kind to the English Protestants, to appear and act another Part than he had formerly done; he was to permit them the Exercise of the Protestant Religion, thereby to persuade many, that his Persecution of his own Subjects, the Hugonots, was not out of any Aversion to the Protestant Religion, but only to their Antimonarchical and Resisting Principles.

Then an Inconvenience is to be removed; for they complain, that they are too full of Bigotry at St. Germain's, and too bare-fac'd: For they make an open Profession of Popery, and speak truly what they do intend; but say they, if they will have the Design take Effect, they must be more close and secret; for the Folly and Bigotry at St. Germain's was a very great Obstruction. Therefore, they proposed that some Persons might be substituted as Agents to correspond here, that understood the Temper of the Nation, and what would easiliest prevail with the People: And a Model was to be framed at St. Germain's; the Protestants are to be seemingly carested, Seven or Nine to be of the late King's Council, that so we might believe, that he was ours in Interest again, and that we have a Relation to him.

And if Things were carried with such Cunning and Subtlety, they hoped to delude a great many People over into the Interest of the late King; but, if they went bare-faced, it would cause such great Jealousies, that they must totally despair of Success.

Yet they did not hope by these Artifices to obtain so many Friends here, as might have been sufficient to accomplish their Design; and therefore they must have recourse to a foreign Force, particularly a French Force. For says one of the Papers, Use Foreigners to expel Foreigners; that is, Use French to expel Dutch Foreigners, who are our Allies, and are falsely accused by them to have trampled upon the Rights and Liberties of the Nation.

There

There is one Argument used to encourage People to assist the French in the Invasion of their own Country, which I cannot omit; namely, That as soon as the French, with a considerable Expense of Men and Money, had restored the Protestant Religion, the late King to the Crown, and the People to their Liberties, that he would withdraw all his Forces, and reap no Profit or Advantage by his Success. I must confess, this carries so little of Persuasion in it, that it is ridiculous to think thereby to impose upon any Number of Men; but notwithstanding the Weakness of their Arguments, it is apparent they were in good earnest; the Papers give an Account to the French, in what State and Condition our Forts were, Portsmouth not mann'd with above 500, and Gosport how weakly fortified.

It was a happy Juncture between this and the first of March, when Advice is given to make use of the Opportunity: For Men cannot give, but Men may use Opportunities, and something was to be done forthwith, and the Goods must be got in Readiness, particularly Linnen, and the Copper, are mentioned, which are mysterious and dark Expressions, and you may put a Construction upon them as well as I; for they are written in a Style of Trade, as if they were a Correspondence between two Tradesmen, and the Linnen and the Copper are ordered to be brought before the 10th of March.

But however obscure some of these Expressions are, there are others that are more plain, That the French Fleet must be out in April at farthest, and are to come before the Conjunction between the English and the Dutch, and Jennings, Strickland, or Trevannion are to come from St. Malo's in one Night, and to fight the English Fleet in the Chops of the Channel, and not to come so high as Beachy, where they came the last Year.

And there is an Account given, in what Condition and State our Navy was, how many Ships, what Rates, how mann'd, and who the Officers; and then as the French were to be in Readiness to come in April, so they say our Fleet was not to be out till June.

Gentlemen, there are a great many other Particulars; but these are enough, nay half of them were enough to make any Man Guilty of Treason, that was concerned in them, or that had a Hand in carrying or making use of them.

Besides, there are other Letters which can import nothing, but the Writer was of the late King's Interest; one directed to Mr. Redding, the other to Mrs. Redding; and these were to go to France, to let them know how zealous he was in his Duty, and how the Interest of the young Master increased. The Letters have these Expressions; That tho' the Family were decreased, yet our Interest is increased, which is yours, and I speak in the Plural Number, because I speak the Sentiments of my elder Brother, and the rest of our Relations, and desire them to believe they were zealous and cordial in their Duty to Mr. Redding. Now what Interpretation you will make of this, I'll leave to you.

Then there is another Letter to Mrs. Charlton, and another to Mr. Jackson, and divers other Things that have been read, and among the rest, have been read the Heads of a Declaration at large, shewing what should be done, and what Methods should be taken in order to the restoring the late King, and deposing this.

And there is also mention made in a Paper, how divers Persons, who were to be pardoned, as particularly, all Justices of the Peace actually in Commission, are not to be excepted; Outlaws are to be pardoned; Chimney Money to be taken away; and all that come in within one-and-twenty Days, are to be forgiven.

So that it is plain these Letters import a Design to depose the King and Queen, and the Kingdom to be invaded by Foreigners; only a little to colour the Matter, nor to lose the Pretence of a Protestant Interest altogether, there was to be 5 or 6000 Swedes to be made use of in the Invasion.

Gentlemen, if there was a Design of an Invasion, be it by Papists, or by Protestants, if any Act was done tending thereunto, it is High-Treason within the Statute of 25 E. III. For purposing and intending to depose the King and Queen, manifested by any Overt-Act, hath been always held to be High-Treason.

This, Gentlemen, is the Sum and Substance of the Evidence that has been given against the Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Ashton says for himself, It is true, saith he, my Design was to go to France. I was so unfortunate as to have the Papers taken about me. I did take them up; but, says he, it is not at all proved that any one of the Papers that are now produced are my Hand; which is true: There is no such Proof.

The next thing is, that Mr. Ashton being ask'd, What Occasion he had to go to France? he says, He had formerly a Relation to Col. Worden, and did tranfact, and had the Management of his Affairs, which were very great. Col. Worden died half a Year ago, and he enjoind him upon his Death-Bed to go into France about settling some Accounts of his, and he was desired by the Family of Col. Worden so to do.

This Mr. Ashton alleges; but he has not proved it. 'Tis very strange, that if Mr. Ashton was to go to France to negotiate that Affair for Col. Worden's Family, none of that Family should be produced to prove, that Col. Worden gave him such Directions, or that the Family desired him to go into France upon that Account.

Then Mr. Ashton hath endeavoured to give another Reason for his Voyage into France: he affirms, he had some Affairs of his own with relation to the late Queen; he was concerned for her, and she did owe Monies here, and he paid several Debts to Tradesmen, particularly 400 l. she owed to the Coach Harness-Maker; and he having paid it, went over to reimburse himself: The Tradesman was produced, and he says, Mr. Ashton did pay the Money a Year ago; but whether Mr. Ashton had Effects from the late Queen, or paid it out of his own Pocket, does not appear; Mr. Ashton says, he paid it out of his own Pocket, which is very extraordinary, that he should be so kind to pay what he was not obliged to pay, and have no Security to reimburse himself.

So that, Gentlemen, you had best consider whether there be any thing at all said or proved, that can justify Mr. Ashton's going to France, or whether there be any good Reason offered for it.

Then Ashton has called Witnesses to prove, that he was always a Protestant, though he did live in a Popish Family, where they did encourage Papists and discountenance Protestants; for which he had the Ill-will of those he did depend upon.

Gentlemen, all that is agreed, and it is not a Question in this Case, whether Mr. Ashton be a Protestant, or a Papist; but the Question is, Whether he be guilty of High-Treason? from which the being a Protestant does not secure a Man.

But, Gentlemen, if Mr. Ashton had no Knowledge upon what Design the other Persons were to go into France, tho' he had actually gone into France, it had been a Crime in this Juncture of Affairs; yet not High-Treason; but to go into France, and carry a treasonable Scheme of a Design, and Project of an Invasion, that is Treason.

Now the Question is, Whether Mr. Ashton went with such a Purpose or not, you are to consider; I would not lead you into any Strain of the Evidence, but only state it how it stands. It is plain he was concerned all along in hiring the Smack, and as the King's Counsel observed to you, the Price was something extraordinary; they were to pay 100 l. for the Voyage, to which was added some Encouragement to the Woman, that if she performed this Voyage well, she might get 1000 l. before Lady-Day, and the Money was paid by Mr. Ashton, and he was taken aboard the Vessel.

Mr. Ashton was much concerned to secure the Papers, by taking them out of the Place where they lay upon the Ballast under the Quarter-Hatches; and after they were taken out of his Bosom, he was very importunate, and so often, with Captain Billop to throw them over-board.

And why should he be so earnest and concerned, unless he very well knew, and was acquainted with the Contents of those Papers?

And he gave one of the Seamen 2 s. 6 d. to say, They were bound for Flanders: Unless it was a Matter of great Importance he went about, and that was not fit to be known, why should he deny it, or labour to have it concealed? And 100 l. to be paid for this Voyage, was, upon a joint Account, as well for my Lord Preston, as for Mr. Ashton and Elliot; Mr. Ashton did pay the Money, and he does not make it appear whole it was.

Gentlemen, it rests upon you to consider the Evidence you have heard, whether it is sufficient to induce you to believe Mr. Ashton was going into France with these Papers to carry on the Design of Deposing the King and Queen, and Invading the Kingdom: If you are not satisfied in your Consciences that he is guilty, then find him not guilty: On the other Side, if you are satisfied that he is guilty, I do not question but you will find him so.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, My Lord has rightly repeated and stated the Evidence to you; I shall only say but a very few Words to it.

Mr. Ashton, as at first he did, so in his Defence has complained of a very speedy Trial, and would insinuate something of Favour that he might find for that Reason. It does appear he had Notice of his Trial sufficient, and had Time enough to prepare for it: But there is one Thing extraordinary has happened to his Advantage, which I would desire may be taken Notice of. If he had been tried on Saturday, perhaps he had had more Reason to complain than now he has; for he has now (and you see he uses it, and wisely enough too) the Advantage that happened to him upon my Lord Preston's Trial; and has had Time since Saturday to prepare for this Day's Work; so that there is no hard Point upon him as to that Matter, but he has had pretty good Fortune therein.

Next he does insinuate, that he is a Protestant. Gentlemen, the Law does not distinguish between a Protestant Traytor, and a Papist Traytor; if he has committed such an Offence, as by the Law is High-Treason, the Law does not distinguish, nor may we. And Protestants may serve Papists Designs, though they do not directly intend it. Therefore the Evidence to prove him a Protestant is nothing before you; for the Matter is only, whether he be guilty of this Crime or not.

In the Trial of my Lord Preston, then the Labour was, that my Lord was not the Man that was concerned, as the Bearer of this Pacquet of Letters or Writings wherein the Treason is contained; but then it was Mr. Ashton, the Pacquets were found about him; but now it is not Mr. Ashton, but my Lord Preston, and this is now the Question before you, that he stands upon.

But if so be they were all concerned in the Carriage and Transporting of this Business, then they are all alike guilty of Treason, and therefore they cannot shuffle it from one to another.

Now there appears some Reason why they would not all agree to be tried together; for now it is but turning it from my Lord Preston upon Ashton, and Mr. Ashton upon my Lord Preston, and Elliot upon either of them, and so by this Means all might escape, if this were sufficient to serve their Turn.

But the Question before you is, Whether all these Persons are not all in all equally concerned? and 'tis the Evidence that must be your Guide and ours: for it is not Mr. Ashton's Affirmation, that he had Business to go into France, and he happened unluckily to fall into these Men's Company, that will be a sufficient Excuse, unless he prove it.

It had been an easy Matter for him to have proved, if he had been going into France upon Business for Col. Worden; but at length that is turned off, and then the Pretence for going is, to recover some Money he had owing to him there, and that he had paid for another Person. Had he Papers of Instructions of this kind? Had he any one Witness of this Thing?

The Merchandize that he carried out with him is of another Import. Where were the Notes or Bonds that he was to recover? Where is the Account that he had to make up with any body beyond Sea? There is no Manner of Evidence of any such thing.

Next, Gentlemen, do but consider, if the Man were so innocent as he would insinuate, as if he had not gone with the rest upon this Errand, how came the Man to have so heavy a Concern upon him? Why should he go to take up these Papers, if they were not his Brats? Why should he clap them into his Bosom, if he knew nothing what was in them? Why was his Concern so great to have them thrown over-board?

Gentlemen, if you expect that the Hearts of Men should be proved otherwise, than as Men guess by one another's Meanings, by their Actions, 'tis impossible to convict any Man of a Crime; for if his own Affirmation shall be a Defence, he will never want a Defence to keep himself from being convicted: But that is not what the Law gives Credit to; it must be

Proof

Evidence and Proof that you are to judge upon. But of all he pretends to, he proves nothing.

How came he acquainted with my Lord Preston? Sure he was a Man sufficiently known in the World! Why should he go with him and Mr. Elliot? Are they not all known? Are they not Persons of the same Disposition, and much in the same Employment?

He had been taken a little before, he says himself, and was hindered from going; and he had strange ill Luck, if there was nothing else in the Business than what he pretends.

Gentlemen, in short, if you do find by the Evidence, that he was going upon a good and an honest Design, and that he knew nothing of the Danger that was in these Papers, and that these Persons were in by reason of these Papers, and yet would go about to have these Papers concealed; and endeavour to have them thrown away, without knowing what was in them: These are Evidences that will be good for you to go by, if you have any such; but to take his Affirmation, because he says it, when he proves nothing, that is no Evidence to go by.

I leave it to you, as my Lord has done. If you are satisfied upon the Evidence that he is guilty, I doubt not you know, and will do your Duty, and will find him so; and if you have no such Evidence, or any to prove the contrary, that he is not guilty, then you ought to find him so too.

Mr. Ashton. I beg your Pardon for one Word.

L. C. J. Holt. What would you say?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I shall reckon it a particular Favour, if you will pardon me one Word, after your Lordship has given the Charge.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what say you?

Mr. Ashton. I think with Submission, that there is no Proof, I knew, or was privy to the Contents of any of these Papers.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray, Mr. Ashton, shew any Man any Reason, if you can, why did you go down and catch up these Papers, if you did not know what was in them? They might be for your Advantage to be shewn, for any thing you pretend to know.

Mr. Ashton. I did it for my L. Preston's Sake, whose Hand was proved, and he stands convicted as the Bearer of those Papers.

Mr. J. Eyres. But you forgot one thing that was plainly proved, Mr. Ashton, that when you importun'd Capt. Billop to throw away the Papers, you used this as an Argument, It would do him no good to injure three honest Gentlemen.

Mr. Ashton. I did not say so, my Lord, that I know of, tho' indeed he has sworn it.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Ashton, you have been heard as long as you did desire to speak, and were ask'd over and over again, whether you had any more? You are not now saying any new Matter; if you could urge any thing that had been omitted, which made for your Advantage, I believe the Court would indulge you, tho' it be against the Course.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I say there is nothing under my Hand, there is no Privy proved. Does Supposition condemn a Man? And is there any thing but supposition against me? There is not my Hand proved in any of the Papers. I beseech your Lordship and the Jury to observe that.

L. C. J. Holt. Your being in the Company, and being so concern'd, and importunately endeavouring to have thrown them overboard; the Hiring the Vessel to go with these Treasonable Papers to an Enemy's Country, and the Papers found about you, is Fact proved, and is left to the Gentlemen of the Jury to consider of.

Mr. Ashton. But does all this amount to more than Suspicion?

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Ashton, if you speak after we have charged the Jury, you will give us an Occasion of speaking to answer you; the Gentlemen of the Jury are Men of Understanding; they have very well observed the Evidence, and I perceive they have been very extraordinary intent upon it; they will be able to make a right Judgment, no Question of it.

Mr. Ashton. All that I desire, is; there is nothing proved upon me, of my knowing what was in these Papers.

Mr. J. Eyres. And there is that which is very considerable too, that 'tis plain, what you say about Col. Worden's Account, is but a Pretence; for when you were search'd, there was not one Paper, nor one bit of Account found about you, nothing but this Bundle of Treasonable Papers and Letters.

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I humbly beg you will observe what is for me, as well as what is against me.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, do you think you shall stay out any time? The Court desires to know it, because they will order themselves accordingly.

Juryman. My Lord, we do not know till we come together.

L. C. J. Holt. Nay, take your own Time, only the Court would comply with your Convenience in the Adjournment.

Then the Jury withdrew, and the Court adjourn'd for half an Hour, and when they were returned, the Jury came in to give their Verdict, and being called over, answered to their Names.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. John Ashton, hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] Look upon the Prisoner; How say you? Is he guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels?

Foreman. None that we know of.

Maj. Richardson. Look to him, he is found guilty of High-Treason.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court has recorded it. You say, That John Ashton is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, but that he had no Lands nor Tenements, Goods nor Chattels, at the Time of the High-Treason committed, nor at any time since, to your Knowledge, and so you say all?

Jury. Yes.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Gentlemen, I think truly you have gone according to your Evidence, which the Law requires you to do, and that it is which will preserve us all. And tho' it be truly a Thing that falls hard upon the particular Men that are concerned in such Things; yet notwithstanding, we must have more Consideration of the general Good and

VOL. IV.

Preservation, and the Support of the Government, and that the Law have its due Course, than of any particular Man's Case, as to the hard Point of it: we must look to these Things, or there will be no living in the World.

Sir W. Hedges. My Lord, we humbly desire of your Lordship, that we may be dismiss'd from further Attendance this Sessions.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Ay.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, you are dismiss'd, and the Court thanks you for your Service.

Then the Court adjourn'd for an Hour, and then the Lord Mayor and Deputy Recorder, with several of the Justices and Aldermen, returned into the Court, and after Proclamation for Silence, Order was given to bring the Lord Preston and Mr. Ashton to the Bar [Which was done], the Lord Preston standing without the Bar, and Mr. Ashton within.

Cl. of Arr. Sir Richard Grahme, hold up your Hand. [Which he did.]

John Ashton, hold up your Hand. [Which he did.]

My Lord Preston, you stand convicted of High-Treason, for conspiring the Death of the King and Queen's Majesties, for adhering to the King's Enemies, and endeavouring to subvert the Government: What can you say for yourself, why the Court should not proceed to give Judgment against you of Death, according to the Law?

Lord Preston. 'Tis true, my Lord, the Jury have found me guilty of the Treason assigned in the Indictment. My Lord, it is a Treason of a very heavy and black Nature; 'tis of such a Nature, that if I had been conscious to myself to have deserved, I should be very willing to undergo that Judgment that is like presently to pass upon me. It is to endeavour to bring in the King of France to conquer and invade this Kingdom; 'tis a Thought I always abhorred; I love my Religion, my Family, my Country too well to attempt or endeavour any such thing; I must appeal to your Lordship, though now perhaps it is too late, whether the Treason that is laid against me has been perfectly proved; for in the Case of proving Hands, and particularly in the Case of Colonel Sydney, it was disallowed that Comparison of Hands should be Evidence; there ought to be at least one, if not two, Evidences to prove the Writing of it. My Lord, I know this is too late, I should have offered this to the Jury before, but being in the Crowd, and in great Disorder by standing so long, I had not Strength or Ability enough to urge it as I should. I have nothing more to say in the Case, but submit to that Judgment that the Law has assigned.

Mr. D. Recorder. My Lord Preston, your Lordship knows the Proceedings of the Law in such Cases; there is no averring against the Verdict of the Jury; they have found your Lordship guilty, and the Law says, that Judgment must be given upon you according to that Verdict.

Lord Preston. Mr. Recorder, I do not aver against the Verdict. I own it is too late; I should have offered it before, and I must submit to the Judgment of the Law.

Cl. of Arr. John Ashton, hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.]

You are in the same Case with the Prisoner last before you. What can you say for yourself, why Judgment should not be given against you to die according to Law?

Mr. Ashton. My Lord, I would humbly desire I might have a Sight of my Indictment; I have some Reason, perhaps, to believe that I am found guilty upon an Erroneous Indictment; and if it be so, I would desire to have Counsel to argue the Errors of the Indictment.

Mr. D. Recorder. You have heard it twice read in English and once in Latin, and that is all that is allowed to any one in your Case; I never knew the Record of any Indictment shewn to any Prisoner at the Bar.

Mr. Ashton. Suppose there be any Error in it?

Mr. D. Recorder. I am not to suppose any such thing; if there is any, it has been read to you, assign it, and the Court will consider of it.

Mr. Ashton. If I can assign the Errors in the Indictment, may I have the Advantage of it then?

Mr. D. Recorder. If there be Errors, you will have the Advantage of them, if you will assign them; if there be none, you can have none.

Mr. Ashton. Then I say, if there be Words in the Indictment, that there are no such Words in Nature, then, Sir, I am told it is a Vicious and Erroneous Indictment, and that is enough to viciate the Indictment.

Mr. D. Recorder. No such Words in Nature! It is hard to tell what you mean by that; perhaps there are Terms of Art in the Law, which, though you are not acquainted with, we are.

Mr. Ashton. Then there are such Words in Nature.

Mr. D. Recorder. That is an insensible Expression, Words in Nature!

Mr. Ashton. I am informed that even a Letter in an Indictment is enough to viciate it, or if it be false Latin, that will make it an Erroneous Indictment.

Mr. D. Recorder. No, that is not so; but if you will tell me what that Letter is, I'll tell you what I say to it; it may, or it may not be material.

Mr. Ashton. We know it was lately disputed in a Case of this Nature at this Place, and I am informed the Court were of Opinion, if it had been in the Body of the Indictment, it had been an Error.

Mr. D. Recorder. If you please to tell me wherein the Error in your Indictment consists, I may be able to give you a good Answer to it, or you will have the Advantage of it.

Mr. Ashton. I say it consists in this; the Word Cymba is written with an S in the Indictment, whereas it should be with a C.

Mr. D. Recorder. How do you know it?

Mr. Ashton. It is no matter how I know it; I have some Reason to know it, it may be.

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Hardesty, look upon the Record.

Mr. Ashton. With Submission, that is an Error, for there is no such Word as Cymba with an S.

Cl. of Arr. It is a long Indictment; will you please to ask him whereabout it is?

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Ashton, will you tell me where 'tis written?

Mr. Ashton. In the Indictment, when you come to speak of Cymba a Boat.

Mr. D. Recorder. By the Sound I cannot distinguish whether it be S or C.

Mr. Ashton. Sir, I hope you will do me the Justice to examine the Indictment itself.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk is looking upon it: how is it, Mr. Hardesty? Is it with an S or a C?---Cl. of Arr. It is with a C.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk has read it, and he certifies me it is in both Places with a C, which is true Latin.

Mr. Ashton. Is it in all Places with a C?
Cl. of Arr. I have look'd in two Places, and 'tis right; I'll look further, if you please.

Mr. Ashton. Pray do. [Which he did.]

Cl. of Arr. It is with a C in all Places.

Mr. D. Recorder. The Clerk tells me it is the same, and right in every Place, and he has look'd over all the Indictment as to the Matter.

Mr. Ashton. Then, Sir, I submit to it.

Mr. D. Recorder. Make Proclamation for Silence. [Which was done.]

Mr. D. Recorder. My Lord Preston, or rather Sir Richard Graham, and Mr. John Ashton, Ye have been Indicted, Arraigned, and Convicted of High-Treason against their present Majesties King William and Queen Mary, whom God preserve. Ye have had a long, a fair, and favourable Trial, as any Persons that ever have been tried at this Bar.

The Jury that has passed upon your Lives and Deaths has convicted you; and the Court are now to do their last Act, which is to pronounce that Sentence that the Law does inflict upon such Crimes as ye stand convicted of.

It is a great Trouble to me to pronounce a Judgment that is so heavy upon you; but I must say, the Evidence that has been given against you was so clear, and, I suppose, not only convincing to the Twelve Men that tried you, but to all Bystanders, that I can do it with that Satisfaction that becomes one who is intrusted with the King's Justice, that the Law may obtain, and that there should be no Interruption of Justice. And the Sentence that the Law has declared should be pronounced in this Case, is this:

That Ye do respectively go to the Place from whence Ye came; from thence to be drawn upon a Sledge to the Place of Execution, to be there hanged up by the Neck, to be cut down while Ye are yet alive, to have your Hearts and Bowels taken out before your Faces, and your Members cut off and burnt. Your Heads severed from your Bodies, Your Bodies divided into four Quarters, Your Heads and Bodies respectively to be disposed of according to the King's Will and Pleasure; and the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Then the Prisoners were conveyed away to Newgate, the Place from whence they came. Lord Preston obtained a Pardon; but Mr. Ashton was executed on the 28th of January.

THE Queen having remitted that Part of Sentence, as to Drawing and Quartering, he went in a Coach, with two Divines, to Tyburn, where he was executed, and his Body given to his Relations to bury. He delivered this Paper to the Sheriff.

Mr. Sheriff,

Having observed, that the Methods of making Speeches at the Place of Execution, were not always attended with the designed Successes; and thinking it better to employ my last Minutes in Devotion, and Holy Communion with my God, I have prepared this Paper to leave in your Hands, as well to assert my Principles, as to testify my Innocency.

As to my Religion, I profess, by God's Grace, to die in the Faith in the which I was baptized, that of the Church of England, in whose Communion (nothing doubting of my Salvation, thro' the Merits of my Saviour) I have always thought myself safe and happy. According to her Principles, and late much esteemed Doctrine (tho' now unhappily exploded) I have regulated my Life; believing myself obliged, by my Religion, to look upon my rightful, lawful Prince (whatever his Principles were, or his Practices might be) as God's Vicegerent, and accountable, (if guilty of Male-Administration) to God only, from whom he received his Power; and always believing it to be contrary to the Laws of God, the Church, and the Realm, upon any Pretence whatsoever, to take up Arms against him: And let all the World take Notice in this Belief I die. But I have more particular Obligations to the King, my Master, whom I had the Honour to serve, and received many signal Favours from him, for 16 Years past; so that Gratitude (a Thing not much esteemed at this Time) as well as Duty and Religion, commanded the utmost Service I could pay him. And when I add these Considerations, That we were born his Liege Subjects; That we had solemnly professed our Allegiance, and often confirm'd it with Oaths; That his Majesty's Usage, after the Prince of Orange's Arrival, was very hard, severe, and (I may say) unjust; and, That all the new Methods of settling this Nation, have hitherto made it more miserable, poor, and more exposed to foreign Enemies; and, That the Religion we pretend to be fond of preserving, is now, much more than ever, likely to be destroyed: There seemed to me no Way to prevent the Impending Evils, and save these Nations from Poverty and Destruction, but the calling Home our injur'd Sovereign; who, as a true Father of his Country, has (notwithstanding all his Provocations and Injuries,) a natural Love and Tendernefs for all his Subjects. And I am so far from repining at the Loss of my Life, that had I ten thousand, I should rather think myself obliged to sacrifice them all, than omit any just and honest Means to promote so good and necessary a Work. And I advise and desire all my Fellow-Subjects to think of their Duty, and turn to their Allegiance, before the severe Judgments of God overtake 'em for their Perjury and Rebellion: But certainly the Good and Interest of these Nations, abstracted from all other Considerations, will ere long convince them of the Necessity of doing it.

Having thus frankly declared my Principles, I know the Inference will be, that I have acted accordingly, and consequently, that I am now justly condemn'd: But, as I ingenuously own the Inference, so I as positively deny the Consequence; for whatever my Inclinations or Actings have been, yet, as to the Matter I was sentenced to die for, I declare myself innocent. And I will appeal, even to the Judges themselves, whether or no, upon my Trial, there appeared the least Proof that I knew a Tittle contained in the Papers; but Presumptions were with the Jury thought sufficient to find me guilty, tho' I am told I am the first Man that ever was condemned for High-Treason upon bare Suspicion or Presumption; and that contrary to my Lord Coke's, and other eminent Lawyers Opinions. The Knowledge of my own Innocency, as to the Indictment and Charge against me, was That that arm'd me with so much Assurance, and occasioned my casting my Life upon the first twelve Men of the Panel, without challenging any. But tho' I have, I think, just Reason to complain of the severe Charge given by the Judges, and hard Measure I have received; not to mention my close Imprisonment, the hasty and violent Proceedings against me, nor the Industry us'd in the Return of fitting Persons to pass upon me; the denying me a Copy of the Panel, &c. Yet, as I beg for Pardon and Forgiveness at the Hands of God, I do most heartily pray for, and forgive them, and all my Enemies, all the World; nay, even that Judge and Jurymen who did so signally (contrary to common Justice) expose themselves to destroy me. But let the Will of God be done, I rely wholly upon his Mercy, and the Merits of my blessed Saviour, for Salvation; I do cheerfully and intirely resign myself into his Hands, as into the Hands of a faithful Creator, in sure and certain Hopes of a happy Resurrection.

Bless, protect and strengthen, O Lord God, my good and gracious King and Master! In thy due Time let the Virtue, Goodness, and Innocency of the Queen, my Mistress, make all their Enemies blush, and silence the wicked and unjust Calumnies that Malice and Envy have raised against her. Make her and these Nations happy in the Prince of Wales; whom, from unanswerable and undoubted Proofs, I know to be her Son. Restore them all, when thou seest fit, to their just Rights, and on such a Bottom as may support and establish the Church of England, and once more make her flourish, notwithstanding what she hath received of late from her prevaricating Sons. Forgive, forgive, O Lord, all my Enemies; bless all my Friends; comfort and support my dear afflicted Wife, and poor Babes; be thou a Husband and a Father to them; for their Sakes only I could have wished to have lived; but pardon that Wish, O good God, and take my Soul into thy everlasting Glory! Amn. (a)

CXLIX. The Trial of HENRY HARRISON at the Old-Bailey, for the Murder of Andrew Clenche, Doctor of Physick, April 6. 1692. 4 W. & M.

Wednesday, April 6. 1692.

Judges present { Lord Chief Justice Holt,
 Lord Chief Baron Atkins,
 Mr. Justice Nevil.

THE Keeper of the Prison of Newgate did, according to Order of the Court, being then sate, bring up the Body of Henry Harrison, Gent. to the Sessions-House in the Old-Bailey, London, who being at the Bar, was Arraigned upon an Indictment of Felony and Murther, found that Day by the Grand Jury for the City of London, in Manner following:

Cl. of Arr. Henry Harrison, hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] You stand Indicted by the Name of Henry Harrison, late of London, Gent. for that you, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, the fourth Day of January, in the third Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord and Lady, King William and Queen Mary, of England, &c. about Eleven of the Clock in the Night of the same Day, with Force and Arms, &c. at London, viz. in the Parish of St. Peter, Cornhill, in the Ward of Lime-street, in London aforesaid, being in a certain Coach with one Andrew Clenche, Doctor of Physick, and a certain Man yet unknown, in and upon the said Andrew Clenche, in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, then and there, being violently, feloniously, and of your Malice before-thought, did make an Affault. And that you the said Henry Harrison, with the Help and Assistance of the said Man unknown, with a Pocket Handkerchief, with a Coal in the same being put, of the Value of Two-pence, about the Neck of him the said Andrew Clenche, then and there, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice before-thought, did put, fasten and bind; and that you the said Henry Harrison, with the said Handkerchief with the Coal aforesaid in it by you the said Henry Harrison, with the Help and Assistance of the aforesaid Man unknown, about the Neck of the said Andrew Clenche, then as aforesaid, put, fastened and bound, him the said Andrew Clenche, then and there with Force of Arms, &c. feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice before-thought, did choak and strangle; by Reason of which Choaking and Straugling of the said Andrew Clenche by you the said Henry Harrison, with the Handkerchief aforesaid, with the Coal as aforesaid put in it, he the said Andrew Clenche instantly died: So that you the said Henry Harrison, with the Help and Assistance of the said Man unknown, him the said Andrew Clenche, the said fourth Day of January in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish and Ward aforesaid, in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, voluntarily, and of your Malice before-thought, did Kill and Murther, against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen now, their Crown and Dignity.

How say you, Henry Harrison, are you Guilty of this Felony and Murther whereof you stand indicted, or not Guilty?

Mr. Harrison. Not Guilty in Thought, Word nor Deed.

Cl. of Arr. Culprest, How will you be tried?

Mr. Harrison.

Mr. Harrison. By God and my Country;

Cl. of Ar. God send you a good Deliverance.

Then the said Mr. Harrison was taken away from the Bar by the Keeper of Newgate.

And afterwards the same Day, about Eleven of the Clock in the Morning, the said Henry Harrison was brought to the Bar, and he desired the Court that he might then be tried, which was granted, and those Persons who were return'd upon the Jury were called over twice, and their Appearances recorded.

Cl. of Ar. You Henry Harrison, These Men that you shall hear call'd, and Personally do appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord and Lady, the King and Queen, and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Harrison, you may challenge such of the Jury as you shall think fit before they be sworn.

Then the Jury was called and sworn, and then were counted; and the Twelve sworn were these whose Names follow:

JURORS.

John Roll
Nathaniel Houlton
Michael Pindar
James Hulbert
Joseph Horne
Richard Chewne

John Lawford
Nicholas Wildeboare
Robert Williamson
William Merriam
Thomas Simpson
Thomas Pakeman.

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made as is usual.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, I have made no Challenges, because I do believe the Jury to be honest Men.

Cl. of Ar. — Henry Harrison, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Gentlemen, you that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of Henry Harrison, late of London, Gent. &c. [he reads the Indictment] Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty; and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to inquire whether he be Guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find that he is Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the Time of the Felony and Murder committed, or at any time since. If you find him Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you found him Guilty. If you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Darnell. — My Lord, Mr. Harrison's Agents or Friends have, since the last Sessions, made or conveyed away a young Man that was a Principal Evidence against him.

L. C. J. That is a very ill Thing, and if it be prov'd, it will no way conduce to Mr. Harrison's Advantage.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, I know nothing of it. But, my Lord, one of my Witnesses, that would have been material for me, is lately dead, Sir Edward Hungerford's Son.

Mr. Darnell. May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen that are sworn: I am of Counsel for the King and Queen against the Prisoner at the Bar, who stands indicted for the Murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche, which was as barbarous a Murder as any that hath been committed in this Age. And considering it was done in the Dark, I think there will be given as clear an Evidence of it against Mr. Harrison, the Prisoner, as can be expected. And it was upon this Occasion: One Mrs. Vanwicke a Widow (between whom and Mr. Harrison there was a great Kindness) prevailed with Dr. Clenche, to whom she was indebted Twenty Pounds, to lend her so much more as would make it up One Hundred and Twenty Pounds, and to take a Mortgage of a House of her's in Buckingham-Court near Charing-Cross for his Security; and Mr. Harrison was present with Mrs. Vanwicke at the lending of the rest of the Money, and executing of the Mortgage, as he was wont to be at the Management of her Affairs; but when the Time came that it was to be repaid, the Doctor could not get his Money, and Mrs. Vanwicke having but an Estate for Life in the House, and having long delayed the Doctor, he brought an Ejectment for the recovering of the House, upon which the Prisoner came to Dr. Clenche, and abused him with very scurrilous Language, and his Passion growing higher, he laid his Hand upon his Sword, and would have drawn it, and if it had not been for one Mr. Johnson, 'twas thought he would have kill'd the Doctor at that time; so that the Doctor desired Mr. Johnson to take the Business upon himself, and to act in his own Name, he was so much afraid of him. And it will be proved further to you, that at another time the Prisoner said, That Dr. Clenche was a Rogue and a Villain, and deserved to have his Throat cut. And some time after this, Mrs. Vanwicke would have borrowed some more Money of the Doctor, but he refused to lend it her; whereupon she acquainting the Prisoner with it, he said, Leave him to me, Madam; I'll warrant you, I'll manage him; he is a Rogue, and deserves to have his Throat cut. And afterwards, about St. Thomas's Day last, the Prisoner went to Mrs. West the Tenant, who dwelt in the House mortgaged to Dr. Clenche, and desired of Mrs. West to have some Money for Mrs. Vanwicke, and it should be discounted in Part of the then next Christmas Rent. But the said Mrs. West refused to pay him any, telling him, that she and her Husband were forbid by Dr. Clenche and the Ground Landlord, to pay any more to Mrs. Vanwicke; and thereupon the Prisoner expressed his further Malice against the Doctor, and said, He is a great Rogue, and a Villain, and deserves to have his Throat cut, and will not die in his Bed. And, Gentlemen, soon after the Prisoner began to put his malicious Design against the Doctor in Execution, and the Method he took was first to change his Lodgings; for on the Day before Christmas Eve last, he took new Lodgings at one Mr. Garway's in Threadneedle-Street, near the Old Exchange, attended by a Foot-Boy, pretending himself to be a Parliament-Man, and that he was just then come out of the Country, and lay in his Lodgings there every Night, until the first Day of January following, but lay out that Night, and the two next Nights following. And whilst he lodged at this Mr. Garway's this Matter happen'd, which does conduce somewhat towards the Discovery of this Murder: One Evening the Prisoner being in his Chamber there, and one Mrs. Jackson, the Daughter of Mrs. Garway, making a Fire for him, he did take out his Handkerchief, and held it before the Fire to dry it, which she took great Notice of, because it was coarse and dirty, and not fit for his Quality (as she thought), it being made of ordinary Indian Stuff, like her Mother's Maid's Apron. And, Gentlemen, this very Handkerchief was the same with which the Murder was committed, and this Mrs. Jackson will swear it to be the same; for it is a very remarkable one, and it will be produced to you. And we shall shew you further, That on the third Day of January (being the Day before this Murder was committed) he caused a sham Letter to be left for him at his Lodgings at this Mr. Garway's, as written from a Friend of his that was sick in the Country, earnestly pressing him to come quickly down to him: And we shall prove, that the same Evening, he being with Mrs. Vanwicke in Woodstreet-Compter, did again threaten Dr. Clenche, and said, That he was a Rogue, and he would have his Blood. And upon the Fourth Day of January last, he again changed his Lodgings, and took new ones at one Mr. Jones's, a Cane-Chair-Maker in St. Paul's Church-yard, and there he pretended himself to be a Country Gentleman, just then come out of Cumberland, and brought in a Portmanteau Trunk thither: And the same Day he sent a Letter to Mrs. Garway, where he had lodged before, acquainting her, That he was gone out of Town for a Week or ten Days. And, to give you farther Satisfaction, we shall prove, that upon the same fourth Day of January, in the Night of which this unfortunate Gentleman was murdered, the Prisoner was at one Mr. Robert Humston's Lodgings at the Golden Key in Fleetstreet, over-against Fetter-Lane End, at near Nine of the Clock at Night; and being ask'd by Mr. Humston to stay and sup with him, he said, he could not, for he had been about earnest Business that Day, which was to be done that Night, and that a Gentleman stayed for him in the Street, to go with him about it, and so he went away. And soon after, about Nine of the Clock the same Night, two Men standing in Fleetstreet, at Fetter-Lane End, call'd for a Coach, and ask'd the Coachman if he knew Dr. Clenche, who dwelt in Brownlow-street in Holborn; and the Coachman reply'd, he did know the Street, but not the Doctor: whereupon they went into the Coach, and ordered him to drive to the End of Brownlow-street; and when they came thither, one of them called to the Coachman, and bade him go to Dr. Clenche's, and tell him, that two Gentlemen in a Coach, at the End of the Street, desired him to go with them to a Patient that was very sick; which the Coachman did. And he found the Doctor in his Night-Gown and Slippers, and just a-going to Bed; but he immediately dressed himself, and went to them into the Coach. And it fell out very happily for the further Discovery of this Murder, that while this Coach stood at the End of Brownlow-street, a young Gentlewoman standing at her Door near it, and fancying that while the Coachman went on the Errand, the Gentlemen would slip out of the Coach (I think they call it Bilking) she watch'd them. And a Lamp that lighted cross Holborn, over-against Brownlow-street End, and another about the Middle of Brownlow-street, gave such a Light into the Coach, that she plainly saw one of the Men that sat in it, and see him look out of the Coach after the Coachman, and heard him swear at the Coachman, because he made no more Haste in going to the Doctor's House; and she is very certain that the Prisoner at the Bar is the same Person that look'd out of the Coach, and that did swear at the Coachman, and is more confident of it from the Remarkableness of his Voice. For the hearing of this Murder, and remembering these Circumstances, she went to Newgate to see the Prisoner, and hearing his Voice in another Room, before she saw him, she declared to the Persons that were then with her, that the Voice she then heard, was the Person's Voice that she saw look out of the Coach, and that did swear at the Coachman; and afterwards, when she came into the Room where the Prisoner was, though with several other Men, she pointed to him as the Person, and she hearing him then speak again, declared to the Persons with her, that both by his Voice, and by his Countenance, she knew him to be the same Man. And, my Lord, after those Gentlemen had gotten the Doctor into the Coach, one of them called to the Coachman, and bade him make haste and drive them to Leaden-Hall-Market, and when they were come within Holborn-Bars, one of them called to the Coachman, and bade him drive faster; whereupon the Coachman drove them very fast through Holborn to Leaden-Hall-Market-Gate; and when he came there, one of them bade him drive to the Pye without Aldgate (before which Time, without Doubt, the Murder was committed upon the Doctor, for his Hat was found next Morning in Holborn, near Fetter-Lane End; but the driving so long about after, is supposed to be done, lest the Doctor might recover; and when they were come without Aldgate, one of them ordered the Coachman to ask there for one Hunt, a Chyrurgeon; which he did, and being answered, that no such Person was there, he ordered the Coachman to drive back again to Leaden-Hall, and when they came there, one of them called the Coachman, and gave him three Shillings and Six-pence, and bade him go into the Market there to one Hunt, a Poulterer, and buy them a Couple of Fowls, but the Coachman could not find any Hunt, a Poulterer; but however he bought a Couple of Fowls for three Shillings, and when he came with them to his Coach, the two Gentlemen were gone, and the Doctor left in the Coach, murder'd, with a Handkerchief tied fast about his Neck, with a Coal in it (which will be proved to be the Prisoner's Handkerchief). Besides, there was a Boy in the Street there, who took Notice of the Coachman's being sent of an Errand, and saw the two Persons come out of the Coach in great Haste, and he going towards the Coach before they went out of it, one of them did swear at him to be gone, and of him the Boy took most Notice, and was as positive as any Man can be to the Person of one that he never saw before, that the Prisoner now at the Bar was one of them, and was the Person that did then swear at him; but this Witness is spirited away, and cannot be heard of, although he hath been described in the Gazette, and diligent Search and Enquiry has been made after him. But we have his Examination upon Oath before the Coroner; and we must submit to the Court how far that shall be admitted as Evidence.

Gen-

Gentlemen, we will call our Witnesses; and if they prove all this Matter, I believe every Man here will be satisfied, that the Prisoner at the Bar is Guilty of this base Murder.

Mr. Darnel. Pray call and swear Mr. George Wigmore. (Who was sworn with others.)

Mr. Darnel. Pray, Mr. Wigmore, tell my Lord and the Jury what you know of any Money that was lent by Dr. Clenche, and to whom.

Mr. George Wigmore. May it please your Lordship, there was a Draught of a Mortgage from Mrs. Vanwicke to Dr. Clenche, made by a Gentleman of Grays-Inn, for the Sum of One Hundred and Twenty Pounds, and I ingross'd it; and I paid, by the Doctor's Order, above threescore Pounds of the Money, and the rest of it was satisfied before; and upon Sealing of the Mortgage for the Money, Mr. Harrison and one Mr. Rowe fell out about their Dividend of the Money, and called one another ill Names; and Mr. Rowe produced a Bill of what he had done and laid out for Coach-Hire and other Things for Mrs. Vanwicke; and Mr. Harrison and he had high Words about it, and called one another Rogues; so I told them, if they could not agree, I would put the Money up again, and carry it Home; but Mrs. Vanwicke and they did agree at last, and sealed the Mortgage, and I paid the Money; and Mrs. Vanwicke and Mr. Harrison took out twenty Pounds of the Money, and paid it to Mr. Rowe; and after Mr. Rowe was gone, they desired me to go with them to the Young Devil Tavern, and they both used hard Expressions there against Mr. Rowe.

L. C. J. Who was the Mortgage made to?

Mr. Wigmore. My Lord, it was made to Dr. Clenche for One Hundred and Twenty Pounds.

Mr. Harrison. Pray, Sir, will you tell the Jury how much Money the Gentlewoman had; and if Mr. Rowe had not slept between me and her, I had not been in Question.

Mr. Wigmore. Mrs. Vanwicke acknowledged, that the Money I paid her made up One Hundred and Twenty Pounds.

L. C. J. What did you hear the Prisoner say, against Dr. Clenche?

Mr. Wigmore. My Lord, I do say that he was very troublesome to the Doctor.

L. C. J. Were there any Reproaches cast upon the Doctor at that Time?

Mr. Wigmore. No, my Lord, only upon Rowe, because he was a Trustee.

Mr. Darnel. Did you hear him say any thing against the Doctor?

Mr. Wigmore. Indeed, I cannot particularly say.

L. C. J. He is upon his Oath, and he is sensible, and understands the Question.

Mr. Wigmore. He did say very ugly Words; and when I met him afterwards in the Highway, he was very huffy, and I thought he would have drawn his Sword upon me.

L. C. J. What did he say of the Doctor?

Mr. Wigmore. I cannot say particularly what he said.

L. C. J. Stand down.

Mr. Darnel. Call Mr. Thomas Johnson. (Who was sworn, and stood up.)

Mr. Darnel. Sir, Pray give the Court an Account what you know concerning this Matter.

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, I believe I shall say nothing that Mr. Harrison will contradict. I was Attorney for Dr. Clenche between him and Mrs. Vanwicke; and I sued Mr. Rowe, that was bound with Mrs. Vanwicke in a Bond to perform Covenants for Re-payment of the Money lent her by Dr. Clenche upon Mortgage; and I advised the Dr. and told him, Don't let us trouble the Tenant, but let us take Rowe first; and I sued Rowe, and had him arrested; and after some time, I saw that the Mortgage must do our Business, for Rowe could not pay the Money; whereupon I caused a Declaration in Ejectment to be delivered against Mrs. Vanwicke's Tenant of the House mortgaged by her to Dr. Clenche; and then Mr. Harrison came to me, and he expressed himself against the Doctor after a strange Rate, and laid his Hand upon his Sword; so, my Lord, I said to him, What a Fool do you make of yourself! Must none go to Law, but they must ask your Leave? I suppose Mr. Harrison cannot deny this. Then Mr. Harrison preferred a Petition to the Lords Commissioners of the Great Seal for Mrs. Vanwicke, and thereby suggested to their Lordships, that she was wronged in the Purchase, and in the Mortgage-Money, and that Twenty Pounds of it was a former Debt of her Husband's; and he finding she could have no Relief before them without Payment of the Mortgage-Money, he grew troublesome; yet says I, Mr. Harrison, What she hath done, I cannot help; but if she would pay the rest, I told him I would abate her Twenty Pounds, and the Interest Money also.

Mr. Darnel. Pray, Sir, did the Doctor desire you to act for him in your own Name, because he had no mind to meet with Mrs. Vanwicke and the Prisoner?

Mr. Johnson. The Doctor did find himself too deeply concerned with them, and he did not care to have to do with them; whether it was that he was afraid of his Life, I cannot say; but he said to me, Pray, Sir, go on, I will put all into your Hands, and I will trust you with all the Affair; and let them come to you, and not trouble me; own it to be your own; and I told him I feared none of them; and the Doctor gave out, That he had made over all to me, although he had not; and upon this, I fear, comes this unfortunate Business, and the Doctor's Lady must look after it herself.

L. C. J. What did he say when he had laid his Hand upon his Sword in your Study?

Mr. Johnson. He said the Dr. had cheated the Widow; and he said, That he would be revenged on him, as near as my Memory will serve me; I suppose he will not deny it; whether he did this in a Passion, or to fright the Doctor or no, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Was that before you offered to abate the Twenty Pounds?

Mr. Johnson. It was before I offered to abate it.

Mr. Harrison. How long was it before Dr. Clenche was murdered?

Mr. Johnson. I think it was about a Fortnight, or three Weeks, or a little more.

Mr. Harrison. I never threatened the Doctor in my Life; but I said, Rowe had been a Villain, and a Cheat, and he and Rowe were the Men; and I shall make it appear, that the Dr. never wrong'd the Widow.

L. C. J. How came Rowe to be intrusted or concerned with the Money?

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, Mr. Cornelius Vandinanker, a Merchant, gave a Legacy of Five Hundred Pounds to the Widow Vanwicke and her Children; and Mr. Rowe was a Trustee on the Purchase, and had by that the Management of the Affair.

Mr. Darnel. Call Mr. George Howard.

(Who being sworn, stood up.)

Mr. Darnel. Mr. Howard, Give the Court an Account of what you know concerning the Prisoner's threatening Dr. Clenche.

Mr. Howard. My Lord, I was at Joe's Coffee-house, near Warwick-House in Holborn, some considerable time before Dr. Clenche was murdered, where Mr. Harrison used several virulent Expressions against Dr. Clenche; among others, one was, That he was a Rogue and a Rascal, and deserved to have his Throat cut. Mrs. Vanwicke was then in Company, and they both said, That they then came from Dr. Clenche's.

Mr. Darnel. You are sure he said that Dr. Clenche deserved to have his Throat cut?

Mr. Howard. Yes: He said, That Dr. Clenche deserved to have his Throat cut.

Mr. Harrison. Who was I talking to?

Mr. Howard. You were talking to Mrs. Mary Sheriff.

Mr. Darnel. Call Mrs. Mary Sheriff.

(Who was sworn, and stood up.)

Mrs. Sheriff. My Lord, Mrs. Vanwicke came to my House with Mr. Harrison, and desired me to go with her to Dr. Clenche's House; and when we came there, she desired him to let her have Twenty Pounds more, and he said, No; if his House were full of Money, he would not lend her any more, so long as she kept Mr. Harrison Company, for he would spend it; and he advised her to be a Gentleman's House-keeper, and he would help her to a Place; and told her withal, That she owed him One Hundred and Twenty Pounds, for which he would take One Hundred Pounds; and we left Mr. Harrison behind us at my House, and did not take him with us, because we were afraid he might anger the Doctor, and fall out with him; so when we came back, Mr. Harrison asked Mrs. Vanwicke, what Dr. Clenche said: Why, says she, he said, That he will not lend me any more Money while I keep you Company, for you will spend it, and that I must go to Service. To Service! said Mr. Harrison; God damn him! Have a Person of your Quality go to Service! He deserves to have his Throat cut; let me alone, I'll manage him as never any Man was managed; and so away they went together.

Mr. Harrison. Did not you say, That as you hop'd to be saved, that I was innocent of the Thing?

L. C. J. She does not accuse you of doing the Fact, but gives an Account of some Expressions that passed from you.

Mrs. Sheriff. You were always talking against Dr. Clenche; and you said, God damn him, he was an old Rogue, and that Mrs. Vanwicke was almost starved to Death.

Mr. Harrison. Rowe, Rowe, I meant, my Lord.

(The Prisoner then being in a Passion.)

L. C. J. Mr. Harrison, do not fall into a Passion; it may be more to your Advantage in the making your Defence, if you keep your Temper.

L. C. J. Witness, what were the Words that he said against Doctor Clenche?

Mrs. Sheriff. Why, he speaking of Doctor Clenche, said to Mrs. Vanwicke, God damn him, would he have a Person of your Quality go to Service! He deserves to have his Throat cut. Well, Madam, says he, be contented; I'll manage him as never any Man was managed.

Mr. Harrison. What had you for your Swearing?

Coroner for the King and Queen. Witness, he asketh you, If you had any thing for your Swearing against him?

Mrs. Sheriff. No, I had nothing, neither have I need of any thing; I had not so much as my Coach-hire.

Mr. Darnel. Call Mrs. Elizabeth West. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Darnel. Mistress, give an Account to the Court, what you know about the Prisoner's coming to demand Rent of you, and what passed.

Mrs. West. May it please your Lordship, this Gentleman, the Prisoner, came to me two or three Days before St. Thomas's Day last, and desired me to give him some Rent for Mrs. Vanwicke; and I told him I had no Power to pay him, because I was warned by Dr. Clenche to pay no more: Says he to me again, Dr. Clenche and Rowe are great Rogues, and great Villains. Sir, says I to him again, I believe that the Doctor is a very honest Man. No, says Mr. Harrison, he is a great Villain, and he will never die in his Bed; which of them he meant, Mr. Rowe or Dr. Clenche, I cannot tell. And Mrs. Vanwicke and Mr. Harrison, a little time before that, pressed me to let them have some Shop Goods in Part of her Rent, to grow due; and she made great Complaint, that her Children were ready to starve; and I then told them, that Mr. Johnson had forewarned me to pay no more Rent to Mrs. Vanwicke, and if I did, I should pay it again; and therefore I would not pay any more Rent to her, or deliver her any Goods, until she had agreed with Mr. Johnson; and then Mr. Harrison said, that Mr. Johnson was a great Villain and a great Rogue, and that they had all combined together to cheat the Widow. And Mr. Johnson being at my House, Mrs. Vanwicke fell upon him in a great Rage, and said, she would tear his Throat out, and laid hold on him; and Mr. Johnson got from her, and went away in great Haste. And the last time I saw Dr. Clenche, I pressed very hard upon him, to let Mrs. Vanwicke have more Money; and the Doctor said, that she would never do any Good with it, for she spent it all upon Mr. Harrison; and I wished him to let her have Twenty Pounds more; and he said, That he advised her to go to Service, and that he had wished her to a Service of Twenty Pounds a Year, and she abused him for it.

L. C. J. What Cloaths had the Prisoner on?

Mrs. West. My Lord, he had an old thread-bare black Cloth Suit of Cloaths on, which looked very shabby.

Mr. Harrison. What Religion are you of, Mistress?

Mrs. West. I was born and bred a Protestant.

Mr. Harrison. I believe you are a Papist, and will swear any thing; you keep Roman Catholics in your House, they have murdered Dr. Clenche, for aught I know.

L. C. J. Did Mr. Harrison ever lodge in your House?

Mrs. West. No, my Lord, I have none but Persons of Quality lodge in my House, and they belong to the present Government.

Mr. Darnel. Call Ann Watson.

(Who was sworn.)

Mr. Darnel.

Mr. Darnell. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of Mr. Harrison's taking of Lodgings at Mr. Garway's House, and when it was.
Anne Watson. He came about six a-Clock at Night, the Day before Christmas-Eve last, to my Master's, Mr. Garway's House, and told us, that he was newly come out of the Country; and lodged there that Night, and so he did until and upon the last Night of December; and on the first Day of January he went out, and staid out that Night; and on the Sunday, the third of January last, at Night, he came again with a Person with him, and fetch'd away his Portmanteau-Trunk and Things, and paid for his Lodging; and in his Absence there was a Letter left for him, which I gave him, and he said, it came out of the Country, and that he had a Friend sick in the Country, and did intend to go down to see him, being one from whom he expected a Legacy, and he left that Letter on the Kitchen Window, and on the Monday after, being the fourth Day of January last, he sent a Letter, signifying he was gone out of Town.

(Then the Letter was produced, marked with the Penny-Post Mark.)

Mr. Darnell. Who knows Mr. Harrison's Hand? Mr. Johnson, take that Letter and look upon it, and tell the Court if you think it to be Mr. Harrison's Hand.

(Mr. Johnson takes the Letter and looks upon it.)

Mr. Johnson. My Lord, I believe it to be Mr. Harrison's Hand.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I desire that the Letter may be read.

L. C. J. Mr. Clerk of the Peace, read the Letter; and the Subscription first.

To Mrs. Garraway, at the Hand and Apple in Threadneedle-Street, near the Royal-Exchange, Present.

Mrs. Garraway,

I AM sorry it should be such an Inconveniency to you, as it is. I have left with your Maid, Three Half-Crowns, and if it is not enough, I will give you more. I am gone out of Town for a Week or Ten Days, and as soon as I come again, I will wait on you; which is all till I see you, from

Your Friend, and Servant,

4th Jan. 1691.

H. Harrison.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Henry Garway and his Wife.

[Who were called and sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Garway, take that Letter, and look upon it, and tell the Court when you received it.

Then she takes the Letter which was produced, and read as before, and looked upon it.

Mrs. Garway. My Lord, I received this Letter on Monday the 4th Day of January last.

L. C. J. Watson, when did he leave the Lodgings, say you?

Anne Watson. He went away the first of January last, about nine a-Clock in the Morning, and returned not that Night; but on the second of January last, he was at my Mistress's Shop again (as my Mistress told me), and he came about five a-Clock on the next Sunday Night (being the third of January last) with a Person with him, to my Master's House, and fetch'd away his Portmanteau-Trunk and Things, and left Three Half-Crowns with me for his Lodgings, which I gave to my Mistress.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Catherine Jackson.

[Who was sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know concerning Mr. Harrison's coming to lodge at Mr. Garway's, and when he went away, and what you know of any Handkerchief he had.

Mrs. Jackson. He came on the Day before Christmas-Eve, to lodge at my Father's, Mr. Garway's House, and lodged there several Nights, and went away the third of January at Night, with his Things, but was absent some Nights between his coming and going away; and whilst he lodged there, I observed a Handkerchief in his Hand, as I was making a Fire for him in his Chamber, and the more, because he had said he was a Parliament-Man, and I thought it more like a Seaman's Handkerchief, than a Parliament-Man's, and our Maid had an Apron of the same kind of Stuff.

(Then the Handkerchief was produced in Court by the Coroner, and the Coat in it, wherewith Dr. Clenche was strangled.)

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Jackson, I desire that you would look upon that Handkerchief, and tell the Court what you know of it.

Mrs. Jackson. This is the Handkerchief, that I saw Mr. Harrison hold to the Fire, when I was making of it in his Chamber, or very like that Handkerchief, for I observed it to be very like my Mother's Maid's Apron.

(Then a Piece of the Maid's Apron was produced, and they being compared, were very like.)

Mr. Harrison. Did you hear me say, I was a Parliament-Man?

Mrs. Jackson. Yes, I heard you say so.

Mr. Harrison. Perhaps you might hear my Boy say so.

Mrs. Jackson. Your Foot-Boy said, you were a Parliament-Man: And you said so yourself.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Garway again.

[He appeared.]

Mr. Darnell. Where is the Letter you receiv'd from Mr. Harrison, since he was a Prisoner?

L. C. J. What do you say about a Letter that came to your House from the Prisoner?

Mr. Garway. My Lord, I had this Letter from him last Saturday, directed to my Wife, and I believe it to be his Hand.

[He produceth the Letter.]

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I desire that the Letter may be read.

L. C. J. Read the Letter, Mr. Tanner.

[Clerk of the Peace reads.]

To Mrs. Garway at the Hand and Apple in Threadneedle-Street, behind the Royal-Exchange, Present.

Mrs. Garway,

I Was informed Yesterday, that you are to appear against me at next Sessions. I am sure you never heard me mention Dr. Clenche, in all your Life; and if you do, it will look like Malice. My Lord Chief Justice is sensible of the Wrong done me. This is all from

Your Servant,

Henry Harrison.

L. C. J. Mr. Harrison, Did I ever tell you, that I was sensible of it?
[To which he made no Reply.]

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. John Cartwright.

[Who was sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. I would have you declare, what you heard Mr. Harrison say concerning Doctor Clenche.

Mr. Cartwright. My Lord, upon the Third of January last, Mr. Harrison came to Woodstreet-Compter; it was on a Sunday in the Evening, about Five or Six a-Clock, I was standing in the Gate, and I let him in. As soon as he came in, he asked how poor Mrs. Vanwicke did; says he, She hath been wronged of Five Hundred Pounds within these 12 Months: Then I let him into the Court, and he went into her Chamber; and about half an Hour after, I was sent by my Master, to require some Chamber-rent of Mrs. Vanwicke, and I heard Mr. Harrison and she at high Words, and in a great Passion, and I heard Mr. Harrison swear, God damn his Blood, he would be reveng'd of that Rogue, and named Clenche or Winche, I cannot tell which, and he would have his Blood; ere it were long.

Mr. Harrison. Where were you?

J. Cartwright. My Lord, I was at the Chamber-door, and there was no Body on that Side of the House, but Mr. Harrison, Mrs. Vanwicke, and myself.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Mary Jones.

[Who was sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. Now, my Lord, I will call one to prove, where he took a new Lodging, the very Day the Murder was done.

L. C. J. Cartwright, was that in Mrs. Vanwicke's Chamber that you heard him swear so?

Mr. Cartwright. Yes, my Lord, in her Chamber; and none was with her, but he only.

Mr. Darnell. You, the last Witness Mrs. Jones, when did Mr. Harrison come to lodge at your House?—Mrs. Jones. He came on a Monday.

Mr. Darnell. What Day of the Month was it?

Mrs. Jones. I can't tell what Day of the Month, for I did not set it down.

Mr. Darnell. Was it the Monday before he was taken?

Mrs. Jones. Yes, it was the Monday before.

Mr. Darnell. Whence did he pretend to come?

Mrs. Jones. He said, That he was come out of the Country, and had formerly lodged in Fleet-street, and that where he had lodged formerly, they had left off House-keeping, and were gone into the Country.

L. C. J. Where is your House?

Mrs. Jones. In St. Paul's Church-Yard, at the Sign of the Golden-Ball.

Mr. Darnell. Call James Howfeman.

[Who was sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. Do you tell what you know, about Mr. Harrison's being at Mr. Jones's House.

Howfeman. My Lord, he came in about Eight a-Clock at Night, and brought a Porter with him, and a Portmanteau-Trunk; and after that, the Porter went out a little before him, and then he followed him, and went out after.

Mr. Darnell. Did you hear him say, from whence he came?

Howfeman. No, I did not.

Mr. Darnell. Call Anne Evans.

[Who did not appear.]

Mr. Darnell. Then call Mr. Robert Humston.

[Who was sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. Mr. Humston, I desire you will give the Court an Account of Mr. Harrison's being at your House that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered.

Mr. Humston. My Lord, I met Mr. Harrison on Monday the 4th of January last, and he told me, he was going to the Compter, to a Gentlewoman that was much oppressed, and that he wanted Money to get her released; upon which, I gave him some Money, and after some Discourse, I desired him to bring home my Gown, that I formerly let him, and seemed angry with him, for that he had several times promised me to bring it home, but had failed therein; and thereupon he promised, that I should have it that Night: And that Evening about Nine of the Clock, he came to my Lodgings, and brought home my Gown; and when he came, I asked him, if he had gotten Mrs. Vanwicke released: And Mr. Harrison answered, No. Upon which, I blamed him for neglecting an old Friend; and Mr. Harrison excused it, telling me, That he had met with some Persons upon earnest Business, which prevented him. And then I asked Mr. Harrison to stay and sup with me, but he refused it, saying, That he had been about extraordinary Business that Day, which must be done that Night, and that a Gentleman stay'd in the Street for him, and they two were going to do it.

L. C. J. Where do you live? And how long stayed he at your House?

Mr. Humston. I lodged then at the Golden Key in Fleet-street, over-against Fetter-lane End: He came to my Lodgings about Nine of the Clock at Night, and stayed there but a little time.

L. C. J. What manner of Cloaths had he on?

Mr. Humston. My Lord, he had a Cloak on, but I cannot tell what Cloaths he had under it, he brought my Gown up under his Cloak.

Mr. Darnell. Swear Esther King.

[Who was sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. Do you know what time Mr. Harrison was at Mr. Humston's Lodgings?

Esther King. It was on Monday the fourth Day of January last, about Nine of the Clock at Night, as near as I can guess, the Shop was shut up, and I let him out.

Mr. Darnell. Where was it?

Esther King. At the Golden Key in Fleet-street, over again Fetter-lane End.

Mr. Darnell. What Cloaths had he on?

Esther King. I cannot tell well, but he had a Cloak on, I do not know what Cloaths he had on besides.

Mr. Harrison. Was it Eight or Nine a-Clock?

Esther King. It was near Nine, as near as I can guess.

Mr. Darnell. Swear John Sikes the Coachman.

[Which was done.]

Mr. Darnell. Give an Account to the Court what you know about carrying two Men in your Coach, and how you found Dr. Clenche murdered.

John Sikes. My Lord, on the 4th of January last, being Monday, I was at the Play-House, and there I took up a Man and a Woman, and carried them into the City; so I brought the Gentleman back again to the Green-Dragon Tavern in Fleet-street; and then, he said he would pay me by the Hour; he said, That it was but much about Nine a-Clock. Then I left him, and was driving up the Street, towards the Temple, and two Men stood in Fleet-street, about Fetter-lane End, and they asked me, if I knew Dr. Clenche, who dwelt in Brownlow-street in Holborn? I told them, That I did not know Dr. Clenche, but I knew the Street. So they went into my Coach, and one of them bade me drive thither, and I did, and stopt at the Street's End; because the Gate at the other End was shut, so that I could not turn my Coach: And one of them bid me go and tell the Doctor, That there were two Gentlemen in a Coach at the Street's End, that would desire him to go with them to see one that was not well. The Doctor asked me, If I could not tell who they were? Or, who it was, that he was to go to? I told him, that I could not tell. The Doctor was in his Night-Gown and Slippers, and he dressed himself: and when he came to the Coach, one of them removed from his Place, and gave him the hinder Part of the Coach, and told him, That they had a Friend that was not well: And one of them bid me drive to Leaden-Hall-Market; and when I came about Holborn-Baile, one of them called to me, and asked me, Why I drove so slowly? and bid me drive faster; so I drove fast, and came to Leaden-Hall: And then one of them bade me drive to the Pys-Tavern without Aldgate, and there ordered me to stop. And when I had stopped there, one of them called to me, and told me, That I need not stir out of my Coach-Box; but call to the Boy at the Tavern, and ask for one Hunt a Chyrurgeon, which I did do: And when the Boy came to me again, he said, there was no such Man. Then one of them bade me drive back again to Leaden-Hall; and in the Time I stayed there, and turned my Coach, Aldgate was shut; and when I came to the Gate, one of them gave Six-pence to the Watch, and the Gate was opened, and I drove to Leaden-hall Gate. And when I came there, I stopped again, and one of them gave me Half-a-Crown, and bade me go and buy a Fowl of one Hunt a Poulterer; but after I had gone a little way from the Coach, he called me again, and said, Here, Coachman, you had as good take another Shilling, and buy a Couple: so I went, and bought a Couple of Fowls, but could find no such Poulterer as Hunt; so I bought them of another, and I gave three Shillings for them. And when I came back to the Coach-Side, I found Dr. Clenche (as I thought) sitting against the Fore-seat, with his Head against the Cushion: I pull'd him, and cried, Master, Master, for I thought he had been in Drink, but I could not get one Word from him; and then I went to the Watch, who were near; and when they came, we found him strangled, with a Handkerchief about his Neck, and a Coal in it, plac'd just upon his Wind-Pipe, but the other two Men were gone.

L. C. J. Had one of the two Men a Cloak on?

J. Sikes. I cannot remember that.

L. C. J. What kind of Habit had he? Had he black Cloaths on?

J. Sikes. My Lord, I cannot tell justly what Cloaths he had on.

L. C. J. You have heard him speak: What said he?

J. Sikes. My Lord, he never spoke to me; it was the other Man.

Mr. Harrison. What kind of Man was the other? Was he less than I, or taller?

J. Sikes. He was taller than you, with his own Hair.

Mr. Darnell. Can you be positive that the Prisoner at the Bar is one of those two Persons?

J. Sikes. My Lord, one of those two Persons had a Perriwig on, of a light-coloured Hair: And I do verily believe, that the Prisoner at the Bar is the same Person; I cannot be positive he is one of them, but as near as I can judge of a Man whom I have seen but once, he is one of them.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, I desire your Lordship to observe the Time that he took the two Men up, and what Time it was they ran out of the Coach.

L. C. J. Coachman, what Time was it that they left your Coach?

J. Sikes. About half an Hour past Ten, and it was about a quarter of an Hour past Nine, when I took them up.

Mr. Darnell. Pray let's ask the Coachman one Thing more. Coachman, look upon that Handkerchief, do you know it, and where did you see it?

[The Handkerchief was produced by the Coroner.]

J. Sikes. I do believe that it is the same Handkerchief that was about Dr. Clenche's Neck when he was found murdered.

L. C. J. Call the Coachman. Hark you, In what Posture did you find Dr. Clenche when you came back to your Coach?

J. Sikes. My Lord, he was sat in the Bottom of the Coach, leaning on one Side, with his Head against the Cushion.

L. C. J. Was a Handkerchief then about his Neck?

J. Sikes. Yes, my Lord, I untied this Handkerchief, and this is the same; and here is the Coal that was lapt in it: it was lapt in the Middle of it, and it laid just against the Doctor's Wind-Pipe.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mr. Rebene and Mr. Marriot. [Who were sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. Mr. Rebene, tell what you know concerning the Handkerchief, and how you found the Doctor.

[He takes the Handkerchief, and looks on it.]

Mr. Rebene. This Handkerchief was about the Doctor's Neck, and the Coal in it. And it lay just upon his Wind-Pipe, when I saw him dead in the Coach. The Coachman came to Mr. Marriot's House, and ask'd for a Constable, and we went to the Coach-Side, and there we found him lying along; and we took him, and carried him to the Bull-Inn, and there he was let Blood on the Arms, and the Chyrurgeon took about half a Spoonful of Blood out of his Right Arm; and he was let Blood on the other Arm, but that did but just trickle down, and we could not get him to Life again; and we found a Silver Ink-horn in his Pocket, and that, and the rest of his Things, were secured. This is all I can say to the Matter.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Elianor Ashbolt. [Who was sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. Pray tell my Lord, and the Court, what you know of any Persons you saw in a Coach at Brownlow-street End, that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered.

Mrs. Ashbolt. May it please your Lordship, I went out of an Errand for one Madam Anwell, a Gentlewoman who lodges at my Mother's House; and coming home again, I saw a Coach stop at Brownlow-street End, between Nine and Ten o'Clock at Night, and the Coachman went to the Side of the Coach: And one in the Coach bade him go to Dr.

Clenche's, and tell him, That there were two Gentlemen stayed for him in a Coach; and as he went up the Street, he went slowly, and looked back two or three times: Whereupon one of the Persons leaned out of the Coach, and did swear at the Coachman to make Haste; and I went round the Coach, and could discern Mr. Harrison's Face; and I stayed, and saw Dr. Clenche go into the Coach, and one of them gave his Place to the Doctor.

Mr. Darnell. Why were you so curious, Mistress, and what did you observe further?

Mrs. Ashbolt. I thought they might give the Coachman a Slip. I well observed Mr. Harrison, but do not know the other Man. There were two Lamps burning, one in Brownlow-street, and the other in Holborn, over-against the End of Brownlow-street, and they lighted quite through the Coach; and the Men pulled themselves backwards, when they saw me look on them: It was that Night that the Doctor was murdered. I went to Newgate afterwards. Madam Clenche desired me to go and see Mr. Harrison; and when I came to Newgate, it seems he was writing Letters, so I staid before I went into the Room: And there were two Men with me, and Mr. Harrison was talking very loud; said they to me, Who is that speaks now? Why, says I, it is one of the Persons that was in the Coach when Dr. Clenche was murdered.

L. C. J. Who are those two Men that were with you?

Mrs. Ashbolt. One of them was one Mr. Jones, a Coachmaker in Holborn; and the other was Madam Clenche's Coachman.

L. C. J. Did you know the Prisoner, when you saw him in Newgate, to be one of them that were in the Coach?

Mrs. Ashbolt. Yes, I did; I knew him to be the same Man, as soon as I saw him: And he changed Countenance, as soon as he saw me.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, This Woman is certainly hired by the Villains that are against me. Pray, ask her, my Lord, Why she did not make a Discovery sooner?

L. C. J. Mistress, What say you to that?

Mrs. Ashbolt. I acquainted Madam Anwell what I had seen and observed, and she told Madam Clenche, after last Sessions; and then she desired me to go to Newgate to see Mr. Harrison, and I went accordingly; and I should have told it to Madam Clenche sooner, but my Mother was loth I should be concerned about such a Thing.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, we have some Witnesses who can give your Lordship an Account, that one of our Witnesses, whom I mentioned to your Lordship before, is spirited, or withdrawn from us, by a Gentleman that said he came to him from the Prisoner, and desired him to be kind to the Prisoner; which Witness is since absent, and not to be found: his Name was Andrew Bowfell, a Youth, and an Apprentice to one Mr. Tims, a Shoemaker.

L. C. J. You must prove upon him, that he made him keep away.

Mr. Darnell. Call Barnabas Smith. [Who was sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. Give my Lord and the Court an Account, what you know of this Matter.

Mr. Smith. My Lord, This Andrew Bowfell, which the Counsel for the King speaks of, was sent to Leadenhall-street of an Errand, to the Bull-head Ale-house there. And as he was going along, a Gentleman met him, and asked him, if he was not an Evidence against Mr. Harrison: And being told by the Boy that he was, he desired him to be kind to him; and pulled out a Piece of Money, and offered it him, desiring him to be kind to Mr. Harrison. Upon which the Youth replied, That he owed him Nothing, and Nothing he would take. Then the Gentleman told him, That he would come again at another Time, and send for him near to his Master's. So the Boy said, and told me: And said further, That if he could have gotten him to have gone to the Bull-head Alehouse, he would have seized him.

Mr. Darnell. What is become of the Boy?

Mr. Smith. Truly, we do not know what is become of him, we never heard of him since the sixth Day of March last.

Mr. Darnell. Call his Master, Mr. Richard Tims. [Who was sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. Tell my Lord and the Court, what you know of this Matter, and what is become of your Apprentice, Andrew Bowfell.

Mr. Tims. My Lord, He went away from me on the sixth Day of March last; he was inticed away by three Soldiers that Night, and on the Morrow-Morning one of them came and demanded his Coats, Shirts, and Neckcloths: Says I to him, Who sent you, and who is your Captain? and he answered, Why, Captain Harris: He huffed, and said, That if I would not give him the Cloaths, he would send his Officer; and then I told the Soldier, I would have him before a Justice of the Peace; so he went away, and never came to me again: And I could never hear of my Apprentice since, tho' I have made great Enquiry after him.

L. C. J. Did your Servant tell you of any Money that had been offered him by the before-mentioned Gentleman?

Mr. Tims. No, my Lord; he did not tell me, but he told Mr. Smith, the Witness that was last examined, as he told me.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I desire that Andrew Bowfell's Examinations before Mr. John Browne, the Coroner of London, upon Oath, may be read.

[Which being proved by the Coroner, were directed to be read.]

Clerk of the Peace reads. 12. Januarii, 1691.

Andrew Bowfell, Servant to Richard Tims, Shoemaker, sworn and examined touching the Death of Andrew Clenche, Doctor of Physick, deceased, saith, That he, this Informant, being sent to Mr. Parker's, at the Bull-head Alehouse in Leadenhall-street, on Monday last was Se'nnight, being the Fourth of this instant January, between the Hours of Ten and Eleven of the Clock in the Evening, saw a Coach standing against Leadenhall-Market; and heard some Person that was in the Coach say, Make Haste: And this Informant says, that according to the best of his Remembrance he heard him talk of a Poulterer's. And this Informant says, That soon after the Coachman was gone into the Market, this Informant saw two Persons go out of the Coach, one whereof had, as this Informant believes, a black Coat on; and that this Informant saw the same Person, as soon as he came out of the Coach, fling a Cloak over him: and then both the Persons went through the Market on the West Part.

And this Informant saith, That this Informant going to look into the Coach, the Person that had the Cloak on him, cry'd Damn him; and this Informant saith, That he, this Informant, thereupon going away, went to Mr. Parker's, and told them, that two Persons had cheated a Coachman, or to that Effect.

And Bowfell being further Examined the 23<sup>d</sup> Day of January, 1691, touching the Death of Andrew Clenche, saith, That he hath seen Hen. Harrison, now a Prisoner in their Majesties Goal of Newgate, and believes he was one of the Persons that came out of the Coach at Leaden-hall, a little after Ten of the Clock at Night, on Monday the 4th of this Instant January; and believes he knows him by his Voice. And soon after, this Informant understood that the said Andrew Clenche was murder'd in a Coach, being the same Coach which the said Harrison, and another Person unknown, a little before went out of.

L. C. J. Mr. Harrison, What have you to say against that which hath been proved against you? what Defence can you make?

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, I did attend Dr. Clenche about a Mortgage that was made him by Mrs. Vanwicke, and Dr. Clenche did pay one Hundred Pounds, but this Gentlewoman would pay, or allow Rowe but Fifteen Pounds, and we did not know how to get the Money from Rowe, so we petition'd the Lords Commissioners about it, which was above Six Months before Doctor Clenche was murder'd; and Mr. Fairbeard wonder'd that I would put Doctor Clenche's Name into a Petition with such a Rogue as Rowe; and I do positively say, That I had not seen Doctor Clenche in a Month before, and if Doctor Clenche had died in his Bed, it had been the same thing to me; and, my Lord, Mr. Johnson and I had never any angry Words between us; and I have the Report in Chancery, which I had from Sir John Hoskins, which I will read, if your Lordship pleases.

L. C. J. Let's see it.

[Which was hand'd to the Lord Chief Justice, sitting on the Bench.]

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, that is the Original, which if your Lordship pleases to remember, I had Rowe before you twice about it; and it is Rowe that hath been the Rogue, and therefore what Occasion had we to be angry with Doctor Clenche?

[Then the Report was perus'd by the Lord Chief Justice, and return'd to him.]

L. C. J. Mr. Harrison, this will do you no good, not being to the present Purpose; therefore proceed in your Defence.

Mr. Harrison. Now, my Lord, I have some Witnesses to prove where I was at the Time that the Coachman says the Murder was done. Cryer, call Thomas Turner a Porter, and Mr. Maccaffee.

[Who appeared, but were not sworn, and examined apart, at the Request of Mr. Darnell, the King's and Queen's Counsel.]

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, I shall prove by these Witnesses, that I was elsewhere when the Coachman said he took up those two Men, a little after Nine o'Clock. Pray, Mr. Turner, give an Account to the Court, what time it was I called you to carry my Trunk.

Tho. Turner. My Lord, I was, about Seven of the Clock in the Evening the 4th Day of January last, at the Two Kings and Key in Fleet-street, over against Salisbury-Court; and I was told, That a Gentleman at Jee's Coffee-house in Salisbury-Court, wanted a Porter; and I presently went to him thither, and it was this Mr. Harrison; and he bade me take up his Trunk, which I did, and carried it to the Two Kings and Key, and he went with me; and he asked me to get some Linnen wash'd for him against the next Day at Noon; and he gave me some Linnen, which I carried to my Wife to wash for him, and return'd to him again presently; and I went with him from thence, and carried his Trunk to his Lodgings in Paul's Church Yard; and when I had deliver'd his Trunk, I left them there; and then it was about Eight of the Clock at Night.

L. C. J. At whose House was it you deliver'd the Trunk?

Thomas Turner. My Lord, it was at Mr. Jones's House in Paul's Church Yard.

L. C. J. And did he stay within?

Thomas Turner. No, my Lord, he went out presently after me.

L. C. J. Were you any where else with him that Night, besides at the Places you have mentioned?—Thomas Turner. No, my Lord.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, I will prove that Mr. Humston mistakes an Hour.

Mr. Humston. I cannot mistake an Hour, because the Shop is shut up about Nine a-Clock, and it was shut when you came first to my Lodgings.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, there stands in Court one Thomas Johnson, Apprentice to Mr. Pennel; he can tell what time a Night it was I came to Mr. Humston's, he let me in: I desire he may be call'd.

Mr. Darnell. Swear Thomas Johnson.

L. C. J. What time of the Night was it that Mr. Harrison came to speak with Mr. Humston, on that Night Dr. Clenche was murder'd?

Tho. Johnson. My Lord, on the 4th of January last at Night, Mr. Harrison came to my Master's House, and knock'd at the Door; and I went to the Door, and open'd it, for I had shut up the Shop; and he ask'd me if Mr. Humston was within? And I told him, he was: And he came in, and went up to Mr. Humston's Chamber; and it was then about Nine of the Clock, as near as I can guess.

L. C. J. Where is your Master's House?—Tho. Johnson. My Lord, it is the Golden Key in Fleet-street, over against Fetter-lane End.

Mr. Harrison. Pray call Adam Maccaffee, Mr. White, Mr. Carden, and John Allen.

[Who appeared. And Mr. Maccaffee stood up.]

Mr. Maccaffee. Upon Monday the 4th Day of January last, the Prisoner was at my House, and stay'd from Nine a-Clock till past Eleven, and play'd at Cards with one Mr. Baker, and one Mr. White and his Wife; and he stay'd till it had struck Eleven a-Clock.

L. C. J. Where is your House, Sir?

Mr. Maccaffee. My House is in Chancery-lane, over against Serjeants-Inn.

L. C. J. Did he tell you where he had been before?

Mr. Maccaffee. He said, That he had been towards the City, and was very cold.

L. C. J. Did he say any thing of Mr. Humston?

Mr. Maccaffee. No, my Lord.

Mr. Darnell. Pray what Room were you in? Did you play at Cards in the Kitchen?—Mr. Maccaffee. Yes,

Mr. Darnell. Were they up Stairs?—Mr. Maccaffee. No, my Lord.

Lord Mayor. At what time a-Night did they come in?

Mr. Maccaffee. Betwixt Nine and Ten a-Clock, my Lord.

L. C. J. What made you take Notice of the Day of the Month, and Hour of the Day?

Mr. Maccaffee. My Lord, I heard that Doctor Clenche was murder'd, and that Mr. Harrison was taxed with it; and that made me take Notice of the Day.

L. C. J. Call Mrs. Maccaffee.

[Who stood up,

L. C. J. Mistress, what time did Mr. Harrison come to your House on the 4th of January last at Night?

Mrs. Maccaffee. My Lord, it was near Nine a-Clock as any thing can be, when he came in first.

L. C. J. How long did he stay there?

Mrs. Maccaffee. I cannot tell how long he stay'd, but there were two Accidents happen'd; one was, our playing at Cards; and the other was, that there was a Pick-Pocket carried by to be pump'd at Lincolns-Inn; it was from Nine to Eleven before he went away, and there were Mrs. White, Mr. Baker, and one Mrs. Fairelesse.

L. C. J. Did any one come with the Prisoner to your House? In what Humour did he seem to be?

Mrs. Maccaffee. No, my Lord, there was no one came with him, and he never stirr'd out, neither did he seem to be disorder'd; he was neither too merry, nor too melancholy.

L. C. J. Where did he say he had been?

Mrs. Maccaffee. He said that he had been in the City.

L. C. J. Did he use to frequent your House?

Mrs. Maccaffee. Formerly he did; but I had not seen him in half a Year before.

Mr. Darnell. How many were there, do you say?

Mrs. Maccaffee. There was one Mrs. Fairelesse, and one Mrs. White, and myself, and my Husband was upon the Bed, and Mr. White came for his Wife about Ten a-Clock, to come home.

Mr. Darnell. Do you remember that Mr. Baker was there?

Mrs. Maccaffee. Yes, he was there.

L. C. J. Pray, Mistress, did Mr. Harrison come in, and find them at Cards?—Mrs. Maccaffee. No, we went to Cards afterwards.

L. C. J. Where was your Husband?

Mrs. Maccaffee. He was upon the Bed in the Kitchen.

L. C. J. Call Mr. Baker.

[Who stood up,

Mr. Baker. This Gentleman, the Prisoner, is a Stranger to me; but here is a Letter that he sent me two or three Days afterwards. I came into Mrs. Maccaffee's House about half an Hour after Nine a-Clock, with two Women more; Mrs. Maccaffee owed me Money, and I had been in Lincolns-Inn, for I do some Work there for Sir Thomas Cook, and the Women ask'd me to play at Cards; and I said, that I did not care to play, because I had been abroad, and could not get any Money, which made me out of Humour. My Lord, I never saw the Man in my Life before.

L. C. J. Who were they that play'd at Cards?

Mr. Baker. It was one Mrs. Fairelesse, the Woman of the House, and Mr. Harrison, and myself.

L. C. J. Who were together?

Mr. Baker. Mrs. Fairelesse and I, and the Woman of the House and Mr. Harrison the Prisoner, and we play'd for Penny a Corner. I cannot say any more to it, my Lord.

L. C. J. How long did he stay?

Mr. Baker. I left him after Ten a-Clock, and, as I hope for Mercy, I never saw him but once before, and I had not known him again, but by a particular Token.

Mr. Harrison. Were there not some Accidents happen'd at that Time?

Mr. Baker. Yes, there came a Vintner's Boy to ask for a Woman, one Mrs. Frances, and he was in great Haste, and a Pick-pocket was carried up the Lane to be Pump'd at Lincolns-Inn Pump.

Mr. Harrison. Call Mrs. Fairelesse, call Mrs. Whipple.

[Neither of which appeared.

Call Mr. Sutton.

[Who appeared,

L. C. J. Where do you live, and what is your Name?

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, my Name is Sutton, and I live in Stone-cutter-street.

Mr. Harrison. Mr. Sutton, what time was it that I was coming by, when one Mr. Ruffel and you were drinking.

Mr. Sutton. My Lord, it was about Eleven a-Clock at Night, at the King's Head Tavern at Chancery-Lane End.

Mr. Harrison. What had I on, a Cloak and a Muff?

Mr. Sutton. Yes, I think you had a Cloak on.

Mr. Darnell. What time was it? before or after Eleven a-Clock?

Mr. Sutton. It was about a quarter before Eleven.

Lord Mayor. What Day of the Month was it?

Sutton. It was the fourth of January.

L. C. J. Where was he going? Which way went he?

Mr. Sutton. He was going towards Fleet-Bridge, my Lord, and I called after him, but could not make him hear at first; but afterwards he came to us.

Mr. Harrison. Pray call Mr. Ruffel.

[Who appeared,

Mr. Ruffel. I can't hear, my Lord, but if you please to permit Mr. Sutton to speak to me, I can hear his Voice better than any Man's.

L. C. J. Speak as loud as you can, Sir, and we will let you hear us; Mr. Sutton must not speak for you.

Mr. Harrison. Pray, Mr. Ruffel, what time of Night was that you saw me go by you, when you were drinking at the King's Head Tavern?

Mr. Ruff. I can't tell, my Lord, I have not heard a Clock these three Years.

L. C. J. Where were you going at that time of Night?—Mr. Ruff. I was going to Wild-street, to the Chyrurgeon's Arms, to receive some Money.

L. C. J. How came Mr. Sutton to go with you?

Mr. Ruff. He had been with me all that Day, and I desired him to go with me; and, my Lord, I did expect that the Money would have been brought to me, but it was not, so I went for it.

L. C. J. Well, and what then?

Mr. Ruff. While we stay'd at the King's-Head Tavern Door to drink Wine, Mr. Sutton sent the Drawer to call Mr. Harrison.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. What had you been doing before that time?
 Mr. Ruf. We had (I suppose) been drinking together.
 L. C. J. Where had you been before you came to the King's Head Tavern?
 Mr. Ruf. We had been at the Horseshoe Tavern in Chancery-lane.
 L. C. J. Did you request Mr. Sutton to go with you?
 Ruf. Yes, I did, my Lord.
 L. C. J. You say your Business was to go to Wild-street, to receive some Money?
 Mr. Ruf. Yes, it was, my Lord, and I did receive it.
 L. C. J. When was it that you met Mr. Harrison, the Prisoner?
 Mr. Ruf. My Lord, I can't positively say, but by Computation of the Night, I believe it was about Eleven a-Clock.
 L. C. J. Did you meet Mr. Harrison before you went to the Horseshoe Tavern, or after?
 Mr. Ruf. Afterwards, my Lord, I saw Mr. Harrison turn at the Corner of Fleet-street, towards Fleet-Bridge.
 L. C. J. At the Time when Mr. Sutton and you went first out, did you agree of your going to the Horseshoe Tavern?
 Mr. Ruf. We went thither to send for the Gentleman out of Wild-street.
 L. C. J. When you had been drinking all the Afternoon, how came you to stop your Coach at the King's Head?
 Mr. Ruf. We stopt there, whilst Mr. Sutton sent for somebody to come to him.
 L. C. J. You said just now, That Mr. Sutton sent for Mr. Harrison.
 Mr. Ruf. No, my Lord, I do not remember that; but Mr. Sutton said, Harry, or Harrison, where art thou going, when he went by us.
 Mr. Harrison. My Lord, this Man is a Stranger to me. Call John Allen, Drawer at the King's Head Tavern. [Who appeared.]
 Mr. Harrison. John Allen, what time of Night was it that Mr. Sutton and Mr. Russell came to your House in a Coach?
 J. Allen. I believe it was about Eleven a-Clock.
 L. C. J. How much Wine had they?
 J. Allen. Two Half Pints of Canary.
 L. C. J. What Night was it? What Day of the Month was it?
 J. Allen. My Lord, I can't remember what Day of the Month, but it was that Night that Doctor Clenche was murder'd.
 L. C. J. Did you see Mr. Harrison there?
 J. Allen. I can't tell that, I never saw him, till I saw him at Prison.
 Mr. Harrison. Did not you go to Mr. Maccaffee's House?
 J. Allen. Yes, I did.
 Mr. Harrison. Did not one strike you with a Muff?
 J. Allen. Yes, but I can't remember who it was.
 Lord Mayor. Look upon that Man, do you know him to be the Person?
 J. Allen. No, my Lord, I do not know him to be the Person.
 Mr. Darnell. Who sent you to Crown-Court?—J. Allen. Mr. Russell.
 Mr. Darnell. For what?
 J. Allen. For a Servant Maid; and he bid me tell her, that he had a Desire to speak with her.
 Mr. Dar. How long did you tarry at the House?
 J. Allen. I did not stay at all.
 Mr. Harrison. Call Mr. Carden, Drawer at the King's Head Tavern. [Who appeared.]
 Mr. Harrison. What time did Mr. Sutton come to your House? Did you see any one stand at the Coach Side? and what Cloaths had he on?
 Carden. I saw one stand at the Coach Side, and he had a Hanging Coat, or a Cloak on; it was about the Hour of Eleven, to the best of my Knowledge, and I saw a Man go into the Coach, and come out again.
 Mr. Coroner. What time of Night do you shut your Doors, especially on Monday Nights? and were they shut when Mr. Sutton called in the Coach?
 Carden. We shut them commonly about Eleven a-Clock at Night, but on Monday Nights usually later; they were shut when Mr. Sutton called, and I opened them for him.
 L. C. J. Can you say that the Prisoner was the Man that drank with Mr. Sutton?
 Carden. To the best of my Knowledge (looking on the Prisoner) that is the Man, I can't be positive, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Well, have you any more Witnesses?
 Mr. Harrison. No, my Lord, unless Mr. Effington be here; he promised to be here to give an Account of me. My Lord, there is a Gentleman that is in the Pres-Yard, one Mr. Butler, I desire he may be sent for, if your Lordship please.
 L. C. J. Let him be fetch'd down. [Which was done.]
 L. C. J. But in the mean time, it behoves you to give an Account of these Things. First, Why did you say that you were a Parliament-Man? Secondly, Why did you leave your Lodgings, and take other Lodgings in Paul's-Church-Yard? Thirdly, Why did you say that you had extraordinary Business? Give some Account what your Business was, and who that Gentleman was, that staid for you in the Street; when Mr. Humston desired you to stay and sup with him, what hinder'd you from accepting his Invitation? Now we would have you to consider of these Things, and give an Answer to them, for it much concerns you so to do.
 Mr. Harrison. My Lord, first, as to the first, I do declare, That I never went for a Parliament-Man, nor never said so: Secondly, That Night I was to go out of Town, I had left Word at several Coffee-Houses, that I was going out of Town upon earnest Business, and with above twenty People besides, that I was going out of Town, and I was about to go to Basing-Stoke, to a Gentleman that owed me Money, one Mr. Buling; but I could not get Money to go.
 L. C. J. Prove that you were to go into the Country.
 Mr. Harrison. My Lord, I can't prove that now, except I could have sent to Basing-Stoke.
 L. C. J. That you should have done before now; why did you not stay with Mr. Humston, when he invited you to sup with him? You might have been better entertained there, than by going among Strangers to play at Cards for a Penny a Corner, at an Ale-house.
 Mr. Harrison. My Lord, I was unwilling to stay, because he had Strangers with him.
 L. C. J. What if he had? You are not such a bashful Man that you could not sup with Strangers.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, Mr. Rowe was accused with me.
 L. C. J. What if he was? He was under some Suspicion, and he hath made it appear where he was at the Time the Fact was committed, and now he is discharged.

[Then Mr. Butler was brought into Court from Newgate, attended by a Keeper.]

Mr. Harrison. Mr. Butler, Pray tell the Court what Mr. Fairbeard said to you about me.

Mr. Butler. My Lord, Mr. Fairbeard asked me, what I could say about what Mr. Harrison had said to me concerning the Murder of Dr. Clenche? I told him, I could not tell what to make of his broken and rambling Speeches and Discourses, they being most of them spoken when he was in his Drink. This is all that I know, my Lord.

L. C. J. This is not a Witness for your Turn.

Mr. Darnell. Call Mrs. Anwell.

[Who was sent for from her Lodgings in Brownlow-Street in Holborn, and appeared, and was sworn.]

Mr. Darnell. Madam, pray give an Account what Mrs. Ashbolt told you concerning any Man's being in a Coach at Brownlow-street End.

Mrs. Anwell. I know nothing of my own Knowledge; but the Night that Doctor Clenche was murdered, I sent Mrs. Ashbolt of an Errand; and at her Return, I blam'd her for staying so long; and she told me, That as she was returning home, a Coach stopt at Brownlow-street End, with two Men, with Cloaks on, in it, and that one of them bade the Coachman go for Dr. Clenche, and desired him to come to them; and in his going several times look'd back, as if he suspected the Men would leave the Coach, and so she stay'd until Dr. Clenche came and went into the Coach, and that one of the Men gave the Doctor his Place; and that one of them had a fair Perriwig, and a sanguine Complexion.

Mr. Dar. What Discourse had you with her when you heard that those Men had murdered Dr. Clenche?

Mrs. Anwell. She told me, That one of those Men had a fair Perriwig, and a sanguine Complexion, and that one of them had a Cloak on.

L. C. J. Did she say, that she observed either of their Faces?

Mrs. Anwell. Yes, my Lord, she said the one of them had a round Face, and a big Voice.

L. C. J. Did she say, she could know him again?

Mrs. Anwell. No, my Lord, she did not say so, but she said, that she could know his Voice again. And after the last Sessions, I told Mrs. Clenche of it, and that if she would send for the young Woman, she would inform her further of it.

L. C. J. Madam, pray what was the Reason that she did not discover it sooner to Mrs. Clenche?

Mrs. Anwell. Why truly because Mrs. Ashbolt, her Mother, was unwilling she should concern herself in such a Matter.

Mr. Dar. Call another Witness, Mr. Jones, Coach-maker.

(Who was sworn.)

Mr. Harrison. Pray, my Lord, take Notice, that now she says, that those Gentlemen had Cloaks on, that came in the Coach to Brownlow-street End.-----L. C. J. Yes, we heard her what she said.

Mr. Dar. My Lord, I will ask this Witness, Mr. Jones, a Question.

Mr. Dar. Pray, Sir, tell my Lord and the Jury, what Mrs. Ashbolt did at Newgate.

Mr. Jones. My Lord, I went with her to Newgate, together with Doctor Clenche his Coachman, and when she came to Newgate, before she saw Mr. Harrison (only stood at the Chamber Door, and heard him speak), she said, That, to the best of her Thoughts, he was the Man that put his Head out of the Coach to look after the Coachman, and swore at him, for she knew his Voice. And when she came to see him, she said, that she knew his Face, and declared that was the Man that put his Head out of the Coach.

L. C. J. Did he look out of the Coach, Mrs. Ashbolt?

Mrs. Ashbolt. Yes, my Lord, he put his Head out of the Coach, and look'd after the Coachman, to see if he went right to Doctor Clenche's Door, and did swear at him, because he went no faster.

L. C. J. How could you discern his Face?

Mrs. Ashbolt. By the Light of two Lamps that were near, which did shine into the Coach.

L. C. J. Can you take it upon your Oath that the Prisoner is the same Person?

Mrs. Ashbolt. Yes, my Lord, I can, both by his Voice and Face.

Mr. Dar. Now, my Lord, we shall shew your Lordship somewhat in Relation to the Credit of those Witnesses that the Prisoner hath brought here; particularly as to Mr. Baker, we shall prove that he hath been convicted for a Cheat. And as for Maccaffee, he keeps a very disorderly House, where ill People commonly resort.

Mr. Dar. Cryer, call Mrs. Martha Whelstead, and Mr. Thomas Cole.

L. C. J. Mrs. Jones, what time did Mr. Harrison come to your House, to his Lodging, that Night that the Murder was committed?

Mrs. Jones. I think it was about Eleven a-Clock, or little before Eleven.

L. C. J. What time on the Monday did he hire the Lodging of you?

Mrs. Jones. It was some time after Dinner.

L. C. J. It was before Night, was it not?

Mrs. Jones. Yes, my Lord, it was before Night.

Mr. Dar. My Lord, I desire that Mr. Tanner may read the Record against Mr. Baker, whereby it will appear, that he was indicted and convicted at Hicks's-Hall for cheating the Parish of St. Giles in Middlesex, when he was Scavenger there, by altering the Figures in the Book, and rating the Sums of Money higher upon divers of the Parishioners, than they were in the Parish Book, and then collecting and extorting the Money, so by him increased, from them.

[Mr. Tanner reads the Indictment aforesaid, by which it did appear to the Court, and to the Jury, that the said Mr. Baker was indicted for the Offence aforesaid, and confessed the Indictment, and was fined for it Twenty Shillings.]

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I was wrongfully indicted, and traversed the Indictment, and was acquitted.

L. C. J. Mr. Tanner, give me the Record.

[Lord Chief Justice peruses the Record.]

Mr. Baker, I have read the material Parts of the Record, and do find find that you were indicted for that Offence, and that you confessed the Indictment, and was fined for it.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I was acquitted of it, and can prove it by Captain Cannon, who knows me and my Reputation, and he is in Court.

L. C. J. Mr. Baker, the Record testifieth the Truth, and cannot err, therefore you have great Confidence to aver against it; yet I will hear what Captain Cannon saith.

Mr. Baker. Call Captain Cannon.

(Who appeared.)

L. C. J. Captain Cannon, do you know this Mr. Baker?

Capt. Cannon. Yes, my Lord, very well.

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, I desire that Captain Cannon may be sworn.

L. C. J. Mr. Tanner, swear Captain Cannon. (Who was sworn.)

L. C. J. Sir, do you know that Mr. Baker was indicted for falsifying of the Scavenger's Book when he was Scavenger, and acquitted, or convicted, and what do you know about it?

Capt. Cannon. My Lord, I am an Inhabitant of the Parish of St. Giles's in the Fields, and so I was when Mr. Baker was Scavenger, and do well remember, that some of the Inhabitants of that Division where he was Scavenger were troubled, and complained that they were charged more than usually they had been to the Scavenger's Rate; and it was discover'd that several Figures of the Book, by which Mr. Baker collected the Money to the Scavenger's Rate, were blotted and altered, and did not agree with the Parish Ledger-Book, but the Sums in his Book so blotted and altered were razed; whereupon it was ordered, that he should be indicted for it; and it was done accordingly, and he was fined for it, and, to the best of my Remembrance, he confessed that Indictment.

L. C. J. Captain Cannon, Pray tell the Court and the Jury, of what Reputation Mr. Baker is now.

Capt. Cannon. My Lord, he is now of none of the clearest Reputations.

Capt. James Patrich, of the same Parish, being in Court, offered himself, and gave the same Account of Mr. Baker that Captain Cannon did.

Mr. Darnell. Cryer, Call Mr. Francis Branton, Mrs. Martha Wheelhead, and Mr. Thomas Cole.

(And Mrs. Wheelhead and Mr. Cole appeared, and were sworn.)

Mr. Darnell. Mrs. Wheelhead, pray give the Court and Jury an Account what disorderly House Mr. Maccaffee keeps.

Mrs. Wheelhead. My Lord, I dwell in Crown-Court in Chancery-Lane, over-against Mr. Maccaffee's House; and he and she are very ill People; and keep a very evil and scandalous House; and such as are reputed to be House-breakers, Pick-pockets, and lewd Women, do use and frequent the House; and there is commonly at late Hours in the Night, Persons calling out Murder, and Whore and Rogue, and such sort of Language, disturbing their Neighbours; and their House hath been several times searched by several Constables for stolen Goods, and for the Persons that have stolen them; and upon such Searches, there have been stolen Goods found there: And I have seen great Lewdness there between Men and Women; and the Neighbours do account it a House of an ill Fame, and do avoid going thither.

Mr. Tho. Cole. My Lord, I do know Mr. Maccaffee and his Wife; I do dwell over-against his House, and they are reputed to keep an ill House, and most Persons that frequent it are reputed to be Persons of lewd and evil Lives and Conversations; and it is amongst the Neighbourhood noted for a scandalous House, and several Constables have several times searched there for stolen Goods.

L. C. J. What have you more to say, Mr. Harrison?

Mr. Harrison. I cannot say any thing more; you may deal with me according to my Deserts in this Matter.

L. C. J. You may assure yourself that we will do you no Wrong; have you any more to say? (He made no reply.)

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, we have another Witness come now, who was not here before. Cryer, call Mr. Charles Whitfield.

(Who was sworn.)

Mr. Darnell. My Lord, this Gentleman can give your Lordship an Account what the Prisoner said of his being just come out of the Country, upon the fifth Day of January last. Pray tell my Lord what you know, Sir.

Mr. Charles Whitfield. My Lord, upon the fifth Day of January last, being the Day after Dr. Clenche was murdered, I went to Joe's Coffee-house in Salisbury-court, and there was Mr. Harrison sitting by the Fire-side. Says I to Mr. Harrison, Where have you been for a long time that I have not seen you? Says he, I have been in the Country. Where, says I? Says he, About twenty Miles off, in Kent; and I want a Laundress, and a Lodging. Says I, Do you hear the News, Sir? What News, says he? Why, said I, of Dr. Clenche's being murdered: I cannot tell the Occasion, said I, but he was found dead in a Coach last night in Leadenhall-street. Then says he, I did love him very well once, but of late he hath been a barbarous Rogue to a Gentlewoman, a Friend of mine, and she is in the Compter now: And Mr. Harrison said it was a just Judgment of God upon the Doctor for being so great a Villain to the Gentlewoman, therefore I will write to her presently, and give her an Account of his Death. And, my Lord, the Contents of his Letter were these, as near as I can remember.

"Madam,
"I Am just now going to Lambeth; but hearing of Dr. Clenche's Murder, I do hereby give you an Account of it, and can impute it to no less than a just Judgment of God upon him for his Baseness shewed to you. And if you think fit to send to Madam Clenche, it may be, she may send somewhat towards your Relief, she now being a Widow as well as you.

MADAM,

I am yours to command,

Henry Harrison."

My Lord, after this, came into the same Coffee-house another Person, one Mr. Ravenscroft, of whom Mr. Harrison asked some Question about Dr. Clenche; who reply'd, That he heard that Dr. Clenche was murdered, and that it was committed by a Bully of the Town that belonged to a Gentlewoman in the Compter, who was laid in there upon Dr. Clenche's

Vol. IV.

Account; at which he was much startled: Says he again, There is no Person familiar with that Gentlewoman but myself; for I know and am concerned in all her Affairs: Perhaps then I may be taken up about it: Or, my Lord, he used Words to that Effect.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, this Woman was not in the Compter upon Dr. Clenche's Account.

L. C. J. No, the Witness don't say so; but that it was the Discourse of the Town that she was, and the Town did suppose her so to be. What did he say further, Sir?

Mr. Whitfield. My Lord, he said, That he had been in Kent about twenty Miles off: and he said, That he wanted a Laundress, because he had some foul Linnen to wash; which he produced. This was on the Tuesday, and the Murder was committed on the Monday Night before: And, my Lord, there were two more Gentlemen that heard him as well as I, that he said, That he had been about twenty Miles off in Kent, and that he was newly come to Town. Now, my Lord, I could not imagine for what Reason this Man should say, That he had been out of Town about a Fortnight or three Weeks, when he was in that House but the Monday Night before; that is, the Night the Murder was committed.

Mr. Darnell. Cryer, call Mr. Bishop.

(Who appeared and was sworn.)

Mr. Bishop. About three Years ago the Prisoner came to my Master's Shop to cheapen some Linnen, and when---

L. C. J. Hold, what are you doing now? Are you going to arraign his whole Life? Away, away, that ought not to be; that is nothing to the Matter. Have you done, Prisoner?

Mr. Harrison. Yes, my Lord, I have done, I refer my Cause to your Lordship.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury; The Prisoner at the Bar, Henry Harrison, stands indicted for the wilful Murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche, who was barbarously murdered on the fourth day of January last: You have heard the Witnesses that have been sworn; and upon their Testimony, it doth appear, that two Persons came to Brownlow-street End in a Coach, after Nine a-Clock at Night, and sent the Coachman to the Doctor's House, under Pretence to get him to a Patient, a Friend of their's, that was sick. By this Contrivance, they got him into their Coach, which they had brought for that Purpose, and then they ordered the Coachman to drive to Leadenhall-street; and when they came about Holborn-bars, one of them ask'd the Coachman, why he drove so slow, and bade him drive faster. When they came to Leadenhall-street, then they bade him drive to the Pye-Tavern without Aldgate; where one of them bade the Coachman ask for one Hunt; but he not being there, one of them bade the Coachman return back, and gave Sixpence to the Watch to come through the Gate, which was shut in the mean time; and when they came to Leadenhall-Market, one of them gave the Coachman three Shillings and Sixpence, and sent him to buy a Couple of Fowls; which the Coachman did buy, and brought them to the Coach; but when he came back, he found the Doctor in the Body of the Coach, leaning against the Fore-Seat of the Coach, a Handkerchief being tied about his Neck with a Coal in it, placed upon his Wind-pipe; which Handkerchief and Coal have been produced in Court.

The Question is, Gentlemen, Whether the Prisoner at the Bar be guilty of this base and barbarous Murder? To prove which, there hath been a very long Evidence given, some Positive, some Circumstantial. It has been proved that Dr. Clenche had some Dealings with a Woman named Vanwicke, and had lent her one hundred and twenty Pounds, and had taken a Mortgage for it. This Prisoner, Mr. Harrison, was a great Acquaintance, and very intimate with this Woman; and did concern himself in the Management of her Affairs: and because Dr. Clenche did refuse to lend the Woman more Money, therefore he had an Animosity against Dr. Clenche. The Money not being paid to the Doctor as he did expect, he did call it in; and therefore this Gentlewoman did oftentimes repair to Dr. Clenche to desire farther Time of Forbearance, because she could not raise or procure the Money elsewhere. That about Michaelmas last, it seems, she came to a Coffee-house near Warwick-house in Holborn, and there was Mr. Harrison; where they consulted what to do. And it was agreed, that the Mistress of the House, and Mrs. Vanwicke, should go to Dr. Clenche's; but Mr. Harrison should stay behind, for it was not thought convenient that he should go, lest he should provoke the Doctor. When they came to the Doctor, Mrs. Vanwicke was very importunate to have more Money; but the Doctor would lend her no more. And when they returned to the Coffee-house again, Mr. Harrison enquired what passed between the Doctor and Mrs. Vanwicke. She told him, that the Doctor would not furnish her with any more Money, although she had pressed him to do it, and urged her great Necessities, but advised her to go to Service. Damn him, says Harrison, does he say that a Woman of your Quality should go to Service? He is a great Rogue, and deserves to have his Throat cut; but let me alone, I will manage him.

At another Place there was a Discourse betwixt Mr. Harrison and one Mr. Johnson; and that the Prisoner did then speak very hard and ill Words of Dr. Clenche: And that Mr. Harrison came frequently to him; and one time laid his Hand upon his Sword, using some menacing Words, but what they were he cannot tell: But he likewise says, That at several times he did expostulate with him, and told him, That he would not do any good with such Discourses as these are, &c. That the Mortgage Money not being paid, it was thought fit, that there should be a Prosecution made to get Possession of the mortgaged Estate, and that the Tenants should be forbid to pay their Rent. And Mr. Harrison went to Mrs. West, the Tenant, some few Days before St. Thomas's Day last, and demanded the Rent of her. To which she made Answer, That Dr. Clenche had forbid the Payment of the Rent to Mrs. Vanwicke. Thereupon Mr. Harrison grew very angry, and answered, That Dr. Clenche was a Rogue and a Villain, and bid her that she should not pay him any Rent. And the Witness saith further, That the Doctor being prest to let her have some more Money, refused to do it, because she would spend it all upon Harrison.

Then the Counsel for the King called some Witnesses, who gave you an Account of the Prisoner's shifting his Lodgings the Day before the Murder was done. He takes a Lodging at Mr. Garway's in Threadneedle-street, on the twenty-third Day of December, and there he continued till about the first of January. The second of January he was at Garway's Shop; and on the Sunday Night he came and fetch'd away his Things. The Monday after, being the Day that this barbarous Fact was committed, he sent a Letter to Mrs. Garway, to acquaint her that he was gone out of Town; but he left three Half-Crowns with her Maid to pay for his Lodging. But as to his going out of Town, it was false, for he never went into the Country; but took a Lodging at Mr. Jones's in St. Paul's Church-Yard. It's observable also, that he went for a Parliament-man when he lodged at Mr. Garway's, and had his Footman to attend upon him, &c. There it was that he was seen to have an ordinary Handkerchief, and to hold it to the Fire; which was taken Notice of by Mrs. Jackson, the Daughter of Mrs. Garway, which was not suitable, as she thought, to a Parliament-man's Quality, but rather fit for a Seaman; for it was like the Apron in the Maid of the House: which hath been shewed in Court, and compared with the Handkerchief that was tied about Dr. Clenche's Neck. She saith it is the same, or very like that which she did see Mr. Harrison hold in his Hand.

Cartwright, the Officer at the Compter, he tells you, that the Sunday Night, the Day before the Murder, Mr. Harrison came to Woodstreet Compter, and enquired for Mrs. Vanwicke, and that he only was in her Chamber, and no other Body on that Side of the House but Mrs. Vanwicke, the Prisoner, and this Cartwright the Keeper, who stood at the Door, and heard Harrison say, That he would have the Blood of that Rogue, and named Clenche or Winch.

Mr. Harrison. My Lord, he was not in the Room.

L. C. J. No, he was not; but there were none on that Side the House but you, Cartwright, and Mrs. Vanwicke.

Now, on the Monday on which this Fact was committed, he having taken a Lodging at Jones's House, he came thither with a Porter, who brought his Portmanteau-Trunk about eight a-Clock at Night; and after he had been there a little while he went away.

And you are told by a Gentleman that lodges at the Golden-Key against Fetter-Lane End; That he had some Acquaintance with the Prisoner; that he had lent him a Morning-Gown; and that about nine o'Clock that very Night, he came to his Lodging in a Cloak; and then the Gentleman asked him for his Gown; and he told him that he had brought it with him. Thereupon the Gentleman invites Mr. Harrison to stay and sup with him. Mr. Harrison said, He could not stay, for he was engaged; he must be gone, for that a Gentleman staid in the Street for him to go about extraordinary Business.

The Coachman tells you, That near about that Time two Men in Fleet-street, near Fetter-lane End, hired his Coach of him to go to Brownlow-street to Dr. Clenche's; but he can't positively say, that the Prisoner at the Bar was one of them, but he swears, he does verily believe that he was one of them.

Mr. Harrison. He said before your Lordship, That he could not remember what I had said.

L. C. J. Well, well, he doth not remember it now; but being hired to go to Dr. Clenche's, he drove to the Street-End, and no further, because the Gate at the lower End was shut up, and he could not turn his Coach in the Street; but he was sent by them to the Doctor's, to desire the Doctor to come out to them, and they sat in the Coach in the mean time. The Doctor made Haste, and went to them immediately, and they drove away to Leadenhall, and then to Aldgate, and they called at the Pye-Tavern, and enquired for one Mr. Hunt a Chyrurgeon, as I mentioned to you before: He not being there, they returned to drive through Aldgate, gave the Watch Six-pence, and passed through the Gate without any Manner of Notice taken; but if the Watch had done their Duty, it might have been better discovered. But further, the Coachman tells you, that when he came to Leadenhall-street, they called to him, and directed him to buy one Fowl; and after that he had been gone a little way from the Coach, they called him back, and bade him take some more Money and buy two Fowls. So he went and bought the Fowls; but when he came back, the two Gentlemen were gone, and he found the Doctor still in the Coach; and he not stirring, he thought he had been in Drink; but upon further Examination, and calling the Watchman with his Candle, it appeared that the Doctor was strangled with a Handkerchief and a Coal.

There is one Mrs. Elianor Abbott, who lives in Brownlow-street with her Mother, and had been sent of an Errand; and between nine and ten of the Clock at Night, she saw the Coachman in Brownlow-street, and thought that those Men in the Coach might have put a Trick upon him, by going away without paying him his Fare. And she says further, That by the Help of the Lamps she did discern the Face of this Harrison in the Coach; he had a Cloak on, with a light Perriwig, and looked out of the Coach, and did swear at the Coachman; and by this means she knew him when she saw him again, to be the same Man, both by his Face and Voice. This Woman, indeed, was not before the Coroner, and she gives you this Reason for it, Because her Mother was not willing she should be concerned in such a Matter as this was; and what she could say, was not known to Mrs. Clenche until after the second Sessions; And when he was in Newgate, she saw him there, and declared he was the same Man.

There was another Piece of Evidence, viz. That of the Boy's, who does not appear; he was examined before the Coroner. There has been Evidence given of ill Practice to take him out of the way, and therefore his Affidavit is read for Evidence: He swears he saw two Gentlemen come out of the Coach when it stood in Leadenhall-street, and that having seen the Prisoner in Newgate since, doth believe him to be one. This, Gentlemen, is the Sum and Substance of the Evidence for the King, to prove that the Prisoner was one of those that committed the Murder.

You have heard likewise what the Prisoner says for himself; he does undertake to prove that he was in another Place; (that is) that he should come into Maccaffee's House in Crown-court, over-against Serjeant's-Inn, in Chancery-lane: And Maccaffee, he tells you, That there were some other Company there, and that Harrison came in very cold, and that they went to Cards, and played for one Penny a Corner at Whist; and that he did continue there from Nine till Eleven a-Clock; and if he was there then, it is impossible he should be guilty of this Fact, for the Fact was done between the same Hours.

Maccaffee's Wife tells you the same, and they both tell you who were there besides; and who played together, and are positive that the Prisoner was there.

Baker says, That he went away about half an Hour after Ten at Night, and left Harrison behind him. To confirm this Evidence, they have called two other Witnesses, besides the Drawers at the King's-Head-Tavern, viz. Mr. Sutton, the Chyrurgeon, who lives in Stone-Gutter's-street, and Mr. Russell. Mr. Sutton says, They had been at the Horse-Shoe-Tavern in Chancery-Lane, and called for half a Pint of Sack at the King's-Head-Tavern when they came by; and as they sat in the Coach, Mr. Harrison came by accidentally, and one of them looking out of the Coach cries Harry or Harrison; and he went to them, and they drank together another half Pint of Sack.

As to their meeting with Harrison, and as to other Passages there, Russell says the same: but as to the Time of Night he is not positive. And they sent one of the Drawers to a House in Crown-Court to enquire for some body there.

The Drawers at the King's-Head-Tavern say, That Mr. Sutton and Mr. Russell did call there about that time; and that they drank two half Pints of Wine: and that when they were drinking, a Man came by with a hanging-Coat or Cloak on, and drank with them. And one of the Drawers went to call some body in Crown-Court; and one of the Company up with his Muff, and gave him a Slap in the Face.

Now this is the Sum and Substance of the Evidence that you have heard on the Behalf of the Prisoner, to induce you to believe that he was not the Person that was concerned in the Murder of Doctor Clenche.

To which Evidence, an Answer hath been offered;

First, as to those Witnesses, Maccaffee and his Wife; divers Witnesses have been produced to prove, that they are People of doubtful Credit; it seems they keep an House of ill Fame.

Mr. Harrison. I am glad, my Lord, that I was there.

L. C. J. Well, well, Gentlemen, the People of the House are not of very good Reputation; they keep a naughty and disorderly House, (if you believe the Witnesses) you may consider of their Credit.

And as to Mr. Baker; about nine Years since he was convicted of an arrant Cheat, which is no less than Forgery, for altering the Scavenger's Rate for St. Giles's Parish, and therefore the less Credit is to be given to his Evidence; for now it appears, that he is a Knave upon Record; and the very Record itself was produced against him, which is true without doubt, notwithstanding his Pretence of Innocency. What is said by Mr. Russell and Mr. Sutton, I must leave to your Consideration; they had been a drinking, and the Drawer says, they were at the King's-Head-Tavern at Eleven of the Clock at Night. Mr. Harrison, the next Day after the Murder, met a Gentleman at Joe's Coffee-House in Salisbury-Court; and though he had taken a Lodging in Paul's Church-Yard, yet he said, that he was newly come to Town, and had been in Kent, and had remained there about three Weeks; and that he wanted a Laundress and a Lodging, although he had not been out of Town, and had taken a Lodging but the Day before: And then he told the Witness, who discoursed with him about the Death of Dr. Clenche, That he had formerly loved him, but he said he had been of late a barbarous Rogue to a poor Gentlewoman, a Friend of his; and that the just Judgment of God had fallen upon him for so doing, and that he would write to her to give her an Account of it, and advise her to write to Mrs. Clenche, and to tell her, That she was a Widow now as well as Mrs. Vanwicke; and he thought by that Means to move Mrs. Clenche to pity her, being a Widow as well as herself: And that whilst they were talking thus, one Mr. Ravencroft tells him, That Dr. Clenche was murdered, and that a Bully of the Town, that belonged to a Gentlewoman in the Compter, one Mrs. Vanwicke, was suspected. At which Mr. Harrison was much startled, and said, That no one was concerned with that Gentlewoman but himself; and for aught he knew, he might be taken up for it. This is that which he said.

Now what said Mr. Harrison further for himself? Why, says he, this Gentlewoman is not in Prison at the Prosecution of Dr. Clenche, and was not so affirmed, but so reported; and whether it were so or no, is no great matter. Gentlemen, you ought to consider of the Evidence that you have heard against him, and also to weigh well the Evidence he hath brought for himself.

It is most plain, if you believe the Witnesses, that Mr. Harrison was concerned for this Woman Vanwicke, and hath threatened Dr. Clenche, called him Rogue and Rascal, and said, That he deserved to have his Throat cut; that Harrison went under a Disguise for some time before the Murder. You have had an Account of the Handkerchief, what kind of Handkerchief Harrison had, and what Handkerchief was taken about Dr. Clenche's Neck you have seen: And you heard what Evidence was given by Mr. Humston; how the Prisoner was with him about Nine a-Clock that Night; and how he refused to stay and sup with Mr. Humston. If Mr. Harrison had no earnest Business, one would have thought he might have staid with Mr. Humston, better than to have gone to an Alehouse in Crown-Court, and played at Cards at one Penny a-piece a Corner; he might have had better Fare, no doubt.

The Witnesses for the Prisoner say for him, That he came to Maccaffee's House about Nine a-Clock at Night, and staid till Eleven: That is contrary to that Evidence given for the King, viz. That he was in the Coach at Brownlow-street End; for if he was at Maccaffee's House all the time they mention, it is impossible he should be guilty. All these Things are under your serious Consideration. You had best go together, and if you are not satisfied upon the Evidence you have heard, that he is guilty, then you ought to acquit him; but if you are satisfied that he did commit this Murder, then you ought to find him guilty.

Then the Jury withdrew, and the Court adjourned for half an Hour; and when they were returned, the Jury came to give their Verdict; and and being called over, answered to their Names; and Mr. Harrison was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Arraignment. Gentlemen, Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arraignment. Who shall say for you?—Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arraignment. Henry Harrison, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Look upon the Prisoner. How say you? Is he Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty.

Foreman. Guilty of wilful Murder.

Cl. of Arraignment. What Goods or Chattels, &c.

Foreman. None that we know of.

Major Richardson. Look to him, he is found guilty of wilful Murder.

Cl. of Arraignment. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it.

You say that Henry Harrison is Guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted; but that he had no Lands or Tenements, Goods nor Chattels, at the Time of the Felony and Murder committed, nor at any Time since, to your Knowledge: And so you say all?

Jury. Yes.

Then the Prisoner was remanded to Newgate, until the last Day of the Sessions; and then he was brought to the Bar, to receive Sentence of Death.

Cl. of Arraignment. Henry Harrison, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Henry Harrison. You stand convicted of Felony and Murder, for the Murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche: What can you say for yourself, why Judgment should not be given against you, to die according to Law?

Mr. D. Recorder. Mr. Harrison, You have been Indicted, Arraigned, and Convicted of Felony and Murder, for the Murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche: You have had as long, and fair, and favourable a Trial, as any Person that ever hath been tried at this Bar.

The Jury that has passed upon your Life and Death hath convicted you, and the Court are now ready to do their last Act, which is to pronounce that Sentence that the Law does inflict upon such Crimes as you stand convicted of.

Mr. Harrison. I expect no Mercy here, therefore I humbly desire you would intercede to the Queen, that I may have twelve Days allowed me, in order to my better Preparation for Death.

Mr. D. Recorder. Well.

Mr. Harrison. I must needs acknowledge, that I was tried before the best of Judges, my Lord Chief Justice Holt; but one Thing I think strange, that my Witnesses should be examin'd singly, and not the King's.

Mr. D. Recorder. That is no more than what is usual; the Counsel for the King and Queen requested it, and you did not.

Mr. Harrison. I begg'd that I might have timely Notice of my Trial; and I had not: There were seven People in my Company at that Time when this black and bloody Murder was done, and I could not get them to be here.

Mr. D. Recorder. You have had a long Time to get them ready, and you pressed on your own Trial, which you should not have done if you had not been ready.

Mr. Harrison. I humbly submit.

Then the usual Sentence of Death was pronounc'd against him, and he was remanded to Newgate.

The Examination of Henry Harrison, this 6th Day of January, 1691.

THIS Examinant being asked where his Lodgings are, answereth, That he lodgeth at the Golden-Ball in Paul's Church-Yard, and came to lodge there on Monday Night, about Eleven of the Clock, or half an Hour after, but took the Lodgings in the Morning, the Master of the House being one Mr. Jones, a Cane-Chair Seller; and before that Time this Examinant lodged at the Hand and Apple near the Exchange, which said Lodgings he left on Saturday last in the Morning, and paid for them on Sunday Afternoon; And this Examinant saith, that on Saturday Night last he lodged at the White Balcony in Old Southampton-Buildings, the Mistress of the House being one Mrs. Pitts, and this Examinant lodged there on Sunday Night also. And this Examinant saith, That he was at the King's Head in Groen-Court in Chancery-Lane upon Monday last, from between Seven and Eight of the Clock at Night, and stayed there until Eleven, playing at Cards with the Man and Woman of the House, and other Persons unknown: And being asked where he dined on Monday; and how he spent his Time on Monday in the Afternoon, he saith, he cannot give an Account. And this Examinant saith, That on Tuesday last Mr. Hartly of Old Southampton-Buildings, discoursing concerning the Murder of Dr. Clenche, said, That this Examinant was suspected to be guilty of that Murder. And this Examinant further saith, That he wore the same Cloaths he hath now on upon Monday last; and hath worn them a great while, having no other Cloaths to wear.

CL. The Trial of JOHN COLE, at the Old-Bailey, for the Murder of Andrew Clenche, Doctor of Physick, Sept. 2. 1692. 4 W. & M.

Judges present { Mr. Justice Dolben, and Mr. Justice Powell.

THE Keeper of Newgate did, according to Order of the Court, on Friday the 2d Day of September, bring up the Body of John Cole to the Sessions-House in the Old-Bailey, London; who, being at the Bar, was Arraigned upon an Indictment of Felony and Murder, found against him by the Grand Jury for the City of London, for the Murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche.

Cl. of Arr. JOHN COLE, hold up thy Hand: (Which he did.) You stand Indicted by the Name of John Cole, of London, Labourer, for the Murder of Dr. Andrew Clenche, &c. and the Indictment is in such Manner as that against Mr. Henry Harrison.

How say you, John Cole, are you guilty of the Felony and Murder whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?

John Cole. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. Culprest, how will you be tried?

John Cole. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Arr. God send you a good Deliverance.

[And afterwards the said John Cole was brought to the Bar upon his Trial: And those Persons who were returned upon the Jury were called over twice, and their Appearances recorded.]

Cl. of Arr. You, John Cole, These Men that you shall hear called, and personally do appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to challenge them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Then the Jury were call'd, and sworn, and then were counted, and the Twelve sworn were these whose Names follow:

John Clay	Cuthbert Lee
Edward Sherlock	Thomas Watson
John Ruddyer	Thomas Milburne
Benj. Evans	Thomas Applebury
George Bestow	Nicholas Harris
Archibald Wilson	Ralph Cates.

Then Proclamation for Information and Evidence was made as is usual.

Cl. of Arr. John Cole, Hold up your Hand. (Which he did.)

Gentlemen, You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of John Cole, late of London, Labourer, &c. as in the Indictment. Upon this Indictment he hath been Arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are. Your Charge is to inquire whether he be Guilty of this Felony and Murder whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty. If you find that he is Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at any Time of the Felony and Murder committed, or at any time since. If you find him Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it. If you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you found him Guilty. If you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Arr. Cryet; Call Mary Milward, Joseph Dudley, John Dudley, Jane Warren, Sarah Duely, Anne Gunn, Anne Gesson, Anne Warren, Elizabeth Harper, Mary Edwards, John Gamble, John Sykes, Robert Rebene, Richard Eades, Richard Marryot, Samuel Revet, Henry Milward, Squire Dalley, William Brown, Francis Hobbs. Who were all sworn.

Cl. of Arr. Set Mary Milward up.

Mr. Justice Dolben: What have you to say, Woman, against Cole the Prisoner, concerning the Murder of Dr. Clenche?

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, my Husband declared to me, that he and Mr. Cole were in the Coach with Dr. Clenche, and that they Two kill'd Dr. Clenche.

Mr. Just. Dolben. That's no Evidence at all, what your Husband told you; that won't be good Evidence, if you don't know somewhat of your own Knowledge.

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, I have a great deal more that my Husband told me to declare.

Mr. Just. Dolben. That won't do; what if your Husband had told you that I killed Dr. Clenche, what then? That will stand for no Evidence in Law: We ought by the Law to have no Man call'd in question, but upon very good Grounds, and good Evidence, upon Oath, and that upon the Verdict of Twelve good Men: Have you any Body that can prove any Thing against Cole, or does it all arise bareely from your Husband's Report?

Mrs. Milward. My Husband declared that he and Mr. Cole were to go under a Pretence to rob the Doctor, and so take their Opportunity to kill him; and the first Time they call'd at Dr. Clenche's he was not within, but the second Time they went he was within, and then they did the Murder.

Mr. Just. Powell. When dy'd your Husband, Mistress?

Mrs. Milward. The 23d of May last, Sir.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Here hath been two of three Sessions since that Time, why did not you take up Cole about it before now?

Mrs. Milward. I did not know where to find him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Why then you should have gone to a Magistrate, and told him of it, and taken some Advice about it.

Mrs. Milward. I did, as soon as I had found Mr. Cole.

Mr

Mr. Just. Dolben. Your Business had been to have discovered this to Mrs. Clenche, and she should have looked after Cole. Is Mrs. Clenche here?

Sir Will. Ashurst. Here is her Brother-in-law, Mr. Cole.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Do you prosecute Cole upon this Indictment?

Mr. Will. No, my Lord, I do not. Mrs. Milward is the Prosecutor, and she charged Mr. Cole with the Murder of my Brother, Dr. Clenche, and she told my Sister Clenche, that Mr. Milward, her Husband, confessed and said some Time before his Death, that he and Mrs. Cole murdered Dr. Clenche in a Coach: and Mrs. Milward said, that she had sufficient Evidence against Mr. Cole for it. And my Sister Clenche told Mrs. Milward, that Mr. Harrison murdered Dr. Clenche in a Coach, together with another Person, which my Sister Clenche said she believed was the said Mr. Milward, Husband of the said Mrs. Milward; and that she had a Warrant against him, the said Mr. Milward, upon Suspicion for it, but could not take him; and that she suspected that there were other Persons Contrived or concerned in it, who were set down at the Blue Bear's Head Alehouse near Clement's-Inn, by Mr. Gamble, a Coachman, out of his Coach, together with the said Mr. Milward, in their Return from Dr. Clenche's House that Night he was murdered. And, my Lord, by my Sister Clenche's Order, I went with Mrs. Milward to all her Witnesses, and took Notes of their Evidence; and I went with several of them to my Lord Chief Justice Holt's Chamber, before whom they gave in their Informations upon Oath about it: And when I had done it, I told Mrs. Milward I could find no Evidence that she had against Mr. Cole, more than that he was at Dr. Clenche's House, and at the said Blue Bear's Head Alehouse, with Mr. Milward, and another Person, that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered, and so he might be concerned in the Contrivance of it; whereupon Mrs. Milward was dissatisfied, and said, she was not able to prosecute him for it: so my Sister said to Mrs. Milward, that she might, if she would, prefer an Indictment against him for it, and that she would pay for it, and other Charges about it, which she did. And Mrs. Milward hath a Note of the Names of all her Witnesses, and may call them.

Sir Rob. Clayton. Did you not lie at Cole's House, Mistress?

Mrs. Milward. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Why did you not take him then?

Mrs. Milward. Because he absconded himself, and gave out that he was gone to Sea.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Was there no Quarrel between Cole and you about your Goods?

Mrs. Milward. No, my Lord, I had no Quarrel with him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Because you did not do it sooner, have you not been troubled with your Husband's Ghost? Tell the Jury the Story; we have heard on't: but I am afraid they will laugh at you.

Mrs. Milward. That was very true, my Lord.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Well, if you have any thing else to say that is material, speak; or otherwise, my Brother and I are of Opinion, that what you have already offered is no Evidence.

Mrs. Milward. My Lord, Here is a Coachman or two, that can acquaint your Lordship of the Matter of Fact better than I can.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, call John Gamble, the Coachman. [Who stood up.]

Mr. Just. Dolben. You, Coachman, Do you know the Prisoner?

Mr. Gamble. No, my Lord, I do not know him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Look upon him, do you know him or no?

Mr. Gamble. No truly, my Lord, I do not know him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Why, look you, Woman, he does not know him!

You, Coachman, the Story is well known; therefore I ask you again, upon your Oath, if that Prisoner at the Bar be one of the three Persons that you carried to the Blue Bear's Head on the backside of St. Clements, that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered?

Mr. Gamble. Indeed, my Lord, I cannot be positive whether he be one of them or no: I took up in Cheapside three Men into my Coach, and set one of them down at Gray's-Inn, and drove the other two to Dr. Clenche's House, that Night he was murdered, and he was not at home; and afterwards the Man had set down came in again, and I set them all down at the Blue Bear's Head Ale-House near Clement's-Inn Gate, about Eight a-Clock at Night.

Cl. of Ar. Set up William Brown, Servant at the Blue Bear's Head.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Hark you, Is this one of the three Men that the Coachman set down at your Master's House, that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered?

Will. Brown. Yes, my Lord, it is.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What Time did they come to your House?

Will. Brown. They came about Eight a-Clock at Night, and this Man and the other stayed till after Eleven a-Clock: Only Milward went out, and returned presently; and then immediately he went out again, which was before Nine a-Clock, and return'd not until Eleven a-Clock after.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What Time was Dr. Clenche kill'd?

Will. Brown. About Ten a-Clock, or betwixt Ten and Eleven, as I think.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Who went out first, only Milward?

Will. Brown. Only Mr. Milward, my Lord: But this Man stayed all the Time, till Eleven a-Clock at Night; and another, who went by the Name of Harper, as I am since informed.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Why then this Man could not be in the Coach when Dr. Clenche was murdered, so Harrison and Milward kill'd the Doctor in all Probability; for he says, this Man at the Bar, and another, stay'd at his Master's House till after Eleven a-Clock.

Will. Brown. My Lord, When Milward came back, he brought a Couple of Men with him, in Soldiers Habit, about Eleven of the Clock at Night.

Mrs. Milward. My Husband told me, that Mr. Cole and he went out of the House, and left Mr. Harper behind.

Mr. Just. Dolben. But this Man swears, that the Prisoner did not go out of the House till Eleven a-Clock at Night; and they were set down about Eight of the Clock; and Dr. Clenche was found kill'd a little after Ten at Night; and that Milward went out, and then came in again about Eleven a-Clock, and brought two Men with him: 'Tis to be feared he had been killing Dr. Clenche in that Time; Have you any more to say? If this Man says true, nothing can be said more,

Mrs. Milward. Speak what was done when they came to drink the Pot of Ale, Mr. Brown.

Mr. Just. Dolben. I would fain know, Mistress, who set you upon this Business? Is there not some Money promised you? It was not the Fear of your Husband's Ghost that put you upon it, I am afraid.

Mrs. Milward. I am much wronged, my Lord, I know nothing of any Money offered me.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What say you more?

Will. Brown. My Lord, Mr. Milward being at my Master's House that Night Dr. Clenche was killed, desired me to make a Fire in the same Room the next Morning, and that he would come again then; and I made a Fire accordingly, but he came not then, nor afterwards at any time to my Knowledge; but on a Sunday Night about a Fortnight after, came the two Persons that came with Mr. Milward in the Coach to my Master's House, that Night Dr. Clenche was murdered, and my Master being above Stairs, I sent him Word, that the two Men were there who were shot that Night that the Doctor was murdered, and they inquired for Mr. Milward, saying he promised to meet them there, and he not being there, before my Master could come down, they paid for the Pot of Drink, and went away.

Mr. Just. Dolben. When they came together to the Blue Bear's Head, they had some evil Design, no doubt; but if it be true that those two Men said from eight a-Clock till eleven, then it could not be this Man that murdered Dr. Clenche; but hark ye, Fellow, you say there were three Persons, whereof Cole was one, and Milward the other, who was the Third?

Will. Brown. I do not know his Name, my Lord, otherwise than as I have since heard.

Mrs. Milward. The other Man's Name was Harper.

Mr. Just. Dolben. You know nothing but what your Husband told you, and 'tis most probable that Harrison and he did the Murder, for that it appears, that the Prisoner at the Bar is not the Man that kill'd the Doctor, that's plain. Have you any more?

Mrs. Milward. About a Fortnight after the Murder was done, they came to inquire for my Husband at the Blue Bear's Head, and whilst the Tapster went to tell his Master, they left their Money for the Drink and went away, and would not be seen.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What if they had run away, what then? If they were at the Blue Bear when Dr. Clenche was kill'd, they could not kill him.

Mrs. Milward. His Master says, that they were in the House, and out of the House, very often.

Call Mr. Dalley the Master. [Who appeared, and stood up.]

Mr. Dalley. My Lord, Two of them were not out of the House all the Night, I am not positive that this is the Man that came in with Milward, but those two Men that came in with him, never went out at all until after eleven a-Clock at Night, but only Milward went out between Eight and Nine, and returned about Eleven a-Clock.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What do you say to this, Woman? Your Husband told you that the Prisoner was one of the Two; this Witness cannot say he was one, but says positively those two Men never went out till Eleven a-Clock, and from St. Clement Danes to Leadenhall-Street is not to go in and out, they must take a great deal of time to go thither and back again. Hark you, Mr. Dalley, you say that those two Men that Milward left, never went out of your House till after Eleven a-Clock; you are sure on't?

Mr. Dalley. No, my Lord, they did not go out.

Mr. Will. Mrs. Milward hath two Witnesses, that can tell somewhat more of the Matter concerning her Husband's being concerned in the Murder.

Mrs. Milward. My Husband told me, that the Coachman took them up not far from Chancery Lane End, and that Mr. Cole laid Hands upon the Doctor in the middle of Holbourn.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, Call John Sikes the Coachman. [Who stood up.]

Mr. Sikes. My Lord, I took up two Men in Fleet-Street, about Fetter-Lane End.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What manner of men were they? What Cloaths had they on?

Mr. Sikes. My Lord, one of them had a light-coloured Perriwig on, and the other was in sad-coloured Cloaths, and dark Hair, but I cannot be positive that this is one of them: They asked me if I knew Dr. Clenche of Brownlow-Street? I told them, that I did not know the Doctor, but I knew the Street; and they bid me drive thither, and when I came to the Street's End, they sent me to the Doctor's House, and bid me tell him, that two Gentlemen were at the Street's End in a Coach, who desired him to go with them to one that was not well; so the Doctor came presently after me, and when he was in the Coach, they bid me drive to Leadenhall-Street; and when I came about Holbourn-Bar, they bid me drive faster; and when I came to Leadenhall-Market, they bid me drive to Aldgate, and I drove thro' the Gate to the Pye Tavern, and when I had turn'd my Coach, they bid me ask for one Hunt a Chyrurgeon, but he was not there; and then I told them the Gate was shut, and one of them put his Hand out of the Coach, and gave the Watchman Sixpence to open the Gate, and then I drove back again to Leadenhall-Market, and there they bid me stop again, and one of them gave me Half a Crown to buy a Fowl; and I went a little way from the Coach, and one of them called me back again, and gave me a Shilling more, and bid me bring a Couple; and he bid me ask for one Hunt a Poulterer; I went all over the Market, but I could find no such Man, so at length I bought the Fowls of another Man, and would have had the Man gone with me to my Coach, but he would not; then I came to my Coach-side, and found the Door open; and I found the Doctor sitting at the Bottom of the Coach, with his Head against the Cushion, and the two Men gone, and one of them seemed to be in Drink when I took them up, and I thought him to be that Man fallen asleep, and that the Doctor and the sober Man were gone to the Person that was not well; so then I called the Watch, and found the Doctor dead, and then it was about half an Hour after Ten a-Clock at Night.

Mr. Just. Dolben. Then I ask you, was that one of the Men?

Mr. Sikes. I cannot say it, my Lord; I don't know him.

Mr. Just. Dolben. What time of Night was it that you took them up at Fetter-Lane End?

Mr. Sikes.

Mr. Sikes. It was about Nine a-Clock, somewhat after.
Mr. J. Dolben. Why then, they say, that this Man never stirr'd out of the House from Eight a-Clock till Eleven; this Man can't be concern'd.
Cl. of Arr. Set up John Dudley. (Which was done.)

Mrs. Milward. Mr. Dudley, What did my Husband say concerning the Doctor to you in the Country?

Mr. Dudley. He came into the Country presently after the Death of the Doctor, and he sent for me, and was very much concerned; I ask'd him what was the Matter with him, and he told me, that he was come out of Town about the Murder of Dr. Clenche; I told him, that I hoped he was not concerned in it; he told me, No, but there was a Warrant out against him upon account that he quarrell'd with the Coachman that Night that he carried him to Dr. Clenche's; and he said, that Mr. Harrison had sent to him from Newgate, and told him, that he would give him Twenty Pounds, if he could make his Trial easy.

Mr. J. Dolben. Mistress, this makes it out, that he told you one Story, and to this Witness another, which contradicts your Story fully; he told him, that he came away for Fear, and that he was innocent of the Murder; and since that he told you, that he was guilty. Well, what else did he say to you, Mr. Dudley?

Mr. Dudley. He was much concerned to enquire after the Gazettes, and Letters, if he were in them, about the Doctor's Murder, and to enquire if Mr. Cole and Mr. Harper were taken up about it.

Mr. J. Dolben. You hear what is said against you; what do you say to it, Mr. Cole?

Mr. Cole. My Lord, I know nothing of it.

Mr. J. Dolben. No! I doubt you do; you were one of the Three that was set down on the Backside of St. Clement's Church, at the Blue-Boar's-Head, where all Things were consulted.

Mr. Cole. My Lord, there was not one Word spoke about killing of Dr. Clenche in my Company.

Mr. J. Dolben. Were not you acquainted with Milward?

Mr. Cole. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. J. Dolben. Were you not with Harrison?

Mr. Cole. No, my Lord, I never saw him with my Eyes.

Mr. J. Dolben. Well, have you any more to say?

Mrs. Milw. Call Mr. Hobbs. (Who stood up.)

Mr. Hobbs. I met Mr. Milward in York-Buildings, and he ask'd me how I did; and he went from me a little way, and then came to me again, and ask'd me if I would drink: So we went to the George in York-Buildings, and there we drank a Pot or two; and he ask'd me, if I heard that he was accus'd about the Murder of Dr. Clenche; I told him, No; but he never told me any thing of this Man at the Bar.

Mr. J. Dolben. What was Milward?

Mr. Hobbs. I do not know how he got his Living.

Mr. J. Dolben. Have you any Body else, Mistress?

Mrs. Milw. No, my Lord, I know no more.

Mr. J. Dolben. Gentlemen of the Jury: Cole, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted for murdering Dr. Clenche; who, as it now appears, was murder'd in a Coach by two Persons that were therein together with the Doctor. The Question now before you is, Whether Cole was one of these two?

Gamble the Coachman swears, That the Night Dr. Clenche was killed, he took up three Men in Cheap-side, set one of them down at Gray's-Inn, and drove on to Dr. Clenche's House; the Doctor was not at Home; then the third Man came in again to the Coach, and he drove to the Blue-Boar's-Head, an Alehouse by Clement's-Inn, and set those three Men down there, and 'twas then about Eight of the Clock.

Sikes the Coachman swears, He took up two Men at Fetter-Lane End in Fleet-Street, and by their Directions drove to Brownlow-Street, where the Doctor lived, whom they got into the Coach, and he drove as far as Aldgate, and through the Gate, and then came back to Leadenhall; was sent by the two Men in the Coach to buy a Fowl; when he returned they were gone, but the Doctor found dead in the Coach; and 'twas now half an Hour past Ten.

The Question now, as I said before, is, Whether Cole, the Prisoner at the Bar, was one of these two Men?

The Woman tells you, Milward her Husband told her, that he and Cole were in the Coach with Dr. Clenche, and that they two kill'd Dr. Clenche.

She likewise tells you, Her Husband told her, that Cole and her Husband went out from the Blue-Boar's-Head near Clement's-Inn, and left only Harper behind.

The Court hath already declared to you, That her Evidence, being only what her Husband told her, is no Evidence in Law to take away a Man's Life, especially when it is single, without any Circumstance to confirm it, as here 'tis. But that is not all; there is a very great Evidence, that what she says her Husband told her, is false.

He told her, she says, that he and Cole went from the Blue-Boar's-Head and kill'd the Doctor, leaving only Harper behind.

The Master of the House, and his Servant (Witnesses which she produceth) both swear, That her Husband went out alone, and left two Men behind, who both staid in the House till Milward return'd, which was about Eleven of the Clock. The Master, 'tis true, cannot say that Cole is one of the two, but the Servant is very positive he is; and both are positive, that two Men that Milward left behind, continued in the House till Milward return'd at Eleven of the Clock. These two Men's Depositions do plainly contradict her Story; and if they swear true, Cole the Prisoner was not one of the Persons that kill'd the Doctor.

You have all heard, I am sure, that one Harrison hath been convicted by a Jury in this Place for the Murder of Dr. Clenche: If he was one of the two, then Milward, by his own Confession (if his Wife swear true), was the other: But this you cannot take notice of; the Record is not produced, neither hath the Prisoner taken notice of it. The Question is only, Whether Cole be guilty of the Murder? which I leave to you upon the Evidence you have heard.

The Jury having considered the Verdict, return'd, That the Prisoner was Not Guilty.

CLI. The Trial of CHARLES Lord MOHUN, before the LORDS at Westminster, for the Murder of William Mountford, Jan. 31, 1692. 4 W. & M.

Tuesday, Jan. 31, 1692.

IN the Court erected in Westminster-Hall, for the Trial of the Lord Mohun for the Murder of William Mountford;

About 12 a-Clock this Day, the Lords came from their own House in their Robes, in Procession in this Manner into the Court:

First, the Lord High Steward's Gentlemen-Attendants, two and two.

Then the Clerks of the House of Lords, with the two Clerks of the Crown in the King's-Bench and Chancery, two and two.

Then the Masters in Chancery, two and two.

Then the Judges, eight of them, two and two.

Then the Peers eldest Sons, and Peers Minors, two and two.

Then four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, two and two.

Then the Yeoman Usher of the House.

Then the Peers according to their Seniority, beginning with the youngest Baron, two and two.

Then four Serjeants at Arms with their Maces, two and two.

Then Garter King at Arms, and the Gentleman Usher of the Black-Rod; Garter on the Right Hand, and Black-Rod on the Left, carrying the White Staff before the Lord High Steward.

Then his Grace the Marquis of Carmarthen, Lord High Steward, alone.

When the Lords were seated on their proper Benches, and the Lord High Steward upon the Wool-Pack, the two Clerks of the Crown standing before the Clerks Table, and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, having their Majesties Commission to his Grace the Lord High Steward in his Hand, they both made three Reverences to his Grace, and at the third coming up before the Wool-Pack, they did both kneel down, and the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, on his Knee, presented the Commission to his Grace, who deliver'd it to the Clerk of the Crown in the King's-Bench; and then with three Reverences they return'd to the Clerks Table, where the Clerk of the Crown in the King's-Bench opening the Commission, commanded Proclamation of Silence to be made in this Manner:

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant. Oyez.

Clerk of the Crown. Again.—Serjeant. Oyez.

Clerk of the Crown. Again.—Serjeant. Oyez.

Clerk of the Crown. My Lord High Steward of England, his Grace, does straitly charge and command all manner of Persons to keep Silence, and to hear the King and Queen's Majesties Commission to his Grace my Lord High Steward of England directed, openly read, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Which Words the Serjeant at Arms repeated aloud.

VOL. IV.

Lord High Steward. My Lords, pray be pleased to stand up and be uncovered whilst their Majesties Commission is reading.

Which his Grace himself did, and all the Peers.

Clerk of the Crown reads.

Then his Grace remov'd from the Wool-Pack to the Chair, which was placed upon an Ascent just before the uppermost Step of the Throne, and seated himself in the Chair.

Cl. of Cr. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.----Serjeant. Oyer.

Cl. of Cr. Chief Governor of the Tower of London, return the Precept to you directed, together with the Body of Charles Lord Mohun your Prisoner, forthwith into the Court, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

Then the Deputy-Governor of the Tower brought the Lord Mohun to the Bar, having the Ax carried before him by the Gentleman Gaoler of the Tower, who stood with it at the Bar, on the Right-Hand of the Prisoner, turning the Edge from him.

The Prisoner at his Approach to the Bar, made three Bows, one to his Grace the Lord High Steward, the other to the Peers on each Hand, and his Grace and all the Peers returned the Salute to him.

Lord High Stew. My Lords, my Voice will not serve to speak at such a Distance, so as to be heard, and therefore I must beg leave of your Lordships to come down to the Wool-Pack again.----Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then his Grace came down, and seated himself on the Wool-Pack.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Mohun, I am to let your Lordship know, you are not to hold up your Hand upon your Arraignment; and I am to let you that are Counsel at the Bar likewise know, that both you and the Witnesses are to direct yourselves to the Court, in the Style of My Lords, speaking to the Court.

Then there was a little Pause, after which his Grace addressed himself to the Prisoner thus.

Lord High Steward. My Lord, you are brought here before this Supreme Court in order to your Trial.

The Charge against you is, for the Murder of one of the King's Subjects, which is a Crime the King will at no time pass over in the meanest Man's Case, without making a strict Inquiry into the Offence, and causing due Punishment to be inflicted on the Offender.

This, my Lord, is charged upon you, not by any slight Information, but by the Grand Inquest of this County, made up of Gentlemen of good Worth and Consideration. It is true, that this Inquest does not amount to much more than a bare Accusation; and therefore it ought not to be made any use of, so as to prejudice your Lordship's Trial; but it is that which is the Ground of presenting this Black Crime before my Lords your Peers, who cannot receive it without some Trouble, to find any one of their Body suspected to be guilty of an Action so Dishonourable as this is represented to their Lordships.

My Lord, you are a very young Man, and therefore it is to be hoped, you cannot so early have had your Hands in Blood. And the same Reason, because you are so young, may, perhaps, make you conceive, that you are under some greater Disadvantage in making your Defence, than you would be if your Experience had been longer.

But to remove any Misapprehension you can have of that kind, it is very proper to put your Lordship in mind, that you have the good Fortune now, to be tried for this Fact in full Parliament, where no Evidence will be received, but such as must be manifest and plain, beyond all Contradiction; so that you have nothing to fear here, but your own Guilt.

In the next Place, my Lord, you need not be discourag'd for want of Counsel, for the Honour of this Court is such, as will take care to inform you of any Advantage that the Law can give you. And you may be farther assured, that no Art or Skill in Arguing can take any Place here, either against your Innocency, or divert my Lords from doing you exact Justice. Nay, I dare presume to say, on the Part of my Lords, that if there be Room for any Abatement of Severity, you may reasonably expect to find it from their Lordships.

These Considerations, my Lord, cannot but give you great Consolation under your unhappy Circumstances, it being most certain, that nothing but your own Crimes can hurt you.

But at the same time I must tell you, that your Lordship is not to flatter yourself with an Expectation or Hope, that any Favour will be shewed you beyond what Honour and Justice can allow: And I hope you have well considered, that it is no less than your Life, your Honour, and your Estate, that you are now to defend, inasmuch, that I cannot doubt but your Lordship has recollected and prepared yourself for the Defence of what so very much concerns you.

I will not therefore detain you any longer than to give you some Directions in the Order and Method of your Trial; and those are, that your Lordship do give Attention carefully to the Reading of your Indictment. That you give no Interruption to the Counsel or Witnesses when they speak against you; and when the proper time shall come for your Witnesses to be examined, and that you are to be heard in your own Defence, I will give you due notice of it.

Your Lordship may also be certain, that when it shall come to your turn to speak, you shall be heard with all the Patience and Favour that the Matter will bear; and at last, when all hath been heard that can be said on both Sides, your Lordship needs not doubt, but that my Lords will give such a Judgment as will be suitable to the Honour, Justice and Equity of this great Court. Clerk, read the Indictment to my Lord.

Clerk of the Crown. Charles Lord Mohun, You stand indicted by the Name of Charles Lord Mohun, of the Parish of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middlesex, for that you, together with one Richard Hill of the same Parish and County, Gentleman, who is fled, and withdrawn from Justice, not having the Fear of God before your Eyes, but being moved and seduced by the Intigation of the Devil, the 9th Day of December, in the 4th Year of the Reign of our Sovereign Lord and Lady William and Mary, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King and Queen, Defenders of the Faith, &c. with Force and Arms, &c. at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, in and upon one William Mountford, Gent. in the Peace of God, and our said Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, then and there being, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice afore-thought, did make an Assault. And that he the said Richard Hill, with a certain Rapier made of Iron and Steel, of the Value of 5s. which he the said Richard Hill, in his Right-Hand then and there had and held drawn, the said William Mountford, in and upon the Right-side of the Body of him the said William Mountford, near the Right Pap of him the said William, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice afore-thought, did strike and thrust, giving unto him the said William Mountford then and there, with a Sword drawn aforesaid, in and upon the aforesaid Right-side of the Body of him the said William Mountford, near the said Right Pap of the said William, one Mortal Wound of the Breadth of one Inch, and of the Depth of twenty Inches, of which said Mortal Wound the aforesaid William Mountford from the aforesaid ninth Day of December, in the Year aforesaid, unto the tenth Day of the same Month of December, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, did languish, and languishing, did live, on which said tenth Day of December in the Year aforesaid, the aforesaid William Mountford of the Mortal Wound aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, died. And that you the said Charles Lord Mohun, at the Time of the Felony and Murder aforesaid, by the aforesaid Richard Hill, in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice afore-thought, done and committed, then and there feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice afore-thought, were present, aiding, abetting, comforting, assisting and maintaining the aforesaid Richard Hill, the said William Mountford in Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of his Malice afore-thought to kill and murder. And so that you the said Charles Lord Mohun, and the said Richard Hill, the said William Mountford in Manner and Form aforesaid, feloniously, wilfully, and of your Malice afore-thought, did kill and murder, against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen, their Crown and Dignity.

How say you, Charles Lord Mohun, Are you Guilty of this Felony and Murder, or not Guilty?

L. Mohun. Not Guilty, my Lords.

Clerk of the Crown. How will your Lordship be tried?

L. Mohun. By God and my Peers.

Clerk of the Crown. God send your Lordship a good Deliverance.

L. High Steward. Will your Lordships please that the Judges may be covered?—Lords. Ay, Ay.

Then the Judges put on their Caps.

Clerk of the Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant. Oyez.

Clerk of the Crown. If any one will give Evidence on the Behalf of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen's Majesties, against Charles Lord Mohun the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and they shall be heard, for now he stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance.

L. High Steward. You Gentlemen that are of the King's Counsel, will you begin?

Mr. Serj. Thompson. May it please your Lordships, I am of Counsel for the King and Queen, against my Lord Mohun the Prisoner at the Bar, who stands indicted for the Murder of one William Mountford.

L. Mohun. My Lords---

L. High Steward. My Lord Mohun, what does your Lordship say?

L. Mohun. Do not your Lordships think it proper, that I should have Pen, Ink and Paper?

Lords. Ay, by all means.

L. High Steward. Yes, give my Lord Pen, Ink and Paper.

Which were carried to him by one of the Clerks.

L. High Steward. Go on, Sir, now.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lord Mohun stands indicted here before your Lordships, for the Murder of one William Mountford, and the Indictment sets forth, that one Richard Hill, who is since fled from Justice, did upon the 9th of December last, make an Assault upon this same William Mountford, and that the said Lord Mohun, did likewise make that Assault. This Indictment particularly sets forth, that this Hill, by a Sword or Rapier, which he had in his Hand, did give this William Mountford a Wound on his Right-side, and that Mountford did languish of that Wound till the next Day, which was the 10th of December, when he died; and that at the Time of the giving the Wound, my Lord Mohun was present, and was aiding, abetting, assisting, and comforting of Hill; and thereupon we do say, he is Guilty of this Murder, and for this he stands indicted. It is my Duty to open the Indictment to your Lordships, we shall call our Proofs, and give you the Evidence, and then leave it to your Lordships Judgment.

Mr. At. Gen. Sir John Somers. My Lords, the Indictment has been opened, and by that your Lordships see, the Noble Lord at the Bar stands charged with the High Crime of Murder.

My Lords, his Peerage gives him a Right to be tried in this Great and Noble Court: and as my Lord has just Reason to put a high Value upon this Privilege, so on the other Hand, their Majesties, who are making Inquisition for the Blood of one of their Subjects, have a full Assurance, that no Compassion for my Lord's Youth, no Consideration for his Quality, or Regard for one of your own Order, will make your Lordships unmindful of the heinous Nature of the Crime, or cause any Variation in the Steadiness of your Justice.

It is true, my Lords, the Difference between the Trial of a Peer and a Commoner is very great, but there is no Difference in the Crime, whether committed by one or the other: It is the same Law by which they must be tried and judged; and that Fact which would be Murder in the meanest Subject, is no less than Murder, if committed by the greatest Peer.

My Lords, it is not insisted upon, that the Noble Lord at the Bar gave the Mortal Stroke with his own Hand; nor is it so alledged in the Indictment: The Indictment findeth the Wound to have been given by the Hand of Richard Hill; but if my Lord the Prisoner was of his Party, if he concurr'd with him in the Thing, if he was present and abetting to the Fact, though he did not strike a Stroke, though he was no more than a Looker-on when the Thing was done; the Law saith, He is a Principal in the Murder.

Whether my Lord's Case will fall within this Rule, is the Point for your Lordships to determine, when the Witnesses are heard.

My Lords, it is my Part to give an Account of the Nature of the Evidence, to the end that your Lordships may more easily go along with the Witnesses, as they are examined, and more readily make your Observations upon what they say.

This I shall do as shortly and as exactly as I can, without pretending to aggravate any thing, which I could never think did become any one in my Station; and I am sure, would be to very little Purpose before such a Judicature as this; for after all, your Lordships will found your Judgments upon the Fact, not as it is represented by us, but as it appears upon the Oaths of the Witnesses:

The Time when the Fact for which my Lord is to be tried was committed, was the 9th Day of December last.

The Occasion of it was this:

Captain Hill, the Person mentioned in the Indictment, had for some time before made Addresses of Courtship in the Way of Marriage, to one Mrs. Bracegirdle, an Actress in the Play-house; but these Proposals were totally rejected. This put Mr. Hill in a very great Rage, and he declared, that Mr. Mountford (the Person slain) was the only Man that stood in his way, and with many Execrations expressed his Resolution to be revenged upon him: This he did at several Times, and before several Persons.

The same Day the Fact was committed, in the Morning, my Lord, who is now at the Bar, and Captain Hill, went together to hire a Coach to go to Tottenham, and directed the Coachman to have six Horses ready, but to be waiting for them in Drury-Lane near the Play-House, with only two Horses in his Coach, about Nine a-Clock the same Night. My Lord and Captain Hill dined together that Day at a Tavern in Covent-Garden, and here much of their Discourse was about Mrs. Bracegirdle; and both of them did freely declare their Opinion, that Mr. Mountford lay with her. But the Principal of their Discourse was in relation to a Design which they had formed for the seizing upon Mrs. Bracegirdle, and forcing her into a Coach, and carrying her away somewhere into the Country.

This was to be executed that Night; and accordingly they were then providing Arms for that Purpose: Mr. Hill did acquaint my Lord, that the Soldiers would be ready by the Time; and my Lord took notice, that the carrying her off would stand Mr. Hill in 50l. at least. Thereupon (as your Lordships will hear from the Evidence) Mr. Hill used this Expression, If the Villain resist, I will stab him; and then my Lord was pleased to say, That he would stand by his Friend.

After they had continued there some time, being about to part, Mr. Hill told my Lord, That unless he was at the Play-House by Six a-Clock, the Thing could not be effected, and he should be undone: But my Lord promised to be there at the Time.

Accordingly they both met at the Play-House; and after they had been behind the Scenes, and informed themselves that Mrs. Bracegirdle would not be there that Night, they left the Play-House.

But it seems they had got Intelligence, that she was to sup that Night at one Mr. Page's House in Drury-Lane; and therefore they planted themselves with their Soldiers near that Place, over-against my Lord Craven's House.

Lord High Steward. They! Who do you mean?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar, and Mr. Hill. After they had continued there for a considerable time (I think till towards Nine a-Clock), they began to have a Jealousy, that they might be under some Misinformation; and therefore ordered the Coachman to drive them into Howard-street, the Place where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged; and observing some Persons walking near her Lodging, they said, they doubted they were deceived, and had been betrayed.

But they soon came back again to Drury-Lane, and fixed themselves in their former Station. About Ten a-Clock Mrs. Bracegirdle, accompanied with Mr. Page (at whose House she had been) and with her Mother and (I think) her Brother, going home; when they came to the Place where the Coach stood, with the Door open, and my Lord at the Bar placed in the Coach, and several Cases of Pistols by him, the Soldiers, together with Captain Hill, came up to Mrs. Bracegirdle, seized upon her, and would have forced her into the Coach: Mr. Hill endeavoured with Violence to force away Mr. Page, who was then leading her, and struck him; but Mrs. Bracegirdle's Mother holding her about the Middle, they could not readily get her into the Coach; and during this Struggle there was an Opportunity given to Mr. Page to call for Help; and several Persons coming presently from the Houses near, and the People in the Street beginning to rise upon them, they found it impracticable to effect their Design at that Time.

Thereupon the Soldiers were dismissed, but my Lord and Mr. Hill would not be denied the Liberty to wait upon Mrs. Bracegirdle to her Lodging; and accordingly, together with Mr. Page and her Mother, and other Persons, they went together to Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging, at one Mrs. Browne's House in Howard-street. Mr. Mountford's House was in Norfolk-street, below Howard-street. Howard-street is a Cross Street, which leads from Arundel-street, and through Norfolk-street to Surrey-street; and so it was not possible for Mountford to come to his own House, but whoever should fix themselves in Howard-street must have the Opportunity of seeing him.

As they were going along, Hill swore he would be reveng'd; but nam'd nobody.

After that Mrs. Bracegirdle and the Company were come to her Lodging, she and her Mother and Page went into the House: My Lord Mohun and and Mr. Hill staid in Howard-street, and there continued for near two Hours together, and for the most part of that Time, with their Swords drawn.

Mr. Mountford, as it happen'd, did not come Home till late that Night; so that their Stay being long, my Lord and Mr. Hill thought fit to fend for Wine, and had one or two Bottles, which they drank in the Street, near Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

During this Time, they were heard to say (that is, one of them was; but which of them, by reason of the Darkness we cannot tell) that if he could not be revenged that Night, he would the next Morning; upon which a Boy, who was there with them, (but who the Boy was we cannot discover) said, Good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Resolution. I did observe before, that Mrs. Bracegirdle supped that Night at Mr. Page's House, and Mrs. Page having heard of the great Outrage and Tumult in the Street, and that her Husband was gone home with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and being under a great Concern for his Safety, thought fit to follow him thither. As she entered into the House, she saw my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill near the Door; and presently after, before she could have a full Relation of what had happened in Drury-lane, Mrs. Brown, the Owner of the House where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, came into the Room, and told them, That my Lord Mohun and Hill were waiting for Mr. Mountford, and that she was apprehensive it was with no good Intention. Thereupon Mrs. Page thought it requisite to go to Mrs. Mountford's House to give her Notice of it, and to desire her to find out where her Husband was, and to caution him not to come Home, unless he brought a good Guard with him.

As she went out, she saw them both with their Swords drawn, and she acquainted Mrs. Mountford with it, who sent to several Places in Search of her Husband; but she was so unfortunate, that the Messengers could not find him.

Whilst this was doing, the Watch came into Howard-street, being alarm'd at the Report that two Gentlemen were drinking in the Street, and walking there with their naked Swords. The Watch demanded of my Lord Mohun, why he had his Sword drawn. My Lord was pleas'd to return them this Answer, That he was a Peer of the Realm, and bid them touch him if they durst. They then asked Hill, why his Sword was out, and my Lord made the Excuse for him, That Hill had lost his Scabbard.

The Watch observing the Drawer who attended upon them, and knowing that he lived at a Tavern in Surrey-street, went to inform themselves, who these Persons should be, that were walking in such a Manner at that time of Night. But they were hardly got into the House before they heard the Cry of Murder.

The Witnesses will inform your Lordships, that as Mr. Mountford, about twelve a-Clock, was coming home, my Lord Mohun met him, and saluted him. Mr. Mountford said, My Lord Mohun, What does your Lordship do here at this time of Night? and my Lord made Answer, He supposed Mr. Mountford had been sent for. No, no, says Mountford, I came by Chance. My Lord said to him again, I suppose you have heard about the Lady. Mr. Mountford answered, I hope my Wife has given your Lordship no Offence. No, says my Lord Mohun, It's Mrs. Bracegirdle I mean. To this the Reply of Mr. Mountford was, Mrs. Bracegirdle is no Concern of mine; but I hope your Lordship does not countenance any ill Action of Mr. Hill.

Upon this Hill came up to them, and said to my Lord, It was not a Time to discourse of those Matters; and as my Lord continued to talk with Mountford, Hill struck Mountford first, and, in a manner, at the same Instant made a Pass at him, and run him clean through the Body, and this before Mr. Mountford's Sword was drawn. Immediately, upon this, there was a Cry of Murder, and the Watch came with what haste they could, and took my Lord Mohun, but Hill was fled; when my Lord was taken, his Sword was not drawn.

As soon as my Lord Mohun was taken, the first Question he asked was, If Hill was apprehended? And when he was told, he was not, he said he was glad of it, and he did not care if he were hang'd for him. And he said, adding at the same time, That he was sorry that Mr. Hill had so little Money about him, and wished him all that he had in his own Pocket; and he did then also own to the Watch, that he had changed Coats with Mr. Hill, and had Hill's Coat on him at that time.

My Lords, this is the Substance of the Evidence, and in this Order, with your Lordships Leave, we shall offer the Proofs to your Lordships; I do not doubt, but your Lordships will attend to the Evidence with all Care, and will determine upon it according to Justice and Honour. I will detain your Lordships no longer, but proceed to call the Witnesses to prove what I have opened.

L. H. Steward. Pray call your Witnesses together, and let me know who you begin with.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, We do not know what Place is designed for the Witnesses; but if they are to be on the other Side, and this Crowd do interpose between us and them, it will be impossible for us, who are the King's Counsel, to hear what they say, or know how to proceed.

L. H. Steward. There must be Room made there for the Witnesses; where are your Witnesses, Mr. Attorney?

Clerk of the Crown. If you please to name them, Sir, we will call them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mr. John Hudson, and Mr. George Powell.

L. H. Steward. I know not how this is ordered, but Way must be made there by the Bar, that the Prisoner may see the Witnesses, and they him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord, by all means.

Mr. Serj. Tremain. If your Lordships please, the Witnesses will be most conveniently heard, if they come and stand by us.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordships please, it will not be possible either for my Lord at the Bar, or for us, to hear what the Witnesses say, unless they be brought into this Place to stand between us.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Great Chamberlain, be pleas'd to give order for them to be brought in thither.

Then the Lord Great Chamberlain went down to the Bar.

L. G. Chamberlain. The Witnesses must be brought to this Place.

And accordingly, Way was made for the Witnesses, as called, to stand at the Bar between the Prisoner and the King's Counsel.

L. H. Steward. Give me the Name of him that you begin with.

Mr. Att. Gen. We begin, my Lords, with Mr. John Hudson. [Who came to the Bar, and one of the Clerks held the Book to him, upon which he laid his Hand.]

Cl. of the Cr. Hearken to your Oath, Sir: The Evidence that you shall give on the Behalf of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen's Majesties against Charles Lord Mohun, the Prisoner at the Bar, shall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth: So help you God.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Hudson, Do you give my Lords an Account what you know of any Applications of Courtship made to Mrs. Bracegirdle by Mr. Hill, and what became of it; and what you heard Hill say about her, or about any one else relating to that Matter.

Hudson. My Lord, I had the Honour to be invited to Supper with my Lord Mohun, at the Rest-Tavern in Covent-Garden, where I found Captain Hill with his Lordship.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this, Sir? Tell the time.

Hudson. This was three Nights before this unfortunate Accident happen'd, there I found Captain Hill, and we supped together; and after Supper, Captain Hill rais'd a Discourse of Mrs. Bracegirdle and Mr. Mountford; says he, I should not doubt the Success of my Amour with Mrs. Bracegirdle, if I were not obstructed by Mountford, whom I design to be the Death of: This is Truth, upon my Oath. My Lord Mohun was in the Company; but I cannot say that my Lord made any Reply to the Thing, or took any Notice of it: But this Captain Hill did say, not only then, but several times before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he say it at any other time in your Hearing?

Hudson. Yes, several times before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing more of this matter?

Hudson. No more, than that my Lord Mohun, that very Night that Mr. Mountford was killed, and Capt. Hill, came into the Scene Room of the Play-House, and my Lord Mohun had Capt. Hill's Coat on, and Capt. Hill had my Lord Mohun's Coat on, and they changed their Cloaths in the Play-House, I saw them change their Cloaths; but what their Design was, I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was that, Sir?—Hudson. That very Night that the Gentleman that is dead, Mr. Mountford, was killed.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, That my Lord Mohun was present when that Discourse of Hill was, about Mountford at the Tavern.

Hudson. Yes; but I cannot say my Lord took any Notice of it, for he made no Reply that I heard.

L. H. Steward. Have you done with this Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord.

Hudson. This is all that I know of the Matter.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Mohun, have you any thing to say to this Witness?—L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then our next Witness's Name is George Powell.

(Who was sworn in like manner.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Powell, You have heard the Questions that have been ask'd Mr. Hudson. Pray will you make Answers to them; and give my Lords an Account what you know of this Matter.

Powell. May it please your Lordships, about 5 or 6 Days before Mr. Mountford was wounded, I was in Company with Capt. Hill, and he began Mrs. Bracegirdle's Health. I told him I would pledge it. Says he, I am sure there is no Bar between me and Mrs. Bracegirdle but Mountford; and I am resolv'd to be revenged on him, one way or another. About 3 Days afterwards I was at Supper with my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill, and another Gentleman, and the same Discourse arose again, and Capt. Hill whisper'd me in the Ear, says he, I am resolv'd to have the Blood of Mountford. I told him I did not think it fit for him to speak so behind a Gentleman's Back, and to me, who was his Friend. I said, I would acquaint Mr. Mountford what he said, and I did not doubt but he would give him the Satisfaction of a Gentleman for any Injury he did him. I heard no further Discourse at that time, nor do I know more of that Matter, till the Night that Mr. Mountford was wounded, when I saw him lying upon the Parlour Floor, and afterwards saw him laid to Bed, and sat up all Night with him, and about four a-Clock in the Morning, I asked Mr. Mountford how the Thing happened. He told me Capt. Hill killed him basely; I asked him if his Sword was drawn; Yes, says he, but it was after I had received my Wound, for whilst my Lord Mohun talked to me, Hill run me through.

Mr. Att. Gen. At that time, when those Words were spoke at Supper, That he design'd to be the Death of Mountford, was my Lord present?

Powell. Yes, my Lord Mohun was present, but he was talking to Colonel Tredenham.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord Mohun say any thing to what Hill said?

Powell. I did not hear him make any Answer to it at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing else in relation to this Fact?

Powell. Nothing else, but that Capt. Hill did give a Letter to be deliver'd to Mrs. Bracegirdle, but I know not whether it was deliver'd or not, and he often told me, he would marry her with all his Heart.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say you had that Discourse with Mountford, when he lay a-dying?

Powell. It was about four a-Clock, and he died about One.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any thing said about my Lord Mohun at that time?—Powell. Nothing, but that my Lord Mohun was talking to him, whilst the other run him through.

L. H. Steward. If I understand you aright, you say nothing against my Lord Mohun, but his being by one time at Supper when Hill said some Words about Mountford; and then the other thing you say is, what Mountford told you after he was wounded, That my Lord was talking to him, when Hill gave him the Wound?

Powell. Yes, my Lord, That is all that I heard.

L. H. Steward. Has your Lordship any thing to say to this Witness?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witness that we shall desire to call is Mrs. Knight.

Mrs. Knight. I have nothing to say to my Lord Mohun; but what I have to say, is to Mr. Hill. About 4 Days before Mr. Mountford was killed, Mr. Hill came to me, and spoke to me about Mrs. Bracegirdle: He told me he was satisfied she hated him. I told him I did not believe he said, she did love some Body, but he had thought of a Way to be even with that Body. Upon the Wednesday Night before Mr. Mountford was killed, he came to me as I was coming out of the Dressing-Room; saith he, Mrs. Knight, let me speak a Word with you; says he, You are very great with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and I desire you to be so kind, as to speak to her for me, and I would beg of you, if you would give me leave, to give her this Letter from me: No, said I, Mr. Hill, I beg your Pardon; you say she hateth you, and if she hateth you, she will not love any Body that speaketh for you; and I am not fond of creating myself Enemies in the House, knowing I have some already. What Enemies? saith Mr. Hill; Mountford do you mean? And then repeating a great Oath, I shall find a Way with him speedily.

L. H. Stew. A Way, with what?

Mrs. Knight. A Way with him speedily; Hill said it of Mr. Mountford.

L. H. Stew. What do you call this Witnes for, Mr. Attorney? what Use do you make of her Evidence against my Lord Mobun?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Use that we would make of these Witnesses, is to give an Account of the whole Fact, from the Beginning to the End, Hill's Malice, and what was the Occasion of it, his Design in coming there that Night, and what he did, and to leave it to your Lordships, to judge what Influence this will have, how far it will affect my Lord Mobun. The next Witnes is Mrs. Sandys.

L. H. Stew. What is this Woman's Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Elizabeth Sandys.

(She was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Sandys, give my Lords an Account, whether you were present with my Lord Mobun and Mr. Hill at the Tavern that Day that Mr. Mountford was killed, and what passed there.

Sandys. I dined with my Lord Mobun and Captain Hill, at the Three Turns in Shandis-street, and there arose a Discourse about Mrs. Bracegirdle and Hill, and my Lord Mobun asked me, If I thought Mountford had lay with her or no. I said I could not tell; presently after, says my Lord Mobun, It will cost Hill 50 Guineas this Design. Saith Mr. Hill, if the Villain offers to resist, I will stab him; saith my Lord Mobun, I will stand by my Friend. When this was done, Mr. Hill desired Mr. Brough to borrow a Cafe of Pistols of Captain Leister, and he said he would not borrow them himself, for he doubted, if he knew of the Design, he would not lend them. When that was done, Captain Hill told me, he had a Coach and six Horses in Witch-street, to feize Mrs. Bracegirdle, and carry her away into the Country; and my Lord Mobun said he would stand by his Friend: And when my Lord Mobun went away, Hill said to him, My Lord, if you be not there by six a Clock, I am ruined. Saith my Lord Mobun, upon my Word and Honour I will be at the Play-House by Six.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mobun, have you any Thing to say to that Witnes?

L. Mobun. Yes, my Lord, I desire to have her asked, whether she is a Maid, or a married Woman?

L. H. Stew. You hear the Question; but I do not know what Use my Lord will make of it.

Mr. Att. G. You can easily answer, whether you are married or unmarried.

L. H. Stew. That Question is very fair; Are you a married Woman, or a single Woman?

Sandys. I am a single Woman, my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. Pray, Mrs. Sandys, repeat the Words that my Lord Mobun said, when Hill said, if the Villain resisted, he would stab him.

Sandys. My Lord Mobun said nothing in the World, but that he would stand by his Friend.

L. H. Stew. Have you any further Questions, Mr. Attorney, to ask this Witnes?

Mr. Att. G. I have nothing more to ask her, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What say you, my Lord Mobun; would you ask her any thing else?

L. Mobun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Then withdraw.

(Which she did.)

Mr. Att. G. The next Witnes we call is Mr. Rogers. (Who was sworn.)

L. H. Stew. What is this Witnes's Name?

Mr. Att. G. Rogers, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What is his Christian Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. John. If your Lordships please to remember, that the last Witnes, Mrs. Sandys, said, that Mr. Hill desired my Lord Mobun not to fail of being at the Play-House by six a Clock, and that he was undone if he did not come; and my Lord promised upon his Word and Honour that he would come: Now we call this Witnes to prove that they met at the Play-House according to the Appointment on the 9th of December.

Rogers. My Lord, all that I know of this Matter was, That my Lord Mobun and Captain Hill were at the Play-House that Night, and that which made me take particular Notice of their being then at the Play-House, though they had been frequently there before together, was that Captain Hill had my Lord Mobun's Coat on, and my Lord Mobun had Captain Hill's Coat on.

Mr. Att. G. Did you observe any Thing else, when they were at the Play-House?

Rogers. Nothing but only some Words that passed between Captain Hill and my Lord Mobun, when I went to ask them for the Overplus of the Money for coming in, because they came out of the Pit upon the Stage; he said, he would not give it me; but if I brought any of our Masters, he would slit their Noses, or something to that Effect.

Mr. Att. G. What were the Words he said when you asked him for Money?

Rogers. I asked them for Money, that they ought to pay more than the rest that were in the Pit, because they came upon the Stage, and they would not give it me; but he said, If I brought any of our Masters, he would slit their Noses, or cut their Faces, or to that Effect.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, will your Lordship ask him any Questions?

L. Mobun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Call another Witnes then.

Mr. Att. G. My Lords, with your Lordships Favour, the next Witnes that we shall call, is the Coachman, William Dixon. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Dixon, do you remember the Day when Mr. Mountford was killed?

Dixon. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. G. Pray acquaint my Lords, what Persons you carried in your

Vol. IV.

Coach that Day; whether you carried my Lord Mobun and Mr. Hill, and to what Place, and where you waited for them.

Dixon. If it please your Lordships, Captain Hill and my Lord Mobun came in a Hackney Coach to my Gate, where I live, and I was just a going to set my Coaches into the Street for Hire: They bargained with me for six Horses, and I was to have thirty Shillings to set them down at Totteridge, on this Side Barnet. I ask'd them, Whether they would have me bring all the six Horses with the Coach. No, they said, a Pair would serve to the Play-House, and the other four should stand at the Pound's End. So I went accordingly to the Place appointed, over-against the Horshoe-Tavern in Drury-lane, and a Footman came, and Mr. Hill and he bid me drive down lower. So I drove to my Lord of Clare's Door, or thereabouts; and there was some Soldiers that would have had me go in, and smook and drink with them; I told them, I did never smook, and I did not care for drinking any thing at that Time. With that, my Lord Mobun and Mr. Hill came into the Coach, and, as they bid me, I carried them into Norfolk-street, below the Watch-House that stood there; they bid me turn about, and stand there; and then they went to the White-Horse Tavern; so I did turn about, and stay'd as they bid me, and they tarried a pretty while before they came again, and then they bid me drive back to the Place from whence I came, and so I drove into Drury-lane, and they bid me stop next to my Lord Craven's House, this was about ten a Clock, and it being so late, I went Home, and sent a Postilion down to take Care of the Coach, so that what passed afterwards I cannot tell.

L. H. Stew. What Day or Night was all this you speak of?

Dixon. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell what Day it was; it was in December, as I take it, the 9th; and it was Friday, I believe; I do not know justly.

L. H. Stew. Did you hear of the Death of Mr. Mountford?

Dixon. Yes, I did.

L. H. Stew. Was it the same Day that you heard Mr. Mountford was killed?

Dixon. No, I did not hear it till the next Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, you went with my Lord Mobun and Mr. Hill into Norfolk-street, and there you stayed for them, whilst they went elsewhere?

Dixon. Yes, I did so.

Mr. Att. G. Do you know to what Houses they went?

Dixon. They went to the White-Horse Tavern, to the hithermost House on this Side the Strand, and they went below to a Door on this Side of a House that is not finished yet.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you hear them use any Expressions there?

Dixon. I heard Hill say to my Lord Mobun, I think there is a Man and a Maid talking, it was at the Corner House; saith Hill, We are betrayed; Damn me, saith he, my Lord, let us go and thresh him.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they do then?

Dixon. I did see them do nothing.

Mr. Att. G. Whither did you carry them from thence?

Dixon. To the Place from whence they came in Drury-lane.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordship say any thing to this Man?

L. Mobun. I desire he may be asked, Whether he had not Orders to go out of Town with us, as soon as Mrs. Bracegirdle was put into the Coach.

Dixon. If it please you, Sir, I had Order thus, That when we were to go out of Town, I must drive down into the Strand, and then round about any Way that was readiest and clearest to get to the Pound; that Order I had, and no other Order I had.

L. H. Stew. Who is your next Witnes?

Mr. Att. G. My Lords, the next Witnes we shall call, will give you an Account what was done in Drury-lane, upon their endeavouring to carry her away, and for that we have here Mrs. Bracegirdle herself.

L. H. Stew. What is this Gentlewoman's Name?

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Ann Bracegirdle.

(Then she was sworn.)

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Bracegirdle, Pray give my Lords an Account of the Whole of your Knowledge of the Attempt that was made upon you in Drury-lane, and what followed upon it.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I was in Prince's-street at Supper at Mr. Page's, and at ten a Clock at Night, Mr. Page went home with me; and coming down Drury-lane, there stood a Coach by my Lord Craven's Door, and the Boot of the Coach was down, and a great many Men stood by it; and just as I came to the Place where the Coach stood, two Soldiers came and pulled me from Mr. Page, and four or five more came up to them, and they knocked my Mother down almost, for my Mother and my Brother were with me. My Mother recovered, and came and hung about my Neck, so that they could not get me into the Coach, and Mr. Page went to call Company to rescue me. Then Mr. Hill came with his Sword drawn, and struck at Mr. Page and my Mother; and when they could not get me into the Coach because Company came in, he said he would see me home, and he led me by one Hand, and my Mother by the other. And when we came home, he pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and said, Sir, I would speak with you.

Mr. Att. G. Pray, Mrs. Bracegirdle, did you see any body in the Coach when they pulled you to it?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, my Lord Mobun was in the Coach; when they pulled me to the Coach, I saw my Lord Mobun in the Coach. And when we came Home, Hill pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and he said, He would speak with him. As they led me along Drury-lane, my Lord Mobun came out of the Coach, and followed us, and all the Soldiers followed them; but they were dismissed, and, as I said, when we came to our Lodging, then Hill pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and said, He would speak with him. Saith Mr. Page, Mr. Hill, another Time will do, Tomorrow will serve; with that, when I was within Doors, Mr. Page was pulled into the House, and Mr. Hill walked up and down in the Street with his Sword drawn. He had his Sword drawn, when he came along with me.

Mr. Att. G. Did you observe him to say any thing whilst he was with you?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. As I was going down the Hill, he said, as he led me, He would be revenged.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he say of whom he would be revenged?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. He did not name of whom then, but when I was in the House, several Persons went to the Door, and afterwards Mrs.

Browne

Browne went to the Door, and spoke to them, and asked them, What they staid and walked there for? at last, they said, They staid to be revenged of Mr. Mountford; and then Mrs. Browne came in to me, and told me of it.

L. H. Stew. Who said that?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Mr. Hill.

Mr. Att. G. Were my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill both together when that was said, that they staid to be revenged of Mr. Mountford?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, they were. And when Mrs. Browne came in and told me, I sent my Brother, and the Maid, and all the People we could, out of the House to Mrs. Mountford, to desire her to send, if she knew where her Husband was, to tell him of it, and she did. And when they came in a Doors again, I went to the Door, and the Doors were shut, and I listened to hear if they were there still; and my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill were walking up and down the Street; and by and by, the Watch came up to them, and when the Watch came, they said, Gentlemen, Why do you walk with your Swords drawn? Says my Lord Mohun, I am a Peer of England, touch me if you dare.

L. H. Stew. Repeat that again, for I could not well hear you: Do you speak of what you heard from Mrs. Browne, or what you observed yourself?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I was within Doors, but I was listening at the Door, and heard this myself; they came up to them, and said, Gentlemen, Why do you walk with your Swords drawn?

L. H. Stew. Who asked that Question?

Mr. Bracegirdle. The Watch; and says my Lord Mohun, I am a Peer of England, touch me if you dare. Then the Watch left them, and they went away, and a little after there was a Cry of Murder, and that is all that I know, my Lord.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire this Witnesh may be asked, How long after this Passage that she speaketh of, was it that she heard Murder cried in the Street.

L. H. Stew. You hear the Question, Mrs. Bracegirdle; What say you to it?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, I believe it was about a Quarter of an Hour after, to the best of my Memory.

L. H. Stew. What do you mean, a Quarter of an Hour after the Watch asked the Question?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, my Lord.

Then the Earl of Mulgrave stood up.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mulgrave.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lord, I desire to ask this Witnesh a Question. If I heard her aright, I think she said, They threatened to be revenged of Mr. Mountford, I desire to know of her, whether my Lord Mohun did threaten him?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. I do not know indeed; but when Mrs. Browne asked them what they staid there for? they said, To be revenged of Mr. Mountford. I did not hear them myself, but Mrs. Browne came in and told me so.

Mr. Att. G. Mrs. Bracegirdle, I think, if I did not mistake, you said, When the Watch came up, they asked them, Why their Swords were drawn?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. Yes, and my Lord Mohun made Answer, He was a Peer of England, and bid them touch him if they durst, and they went away.

Mr. Att. G. My Lord, the next Witnesh that we call shall be Mr. Gawen Page, at whose House Mrs. Bracegirdle supped that Night. (He was sworn.)

Mr. Att. G. Mr. Page, I suppose you remember the Night, when Mrs. Bracegirdle supped at your House?

Mr. Page. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. I pray give an Account of your whole Knowledge about this Matter, what happen'd that Night.

Mr. Page. About Ten a Clock at Night, on Friday the Ninth of December last, going down Drury lane, with Mrs. Bracegirdle, whom I led, just against my Lord Craven's House—

L. H. Stew. Pray, Sir, speak out, and tell us what Time it was.

Mr. Page. About Ten a Clock at Night, on Friday the Ninth of December last, going down Drury lane, and leading Mrs. Bracegirdle, right against my Lord Craven's Door stood a Coach, where two Soldiers pressed in between me and Mrs. Bracegirdle, and parted us: I asked what that was for? But they took hold of Mrs. Bracegirdle, and immediately they would have forced her into the Coach; Captain Hill, whom I saw there with his Sword drawn, made several Blows at me.

L. H. Stew. Who would have forced her into the Coach?

Mr. Page. The Soldiers would.

Mr. Att. G. Pray, go on, Sir, what followed after that?

Mr. Page. I say, Captain Hill made several Blows at me, and cry'd, You Villain, stand. I received many of them upon my Cane, but there was none that hurt me; then I got Help, and they were prevented of carrying Mrs. Bracegirdle away. My Lord Mohun was in the Coach; I saw him in the Coach.

Mr. Att. G. Did you see any Arms in the Coach?

Mr. Page. I saw no Arms, but I saw a Bundle in the Coach; tho' I could not tell what it was; and there was one in the Coach, that I saw was my Lord Mohun. So when we had got help we went down the Lane to convey her home, and Captain Hill was with us, and my Lord Mohun followed at a Distance. Captain Hill said to the Soldiers, Be gone, I have nothing more to do with you now. When we came to the House, and Mrs. Bracegirdle was entering in, Captain Hill pulled me by the Sleeve, and said he would speak with me. Said I, To-night is not a fit Time, To-morrow is better, therefore pray stay till To-morrow Morning. But said he, God damn me, you will not go home To-night.

L. H. Stew. You speak so low, that I cannot tell what you say; I did not hear that last that you said.

Mr. Page. My Lord, I say, when Captain Hill pulled me by the Sleeve, and said he would speak with me, I told him that Night was not a fit Time, To-morrow would do better: Well, said he, To-morrow then, but, God damn me, you will not go out To-night: I went in a Doors, and there my Lord Mohun and he staid for an Hour and a Half, as I was told; I saw them not myself: But Mrs. Browne came in and said, that they staid they waited to be revenged.

Mr. Att. G. Whom did they mean, yourself that they would be revenged of?

Mr. Page. Mrs. Browne said, they waited for Mr. Mountford.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you continue in that House till after the Murder was committed?

Mr. Page. Yes, Sir, I did.

L. H. Stew. How long after you came into the House was the Fact done?

Mr. Page. About an Hour and an Half.

L. H. Stew. Did you yourself hear or observe any thing to be said or done, from the Time you came into the House, to the Time the Fact was committed?

Mr. Page. No, my Lord, I was in the Back-Room of the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Page, did you see Mr. Mountford after he was wounded?

Mr. Page. Yes, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then give my Lords an Account of what passed at that Visit.

Mr. Page. Upon the Outcry of Murder, I came into the Street, where I found my Lord Mohun just surrendering himself to the Constable; and immediately I went to Mr. Mountford's House, and I found him lying all along in his Blood upon the Floor; he seeing me, desired me to lift him up, which I did, and thinking he had been dying, I ask'd him whether he knew me. He said, Yes. Said I to him, Had you Time to draw your Sword in your Defence? He said, He was barbarously run through before he could draw it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this all you have to say, Sir?

Mr. Page. Yes.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordship ask this Witnesh any Questions?

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be ask'd whether my Sword was drawn when I surrendered myself to the Constable.

Mr. Page. No, my Lord, your Sword was in the Scabbard when you surrendered yourself, but I cannot say whether your Sword was drawn before, or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witnesh that we desire to call is Mrs. Page.

(She was sworn.)

L. H. Stew. What is the Name of this Witnesh?

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Mary Page.—Pray Mrs. Page, do you remember the Night when Mrs. Bracegirdle supped at your House, and Mr. Mountford was killed? Acquaint my Lords with all you did observe that Night.

Mrs. Page. Mrs. Bracegirdle supped at my Lodging, and my Husband went home with her, and staying something longer than ordinary, I sent my Servant to know what was the Reason of it: He brought me Word back, that my Husband had like to have been murdered, and Mrs. Bracegirdle carried away. With that I went down myself towards Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings, and there I found my Lord Mohun, and Mr. Hill walking, Mr. Hill with his Sword drawn, before Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door, and my Lord Mohun's not. So I went in, into the House; and after I had staid awhile there, Mrs. Browne came out to them, and asked them, Why they staid there? They made Answer, they staid for Mr. Mountford.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who made that Answer?

Mrs. Page. Mr. Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was with Mr. Hill at that Time?

Mrs. Page. My Lord Mohun.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any body besides those two that you observ'd?

Mrs. Page. No, there was nobody else that I saw.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were their Swords drawn?

Mrs. Page. Mr. Hill's then was, my Lord Mohun's at that present was not: But Mrs. Bracegirdle hearing that they waited for Mr. Mountford, desired me to go over to Mrs. Mountford's House, and speak to her to send to her Husband, and desire him to keep where he was, or come home with a good Guard. Whilst I was telling Mrs. Mountford what I was desired to tell her—But I should have told your Lordships, that when I came out to go to Mrs. Mountford, my Lord Mohun had then his Sword drawn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were they there when you went out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings?

Mrs. Page. Yes, they were.

Mr. Att. Gen. And are you sure, that at that Time when you went out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's House, my Lord Mohun had his Sword drawn?

Mrs. Page. I am sure of it, that when I went out, my Lord Mohun had then his Sword drawn, that was the second Time.

L. H. Stew. Out of whose House was that you went?

Mrs. Page. Out of Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

L. H. Stew. Where were they, when you saw his Sword drawn?

Mrs. Page. They were walking before Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door, from one End of the Street to the other.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Street is that?

Mrs. Page. Howard-Street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray describe to my Lords that Street.

Mrs. Page. They that stand in that Street, can see who goeth down to Mrs. Mountford's House, and who goeth up Surrey-Street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, now go on.

Mrs. Page. Whilst I was desiring Mrs. Mountford to send away to her Husband, I heard Murder cried out; immediately I opened Mr. Mountford's Door, and he came in, and fell with his Arms round about my Neck to support himself, I suppose; and he said, Hill had murder'd him. I help'd him as far as the Parlour Door, and there down he fell. I went up the Street, and called out Murder, and my Lord Mohun came to me, and bid me take Notice he had no Hand in the Murder, for his Sword was not drawn. I told him, I could not tell that, for to my Knowledge he had been in Mr. Hill's Company with his naked Sword just before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call Mrs. Browne.

L. H. Stew. You have nothing to say to that Witnesh, my Lord, have you?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this all you have to say, Mrs. Page?

Mrs. Page. After this, my Lord Mohun resigned himself up to the Constable; the Constable standing by me, I bid him secure my Lord Mohun, which he did.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire to ask this Witnesh, whether I surrendered myself, or made Opposition, or offered to run away?

Mrs. Page. No, my Lord, the Constable laid hold on you.

L. H. Stew. What Answer do you make to my Lord's Question?

Mrs. Page. I say, my Lord, the Constable laid hold upon my Lord Mohun.

L. Mohun. I desire to ask her whether I did not surrender myself?

Mrs. Page.

Mrs. Page. Not till I had desired the Constable to secure your Lordship.

L. Mohun. Did I make any opposition, or offer to run away?

Mrs. Page. No, for the Constable presently took hold of your Lordship.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether Hill run away.

Mrs. Page. That I know not; I suppose he was gone away out of the Street before I came forth.

Mr. Att. Gen. Swear Mrs. Browne.

(Which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Browne, you are upon your Oath, pray declare to my Lords what you know happen'd upon that Night that Mr. Mountford was kill'd.

Mrs. Browne. If it please your Lordships, when Mrs. Bracegirdle came Home, I found her crying; I asked her what was the Matter? She said, My Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill had run her into a Coach, with six or seven Soldiers, and lifted her into the Coach, and she said they were at the Door. Upon which, I went to the Door, and saw my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill walking along. Said I, are you the Gentlemen that have used Mrs. Bracegirdle in this Manner? My Lord Mohun answered; Madam, said he, I protected her; if it had not been for me, the Rabble would have torn her a Pieces; for if we had a mind to carry her away, we had six or seven Pistols charged in the Coach, and could easily have suppressed the Tumult.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear what the Witnesses saith, she speaketh so low.

Mrs. Browne. My Lord Mohun said, they had six or seven Pistols in the Coach, and could easily have suppressed the Rabble, if they would have carried her away; but he had no Design upon her for his own Part, but only to serve his Friend; and that Mr. Hill's Design was to take her out of Town, and keep her a Week, and see if he could persuade her to marry him; and saith Mr. Hill, I shall light on this Mountford. Why said I to him, What hurt hath Mr. Mountford done you? Saith he, I have been abused, and I will be revenged.

L. H. Stew. That was Hill that said so.

Mrs. Browne. Yes. So I went and told Mrs. Mountford of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords what my Lord Mohun said to you about this Matter.

Mrs. Browne. My Lord Mohun said, he protected her, for if it had not been for him, the Mob had torn her in Pieces; but if they had a mind to carry her off, they could easily have suppressed the Mob, for they had six or seven Pistols in the Coach: But, saith my Lord, I had no Design upon her myself, but only to serve my Friend. So saith Mr. Hill, I shall light upon this Mountford. Why, said I, what hurt hath Mr. Mountford done you? Saith he, I have been abused, and I will have my Revenge. So I went and told Mrs. Mountford of it. About half an Hour after, or more, Mr. Mountford came down, and when he came down, I saw him a little before he came to them, and went to him, and would have fain spoke to him, but he would not stay to let me speak what I had to say to him, but going on, presently he met my Lord Mohun. Saith he, Your humble Servant, my Lord. Saith my Lord again, Your Servant, Mr. Mountford. Saith my Lord, I have a great Respect for you, Mr. Mountford, and would have no Difference between us; but there is a Thing fallen out between Mr. Hill and Mrs. Bracegirdle. Saith Mr. Mountford, My Lord, has my Wife disobliged your Lordship? if she has, she shall ask your Pardon; but as for Mrs. Bracegirdle, she is no Concern of mine; and I hope your Lordship will not vindicate such an ill Man as Mr. Hill in such a Matter as this. Upon that I heard Mr. Hill bid Mr. Mountford draw, Mr. Mountford said, That I will; and drew his Sword; but whether he received his Wound before he drew his Sword, or after, I cannot tell.

L. H. Stew. Speak that last again.

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford and my Lord met; saith Mr. Mountford, Your Servant, my Lord; saith my Lord, Your Servant, Mr. Mountford, I have a great Respect for you, and would have no Difference between us; but here has been a thing fallen out between Mrs. Bracegirdle and Mr. Hill: Saith Mr. Mountford presently again, Has my Wife disobliged your Lordship? If she has, she shall ask your Pardon. But Mrs. Bracegirdle is no Concern of mine: I know nothing of this Matter, I come here by Accident.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who said they came there by Accident?

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford said, I know nothing of this Matter, I come here by Accident. But, I hope your Lordship will not vindicate Hill in such Actions as these are: Upon that, I heard Mr. Hill bid Mr. Mountford draw; Mr. Mountford said he wou'd, and drew his Sword; but whether he received his Wound before or after, I cannot tell; it was in the Night. Then the Lord Godolphin stood up.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Godolphin.

L. Godolphin. My Lord Steward, I desire this Witness may be ask'd, Whether my Lord Mohun's Sword was drawn when he talk'd with Mountford, because the Counsel opened it before, that the Watch came to them, and saw them with their Swords drawn when they were walking in the Street.

L. H. Stew. Mistress, you heard my Lord's Question: Was my Lord Mohun's Sword drawn whilst he talked with Mountford, or no?

Mrs. Browne. I do not remember I did see my Lord Mohun's Sword drawn.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were they near together?

Mrs. Browne. They were near together.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked whether I went up the Street to meet Mr. Mountford, or he came down to me?

L. H. Stew. You heard the Question, Mistress, what say you?

Mrs. Browne. Mr. Mountford came down to him.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, whether she did not go to hinder Mr. Mountford from coming that way?

Mrs. Browne. Yes, I did go to speak to him, but he did not hear me speak, or did not hearken to me; I took him by the Hand, and told him I would speak with him, but he did not hear me, but went on.

Mr. Att. Gen. You did not tell him upon what account you would have spoke with him?

Mrs. Browne. No, I had no time.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, whether Mr. Mountford's Sword was within his Arm, or by his Side.

Mrs. Browne. I believe it was by his Side.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked one Question more, whether he could not have went home, without coming to Mr. Hill and me?

Mrs. Browne. He did come out of his Way; his Way was not by my House; he did come down the Street towards them.

L. Mohun. I desire your Lordships to take notice, that he came out of his way to me. I desire to ask her: Did he come as if he was going to his own House, or your's?

Mrs. Browne. As if he was coming to mine.

L. Mohun. I desire to ask her, Whether I had any hand in killing Mr. Mountford, or went to hold him, or meddled with him?

Mrs. Browne. Not that I did see.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to say to this Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Nor your Lordship? — L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then the next Witness we desire to call, is Richard Row. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Richard Row, where do you live? — Row. In Surrey-street.

L. H. Stew. Where doth he live, saith he?

Mr. Att. Gen. In Surrey-street, my Lord. Pray how near is that to the Place where Mr. Mountford was kill'd?

Row. About ten or twelve Pole.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill that Night, and where were they?

Row. All that I can say to the Matter in that Case is, I was in my own House about a quarter after Ten a Clock; and I heard a Noise in the Street, and I went out, and saw two Gentlemen and two Lads about the Middle of the Channel; one of the Lads had one of the Gentlemen by the Arm, just by the Channel, and said, Pray my Lord, good my Lord, don't do it, alter your Resolution. There was an Answer made, that they would be revenged that Night, or To-morrow.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know who the Boy was that used that Expression?

Row. No, my Lord, it was very dark.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you not know neither who returned the Answer?

Row. No indeed.

Mr. Att. Gen. But you are sure you heard those Words pass?

Row. Yes, indeed, and I went to the Door afterwards, whilst they went to the Upper end of the Street and returned again; and I saw Capt. Hill's Boy following him. My Lord, I knew Capt. Hill, though he was not in the Cloaths he formerly used to come to my House in, and the Boy I knew to be his Boy.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were those Persons together that you heard speaking so?

Row. Yes, all four together, in a Confusion they seemed to be, for they were pushing to and again, and the Boy had hold of one of the Gentlemen's Arms, when he bid him alter his Resolution.

Mr. Att. Gen. Repeat those Words again that you heard him say.

Row. Pray my Lord, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Resolution.

L. H. Stew. Has your Lordship any thing to ask this Witness?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

Row. I spoke of this same afterwards, and so they have brought me here to give Evidence: This is all that I can say. I cannot swear to my Lord Mohun, that he was one, I do not know that ever I saw him to my Knowledge in my Life.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lord Steward, I desire he may be asked, whether he knoweth who that Boy was that made that Answer?

Row. There was no Answer made by any Boy, but begging and praying, That my Lord would not do it.

E. of Mulgrave. Do you know who that Boy was?

Row. No, I do not know what Boy it was. But when I heard Mr. Mountford was killed, and my Lord Mohun was concerned, I told what I had heard and seen, and so they bring me here to evidence it. That is all I can say to the Matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we desire next to call some of the Watch, and shall begin with Merry. (Who was sworn.)

L. H. Stew. What is his Name?

Mr. Att. Gen. William Merry. Mr. Merry, I think you are Beadle of the Parish. — Merry. Yes, I am.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray acquaint my Lords what you observed that Night Mr. Mountford was killed, when you saw my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, the first time; and the second time, when my Lord Mohun was taken.

Merry. When I first came down the Street, walking the Rounds between Eleven and Twelve a Clock, as I turned at the Corner out of Surrey-street into Howard-street, I saw my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill walking, that is, upon the paved Stones; my Lord was walking towards me, and I asked, Who comes there? Saith my Lord, A Friend. Said I, What is the meaning of your Swords being drawn? Return your Swords, and stand off. With that, he returned his Sword immediately. Saith he, I am a Peer of the Land; here, will you have my Sword? and he proffered me his Sword; but the Constable was not there then, and I did not take his Sword; but, said I, God bless your Honour, my Lord, I know not what you are, but I hope you are doing no Harm; No, saith he. With that, the Constable came immediately, and he proffered the same to him; there were two Candles in some Maids or Women's Hands at a Door hard by, and I went to ask them if they knew the Meaning of it; and there being a Neighbour's Man leaning with a Bottle and a Glass against the Wall, whom I knew. I think they told me one of them had a Sweet-heart there; and my Lord said, he was drinking a Lady's Health, and as soon as his Bottle was out, he would be gone. That is all I heard of the Matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Mr. Hill there? — Merry. Yes, he was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was his Sword drawn?

Merry. Yes, his Sword was drawn, and I asked what made that Gentleman with his Sword drawn? and my Lord Mohun said, he had lost his Scabbard; but seeing this Neighbour's Man stand there, I went to the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were both their Swords drawn at first?

Merry. Both their Swords were drawn when I came first into the Street; but my Lord put up his Sword, and the other continued drawn, by reason, as they said, he had lost his Scabbard. And so seeing, as I said, my Neighbour's Man standing there, we went to that House to enquire if they knew what their Business was; we were not got into the House,

House, I am sure not a Stone's cast within the House, but Murder was cried out, and we came back again, and my Master being nimbler of Foot than I, because he was a younger Man, came first into the Place, and seized my Lord before I came; how the Seizing was I do not know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witness is Thomas Fennell. (Who was sworn.)
Mr. Att. Gen. Fennell, you was one of the Watch that Night when Mr. Mountford was killed.

Fennell. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give my Lords an Account what you observed that Night, in relation to my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill.

Fennell. The Constable and his Watch going the Rounds, divided themselves into two Parts; I went down Surrey-Street with one Party; the Constable he went down Strand-Lane with the other Party. We were four or five that came down Surrey-Street, and when we came down, my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill's Swords were both drawn; my Lord Mohun put up his Sword just as we came down.

L. H. Stew. Speak out, Man, that my Lords may all hear you.

Fennell. I say, the Constable and his Party went down Strand-Lane, and another Party down Surrey-Street, four or five of us, and my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill had both their Swords drawn: When we came down, my Lord put up his Sword just as we came down, but the Constable not being come, I went and called him.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say both their Swords were drawn when you came down?

Fennell. Yes, but my Lord put up his Sword just as we came down.

Mr. Att. Gen. What time of Night was that?

Fennell. It was between Eleven and Twelve.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long before the Murder was committed?

Fennell. A quarter of an Hour.

L. H. Stew. Do you not say, they put up their Swords as soon as you came down?

Fennell. My Lord Mohun put up his Sword, but Hill said he had never a Scabbard.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ask them why they had their Swords drawn at that time of Night?

Fennell. No, I went to call the Constable.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ask of this Witness?

Mr. Att. Gen. I have not, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Nor you, my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Pray go on then; whom do you produce next?

Mr. Att. Gen. Our next Witness is James Bassit. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you one of the Watch that Night Mr. Mountford was killed? — Bassit. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill that Night?

Bassit. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Acquaint my Lords where it was, and in what manner you found them.

Bassit. In Howard-Street; I came along with the Constable, and I walked before them that went down Surrey-Street with my Lanthorn, and there was my Lord Mohun with his Sword drawn, and Captain Hill with his the like: We asked them what they did there? They said they were drinking of a Bottle of Wine: Hill said to me, You may knock me down if you please: Nay, said I, we never use to knock any Gentlemen down, unless there be occasion; and then we went into Norfolk-Street to the Tavern to examine what they were, and what they were doing; and in the mean time the Murder was done.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not ask them why their Swords were drawn?

Bassit. Yes, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did they say?

Bassit. Hill made Answer, that he had lost his Scabbard.

Mr. Att. Gen. What said my Lord Mohun?

Bassit. My Lord Mohun had put up his Sword by that time we came up to him: That is all I can say to it.

L. H. Stew. If you have nothing more to ask him, call another.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked whether he came with the Constable when I surrendered myself?

Bassit. Yes, and I took hold of your Sleeve, and you shook, and quak'd, and trembled, as if you would tear it to pieces.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, whether my Sword was in the Scabbard when I surrendered myself?

Bassit. Yes, it was, he surrendered it.

L. H. Stew. That was after the Murder was done.

Mr. Att. Gen. With your Lordship's Favour, I desire he may answer my Lord Mohun's first Question again, so as to be heard by your Lordships: What was that you were saying when my Lord surrendered himself?

Bassit. I took him by the Arm when he surrendered himself up.

Mr. Att. Gen. What then?

Bassit. Then he quaked, and I had him to the Round-House.

L. H. Stew. Hear my Question; You say you took him by the Sleeve, when he surrendered himself; what do you mean by that? is it that he had surrendered himself before you laid hold on him, or afterwards?

Bassit. I took hold of his Arm, when he surrendered himself.

L. H. Stew. But was it before he surrendered himself to the Constable?

Bassit. No, it was afterwards, my Lord; to have him away.

L. H. Stew. Then you did see him surrender himself to the Constable?

Bassit. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then call Mr. Charles Knowles; But he did not appear.

L. H. Stew. Whom do you call next, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we call'd Mr. Charles Knowles; but they say, he is not come; therefore, with your Lordships Favour, we will call Mrs. Brewer. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Mrs. Brewer, I think, you live at the next Door to Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging? — Mrs. Brewer. Yes, I do so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give my Lords an Account what you saw and heard that Night Mr. Mountford was kill'd.

Mrs. Brewer. I was at Mrs. Bracegirdle's House, and I went to the Door with them; and just as I went to the Door, my Lord Mohun came up to me; just as he came to the Door, Mr. Mountford came down the Street, and my Lord went to him, and embraced him, and said, Mr. Mountford, Your humble Servant, I am glad to see you. Who is this, said Mr. Mountford, my Lord Mohun? Yes, said my Lord. What makes your Lordship here at this time a Night, said Mr. Mountford? Saith my Lord again, I suppose, Mr. Mountford, you was sent for. Sent for, for what, said he? You have heard of the Business of Mrs. Bracegirdle, I suppose, said my Lord: No, my Lord, said he, I come by Chance.

Mr. Att. G. Who said that? — Mrs. Brewer. Mr. Mountford, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, go on, and speak aloud.

Mrs. Brewer. My Lord, Mr. Mountford. — And there she hesitated, and seemed to be in a Confusion.

Mr. Att. G. She is not used to such publick Examinations: If your Lordships will please to allow her to begin, because she is in some Confusion, she will be the better able to give you what Account she can of this Matter.

L. H. Stew. Let her recollect herself, and begin again.

Mrs. Brewer. When Mr. Mountford came down the Street, I stood at the Door, and my Lord Mohun was come to the Door, and my Lord Mohun went to him and said, Mr. Mountford, your humble servant, I am glad to see you, and embraced him. Saith Mr. Mountford, Who is this, my Lord Mohun? Yes, said he, it is. What maketh your Lordship here at this time of Night? said my Lord Mohun, I suppose you are sent for, Mr. Mountford. No indeed, said he, I came by Chance. Saith my Lord, You have heard of the Business of Mrs. Bracegirdle. With that, after he had said this, Mr. Hill cometh up, and said, Pray, my Lord, hold your Tongue, this is not a convenient Time to discourse this Business, and would have drawn my Lord away. Saith Mr. Mountford, I am very sorry, my Lord, to see that your Lordship should assist Capt. Hill in so ill an Action as this; pray let me desire your Lordship to forbear. Upon this, as soon as he had said so, Mr. Hill came up and struck Mr. Mountford a Box on the Ear. Saith Mr. Mountford, Damme, what's that for? And with that, he whipped out his sword, and made a Pass at him, and I turned about and cry'd out Murder, Murder.

Mr. Att. G. But you say, you saw Hill draw his Sword, and make a Pass at him?

Mrs. Brewer. No, his Sword was drawn before; but he, immediately after the Box on the Ear, made a Pass at him, and I turned about and cry'd Murder.

Mr. Att. G. Had Mr. Mountford his Sword drawn at that Time?

Mrs. Brewer. No, he had not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you sure he had not?

Mrs. Brewer. Yes, I am sure he had not, for as soon as he struck the Blow, he made a Pass at him.

Mr. Att. G. Was my Lord present at that Time?

Mrs. Brewer. He stood just by on the Right-hand.

Mr. Att. G. How near to them?

Mrs. Brewer. They were all close together, as well as I could discern.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, have you any mind to ask this Witness any Questions? — L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with her?

Mr. Att. G. Yes, my Lord. The next Witness we desire to call is Mr. Davenport, the Constable. (Who was sworn.)

L. H. Stew. Well, what said this Man?

Davenport. The Ninth of December last at Night, as I was walking my Rounds between eleven and twelve a Clock, I divided my Watch into two Parts, one was to go down one Street, and the other another, and coming into Howard-Street, my Beadle happened to be there before me, and he had spied them, as he told me, with their Swords drawn: As soon as I came up, my Lord Mohun very civilly (his Sword not being then drawn) proffered to surrender his Sword to me, and said, he was a Peer of the Realm. I asked the other Man what he did with his Sword drawn? and he made answer, he had lost his Scabbard in Drury-Lane. With that I found them very civil, and I heard some Women at the Door, and they said, they were Serenading them with a Bottle of Wine. There was a Drawer there that I knew, who formerly lived over-against me, and then lived at the White-horse Tavern; so I left them (finding them very civil) and went to the White-horse Tavern to examine what the Business was; they told me, they were there a drinking, and before I had spoken three Words almost to the Man of the House, the Watch was called, and when we came, Mr. Hill had made his Escape, and so I secured my Lord Mohun.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Occasion of calling the Watch?

Davenport. They cry'd out Murder in the Street; so I took my Lord Mohun, and carry'd him to the Round-house, where we kept him all Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think you say, when you first came my Lord Mohun's Sword was not drawn.

Davenport. It was put up then, but the Beadle said they were both drawn before.

Mr. Att. G. You did not see them so soon as your Beadle?

Davenport. No, he was there before me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then acquaint my Lord what was done, after you had secured my Lord Mohun.

Davenport. After I had taken him, I carried him to the Round-house, and when we came there, he asked me, If Hill was taken? I said no; and said I, My Lord, this is a bad Misfortune you are happen'd into; and he said, God Damn me, I am glad he is not taken, but I am sorry he has no more Money about him; I wish he had some of mine; and, I do not care a Farthing if I am hang'd for him.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked whether I offered to fly.

Davenport. No, my Lord, I do not say you did, but you know, my Lord, you said this to me.

L. H. Stew. But, Mr. Davenport, did not my Lord surrender himself to you? — Davenport. Yes, my Lord, mighty civilly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did my Lord say anything to you about changing of Coats?

Davenport. He said, they had changed Coats three or four several times that Day, and at the same time he had Hill's Coat upon his Back; and I asked him, If he knew where Hill's Lodging was? and he told me; and I went to his Lodging with my Watch; and when we came there, we searched the House, but did not find him there; but Captain Hill's Boy came in whilst we were there; so with that, I secured the Boy, and searched searched him, and found Gunpowder and Ball about him; and I have Hill's Sword in the Court, and Mr. Mountford's and my Lord's.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, whether Mountford's Sword was not broke in the Street, or whether he carried it away.

Davenport. I took up a Piece myself, and a Servant Maid took up another in the Street.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, whether Mr. Mountford's Sword, when it was found, was in the Scabbard or not.

Davenport. No, it was not; I saw no Scabbard.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, you ask the Questions so fast, that we do not hear the Answers. Was not your first Question, whether Mountford's Sword was not broken?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What Answer giveth he to that?

Davenport. I do not know when it was broken; but by the Report of People that were there by, it was said, Mr. Mountford made a Pass, and at the first Pass his Sword was broken; and I went with a Lanthorn, and according as they said, I found a Piece of a Sword, and I took it up myself.

L. H. Stew. What is your next Question, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I would ask him in what Part of the Street he found the Piece of the broken Sword.

L. H. Stew. You heard the Question, what say you?

Davenport. It was in the Highway in the Street.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, what do you mean by that Question?

L. Mohun. Whether it was in the Middle of the Street towards Surrey-Street or Norfolk-Street, or near Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging, or upon the Pavement?

Davenport. It was over-against the Door where you stood.

L. Mohun. How far might it be from where I stood? I desire he may be asked that.

L. H. Stew. You hear my Lord's Question, answer it.

Davenport. He was walking up and down when I came to take him; and I took the Piece of the Sword up in the Highway; he was walking on the Pavement, the broad Stones.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with that Witness?

Mr. Att. G. Yes, my Lord. Is Mr. Charles Knowles come?

(He did not appear.)

Mr. Att. G. Then we desire to call Mr. Bancroft the Chyrurgeon, and Mr. Hunt.

L. H. Stew. Who do you examine first?

Mr. Att. G. We begin with Mr. Bancroft. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. G. You attended upon Mr. Mountford, Mr. Bancroft, when he was wounded?

Bancroft. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Att. G. Pray acquaint my Lords what you know of this Matter.

Bancroft. My Lord, upon the Ninth of December last at Night, between the Hours of Twelve and One, I was knocked up to go to Mr. Mountford, whose Servant came for me, and told me, he was a dying of a Wound he had received. So I came to his House, and found him very desperately wounded; it went in and out by his Back Bone, behind his left Side. I told him what he must expect, that he was a dead Man. I attended him that Night, till about four a Clock, in the Morning, and then I took my Leave of him, and went home: About eight a Clock in the Morning I came thither again, and met Mr. Hobbs there, and he was of the same Opinion. He lived till about one, and then he died.

Mr. Att. G. What Discourse had you with Mr. Mountford?

Mr. Bancroft. About ten a Clock, I was sent for by the Constable to come to Hicks's-Hall, to be examined there before the Justices; and being then with Mr. Mountford, and some Company being there, Mr. Powell (as I take it) was one; I said to Mr. Mountford, I suppose where I am going, I shall be asked some Questions about what you may have said to me; you are now upon the Brink of Eternity, and pray answer me truly, who gave you this Wound; was it Mr. Hill, or my Lord Mohun? Said he, My Lord Mohun offered me no Violence, but whilst I was talking with my Lord Mohun, Hill struck me with his left Hand, and with his right Hand run me through before I could put my Hand to my Sword.

Mr. Att. G. Did he tell you his Sword was drawn?

Bancroft. He did not say, it was or not, but that Hill struck him with his left Hand, and at the same Time, run him through with his right, before he could put his Hand to his Sword.

Mr. Att. G. Did he tell you my Lord Mohun's Sword was drawn?

Bancroft. The Words were these as near as I remember, My Lord Mohun offered me no Violence, but whilst I was talking with him, Hill, with his left Hand struck me, and with his right run me through, before I had time to put my Hand to my Sword.

Mr. Att. G. Did he tell you he had his Sword drawn at all afterwards?

Bancroft. No, not a Word of that, that I heard.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, have you any Thing to say to him?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

(Then Mr. William Hunt was sworn.)

Mr. Att. G. Mr. Hunt, you have heard what Mr. Bancroft was examined to, do you give an Account what you know in relation to this Business.

Hunt. I was sent for to Mr. Mountford, when he lay very ill; and I then asked him the Manner of his being hurt, he said, My Lord Mohun spoke to me, but Hill run me through before my Sword was drawn. I asked him, Whether he had Time to draw his Sword? And he said, Hill was in me, and was through me, before my Sword was out; and this he repeated again about twelve a Clock, about Half an Hour before he died the next Day.

L. H. Stew. Will you ask him any Thing else, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. G. We shall ask him no more Questions, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Will you ask him any, my Lord Mohun?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Then have you any more Witnesses?

Mr. Att. G. My Lord, I do not hear that Mr. Knowles is come yet; and if he be not come, we have no more Witnesses to examine; if he does come, we must beg Leave that we may examine him.

L. H. Stew. You know that the Court cannot stay; for after you have done on both Sides, my Lords are to withdraw, and we are not to sit here in Expectation of your Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not expect that; if my Lord Mohun please to examine any Witnesses on his Part, and it happen that the Witnesses should come before my Lord has made an End, we hope your Lordships will favour us so far, as that we may examine him.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, if you have any Witnesses to be examined; now is your time to call them.

L. Mohun. I desire first, Mr. Hill's Foot-Boy may be called.

L. H. Stew. Name him. (He came to the Bar.)

L. Mohun. My Lords, if you please, I desire Mr. Brereton may be called first, because I would prove to your Lordships, and shew you I had no Malice to Mr. Mountford.

L. H. Stew. I thought you had called that Boy first.

L. Mohun. That was a Mistake, my Lord; this Gentleman, Mr. Brereton, I desire may be first examined.

Mr. Brereton. My Lord, I know nothing as to this Matter of Fact, for I had not seen my Lord Mohun of two or three Days before.

L. H. Stew. What do you examine this Witness to, my Lord?

L. Mohun. To shew that I had no Malice against Mr. Mountford, but spoke kindly of him several Times.

Mr. Brereton. I had not seen my Lord Mohun for two or three Days before this Fact was committed, and therefore can give no Account of what happened then; but the Friday before the Play of Alexander the Great was acted, and my Lord Mohun and I were at the Play-house, and he and I went to Supper together, and we were talking of the Play, and he said it was a good Play, and commended several Parts in it, and particularly the Acting; and he commended Mr. Mountford's Acting extremely: I said, I thought he never acted so well in his Life before; but my Lord spoke particularly very kind Things of Mr. Mountford, that he thought him a very good Actor. I answered, as to Comedy he did use to act very well, but I thought he would never make so good a Tragedian as Mr. Betterton, or some others. But my Lord before this, had used to commend Mr. Mountford and speak kindly of him: And he said, that several of the Players had been very rude to him, more than their Business did require of them; but Mr. Mountford had been more civil than any of the rest. Upon this, my Lord Mohun was pleased to ask me, Whether I was acquainted with Mr. Mountford? I told him, I never was in his Company but once with Mr. Bludworth. Saith my Lord, I have a great Mind to drink a Bottle of Wine with him. Said I, I do not think him worth your Acquaintance, but you may do what you will. Several Things more my Lord said, and spoke more kindly of him than of any of the rest of the Players; but there was no Time fix'd for drinking with him. Upon Tuesday after, my Lord Mohun came to my Lodgings, and told me, Mr. Mountford had been very civil to him the Night before at the Play-house, when the rest were very rude to him; and he had a mind to drink a Bottle of Wine with him. Saith he, I am going about some Business to Kensington, but within a Day or two you shall certainly hear of me, and we will fix a Time for it, and if I do not like his Company, I will never trouble you, nor myself more with it.

L. H. Stew. When was this, Sir?

Brereton. This was the Tuesday before; the first Discourse was upon the Friday before.

(Then the Boy was examined.)

L. Mohun. Was you along with me and Mr. Hill, that Night Mr. Mountford was killed?

L. H. Stew. My Lord, you must propose your Questions to me, and I will ask them.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to know what the Boy's Name is, and who he is.

L. Mohun. His Name is Thomas Lake, and he was Mr. Hill's Foot-Boy.

L. H. Stew. What do you ask him, my Lord?

L. Mohun. Pray, my Lord, ask him if he was with Mr. Hill and me, that Night that Mr. Mountford was killed.

L. H. Stew. You hear the Question, what say you to it?

Boy. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear what you say.

Boy. I was with them, my Lord, and all I heard was, they had a Design to take away the Woman, Mrs. Bracegirdle, and they had provided Night-Cloaths and a Coach for her, to go to Totteridge, which was the Place where they designed to carry her.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear one Word this Boy saith.

L. Mohun. My Lord, shall I repeat to your Lordship what the Boy saith?

Lords. No, no, no.

L. H. Stew. No, my Lord, you are not to repeat what your own Witnesses saith.

Boy. They had a Design to carry away the Woman, Mrs. Bracegirdle.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear one Word. That Boy can speak out, if he pleaseth: I warrant him, he would make Noise enough if he was in another Place. Speak out, that my Lords may all hear you.

Boy. I cannot speak any louder than I do; I say, they had a Design to carry away the Woman.

L. H. Stew. I may as well be at the other End of the Town, as in this Place, as for hearing what he saith. Some-body should repeat what he saith.

L. Mohun. If your Lordship please to allow it, that one of the Officers of the Court may come down to the Bar, and repeat from his Mouth to the Court what he saith.

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Walker, Then do you go and stand by him and tell us what he saith.

Mr. Walker the Clerk went and stood by the Boy at the Bar, and repeated his Evidence aloud.

Mr. Walker. My Lord, he saith, they had a Design to take away the Woman, and they had Night Cloaths in the Coach for the Woman to put on, and they enquired at the Woman's Lodging where she was, and there they were told, that she was at Mr. Page's at Supper, and her Brother came to the Horse-shoe Tavern and drank with them, and he was to go to tell them when she came out, and which Way she was to go Home; and there was a Man that was to give Notice, and they went down before her, and the Coach stood almost at the lower End of Drury-lane, where there were some Soldiers to put her in, and the Soldiers went and took hold of her.

L. H. Stew. Is this my Lord Mohun's Witness?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord; and he saith, when they went to take hold of her to put her in, Mr. Page struggled with them, and would not let them, and she cried out, and was very much troubled at it.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, Whether he was in Howard-street when Mr. Mountford was wounded, and what passed in Howard-street before Mr. Mountford was wounded?

Mr. Walker. He saith, he was in Howard-street, and saw Mr. Mountford come down in Norfolk-street towards them, and turn into Howard-street, but out of his way to his own House; He saith, he came down, and there met my Lord Mohun and his Master, Mr. Mountford did; and he came to my Lord Mohun, and bowed to him, and said, He had a Kindness for his Lordship. And my Lord Mohun replied, He had a Kindness for him. My Lord

Mohun said to him, He hoped he was not come to vindicate any thing of Mrs. Bracegirdle. Mr. Mountford said Not, and asked if his Wife had done any thing to him, and said, He was very sorry his Lordship should have any thing to do to vindicate Mr. Hill in such Rudeness. He saith, Captain Hill was at the lower End of the Street, and Captain Hill heard him say so, and came up and said to him, Mr. Mountford, if you have any thing to say to me, I can vindicate my self, and pray now draw; and he went into the Street, and Mr. Mountford drew, and met him, and made three or four Passes, and in the Passes, the Sword was broke. He cannot tell which Sword it was that was broke, he supposeth it hit against the Hilt, and snapped in two.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, where I was when they fought?

Mr. Walker. My Lord stood upon the flat Stones, he saith, by the House Side all the while, and they were in the Middle of the Street.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, Whether Mr. Mountford had his Sword by his Side, and where it was, and whether I meddled with him?

Mr. Walker. He saith my Lord Mohun did not meddle with him, but stood upon the flat Stones, nor did offer to draw his Sword, and when Mr. Mountford came down, he carried his Sword in his Hand.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, whether Mr. Hill did not stay in the Street to ask Mrs. Bracegirdle's Pardon?

Mr. Walker. He saith, he desired to see Mrs. Bracegirdle, and to beg her Pardon, and as soon as he had seen her, he would be gone.

L. H. Stew. How can he tell that? Where was he?

Mr. Walker. He was just by my Lord Mohun, and Mr. Hill in the Street, and Mr. Hill said he would but stay, and beg Mrs. Bracegirdle's Pardon for what he had done, and he would go Home.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, Whether I offered to fly when his Master went away?

L. H. Stew. What is it you ask, my Lord?

L. Mohun. Whether I offered to run away, or make my Escape?

Mr. Walker. He saith, my Lord did not offer to run away, but stood still and said he had done no Hurt, nor drawn his Sword.

L. Mohun. I desire to ask him, Whether I could not have run away as well as Mr. Hill, if I had had a mind?

Mr. Walker. He saith, He might have run away as well as his Master Mr. Hill, but he stood still a great while, till the Watch came and took him, and he gave himself up.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before the Boy goeth away, I desire to know of him whether he has not been already examined upon his Oath elsewhere?

Mr. Walker. Yes, my Lord, he was examined at Hicks's-Hall, and was kept in Prison two Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were you examined before the Coroner?

Mr. Walker. He saith, he was examined before the Coroner.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which was the first Place he was examined at?

Mr. Walker. He saith, he was examined at Hicks's-Hall first.

Mr. Att. Gen. When he was examined before the Coroner, did he give the same Evidence as he does now?

Mr. Walker. He gave the same Evidence before the Coroner that he doth now, as near as he can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. When you did make Oath before the Coroner, was it read to you what you swore?

Mr. Walker. He saith, his Evidence was not read to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you subscribe the Evidence you gave before the Coroner yourself?

Mr. Walker. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you write your Name yourself?

Mr. Walker. Yes, he saith.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not know what it was you subscribed your Name to?

Mr. Walker. He saith, It was not read to him afterwards, he knoweth what it was he gave in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you sure it was not read to you?

Mr. Walker. He saith, he is sure it was not read to him.

L. H. Stew. Was it not read to him before he subscribed it?

Mr. Att. Gen. That I did ask him, my Lord.

Mr. Walker. He doth not remember that it was read to him at all.

L. H. Stew. Can he read himself?

Mr. Att. Gen. He writes a very good Hand, my Lord.

Mr. Walker. He saith, They bid him put his Hand to it; and as soon as he had put his Hand to it, they put him out, and bid him call another Woman.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would have him consider of it, before he makes Answer; because there are several Persons present here, who were present when it was read to him before he subscribed it.

Mr. Walker. He cannot remember that it was read to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember you swore at that Time, That when Mr. Mountford and Mr. Hill were pushing at one another, my Lord Mohun said, He would stand by his Friend, and Mr. Hill was his Friend.

Mr. Walker. He saith, my Lord said, He would not go, he would stay by his Friend, for Mr. Hill was his Friend.

E. of Carlisle. My Lord Steward.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Carlisle.

E. of Carlisle. I desire that he may be asked, Whether he was the Boy that said to my Lord Mohun, Pray, my Lord, good my Lord, do not do it, alter your Resolution.

L. H. Stew. Call the Boy again. (Which was done.) Was you by when those Words were spoken? Pray, my Lord, will you repeat your own Question?

E. of Carlisle. Whether he was the Boy that said to my Lord Mohun, Pray, my Lord, good my Lord, do not do it; alter your Resolution, or defer it to another Day?

Boy. No, my Lord, I did not hear him.

L. H. Stew. Did not you say so yourself?

Boy. I said no such thing, nor heard no such thing said by any body.

L. H. Stew. Do you bring any more Witnesses, my Lord?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord, Mrs. Elizabeth Walker, Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid.

Elizabeth Walker. Here, my Lord, I am she.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before my Lord Mohun proceedeth to examine any other Witness, I have one Thing humbly to offer to your Lordships. [Then Proclamation was made for Silence.]

Mr. Att. Gen. Of what Consequence it will be to my Lord Mohun, I must submit to your Lordships when you have heard it; that is, whether it may not be proper now, since this Boy has given an Evidence so very different from what he gave upon his Oath before the Coroner, to have his Deposition that he made before the Coroner, read in his Presence.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I think I ought to conclude and give all my own Evidence before Mr. Attorney maketh his Remarks.

L. H. Stew. Then reserve that till the last, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord is certainly in the right of it; there ought to be no Observations made upon his Evidence, and we shall be sure to keep exactly to the usual Method in this Matter; but I take it to be the Course of Evidence, where there is an Objection to what the Witness delivers now, which does arise from what the same Witness has sworn before, it is proper to make the Objection, as soon as he has delivered such Evidence, whilst the Matter is fresh in your Lordships Memories.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, let the Boy stay, he shall be called upon afterwards; but let my Lord go on now with the rest of his Witnesses.

L. Mohun. Here is Elizabeth Walker, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What is that Woman's Name?

L. Mohun. Elizabeth Walker, did you live with Mrs. Bracegirdle?

Elizabeth Walker. Yes, I did, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. This Person has conceal'd herself; we have been endeavouring to find her out all this while, but could not.

L. H. Stew. What do you ask her, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, Whether she lived with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and what she saw and observed that Night Mr. Mountford was killed.

El. Walker. If it please you, I lived then with her.

L. H. Stew. I cannot hear what she said; Mr. Walker, I think you must go thither again; speak out, Woman.

El. Walker. I was her Servant at that time, when Mr. Mountford was killed. And, may it please you, my Lord, that Night, old Mrs. Bracegirdle and her Daughter, were invited to Supper, at one Mrs. Page's in Drury-lane, and coming Home about Ten or Eleven a Clock out of Drury-lane, my Mistress desired me to go to Mr. Mountford, to see if Mr. Mountford was come home. I went, and they said, he was not come home: She desired me then to go again, and tell Mrs. Mountford, that if he was not come home, she should send to see where he was, and desire he would not come home without a good Guard, for my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill were walking about the Street, and she did not know their Design, by reason Mr. Hill had his Sword drawn in his Hand, out of the Scabbard. I asked the Reason why he had his Sword drawn, and the Answer was made; He had lost the Scabbard in a Skirmish in Drury-lane; but that I know nothing of. Mrs. Mountford said, She would send her Maid to see where her Husband was, and I told her, if my Mistress would give me leave, I would go along with her to bear her Company. And when I returned to my Mistress, she did give me leave, and I went along with her to several Places; but we could not find Mr. Mountford; so coming home, I went to my Mistress, and I saw them two stand at the Door, and they staid there above an Hour, and in the mean time our Landlady, Mrs. Browne heard the Watch come into the Street, and she said, she would go to the Door, and bid the Watch seize them; and she did go out, and I was kept within Doors, and heard her talk to the Watch, but what she said I cannot tell; but presently the Watch went away and left them. And I stood at the Door, and heard Mrs. Browne say, There cometh Mr. Mountford, and she would go speak with him; and with that she went as fast as she could to meet him, and came to him a good way before he came down to them, and took him by the Arm thus, to stay him, and she said Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun were walking in the Street, and Captain Hill had his Sword in his Hand drawn, and she did not know what their Design was.

L. H. Stew. Indeed she must speak louder, or I cannot tell what she saith.

El. Walker. My Lord, I say, Mrs. Browne, when I was at the Door, said, Yonder cometh Mr. Mountford, and she said, she would go and meet him, and away she went as fast as she could towards him; and when she came up to him, she took him by the Arm thus, and desired him that he would not come down that Street, but go to his own House, for there were Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun walking in the Street, and she did not know what their Design was, but Captain Hill had his Sword drawn in his Hand. If it please you, my Lord, Mr. Mountford did not answer her a Word; but pressed forward to meet my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill. If it please you, my Lord, they met one another, and my Lord Mohun and Mr. Mountford complimented one another very lovingly, and said, They were glad to see one another; and Mr. Mountford said to my Lord, He had a great Respect for his Lordship, and my Lord replied to him again, By my Honour, I have the like for you, Mr. Mountford; and with that, they embraced one another; I am sure this is Truth, for I followed Mrs. Browne out, and stood by when it was done. Mr. Mountford told my Lord, it was a Dishonour to him to keep Company with Captain Hill. I will not take my Oath that Captain Hill did hear him say so, but he might have heard him, and it may be he did too; and that might occasion the Quarrel; but I will not take my Oath of that: It came just in my Head after this was said, that our Door was open, and I turned my Back to hear and look who was at our Door, and I heard Mrs. Browne say, that Captain Hill and Mr. Mountford were going to Fight: I saw them Fighting, making Passes at one another, I saw them engaged, I never saw Men naked fighting so in my Life.

At which there was a great Laughter.

El. Walker. My Lord, I do not understand these Matters, I tell you as well as I can, they were fighting with naked Swords, Mr. Mountford's Sword was upon Mr. Hill hereabouts, and Mr. Hill's Sword was upon Mr. Mountford hereabouts; and after they had made two or three Pulhes at one another, Mr. Mountford said, he was kill'd, and threw down his Sword thus, and I took it up, and there was a good Piece of the Sword broken off. I turned me about thus, towards our own Hatch at our Door, and there stood two or three People, I cannot say who they were, but I gave them the Sword, and I turned my Face towards Surrey-Street, and saw Captain Hill making his Escape, running up Surrey-street; and, if it please you, my Lord, Mr. Mountford was the Friend I had most Respect for; and I saw him, as fast as he could, going towards his own House, and my Lord Mobun stood in the same Place that he was in, when he and Mr. Mountford were embracing one another, and I did not see my Lord Mobun stir from that Place; but when they fought, they were engaged in the middle of the pitched Stones, where there was a Place made for the Water to run along the Street like a Channel; and to my Knowledge, I did never see my Lord Mobun off of the Paved Stones, on the Side. I cannot say he was never off, when my Eye was turned another way; but to my Knowledge, I never saw him off of those Stones. If it please you, my Lord, the next thing that I saw, was this, After Captain Hill run up Surrey-street, and Mr. Mountford did go home, I saw my Lord Mobun walking up to the End of the Street, where the Watch were coming, and when the Watch came, I see him deliver himself up to the Watch; but I think one of the Watch said, he must have his Sword, and he did deliver up himself and his Sword to the Watch. And he bid me take Notice, Bear Witness, said he, I have no Hand in the Death of Mr. Mountford. Said I, No, my Lord, I think you have not. The next thing I remember, was Mrs. Page came and said Mr. Mountford was killed, upon which, said my Lord Mobun to her, Bear Witness, I had no Hand in his Death. Said she, You were in his Company, therefore seize him, and carry him to the Round-house; and the Watch did secure him; and my Lord answered, As he was a Gentleman, he desired to be used like a Gentleman; and they did carry him away to the Round-house. This is the Thing that I did say, as near as I can remember, to the Justices; but I have been very much abused and distracted amongst them, and therefore to a Word I cannot say; but as near as I can remember, being abused at the rate I have been, this I did then say, and it is the Truth.

L. Mobun. I desire she may be asked, whether she was not examined before the Justices at Hicks's-Hall, and whether she was not then Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid.

L. H. Stew. Truly, my Lord, I have heard very little of what she has said, but I hope my Lords that have been nearer have observed it.

El. Walker. If it please you, if you ask what was done at Hicks's-Hall, I will tell you just as it was, what happened there, and so proceed on to tell you how I have been abused.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, what would you have her asked more?

L. Mobun. I desire to ask her, Whether she was not Mrs. Bracegirdle's Servant when she was examined at Hicks's-Hall, and whether she swore the same there, as she saith here, and what was done to her since, or what they would have done, and whether they did not try to make her speak what they would, and to put her out?

El. Walker. If it please you, my Lord, that next Morning, there came several of the Players to me, to ask me what I knew of the Death of Mr. Mountford, and I told them; but they did not like what I said, and they seemed discontented at me. And when they were to go to Hicks's-Hall, they said, they had no need of my Evidence, they could do without me. So Mrs. Browne and her Maid they went away, and left me at Home; what they did, or where they staid, I do not know; but about two or three Hours after, a Messenger came and said, my Mistress and I must go to Hicks's-Hall to be examined before the Justices; and we went, and when we came there, all were examined, and I was examined in the last Place; where, my Lord, I gave in the same Evidence that I do now, as near as I can speak. I do verily believe it to be the same, but I have had so much Trouble with their abusing me, that I cannot speak to every Word or particular Thing. For my Mistress stood before me, and said, They brought Evidences that confounded themselves; and another said, Hang her a Jade, pull her by the Coat. I turned me to the Justices, and said, I hoped I might speak now I was there; but it may be for fear of my Mistress, I did not then speak all that I have done now, because I have called more since to my Remembrance. And there is one particular Thing that I call to mind now; I remember that in our Parlour, as soon as they came home out of Drury-lane, there was a Discourse between my old Mistress, and my Young, that Captain Hill waited at the Door to see my Mistress, and that if he might but have Leave to see her, and to beg her Pardon, they would be gone thence to their own Lodging; and I said to my Mistress, If she would give me leave, I would go out to them, and demand Captain Hill's Sword, and then he might come in.

L. Mobun. I desire she may be asked, Whether she was not turned away and threatened?

El. Walker. I am going on to tell my Lord what happened in our House that Night. I told my Mistress, If she would give me leave, I would undertake to get Captain Hill's Sword from him, and then she might let him come in and see her, and beg her Pardon, and I thought it would prevent a great deal of Danger that might follow else. And my Mistress said, I was a prating Slut; and my young Mistress said, If he begged her Pardon upon his Knees never so, she would never forgive him, nor see him more. My Lord, there was another Discourse in the Street, that Captain Hill had made a Vow that he would kill himself that Night, and that my Lord Mobun, having a Respect for him, watched to prevent him from doing himself a Mischief. That was discoursed in the Street, but I cannot say it was so of my own Knowledge.

Then another Proclamation for Silence was made.

L. Mobun. I desire she may be asked, whether she was not turned away, and whether she was never threatened.

Eliz. Walker. If it please you, my Lord, that Night that I gave in my Evidence at Hicks's-Hall, by their talking, I knew before I went from Home what a Life I should have with my Mistress, for I knew they did not like my Evidence, and I was afraid of coming Home, and went and staid with my Sister; but notwithstanding I went Home about Nine a Clock, and they were very inveterate against me, and I told one of them, I had witnessed the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, and that I would stand by. If it please you, my Lord, the next Morning there was this Ann Jones that lay with me that Night, and she told me that in the Morning they threatened, and intended to fetch me to Mrs. Mountford to rattle me for what Account I had given in, and she giving me this Item, I got up, and went to dressing my Dinner, and Mrs. Mountford sent a Man, that I know by Sight, I think it was one Roberts, I believe that was his Name; whereupon he came and asked me where was Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid; I said, I was she, and then he said Mrs. Mountford desired me to come to her. I said, I had given in my Evidence where I ought to do it, and I had nothing to do with her; but it was upon this account, not that I had any Antipathy against Mrs. Mountford, but only as Ann Jones had given me that Item of a Design to send me to her, to rattle me for the Evidence I had given in, and I did not know what might come of it, or what their Design might be.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would not interrupt any Witness, but because she speaks of what was said by Jones, and Mrs. Bracegirdle, I desire they may be by to hear what she saith.

L. Mobun. My Lord, I desire my Witnesses may not be hared.

L. H. Stew. This is not haring of Evidence, my Lord.

L. Mobun. My Lord, I desire I may go on with my Evidence without Interruption.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, this is no Interruption.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let Mrs. Mountford be called in to hear what she saith of her; I desire she may be by.

L. Mobun. My Lord, I have no more to say to her.

Mr. Att. Gen. But then, my Lord, before she goeth away, I have two or three Questions to ask her.

L. H. Stew. What do you ask her, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. She saith she was examined at Hicks's-Hall, I desire to know if ever she was examined before the Coroner.

Eliz. Walker. If it please you, my Lord, I was not, and I will give you the Reason.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, pray let us hear it.

Eliz. Walker. Why you have not heard how badly they used me after this

Mr. Att. Gen. But pray, Mistress, answer my Question.

Eliz. Walker. But, my Lord, if it please you, I went to my Sister, and staid with her till Eight or Nine, and my Aunt told me there had been a Porter to enquire for me, to go to the Jury; I was sorry I was not at Home, but I took a Neighbour with me to go to Mrs. Mountford's, to see if the Jury were not gone; and I knowing how they had threatened me, I desired him to leave me at a Victualling-House by Temple-Bar, and go and tell them, if the Jury were not gone, I was ready to wait upon them; he went, and I remained at the Victualling-House, and he came again, and told me Mrs. Mountford said they had done without me; but he was a little surprized.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, she maketh a long Answer to a short Question. I would ask her another Question presently; but by the way, as to this Examination at Hicks's-Hall, I would observe that it is a very unusual, and, I think, under Favour, a very unwarrantable Thing for Justices of the Peace, to take upon them, under a Pretence of considering, in order to bail a Person charged with Murder, to enter into a particular Examination of every one of the King's Witnesses, as if they were either a Grand Inquest, charged upon Oath for finding a Bill of Indictment, or Coroners to take an Inquisition of the Murder, both the Grand Jury and the Coroner are upon their Oaths to keep the King's Evidence secret; but this is to make it publick by an indirect way by a Justice of Peace's examining, in order to the Bailing of an Offender. But I would observe this Woman goeth away from her Mistress, and continueth away, and concealth herself; she was not to be found to be examined before the Coroner, the proper Officer, nor are we able to tell where she has been; I desire some account may be given, in whose Hands she has been all this time.

L. Mobun. My Lord, I desire your Lordship's Opinion, whether this may be permitted, that he should talk thus.

L. H. Stew. What do you say, my Lord?

L. Mobun. My Lord, I desire to know whether he may interrupt me in my Evidence thus: All this Matter is foreign to the Business before your Lordships.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you please, I would ask her this one Question.

Lord — Under Mr. Attorney's Pardon, I think the Prisoner, or his Witnesses, ought not to be interrupted; but if he have any Remarks upon the Evidence, when they have gone through he may call them again, and ask them any Questions, or make any Remarks upon them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would ask her but one Question.

L. H. Stew. What is it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. If she heard Mrs. Browne say to Mr. Mountford that she would not have him come forward, because my Lord Mobun and Mr. Hill were there, and she did not know what their Design was?

Eliz. Walker. If it please you, my Lord, I did hear them, and I was just by them; and there was none but she and I.

Mr. Att. Gen. She upon her Oath saith, she did not tell him any thing more, than that she would speak with him; but he did not hear her, or hearken to her: But, my Lord, I have no more Questions to ask her.

L. H. Stew.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ask this Witness, my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Who is your Lordship's next? Pray call your Witnesses.

L. Mohun. I desire Ann Jones may be examined. (She came to the Bar.)

L. H. Stew. What doth your Lordship examine her to?

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked what she knoweth of what passed that Night Mr. Mountford was hurt, and tell the whole Story.

Jones. First, I saw Mrs. Bracegirdle coming home with her Mother and Mr. Page, about ten a Clock at Night, and there were Captain Hill and my Lord Mohun with them when they came home, but they did not come in with them, but walked in the Street about an Hour and an Half; and after they came in, Mrs. Browne sent to Mrs. Mountford, for she said Captain Hill had some Design, and my Lord Mohun, upon Mr. Mountford, but Mr. Mountford not being at home, they sent to all the Taverns thereabouts, but could not find him; they came home again, and told Mrs. Mountford and Mrs. Bracegirdle, they could not find him, and there my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill walked to and fro about the Street for an Hour and Half in all; about an Hour after they had been to look for Mr. Mountford, or about three Quarters of an Hour, Mr. Mountford came down, and I saw my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill at this Door.

L. Mohun. At whose Door, I desire she may be asked.

Jones. At this Mrs. Browne's Door, and Mr. Mountford coming down, my Lord Mohun met him, and embraced him, and said, He had a great Honour and Friendship for him, and Mr. Mountford said, he had a great Honour and Respect for his Lordship. Saith my Lord Mohun, Mr. Mountford, I suppose you are sent for. No not I, upon my Honour, said he. Upon that he up and told him how they had like to have got Mrs. Bracegirdle into a Coach, and carried her away, but were prevented. Saith Mr. Mountford, as to Mrs. Bracegirdle, I have nothing to do, she is no Concern of mine, if my Wife have offended your Lordship, she shall beg your Pardon. Said Mr. Mountford again, I hope your Lordship will not vindicate Mr. Hill in any such Action as this. With that Captain Hill came up and hit Mr. Mountford a Box on the Ear, and bid him draw. And, said Mr. Mountford, Damn ye, What is that for? And thereupon he drew; and I tell you what I saw, they both came off from the paved Stones into the Middle of the Highway, and made two or three Passes at one another; at the second Pass Mr. Mountford's Sword broke, and he flung down his Sword, and run away, and said he was a dead Man; Mr. Mountford went one way, and Mr. Hill another.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, If I did meddle with Mr. Mountford at all, or helped Mr. Hill whilst they fought, and where I stood all the while?

L. H. Stew. What say you? answer all those Questions my Lord asked you.

Jones. If it please your Lordship, he stood upon the Causey, the paved Stones, in the same Place where he was all the time.

L. H. Stew. Did my Lord meddle at all?

Jones. No, I did not see my Lord Mohun meddle.

L. H. Stew. Was my Lord's Sword drawn?

Jones. I did not see it drawn.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, Whether I run away, or whether I did not surrender myself to the Watch.

Jones. If it please your Lordship, I did not see my Lord run away; But I did see him surrender himself.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, if she was not examined at Hicks's-hall? — Jones. Yes, my Lord, I was.

L. Mohun. And whether she did not there declare the same upon Oath, that she doth now? — Jones. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. H. Stew. Have you any thing to say to this Witness, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would only ask her this Question: She saith my Lord Mohun was upon the Pavement, or Causey, as she calleth it, all the while; I desire to know whether the Scuffle did not begin upon the Pavement?

Jones. Yes, it did upon the Causey.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire to know, whether she saw any Blood upon that Causey the next day? — Jones. No, I saw none.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, Whether they did not fight in the Middle of the Street?

Jones. Yes, and please your Lordship, I did see them make Passes at one another in the Street.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, Whether the Sword was not broken there in the Middle of the Street, and whether Mr. Mountford did not then cry out, I am killed?

Jones. His Sword was broken in the Middle of the Street; but I did not hear Mr. Mountford say he was killed, but he flung down his Sword, and run away, and said, I am a dead Man.

L. H. Stew. Have you done with this Witness, my Lord?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to say to her, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Then who is your next Witness, my Lord Mohun?

L. Mohun. Edward Warrington, my Lord. (Who came to the Bar.)

L. H. Stew. What say you to him, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I desire to ask him where he liveth? Whether he be not a Neighbour to Mrs. Bracegirdle? and what he saw that Night Mr. Mountford was killed? I desire he would give his whole Evidence.

Warrington. I live, if it please your Honour, over-against Mrs. Bracegirdle's House, at the White-swan, on the other Side of the Way.

L. Mohun. I desire he would tell all that he saw that Night.

Warrington. All that I can say, is, About nine or ten a Clock, as near as I can guess, I heard a Disturbance at Mrs. Browne's Door, where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodgeth, and looking out, I saw there were two Gentlemen talking to old Mrs. Bracegirdle, and Mrs. Bracegirdle and some People went into the House, and when they were gone into the House, I saw the two Gentlemen walk about the Street, one's Sword I saw was drawn.

L. H. Stew. Whose Sword was that was drawn?

Warrington. Captain Hill's, as they say; for my part, I did not know either of them; they walked there for the Space of an Hour and a Half,

I saw them oppose no body. But as they came along, I heard them call a Gentleman that came towards them, Whether he would not drink a Glass of Wine or not?

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, what he saw afterwards of fighting?

Warrington. For fighting, I saw Mr. Mountford come down Norfolk-street, and I saw him turn at the Corner with his Sword in his Hand in the Scabbard, to the best of my Knowledge, and seeing some People there, as I suppose, went towards them, and came up to them; and I saw my Lord Mohun, to the best of my Knowledge, lay his Hand upon his Shoulder, and embraced him, and complimented him; but I cannot be certain what the Words were that passed between them.

L. H. Stew. Did you see them fight?

Warrington. If it please your Honour, I did see their Swords both drawn, Mr. Mountford and he that they said was Captain Hill; there were some Women about them; so that I could not so well discern when they drew their Swords, or who begun the Quarrel. Hill, they said, had no Scabbard to put his Sword in; my Lord Mohun stood by, and laid his Hand upon Mr. Mountford's Shoulder.

L. H. Stew. Was that before the Fighting, or at the time of the Fighting?

Warrington. It was before their Fighting, at their first Meeting.

L. Mohun. I desire your Lordship would please to ask him, in what Part of the Street they fought, and whether I was near them then?

Warrington. When first I saw their Swords drawn, it was upon the flat Stones of the Pavement; and I saw Mr. Hill come off of the Stones and Mr. Mountford with him. Mr. Hill was, I think, the first, and they came both up together with their Swords drawn in their Hands, they were not a Sword's Length off from one another; and they passed at one another, and I run into our House to fetch a Paring-Shovel, with an Intention to part them; but before I could get out of Doors with the Paring-Shovel in my Hands, the one was gone one way, and the other the other way; and I saw no body in the Street to ask any Questions of, but my Lord Mohun at the Corner, three or four Doors above this Place. And I came out, and asked which way they were gone? My Lord Mohun turned about, and I was a little afraid of him at first; but, said he, Here am I, I did not offer to oppose or draw my Sword; you all know it; and immediately, if it please your Honour, the Watch came in, that is all I know.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, Whether I did not go towards the Watch, and surrender myself.

Warrington. I cannot say that, but the Watch came in a Minute. My Lord turned about, and said, Here am I, I did not oppose or draw my Sword, you all know.

L. Mohun. Pray my Lord, let him be asked, Whether I did offer to fly? And whether I had not as much time to fly, as Mr. Hill?

Warrington. I cannot say that, my Lord. I suppose he might have gone away as well as Mr. Hill, for they were both together.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire he may be asked another Question, Whether, when Mr. Mountford came into Howard-street, he did not come out of his way to his own House, to come towards us?

Warrington. My Lord, if it please your Honour, it was out of his way; but whether he did it on purpose, or because he saw People there, I cannot tell.

L. Mohun. I desire he may tell you where Mr. Mountford's House is?

Warrington. Mr. Mountford's House is in Norfolk-street, two Doors in the Corner out of the Cross Street; and this was done in Howard-street.

L. H. Stew. I would ask you a short Question, Whether that was the way to his House that he went?

Warrington. No, it was not the way, my Lord; for he turned on the Right-Hand, and he should have kept straight along.

L. Mohun. I desire he may be asked, Whether he was not sworn at at Hicks's-hall, and whether he gave not the same Evidence there, that he doth now?

Warrington. I was sworn there, and did, to the best of my Knowledge, give the same Evidence I do now.

L. H. Stew. If I understand you aright, you say both the Swords were drawn of Mountford and Hill? — Warrington. Yes, my Lord, I did.

L. H. Stew. Can you say whether Mountford's Sword was drawn before he was hurt, or not?

Warrington. If it please you, my Lord, I cannot tell that, I cannot be positive whether it was or no, for there were Women about them, I say, at first, and I could not discern the Beginning; and I did not stand to see them push, for as soon as I saw their Swords drawn, and they came off the Pavement to fight, I run into the House to fetch a Paring-Shovel.

L. Mohun. Now, my Lord, I will call another Witness.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, have you any Questions to ask this Witness? — Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. Mohun. Then, my Lord, I will call another Witness to shew you the Reason why Mr. Hill and I stayed in the Street, and what was the Business we stay'd for. I desire Ann Knevit may be examined. (She came to the Bar.)

L. H. Stew. What do you ask her, my Lord?

L. Mohun. I would ask her where she liveth, and what she knoweth of this Business?

Knevit. My Lord, I live in Howard-street, exactly against Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging, and my Lord Mohun, as he gave his own Name to be to the Watchmen, and another Man that they called Captain Hill's, for so he gave his Name to be; they came down with Mrs. Bracegirdle, both the Mrs. Bracegirdles, into the Street, and came to their Door, and old Mrs. Bracegirdle put her Daughter in at the Door, and then she stood still and talked with the Gentlemen, and asked them their Business. They said, They wanted to beg the young Woman's Pardon for what they had done, and then they would be gone. She said she thought they came to rob her. They said, No, they came upon a very honourable Design. She said, Then they might have come at a more seasonable time, if she believed they came to rob her.

L. Mohun. What time of Night was it?

Knevit. It wanted a Quarter of Ten, I believe, or it was about Ten, a Quarter over or under; I cannot exactly tell. They said, If she would give them leave but to speak to her, and beg Pardon for what they had done, they would go home immediately. She said, She would not, they should not see her any more that Night. Then one of the Gentlemen, I know not which of them it was, said, They would walk a little while in the Street. She did see them walk very quietly, but she made a great Noise herself; and at last she went in, and shut the Door, and the Gentlemen walked quietly up and down; and by and bye they went to the Door again, and desired to be admitted to speak with young Mrs. Bracegirdle, that they might beg her Pardon for some Affront that they had put upon her, I suppose; and she still refused them, and would not let them speak with her; and several times they called and knocked at the Door, and still desired but to speak with her, and beg her Pardon, and they would be gone home; but she every time refused it.

L. H. Stew. Woman, I do not hear you; you must speak louder.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire your Lordships will let one of the Clerks come and take the Evidence, and report it to you.

L. H. Stew. If it be material, another must report it; for I have not heard one Quarter of it.

L. Mohun. It is very material, my Lord, to shew the Reason why we stayed there.

Knevit. My Lord, I will repeat it over again, if you please.

L. H. Stew. Then pray speak so loud that I may hear.

Knevit. My Lord Mohun is a perfect Stranger to me, I only tell you what I saw and heard. At the first Beginning of all, two Gentlemen and two Women came to a Door over against our Door, and at that House Mrs. Bracegirdle and her Daughter lodged; the Gentlemen gave their Names to the Watch afterwards to be my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill. So when they came there, the old Woman put her Daughter in at the Door; and when she had pulled off her Hood and Scarf, she came to the Door, and asked them their Business; and they told her, They wanted to beg her Daughter's Pardon for what they had done; but she abused the Gentlemen mightily, and gave them very ill Words, and said, She believed they came to rob her Daughter; they said, No, they came upon a very honourable Design; then she said, They should have come honourably at a seasonable Time; they said, It was not an unreasonable Time, for she was out of Doors herself at that Time. So she stood there a little, and then at last she went in-a-Doors, and shut the Door, and some of them opened the Door again; and they were walking upon the Causey, and came up to the Door, and still desired the same Thing, to speak with the young Gentlewoman to beg her Pardon for what they had done, and they would go home for that Night. One of them, I think it was Mr. Hill, said, He had given her an Affront, and he desired to beg her Pardon; but still they said, He should not be admitted to speak with her. Then one of them, I think it was Mr. Hill, desired she would be pleased to come but to the Hatch, that he might see her, and beg her Pardon, and he would not desire to come in; but that would not be permitted. So one of them made Answer, That they would not stir till they did see her, and they would walk there all Night.

L. H. Stew. Cryer, call for Silence; and pray, my Lord Great Chamberlain, take some Order with those People behind there, for they cannot hear themselves what the Witnesses say, and therefore they are resolved we shall not hear them neither. (Proclamation was made for Silence.)

L. H. Stew. Now go on, Woman.

Knevit. They said they would stay in the Street all Night, unless they did speak with her: But if she would give them leave to speak with her, they would depart to their own Lodgings immediately; but they were denied to be admitted to speak with her. Whereupon one of them called unto his Boy, to bring him his Cloak; but then he said, He would not have his Cloak, he would walk without it, because they had not both of them Cloaks: By and bye they sent for a Bottle of Wine, and there they drank her Health, and took several Turns; and after they had drunk off the Bottle, or some Part of it, they went to the Door again, and knocked at the Door; and somebody answered from within, for they were not at the Door, What they would have? They said the same thing as before, that they desired only to see her, and beg her Pardon, and they would go home; for it was a very cold Night, and it was not convenient to walk there; but they still refused to let them in. By and bye the Watch came down, and asked, Who was there, and what was their Business? And one of the Gentlemen made Answer, and said, He was a Peer, and his Name was Mohun; the other said, His Name was Hill. So the Watch went by, and said no more; but somebody made Answer, and said, There was a Gentleman had a Sweet-Heart in that Street, and he wanted to speak with her. Just at that Time, I went up Stairs to warm a Bed in our House, and whilst I was warming the Bed, I heard a little Bustle in the Street; and running to the Window, there I saw a Sword in a Man's Body; I could not tell who the Man was, nor who put the Sword there; but the Man that drew out the Sword run away as hard as he could, and the Man in whose Body the Sword was, went as fast as he could the other Way. And my Lord that gave his Name to the Watch to be Mohun, stood on the farther Side of the Street, and said, I have done no Hurt to any body, and I will not stir. And there was a Woman that called out to the Watch to seize him; but who the Woman was, I cannot tell; but he stood still between Mrs. Bracegirdle's Door and the next Neighbour's, one that is called Nuttall, I think, and never stirred till the Watch came to him, and the rest went to Mr. Mountford; he said there was no Occasion to lay Hands upon him, for he would not stir from them.

L. Mohun. I desire to ask her, If Mr. Mountford did not say, I am killed, after the Sword was broke?

Knevit. Yes, he did say he was a dead Man.

L. H. Stew. What, after his Sword was broke?

Knevit. After the Sword was drawn out of his Body, his Sword was in his own Hand; I squalled out when I saw the Sword in his Body, and had like to have gone out of the Window; and somebody said to me, when I told them why I cry'd out, Will you break your Neck for that Reason? It may be, it is one of the Watchmen. No, said I, it is not a Watchman.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, Where Mr. Mountford and Mr. Hill fought, whether it was not in the middle of the Street?

Knevit. My Lord, it was exactly in the Middle, as near as I can guess, rather on our Side of the Way, with his Arms spread, and his Sword in the Scabbard.

VOL. IV.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to ask this Witness?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Have you any thing to say to her, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask her, where she liveth.

Knevit. I live in Howard-street.

Mr. Att. Gen. With whom there?—Knevit. At one Mrs. Browne's.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Employment is your Mistress?

Knevit. My Mistress keepeth a Coffee-house.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you live near Mrs. Browne's?

Knevit. I know not any of that Name there; but I live over-against Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do not you know the People of that House?

Knevit. No, upon my Word, I do not know their Names that keep the House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let me ask you another Question: You speak of many Messages sent backward and forward, and that they said Mrs. Bracegirdle should not be spoken with while my Lord staid there; I desire to know, if you can tell who any of the Persons were that brought those Messages?

Knevit. It was the Man that called himself my Lord Mohun, and the other that called himself Hill, they spoke themselves.

Mr. Att. Gen. But who was it that came to them so often, to tell them they should not speak with her?

Knevit. It was old Mrs. Bracegirdle.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are sure of that?—Knevit. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. I would ask you one Question more: When the Watch came up to them, did my Lord tell the Watch his Name was Mohun, or only that he was a Peer of England?

Knevit. He said first, He was a Peer of the Land, and then he said, his Name was Mohun; and the other said, his Name was Capt. Hill.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are sure both of them told their Names to the Watch?

Knevit. Yes, I am sure I heard them say so.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more Witnesses to call, my Lord?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord; I could call some as to Sandys's Reputation, but I do not think it at all material.

L. H. Stew. Have you any thing, Mr. Attorney, to say to the Boy that was set by? Will you have him called again?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I did propose that the Boy should hear the Information read which he gave in to the Coroner.

L. H. Stew. Will you have him called again?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, if your Lordships please.

L. H. Stew. Well, then call him again.

(The Boy came to the Bar, and his Deposition before the Coroner was shewed to him.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Look upon that Paper, is that your Name or your Writing?—Boy. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it true you then swore before the Coroner?

Boy. Yes, it was true.

L. H. Stew. Read it. (It was taken by the Clerk, and read at the Table.)

Clerk of the Crown reads. Middlesex. The Information of Thomas Leake, Servant to Richard Hill, Gent. taken upon Oath the Twelfth Day of December, 1692, before Me.

HE saith, That on Friday Morning last, about Nine of the Clock, 'twas agreed betwixt my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill, to seize Mrs. Bracegirdle with some Soldiers, and carry her away in a Coach about nine Miles off; and about Ten of the Clock at Night my Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, with about six Soldiers, did seize her, and endeavour to put her into a Coach; but she refused to go, and they led her down into Howard-street to her Lodging, and then said, they would walk an Hour under Mrs. Bracegirdle's Window, and another under Mrs. Barry's; and about an Hour and an half after, Mr. Mountford came down the Street, and Mr. Mountford and my Lord Mohun saluted each other; and my Lord Mohun said, he hoped Mr. Mountford was not come to vindicate Mrs. Bracegirdle; and Mr. Mountford hoped my Lord did not come to vindicate the Rudeness done to Mrs. Bracegirdle by Mr. Hill; and then Mr. Hill said, He was able to vindicate himself, and bid Mr. Mountford to draw; and they both pushed at each other with their Swords; and my Lord said, He would stand by his Friend, and Mr. Hill was his Friend; and during the Time that Mr. Hill and Mr. Mountford fought, my Lord Mohun did not endeavour to part them.

Thomas Leake.

Jo. Cooper, Coroner.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, as to this last Witness, I would desire some of the Watch may be asked, because she saith my Lord told them his Name was Mohun, and Hill told them his Name was Hill, whether it was so or not.

L. H. Stew. Who would you call?

Mr. Att. Gen. Merry, my Lord, if you please.—L. H. Stew. Call him.

Lord Mohun. I desire the Constable may be called. (Merry did not presently come in.)

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I think it is not so material, as to desire your Lordships should stay for him. But as to that one Witness that entertained your Lordships so long, Mrs. Bracegirdle's Servant, I desire, that she being here, may give your Lordships an Account what became of this Servant of her's.

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Lord, she went away from me on the Sunday.

L. H. Stew. Who did?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Maid that was then; and I sent to her Aunt's the Week after to seek for her, but she could not be found; where she was, I cannot tell; nor could not hear of her from that Time to this.

L. Mohun. I desire she may be asked, Whether she did not discharge her, or pay her her Wages?—Mrs. Bracegirdle. I did not.

L. Mohun. Did not you or your Mother?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. My Mother, my Lord, did; she was not my Servant, my Mother hired her, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. What doth she say? Were her Wages paid, and she discharged?

Mrs. Bracegirdle. They were paid because she would not stay with me, my Lord; I desired her to stay, and she would not; and then she demanded her Wages, and my Mother paid her.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire you would ask the Maid the Reason why she would not stay.

El. Walker. If it please you, my Lord, the Reason was this. When I came from Hick's-Hall Mrs. Mountford the next Day sent for me, and I lying with this Ann Jones that was here, she told me that I should be sent for, and they would rattle me off for my Evidence that I had given at Hick's-Hall for the King; my Lord, I having such an Item from Ann Jones, and they being all Players, I was afraid, because Players have a worse Reputation than other People.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we shall not trouble your Lordships with any more Witnesses.

L. Mohun. My Lord, I desire she may be asked if there were not Bailiffs sent to take her, and she threatened to be arrested.

L. H. Steward. What say you to that?

El. Walker. If it please you, my Lord, I cannot swear it, but I will tell you as near as I can, how it was; I had not Time to look over my Cloaths, being in Haste when I went, and for fear I should have mistaken any Thing, the next Day I went to look over my Cloaths, whereupon I found I had mistook, and taken one of my Mistress's Aprons, and left one of my own for it, and knowing my great Suspicion and Inveteracy against me, I went the next Day to my Uncle's, a Porter's, and desired him to carry it to them; but when I had delivered it to him, he would not let me stay to speak much, for he said there had been three Bailiffs to take me, and I having no Friends, was much affrighted, and run crying up and down, and did not know where to fly, for fear they might lay me in a Prison; and having no Friends, therefore I was forced to fly, and so I went to a Justice of Peace, and there I gave him an Account of the Business. But he said he must have nothing to do with it, I must go again to proffer my Service to my Mistress; but I was not willing to proffer my Service again to her, so I kept away ever since.

L. H. Steward. If you have done with the Evidence on both Sides; what have you more to say, my Lord?

L. Mohun. My Lords, I hope it will be no Disadvantage to me, my not summing up my Evidence like a Lawyer, being a young Man; I think I have made it plainly appear that there never was any former Quarrel or Malice between Mr. Mountford and me; I have also made appear the Reason why we staid so long in the Street, which was for Mr. Hill to speak with Mrs. Braccigirle, and ask her Pardon, and I staid with him as my Friend, so it plainly appeareth I had no Hand in the Killing of Mr. Mountford, and upon the Confidence of my own Innocency, I surrendered myself, and I commit myself to this Honourable House, where I know I shall have all the Justice in the World.

L. H. Steward. Has your Lordship no more to say?

L. Mohun. No, my Lord, but I am innocent of the Fact, and leave myself wholly to your Lordships.

Mr. Sol. Gen. * May it please your Lordships, according to my Duty, I am to repeat the Evidence to your Lordships on the Behalf of the King.

My Lord, the Evidence hath been very long, both that on the Part of the King, and that on the Part of the Prisoner, and I know your Lordships have given Attention to it with very great Diligence. I cannot pretend that my Memory will serve me so well, as to repeat the Circumstances of this so long Evidence; but that which has been material, I shall crave leave shortly to mention to your Lordships.

My Lords, I know a great many Things may slip my Notice and Repetition, but nothing can slip your Lordships Observation: So that tho' I should not lay a due Weight upon the Evidence for the King, yet your Lordships will let nothing pass without giving it its just Consideration, and will give Judgment according to the exactest Justice.

My Lords, the Evidence for the King doth consist first of Facts precedent to the Killing of Mr. Mountford, and next what happened at that Time.

As to what preceded this Fact thus committed, there were two or three Witnesses called, and the first of them is Mr. Hudson, the next is Mr. Powell, and they give you an Account that Mr. Hill had made his Applications in the Way of Courtship to Mrs. Braccigirle, but that he had an Apprehension that Mr. Mountford was an Obstruction to him in that Matter, and therefore he did declare several Times, that he would be revenged of him. And one Time (which I think was two or three Days before the Fact was done) my Lord Mohun, the Prisoner at the Bar, was at Dinner with Hill, when Hill had this Discourse concerning Mountford, and said he would be revenged of him. My Lord Mohun was by, they both say, when such Discourse was used by Hill, but they cannot tell what Notice he took of it.

My Lords, after this, the Day that this Fact was committed, your Lordships have heard how my Lord Mohun and Hill hired a Coach and six Horses in order to seize Mrs. Braccigirle and carry her away by Force, and that is proved most fully, both upon my Lord Mohun and Hill, that they were both concerned in that Design, and actually engaged in it; there can be no Dispute of that. Accordingly they dined together that Day, and at Dinner there arose a Discourse in relation to Mrs. Braccigirle. And at that Time my Lord Mohun said it would cost Hill 50*l.* to carry her off. And Hill said, if the Villain resisted he would stab him. And my Lord Mohun said, He would stand by his Friend. This Declaration was made at Dinner, on the Day this Fact was committed; and then they appointed to meet at the Play-House at six o'Clock in the Evening, expecting Mrs. Braccigirle would be there; and accordingly the Coach was ordered to be ready at that Time in Drury-lane.

My Lords, in pursuance of this Design, they both came to the Play-House at Six o'Clock; this is proved by two or three Witnesses. When they came there, they inquired for Mrs. Braccigirle, but she was not there at that Time. And then not finding Mrs. Braccigirle there, your Lordships have an Account from the Coach-man, to what Places he carried them from thence. First to Drury-lane, there they staid some Time; and not finding her there, he drove them into Norfolk-street, near the Place where she lodged, and there a Man and a Woman being discoursing together, gave them Occasion to say, they thought they were betray'd. And Hill said, My Lord, let us go and cut that Fellow's Throat, or Words to that Effect.

Then, my Lords, they drove back from that Place, into Drury-Lane again, and ordered the Coach to stop over-against my Lord of Clare's House. There it happened that Mrs. Braccigirle came from Mr. Page's House, where she had supped. At that Time there were present her Mother, her Brother, and Mr. Page, and Mr. Page led her along. Hill came up with seven or eight Soldiers, and forced her out of Mr. Page's Hand, and endeavoured to thrust her into the Coach. In that Coach my Lord Mohun was, that is agreed upon on all Hands, the Coach Door was open, and my Lord Mohun was there in it with seven or eight Pistols.

It happening they could not carry her off, but the Matter taking Air, People came in to their Assistance, and the Design being prevented, Hill would needs go home with her to her Lodging in Howard-street, and my Lord came out of the Coach and went along with him. When they were come to the Lodging, the Witnesses tell your Lordships, that at that Time, when Mr. Page was going into the House, Hill would have had some Discourse with Mr. Page, and desired to speak with him, but Mr. Page said it was not a convenient Time, but to-morrow would do better, and so went into the House, and the Door was locked.

My Lord Mohun and Hill continued walking about the Streets for about two Hours before Mr. Mountford was killed, and now your Lordships will observe what Transactions there were during the Time that they continued walking in the Streets.

(Then there was an Interruption for about a Quarter of an Hour, occasion'd by a Lady's falling into Fits in one of the Galleries; but she being removed, and Proclamation made for Silence, the Court proceed'd.)

L. H. Steward. Pray, go on, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, I was observing to your Lordships, that Part of the Evidence which related to what happen'd after the Time that Mrs. Braccigirle was in her Lodging. And, my Lord, your Lordships hear from the Witnesses, that my Lord Mohun and this Hill continued in the Street, where Mrs. Braccigirle lodged, and walked up and down for near two Hours before Mr. Mountford came.

During that Time, the Constable and the Watchmen have told your Lordships upon their Oaths, that my Lord Mohun's and Mr. Hill's Swords were both drawn. And the Constable swears expressly, That he ask'd my Lord Mohun what he did with his Sword drawn, and that my Lord answered, he was ready to put it up, and told him withal, he was a Peer of the Realm; the Constable then ask'd, why the other Gentleman's Sword was drawn, and my Lord Mohun made answer that his Scabbard was lost.

But your Lordships observe, that before the Watch came, Mrs. Browne (as she herself hath sworn) came out of the House where Mrs. Braccigirle lodged, and desired to know what they did there, and then Hill said, he should light upon Mountford one Time or other; faith Mrs. Browne to him, Why, what hath he done to you? To which he replied, He hath affronted me, and I will be revenged upon him; and this was said in the Presence of my Lord Mohun, he being just by.

My Lords, after this, in a very short Time, Mr. Mountford came down, and Mrs. Browne telleth your Lordships, that they were so much aware of this Matter, that my Lord Mohun and Hill staid to do Mountford a Mischief, that there were Persons sent to Mrs. Mountford to give her Notice of it, and she sent Messengers to find out her Husband, to prevent his coming in their Way, but they could not find him.

Upon Mr. Mountford's coming down, Mrs. Browne seeing him, steps up towards him, to tell him that my Lord Mohun and Hill were in the Street with their Swords drawn, and she was afraid they had some ill Design against him; but she sweareth she did not, nor could not tell him this, he was in such Haste; but one of the Witnesses for my Lord contradicts her in this, and says, that she did tell him; but whether the one Witness sweareth true, or the other Witness faith true, must be left to your Lordships Judgment.

But Mr. Mountford came down immediately, and as he came down, he met my Lord Mohun, and they did salute one another (for I would not injure my Lord in mistaking the Evidence, as near as I can) but your Lordships will observe the Witnesses say, that presently my Lord Mohun asked Mr. Mountford, whether he was not sent for, and said, I suppose you have heard what happen'd to the Lady this Night, and I hope you do not come to vindicate Mrs. Braccigirle. And Mr. Mountford replied, I hope your Lordship doth not come to vindicate Mr. Hill in such an Action.

Thereupon Hill stepped up, and struck Mr. Mountford a Box on the Ear, and at the same Time, with his Right Hand, pass'd at him, and run him through, before his Sword was drawn. This two of the Witnesses for the King say Mr. Mountford told them upon his Death-Bed, and it was very probably so; because your Lordships observe by all the Evidence, Hill's Sword was ready drawn in his Hand.

(There being some Noise, Proclamation was made for Silence.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, I was observing that it was immediately, and at the same Time that he struck him, and run him through, and it is very likely it was so, as Mr. Mountford said when dying; for several of the Witnesses for the King do swear, that the Box on the Ear was before his Sword was drawn, and Hill's Sword was ready in his Hand. So Mr. Mountford said when he was expiring, and what Regard your Lordships will have to the Declaration of a dying Man, we must submit to your Lordships Judgment; and Mrs. Browne, who was there and saw the Fact, sweareth the same Thing, that it was done before Mr. Mountford could have Time to draw his Sword.

If that be so, it is very plain it was Murder in Mr. Hill, and your Lordships will please to observe another Piece of Evidence that came from the Mouth of a Witness, examined for the Noble Lord the Prisoner at the Bar, and that is Leake the Boy, he was examined before the Coroner; indeed he was not called now for the King, and your Lordships may see some Reason why he was not; but your Lordships have had his Deposition before the Coroner read, and by that your Lordships may observe, how different his Testimony then was, from what he now giveth. And whether your Lordships will believe what he then said upon his Oath, or what he now faith, is left to your Lordships Consideration.

Consideration. He said, when he was examined upon his Oath, soon after the Fact, that my Lord Mobun was by when Hill did wound Mountford, and that my Lord Mobun said, that he would stand by his Friend, and that Hill was his Friend, and that my Lord Mobun did stand by, and did not offer to part them. Though he hath something varied from this in his Testimony now, yet he still affirms what he there swore to be true.

But further, my Lords, your Lordships will consider what the Constable swore my Lord Mobun said after he was taken, and when he was in Custody at the Round-house. Whether he did surrender himself or no, we must leave to your Lordships, upon the Evidence that hath been given on the one Side, and on the other. But when he was in Custody (as I said) my Lord Mobun asked whether Hill was taken, and being answered No, he said he was glad of that; but he was sorry he had no more Money about him, and wished that he had that Money which he himself had, and that he would be willing to be hanged for him. So great a Kindness he expressed for Hill, and said, he had chang'd Coats with him, and then had Hill's Coat on his Back.

This, my Lords, is the Substance of the Evidence on the King's Part, and upon the whole of it, it is plain, with humble Submission to your Lordships, that here was a premeditated Malice in Hill, by his own Declarations preceding, by what was done at the time of the Fact committed, and by stabbing him before his sword was drawn.

The Question will be, whether, my Lord Mobun, the Prisoner at the Bar, was privy to this Design of Hill's, and did so far agree in it, as to keep him Company to assist and encourage him. For if he was privy, and knew of Hill's Design, and staid there for that Purpose to give him Assistance in it, with humble Submission to your Lordships Judgment, he will be as much guilty of the Murder, as Hill that actually killed him: That therefore will be the Question before your Lordships, for your Judgment upon the Consideration of what has been prov'd in this Case.

My Lords, the Prisoner, my Lord Mobun, has called and produced several Witnesses to your Lordships, in Defence of himself. The first Witness was called to this Purpose, to shew that my Lord had no Malice to Mountford, but that they were very good Friends but two or three Days before; that he spoke of him with a great deal of Kindness, and desired to drink a Bottle of Wine with him.

Now for this, I would observe to your Lordships, that it is not the Question, whether my Lord Mobun had any direct or express Malice against Mountford; but if Hill, who was so great a Friend of my Lord Mobun's, had a Malice against Mountford, and my Lord Mobun had so great a Kindness for Hill, as to accompany and assist him in taking his intended Revenge (whether it was so or no, your Lordships are to judge) it will be as much Murder in Law, as if my Lord had himself had a Hand in it.

For the other Witnesses that have been called for the Prisoner, I must leave the Consideration of what they say to your Lordships. They are not upon their Oaths, but yet they are to be believed so far, as your Lordships shall judge what they say credible, upon consideration of all that you have heard. But for the Boy, who hath contradicted his own Evidence, which he gave upon Oath before the proper Officer, but acknowledged what he swore then was true, what Credit is to be given to him, will deserve your Lordships particular Consideration. How he has been prevailed upon to change his Evidence, I cannot tell, nor what Weight it will have with you.

My Lords, I will not spend more of your Lordships Time; I know you very well remember, and will carefully recollect all the Evidence, both for the King and for the Prisoner, and your Lordships will consider that it is a Case of Blood, and if your Lordships think him guilty, tho' he be one of your own Body, you will adjudge him so; if not, you will acquit him; and therefore I leave the Matter to your Lordships just Determination.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, I think now, having heard the Evidence on all Sides, your Lordships will think fit to adjourn to the House of Lords. Is it your Pleasure to adjourn?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

L. H. Stew. This House is adjourned to the House of Lords.

Then the Lords returned to their own House, in the same Order as they came into the Court.

After some Debate amongst themselves in their own House, they adjourned till the next Day, and ordered the Prisoner, Counsel, and Witnesses to attend in the Court.

Die Mercurii Primo Februarii 1692.

The Lords sat all Day in their own House, debating amongst themselves in the Absence of the Judges, who were in the Court, and about eight o' Clock in the Evening, the House of Lords adjourn'd till the Friday following, the Thursday being Candlemas-Day, and no Law-Day. And the Prisoner, Counsel, and Witnesses were ordered to attend in the Court on Friday Morning.

Die Veneris Tertio Februarii 1692.

ABOUT the Hour of Four in the Afternoon, the Lords (who had till then been debating amongst themselves in their own House) came in the same Order as the first Day into the Court of Westminster-hall, except only that the Judges were a great Part of the Day waiting for them in the Court.

The Lords being seated on their proper Benches, and his Grace the Lord High Steward in the Chair before the Throne, Proclamations were made for Silence, and for the bringing the Prisoner to the Bar in usual Manner; and the Prisoner coming to the Bar, and having saluted his Grace the Lord High Steward, and the Peers, and being resaluted by them, the Court proceeded in this Manner.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mobun, My Lords have heard the Evidence on both Sides, for and against you; and upon that Evidence some Questions have arisen in Point of Law, in which some of my Lords are doubtful. I am therefore by their Lordships Command to propose to your Lordships, my Lords Chief Justices and the rest of the Judges here, to have your Opinions upon a Case stated by their Lordships; and it is this:

In a Case where a Man shall murder another, Whether all those that are in his Company at the Time of the Murder, are so necessarily involved in the said Crime, that they may not be separated from the Crime of the said Person, so as in some Cases to be found guilty of Manslaughter?

To this, my Lords expect you, the Judges, should give your Resolutions severally one after another, and therefore it is to begin with you, my Lord Chief Justice.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, the Question is pretty long; and I desire, that I may not be mistaken in the Opinion I shall give, that I may have it in Writing, and that I may have a little Time to consider it, because it hath been a Question framed upon very great Consideration and Deliberation: Therefore I would be very well advised before I give an Answer to such a Question, because it is of so great Importance.

L. H. Stew. You must speak out, my Lords; for else I am at such a Distance that I cannot hear a Word you say.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I make the same humble Request: The Question propounded is long, and the Fruit of great Deliberation among your Lordships: I desire therefore my Answer may be such as becometh me to it, and to that Purpose, that I may have a Copy of it, and some Time to consider of it.

L. H. Stew. I have it here in Writing, and will give it you, if that will serve the turn.

The Paper was brought by the Black Rod from his Grace to the Judges.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, we desire your Lordships will give us Time to withdraw, and consider of it among ourselves.

L. H. Stew. Your Lordships hear the Motion of my Lord Chief Justice; the Judges desire your Leave to withdraw, and consider of the Question among themselves.

Lords. No, no, no.

Then the Judges sitting upon the Wool-Packs conferred for a little time privately with one another; and then the Earl of Rochester stood up.

E. of Rochester. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Rochester, What say you?

E. of Rochester. My Lords, the Prisoner doth desire to have a Copy of this Question, it being a Question in Point of Law, that his Counsel may see it.

Lords. Ay, ay, he ought to have it.

A Copy was carried by one of the Clerks to the Bar, and delivered to the Prisoner, and he gave it to Sir Thomas Powis, who, with Mr. Hawles and Mr. Price, before assigned of Counsel for my Lord Mobun in Matters of Law, stood by him at the Bar.

L. Mobun. My Lords, I desire to know whether my Counsel may speak to this Case before the Judges give their Opinions, it being a Matter of Law, and the Judges superior to my Counsel?

L. H. Stew. My Lord, they may be heard to any Matter of Law that is Law singly, the Counsel of either Side may be heard to any Thing that is a Point of Law only.

L. Mobun. My Lord, I conceive this to be so.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, it is agreed to be so: But, my Lords, I must desire your Lordships leave to go down to the Wool-Pack, or I shall not be able to hear what is said.

Lords. Ay, ay.

Then his Grace came down and seated himself on the Wool-Pack.

Sir T. Powis. May it please your Lordships, I am of Counsel—

E. of Devonshire. My Lords.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Devonshire.

E. of Devonshire. I think your Lordships have not yet resolved that the Prisoner's Counsel shall be heard before the Judges; therefore I desire they may not begin.

Lords. Yes, yes, it was agreed above.

L. H. Stew. My Lord, it must be either then, or not at all; and I understand the Resolution of the House to be so.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. Go on, Sir.

Sir T. Powis. May it please your Lordships, I am of Counsel assigned by your Lordships for this Noble Peer that is now a Prisoner at the Bar: The Question your Lordships are pleased to propound is this:

In a Case where a Man shall murder another, Whether all those who are in his Company at the Time of the Murder, are so necessarily involved in the same Crime, that they may not be separated from the Crime of the said Person, so as in some Cases to be found guilty only of Manslaughter?

My Lords, with humble Submission to your Lordships, I take it there are many Cases where a Person that is present when a Murder is committed by another Man, shall be equally Guilty of that Murder; and there are many Cases where a Person that is present when a Murder is committed by another Man, shall be guilty only of Manslaughter: And there are many Cases where a Person that is present when a Murder is committed by another Man, shall not (with humble Submission) be Guilty of any Crime at all.

For the first, there is no Question but if two Persons or more do meet together with Malice prepensed to kill another, and one of them killeth him, and the rest do aid and assist him in doing of it, though the mortal Wound is only given by one, there is no Question but they are all equally guilty of the Murder with him that gave the Mortal Wound: And it is also as clear, if two Persons meet together to commit an unlawful Act, and during the Execution of that unlawful Act, one of them doth kill another Man, the other will be involved in the Guilt of it.

But, my Lords, if several Persons do meet together to commit an unlawful Act, and the Design of the Act is totally over, so that the Prosecution of it is quite left off—

There being some Noise and Disorder about the Court, Proclamation was commanded to be made, and was made again for Silence.

Sir T. Powis. My Lords, I say in the second Instance that I was offering to your Lordships; If two Persons or more meet together to do an unlawful Act, but are either disappointed in it, or have totally desisted from from it; and afterwards these same Persons having quitted their Design, are together, and a third Person coming into their Company, though there were Malice between one of those Persons and that third Person, and upon Words, or some other Occasion or Accident, there should be Quarrelling and Fighting between those two Persons that bore Malice to one another, and one of them is killed, and he that before had joined in the Design of committing an unlawful Act, be only there in the Company, if he doth neither aid nor abet, nor any ways agree to the doing of the Thing, the Authorities are, it will neither be Murder nor Manslaughter; and of this I would, with your Lordships Favour, put some Instances.

If two Persons agree together (as the Case is put in that which goeth by the Name of my Lord Dacres' Case) to enter into another Man's Park and steal his Deer, this is an unlawful Design; and if one of them kill the Keeper, and the other no way at all act in the doing of it, yet it will be Murder in the Person that did go along with that other in that unlawful Act: But the Lord Dacres' Case was accompanied with further Circumstances; for there it did appear that the Lord Dacres had agreed before-hand to kill any Person that should oppose them; there was that particular Circumstance in that Case.

But, my Lords, I take it, with Submission, to be very clear, that if two such Persons who made such an Attempt to rob or steal Deer in a Park, should be disappointed, and should leave the Park, and afterwards go to a Tavern, or an Ale-house, or any Place to drink, having quitted that Design, and some Hours afterwards, a Person cometh in that was not expected, or thought of, and a Quarrel ariseth between one of those two Persons who were before together, and the Man that so came in, and he shall be killed, I take it that the other Person who was present will not be guilty of the Murder, unless he aided, or assisted, or acted in it.

My Lords, I would speak to your Lordships in a Case of this Nature with as good Authority as I could, besides my own poor Reason to prove to your Lordships that there may be many Cases where a Person may be present at the Time when another is murdered, and yet he shall be guilty of only Manslaughter, and in some Cases shall be guilty of no Crime at all.

The Case that I shall cite is out of a Treatise of a very Great and very Learned Man; it is the Book that goeth under the Name of Sir Matthew Hale's Pleas of the Crown: the Case is this: You will find in that Book under the Title of Murder, Fol. 51. If A. and B. having Malice prepenfe, meet and fight, and C. the Servant of A. not acquainted therewith, take Part with A. his Master, and kill B. this is Murder in A. but only Manslaughter in C. So here is an Instance where one is guilty of Murder, and the other only guilty of Manslaughter, when both are present at the Time of the Fact committed. The same Law, saith he, it is, if C. came in suddenly, and took part with A. and killed B. In this Case it is Murder in A. if there was Malice prepenfed between him and B. but only Manslaughter in C. who came in suddenly, and actually killed B.

My Lords, He goeth further, and saith, If one come by chance where one is killed, and doth not abet, he is neither Principal nor Accessory to that Murder or Manslaughter; so that here are Cases where it is Murder in one, and Manslaughter only in the other; and here are Cases where it is Murder in one, and not so much as Manslaughter, or any Crime at all, in the other.

These that I have cited are Cases where one has Malice against another, and he that joineth in the Quarrel doth not know it. But I will put the Case now, That a Person hath Malice against another, and one happeneth to be in his Company that knoweth he hath Malice against that other Person; if those two that had Malice against one another, do fight, and the one kill the other, yet he that is present will not be guilty of Murder or Manslaughter. For if the Law should be, that Men are involved in the Guilt of Murder whenever they are present at a Time when one that beareth Malice against another killeth his Enemy, Conversation in the World would be very dangerous: For, my Lords, we know the World is too full of Malice, and there are few Men but have Acquaintance with such as bear Malice to others; but if so be that no Man that is acquainted with one that bears Malice to another, may be in his Company but at the Peril of his Life; if his Enemy come in his way, and he happen to kill him in his Presence, then no Man that is ever so innocent can be safe.

For I would put this Case to your Lordships: I am walking with a Friend, or an Acquaintance, that I know hath Malice against another, and that other Man cometh in the way, and they fight, and my Friend killeth that other Man, and I am no way aiding or assisting in it; if that should involve me in the Crime, surely the Law of England would be the most unreasonable and dangerous Law to live under in the World. No doubt but in such a Case the Person that is so present is unfortunate, but he is innocent, is not guilty.

For to make one guilty of Murder where Murder is committed, it must be either that he doth aid or abet, or some way assist in the killing of the Man, or he must have before that time agreed and confederated with the Person that killed him, that he would join therein at that Time, and he must be there for that End and Purpose: For if he never engaged or agreed to the Killing of him, nor was there for that Purpose, nor at the Time did any way act, or join, or assist, in the doing of it; in those Cases he is certainly not guilty.

My Lords, I dare not apply any of these Things to the present Case, because I suppose your Lordships only propounded this as a Question of Law, and not of Fact; your Lordships are the great Judges both of the one and the other: But what in the Argument or Resolution of this Case, your Lordships will find agreeable to the present Case of my Lord now before you, I submit to your Lordships Judgment.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I will not repeat what has been offered; the Distinction is certainly true that has been made, that there are Cases and Instances in Law where a Man may be guilty of Murder, when he is present where Murder is committed, and he may be guilty of Manslaughter only, where another is guilty of Murder; and a Man may be present where Murder is committed, and be innocent both of the one and the other. But this I do venture to say, That there is no Authority in our Law, that saith a Person present, when a Murder is committed, must be guilty either of Murder or Manslaughter; it must be according to the Circumstances of the Thing, either that he intended to aid or assist in the Killing, when he was there by agreement before-hand, or must actually aid or assist by some Action or Encouragement.

But, with Submission, the Authority of Law is very plain upon this Question proposed by your Lordships, That one Person may be guilty of Manslaughter, and another of Murder at the same time. The Case that hath been put out of my Lord Hale, was, upon his Account, Authority sufficient to quote, if we would only rely on him: But, my Lords, with Submission, the Authority goeth a little higher yet; Stamford putteth the Question before the Justices; A. that is, the Master, fighteth with B. and C. the Servant taketh Part with his Master, and killeth B. A. is guilty of Murder, and C. only of Manslaughter.

And that Authority is followed afterwards in the Case of Salisbury, in Plowd. Com. Fol. 100. B. with the Resolution of all the Judges in that Case, That one Man may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manslaughter, as to the same Fact; and Stamford doth expressly say, as my Lord Chief Justice Hale quotes it out of him, that if a Man be present, but do not abet or assist, or contribute to the Thing, he is totally innocent, and neither Principal nor Accessory to the Murder or Manslaughter.

My Lords, We do not find that our Law hath any way prohibited a Man to keep Company with one that oweth another a Spleen; sure there should be some Warning given about it, if that was the Law in such a Case. The Law goeth no farther than to caution a Man, that he take care he doth not break the Law himself, that he doth not transgress the Bounds set him by the Law.

And it were a very hard Case upon a private Person, if it should be otherwise; for no Law compelleth a private Person to part two that are fighting; if he doth attempt it, he doth it at his own Peril, as in that Case of A. the Master fighting with B. and C. the Servant taking part with his Master to part them, if B. be killed, C. is guilty of Manslaughter, though his Design was only to part them, because the Law putteth it not upon a private Person to do it; if it did, the Law would protect him for what he did in Obedience to it.

The Law is otherwise in the Case of a Magistrate, or a Constable, who endeavoureth to part any Persons fighting, and to keep the Peace; if he happen so to kill a Man, he is totally innocent; but a private Person shall answer for it.

My Lords, I will not trouble your Lordships further; I hope it is plain, that Malice is absolutely necessary to make a Man guilty of Murder, and there is no such thing in this Case stated by your Lordships; and therefore I submit the Matter to your Judgment.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I am of Counsel for this noble and young Lord, the Prisoner at the Bar: I shall not trouble your Lordships so far as to make any Repetition of what has been said by those Gentlemen that went before me.

But there was a Case in Plowden that was cited by Mr. Hawles, by the Name of Salisbury's Case; and I would crave leave to cite the Case that is next precedent; it is in that Book, Fol. 98. There, my Lords, was an Indictment for Murder against several, and, among the rest, against two, one for giving the Wound, and the Stroke, and the other for being present, and aiding the other; and they tell you how he was an Aider and an Abettor because he was present, and put the Man upon whom the Assault was made in Terror, which Terror was the Occasion that he could not defend his Life; and made him full as much a Principal as the other that gave him his Death's Wound. And there, my Lords, he citeth another ancient Record, which is Quarto Libro Assisarum Placito 25. of an Appeal of Murder by a Woman for the Death of her Husband against Sixteen; four whereof were Principals, and the other Accessories, where the Words are Presence, Force and Aid.

How that will come up to this Case now before your Lordships, I am not to trouble you with the Consideration of, you who have heard the Evidence are best able to judge of it.

My Lords, by the same Reason and Rule that one Man may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manslaughter; one may be found guilty, and the other not guilty. As for Example, if A. commandeth B. to kill C. and afterwards it repenteth him of this Command, and he countermandeth it; yet notwithstanding B. doth kill C. now B. that killed C. is guilty of Murder; but A. that countermanded it, is not guilty as Accessory; for his malicious Intent did not continue till the murdering Stroke was given, and to make Murder, there must be a continuing Malice till the mortal Wound given. Cases to this Purpose many might be cited; but for a full Authority there is my Lord Coke in his Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 51.

My Lords, I have no more to say, but that by the same Rule, that one may be found guilty of Murder, and another of Manslaughter for the same Fact, by the same Rule, (as Circumstances may be,) the one may be found guilty of Murder, and the other not guilty at all.

L. H. Stew. Have you any more to say that are of Counsel for the Prisoner?

Sir Tho. Powys. No, my Lord, I have nothing further to offer to your Lordships.

L. H. Stew. Have those who are of Counsel for the King any thing to reply to this that is said by the Counsel for the Prisoner?

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordships, the Question that is proposed, is this:

In a Case where a Man shall murder another, Whether those who are in his Company at the Time of the Murder, are so necessarily involved in the said Crime, that they may not be separated from the Crime of the said Person, so as in some Cases to be found guilty only of Manslaughter?

My Lords, that which, with all Submission, we would offer to your Lordships is this: We are intrusted by their Majesties, to prosecute for the Death of one of their Subjects; there hath been a Case stated to your Lordships by the Evidence which hath been given before you; That which is mentioned in this Paper has nothing certain in it; we are to imagine a Case, and suppose Facts, and then to argue what will be the Law upon those Facts supposed. When your Lordships are pleased to let us know what it is which your Lordships take to be the Fact of the Case before you, we shall be ready to speak to the Law upon that Case, as it becomes us, and as it is our Duty to do; but till the Fact be so stated by your Lordships, and declared to be that which your Lordships take to be the Fact of my Lord Mohun's Case, we think it not consistent with our Duty to enter into a Debate upon Supposals, or upon other Cases than that which is in Judgment before your Lordships.

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordships then please that the Judges give their Opinion?

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lords, not to trouble your Lordships with any Repetition of what hath been said, it is my Opinion, as Mr. Attorney General has declared his, That, as this Case is stated, we are bound not to give any Answer to it, unless your Lordships will please to tell us what the Case is upon the Evidence that hath been given before you.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lords, I desire to be heard one Word in this Case. I take it for granted, that your Lordships here are Judges both of Fact and Law in this Case, and you are so entirely Judges of it, that Nobody can interpose in giving their Opinions in relation to your Judgments, what the Fact is, and from the Fact the Law ariseth. We, that are of Counsel for the King, must needs prejudice him as to the Evidence of the Fact that we have given, except we argue that which is the Fact of this particular Case, and the Law arising thereupon together; which is not necessary here, where your Lordships are Judges of both; and since you are better Judges of them than any one else can be, therefore we do not think it our Duty to argue upon a Case put ad dextra, and abster; and hope your Lordships will excuse us from answering what hath been said by the Counsel for the Prisoner; tho' I think it might be easily answered in every Point; but I shall not enter upon the debating of it. For your Lordships see what Caution we ought to have in relation to our Duty to the Government, which your Lordships will always expect we should perform as exactly as we can. When the Fact that hath been proved in this Case is stated, your Lordships then are the proper Judges what it amounteth to in point of Law, or if your Lordships desire that Counsel should argue it, we shall be ready to do it.

L. H. Stew. Then my Lords the Judges, what say you to it? My Lords here expect your Opinion in this Case.

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will repeat the Question; which is this:

In a Case where a Man shall murder another, Whether those who are in his Company are so necessarily involved in the said Crime, that they may not be separated from the Crime of the said Person, so as in some Cases to be found guilty only of Manslaughter?

My Lords, I shall not enlarge upon the Matter, but humbly offer my Opinion to your Lordships as generally as the Question. I am of Opinion, that the Crime of those who are in the Company at the Time of the Murder committed, may be so separated from the Crime of the Person that committeth the Murder, as in some Cases they are only to be found guilty of Manslaughter. I suppose your Lordships do not expect that I should argue the Case, or explain my Opinion upon so general a Question, by particular Instances, or run into a Consideration of the different Cases that may be put upon it, therefore I only deliver this as my Opinion.

L. C. J. Treby. May it please your Lordships, I am of the same Opinion; I think the Import of your Lordships Question is, Whether there may be a Case in which it is possible that one Person, who is in the Company of another at the Time that he committed Murder, may be guilty of Manslaughter; and, my Lords, I think a Case may fall out, and may be so circumstanced, as that it may be possible, that he who did accompany the Murderer, may be guilty only of Manslaughter. Your Lordships only expect our Opinion, and therefore I will not go about to argue it.

Mr. J. Nevil. My Lords, I shall not spend your Time to repeat the Question, it hath been so often repeated; but I am of the same Opinion with my Lords Chief Justices: I must concur with them in it, that there may possibly be such a Case, as that when Murder is committed where others are in Company, he that doth the Thing will be guilty of Murder, and those that were in Company, guilty but of Manslaughter. There may be such a Case.

Earl of Carlisle. My Lords, to save your Lordships Time, unless the rest of the Judges differ from those that have spoken their Opinion, I think you need not trouble them to speak to it severally.

Mr. B. Turton. We are all of the same Opinion, my Lords; we cannot differ in Opinion upon such a Case.

Earl of Monmouth. My Lords, I humbly beg your Lordships leave to propose a Question to my Lords the Judges for their Opinions.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. What is your Question, my Lord of Monmouth?

Earl of Monmouth. My Lords, the Question is this:

A, conscious of an Animosity between B and C, A accompanieth B where C happeneth to come, and B killeth him; whether A, without any Malice to C, or any actual Hand in his Death, be guilty of Murder?

L. H. Stew. Pray, my Lord, be pleased to hand up your Paper, that my Lords the Judges may see it.

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords.—

L. H. Stew. What faith your Lordship, my Lord of Mulgrave?

Earl of Mulgrave. I only desire, that the Prisoner at the Bar, if he hath a mind to it, may have his Counsel speak to this Question, before the Judges answer it, as was done in the other Case.

L. Mohun. I desire, my Lords, my Counsel may have the Question in Writing.

L. H. Stew. Make my Lord a Copy of it.

One Copy was delivered by the Clerk to the Prisoner, and by him to his Counsel, and another to the King's Counsel; and the Original was delivered to the Judges.

L. Mohun. Is it your Lordships Pleasure that my Counsel may be heard to this Question?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Sir T. Powis. My Lords, the Question that this noble Peer hath pleased to propose, is this:

A, conscious of an Animosity between B and C, A accompanieth B where C happeneth to come, and B killeth him; whether A, without any Malice to C, or any actual Hand in his Death, be guilty of Murder?

Vol. IV.

My Lords, with humble Submission to your Lordships, I take it in this Case the Law is very clear, That as this Case is put, he that was in Company when the Murder was committed, under these Circumstances, is not guilty of any Crime: But without question he is not guilty of Murder.

My Lords, Malice is so absolutely necessary to Murder, either express, or that which the Law calleth Malice implied, that there can be no Case where Murder can be committed without it; no Indictment can ever be good, unless Ex malitia sua premeditata be alledged in it; because this is absolutely essential to Murder.

But, my Lord, if so be a Man that is present, not designing, or foreseeing that unhappy Accident that doth fall out between his Friend with whom he is in company, and another Person that came accidentally to them, tho' Malice was between those two, God forbid he should be guilty, if he did neither foresee it, nor any way acted in it.

He that is present must be involved in the Crime, either by some way aiding, abetting, or contributing to the Death of the Man, or there must be some precedent Combination and Agreement to do that Act which at that time was done; and that must be plainly and clearly proved: For his acting, his standing by innocently and harmlessly, is so great an Evidence of his not concurring, that it must be a mighty Proof of Malice that must convict that Man of a preceding Agreement to do the Fact; and if it doth not appear plainly and manifestly, that he agreed before-hand, or acted then, and abetted and contributed to the Thing; I say, unless this be clear and manifest, it is no Question but in Law he is innocent of the Murder.

For in such a Case it is plain he never had premeditated Malice express, nor is there any Evidence of that which the Law calleth Malice implied; which is when a Man killeth another without Provocation, that is, when he that doth the Act had no Provocation, or killeth an Officer in the Prosecution of his Office, That the Law calleth Malice implied. But then that is never but in the Person that did the Act, and not in the Persons who were present at that time, unless before-hand they had agreed to do that Act; and therefore they cannot be guilty of Murder.

And this, my Lords, is what I humbly offer to your Lordships Consideration, in relation to the Case put by that Noble Lord.

Mr. Hawles. Will your Lordships please to favour me with a Word on the same side with Sir Thos. Powis, and I shall be very short in the matter.

The King's Counsel did complain that the last Case was not fully stated, and therefore they could not speak to it; my Lords, with Submission, this Case is fully stated: there was nothing in the other Case said of Malice between him that was murdered, and him that killed him; but here it is said, That the Person present was not conscious of any Malice, nor had any manner of hand in the doing of it: And then, with Submission, my Lords, upon the Question, Whether he was not guilty of Murder? If this was a special Verdict found by twelve Men, and referred to the Judges, I do not at all doubt but their Judgment would be, That he was not guilty. For tho' in a Special Verdict, where Malice is not found, the Prisoner would be acquitted; yet if it be expressly found in the Verdict that he did not know of any Malice between them, then, with Submission, there would be no Colour to find him guilty of any thing.

A Lord interrupted him, and said, The Case was put of one conscious of the Malice.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I beg your Pardon, I confess it is so, I did mistake it; but, with Submission, that will not much alter the matter. If he was conscious, that will not make him guilty; for that Consciousness of his is no matter of Crime: if he did not act any thing, or agree to do any thing before-hand, but only was in Company with the Person that had Malice against another, that will not make him guilty of any Crime whatsoever.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I shall speak but one Word to it; I observe the great Stress of the Case lieth upon the Word being conscious of the Malice between B and C. Now as to that, with Submission, I conceive, and am of Opinion, that as this Case is, A is not guilty of Murder, and for Authority, I shall rely upon the Cases in Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 40. and my Lord Coke's Pleas of the Crown, Fol. 51. The Case is this, If a Man happen to be in Company where Murder is committed, or Felony, and he cometh not there on purpose, or by confederacy to do it, in that Case, tho' Murder be committed, and he doth not endeavour to part them, this is no Murder in him, for he is punishable by Fine and Imprisonment, if not an Infant; but if he was an Infant, he is not punishable at all, for he is not Consant of the Law in such a Case. But in this Case, except Malice premeditated, express, or implied, be proved, without doing any thing or abetting, he is not guilty of Murder.

L. H. Stew. Gentlemen, you that are of the King's Counsel, have you any thing to say to this Question?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, here is a Case put which I hear from the Counsel on the other side, is certainly enough stated. My Lords, if this be stated to us, as that which is agreed to be the Fact of the present Case, we are ready to speak to it; but if this be not taken by your Lordships to be my Lord Mohun's Case, and as such stated to us, then we must humbly beg to be excused. I know your Lordships will be tender in this Matter, and as well pleased that we hold to that which we conceive to be our Duty in reference to that Station in which we serve the King, as with any Forwardness in us to answer Questions; And therefore we beg your Lordships Excuse for saying nothing more to it.

Earl of Monmouth. My Lords, I did not propose it as a Case stated and agreed by your Lordships, it is only a Case particularly stated for my own Satisfaction.

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords-----

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Mulgrave.

Earl of Mulgrave. If your Grace please, let the King's Counsel know, that they are not to ask you the Question, Whether the Lords are agreed what the Case is? They are to answer such Questions as are proposed, and not to ask any such Question.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, with that noble Lord's Pardon, I did not ask any Question; all that I said was, That when a Case is agreed to, and stated by your Lordships to be the present Case, we would be ready to speak to it, and till we receive that Intimation from your Grace, we shall think ourselves excused from giving any Answer to other Questions.

L. H. Steward. My Lords, I think we must go on, and if any Lord has any more Questions to propose, he may propose them.

E. of Nottingham. My Lords—

L. H. Steward. My Lord of Nottingham, Your Lordships will not certainly require of the King's Counsel to answer any Questions that they think improper for them to speak to; but when a Question hath been proposed by any noble Lord, to which the Counsel for the Prisoner hath been heard, and the King's Counsel think not fit to speak to it, there is nothing more requisite, but that in the Presence of the Prisoner (as the Law requireth it should be) you do demand the Opinion of the Judges.

L. H. Steward. What say you to it, my Lord Chief-Justice?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will repeat the Question. A, conscious of an Animosity between B and C, A accompanieth B where C happeneth to come, and B killeth him; Whether A, without any Malice to C, or any actual Hand in his Death, be guilty of Murder?

And, my Lords, as this Case is stated, I do conceive, that A is not guilty of the Murder, for it appeareth the Meeting was casual, and there was no Design in A against C, and therefore though A did know of the Malice between B and C, yet it was not unlawful for A to keep Company with B, but he might go with him any where, if it was not upon a Design against C.

Therefore I take it as this Case is put, that C came accidentally into the Company where A and B were, and then, without any Design in A, B killeth C. This is not Murder, indeed no Offence in A.

L. C. J. Treby. If it please your Lordships, as this Case is put, I think it is not an Offence of Murder or Man-slaughter in A; it dependeth upon the Words, as the last Question did. For the former Question was put generally, Whether there might not be a Case found or framed, wherein one might be guilty of Murder, and the other of Man-slaughter? So here it dependeth upon the Word [Happeneth], which I take to signify, (as my Lord doth) a casual coming into, or being in the Company.

Now, my Lords, when B had communicated to A this malicious Purpose to kill C, it stood uncertain, whether he to whom B had communicated it did consent; if he had any way declared his Consent, that he would go to such a Place, and stay there with B for such a Purpose, then it had been Murder in both; but if he merely was silent, and only kept B Company, perhaps with an Intent to dissuade him from it, or possibly without any Consideration at all, and then the Person intended to be killed accidentally came by, and is killed by B, A doing nothing towards it: In that Case, it is neither Murder nor Man-slaughter in A.

Mr. J. Nevil. My Lords, as this Case is, it seemeth to be mere accidental the coming of C into their Company, for it is said, Happeneth to come; and so though A did know that there was an Animosity between B and C, yet declaring no Intent of going with B to that Purpose, but coming with B into a Place where C accidentally came or happen'd to be, between whom and B there is a Quarrel, and C is killed; I do not take it at all that A is concerned, but merely as any other Person that accidentally was there, and in that Case he cannot be guilty of Murder or Man-slaughter, or any other Crime.

E. of Devonshire. My Lords—

L. H. Steward. My Lord Devonshire.

E. of Devon. If the rest are of the same Opinion, you need not give hem any farther Trouble, I think.

Judges. We are of the same Opinion.

E. of Scarborough. My Lords—

L. H. Steward. My Lord of Scarborough.

E. of Scarborough. I humbly beg your Lordships Leave, that I may offer a Question to your Lordships, to be proposed to the Judges, and the Question is this:

Whether if A heard B threaten to kill C, and some Days after A shall be with B upon some other Design, where C shall pass by, or come in the Place where A and B are, and C shall be killed by B; A standing by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's Part against C; whether A will be guilty of the Murder of C?

L. H. Steward. Pray, my Lord, give your Paper to the Clerk.

(Which was done.)

L. H. Steward. My Lord Mohun, doth your Lordship desire that your Counsel may have a Copy of this Question, and be heard to it?

L. Mohun. Yes, my Lord, if you please.

Then a Copy was given to him for his Counsel, and another to the King's Counsel, and a third the Judges had.

Sir Tho. Powys. Will your Lordships please to favour me with a few Words, and I shall trouble your Lordships very little, because I have said that already to your Lordships which will be an Answer to a good Part of this Case: The Case is this:

Whether if A heard B threaten to kill C, and some Days after A shall be with B upon some other Design, where C shall pass by, or come in the Place where A and B are, and C shall be killed by B; A standing by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's Part against C; whether A will be guilty of the Murder of C?

My Lord, with humble Submission, we do take it, that the Law in this Case is likewise very clear, that A is not guilty of Murder: For as this Case is put, there doth not appear (nay, the contrary doth appear) that he had any manner of Malice to this Man that was killed, nor any Hand in the Killing of him: And, as I said before to your Lordships, (and I hope the Judges will verify us in that, and your Lordships will be of the same Opinion) there can be no Case wherein a Man shall be guilty of Murder, but where there is Malice against the Person so murdered, or some way abetting and assisting in the Killing of him, or what the Law calleth Implied Malice.

But in this Case that is now put, there is neither express Malice, but the contrary appearing, nor any implied Malice, which is by Construction of Law; the Person that was by, and heard B threaten C before, yet doth no way aid or assist to the Killing of him; and therefore I think, with Submission, the Law, and all our Law-Books, and Reason itself, are clear for the acquitting of A in this Case.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I think the Resolutions that have been given in the Cases before, will warrant us in our Opinions in this, that A is not guilty of Murder in this Case: For I think, it was said by the Judges, That notwithstanding a Man knew another had a Design upon a third Person, yet it was lawful to keep Company with him, if he did not join with him in the Design. Now here it doth appear, that A keepeth B Company, but not upon that Design, for he had no Malice to C, nor had any Hand in his Death, and C cometh in by accident into the Company or Place where they are: With Submission, my Lords, A is totally not guilty, for there was no Malice in him; and though he was there, he was there upon his lawful Occasions; and if they two fight, the best Course he can take is to stand still and do nothing; and therefore he cannot be guilty of Murder or Man-slaughter.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I have but this Word to say, His being there was lawful; C cometh there but by accident, and when they two do fight, his not parting of them doth not make him guilty of the other's Death; here is no Malice, therefore he is not guilty of Murder, and he hath done nothing towards the Fact, therefore he is not guilty of Man-slaughter.

L. H. Steward. Will you say any Thing to this Question, you that are of the King's Counsel?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we are ready to speak to the present Case, when we receive Intimation from your Lordships, that what is put is the present Case.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. My Lords, if they put a Case of Fact to be argued as a Case of Law, and from time to time alledge Facts which are not in the Case before us, we cannot speak to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we are ready to argue the Case of the Prisoner at the Bar when it is stated; but till then, we humbly beg your Pardon: We think we are not bound to speak to other Cases.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Chief-Justice, What say you to it?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will put the Question:

Whether if A heard B threaten to kill C, and some Days after A shall be with B upon some other Design where C shall pass by, or come in the Place where A and B are, and C shall be killed by B; A standing by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not then being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's Part against C; whether A will be guilty of the Murder of C?

My Lords, I am of Opinion that A in this Case will not be guilty of Murder or Man-slaughter: For it doth not appear by the stating of the Case, that A did consent to the Design, or in any wise contribute to the Fact.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Chief-Justice Treby.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I take this Question to be the same in Substance as to the Point in Law with the last; and am of Opinion that A is not guilty of Murder or Man-slaughter.

Mr. J. Nevil. I am of the same Opinion.

L. H. Steward. If all the rest of you are of the same Opinion, you may spare yourselves the Trouble of delivering it particularly.

Judges. We are all of the same Opinion.

[Then there was a little Pause; and afterwards the Earl of Kingston stood up.]

E. of King. My Lords, I desire for my own private Satisfaction to know, Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed, (when the Person who knew of that Design is present) be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

L. H. Steward. My Lord, I must crave your Excuse, there is another Question to precede this.

E. of Devon. My Lords, I had a Question to ask; but it being much to the same Purpose with the two last, I think it better to wave it, for there hath been given an Answer to it already.

L. H. Steward. Then, my Lord of Kingston, will you be pleased to deliver up your Paper to the Table? [Which was done.]

L. H. Steward. My Lord Mohun, Do you desire your Counsel may have a Copy of this Question?—E. of Mulgrave. My Lords—

L. H. Steward. My Lord of Mulgrave.

E. of Mulgrave. I desire your Grace will hear the Question. Pray let it be read, that we may know what it is.

L. H. Steward. Read it.

Cl. of Crown. Readeth.

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man who happeneth to be killed, (when the Person who knew of the Design is present) be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

E. of Mulgrave. My Lords—

L. H. Steward. My Lord of Mulgrave.

E. of Mulgrave. I think, my Lords, in a Case of this Nature we cannot be too exact: I humbly conceive that is not a proper Question to be put, therefore I move that we may adjourn to consider of it, whether it shall be put or not, if that Lord do insist upon it.

L. H. Steward. My Lord of Kingston, Doth your Lordship insist on this Question being put?

E. of King. Yes, my Lords, I do, and I must insist upon it; for I think I cannot give my private Opinion in this Case without Satisfaction in the Lords. Then Adjourn, Adjourn.

L. H. Steward. This Court is adjourned into the House of Lords. Then the Lords went back to their own House in the same Order, and debated this Matter amongst themselves for about an Hour.

Between six and seven in the Evening the Lords returned into the Court in the same Order, and being seated on their Benches, and his Grace in the Chair before the Throne, they proceeded thus:

First, Proclamation was made for Silence.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Chief-Justice and you the Judges—

L. Cornwallis. My Lords—

L. H. Steward. My Lord Cornwallis.

L. Cornwallis. My Lord, Before your Grace giveth any Directions, I think you should call the Prisoner.

L. H. Steward. Is not the Prisoner at the Bar?

L. Cornwallis.

L. Cornwallis. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Call for the Prisoner.

[Then Proclamation was made for the Governor of the Tower to bring forth the Prisoner, and he was brought as before.]

L. H. Stew. I am to let you that are of Counsel for the King and the Prisoner know, That if any Question be put by any of my Lords, which any of you shall not think fit to give an Answer to, my Lords will take it for granted, either on the one Part or on the other, that the Reason is, because it is not necessary to give any Answer; and then they will proceed to have the Answer of you, my Lords the Judges. And now for myself, I must desire your Lordships will give me leave to come down again to the Wool-pack.

Lords. Aye, aye.

(Then his Grace came down, and seated himself on the Wool-pack.)

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Kingston, Will you please to propose your Question?

Earl of Kingston. My Lord, my Question is this, which I desire the Judges Opinion in for my own Satisfaction:

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed (when the Person who knew of the Design is present) be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, Do you desire your Counsel may have a Copy of that Question?

L. Mohun. Yes, if your Lordships please.

L. H. Stew. Read it aloud, and deliver a Copy to my Lord.

(The Question was read by the Clerk of the Crown, and one Copy of it delivered to the Prisoner's Counsel, and another to the King's Counsel, and a third to the Judges.)

L. Mohun. Is it your Lordships Pleasure, that my Counsel be heard to this Case?

Lords. Ay, ay.

Sir T. Powis. The Case that is put, my Lords, is this:

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed (when the Person who knew of the Design is present) be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

My Lords, I shall not insist upon the same Privilege that the King's Counsel did even now do, to decline speaking to any Case that your Lordships shall put. But I hope your Lordships will permit me to say, That I do not admit this to be the Case of my Lord Mohun, and I hope that my speaking to it shall not be taken as any Admission that this is his Case. But as this Case is put with that Allowance, that I speak to it not as his Case, I do take it, that this Person thus present at the Killing of the third Man, is not Guilty of Murder.

My Lords, there are but two Circumstances in the Case that can draw him into any Danger:

The First is, That he knew another Person had a Design to make an Assault upon a third Man. And

The Second is, That he who had the Knowledge of this Design, was also present when upon that Assault that third Person happened to be killed.

But, my Lords, I do take it, that in this Case neither of these Ingredients will make this Man Guilty of Murder.

As to the First, The knowing that a Man has a Design to make an Assault upon a third Person, That taken by itself is no Crime. It frequently happeneth, that a Man heareth what others threaten, that they will assault and beat such an one; I may know that another doth so design, and that he will watch his Opportunity for the doing of it; and yet my mere Knowledge, my mere knowing of it, doth not make me Guilty of any Crime, tho' I do not endeavour to prevent it.

I confess, it doth become a good Man upon such Knowledge to do all that he can to prevent such Beginning of Mischief; but if he doth not prevent it, that is no Crime.

The Second Matter is, That tho' he did know of this Design, he was also so unfortunate as not to prevent it; nay more, he was present when the Assault was made, and that Assault is attended with the Death of the Party assaulted; but he never acted in it, never abetted it. Take all this together, and yet he is not Guilty of Murder, nay, perhaps not of any Crime, at most only of a Misdemeanour.

For it is no more than this: I knew another Person did intend to assault a third Man; I was present when he did assault him, but did not prevent it either before he made it, tho' I knew he designed it, nor whilst he was making the Assault upon which the Man is killed. That is all that this Thing doth amount to; and no Man can say, with humble Submission, That this can involve me in the Crime of Murder.

It is true, if I command A to beat C, and he according to my Command doth fall upon him, and so beat him that he dieth; this maketh me Guilty of his Death, because what is done by that Command of mine is my doing; therefore tho' I only commanded him to beat him, yet he dying upon that Beating, which was made pursuant to my Command, I that gave the Command must answer for it, and am Guilty of all that followeth thereupon.

But if I only know that another Person designeth to do such a Thing, and am neither commanding, aiding nor assisting in the doing of it, but only present at the Time, but did not interpose to prevent it; that doth not make me such an Agent in this Matter, as that I should be any ways Guilty of his Death, if it doth ensue. I take it, this Case cometh to no more than this; there is no Malice precedent, no Sort of abetting, aiding or assisting, but a bare declining to prevent the Assault, and that will not amount to any Thing that is Capital: If it be any Offence, it can only be construed as a Misdemeanour, but neither Murder nor Manslaughter.

Mr. Hawles. If your Lordships please to spare me one Word on the same Side: It is no Manner of Crime for a Man to know, that another doth design to lie in wait to murder a third Person, much less to assault him.

There is but one Case that I know of in Law, where the Knowledge of an ill Design, without Discovery and Endeavour to prevent it, is an Offence, and that is in the Case of High-Treason; and yet even there the bare Knowledge doth not make a Man Guilty of Treason: And it was a hard Case if it should; for it is not in the Power of any innocent Man to say, that he shall not know of an ill Design, either of Murder or High-Treason.

It is true, in the Case of Treason, if I conceal it, it is a Crime; but it is not Treason, but only Misprision of Treason; which is Forfeiture of Lands, and perpetual Confinement in Prison during my Life: But it doth not extend to any other Matter; for tho' I know, and do conceal it, that is no Manner of Crime at all, tho' that is farther than this Case putteth it; for it only goeth to the Knowing, and not to the Concealing.

And, my Lords, with Submission, this would be likewise a hard Case, if the Law was otherwise: For sometimes a Man may apprehend the knoweth of a Design, when there is no such Thing designed. Your Lordships know, where a certain Gentleman said he would kill any Man that did oppose him, when he neither designed it, nor executed any such Purpose; And in such a Case, tho' it had been well done of the Person that heard of the Design, to have gone and informed the third Person (and if he had, I believe your Lordships would have had no Occasion of a Trial at this Time, for it might have been determined another Way); yet his not doing it is not a Crime.

Then further, my Lords, a Person's being present at such a Time is his Misfortune, but not at all his Fault; he can no more help the Action, than he could the ill Design, or his own Knowledge of that Design. It is a complicated Misfortune, both to know it, and be present at the Execution of it; but without having any Hand in it, it can be no Offence: For indeed, it is as to him no more than a Man's being present that did not know of such a Design. And if this was a Special Verdict, upon an Indictment for Murder, I doubt not but my Lords the Judges would give their Judgment, that the Defendant was Not Guilty.

Mr. Price. I have only this Word to add, my Lords: I do take it, That the bare Privy of this Design, with the bare personal Presence of him that was so privy when this Act is committed by another Man, will not amount to make him Principal; and so he will not be Guilty of Murder: For we find, that to make a Man Principal in Murder, there must be aiding and abetting, and only being present will not do it. Now the aiding and abetting must be, either by commanding or assisting, or putting the Person assaulted in Terror or Fear; or he must be there ready, and designing to assist in Case of Opposition. These are Facts that the Law requireth to the making a Man Principal in Murder: And bare Privy, with a Mind to assault, and bare Presence when upon the Assault the Man is killed, will not amount to make a Man Principal, and consequently Guilty of Murder.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, Do you think fit to say any thing to what the Counsel for the Prisoner have alledged?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Nor any other of the King's Counsel?

Mr. Sol. Gen. No, my Lord.

L. H. Stew. Are ye all of that Mind?

Mr. Serj. Tremain. I am of that Mind, my Lord.

Mr. Serj. Thompson. And so am I.

L. H. Stew. Then, my Lord Chief-Justice, what say you to it?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will repeat the Question:

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, who happeneth to be killed (when the Person who knew of the Design is present) be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design, and killed him, tho' he had no actual Hand in his Death?

My Lords, I am of Opinion, this is no Murder nor Manslaughter; he that knew of the Design of assaulting, only happened to be present when the Assault was made, and the Party killed; but if he did not contribute to his Death, he is not Guilty of Murder. This Question is much to the same Effect with the Question that was put before: But if the Person that knew of this Design did advise it, or agree to it, or lay in wait for it, or resolved to meet the third Person that was killed, with him that killed him, it would be Murder: But as this Case is put, it is neither Murder nor Manslaughter.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion, as this Case is put. The Person to whom this Matter of the Design to lie in wait to assault another is communicated, is only passive; he only receiveth the Notice of it, and doth nothing towards the Fact. But if by going to the Place, directing, persuading, promising Assistance, or encouraging, he had discovered his Consent, or had lain in wait himself, then he had been Guilty: But if he did nothing, but only receive this Notice, and then the Person assaulted happened to come by, and is killed in his Presence, this is but an Accident, and doth not involve him in the Murder. And I think, in Effect, it is the same with the second Question that was proposed. There it was put, of one that had an Animosity against another; here it is put, of one that lay in wait to assault him: There it was put, of accompanying him to the Place where the Party was killed; here it is, of his being killed in his Presence: So that the Resolution must be the same in this Case that was given in that.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, I shall not spend any of your Lordships Time: I am of the same Opinion with my Lords that spoke before, and for the Reasons that they have given.

L. H. Stew. If they are all of the same Opinion, I suppose your Lordships will not require their particular delivering it.

Lords. No, no.

Judges. We are all of the same Opinion.

L. H. Stew. I am now to know of your Lordships, Whether there be any of you that have any more Questions to ask?

E. of Nottingham. My Lord—

L. H. Stew. My Lord of Nottingham.

E. of Nottingham. The Question that I have to propose to your Lordship is the same that hath been already offered to you, but with some little Variation; for I do find, my Lords the Judges do interpret this Person's being killed in the Presence of another, to be upon an accidental Meeting. I would propose to your Lordships, that the Judges may answer what the Law would be, when a Person, knowing of the Design of another ther to lie in wait to assault a third Man, accompanied him at that Time that the Design is to be executed, Whether it be the same Crime in the one as the other?

L. H. Stew. If your Lordship have your Question in Writing, pray deliver it in.

E. of Nottingham. I will immediately, my Lord.

[Then he did put it in Writing.]

L. H. Stew. Will your Lordship please that it may be handed to the Table?

[Which was done.]

L. H. Stew. Read it.

Cl. of Cr. Readeth.

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Design, if it shall happen that the third Person be killed at that Time in the Presence of him who knew of that Design, and accompanied the other in it, be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, Do you desire a Copy of this?

L. Mohun. Yes, if your Lordships please.

L. H. Stew. Carry my Lord one.

[Then Copies were delivered as before.]

L. H. Stew. Well, Sir, what say you to that Question?

Sir Tho. Powys. The Case that is now propounded is this:

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Design, if it shall happen that the third Person be killed at that Time in the Presence of him who knew of that Design, and accompanied the other in it, be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had the Design, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

My Lords, (I shall not, though I am of Counsel for this noble Lord) decline or refuse speaking to this Question; still, my Lords, with that Saving which I know your Lordships will allow me, that I am very far from admitting that this, which goeth much farther than the last Case, is the Case of my Lord Mohun. Whether your Lordships will permit the King's Counsel, who have declined speaking to any of the Cases hitherto, as not being, as they pretend, my Lord's Case, now to speak to this which we do much less admit to be so, than they did the others, will be in your Lordships Pleasure to determine, but I shall not decline to speak to it, with that Saving.

And truly, my Lords, with humble Submission, I do take it, that as this Case is put, the Party who accompanied the other in such Manner as in this Case it is stated, is not guilty of Murder. I know it was intended by that Noble Lord who proposed the Question, that it should be admitted, that beyond all Doubt the Fact was so as here it is stated; and then the Question is, What the Law will be where the Fact is thus admitted and agreed to on all Sides: And if there was such a Case, (for, my Lords, I speak to this as a Case at large) if there was such a Case where the Fact is beyond all Question made out to be so as it is here stated; yet I take it that in a Case of Life, which is the Case now before your Lordships, the Party will not be guilty of Murder.

My Lords, here is a further Circumstance added in this Case than what hath as yet been inserted into any of the other Cases; that is, That the Party knoweth of the Design of him that he accompanieth to assault a third Man, and doth accompany him in his Design, and then is present when the Design is executed; yet all these together, will not, as I humbly conceive, with Submission to your Lordships Judgment, make this to be Murder, because it doth not appear in this Case that he did accompany him with an Intention to execute this Matter, or to aid and assist him in the doing of it: There is no such Circumstance in the Case, and 'tis that which must be the Thing that will draw him in to be guilty of Murder.

For if two Men (to put a Case, which I hope I may do, with your Lordships Pardon, to explain myself) should be travelling upon the Way, and one of the Persons should acquaint the other, that at such an Inn, there is a Servant that he is resolved to beat, and this Person that has this Matter imparted to him, doth accompany the other in the Journey (which I take it answereth the Knowing the Design, and Accompanying him in the Design), and when they come to the Inn, the Thing is executed in the Presence of the Party that knew of such a Design, and it doth fall out that Death doth ensue upon it, unless he that did accompany him did some way or other act, contribute, or assist in the doing of it, it doth still remain a thing whereof he had only Privy and Knowledge, which he had done well, especially (in regard of the Consequence of it) to have prevented; and he is highly blameable, that he would accompany a Man who had such a Design to do an unlawful Act, and did not prevent him from executing of it.

All this is blameable in him, but it will not, as I conceive, be Murder in him; for I must insist upon that in Point of Law, that to make any thing Murder, there must be prepensed Malice in the Person that is to be found guilty of it, or some precedent Agreement to do it, or some Act of Aiding or Assisting of the Person who doth it; but as this Case is, here is nothing of Malice doth appear, or that the Person who accompanied the other in his Design had any sort of Malice against the Person assaulted. And it doth not appear that he did any way assist in the doing of it. He was present at the Time when the other executed the Design he had imparted to him, but he never joined in it, nor had any Malice precedent, nor did assist or do any Act at that Time; and therefore I take it in this Case, which (as I said) I am very far from admitting to be my Lord Mohun's Case, that the Party who accompanied the other is Not Guilty.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, Though we who are of Counsel for this Noble Lord, the Prisoner, do not think this Case, that is put, to be his Case, for, with Submission, if the Indictment be looked upon, your Lordship will find—

L. H. Stew. Sir, I must stop you there, you are not to tell my Lords what your Opinion is as to the Fact, for of that my Lords are the Judges; you are to take the Case fairly, as a Case put, and you are to inform my Lords what the Law, in your Opinion, would be upon such Case. It is not before you, but before my Lords only, to consider whether this be applicable to my Lord Mohun's Case or not.

Mr. Hawles. If your Lordship please, I shall observe your Directions in that Matter, and with humble Submission, this is not Murder in him who accompanieth the other, as this Case is put; for in every Case of Murder the Indictment must be either, that he actually killed him, or aided and assisted him that did kill him. But, with Submission, there is neither of these in this Case.

He did know of the Design, there is no Crime; he did accompany him in it, that is, he bore him Company at that Time; he went with him to the Place where he executed his Design, but he did nothing when he came there to further, promote, or encourage the Execution of it; and therefore it can never make him Principal, nor Accessory to the Murder.

Mr. Price. I shall only say this, my Lords, that I take it, that the bare going with him in this Design, without doing any Act, doth not involve him in the Confederacy, as Aiding and Abetting. Something must be done or said; either he must assist or advise, or otherwise he cannot be Principal, and consequently cannot be guilty of this Murder.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, have you any thing to say to this?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we that are of the King's Counsel do not desire to be heard to this Case neither.

L. H. Stew. I do not hear you, Sir, what you say.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not desire to speak to it.

L. H. Stew. Then, my Lord Chief Justice.

L. C. J. Holt. This is the Question:

Whether a Person knowing of the Design of another to lie in wait to assault a third Man, and accompanying him in that Design, if it shall happen, that the third Person be killed at that Time in the Presence of him who knew that Design, and accompanied the other in it, be guilty in Law of the same Crime with the Party who had that Design, and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

My Lords, as for this last, I desire to make some Observations upon the Words, Had no actual Hand. By these Words, I suppose, is meant, he did not draw his Sword, or lay any Hand upon the Person slain, or give any actual Assistance to the other Person at that time when the Third Person is slain, but was only in Company, and a Looker-on.

E. of Nottingham. My Meaning in those Words is, That with his Hand he gave no Stroke.

L. C. J. Holt. That, my Lords, I take to be the Meaning, he did not give an actual Stroke, nor held the Person whilst the other killed him, nor used any Violence.

Now, I am of Opinion, my Lords, that this is Murder in the Person that did accompany the other in the Design. For he being acquainted with the Design, and knowing of the Intention of the Party to commit Murder, or do an unlawful Act, upon which Death might ensue, accompanying him in that Design, he shews an Approbation of it, and gives him greater Courage to put it in Execution; which is an Aiding, Abetting, Assisting, and Comforting; which are the Words used in such Indictments, and so my humble Opinion is, it is Murder in that Person that accompanied the other, as well as in him that did the Fact.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, as this Case is, I think the accompanying of him in that Design (which are the effectual Words upon which the Question turneth) is Murder.

Here is, first of all, the Party that designeth the Assault, and he doth, pursuant to that Design, make this Assault, and thereupon doth kill the Third Man; this undoubtedly is Murder in him, for here was Malice prepensed, an Intent of Bodily Hurt to the Party, and in Pursuance of this Intent, Death ensueth; this is unquestionably Murder in him.

Then the Question is, what Crime it is in him to whom this is made known, and who accompanied the other in that Design, knowing of it? I take this to be a Consent to the Design, and to the Execution of it. It is more than knowing and not revealing of it, though that was his Duty to have done (and so the Counsel for the Noble Lord did admit, that it was a Misdemeanor in him not to hinder such a Breach of the Peace).

But here, I say, is more than that: He goeth with him to the Place, and accompanieth him in order to the executing the Design, and this is an Aiding and Abetting of it. If a Man say to another, I intend to assault and beat such a one; come along with me, stand by me, and see it done; and the other consenteth, and accordingly goeth along with him, and accompanieth him while he beats and kills the Man; this is an Approving, Encouraging, and Emboldening of him in his mischievous Purpose, and shews such concurring Malice in that other Person, as renders him guilty of the same Crime with him that with his Hand and Weapon beat and killed the Man.

Mr. J. Nevil. My Lords, as this Case is, and as I take the Law to be, this is Murder. It is a Case of one's lying in wait, and another Person doth accompany him in the Design, he that did design the lying in wait having told it to him, and then he is present at the Execution. I take it as Law, if the Party is killed, he that is present, and cometh with the other upon that Design, shall be taken to come to assist or abet the other, or defend him if any thing of Opposition should happen, and that I take to be Murder.

L. H. Stew. Are you all of the same Opinion?

Judges. We are all of that Opinion, it is Murder in both in that Case.

E. of Devon. My Lords—

L. H. Stew. My Lord Steward.

E. of Devon. My Lords, I desire they may all give their Reasons, as well as their Opinions, as this Case is.

Mr. J. Gregory. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion with my Lords Chief Justices that spoke before me, that this is Murder, and my Reason is this: First, He knew of the Design, which was an unlawful Design; then he accompanied him, as this Case is put, not only to the Place, but in the Design, which differs the Case from his being present by Accident; for by his going along with him he doth encourage him to do that, which perhaps singly the other would not venture upon; and going and being present when the Design is executed, upon which the Man is slain, I take it he is as much guilty as the Person that struck the Stroke, in Point of Law.

Mr. J. Eyres. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion; I take it to be Murder in him that knew the Design, and did accompany the other in it, though he did nothing at all towards the killing of the Man.

For, my Lords, it is the Intention of the Party that diversifieth the Act. If he came there with an ill Intention, and to assist him in need did require, as it is plain he did if he did accompany him in the Design, which is a strong Evidence of the Intention: And

And, my Lords, Nature hath allowed no Man a Casement into another's Heart, and therefore we can judge of no Man's Intention, but by Circumstances of the Fact appearing without; and then, I say, if the Fact be so apparently from the Circumstances of it, that he knew of the Design, and accompanied him in it, it is a strong Evidence that he came to assist him; and though he doth nothing actually in the Matter, yet being present to assist him if Occasion did require, it is plain he did aid and abet him in the Action, and so it is as much Murder in him, as in the other that gave the Stroke.

Mr. B. Turton. My Lords, I am humbly of the same Opinion; the thing that differeth this from the former Case is, That this Person was in the Design with the other; for that, my Lords, I take to be accompanying him in the Design in order to the Execution of it, for bare Privy and Knowledge of the Design would not do it; but if he be with him at the Time, and accompany in order to the Execution, that maketh him as much criminal, as he that did actually occasion the Death of the Person, for he was present in the Company, and ready to assist him in the evil Design, which I conceive is as much Murder as the other.

Mr. B. Powell. My Lords, I am of Opinion, as this Case is now put, That this is Murder in both, and my Reason is this: Where one Person is privy to a Design of Felony, or committing some Personal Violence, as this Case is, and is not only privy to it, but goeth along with him, and accompanieth him in putting this Design in Execution, though he may not think it will extend so far as Death, but doth only intend Beating, and hath no Personal Hand, or doth otherwise contribute; but by his being with the other Person when he executeth his Design of assaulting, and the Party beaten dieth, they are both guilty of Murder.

L. Mobun. My Lords, Will your Lordships give leave, that my Counsel may answer some things that the Judges have said?

L. H. Steward. No, my Lord, you must not Reply after the Judges have given their Opinions. Have any of your Lordships any more Questions to propose?—L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I have one.

L. H. Steward. My Lord Cornwallis.

L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I am very sorry to have Occasion to ask any Questions in this Case, but I humbly desire a Question may be answered by the Judges, which is this:

If a Person be by, named William, when Thomas said he would stab John, upon which William said, He would stand by his Friend, and afterwards Thomas doth actually murder John, and William is present at the same Murder: Whether the Law will make William equally guilty with Thomas, or what Crime William is guilty of?

L. H. Steward. Pray deliver in your Paper, my Lord.

It was deliver'd in, and read by the Clerk of the Crown, and Copies given of it as before.

L. H. Steward. What say you to this Question, Gentlemen?

Sir T. Powys. May it please your Lordships, this Question runneth thus:

If a Person be by, named William, when Thomas said he would stab John; upon which William said, he would stand by his Friend; and afterwards Thomas doth actually murder John, and William is present at the same Murder: Whether the Law will make William equally guilty with Thomas, or what Crime William is guilty of?

My Lords, I do not question but many Cases may be put which will be plainly Murder, and if this Case should be attended with Facts equal to the State of this Case, I believe it will amount to Murder. But upon this Difference the Resolution of it will depend, and every Case must stand upon its own Circumstances.

If a Person do generally say, I am fully resolved I will stab such a Man, and say so without Condition or Limitation, that he will do it; and another doth declare his Intention to assist and aid him, by saying, I will stand by you in it, and afterwards the thing is executed in his Presence who so concurred; I do take it, that that is an Evidence that he is equally guilty with the other.

But, on the other hand, if a Man say, I will stab such a one if he oppose me in such a Design, and so maketh his Resolution conditional, and the Person that is present doth say, I will stand by you in it, that is in your doing it, if you are opposed in such a particular Matter; my Lords, with Submission, if he is not opposed in that particular Thing or Design upon which he did say he would stab him, but if he doth afterwards, upon some other Occasion different from the former, and not relating to what he was talking of before, or upon some other Provocation, stab him, and the other Person happeneth only to be present, I take it, that the Words which he spoke with a Limitation to a particular Matter, will not make him liable to the Guilt of the Murder that is committed upon quite another Account.

The Words, Standing by him, are capable of two Senses; but I would not, in so serious a Matter as this, offer to put a jocular Sense upon them, as if it was meant he would stand by and not meddle; but I take it, that such a Case as this will turn upon the Manner of the Man's engaging himself; if he engaged to stand by him in a particular Matter, and the other doth stab the threatened Person afterwards, not upon that particular Occasion, but upon another Account, and he happeneth only to be by, these Words will not draw him in, tho' they should be well proved to be spoken, so as to involve him in the Guilt of that Murder.

For the Law is favourable to a Man in the Case of Life, and will judge according to the Intention of the Party; and he having not abetted or contributed to the Fact, his Words shall not be carried to his Prejudice, farther than his Intention, or farther than the concomitant Circumstances of the Matter will make them plainly import.

This Case is put generally, and without Restraint; and there is no Question but many Cases may be put that will undoubtedly be Murder; but every Case must, as I said, stand and fall by its own Circumstances.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I think the Case, as it is put single, and upon these Circumstances, would be Murder; and my Reason is this, The Person that saith he will stand by a Man, who saith he will kill or stab another, is as much guilty as that Man himself, and will be thought as malicious; but if it should happen that between the Words pronounced, and the Murder committed, that the Person that saith he will stand by his Friend, cometh to have a Friendship and Kindness for the Party that is threatned to be killed, and upon meeting him carresses him extremely, and there being no Malice continuing (as there must be to the Time of the Stroke given, to make Murder), but he happened to be killed by that other, suddenly in his Presence, those Words will not make him guilty of Murder; but as the Case is put, I think it is Murder.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I shall not take upon me to trouble your Lordships with making a Case, but as this Case is put without any Condition, or other Circumstance annexed to it, I think it will be Murder.

L. H. Steward. There will be no need to ask the King's Counsel upon this Question whether they will speak to it, because the Counsel for the Prisoner agree it to be Murder; Therefore if your Lordships please, we may now proceed to ask the Judges Opinions: And first, What say you, my Lord Chief Justice?

L. C. J. Holt. My Lords, the Question is this:

If a Person be by, named William, when Thomas said he would stab John, upon which William said he would stand by his Friend, and afterwards Thomas doth actually murder John, and William is present at the same Murder: Whether the Law will make William guilty with Thomas; or what Crime William is guilty of?

My Lords, I am of Opinion that this is a great Evidence of Murder in William, that was thus actually by. I cannot say it is Murder, as the Case is put; but upon such an Evidence, Fact is to be left to the Conscience of a Jury in the Case of a Commoner, or the Conscience of the Peers in the Case of a Peer.

For when William said he would stand by his Friend, who said he would stab John, That is plainly a Consent, or at least such an Expression, from which a Consent to the Stabbing of him may be inferred.

Then afterwards it seemeth Thomas actually murdereth John, and William was present. Now if William was designedly present with the other that committed the Murder, then it is plain it will be Murder in William; but if there be no Evidence to prove upon what Account he was present, it may be presumed he was present in pursuance of his former Agreement, so that it may be Murder, or not Murder, as Circumstances may happen upon the Evidence: If he was present in pursuance of his Promise, then no doubt it is Murder; but if he did not meet in pursuance of that Agreement, it may not be Murder. But this is all Matter of Evidence, and that rests upon the Consciences of those that are to try the Prisoner.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I am of Opinion that this is Evidence, and great Evidence of Murder; the Fact consisteth of two Parts.

First, Here was a deliberate Expression of his Intention, that he would stand by his Friend Thomas, when his Friend Thomas had said before he would stab John, and this I take properly to be interpreted, and understood as a Promise of Abetting him in the Murder he would commit; for, I presume, standing by him in this Case to be meant in a grave Sense, signifying that he would befriend, and, if there should be Occasion, defend and support Thomas in what he resolv'd to do.

Secondly, He was present at the Stabbing, which was before designed and spoken of. Now I think his being present when that Resolution of his Friend was executed, coupled with his preceding Declaration of his Intention, is a strong Evidence of Murder.

Mr. J. Nevil. My Lords, the Question I take to be, Whether the Law of England saith William is guilty of this Murder? Truly, my Lords, I must say as my Lords have said before, that as this Case is, This is a very strong Evidence of Murder: For when he doth say, That he will murder such a Man, and the other saith, he will stand by him, in the common Acceptation of those Words, it is taken, that he doth then agree with him in that Design, which he declareth to be to stab John.

But then it seemeth to me truly, that this Case is not put full, how long it was afterwards that the Fact was done, and what Circumstances attended it; for if any Circumstance happened afterwards that did amount to a Countermand of this Promise, or any thing interposed to interrupt it, that this Agreement was not performed, perhaps the Case might not be Murder, but still it is Evidence so far as your Lordships may judge upon the Circumstances that attend it, whether it be Murder or no. But to declare a further Opinion, as this Case is put, truly I cannot.

Mr. J. Gregory. My Lords, I do upon this Case humbly conceive, there is a little Difference from the former, only there it is put positively, but here as Evidence. Now, my Lords, I do humbly conceive that in common Discourse, I will stand by my Friend, is, I will assist my Friend. If my Friend should say, I will kill such a Man, or I will do any other Act, and I say I will stand by him, I think the Import of the Words is, I will assist him in it.

My Lords, As to the latter Part, as this Case is put, for I can go no further, it doth not appear, whether when the Man was killed, he came by Accident, or in pursuance of his Agreement, knowing of the Design. Now that is but Matter of Evidence; if he came by Accident it will not be Murder, but if he came with Design, no doubt it is Murder in one as well as in the other.

E. of Mulgrave. My Lords—

L. H. Steward. My Lord of Mulgrave.

E. of Mulgrave. If any of my Lords desire that the rest of the Judges should give their Opinion, it is fit they should be heard; but if no Lord doth desire it, and they say they are of the same Opinion without any more to do, because it may save a great deal of Time; I desire your Grace may only ask them, Whether they agree in their Opinions with those that went before?

L. Cornwallis. My Lords, I humbly desire the Judges may all speak.

Lords. Go on then.

Mr. J. Eyres. My Lords, I humbly conceive this is a Question of Fact, and not of Law, and it is a very strong Evidence, if a Man hear another say he will stab such a Man, and he saith he will stand by his Friend, and accompanieth him at the Time when the Fact is done, it is a strong Evidence, that he came with a murderous Intent with his Friend; and doth as much manifest his Intention to commit Murder, as if he had actually given the Wound; and a great Evidence to involve him in the Crime, as much as the Person that gave the Stroke.

Mr. B. Turton. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion with my Lords and my Brothers that have spoken before me; my Lords, I confess I do not think it cometh up so close to the Matter as the Question that was put last before; for this, as my Brother Eyres saith, is rather a Question of Fact and Evidence, than Law. But certainly a very strong Evidence it is of the Intention of that Party that was present when the other said he would stab the third Person, and his going away presently, and accompanying him when the Stab was given, and Murder done, I say his Presence after this Determination is a very great Evidence, that it was done in Pursuance of that Agreement: It is a Matter of Fact which your Lordships will determine, according as the Circumstances appear before you, which may vary the Resolution one way or other.

Mr. B. Powell. My Lords, I am of Opinion as this Case is put, that it may be Murder or not Murder, according to the concomitant Circumstances. If a Man say, I will stab such a one, and another say he will stand by him, and afterwards when he is with his Friend, the Man is stabbed, if that is at some Distance of Time from the Words speaking, and the Meeting be accidental, or other Facts happen that may alter the Case, it may receive another Determination. But if after this is said, there be any immediate going to look after this Man, or they be near the way where this Man is to come, and then he is killed; this is a mighty strong Evidence that something was done in Pursuance of this Resolution, and that the one went along with the other to countenance him in the Action.

L. H. Stew. Have any of my Lords any other Questions to propose?

Lords. No.

Earl of Mulgrave. My Lords, If there had been any other Questions proposed by any other Lords, I would have staid till they had all been over; but I see their Lordships are at an End with their Questions: I have one which I think is nearer the Case than any has been yet, and of more Importance to the Matter in Hand, and more fit for the Counsel to inform you in, and for your Lordships to ask, and the Judges to answer. The Question is this:

If A accompanieth B in an unlawful Action, in which C is not concerned, and C happeneth to come in the Way of B, after the first Action is fully over, and happened to be killed by B, without the Assistance of A; Whether A is guilty of that Man's Murder?

This Quest. on was handed to the Table, read by the Clerk, and Copies given as before.

L. H. Stew. What say you to it, Gentlemen, who are of Counsel for the Prisoner?

Sir T. Powys. May it please your Lordships, I will not trouble your Lordships with the repeating of the Case again, because my Copy is agreeable with what was read at the Table: Nor shall I trouble your Lordships with many Words upon this Case, because I take it, the Law is very plain.

If two Persons accompany each other to do an unlawful Act, and in the Execution of that unlawful Act, one of them doth go beyond what was first designed, and a third Man is killed whilst they are in Execution of that Act, tho' the one did the Fact, and the other did not immediately contribute thereto, yet he being joined with him in the unlawful Action, upon which this doth ensue, he is answerable for all the ill Consequences of it; the Law herein is clear according to the Case that was put at first of two Persons going together to rob a Park and steal Deer.

But if that unlawful Action be executed, or the two Persons who joined in the Design have totally desisted from it, or are disappointed in it, if afterwards when they are together upon some other Occasion, it happeneth that one of them killeth another Man, but his Friend no way aided him or assisted him in the doing of it, your Lordships and the Law will separate these Persons who were at first joined together for another Purpose; and will distinguish between them in this new Matter that is subsequent to the former Agreement, tho' they were in Company together.

Because in the first Case, he that is joined in an ill Action must look to himself, and be answerable for all that followeth thereon: In the second Case, he is in no Fault at all, it is only his Misfortune to be in ill Company if he had no Hand in the Fact. This the Law is very plain in, and therefore I shall not trouble your Lordships further with speaking to it.

Mr. Hawles. My Lords, I would only add one short Word: There is but this one Difference between an Accessory and a Principal; The Principal is always present, the Accessory is always absent; and I would only put you one Case of an Accessory in Felony out of my Lord Coke; he saith, It must be the same numerical Thing in which they are joined, and therefore, if A bid B rob the Vintner's Boy of Plate as he cometh to a Gentleman's Chamber to bring Wine, but B doth not pursue the Instructions, but breaketh into the Vintner's House, and stealeth the Plate there; this is a different Matter, it is not the same Thing wherein A and B agreed at first, and A is no way concerned in it.

The same Law is, if A and B agree to kill C, and B killeth D; tho' A be present, it will not be Murder in A; for the Agreement was for the killing of C, and not of D.

My Lords, as this Case is put, they did agree in the unlawful Act, but that Matter was over, and there is no Agreement as to the other Matter, nor is that pursuant to the Matter agreed upon; and therefore the Presence of the Party that agreed to the unlawful Act doth not make him guilty of Murder, unless he agree to that too.

Mr. Price. My Lords, I have but one Word on the same Side. I take it, that when a Man is doing an unlawful Act, there is an inseparable Incident that doth attend it, which is Malice implied. And this is so inseparable, that when his ill Design is at an End, his Malice is at an End too, and hath no Being, and therefore if he entereth upon an ill Design afterwards, tho' another be present that was joined with him in the former ill Design, yet his Malice who was so joined, being coupled with the ill Design that is over, must be gone too; and there is no Malice in his being barely present. And therefore for that Reason, he that was aiding and assisting before, cannot be principal in such a sudden Act as this new one is, and consequently cannot be guilty of Murder, or of Manslaughter.

L. H. Stew. Mr. Attorney, Do you or any of the King's Counsel think fit to say any thing to this Question?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lords, we that are of the King's Counsel do not think we have any Occasion to be heard to this Question.

L. H. Stew. Then, my Lords the Judges, what say you to it?

L. C. J. Holt. If your Lordships please, I will again repeat the Question; it is this:

If A accompanieth B in an unlawful Action, in which C is not concerned, and C happeneth to come in the way of B, after the first Action (that is, the unlawful Action, I suppose) is fully over, and happeneth to be killed by B, without the Assistance of A; whether A is guilty of that Man's Murder?

And I do humbly conceive with great Clearness, That A is not guilty at all. For here is no Relation to the first unlawful Act that he was engaged in, but that is all over and determined; and then C cometh in the Presence of B, who killeth him, and of A who had no Knowledge of any Malice between them, or any Design of his Death. This is merely accidental, and doth not depend upon the first unlawful Action; and therefore A is not guilty.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lords, I think there can be no Difference of Opinions in this Case: For it is plain there was an unlawful Action in which they did agree, (as a Riot or Assault to beat or wound a Man or the like) and if Death had ensued, they both had been guilty of Murder, as well he that looked on, as he that gave the mortal Wound. But then the Question added further, That the Action to which they agreed was fully over, and there only happeneth to be a Continuance of their Presence together; and there being an old Grudge between one of the Parties and a third Man, and the Party who had that old Grudge, meeting with his Enemy, executeth it then upon him, and murdereth him; this doth in no Sort affect the other that was present, and had joined in the former unlawful Action that was over. In the former, he did join and concur, and therefore if Death had ensued, they had been both guilty: In the latter, he did not join and concur; and therefore though Murder did happen in his Presence and Company, he is not guilty, but only the Party that actually killed is.

Mr. J. Nevill. My Lords, I am of the same Opinion.

L. H. Stew. If you are all of the same Opinion, I think you need say no more.

Judges. We are all of the same Opinion, my Lords.

L. H. S. My Lords, all the Judges are of the same Opinion; and now I think it is your Lordships Resolution to adjourn to the House.

Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. This Court is Adjourned to the House of Lords.

And then the Lords returned to their House in the same Order, and there presently Adjourned till the next Morning.

Die Sabbati Quarto Februarii 1692.

About four of the Clock in the Afternoon, the Lords came from their House in the former Order into the Court in Westminster-Hall: and being seated on their Benches, and his Grace the Lord High-Steward in the Chair before the Throne, Proclamation was made for Silence; and the Judgment of the Peers was demanded, and delivered in this Manner.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, Your Lordships have now heard all the Evidence both against the Prisoner and for him: The next Thing is your Lordships Judgment, and for that the Method is this, Your Lordships Opinions are to be delivered in the Absence of the Prisoner. The Question that your Lordships are to deliver your Opinion about will be this:

Whether my Lord Mohun be guilty of the Murder of William Mountford, whereof he stands indicted, or Not guilty?

The Order of delivering your Opinions must be, to begin with the youngest Baron, and so upwards; and therefore I must desire your Lordships to allow me to take your Judgments distinctly, and that I may write them down.----Lords. Ay, ay.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Lemster, Is my Lord Mohun guilty of the Murder whereof he standeth indicted, or not guilty?

The Lord Lemster stood up in his Place uncovered, and laying his Right-hand on his Breast, pronounced his Judgment thus:

L. Lemster. Not guilty upon my Honour.

The same Question was severally asked of all the Lords, who in the same Form delivered their Opinions as followeth:

L. Capel. Guilty upon my Honour.

L. Ashburnham. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Cholmondeley. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Godolphin. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Osborne. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Arundel of Trerice. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Crew. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Cornwallis. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Granville. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Berkley of Stratton. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Lexington. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Lucas. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Clifford of Lansborough. Guilty upon my Honour.

L. Colpeper. Guilty upon my Honour.

L. Vaughan. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Fermyn. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Leigh. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Lovelace. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Brooke. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Hunsdon. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Chandois. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Willoughby of Parham. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Evers. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Fitzwalter. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Morley. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Berkley of Berkley. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. De-la-Ware. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. Willoughby of Eresby. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Viscount Villiers, &c.

Visc. Villiers. Not guilty upon my Honour.

Visc. Longueville. Not guilty upon my Honour.

Visc. Weymouth. Guilty upon my Honour.

Visc. Newport. Not guilty upon my Honour.

L. H. Stew. Earl of Warrington, &c.

Earl of Warrington. Guilty upon my Honour.

Earl of Scarborough. Not guilty upon my Honour.

Earl of Marlborough. Not guilty upon my Honour.

Earl of Montague. Not guilty upon my Honour.

Earl of Monmouth. Guilty upon my Honour.

Earl of Falconberg. Not guilty upon my Honour.

Earl of Portland. Guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Abingdon. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Rochester. Guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Nottingham. Guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Radnor. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Macclesfield. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Feversham. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Craven. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Carlisle. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Bath. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Essex. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Sandwich. Guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Scarisdale. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Sunderland. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Thanet. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Chesterfield. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Carnarvon. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Kingston. Guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Stamford. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Rivers. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Mulgrave. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Manchester. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Westmoreland. Guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Bullingbrook. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Clare. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Denbigh. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Northampton. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Bridgewater. Guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Bedford. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Huntingdon. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Kent. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Shrewsbury. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Earl of Oxford. Guilty upon my Honour.
 L. H. Stew. My Lord Chamberlain, &c.
 Earl of Dorset. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 L. H. Stew. My Lord Steward, &c.
 Earl of Devon. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 L. H. Stew. My Lord Great Chamberlain, &c.
 Earl of Lindsey. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 L. H. Stew. My Lord Marquiss of Halifax, &c.
 L. Marquiss of Halifax. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 L. H. Stew. My Lord Duke of St. Albans, &c.
 Duke of St. Albans. Not guilty upon my Honour.

Duke of Northumberland. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Duke of Ormond. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Duke of Somerset. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Duke of Norfolk. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 L. H. Stew. My Lord Privy Seal, &c.
 Earl of Pembroke. Not guilty upon my Honour.
 Then his Grace the Lord High Steward stood up uncovered, and laying his Right Hand on his Breast, pronounced his Grace's own Judgment thus:
 L. H. Stew. My Opinion is, That my Lord Mohun is not guilty upon my Honour.

Then his Grace seated himself again in the Chair, and numbered up the Opinions of the Peers.

L. H. Stew. My Lords, I have carefully taken your Lordships Opinions, and find the Numbers to be thus: My Lords that have found my Lord Mohun to be Guilty are Fourteen; my Lords that have found him Not guilty are Sixty-nine. Call for the Prisoner.

Proclamation was made for the Chief Governor of the Tower to bring forth the Body of the Prisoner, and he was brought to the Bar as before: And Proclamation for Silence was made.

L. H. Stew. My Lord Mohun, you have been indicted for the Murder of William Mountford; upon your Arraignment you have pleaded Not guilty, and have put yourself upon the Judgment of your Peers; and your Peers have considered what hath been said both for and against you, and the Judgment of my Lords is this, That your Lordship is Not Guilty: Your Lordship is therefore discharged. Make Proclamation for dissolving the Commission.

Cl. of Crown. Serjeant at Arms, make Proclamation.

Serjeant. O Yes.

Cl. of Crown. Again.—Serjeant. O Yes.

Cl. of Crown. Again.—Serjeant. O Yes.

Cl. of Crown. My Lord High Steward of England his Grace doth straightly Charge and Command all manner of Persons who have given their Attendance here, to depart hence in the Peace of God, and of our Sovereign Lord and Lady the King and Queen; for his Grace the Lord High Steward of England intendeth to dissolve his Commission.

Which the Serjeant at Arms repeated, and at the End of it, his Grace standing up, and holding the White-Staff in both his Hands, broke it in two, by which his Commission was dissolved.

Marq. of Carmarthen. Is it your Lordships Pleasure to Adjourn to your own House?

Lords. Ay, Ay.

Marq. of Carmarthen. This House is Adjourned into the House of Lords, And then the Peers returned to their own House in the same Order.

CLII. Proceedings between the King and THOMAS KENDALL and RICHARD ROE, in the King's Bench, on an Habeas Corpus upon a Commitment for High Treason. Mich. 7 Gull. III. Octob. 31. 1695.

ON Thursday October the 31st 1695, the Prisoners being brought up into Court on the Habeas Corpus, the Keeper of Newgate, to whom the Writ was directed, returned the Cause of their Detainer to be a Warrant under the Hand and Seal of Sir William Trumball, Knight, one of His Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, and principal Secretary of State, directed to the Keeper of Newgate, or his Deputy, prout sequitur. "These are in his Majesty's Name to authorize and require you, to receive into your Custody the Bodies of Thomas Kendall and Richard Roe, herewith sent you, they being charged with High Treason, in being privy to, and assisting the Escape of Sir James Montgomery, out of the Custody of William Sutton, one of His Majesty's Messengers in Ordinary, and charged with High Treason. You are to keep them in safe and close Custody, until they shall be delivered by due course of Law: And for so doing this shall be your Warrant. Given at the Court at Whitehall the 24th Day of Oct. 1695."

Sir Bartholomew Shower moved that the Return might be read, and then that it might be filed. And Mr. Attorney owning that he had been attended with a Copy of it, and having nothing to say against it, the same was accordingly filed.

Then Sir Bartholomew Shower took Exceptions to the Return.

Sir Bart. Shower. My Lord, I am of Counsel for these two Prisoners; and what we desire at present is only that they may be bailed, though perhaps we might press to have them discharged, and that upon good Reason.

To induce your Lordship to bail them, I must beg your Lordship's Pardon, and I hope Mr. Attorney will hold me excused, if I make a Question whether the Person committing hath any Authority for such a Purpose; it is for my Clients, who think themselves aggrieved by this Imprisonment; and in Truth they say, That they are somewhat hardly dealt withal in this Case; for the Information against them is only for being privy to and assisting the Escape of the Centinels, who were privy to Sir James Montgomery's Escape: But this is Fact, of which the Court will not take Notice, and therefore I shall confine myself to the Return, as it appears before your Lordship.

With Submission I must insist upon it, that a Secretary of State, quatenus Secretary, cannot commit for Treason or Felony; he is not an Officer for such a Purpose in common Parlance. The Word Secretary imports only a Writer of Letters or other Escripts for a Superior; and as Spelman explains the Word, this is the Sense of it, with the Addition of Secrecy, of Privacy; and so is his Glossary upon that Word. He is not a Privy Counsellor quatenus a Secretary, nor is he a Justice; and though perhaps in Fact he may be in the Commission, yet unless he hath taken the Oath of that Office upon a Dedimus, he cannot act as such: And I have seen five or six Privy Counsellors at a Time appearing at a Sessions of the Peace for this County, in the Case of the Duke of Bedford's Power as Custos Rotulorum, to remove the Clerk of the Peace; and when Intimation was made to them of the Justices Oath, which they had not taken, they refused to vote, and did thereupon withdraw. Here Sir William Trumball cannot be presumed or intended to be a Justice of the Peace, because the Commitment by him is as Secretary, and not as Justice; and so is the Return: And upon the Return, the Authority by which he commits ought to appear, otherwise the Return is vicious; and here doth appear none but that of Secretary. Now if the Office of Secretary doth not imply and carry in it a Power of Committing, then this Commitment is erroneous.

Our Constitution hath distributed the Administration of Justice, both in criminal and civil Causes, into several Courts, and hath appointed several Officers for several Purposes, some for civil, some for criminal Matters; and in Criminals some are to examine and commit, others to obey and carry, others to receive and keep; some to try and sentence, others to execute; each hath his proper Province: And of those your Lordship will take Notice, as also of their several Duties and Powers, and so do our Law Books. But a Secretary is a Court Officer of State, not relating to the Administration of Justice.

You take Notice, as do our Books, of Head-boroughs, Constables, Sheriffs, Coroners, Escheators, and the like: But neither Coke, Crompton, Fitzherbert, Smith, or any Book which treats of the Jurisdiction of Courts, the Pleas of the Crown, or the Officers of Justice, do ever mention a Secretary of State; his Office rather relates to foreign Negotiations than domestick; and if any Home Affairs fall under his Cognizance, it is rather as an Intelligencer, than with any Relation to Criminals, Prisons, or Gaolers, &c. In all the Debates about the Liberty of the Subjects, and wrongful Commitments, which were in Parliament in 4 Car. I. or 1628, and amongst all the Precedents mentioned there upon each Side, which are Multitudes, there is none by a Secretary: It is true, there are divers per mandatum Dom' Regis, by Warrant from the Lords of the Council. I have perused Dr. Franklin's Annals of King James the 1st. fol. 261. and Rushworth, Vol. I. 458. and can find none by a Warrant from a Secretary. I have read Coke's, Selden's, and Littleton's Arguments upon that Subject, but see nothing of a Secretary's Commitment. And it seems very strange, if such a Power were lodged in this State Officer, that there should be no Precedents for it in those Times, when extrajudicial and general Warrants were so frequent, that they became a Grievance to the People, and such a one as laid the Foundation for the Petition of Rights.

I shall not controvert the Power of the Council at present, because it doth not concern the present Question: All that I can observe in the Case is, that it first began to be practised in Sir Lionel Jenkins's Time; and yet even in 1678, when the Popish Plot had increased the Number of Prisoners to a wonderful Degree, it is notoriously known, that the Chief Justice Scroggs was frequently and often sent for to Whitehall to examine, and commit, and grant Warrants. And some time since the Secretaries of State have thrown that Burden off from themselves upon their Secretaries under them, who have been sworn Justices of the Peace; and Mr. Bridgeman hath accordingly executed the Office of a Justice of Peace at Whitehall, and that frequently. It hath been a Question, Whether a Chancellor or Keeper of the Great Seal can commit? And the better Opinion hath been, that he cannot: And it seems to be agreed by Glanville's and other Cases in Moore's Reports, 839, &c. that his Commitment is illegal, unless for a Cause within his Jurisdiction, as a Court of Equity; and the Matters must so appear. I must agree, that any Man may apprehend another for Felony or Treason; but there is a vast Difference between an arresting of a Traytor or Felon upon Suspicion or Knowledge, and a formal Commitment to Prison, with a Charge of Treason. And I am sure Mr. Attorney-General will not insist upon this Reason; for then the Consequence will be, that any Man may commit as well as a Secretary: And I suppose that Doctrine will scarce be allowed, though I think that any Man may as well as he. The Reason of an Apprehension upon Suspicion, or Hue and Cry, or the like, is not to detain, but to carry to a Constable or Justice, as in 3 Inst. 52. Then here the Gaoler doth not return that he detains him, because he is guilty or suspected, but because by Virtue of a Warrant he is committed to his Custody.

Besides, the Reason of our Law is against it; for a Secretary cannot administer an Oath. Now the Law requires, that no Man should be committed by an extrajudicial Warrant, unless upon Oath. If there be but a Suspicion, there ought to be Oath of the Cause of that Suspicion; for the Person committing cannot commit upon another's Suspicion, unless there be Oath of some reasonable Cause for it. He cannot take Bail for any Person accused, he cannot take a Recognizance to prosecute: And I may very well challenge any Man living to shew me any one Recognizance ever returned into any Court, that was taken by a Secretary, either for Appearance of a Criminal, or for the Prosecution of one: And the Practice is always otherwise; for they have often taken Bonds to the King, with Condition to appear here. And your Lordship and the Court hath often had much Trouble in that Matter; for though they were bound to appear here, the Court hath refused to record their Appearance, because no Recognizance returned or taken, whereupon to found such an Appearance.

Now it seems strange, nay absurd, that our Constitution, which we admire for its Wisdom, should appoint an Officer who should commit, and yet cannot give an Oath whereon to found a Commitment, that cannot bail, that cannot take any Recognizance to prosecute: This is to make the Liberty of the Subject very precarious, notwithstanding the many Laws and Sayings of Judges in favour of it.

A Secretary is not obliged within the Statutes that require Justices to return the Informations and Examinations of the Persons accused, and Witnesses; which is a Method prescribed by the Wisdom of our Ancestors, both for the Service of our King and the Subject; and may upon several Occasions prove useful to each.

This I may say, That Mr. Secretary Coventry did scruple it; and upon good Advice, even from Sir William Jones, he took the Oath of a Justice of Peace. Now, my Lord, I think that those Exceptions to this Power of a Secretary may very well be thought to render it so far a doubtful Question, as to induce Mr. Attorney not to oppose our being bailed, to avoid any further mention of this or any other Question.

But supposing that a Secretary can commit, yet in this Case the Parties ought to be bailed according to the Habeas Corpus Act; for the Act commands, that they shall be forthwith bailed, unless they be committed for Treason or Felony, specially mentioned and expressed in the Warrant; and if it be specially expressed, then upon Prayer, if not indicted, they are to be bailed the last Day, &c. Now here the Commitment of a Person charged with Treason, if it goes no further, then unquestionably the Parties ought to be admitted to Bail, because that the High-Treason is not specially expressed; so a Commitment for Felony generally would bring a Man within the Benefit of the Act to be bailed, because the Species of the Felony is not expressed. This is plain, and cannot be denied. Then I must further argue, that if the Facts mentioned after the Word High-Treason be not, or cannot be Treason, it must be allowed to me, that it is the same as if it had been for High-Treason generally, and without more Words: For if there be not a Species of Treason expressed, then we are still admissible to Bail; this must be acknowledged.

Now that the subsequent Matter expressed after the Word Treason is not any Species of Treason, I shall endeavour to make out thus: A being privy to, and assisting the Escape of Sir James Montgomery out of the Custody of a Messenger, and charged with High-Treason, is not any Species of Treason, it is not Treason.

First, I may with a great deal of Colour make a Question, Whether the rescuing or helping the Escape of one in Custody for Treason, be Treason, or only Felony? If the latter, then the Commitment is erroneous.

At the Common Law, the helping any Prisoner to escape was Felony, and so is, 2 Inst. 589. Now the Law in this Respect is not altered otherwise than by 1 Edw. II. de frangentibus Prisonam, and that Statute was rather to make it less penal than more; and if to promote the Escape of one imprisoned for Treason, was at the Common Law but Felony, then this Statute seems not to make it a greater Offence; for it is in the Negative, that none shall undergo Judgment of Life or Member for the breaking of Prison, unless the Cause for which the Imprisonment was, did require such a Judgment, if the Party were convicted.

The Lord Hale, in his Pleas of the Crown, saith, that Breach of Prison turns into Felony only, though the Party were committed for Treason; though in another Place he seems to be of another Opinion. Now my Argument to make this a Doubt is this: By 2 Hen. VI. Cap. ult. to break Prison when committed for Treason, is declared to be Treason; which would be needless, if it had been Treason before. By 25 Edw. III. nothing is to be Treason, but what is there declared to be such; and by 1 Mar. all Treasons and Declarations of Treasons made by any Act of Parliament since 25 Edw. III. are repealed. So that by this Way of arguing such Escape was only Felony.

There is one Case, viz. Beufied's, 16 Car. I. Jones Rep. 415. upon an Insurrection in Surrey, where it is held, that if a Man be committed for Treason, and another breaks the Prison, and by that Means the Traytor escapes, this was Treason in the Rescuer, and there was one accordingly indicted and arraigned; but I find that he was acquitted; and though the Books say it was for Want of full Evidence, yet it is more than probable, that it was the best Ingredient in his Case, that the Judges doubted what Offence it was, whether Treason or Felony. Now that Case is founded upon Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, 32. and all that is in Stamford is a Quotation of a Case in the Year Book, viz. in 1 Hen. VI. 5. That the Escape of a Traytor imprisoned was held Treason: But there it is put with a quod nota, as a strange Thing, and some call it Petit Treason. But however, it was a strange Thing, since we find in 2 Hen. VI. an Act of Parliament made to declare it Treason; which is improbable that such a Law should be made, if the Judges had the Year before justly condemned the poor Rescuer. So that either they doubted the Law of that Case, or that Case had some other Ingredient in it than the Book informs us of.

This is not for receiving, aiding, and comforting a Traytor, knowing him to be such, as was the Case of Abington, who aided Henry Garnet, the Superior of the Jesuits, in 3 Inst. 138. but this is only for assisting the Escape: But supposing that such an Assistance to escape, or rescue of one committed for Treason, were Treason, and not Felony, yet in this Case, as this Warrant is, it is neither Felony nor Treason; for,

Secondly, Here is no legal Commitment of Sir James Montgomery; and consequently the helping him to escape is not Treason. My Lord Cole 3 Inst. 70. on 1 Edw. II. says, That a voluntary Escape of a Prisoner can be no Felony, unless the Prisoner be under lawful Custody by a lawful Warrant expressing the Offence. Now there can be no Pretence, but that the same Rule must hold in Case of a Traytor's Escape, as to the Warrant of Commitment, and Lawfulness of Custody, as doth in Case of Felony. Now if the Party commanded to receive, or the Party to whose Custody he is committed, were no lawful Officer, then such Custody cannot make the Rescuer guilty of any capital Offence. Co. 2 Inst. 550. saith, That false Imprisonment is not within the Law in this Case; now there can be no lawful Warrant in this Case, because the Officer was not a lawful one. This is not the Case of one carrying to Prison, for then it would have been so expressed; but here it is under the Custody of a Messenger, and charged with Treason, which supposes it a Custody with a Charge by way of Commitment. Then my Lord Cole explains what is a lawful Warrant, and that is two-fold; either when the Offence appeareth by Matter of Record, as a Capias upon an Indictment, Inquisition, or Presentment; or when it doth not appear so, but only upon Oath, that a Felony is committed, and the Party is committed for the same to Gaol. And he tells us, That there is a great Diversity between them; for in the first, the breaking of Prison is Felony, tho' there were none committed: But in the other Case, where there is no Record of an Accusation to found a Commitment on, if there be no Felony committed by him who is committed to Prison for a supposed Felony, the Breach of Prison is no Felony. Now this makes another good Exception to the Return, that here doth not appear, that there was either an Indictment or Appeal, or that there was a Felony or Treason committed; and one of them is necessary.

There must be a Felony done at the time of the Commitment; for a Relation, which is a Fiction in Law, shall never make a third Person a Felon; as Plowd. 401. If there be a Stroke or Wound one Day, and Death ensues upon another Day, this is Murder in the Party from the first Stroke; but the rescuing of such a Criminal before the Death is no Felony; which further shews, that a Felony done is necessary to make the Escape a capital Offence.

In 2 Inst. 591. Coke saith two or three times in four Pages, That the Weight of the Business depends upon the Lawfulness of the Warrant, or Mittimus; and he saith, that it must be in Writing, in the Name, and under the Seal of him that makes the same, expressing his Place, Office, and Authority, by force whereof he makes the Mittimus: as is to be directed to the Gaoler; and it must contain the Cause more especially, and with more Certainty, than a Writ of Capias need to do, because the latter is founded upon a Record, unto which a Resort may be had. Then he saith, That if a Warrant be not lawful, it is no Felony in the Gaoler to suffer him to escape. Now here, we say, it doth not appear what the Warrant was, upon which Sir James was in Custody; and a Messenger is not a lawful Gaoler; he is merely a Conveyancer of a Message, Notice, or Summons; and the Practice of making their several Houses Prisons is but of late Date; our Law-Books do take no notice of him as any legal Officer.

Gaolers have Fees, are subject to Prosecutions for Extortion; a Messenger is not within the Laws concerning it; for he cannot take Fees Colore Officii, who hath no Office; he is, at most, but a Gentleman Porter. I have often heard this Method of Commitments to the Custody of Messengers severely censured; and though any Man may be ordered to carry another to a Prison, yet he cannot therefore become a Gaoler to detain him, as some Messengers have done, for Nine or Eleven Months, or more. How long Sir James was in Custody, I cannot tell; but surely the Law, which requires Commitments to the County Gaols, is sufficient Evidence of the Insufficiency of a Messenger's Power to detain; and if he could not legally detain, the Consequence must be, that the Escape or Rescue is no Treason.

Besides, here it doth not appear, that Sir James was in Custody for Treason; it is said, that he was in Custody, and charged with Treason: The last might be upon Accusation by Oath, or by an Indictment, and yet not charged in Custody with Treason.

Then it is not said with what Treason Sir James was charged; it might be for such a Treason, wherein the receiving or helping to escape was not Treason; and it might be for Treason generally, and then Sir James was bailable; and it will be hard to exclude the Rescuer from Bail, who the Person rescued might challenge it.

Then further, though the Warrant be lawful, and in particular for Felony, and the Gaoler do willingly suffer him to escape, yet till the Prisoner is attainted, the Gaoler shall not answer to the Escape, though the Prisoner be indicted; and there is a very good Reason assigned for it, because the Felony of the Prisoner shall not be tried between the King and the Gaoler, for that he is a Stranger to it. Now a Rescuer or Assistant of an Escape is the same with a Gaoler in this Case, and shall not be in a worse Condition. It is true, the Party himself, if he breaks Prison, may be indicted for the Escape before he be tried for the Felony: Now the Reason of this holds for our being bailed, for that it is impossible that we can be tried in this Case, because Sir James Montgomery is dead, and was never attainted, or so much as indicted. Lord Hale agrees with this too; that if the Prisoner break Prison, he may be arraigned of it before he be convicted of the first Felony; but the Gaoler permitting a voluntary Escape, shall not be arraigned till the Prisoner be first attainted; for if the Prisoner be acquitted, the Gaoler is punishable as to any Capital Offence, or if the Prisoner die before Attainder, the Rescuer shall only be fined and imprisoned.

Now supposing the assisting the Escape of one committed for Treason, as some Books seem to say, shall make the Rescuer partake of the same Crime, for which the Party rescued was committed; yet if a Secretary cannot commit, or if a Messenger's House be not a lawful Prison*, or if Sir James Montgomery's Offence be not specially enough expressed, or if by reason of his Death the Escape be only finable, then these Prisoners ought to be bailed.

Mr. Attorney General, et contra, said, that they ought not Sir Tho. Trevor. to be bailed, because committed for Treason specially expressed; that harbouring a Traitor, knowing him to be such, was Treason; that there were no Accessories, but all Principals in Treason; that rescuing him was a comforting of him; that to rescue a Felon, was Felony; to rescue a Traitor, was Treason; that a Messenger was a lawful Officer, and that any Man might imprison a Traitor; that Sir James Montgomery's Death was Matter of Evidence upon the Trial; that they need not set forth a Treason committed, or an Attainder, though perhaps it would be necessary to prove it when the Prisoners came to be tried; that the Power of a Secretary to commit had been settled (but he could not say when); that there were many Precedents, which he doubted not to produce, and therefore prayed time to look into it.

Mr. Solicitor spoke much to the same effect, with this Sir J. Hawles. further, That the Prisoner's Counsel admitted, that the Privy Council might commit, and a Secretary of State was much more antient; that as to the Messenger, a Gaoler de facto was within the Law; that those Persons were wrong Doers, and that they could not take advantage of their own wrong; and therefore the Insufficiency of Sir James Montgomery's Commitment was not material; and that this Warrant need not be so certain and special as an Indictment, which must have Time and Place; and that if Commitments be good in Substance, the same was enough; and therefore prayed that they might be remanded.

Sir Bartholomew Shower replied, That the Commitment of a Secretary was never yet allowed; that the same was always complained of; that tho' it were Treason to rescue one committed for Treason, yet here it did not appear to be so; that though in Trespasses a Man cannot take Advantage of his own Wrong, yet that was not the Question; because if Sir James was not legally in Custody, then this Fact was not Treason; that the Insufficiency of his Commitment was an Advantage allowable, especially in favorem vite; that though Sir James's Death did not appear upon the Return, yet it was a Reason to induce the Court to bail, since they might bail in Cases of High Treason specially expressed; and if the Court were informed that they could not be tried, it would be hard to detain them in Custody.

Lord Chief Justice Holt. How were the Commitments at Common Law before Justices of Peace were instituted? It is true, my Lord Coke saith, that none could be imprisoned till Indictment; but that deserves Consideration. If you were to enquire, and search in the Tower, undoubtedly you will find Commitments there by Secretaries of State; look into the Resolutions in Anderson.

Mr. Just. Roakeby. I can see no reason upon the whole matter, why they should not be bailed; but since Mr. Attorney is not prepared, and has had so little Notice, it is fit he should have time. Accordingly Wednesday next was appointed.

Then Sir Bartholomew Shower moved, that they might have their Wives and Friends, and a Solicitor come to them, for that hitherto they had been kept close Prisoners. [Which was granted accordingly.]

Upon Wednesday the sixth of November the Prisoners were brought up by Rule of Court; and Sir Bartholomew Shower moved again, that they might be bailed, and that if Mr. Attorney thought fit to oppose it, he prayed to be further heard, for that he had more matter to alledge to justify the former Exceptions to the Return.

Then Mr. Attorney, and Mr. Solicitor, and Sir William Williams came into Court.

Lord Chief Justice. Mr. Attorney, here are Kendall and Roe brought up by Rule, and their Counsel desire to know whether you oppose their being bailed; for if you do, they desire to be further heard to the Return; you had best consider of it.

Mr. Attorney General. I should not have so much opposed it, but that several Questions have been made and argued here at the Bar; as, that a Secretary hath not power to commit, that this Escape is not Treason, that a Messenger is not a legal Officer; and since these things have been started, I must insist upon it that this is a good Return, and that they ought to be remanded.

L. C. Justice. Then we must hear them again.

Sir Barth. Shower. My Lord, we do with Submission insist upon it, as I did the other Day, that a Secretary is not such an Officer, as hath a Power of committing for Felony or Treason: I have further looked into it, and do find somewhat in the Books concerning it, more than the King's Counsel did last time urge, but not enough to warrant such a Power in the Office of a Secretary, and a great deal more against it. What I find I shall offer to your Lordship's Consideration, as it appears upon the Words of the Books, and submit it to your Judgment.

My Lord, I have perused the Resolutions of the Judges in 34 Eliz. 1.

Vol. IV.

Anderson 297, 298. and I must own that it is there said, that one or more of the Lords of the Council may commit; how far that is Law, I shall endeavour to examine presently: But now I have named it, I would beg your Lordship to observe another of those Resolves; though it would be more proper anon, yet I will just mention it here, and that is, that there is a Resolution which condemns this Return, it destroys a Power of a Messenger's Office, and, if it be Law, my Clients ought to be bailed; it complains that divers Persons were against Law committed to Prison in private Places, and not to any common or ordinary Prisons, or lawful Officers, as the Sheriff, or other Person lawfully authorized to have or keep a Gaol: so that upon Complaint made, the Queen's Courts could not learn to whom to direct her Majesty's Writs, and by this means Justice could not be done. Now this seems directly calculated for the 42 doct messick Prisoners, at the Pleasure of the Messengers; and if Mr. Attorney will allow these Resolutions to be of any Authority in one part, he must agree it to be the same in the others.

But I shall not need it in respect of the Messengers Franchises, and therefore shall offer some things to your Consideration against those Resolutions.

In the first place they are extrajudicial, and not the Opinion of Judges upon their Oaths in any Matter before them; and I am sure my Lord Coke did refuse to subscribe his Opinion upon such Occasions. They are such Opinions, as the Judges may and often have varied from, when the Point hath come judicially in Question before them. Several of the Judges did so in the Case of the Ship-Money; and if they were not binding to the Judges who gave the Opinions, much less can they be binding to their Successors, as legal Resolutions; and if they be Law, yet they do not relate to the Office of Secretary, but only to that of a Privy Counsellor. Now we do, without any Disrespect to Authority, for our Clients, insist upon it, that that Resolution is not Law, that one single Privy Counsellor may commit for Treason.

In the first place, what is there said, can never be reconciled to the Rules of Law, that Persons committed by them ought not to be delivered; for those general Commitments were illegal at Common Law; and so it is affirmed in the Petition of Right; and very great Opinions have been, that there is nothing in the Habeas Corpus Act, but the Penalties and Times, that was not Common Law, and that it is affirmative in substance of the antient Law of this Realm, which makes that Resolution to be suspicious; for if what is affirmed by it in express Terms (viz. That such Persons as they shall commit, ought not to be delivered) be not Law, then what is implied, that one Privy Counsellor may commit, is more doubtful still.

I shall not inquire into the Occasion of those Resolutions, nor meddle with what our Histories tell us of that Time, and the then Jealousies between some great Men; but, as I said before, those are not judicial Opinions, but only a written Certificate delivered to the then Chancellor and Treasurer: Besides, there is not one Objection, which can be made against the Power of a Secretary in this Matter, but stands as firm and forcible against that of one Lord of the Council; we find no Authority for him to administer an Oath, or take a Recognizance, and there is no Precedent of either. And, as I said the other Day, it looks absurd, that a single Person should be an Officer to commit, and yet cannot do that which is necessary in order to it; he ought to have a Power to examine, and that upon Oath; and if upon Examination of Witnesses it appears that the Party deserves not to be committed, he ought to have Power to take Bail, as also a Recognizance to prosecute. A Justice of Peace is finable by the Justices of Oyer and Terminer, and Gaol Delivery, if he misbehave himself, or be guilty of a wilful Irregularity therein; but it will scarce be said, that a Lord of the Council is in those Circumstances. My Lord Coke saith, that a Lord of the Council is made by summons and taking the Oath, and that continues during the King's Life: It is true he may be discharged, and generally it is by forbearing to summon him; suppose then it be omitted, and afterward he is summoned again, doth he take a new Oath? When doth this Authority begin? How doth it continue or end? Our Law Books take no Notice of it.

Then further, The King himself cannot arrest a Man for Treason or Felony, nor can he command one in his Presence to be arrested for Felony or Treason; so said Sir John Markham to Edw. 4. and 2 Infl. 186. per mandat. del Roy is by Writ, or by Order or Rule of some Court of Justice; now what Judge is a Lord of the Council? He is to advise the King, and is sworn to it, and to withstand all Traitors, and to discover all traitorous Conspiracies, and so is every Subject by his Oath of Allegiance, but the Oath of a Privy Counsellor contains nothing relating to Commitments.

At Common Law, extrajudicial Commitments were Rarities; the usual Practice was to indict, and then to take them upon a Writ of Capias; the antient Law was tender of a Man's Liberty, and then were the Writs framed in the Register of odio et atia, & de tradendo in Ballium, and the Writ of Habeas Corpus.

By Magna Charta 19 Hen. 3. cap. 29, which hath been confirmed forty times by subsequent Acts of Parliament, it is enacted, that nullus liber homo imprisonetur nisi per legem terræ, which I shall explain anon. This was made upon a Grievance then complained of, viz. illegal Commitments: What could those be in that Age, but taking Men's Persons without a Record to found a Charge or Accusation? and that it was so, appears by Coke in his Comment upon those antient Statutes: He says, that there is no Invasion upon this Law till Edward III's Time, and then the People quickly resented it; for in 5 Edw. 3. cap. 9. the great Charter is confirmed; but then in 25 Edw. 3. cap. 2. it is fully and more at large expressed, and recited, that whereas it is contained in the great Charter of the Franchises of England, that none shall be imprisoned, unless it shall be by the Law of the Land; it is awarded, asserted, and established, that from thenceforth none shall be taken by Petition, or Suggestion made to our Lord the King, or to the Lords of his Council, unless it be by Indictment or Presentment of his good and lawful People of the Neighbourhood, tho' Magna Charta, and the rest of the seven Statutes mention'd in the Petition of Right, usually quoted upon these Occasions, be in the General, and have ambiguous Words in them, or Words made ambiguous by the King's Counsel in most Ages, yet this is plain and express, and needs no Strain on our Side. And I cannot find it ever pretended to on the other Side to be a Strain, they are so plain that the Inference is easy, and hard to be avoided. I will not, I must Authorities, against the Commitment by a Privy Council, but methinks they are strong against an extrajudicial Commitment by a single Lord of the Council, unless Mr. Attorney will argue, that the Council cannot commit by reason of this Law, but a single Privy Counsellor is out of the Words of the Act; and when I hear that, he may expect another Answer.

Now for the Words per legem terræ: In Magna Charta, in 2 Inst. 51. my Lord Coke doth indeed say, that in some Cases a Man may be taken and arrested before Indictment or Presentment; and one Case which he mentions is, by lawful Warrant, where there is a Witness against an Offender: Upon Suspicion there may be an Apprehension, but there cannot be a Commitment, with a Charge of an Offence, unless there be an Indictment or Presentment, or a Witness against the Offender; now there can be no Witness, but there must be an Oath: So it is by all Laws, a Man cannot be a Witness, though he may be an Informer, unless he be sworn; and by our Law, even Peers, if they are Witnesses, must be sworn. Now that a single Privy Counsellor can give an Oath, I can find no Law or Precedent for it; it is true the Privy Council may administer an Oath, and have done so for a long time, but that every single Member can do so, doth not follow, it is no more a Consequence, than that because the House of Peers can give an Oath, therefore every Peer may at home do the same. He is one of his Majesty's most Honourable Privy Council, and that is all; and that is only (as I may say with Respect) when they are capitulariter congregati.

Further, my Lord Coke saith, That to make a Commitment lawful, the first Requisite is, that he, or they, who do commit, have lawful Authority; now whether a particular Lord of the Council hath such a lawful Authority, I must submit to your Judgment.

In antient Times the Practice was for the Privy Council not to send for Men in Custody, but to issue Citations and Summons, and that by their Messengers, as doth the Court Christian by their Pursuivants, who cannot arrest or imprison, as in 12 Co. Rep. 49. In all the Records cited by Coke, in his Jurisdiction of Courts, cap. Privy Council, or Pryn's Animadversions upon that Book, 46. there is no Precedent mentioned of imprisoning, or bringing Men into Custody, but only Summons and Citations to appear; and there are many of them.

I shall not meddle with their Power of committing for a Contempt, or Refusal to answer, or question the Authority of the Countess of Shrewsbury's Case, 12 Co. Rep. 93. but I urge this only to shew the Improbability, that our Law should vest such an Authority in each Member of the Privy Council.

In Pryn's Animadversions on 4 Inst. it is in his Comment upon Coke's Epilogue, pag. 422. is a very notable Record. Rot. Parl. Anno 28 Hen. VI. num. 56. where there is an Impeachment of Talbot, for a notable Riot upon several Lords of the Council met within the Palace at Westminster; and it is prayed, that he may be sent to the Tower of London, to be kept without Bail or Mainprize for twelve Months, to answer all Indictments for that and other Riots, before the King and his Justices in his Bench within that Time; and if the Constable of the Tower should suffer him to escape, or go at large, he should forfeit One Thousand Pounds; to which Article of the Commons Petition and Bill the King assenteth, so that here was an Act of Parliament (for such it is, though in Form of a Petition granted, as was the antient Form), to enforce a Commitment to the Tower for any Affront to the Lords of the Council: Now I would beg leave to observe, that it was not by way of Punishment for the Offence, but to secure the Parties to be forth-coming to answer an Indictment, the Punishment must be Fine and Imprisonment: Now it seems strange, that an Act of Parliament should be made to secure a Man, in order to answer an Indictment for an Assault and Riot upon the Lords of the Council, when any one Lord of the Council might have committed him, and he might have been indicted next Term; for the Fact was done at Westminster in Middlesex.

I find a Case in 1 Leon. 70, 71. it is Newell's Case; he was committed per Mandatum Francisci Walsingham, Militis, Principalis Secretarii, & unius de Privato Concilio Dominae Reginae, and the Return was held insufficient. I must agree, that the Book says it was, because the Cause for which he was committed was not alledged, and they amended the Return, and then they made it ex Sententia & Mandato totius Concilii Privati, ita quod Corpus ejus paratum habere non possimus; it is true, that at last the Court took Exceptions to it, because the Body was not brought, and there was a very wise Distinction made by the Court, That where one is committed by one of the Privy Council, there the Cause ought to be returned; but where the Whole Council do commit, there need no Cause to be alledged. Now it is plain, that this was a Distinction without a Difference; for by the Petition of Right, and the Seven old Statutes, and all the Records and Law of old Time, no Englishman ought to be deprived of his Liberty by an extrajudicial Commitment or Warrant, unless the Cause be shewn; and I would infer, that the then King's or Queen's Council thought a Commitment by one Lord of the Council was not legal, and therefore they added ex Sententia & Mandato totius Privati Concilii, as it seems to me, that the Court did slide over that Question, by insisting upon the other Exception: However, at the most, though it make against the Novelty of the Commitments, yet it can never make for the Legality of them, when the whole is considered.

Upon these Considerations, I hope it will appear to your Lordship and the Court to be a doubtful Point, whether a Secretary of State may commit; and the Consequence of that is, that the Prisoner ought to be bailed according to Bushell's Case, Vaughan 157. That the King's Bench may bail in any Case of Treason, if they think fit, but the Common Bench must remand, if the Cause of the Imprisonment returned be just, and well returned: But then there is this Distinction: If it shall appear to the Court, that the Party was imprisoned against the Law of the Land, they ought, by Force of Magna Charta, to deliver him; but if it be doubtful, and under Consideration, then he ought to be bailed: And this hath been the Practice upon Convictions by Justices of the Peace; and the Excuse of the Judges in 4 Car. for their Remittitur, &c. that it was quousque, &c. i. e. till further Consideration, was never allowed as a wise or legal one. Now I hope I have said enough to make it doubtful.

Then for Messengers, I have further matter to urge; the Reason why Commitments are required to be to the County Gaol, by 5 Hen. 4. cap. 10. is mentioned in 2 Inst. 43. and 9 Co. Rep. 119. that they may have their Trial at the next Gaol Delivery, or Sessions of the Peace; and my Lord Coke saith, that at Common Law the committing to Prison is only to this end, that the Party may be forthcoming to be duly tried according to the Law and Custom of the Realm: And the Abbots of St. Alban and Crowland lost their Franchises of having Gaols, because they detained Men in Prison, for a long time, without making a Delivertance; and all this doth in Reason argue against Messengers Power to make their Houses Prisons.

My Lord Coke saith, in 2 Inst. 43. that the Statute 5 Hen. 4. extendeth to all Judges and Justices for two Reasons: First, Because this Act is declarative of the Common Law; and secondly, Ubi lex est specialis, et ratio ejus generalis, generaliter accipienda est; and if so, this was a false Imprisonment of Sir James Montgomery, and then the Consequence is what I urged the other Day.

I find further, in 2 Inst. 705. that by the Parliament Roll, 51 Edw. 3. numb. 68. it appears, that Gaols were anciently to be repaired at the King's Charge; and by Lord Coke upon 23 Hen. 8. cap. 2. concerning the new erecting of Gaols, his Opinion is, that the same cannot be done without Act of Parliament; and I cannot find any Act of Parliament for making the forty-two Houses of the Messengers to be lawful Prisons: If there be any such, I suppose the King's Counsel will shew them to your Lordship; nay, I cannot find any Grant of such a Franchise to them.

Besides, the Reason of the Law is with us. Out of the County Gaols you have at every Sessions of Gaol Delivery Calendars of the Prisoners that are in Custody there, but of the Prisoners in Custody of Messengers you can have no Notice; and this is no small Mischief in respect of the Subjects Liberty; for at a Gaol Delivery the Calendar is to be called over, and by the Calendars in former times were the Executions made without any special Warrant from the Judge or Recorder, which is but a late Practice.

Besides, according to 3 Inst. 209. a Man regularly before the Habeas Corpus Act, if committed for Treason or Felony by a Person having Authority to commit, was not to be discharged until he was inquired of, and either indicted or acquitted, or an Ignoramus found, and delivered by Proclamation; now how this could be practised of a Messenger's Ward, is to me unaccountable.

I will in this Case offer to your Lordship what I find in this Matter, with Sincerity, and submit it to your Judgment. There is in 12 Co. Rep. 129. a Case cited out of the Year Books, viz. 22 Affize pl. 49. One was beheaded for killing Adam Walton, nunci Domini Regis, missi ad mandatum ejus exequend', which is there taken for Petit Treason: This is all that I can find of antient Authority, which mentions such a Creature as a Messenger; but nothing can be inferred from hence to prove the Messengers in Ordinary to be Keepers of Gaols for the Receipt of Felons and Traitors.

Nay, I find further a Case, which seems to overthrow the Commitment to any other Prison than the County Gaol: I will but name it, and submit its Consideration to your Lordship's Judgment; it is in St. John's Argument at a Conference concerning the Attainder of the Earl of Strafford (it is fol. 46. of the 4<sup>to</sup> Print of that Argument) the Case of Sir John Mortimer, who was drawn, hanged, and quartered for breaking the Prison of the Tower, having been committed thither upon Suspicion of Treason: But this was in 2 Hen. 6. and upon an Attainder by Bill in Parliament, and so it is in Cotton's Abridgment of the Records, pag. 368. and there it is mentioned as a strange Thing to be done in Times of Peace, and when the Realm was in quiet, for a Man to be condemned without Trial or Arraignment. Now I might infer from hence, that if the Law had been undoubtedly plain concerning an Escape out of the Tower, as a legal Prison, there had been no need of an Act of Parliament to attain him; but however, it may argue thus much, that if a Bill were necessary for such an Escape, that an Act of Parliament is certainly necessary to make a Rescuer of one suspected of Treason out of the Custody of a Messenger to be guilty of Treason; but all these I submit to your Lordship's Consideration. All that I contend for is, to make it a doubtful Question to the Court, whether upon this Return, taking it for true, it is possible to indict and convict these Prisoners for Treason? for if not, they ought to be bailed.

Then there is another Exception, which I just mentioned the last time, and that is, that it is not mentioned in this Warrant, what the Species of Treason was, for which Sir James Montgomery was committed. I shall, as I have already, avoid the Repetition of any thing which I then offered; there are several Treasons at this Day, where the receiving, comforting, and relieving of them afterwards, knowing them to be such, may not be Treason; and then in such Case the helping him to escape will not be so, and consequently it ought to have been alledged in the Warrant, what the Treason was for which Sir James Montgomery was committed. Now it is no Treason to receive and comfort a Counterfeiter of the Great Seal, it is only Misprision, for there are no Accessaries in Treason, and Principal he is not, because he did not know of it at the Time; to this effect are the Words of the Book, 12 Co. Rep. 81. so it is of the receiving and comforting a Jesuit, or other Englishman taking Orders abroad, and returning into England; for by 26 Eliz. that is made Felony; which Statute would never have been made, if it had been Treason, Dyer 296, 297. Corrier's Case. If I know that one hath made false Money, and receive, comfort, and abett him, this is only Misprision: How far these are Law I am not to argue, but I suggest the Words or Effect of the Authority, and submit them. Sure I am of this, that if your Lordship and the Court be satisfied that they cannot be attainted of Treason, if the Fact be as this Return is, then you will not remand them.

Mr. Solicitor was pleased to argue, that these are are Niceties too subtle for a Return upon a Habeas Corpus; but according to Vaughan, 136. the Writ of a Habeas Corpus is now the most usual Remedy by which a Man may be restored to his Liberty, if he have been against Law deprived of it; and therefore it is, that the Writ doth command to know, whether it be according to Law, or against Law; and therefore the Cause of the Imprisonment ought by the Return to appear, as specially and certainly to be judged by the Court, where the Return is made, as it did appear to the Court or Person authorized to commit, else the Return is insufficient. Now the Reason of adjudging that Return in Bushell's Case to be insufficient, was because it was only said, that their Verdict was against fact and manifest Evidence, and did not say what; by the same Reason Sir James Montgomery's Treason ought to have been set forth in this Case; and to Credence, no more ought to be given to a Person committing, when a Habeas Corpus is brought, than there is to a Court giving a Judgment; when a Writ of Error is brought to examine it, in order to Affirmance or Reversal; for an Habeas Corpus is brought in like manner to examine the Cause of the Party's Imprisonment, either to bail or discharge, or else to remand him, which is to affirm the Commitment to be legal, and upon good Cause.

I have modern Authority to justify much nicer Exceptions to Commitments, than those I have mentioned; such Authority as Mr. Solicitor will not deny to be good. Complaint hath been of a Warrant of Commitment, that it did not appear in whose Reign the Treason was committed, whether in the late King's, or the former King's; it is observed in the Remarks upon Cornish's Trial, and I am sure Mr. Solicitor must own that to be much nicer than what I have offered upon this; I do not justify that, but my Exceptions to the Return.

Mr. Serjeant Levinz argued on the same Side, that the Return was ill, because the Commitment was to a Messenger; it ought to have been to a County Gaol, that the Custody upon an Apprehension ought to be but twenty-four Hours, Britton 19. Customer of Normandy 456. Hil. 22 Edw. 4. pl. 4. those Messengers exacted Fees, viz. 6s. 8d. or 10s. per diem. It is in effect to fine the Party before he is convicted. Then he said, that all those Questions might have been spared, if Mr. Attorney would consent to their being bailed.

Lord Chief Justice. In truth most of them might have been spared, for they have been argued more for Pleasure than Necessity.

Then Mr. Attorney General, and Mr. Solicitor insisted, that the Rescue of one in Custody upon Suspicion of Treason, was Treason; that the setting forth the Overt Act was more for the Advantage of the Prisoner, than barely alledging the Species of Treason: That as to the Secretary's Commitment, it was owned now not to be such a Novelty as was pretended the last Time: That it was very ancient; that the Case in 11 Leon. is very flat to that Purpose; that in the Tower they found a Commitment in 1660, by Secretary Morris, and that many more had been since, but that Sir Joseph Williamson, who had the Papers, was now in Ireland; that it was not needful, that he who commits should be able to give an Oath; that the House of Commons could not give an Oath, and yet could commit; and more to the like Effect.

Sir Bartholomew Shower replied, That he was glad to hear there were so few Precedents for a Secretary's Power; that if there had been more, Mr. Attorney would have shewn them; that the House of Commons Power was an Instance not fit for him to answer; that he did desire no more of Mr. Attorney, than that a Secretary could not give an Oath, and then he hoped the Consequence would be plain; and so submitted it to the Court.

L. C. J. I did always give Credit to the Resolutions of the Judges in Anderson, and it is Part of a Privy Counsellor's Oath to take care of the King's Person against all Traitors, &c. Was there not a Gaol Delivery at Common Law? And are not the Commissioners by their Commission to inquire of the Prisoners in that Gaol, and a Grand Jury to be Impanelled? And consequently, doth not the Law suppose some to have been committed thither before? And then, by whom they were committed? Though a Messenger be not a proper Officer, yet any Person may be ordered to be received for convenient Time for Examination, †

&c. Commitments regularly ought to be to the County Brit. 19. 92. A Gaols, and I wish the Justices of the Peace, who commit to New Prison, and the Gate-house, were here to hear this. But, Mr. Attorney, the Question is, Whether you ought not to have specified these two Things in your Warrants, for what Treason Sir James was committed? And my Reason is, because the Escape will be same Species of Treason with that for which the Party rescued was committed; and secondly, That he had done a Treason, that Sir James was guilty. But, Mr. Attorney, will you further consider of it, though I think we must bail them in the mean time, an Habeas Corpus being festinum remedium; but I would hear my Brothers Opinion.

J. Rokeby. Sir Barth. Shower, I am glad to see that you have rectified a Mistake you were in about a Secretary's Commitment: It was long before Sir Lionel Jenkins's time: Walsingham committed near Two hundred Years ago; and there is another Precedent in 2 Leon. 175. Hilleyard's Case, I think, that a Conservator Pacis at the Common Law may commit, and so may a Constable; it is incident to his Power of committing, that he may give an Oath, and take a Recognizance, and (quod mirum) one of the Counsel may commit. I would not have the Students go away with the Notion of the Novelty of it: I take Secretaries of State to be great Officers; they are Centinels to watch for the Preservation of the King, and the common Peace of the Realm: And for Messengers, for any thing appears, he might be only carrying to Gaol; but yet I think they ought to be bailed, because it is not expressed in the Warrant, what the Species of Treason was for which Sir James Montgomery was committed.

J. Eyre. There may be a Difference between carrying to Prison, and a Commitment with a Charge upon them; and there may be a Difference between specifying and not specifying Sir James's Treason. Upon the whole, I think they ought to be bailed.

J. Gregory was absent.

Accordingly they were bailed to appear the last Day of Term, to answer such Matters as should then be objected against them.

CLIII. The Trials of ROBERT CHARNOCK, EDWARD KING, and THOMAS KEYES, at the Old-Baily, for High-Treason, March 11. 1695. 8 WILL. III.

THIS Day the Trial of Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, who were indicted at Hickes's-Hall on this Day seven-night, upon a special Commission of Oyer and Terminer for High-Treason, in Compassing the Death of the King by a barbarous Assassination, in order to further and assist an Invasion into this Kingdom from France, and Subversion of the Government, were proceeded upon in Manner following.

After opening the Court, at which were present a great many of the Nobility, Members of Parliament, and other Persons of Quality, the petty Jury returned by the Sheriff of Middlesex to try the Prisoners were all called over, being in Number above Eight-score, and consisting of Barons, Knights, Esquires, and Gentlemen, and the Appearances of those who answered to the Call were recorded; and six of the Judges, viz. The Lord Chief Justice Holt, the Lord Chief Justice Treby, the Lord Chief Baron Ward, Mr. Justice Nevil, Mr. Justice Powell, and Mr. Justice Rokeby, being upon the Bench, the Prisoners were called for to the Bar, and there arraigned upon the said Indictments.

Clerk of Arraignments. Robert Charnock, hold up thy Hand (which he did:) Edward King, hold up thy Hand (Which he did:) Thomas Keyes, hold up thy Hand (Which he did:) You stand Indicted in the County of Middlesex by the Names of Robert Charnock, late of the Parish of St. Clement Danes in the County of Middlesex, Gent. Edward King of the said Parish and County, Gent. and Thomas Keyes of the same Parish and County, Yeoman, for that You the fear of GOD in your Hearts not having, nor the Duty of your Allegiance weighing, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as false Traytors against the most Serene, most Illustrious, most Clement, and most Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of GOD, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. your Supreme, True, Lawful, and Undoubted Sovereign Lord, the Cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of our Lord the King that now is, towards him our said Lord the King should bear, and of Right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly extinguish, intending and contriving, and with all your Strength purposing, designing and conspiring the Government of this Kingdom of England under him our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is of Right happily and duly established, altogether to subvert, change and alter; as also our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to put and bring, his faithful Subjects and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England into intolerable and miserable Slavery to Lewis the French King to subdue and subject, the tenth of Day of February, in the seventh Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traiterously, did compass, imagine, contrive, purpose, design and intend our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, to slay, kill, and murder, and a miserable Slaughter amongst the Faithful Subjects of our Lord the King throughout this whole Kingdom of England to make and cause. And the same most abominable, wicked and devilish Treasons and traiterous Contrivances, Intentions and Purposes of yours aforesaid to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, you the said Robert Charnock, Edward King and Thomas Keyes, and very many others false Traytors to the Jurors unknown, afterwards, to wit, the said tenth Day of February, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elsewhere in the same County, falsely, maliciously, advisedly, clandestinely, traiterously, and with Force and Arms, &c. did meet, propose, treat, consult, consent and agree our said Sovereign Lord the King by lying in wait, to assassinate, kill and murder: And that execrable, horrid, and detestable Assassination and Killing the sooner to execute and perpetrate, afterwards, to wit, the same Day, Year and Place last mentioned, traiterously did treat, propose, and consult of the Ways, Manner and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, how, and in what Manner our said Sovereign Lord the King, by lying in wait the more easily you should kill; and did consent, agree and assent, that forty Horsemen or thereabouts, of you the said Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, and the said other Traitors unknown, and others by them to be hired, procured and paid, with Guns, Carbines and Pistols with Gun-powder and leaden Bullets charged, and with Swords and other Arms armed, should lie in Wait, and be in Ambush, our said Sovereign Lord the King in his Coach being when he should go abroad, to set upon, and that a certain and competent Number of those Men so armed upon the Guards of our said Sovereign Lord the King then and there attending upon him, and being with him, should attack, and should overcome and subdue them, whilst others of the said Men so armed our said Sovereign Lord the King should Assassinate, Kill, Slay and Murder: And also that You the said Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, your Treasons and traiterous Intentions, Designs and Contrivances aforesaid, to execute, perpetrate, fulfil, * Justices of the Peace are not by Common Law, but appointed by Statutes, the first of which was 1 Edw. 3. cap. 16. By Common Law there were only Conservators of the Peace, whose Power was very short of a Justice's now-a-days. See Groomston's and Dalton's Justice.

† This is at most but for three Days, Cro. Eliz. 230.

fulfil, and fully to bring to Effect afterwards, to wit, the Day and Year last above said at the Parish aforesaid, divers Horses, and very many Arms, Guns, Pistols, Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, warlike Matters, and military Instruments, falsely, maliciously, secretly and traitorously did obtain and buy, collect and procure, and cause to be bought, obtained, collected and procured with that Intention, the same in and about the detestable, horrid and execrable Assassination, Killing and Murdering of our said Sovereign Lord the King as aforesaid, to be used, employed, and bestowed, against the Duty of your Allegiance, and against the Peace of our Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, as also against the Form of the Statutes in such Cases made and provided.

How say you, Robert Charnock, are you Guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand indicted, or Not Guilty?

Charnock. My Lord, I desire I may have a Copy of this Indictment, that I may advise with Counsel upon it before I plead.

+ L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Charnock, will you speak out, that we may hear what you say.

Charnock. My Lord, I find here is a very bad Crime that is laid to my Charge; I desire that I may have a Copy of the Indictment, to advise with Counsel upon, and that I may have Counsel to assist me in my Tryal, and to direct me, who am an ignorant Man in these Matters, how to manage myself according to the new Act made this Session of Parliament, for regulating Tryals in Cases of High-Treason.

L. C. J. Have you not had Counsel already to advise and direct you, Mr. Charnock?

Char. My Lord, I had Notice on Wednesday, that I should be tried this Day, and it was Saturday last before I could get my Counsel to come to me.

L. C. J. And what did your Counsel advise you? Did they tell you, you were to have a Copy of your Indictment, by Virtue of the late Act of Parliament?

Char. My Lord, tho' the Act does not take Force as to some Things till the 25th of this Month, yet the Equity of that Act, it being now reduced into a Law, is conceiv'd to reach to Cases of the like Nature before the 25th, and I desire the Act may be read.

L. C. J. You shall have it read, if you will, but of what Avail or Benefit it will be to you, I cannot tell; for you yourself take notice, that it is an Act of Parliament made this Session, and is not to take Effect until the 25th of this Month. You now here stand indicted before the 25th, and for a Treason committed before, and therefore you can't claim, nor have any Benefit or Advantage by this Act; but you are to be proceeded against according to the Law before, and the Practice used in all Proceedings against other Persons in your Circumstances. And it is the known Practice, and received for Law, in all Times before this new Act was made, That no Copy of an Indictment for High-Treason should be granted, nor Counsel assigned, or permitted to assist the Prisoner in making his Defence: True it is, a Copy of the Indictment has been often desired, but as true, that it has as often been denied.

Char. My Lord, the Equity of this Act (it being now an Act of Parliament) is now in Force, as much before the 25th of this Month as after.

L. C. J. Equity is nothing in these Cases: You are here tried by the Law, and we are bound to go in all such Cases according to the Rules of Law, and are not to be guided by any equitable Consideration, further than the Law itself does allow us.

Char. But, my Lord, the Ground of that Act, which is the Reasonableness and Equity that all Prisoners should be made capable of fairly defending themselves, is now in Force, I say: And I hope your Lordship and the Court will look upon it to be reasonable, that I should have the Benefit of that Equity.

L. C. J. I tell you, we are not here in a Court of Equity, but must proceed according to the Rules of Law; and the Law you now speak of does not yet commence.

Char. My Lord, I am informed, for I am very ignorant in these Matters myself, that there is nothing that I now desire, which is contained in this Act, but what was Law before the making of this Act, tho' the Practice may have been otherwise.

L. C. J. Then I must tell you, Mr. Charnock, you have been very much misinformed; for if all that is contained in this Act of Parliament that you mention was Common Law before, there would have been no Occasion for the making a new Act of Parliament.

Char. My Lord, I do not say that all Things in this Act of Parliament were Law before, because there are several Things in it that have not been Law before. But, my Lord, there are several Things besides; and particularly those two Things which I now desire, a Copy of the Indictment and Counsel to assist me, were Things that were agreeable to Law before; and I must take the Liberty to appeal to a Judge that I see upon the Bench, my Lord Chief Justice Treby, as to his own Opinion, and desire he would please to declare, whether formerly, in a Conference between the Lords and the Commons, he did not deliver his Opinion, That it was the Common Law, that a Prisoner should have a Copy of his Indictment, and Counsel to assist him.

L. C. J. Here is my Lord Chief Justice Treby, you had best to apply yourself to him for his Opinion.

L. C. J. Treby. Pray, Sir, What is your Question you would ask me?

Char. My Lord, I am here for my Life, and must take all the Advantages that I can; I am here arraigned for a very grievous Offence; I desire I may have a Copy of the Indictment, and Counsel to assist me in my Defence. Here is an Act of Parliament, out of the Equity of which I apprehend, I ought to have some Advantage; for I am informed, that what I desire was Common Law before the making of the Act; and particularly that your Lordship's Opinion, in a Conference between the two Houses, was, that the Prisoner ought to have those Advantages by the Common Law.

L. C. J. Treby. Then, Sir, I take your Question to be this: You would have my Opinion to be declared, That this Act, which was lately pass'd for regulating Trials in Cases of High-Treason, and all the Particulars in the Act were Common Law before.

Char. No, my Lord; I do not say that all the Particulars in the Act were Common Law before.

L. C. J. Treby. Then, pray, Sir, name your Particulars, and I will endeavour to give you an Answer.

Char. My Lord, the Particulars that I do ask are these: First, That I may have a Copy of the Indictment, and Counsel to advise me, because it is a grievous Crime I stand here accused of, and that I may have them to assist me at my Trial in Court: This I do insist upon from the Equity of the Act of Parliament, and your Lordship's Opinion at the Conference that it was Common Law before.

L. C. J. Treby. As to my Opinion about the having a Copy of Counsel, I do not think or believe, that I ever said that it was Common Law.

Char. My Lord, I beg your Pardon; I was informed your Lordship had delivered such an Opinion, at a Conference between the Lords and the Commons: But I desire the Assistance of Counsel, because I myself am ignorant of the Law; and particularly as to this Point, whether I am not entitled to the Equity of this Act of Parliament; for it now having pass'd both Houses of Parliament, and had the Royal Assent, it is a good Law; and though it be to take its Commencement on the 25th of this Month, yet that which is the Law of all Laws, the Reason and Equity of it, is, and always will be, the same.

L. C. J. No, Mr. Charnock, that does not follow, that because the Wisdom of the Law-makers has thought it to be equitable de futuro, therefore it should be Law now; which, as I told you before, is the Rule that we are to go by; it is Equity and Justice, that the Proceedings be according to this Act of Parliament, from and after the 25th of this Month; but it is not Justice that such Proceedings should be till then, because not according to Law.

Char. My Lord, the Ground of all Laws is Equity; and certainly it cannot be Equity, that a Prisoner should make his Defence against an Accusation in Writing, without having a Copy of it.

L. C. J. The Time of the Court must not be spent in this Manner; you have been already told, that by Law you are not to have a Copy of the Indictment; but you are to plead without having any Copy; for there is no Law now in being that allows the giving of such a Copy, and 'tis but a short Question that you are asked in order to your Trial, viz. Are you Guilty, or Not Guilty?

Char. My Lord, it is impossible for me to go to Trial presently, and without the Assistance of my Counsel.

L. C. J. Why, had you not Notice of your Trial?

Char. My Lord, I confess I had Notice upon Wednesday last.

L. C. J. Had you not your Counsel with you since that?

Char. Yes, my Lord, I had on Saturday last; but from that Time I have not been able to prepare myself as I think I ought; and I cannot conceive but that I should have the Assistance of some Counsel to direct me in my Trial; for here is a very great Crime and heinous Charge laid against me in this Indictment, and I am very ignorant in all Law Proceedings.

L. C. J. It is very reasonable that there should be convenient Notice given to all Persons in your Circumstances; and truly this Day Seven-night is a very convenient Notice; especially you having had, by your own Confession and Acknowledgment, Counsel with you in the mean time.

Char. But, my Lord, what is the Advantage of having Notice, if one have not Privilege of Pen, Ink and Paper, and one's Counsel and Friends coming to them, and Privacy, without the Presence of the Jaylor?

L. C. J. What say you that are of the King's Counsel? Was there Counsel allow'd to come to them?

Mr. Attorney General + Sir Thomas Trevor. My Lord, there was Order given, that their own Counsel that they desired should come to them.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, as soon as ever they desired Counsel there was an Order for it, and left with the Jaylor, that he should permit the Counsel to come to them, and be with them in private.

L. C. J. Then tho' you had not your Counsel come to you till Saturday, it was your own Fault, for you had an Order for Counsel as soon as you desired it; and even from Saturday is a reasonable Time enough to prepare for answering the Question, Whether Guilty or Not Guilty?

Char. I suppose Mr. Bale is in Court, who gave Notice on Wednesday, and I acknowledge he came upon the Thursday, and asked if I would have any Body come to me; and he took then the Names of the Counsel that I desired might come to me; and told me he would carry them to Mr. Attorney General, and see what his Opinion was of them; I suppose he did so: For upon Friday he came again, and brought me an Order for it; but when that Order was brought, the Counsel that was desired was not to be had, or at least with very great Difficulty, because it was the Time of the Assizes, or very near it, and Counsel were gone or going out of Town; so that we could not have the Advantage of the Order for Counsel.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir, We think you have had convenient Notice, with Liberty of consulting whom you had a mind to; if you have neglected your Opportunity of consulting them, you must blame yourself, and nobody else; we must go on according to Law.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, they had the Liberty of naming their own Counsel, and the Names were brought to me; and as soon as ever they were so brought, those that were named had Leave to go to the Prison to them; and they had a further Order than the first, which was, that their Friends should be permitted to come to them; but that was not, as it was not convenient to be, in private; but the other Order was, that the Counsel should speak with them in private, and not in the Presence of the Jaylor.

L. C. J. Pray hear what Mr. Attorney says, that your Counsel was ordered to be with you in private.

Char. But there was no Order, my Lord, for my Solicitor to be with me in the Absence of the Jaylor, who is the only proper Person for that consulting with, and for going about to summon the Witnesses.

L. C. J. We think you have had convenient Notice, and all the Allowances that can be in such a Case. Ask him to plead.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Charnock. Are you Guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand indicted, or Not Guilty?

Char. My Lord, I hope you will give me some more Time to get my Witnesses, that are now absent; several of them are ten Miles out of Town; and therefore I would beg your Lordship to give me some Time.

L. C. J. Why, is ten Miles such a Distance, that you could not have your Witnesses between this Day Seven-night and this Day? But besides Mr. Charnock, what you now urge is out of Time; you speak too soon to put off the Trial, for there can be no Trial till Issue joined; and that cannot be till Plea pleaded.

Char.

Char. My Lord, I was never instructed in Quirks of Law, nor bred up to the Law; and I hope your Lordships will take care that I be not hurt for Want of Knowledge in the Forms of Law.

L. C. J. You may assure yourself, Mr. Charnock, you shall not be hurt by your Ignorance in the Law. All the Harm you will receive will be for having done contrary to the Law, and there is none of your Counsel, if they have been faithful to you, but must tell you the same Things we tell you now.

Char. My Lord, if I am to have no Counsel, I must desire that the Court would be pleased to take the greater Care of me: For, as I have been informed, that was the Reason of the Practice of denying Counsel, that the Court should be of Counsel for the Prisoner.

L. C. J. Mr. Hardesty, ask him whether he be guilty, or not guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Charnock, are you guilty, or not guilty?

Char. Not guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, how wilt thou be try'd?

Char. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God send you a good Deliverance.—Edward King, How say you, Are you guilty of the High-Treason whereof you stand indicted, or not guilty?

King. My Lord, I beg the same Favour that Mr. Charnock has done, that I may have some more Time to prepare for my Trial, and a Copy of the Indictment, and Counsel assigned.

L. C. J. But you hear what has been said to Mr. Charnock upon those Points, and the same Rule that was given in his Case, you must expect will be in your Case.

Cl. of Ar. What say you, are you guilty or not guilty?

King. Not guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, how wilt thou be try'd?

King. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God send thee a good Deliverance. Thomas Keyes, are you guilty of the same High-Treason, or not guilty?

Keyes. My Lord, I have had no Counsel at all.

L. C. J. But you might have had, if you would; you had an Order for it as well as the others.

Keyes. My Lord, I was a Servant to Captain Porter; I was not able to see any Counsel.

L. C. J. But you can tell whether you are guilty, or not guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Art thou guilty, or not guilty?

Keyes. Not guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, how wilt thou be tried?

Keyes. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Char. My Lord, I desire I may have the Favour of Pen, Ink, and Paper, upon my Trial.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, you shall have it; and if you have a Mind to it, you shall have the Indictment read to you in Latin.

Char. My Lord, my Ignorance in Forms of Law made me not ask that before, because I did not know whether I should properly ask it or not: And I do not know whether I should ask it properly now.

L. C. J. Yes, it is a very proper time to ask it, and you shall have it, if you have a mind to it.

Char. My Lord, I do really desire it, if it be a proper Time for me to have it.

L. C. J. Read the Indictment in Latin.

Char. And now, my Lord, I hope your Lordship will please that I shall have Pen, Ink, and Paper, that I may make the best Observations I can, since I cannot have a Copy.

Char. What Word was that last, Sir?

Clerk of Ar. Murrare.

Char. That is an odd Word, I can't understand what it means.

L. C. J. It is a Term of Art, the Signification of it is to murder:—Go on, Mr. Hardesty.

Cl. of Ar. Ac stragem miserabilem inter fideles subditos ipsius Domini Regis per totum hoc Regni Angliæ facere et causare & easdem nefandissimas, nequissimas & diabolicas prodiones & proditorias machinationes, intentiones & proposita sua prædicta perimplend' perficiend' & ad effectum redigendum ipsi iidem Robertus Charnock, Edwardus King, & Thomas Keyes, & quam plurimi alii falsi proditores Juratoribus prædictis ignoti, postea, scilicet, eodem decimo die Februarii, Anno supra dicto, apud Parochiam prædictam, in Com' prædicto, ac diversis aliis diebus & vicibus tam antea quam postea, ibidem & alibi in eodem Com. falso, malitiose, aduifate, clandestine, frauditorie ac vi & armis, &c. conveniebant, proposuerunt, tractaverunt, consultaverunt, consenserunt & agreeverunt ad ipsum Dominum Regem ex insidiis & dolo percutiend', Anglice To Assassinate, interficiend' & murrand'; & ad execrabilem, horrendam & detestabilem Assassinationem, Anglice Assassination, & interfectionem illas citius ex-

Regis nunc, Coronam et Dignitates suas, nec non contra formam Statut' in hujusmodi Casu edit' & provis.

Char. My Lord, I desire the Indictment may be read again, for there is so great a Noise in the Court, and that Gentleman hath not the most perfect Delivery; he is more used to Law-Latin than to any other. But I beg I may have it read again, that I may as perfectly as I can understand it.

The Indictment was read again in Latin.

L. C. J. Look ye, you that are the Prisoners, every one of you has the Liberty to challenge 35 of those that are returned to serve upon the Jury that is to try you, without shewing any Cause; now, if you will all join in the same Challenge, then we can try you all together, as ye are all together jointly in the Indictment; and save the Time and Trouble that will otherwise be unavoidable. But if you will not join in the same Challenge, but every Man challenge for himself, as by Law he has Liberty to do, we must be forced to try you single, and therefore we would know of you, whether you design to join in your Challenge, or not?

Char. My Lord, I hope the Court will give me leave to have my Solicitor by me during my Trial, that I may be instructed in some measure how to manage myself, and when it is proper for me to speak; and what.

L. C. J. No, we can order no such Thing, you must speak for yourself.

Char. My Lord, I am ignorant of the Methods of Law, and may make a great many Mistakes and Slips, and omit what may be material to be observed for my Defence, and therefore shall the more need a Friend or Solicitor to be by me, to mind me of it.

L. C. J. No, we cannot direct any such Thing by Law. What say you as to your Challenges?

Char. As to the Jury, I had not a Copy of the Pannel till Yesterday, and I have been informed, that it is usual to have a Copy of the Pannel ten Days before the Trial; they are Gentlemen that I have no Knowledge of, nor can come at any Account of their Qualifications, so as to make proper Challenges.

L. C. J. You have the same Privilege that is ordinarily given to Persons in your Condition.

Mr. Att. Gen. There was Order given for a Copy of the Pannel to be delivered.

L. C. J. That was not of Right, but of Favour; and it is a Practice that has of late obtained; but for what you talk of ten Days, that never was in any Case, nor is it practicable; you have the same Favour shewn you, that all other Prisoners have, and you can expect no more: But you do not answer the Question, whether you will join in your Challenges or not?

Char. It is an indifferent Thing to me, my Lord.

L. C. J. Do you agree to it, Mr. King?

King. My Lord, I do not well understand it, I am ready to do any Thing I should.

L. C. J. What say you, Keyes?

Keyes. My Lord, I have had no Counsel at all, to advise me about any Thing.

L. C. J. I tell you what the Law is in such Cases: You may, every Man of you, challenge 35 peremptorily without Cause; but if you do not all agree in the same Challenges, ye cannot be tried together by the same Jury: But the Court must separate you, and try you every one singly.

Char. My Lord, I have got a Copy of the Pannel, if these Gentlemen that are by me, do agree to join in the Challenge, I am very well content; it is indifferent to me.

L. C. J. Do you understand what is said to you, Mr. King, and Mr. Keyes? Every one of you may, without shewing any Cause, except against 35 of those that are returned of the Jury which are to try you, if you have no mind that those should be sworn; but then if each of you do severally challenge 35, ye cannot be tried by the same Jury.

Char. I hope, my Lord, if I do challenge, as I do not know how I shall be enabled without knowing their Qualifications, the Court will put me in mind when I come near the Number, that my challenging may not injure me; because I am ignorant in the Law, and perhaps may slip in point of Number; and therefore I would beg that your Lordships would allow me a Solicitor to assist me, and put me in mind, that I may not run into Errors.

L. C. J. You have been told over and over, that we cannot do that; the Court will take care that you be informed in Time, that you do not exceed in challenging a greater Number than you ought: What say you, Mr. King? Do you agree that one shall make Challenges for you all?

King. I do agree, that whatsoever Exception Mr. Charnock makes, I will abide by.

Char. My Lord, I cannot but think it hard, that I have not either Counsel or Solicitor; my Counsel that I had are out of Town.

L. C. J. Why, was there no Counsel but those that are gone the Circuit?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he had Order first for one Counsel, and then for another, and whomsoever he named he had Order for.

L. C. J. If you will chuse none but those you cannot have, that is your own Fault; You, Mr. Keyes, will you join in the Challenge?

Keyes. Yes, with all my Heart.

Cl. of Ar. Then you the Prisoners at the Bar, those Men that you shall hear called and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King, and you, upon Trial of your several Lives and Deaths: If therefore you, or any of you, will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Then those of the Pannel that had appeared were called, and the Prisoners challenged 33. And the Names of those that were sworn are as follow.

Samuel Harwer,	Jasper Hodgden,	Simon Smith,	John Mills,
Jonas Morley,	William Farnborough,	Thomas Dunck,	James Ketwich, and
Anthony Nurse,	William Bird,	Richard Heath,	Christopher Redknapp.

Then Proclamation for Information, and the Witnesses appearing, was made in usual Form.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Charnock, Hold up thy Hand, (Which he did): Edward King, Hold up thy Hand, (Which he did): Thomas Keyes, Hold up thy Hand, (Which he did): You Gentlemen of the Jury, look upon the Prisoners, and hearken to their Cause; They stand indicted by the Names of, &c. (prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis) — And against the Form of the Statutes in that Case made and provided. Upon this Indictment they have been Arraigned, and thereunto have severally pleaded, Not Guilty, and for their Trial have put themselves upon God and their Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to enquire of them, and every of them, whether they be guilty of the High-Treason whereof they stand indicted, in Manner and Form as they stand indicted, or Not Guilty; if you find them, or any of them, Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements they had, at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since. If you find them, or any of them, Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether they fled for it; if you find that they, or any of them, fled for it, you are to inquire of their Goods and Chattels, as if you had found them Guilty; if you find them Not Guilty, nor that they did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Montague. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of this Jury; The Record that has been now read unto you, is an Indictment of High-Treason, which charges the three Prisoners at the Bar, Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, with a Traitorous Conspiracy and Design to subvert the Government of this Kingdom, and to murder the King, and to bring the Subjects and Freemen of this Kingdom into Slavery and Subjection to the French King; and to this End the Indictment sets forth; That upon the Tenth of February last, and divers other Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Clements Danes, in the County of Middlesex, these three Prisoners at the Bar, with divers other Traytors unknown, did Consult and Agree to Assassinate the Person of our Sovereign Lord the King, as he was riding in his Coach; and did likewise agree, that Forty Horsemen, of which they themselves were to be Part of the Number, should lie in Ambush, and set upon the King, so being in his Coach, and upon the Guards that were to attend him: And it likewise charges them with buying Horses and Arms, for the Execution of this Wicked and Villainous Intention: To this they have pleaded Not Guilty. We shall call our Witnesses, and prove this Matter upon them; and then we doubt not, but you, Gentlemen, will do Justice, according to your Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, these Gentlemen at the Bar stand indicted for a most Horrid and Barbarous Conspiracy, to Assassinate and Murder his Majesty's Royal Person: Gentlemen, this Assassination was to be seconded with an Invasion from France, where Troops lay ready at Calais, as soon as the dismal Stroke was given, to have landed upon our Coasts; which if it had taken Effect, we had not only suffered that most unspeakable Loss of the King, but it would have made an End of all our Liberties and Laws at once.

Gentlemen, This Offence in its Nature is so Horrid and Barbarous, that as it needs no Aggravation, so it is incapable of having any, by any Words that can be used; for the very Naming of an Assassination of a King, carries such Horror and Detestation in its self, to all honest People, that it is impossible to aggravate it by any Expressions that can be used about it; but there is this peculiar Consideration to be had, by all Englishmen, who love their Country, that this designed Assassination upon the Person of His Present Majesty, was to take away the Life of a King, who every Body knows first ventured his own Life to restore our Religion, Laws, and Liberties, when they were just expiring under the Oppression of Popery and Tyranny. And as he ventured his Life first to restore 'em, so he has since, upon all Occasions, with the utmost Hazard exposed his Royal Person to the most imminent Dangers, for the preserving and maintaining our Religion, Laws and Liberties, against the Power and Violence of the common Enemy: This Consideration to all true Englishmen must have a very great Weight, and create the greatest Horror and Detestation, both of the barbarous Design, and of all those who had any Concern or Hand in it, to attempt upon the Life, not only of a King, but of such a King.

Gentlemen, when you hear the Evidence that we shall offer to you, to prove this bloody Conspiracy against these Prisoners, I doubt not but that there will be enough, and more than enough, to satisfy all true-hearted English Subjects, and all People that have a Desire to preserve our Constitution and Government, in what Danger we and our Posterity were of being utterly ruined, and involved in a common Destruction. I shall not detain you longer with any Discourse about the Heinousness of this Offence, because every Man's own Thoughts cannot but suggest to him, how dismal the Consequences must have been, if so fatal a Stroke had been given.

But, Gentlemen, I must crave leave to take up so much of your Time, as to open how this bloody, execrable Conspiracy was first framed, and afterwards carried on by the Prisoners at the Bar, together with others, till it was very near putting in Execution, had not the infinite Mercy of God prevented it, by a timely Discovery.

Gentlemen, this Conspiracy was first framed and consulted upon the last Year; there were several Consultations and Meetings, at several Places about the Town, for this Purpose; then, and at those Consultations and Meetings, there were present Capt. Porter, the Prisoners, and others of whom you will have an Account from the Witnesses; and at that Time they had an Expectation of Commissions from the late King to authorize the Design; that not coming, they yet resolved to put it in Execution before the King went away. But because the French Troops were then not in Readiness to come over hither, to protect them after the Execution of the bloody Design, it was necessary for them to fly thither for Shelter: and therefore they endeavoured to procure a Vessel to be ready to carry them over to France. But they could not get a Vessel time enough; and then the King's going over into Flanders quickly after, prevented the Execution of the Design for that Time, and so Matters rested till the King's Return.

About two or three Months ago, Sir George Barclay, who is an Officer in the late King James's Guards in France; and some other Officers, with Sixteen or Eighteen Troopers in those Guards, privately came over from France to put this Design in Execution; and he did acquaint Mr. Porter and Mr. Charnock with the Design, knowing that they had been engaged in the Matter before, and so could not but expect that they would readily assist. This Design was treated and consulted of between them at several Times, and in several Places, at Captain Porter's, and Mr. Charnock's Lodgings in Norfolk-street, at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, the Nagg's-head Tavern at St. James's, and several other Places; several Consultations and Meetings were had between the Prisoners at the Bar, and others, whom you will hear named at these Meetings; several Ways and Methods were proposed how it should be best effected: it was proposed by some, that it should be done by Ambuscade, that should be laid near the King's House at Richmond, such a Number on Foot were to lie in the Wood, there ready to attack the King as he came by, and the rest of the Conspirators at the same Time to fall on the Guards. But this Method was not so well approved of, as that which was afterwards proposed and agreed to: That is, there were to be three Parties of them, and the Place was the Lane, lying between Brentford and Turnham-Green, at the End next Turnham-Green, which the King used to pass thro', upon his Return from Richmond: The Order and Method of the Design was this; Sir George Barclay, with Eight or Ten more was to attack the Coach, and by firing into it, to have killed the King, and all in it, and the rest were to attack the Guards, in two Parties, on each Side of the Lane, whereof Mr. Charnock and Porter were to command one, and Brigadier Rookwood the other. In order to see how feasible this Design might be, the Prisoner King, Capt. Porter, and Knightly, were to go and survey the Place; and the next Day after that Consultation, they went to view the Ground, and did very carefully do it, both on this Side the Water, and on the other Side the Water; and they came back and met the rest of the Company at the Nagg's-Head Tavern late at Night, to give an Account what they had done in order to this Enterprize. It was agreed the Number should be about Forty; Sir George Barclay was to make up about Twenty, Mr. Charnock was to furnish Eight, Capt. Porter Seven, and so in other Proportions, in all to make up the Number of Forty; which they thought were enough to effect and accomplish the Design.

In order to make this Matter the more sure, they did appoint Two to lodge and wait at Kensington near the Guards; who were to give Notice when the King went abroad: And they had their several Persons assigned to whom they should give Notice, who thereupon were to send Orders to the several Parties; one of which was Chambers, who was to give Notice to the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Charnock; and there was one Durance, who was to give Notice to Sir George Barclay; and when such Notice was given, then they were to send Orders to the several Persons, who were to be concerned in this bloody Business, to come at the Time appointed, to be disposed of into their several Posts.

Gentlemen, in order to the furthering of this Design, they did likewise send Durance to go and view, and give them an Account of the most convenient Inns at Brentford, and Turnham-Green, and the Places adjacent, which were least liable to Observation, where the Men might be the most conveniently disposed of, to lie ready against the Time, when they were to execute this barbarous Assassination; accordingly he went, and took an Account of the several Inns within that Compass, and they were to be billeted by Two or Three in an Inn, so as not to be observed; Sir George Barclay and his Party at Turnham-Green, and the rest at Brentford.

Gentlemen, after they had thus laid the Design, Saturday the 15th of February was the first Time pitched upon for the putting it in Execution, if the King went abroad, as he used to do, upon Saturdays, to Richmond to hunt; and if they had Notice from Durance and Chambers, that he was so to do, which Notice they had; and every Thing was prepared in order to have perpetrated this villainous Design; but it happened that the King went not abroad that Day, of which they had Notice about Noon from Chambers to Charnock, and Charnock sent Word so to Porter's Lodgings, and then the Order for their getting together was countermanded, and the Note, by which Charnock sent Word, was subscribed with the Name of Robinson; which you will hear is a Name he goes by, as well as by that of Charnock.

Thus they were disappointed at that Time; but they were not discouraged from pursuing this inhuman Enterprize, but resolved to go on the next Opportunity that should be given. And to omit several Things that intervened, which the Witnesses will give you an Account of, on the Friday following they met again, to have every Thing ready against the next Day, which was Saturday the 22d of February; when they expected the King would go abroad, as he usually did on that Day of the Week; and that Meeting was at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and there were present Capt. Porter, Sir William Perkins, Sir George Barclay, and Mr. Charnock; and at that Time there was a Discourse amongst them about the Disappointment, which they had had the Week before, and some of them had a Jealousy that a Discovery had been made of their Design: But then, upon further Consideration, they concluded, If it had been so, they should not have met there, but should have been taken up; And therefore they concluded the King's staying at Home that Day was but Accidental, and so resolved to put their Conspiracy in Execution the next Day.

While

While they were there, several Persons from whom Capt. Porter had undertaken, that is, one Cranborne, Kenrick, and Keyes the Prisoner at the Bar, came to Porter; these were carried into another Room, and commanded all to be ready the next Day, when it was resolved to put the Assassination in Execution: And then Capt. Porter asked Kenrick for Sherborne, who it seems had been undertaken for; but it was answered, That he asked for many Questions about the Matter, that he did not think fit to trust him.

The next Morning they met again at Capt. Porter's Lodgings; and there met, as the Witnesses will tell you, amongst others, Mr. Pendergrafs, Mr. Keyes, and Mr. King; King brought a Message to Capt. Porter from Sir George Barclay, to know the Names of those that were concerned, and upon that Message Capt. Porter writ down the Names of his Men, who were for his Quota, and sent the List by Cranborne to Mr. Charnock, to add his List to it of the Men he was to have under him; Cranborne afterwards came back, and brought the List that Capt. Porter sent, with the additional List sent by Mr. Charnock, written with his own Hand, and subscribed R. C. and Cranborne told them that Chambers had sent Word, that the King would go out that Morning: At the Hearing of which there was much Joy amongst them; for they hoped then their wicked Design would be put in Execution that Day. There was a Discourse then likewise, that Porter had a Piece which carried Six Bullets; and this, it was ordered, should be put into the Hands of Pendergrafs, who was to be one of Sir George Barclay's Men, to attack and fire into the King's Coach.

This was upon Saturday the 22d of February, when they had News that the King was to go abroad, and every Thing was to be put in Execution at his Return from Richmond. From Capt. Porter's Lodgings they went to the Blue Posts in Spring Garden; but about 12 o'Clock there came News from Chambers, one of the orderly Men at Kensington, that the King did not go abroad that Day: This put them into a very great Confusion; they then thought some Discovery must needs be made because of the Disappointment two Saturdays together; and Keyes, the Prisoner at the Bar, came up and told them, that the Guards were all come back in a Foam, and the King's Coaches were brought back to the Meuse: And this confirmed them in their former Jealousy that the Matter was discovered; upon which Captain Porter, Mr. Pendergrafs and Mr. Keyes went together to lie hid some Time; but they said they would send Keyes to Mr. Charnock, to let him know where they might be heard of; and if the Matter was not discovered, they would still go on to put it in Execution: But they could not part without drinking some Traiterous Healths, which the Witnesses will tell you of, to the Restoring of the late King and his Queen, and the Prince of Wales; and after all, one of the Company taking an Orange in his Hand, began a Health to the Squeezing of the Rotten Orange; and in this Manner it was drunk by all of them before they parted, though they were under the Apprehension at that Time of being discovered already.

This is the Beginning and Progress of the several Consultations that were had for the Carrying on this execrable, Traiterous Conspiracy. I have opened it shortly to you, but you will hear it much fuller in its several Parts by the Witnesses. By what I have opened, you cannot but observe, that it was very near coming to be executed, if there had not been a Discovery of it Time enough, thro' the Providence of Almighty God, to prevent it. They had agreed, after the intended Assassination, to keep together, till they came near the Town, and then they were to lie hid till the French Troops landed, which they were assured of were ready upon the least Intimation of the Success of this Conspiracy.

Gentlemen, every Body may guess at the dismal Consequences that would have follow'd, had this bloody Design taken Effect; and I am sure, as we and our Posterity could not have expected any Thing less than the perpetual Yoke and Burden of Slavery and Popery, if it had pleased God to permit this Conspiracy to take Effect; so I hope we shall always remember the merciful Hand of Providence, that has detected and disappointed it.

Gentlemen, I shall not detain you any longer; I have opened unto you Part of that which will more fully be made out by the Witnesses; only I would observe, that the Providence of God has not only made a Discovery to prevent the Execution of this abominable Villainy, but hath brought this Conspiracy so far to light, by such unquestionable Testimony, that no Man can doubt of the Reality of it, which I hope will raise in every honest Man's Mind an Abhorrence and Detestation of those Principles, upon which so villainous and barbarous a Design was founded; and I think I may say, that after the Evidence you will hear this Day, no one will pretend any Doubt of the Truth thereof, but either such as are sorry for the Discovery, or such as knew too much of the Conspiracy before. I shall trouble you no further, but call our Witnesses, who will give you a clear and full Account of this Conspiracy. Swear Captain Porter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Captain Porter, I would not lead you with any Question, but pray will you give the Court and the Jury an Account what you know concerning any Conspiracy about assassinating the King, and when it was to be done, and where, and how, and by whom; and particularly what relates as to that Matter to the Prisoners at the Bar.

Char. My Lord, there are two Things that I must beg of the Court, in Relation to the Witnesses that are to be produced, and the Evidence that is to be given against me at this Time: And the first is, That before any of the Witnesses give any Evidence against me, the rest that are to be sworn and produced, may be kept out of Court, till they that are called have severally given their Evidence, that one may not hear what the other says; That I suppose is but reasonable in a Case of this Nature, and what was never denied, but always allow'd, as I have been informed.

L. C. J. There is but one Witness sworn, and I believe, that there are none of the rest here.

Char. Yes, my Lord, here is one Gentleman in Court whom I suppose to be an Evidence, and that is Mr. De la Rue.

L. C. J. If there be any others of the Witnesses, let them withdraw till they be called for; let there be some Body to look after them and attend them. (Which was accordingly done.)

L. C. J. Mr. Charnock, you have your Desire as to this Matter, all the rest of the Witnesses are withdrawn.

Char. My Lord, there is another Thing that I have to beg of the Court, and that is, in relation to the Evidence in general, That if there be any Thing prov'd to be spoken in Company, and talked of by Way of common Discourse, or only in Jollity in ordinary Conversation, that may not be interpreted as a Proof of any settled Design or Practice.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Charnock, who can tell what the Evidence will be until it be given? you will hear what is deposed by the Witnesses, and you have Pen and Ink, and may make such Observations as you think fit: When the Witnesses are heard, you will have all the Advantage that can be allowed you, and you may then propose your Objections to the Matter of their Evidence; which, no doubt, will have their just Weight with the Court: In the mean time, have you any Exception to this Man's being a Witness? If you have no Exception against him, then he must give his Evidence; and after he has deliver'd himself, and the King's Counsel have done with him, you are at Liberty to ask him what Questions you think fit.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Captain Porter, I desire you will acquaint the Court and the Jury what you know of any Conspiracy to take away the Life of his Majesty, when it began, in what Manner it was carried on, how far it proceeded, how it came to be disappointed, who were concerned in it, and what relates to the Prisoners at the Bar, as to their Share therein.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I am unfortunately engaged in this Matter, and have made a frank Discovery, to make the King all the Atonement I can, for having been concerned in such a Design. Some Weeks before this Conspiracy for Assassinating the King was in Hand, there came to my Lodging —

Mr. Att. Gen. Captain Porter, I would not interrupt you, but to put it into a Method, and Order of Time, will you please to recollect your self, and give the Court and the Jury an Account of your Knowledge about the first Beginning of this Conspiracy the last Year; I would not lead you, and therefore I ask you the general, and no particular Question.

Char. My Lord, I suppose that any Question about what was done the last Year is not at all to the Purpose in this Case, for there is nothing mention'd in the Indictment of the last Year.

L. C. J. It is in the Indictment diverse Days and Times, as well before as after.

Char. The Crime for which we are accused is laid to be the 10th Day of February, 1695.

L. C. J. The Day is not material, but only a Circumstance, but in Form, some Day before the Indictment preferred, must be laid; and tho' the Day mentioned in the Indictment is the 10th of February, yet it is also said, that the Things contained in the Indictment, of which you are accused, were done likewise at diverse Days and Times, as well before as after, and so the Indictment comprehends even what might be done the last Year as well as this.

Char. I beg the Favour of the Court in this Matter, for sure the 10th of February last can no way be supposed to be in the last Year.

L. C. J. I told you before, the Day is not material, nor are the Witnesses nor the King's Counsel tyed up either to the particular Time or Place mention'd in the Indictment, so it be within the County, and before the Indictment preferred. All that is to be regarded is, that no Evidence be given or admitted of any other Species of Treason, but what is contained in the Indictment; for a Man may certainly be indicted for a Treason committed this Year, and upon his Trial Evidence may be given of the same Treason committed the Year before.

Char. But then how can a Man prepare for his Defence?

Mr. Att. Gen. The Time is but a Circumstance, it may certainly be proved at another Day than what is laid in the Indictment, and yet very good Proof; and so it is in all other Cases, as well Civil as Criminal.

Char. Mr. Attorney General has said enough I think to confute himself; for if one Year may be put in the Indictment, and another Year brought in in the Evidence, how shall any Man be able to apply himself to his Defence, whose Thoughts run only upon the Time laid in the Indictment? I hope neither the Court nor the King's Counsel will come so hard upon us, as to put our Thoughts quite out of all Order, that when we apprehend we are only to defend ourselves against what is said to be done this Year, we must afresh prepare ourselves to answer what was done the last Year.

L. C. J. It is always so; for Form Sake, there is a particular Time laid in the Indictment, but the Proof is not to be tyed up to that Time; but if it be proved at any Time before or after, so it be before the Indictment preferred, it is well enough: And not without great Reason, for the Treason consisting in imagining and compassing the King's Death, which may be manifested by diverse Overt-Acts, some before, some on, and others since, the Tenth of February, yet they are Evidences of one Treason, which is the Compassing the King's Death.

Char. Then we may be under an Obligation to give an Account of all the Transactions of our Lives, if that be the Rule.

L. C. J. No, not so neither, for that very Treason assigned in the Indictment must be proved, and therefore you are only to give an Answer to that, and nothing else.

Char. But, my Lord, it may give a very great Loose, and much hinder our Defence; for as it is now desired that Proof may be given, of what was done last Year, at the same Rate, they [as well before and after] may signify seven Years ago.

L. C. J. And so it may if your Conspiracy reach'd so far, or did then begin, and was afterwards pursued; this is not any Thing that is unusual, but the Common Law is plain in it. Well, what say you, Mr. Porter?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I will give you an Account, if your Lordship pleaseth, of what was done this Year? and if any Questions afterwards be thought fit by the King's Counsel to be now asked me, about what passed before, I will answer them very readily.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well then go on your own way, we will reserve ourselves till afterwards.

Capt. Porter. Some Weeks before this Design was on Foot, for assassinating the King, Sir William Perkins, when he was in Town, was at the same Place where Mr. Charnock and I did lodge; it was about the latter End of January: He asked Mr. Charnock where he would be at Night; and

and I told them, if they were not about private Business, I would meet them. He told me, there were some Friends come from France, and that something was a doing that would be for the Service of the King: I told them, if any Thing of that Nature was a doing, I would readily engage in it; and they told me I should know it very soon. A little after I fell sick of the Gout, and could not stir from my Chamber: But then Mr. Charnock did acquaint me, that Sir George Barclay, and those that came from France, had brought a Commission to raise and levy War upon the Person of King William, and he asked me how many I could bring to join with them, if the King landed; I desired to consider of it, and he told me Sir George Barclay would come to him about it. Accordingly, he and Holmes came to the House where we lodged, in Norfolk-street, and there they were in private with Mr. Charnock; and afterwards, because I was lame, and could not stir, they came into my Room, and Sir George Barclay told me, he was glad to see me in good Health, but sorry to find me lame, but he hoped to see me abroad in a little Time; and I told him, I hoped so too. They said, they were going then to some Company, and they hoped to see me afterwards. After that there were several Meetings that we had, particularly at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, the Naggs-Head at St. James-street, and the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and in all these Places we did consult together, which was the best Way, and where was the best Place to assassinate the King, when he came from Hunting. Sir George Barclay told us he had some Money to buy Horses, but not much, he had as much as would furnish about Forty. Captain Charnock said, he would bring six or seven Men, that should come out of the Country. Sir William Perkins said he would lend five Horses, there to be mounted by Men of his own, the other two by such as should be provided. I promised to bring seven Men with Horses, and Sir George Barclay said, that Lowick and others that came over with him from France, would engage in the Design, and make up the Number. I desired very much to see the Commission that came from the late King, and asked Mr. Charnock about it; he said he never saw it, but Sir William Perkins told me, he had seen it, and that it was all writ with King James his own Hand, and signed by himself. All this was agreed to, and then there were Consultations in what Method it was to be done. Several Proposals there were; one was to set upon him as he came from Richmond by the Road, others when he was on Horse-back at Kew. Sir George Barclay was for having it done by Ambuscade in the Park by Richmond, and therefore desired me to go with Mr. Knightly, and view the several Places and Ground thereabouts, to find out which was the most convenient Place. The Day before we were to go, Capt. King came to me, and would know if we were to go about such a Matter, and proffered to go with us. I told him I had never a Horse, but he said, he would get one. We went that Night to the Swan at Knights-bridge, and there we lay, and went the next Day to view the Ground, and came the next Evening to the Company, to give an Account what we had done; and upon the Account that we gave, Sir George Barclay's Mind was altered, and it was agreed to do it in the Lane coming from Brentford to Turnham-Green, and the particular Manner was agreed on too. There was one Rookwood that was to command one Party of Sir George Barclay's Men, to attack the Guard; he told us, he had bought twenty Horses which were to be employed in this Expedition; they were to be divided in three Parties, and Sir George Barclay was to have four out of each of the other Parties, and to seize upon the King's Coach, and to shoot into it, and kill the King, and all those that were with him: And this was to be done on the 15th of February, which was a Saturday, and the King usually went to Richmond on Saturdays. We had two orderly Men (as they were called) who were to lie at Kensington, to give Intelligence when the King and the Guards went out, the one was Chambers, and the other one Durant, a Flemming, I think, or I do not well know what Country-man he was; and Durant was to bring an Account when the Guard went out, and Chambers when the King went out, and when we had Notice that the King was gone, we were to go by three or four in a Party to prevent Suspicion, and we were to be dispersed in the several Inns about Brentford and Turnham-Green. Sir George Barclay was to be at the King of Bohemia's Head; and we ordered a Man to give Notice to him when the King landed, and then he was to give Notice to us, and so we were to form our selves into our several Bodies, to take our several Posts as were agreed upon. I asked him, what he thought to do when the Matter was over, how we should dispose of our selves? He told me, we need not fear any Thing, but might go to Town and lie still, and that there would come a sufficient Number from Abroad ready to assist us. That 4 or 5000 French were to divert in Scotland, and the King would be near the French Shore with a sufficient Army. On Friday before the 22d, when it was to have been executed again, we met at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and there discoursed, for a matter of half an Hour, about the former Disappointment, and several in the Company were afraid the Design was discovered; but then I told them, if it had been so, sure we should have been taken up before now; upon which it was agreed, Then let us resolve upon it again To-morrow, and so it was resolved upon. Capt. Charnock said, he could not stay, because he should want some Men that were come up out of the Country on purpose. I said, I was afraid my Horses were sick, and could not be used in the Service, and Sir William Perkins thereupon undertook to furnish me, and told Mr. Charnock and me he had sent to Mr. Lewis, that belongs to the Earl of Feversham, to procure some, having, as he said, promised so to do. I sent the next Morning to have a Note for two, by Mr. Cranburne, and he sent me a Note back again by Cranburne, that he had sent to Mr. Lewis, and Mr. Lewis said, he would help him to three Horses, with Saddles, Holsters and Pistols, and desired the List of my Men, which I sent him, and he sent it me back again with the List of his own, and then I shewed it to Mr. De la Rue, and we were preparing all Things for the Execution of this Design, and presently after News came, that the King did not go out that Day neither; upon which I said I would go out of Town, and I asked Capt. Pendergrafs to go with me, and we sent Keyes to bring Linnen unto us, but he did not come until the Wednesday, and upon the Thursday we were taken.

Mr. Att. Gen. Captain Porter, you mention several Consultations, at several Times and Places; who were present at any, and which of them? Were any of the Prisoners at the Bar there, and which?

Capt. Porter. There was Mr. Charnock, and Mr. King, at all of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you say about Keyes? What was he?

Capt. Porter. He was my Servant a Year and a Half.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he acquainted with the Assassination?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he was, and was present at most of the Consultations. He hired Horses for me to be employed in the Business. On the first Saturday, he hired two, I gave him Money for them, and he did know upon what Account they were hired.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he present when News was brought of the Disappointment? — Capt. Porter. Yes, he was both Times.

Mr. Att. Gen. You are sure he was present then?

Capt. Porter. Yes, the second Time he said, that he met the King's Guards that were come back all in a Foam, and that he had spoke to one of my Lord of Oxford's Regiment, and that something was mutter'd, upon which he feared a Discovery.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Keyes agree to be one of the Men, that should be concerned and act in this Business?

Capt. Porter. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Quality is he of? What is his Profession?

Capt. Porter. He used formerly to help to dress me, and he was to look after my Linnen and Equipage.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had he not been a Trumpeter? Was not that his Profession?

Capt. Porter. He was a Trumpeter, and used sometimes to entertain us with his Trumpet.

Mr. Conyers. You speak of a Meeting at the Sun Tavern in the Strand upon Friday the 21st of February, where it was resolved to execute this Attempt upon the next Day.

Capt. Porter. Yes, there was such a Meeting.

Mr. Conyers. Was Keyes there at that Time?

Capt. Porter. He was not in the Room where we were, but he was in another Room in the same House, where I went out to him, and there was he, Cranburne and Kenrick.

Mr. Conyers. Pray what did you go to them for?

Capt. Porter. I went to acquaint them what was resolved upon; and I told them they were resolved to do it the next Day, to which they agreed, but that I thought my Horses would not be ready, but I hoped I should get some other.

Mr. Con. Pray, what other Discourse had you in that Company: With whom, and about what?

Capt. Porter. Mr. Kenrick came to me with his Arm in a String; either he had broke his Arm, or pretended so to have done. I then asked him for Mr. Sherbourn, whom he had mentioned before to me, as one that was likely to be concerned: He told me Mr. Sherbourn asked a great many Questions about the Design, which he did not think fit to answer; I thanked him for telling me so, and said I would not send to him.

Mr. Cooper. Pray, Captain Porter, give me leave to ask you one Question, Can you remember what Number of Men Charnock was to provide for this Enterprize?

Capt. Porter. He promised seven or eight Men, some of which should bring their Horses out of the Country, others he would borrow or hire for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, was there any Body sent to take an Account of the Inns about the Place where this Assassination was to have been executed?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Mr. Durant was, and he did bring us an Account of the several Inns about Brentford and Turnham-Green.

Mr. Att. Gen. As to the List of Men, which you say you sent to Charnock, and he sent you back with a List of his Men, pray can you tell whose Hand that List of his Men was in?

Capt. Porter. I know Captain Charnock's Hand very well, and, to the best of my Knowledge, it was his own Hand, and subscribed R. C.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir, you have given an Account of the Meeting the 22d at your Lodging.

Charnock. I was not there he says.

Mr. Att. Gen. First let me ask you, how came it that it was not put in Execution the 15th; for that you did not tell us before?

Capt. Porter. I tell you, Sir, it was because the King did not go out that Day, according as we had Notice, that he intended to do: Durant wrote first Word that the Guards were gone before, upon which I went for my Men, and about Noon I received a Note from Mr. Charnock that the King did not go out that Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what Name was subscribed to that Note?

Capt. Porter. R. Robinson, which was a Name he used to go by sometimes.

Mr. Att. Gen. And pray in whose Hand was that Note?

Capt. Porter. To the best of my Knowledge it was Captain Charnock's, I know his Hand very well.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if the Prisoners will ask him any Questions, they may. — L. C. J. Will you ask him any Questions?

Char. My Lord, in the first Place I desire the Judgment of the Court, whether he be a legal Evidence or no. I conceive he is not, and I hope your Lordships will think so too: For he makes himself a Criminal by his own Confession, and that of a very heinous Crime, and it is equal in my Judgment (and as I have been advised, who I must still say am ignorant in these Matters) as if he had confess'd it upon an Indictment, and then the Law can take no Notice of him as a good Witness. And if he were no legal Witness then, I take it by the same Reason he is no legal Witness now: For the Crime is the same, and it is an Acknowledgment in open Court.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Charnock, if it had been a Confession upon an Indictment, it would have been a Conviction, which would have had quite another Operation; but it not being upon an Indictment, it is no Conviction, and therefore he is a legal Witness, though he does acknowledge himself to be guilty of the Crime.

Char. Then, my Lord, he is looked upon as no good Evidence, in my Judgment, because he is a Criminal.

L. C. J. He is a legal Evidence, though he does confess himself guilty of the Crime.

Char. He owns himself a Partner in a bloody Design, and to convict me, he swears to take away my Life, to save his own. I cannot imagine why he should be accounted a legal Witness, that is a Party by his own Confession in such a Matter.

L. C. J. Pray, who can tell better what was intended and done in such a Conspiracy than he that was a Party in it?

Char. My Lord, he has forfeited his Life by his own Confession, and now he would, by Swearing against me, take away my Life to save his own.

L. C. J. Whatsoever Objections you have against the Credit of his Testimony, you may make what Use of them you can in the proper Time; but for any thing that yet appears, he is a legal Witness.

Char. My Lord, I know not how far he is a legal Witness, therein I must be governed by the Judgment of the Court; but sure it will take away from the Credibility of his Testimony, his own Acknowledgment of his being guilty of such a Crime. Tho' he may be a legal Witness, he cannot be a good one. And I hope the Gentlemen of the Jury will consider of it, when a Man comes to take away other Men's Lives to save his own, by accusing them of Crimes which he acknowledgeth himself to be guilty of.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Charnock, for that matter, it is so in all Cases of this Nature, not only in Cases of High-Treason, but of Robberies and Burglaries, and the like, where the Parties concerned are, and always have been allowed to be good Witnesses against their Accomplices in those Crimes. Will you ask him any Questions, Mr. Charnock?

Char. My Lord, here is another Thing, which, I apprehend, I have Reason to object against the Testimony of this Witness; he does not only swear to save his own Life, and take away another's to deserve the saving of his own, but there is in this Case Swearing to get a Reward, for there is a Reward of 1000*l.* apiece promised by Proclamation, for the Apprehension of this Man and others. And not only a Pardon, but the 1000*l.* to any of those in the Proclamation who shall discover and take any of the proscribed Persons. Now, where a Man stands accused by Proclamation, and his own Life is thereby concerned, and a Reward is propos'd for any of the Conspirators discovering and apprehending the others, it is a hard Matter to admit any one that acknowledgeth himself guilty of such a Crime, to prove a Prisoner guilty of that Crime under those Circumstances. Besides, my Lord, I have known this Gentleman, and tho' he may have had an Estate, yet since I have Reason to suspect, and perhaps it may be very well known, that the Fortune he had is lavished away; to make up that Damage, he may be tempted to undertake this Way of Swearing. So I think he cannot be a good Evidence, and I hope your Lordship will think so too, and that he is to receive no Credit or Countenance before an honest Jury, as I doubt not these Gentlemen are, that are to try us.

L. C. J. Mr. Charnock, do not mistake yourself; he is to have no Reward by the Proclamation unless he had come in voluntarily, and apprehended one of the others; for only those that apprehend any of the Persons named in the Proclamation, are to receive any Part of the Reward, not any of the Witnesses against any of them; the Reward is for the Apprehension, whether they be found guilty or not guilty.

Char. But still, my Lord, he cannot be a good Witness, for it looks as if he was a Man that was willing to have become an Evidence, because we, whom he has accused, particularly myself, were permitted to be taken, and then in the mean while he seems to withdraw, only that he might be taken as a Colour. For my Part, I know not but that it may be a Contrivance of his own, to be colourably taken up, because he is so willingly an Evidence, as the Jury may perceive he is.

L. C. J. It is certainly a very hard Matter, if not impossible, to discover Crimes of this Nature, if the Accomplices in those Crimes shall not be allowed to be good Witnesses against their Fellow Conspirators.

Char. My Lord, I must submit to the Judgment of the Court that he is a legal Witness. But tho' I shall not press upon the Legality, yet I must say he is not a good Witness for all the Reasons that I have urged.

L. C. J. Nay, he is a very good Witness, if he be a legal Witness; but the Credit of what he says, as in all other Cases, must be left to the Jury, who are Judges of the Matter of Fact, and the Credibility of the Witnesses.

Char. My Lord, when Persons will own themselves guilty of joining in so barbarous a Crime as we stand indicted for, and accused of, sure there will be little Credit due to their Testimony.

L. C. J. His Credit must be left to the Jury, who are the Judges of it; now if you will ask no Questions, I must speak to the rest. Mr. King, will you ask him any Questions?

Char. I speak this only in general; but I have some Remarks that I have made upon the Evidence that has been given, out of which, when I have told you of them, Questions may arise, which it may be fit for me to propose, and I shall desire your Lordship's Leave accordingly.

L. C. J. Look you, Mr. Charnock, you shall be heard all that you have to say, when your Time comes for your Defence, and to make what Observations upon the Evidence you please. But the Matter is now, whether you will think fit to cross-examine the Witnesses that are produced for the King, or to ask them any Questions?

Char. My Lord, I have taken some Notes of what has been said, and I desire I may make the best Use of them that I can.

L. C. J. You may make what use you will of your Notes, and make what Observation you will to make any Question you ask intelligible.

Char. My Lord, Capt. Porter in his Evidence has said that this Conspiracy was in the latter End of February. Now I apprehend his Oath is not valuable upon this Indictment, because the Offence is laid the Tenth of February, and so his Conspiracy that he talks of, was after the Time laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. I believe you mistake him, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he pleases to ask him, I suppose he will find himself mistaken.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I say the latter End of January; if I said February I mistook.

L. C. J. And so it must be; for the two and twentieth of February was to have been the second Time for the Execution of the Design, and several of the Conspirators were taken the next Day.

Char. My Lord, I desire Capt. Porter may be asked, where it was, and when, that I brought Sir George Barclay and Mr. Holmes into his Company?

Vol. IV.

Capt. Porter. It was the Beginning of February, at my Chamber, in the same House where Mr. Charnock lodged, and I was then sick of the Gout.

Char. My Lord, I declare it, I know nothing of it. Then he says, we had several Meetings, particularly at three several Taverns; by what I can observe, there is no Time at all, nor at any of those three Places that there was any Sort of Conspiracy for the Assassinating of the King.

L. C. J. Yes, he says, that you met at those Places, where you did consult about Assassinating of the King, and the Ways and Methods how it should be carried on; and that you was at those Consults; for Mr. Attorney asked him particularly, Whether you that are the Prisoners were there? and he says, Ay.

Char. He says, that we met at the Nagg's-head Tavern in St. James's-street, where it was agreed that he and Knightly should go and view the Ground, to see which would be the most convenient Place; and that they came the next Night to give an Account according to our Desire. Now, my Lord, I was there at Dinner, and Capt. Porter did come in at Night; and if you do remember, Captain, you could not pull off your Boots well, and complained of the Gout, and was very peevish; and said you had been at Mortlack, and had met with a Friend there; That is all that I know. There was Capt. King and Mr. Knightly indeed; who sent for some other Cloaths, but it cannot be pretended that there was any Crime transacted at that Time; for you cannot imagine, that I would have to do in any such Matter amongst Porters and Messengers that were to go on common Errands.

L. C. J. I will only put you in a right Method; You may ask what Questions you will now; but you are not to make your Observations upon the Witnesses to the Jury till the King's Evidence be given, for then your Time will come for your Defence.

Char. My Lord, it may be I may forget then what may be proper for me to insist upon. If your Lordship will please to allow me a Solicitor to put me in Mind, I should be the better able to manage myself.

L. C. J. You may be helped by your Notes; but you have been told over and over, we can allow no Solicitor.

Char. My Lord, Capt. Porter says, I told him there was such a Commission brought by Sir George Barclay from King James; he says indeed, I told him I never saw it; and I do not know how I could, because I do not believe there ever was any such, and it is improbable there should be any such.

L. C. J. Mr. Charnock, I would not hinder you from saying any Thing that would be proper for your Defence, nor will interrupt you when your proper Time comes.

Char. My Lord, what I say is as to what Capt. Porter has evidenced, and I will make Observations upon one Part of the Evidence after another, as it is given.

L. C. J. But that is not regular, according to the Course of Evidence, and will introduce a Confusion. You may ask any Questions of the particular Witnesses, as they are in Order, if you will; but your Observations, as to your own Defence, you must defer, till the Witnesses are heard, that so the Evidence may be intire, and your Defence intire; therefore if you will ask him any Questions, say so.

Char. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then Mr. King, will you ask him any Questions?

King. Capt. Porter, Did I mention any Thing, or was there any Discourse when you and I, and Mr. Knightly, as you say, went out to view the Ground, about killing the King?

Capt. Porter. The Day before we went, we dined together, and it was at the Nagg's-head, and he asked if I was to meet Knightly, and go and view the Ground, in order to settling the Design, which was then talked of, and consulted about; and Captain King desired to go with us, and we lay at Knights-bridge; and when we were about it, we discoursed several Times of the Nature of the Place; and Captain King did not approve of the Place on this Side the Water, but liked the Ambuscade better, which was to have been on the other Side the Water.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Questions?

King. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well then, What says the other Man, Keyes? Will he ask him any Questions?

Keyes. My Lord, I have had no Body to advise me, no Counsel; I was only a Servant to Captain Porter.

Mr. Att. Gen. If then they have done with him, before he goes, I desire to ask him one Question. What Discourse, or Treaty, or Consultation about this, or such like a Matter, there was the last Winter, and between whom?

Capt. Porter. There were several Meetings and Consultations the last Winter between Capt. Charnock, Sir William Perkins, and myself, about such a Thing; and we thought that the quickest Way to bring in the King, and restore him to his Crown, was by knocking King William on the Head; and there were several Meetings about the Ways of doing it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who else were there at those Meetings?

Capt. Porter. There were several others in Company.

Mr. Att. Gen. But the Meaning of my Question is, who of the Prisoners?

Capt. Porter. I cannot remember any but Capt. Charnock.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you acquaint us with the Reason why it was not done at that Time?

Capt. Porter. We wanted a Commission from France, which we thought was a necessary Authority for us to act by.

Mr. Att. Gen. You speak of a List that was brought you again from Charnock, with the Addition of those Names that were his Men; pray at that time was there no Discourse about a particular Gun that was somebody's, and that one in the Company was to have, to be employed in this Service?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I said, I had a Musquetoon that carried 6 or 8 Bullets, that Captain Pendergrafs, who was one of the Four out of my Quota, that was to go with Sir George Barclay, should have if he pleased.

Mr. Att. Gen. Capt. Porter, I would not lead you, but were there any particular Directions given, and what, touching the particular Employment of that Gun?

Capt. Porter. I remember I told Capt. Pendergrafs, if the Coach made any great haste to get away, he might easily hinder that, by killing or maiming one of the Horses with that Gun.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray recollect yourself, Sir, was King, the Prisoner at the Bar, present at that Discourse?

Capt. Porter. Capt. King was then in my Room in Morden-lane, where I then lay, being removed from my Lodging at Norfolk-street.

King. Do you say that I heard any such Discourse?

Capt. Porter. I cannot say you heard it, but you was present then.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there not some Discourse about a Defect of the Numbers that were appointed, and expected to join in this Thing?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I told you I wanted a Man, and that was Kenrick, who had his Arm in a String; and Mr. De la Rue brought one that I knew not, and some of the Company went to the Blue-Posts to tarry there whilst I came to them, and Capt. King was present when the News was brought us of the Disappointment, and then I resolved to go out of Town.

Mr. Att. Gen. The next Witness, my Lord, that we call is Mr. De la Rue, and we desire he may be sworn. (Which was done.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. De la Rue, we would desire you to acquaint the Court and the Jury, what you know of any Design or Conspiracy to Assassinate the King, when it began, how it was carry'd on, and by whom, and by what Methods?

Mr. De la Rue. My Lord, this Conspiracy hath been carrying on a great while, for some Years: And it originally came from Col. Parker, especially as to my Knowledge of it; and that was five or six Years ago, at St. Germain, when I was there: He proposed it to me, and said he would propose it to my Lord Melfort, who was King James's Secretary in France. Two Years after, he came over into England, it was a little before the Business of La Hogue, and he would have had me come over into England with him; upon which I applied myself to my Lord Melfort, to know whether I should come over hither yea or no: My Lord Melfort advised me to stay there awhile; for, said he, you will find there is something a doing which will please you. But nothing being done, after that I came to England, and suffered a very tedious Confinement here. I became acquainted with Mr. Charnock and Capt. King abroad, I have been with Mr. Charnock, Mr. King, Mr. Porter, Mr. Goodman, and Col. Parker, here in Town several Times, and at several Places. And now I come to what was a doing the last Year. In the Months of January, February, and March, till the King's going to Flanders, there were several Conferences and Consultations about this Matter, between Sir William Perkins, Capt. Porter, and others; I cannot say that ever I was in Company with Goodman at that Time, when we talked of any Thing of this Nature. But Capt. Charnock carried me to Sir William Perkins, whom I had never seen before, to the Mitre-Tavern in St. James's Market, and there I was asked if I would be concerned in the Easing us from the Yoke that then lay upon us, I asked which way it was to be done, for I could not understand what was meant, but the taking off the King, and therefore I asked which way it was to be done. Then they asked me, whether I knew where Capt. Stow lived; and they employed me to go to his Lodgings, and appointed me to meet them at the Star-Tavern in White-Friars. They were there before me, when I had met with the Captain, and brought him thither; but that they thought not a fit Place to consult in, and therefore they went to Bromfield's Coffee-house, and there they did talk something of it; but they took one another aside, and talked privately amongst themselves, which I took some Observation and Notice of; and upon Enquiry I was told it was because there was an old Gentleman in the Company, whom they did not care to acquaint with any Thing of the Matter, because he was too old to have any Hand in it, and they would acquaint none with their Resolutions, but those that were to be Actors in the Design. My Lord, I was not often in their Company after that, but I heard from Time to Time, how Matters went on, and I heard from Captain Porter particularly, that they had been at Turnham-Green and liked the Place very well, and that the Design was to take the King off, or else to hurry him away to Rumney-Marsh alive, and carry him into France.

Charnock. Surely this is not any Evidence, because Captain Porter only spoke of it, and it is by Hear-say, and we are not concern'd what other People talk of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray who was in the Room, when the Proposals were made?

De la Rue. What Proposals do you mean, Sir?

Mr. Att. Gen. At the Tavern in St. James's-Street.

De la Rue. At the Coffee-house there was a little Talk of it between themselves; but they would not talk much, they said, because there was an old Gentleman there who was too old to engage, and they would have none but Actors; that I understood to be the Reason why they talked one with another so: But I taking Notice of their Privacy, whenever I asked Charnock of it, he referred me to Captain Porter. But withal he told me several Times, that he believed it would come to nothing. The Design was to carry the King alive into France, if they could; if they could not take him alive, then to Assassinate him, and pretend it was done by a Random Shot. He told me also, that they had sent to King James for a Commission to execute this Matter, and to authorize them to carry the King into France, if they could take him; and then if they could not, they agreed to excuse themselves, as I said, by pretending that he was killed by a Random Shot. It should seem (as I understood) the Commission was delayed a long Time, and then they resolved to execute the Design without a Commission; and within a few Days before the King was to go to Flanders, I was told all was ready. But then they wanted a Ship to carry him off when they had taken him; and there met at the Rose Tavern, as I remember, Captain Porter and Sir William Perkins; but I cannot tell whether Mr. Charnock was there or not. I asked them if they had concluded upon the Matter; they told me it was concluded upon, and, as I remember, they told me Captain Charnock, or Robinson (for he went by both Names) was to have a Recommendation to some Body at Deal; and there they were to hire a Vessel, and I was asked whether I would go with him: I told them, I would. But then the King went a little after for Flanders; and they had no Time to compleat the whole Affair, and so the Business was put off till the King's Return this last Winter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, what say you to any Thing since?

De la Rue. This Year, in the Months of November and December, Mr. King, the Prisoner at the Bar, told me, that there would be a Major General come over from France, and that there was a Man of Quality about the Town, that offered to disburse two or three Thousand Pounds, if King James would give Order for it: And this was, as I suppose, to buy Horses to be engaged in this Matter, and he would tell me more a while after. A Month or two after, he told me he was out of Money about it, which could not be had: I was brought in by Capt. Porter, and they communicated this to me about the latter End of January, or the Beginning of the Month of February; they told me there was a Major General come over from France, and there were a great many People come over besides; and there would be something speedily put in Execution, which would be for the King's Service.

L. C. J. Who told you this?

De la Rue. Captain King. The next Time I saw him, he told me he wanted a Saddle with Holsters, it was the 7th of February, on Friday Night, for he was to go out of Town with some Friends, about something in order to this Affair; he desired me to lend him one; but I had none, I told him, but I would write to Capt. Porter, to procure one for him; and he told me he was to go with Knightly, Durant, and others, to see whether the King went to Richmond or to Hounslow, because they were told the King had altered his Journey from Richmond to Hounslow. He afterwards told me, he went with his Friends, and the Sunday Morning he comes to me, and told me, there was the rarest Place for the Execution of the Design against the King, that was possible to be thought of; if they should have studied never so long, and desired a convenient Place, they could not have had such another. It was within a Quarter of a Mile of the King's House at Richmond, in a Lane that leads to the House, and so narrow, that the Officers and the Guard could go but very few a-breast, hardly broad enough for a-breast; and there was to be an Ambuscade behind the Park Pales, and the other Side was the River; and, says he, he will have all the Pales sawed so far that when the King's Coach comes into the Place, the Pales shall be broke down, and we will have a Parcel of Horse ready, that shall be sure to do the Work with the Guards; and when we fire, they shall take Notice to make their Attack. Durant desires to command this Party; and they were to be dressed in Country-Men's Habits, that they might be the less taken Notice of: and he said 10 or 12 Men on the other Side would beat 100 of the Guards in that Consternation, especially we having the Park Pales before us to defend us. He asked me if I would be one of the Ambuscade. I told him I had rather be one of those on Horseback to secure the Retreat, and I would rather attack the Guards. It was late, and so King and I went Home; and the next Day I went to see Captain Porter, when he was ill of the Gout. This was Sunday, the 9th of February; we did go to Porter, and he was in his Chamber, and two or three more, and they were talking of indifferent Things: He asked for Captain Charnock, and they said he was gone out; but he takes out Capt. Porter into the Yard to talk with him by himself; and what he said to him, I suppose was to tell him what he had told me before: Says Captain Porter to him, I have taken Care of a Horse for you; we will ride out on Tuesday next to see the Place. Mr. Porter, and Mr. King, and, as I was told, Mr. Knightly went to Knights-bridge, and lay there all Night: and the next Day they went out of Town to view the Place. I was at Porter's Lodging on the Monday, but I was told there by Keyes and his Landlady, that he lay that Night at the Swan at Knights-bridge, and was to go out the next Day. On the Tuesday Morning I was coming back from Kensington, which was the 11th of February, and when I was coming along the Street I met with Keyes, and ask'd him where he was going? Says he, I am going to Sir William Perkins with a Lorrying Trumpet; for it seems he was raising a Troop of Horse, as Porter told me afterwards; and within a little Time afterwards, I saw Captain Porter at the End of Norfolk-street, and he told me they would all be together at the Nagg's-head, about 7 or 8 o'Clock. I went, and expected to be admitted, and asked if Captain Porter was there; they told me he was above, but there were several other Persons with him; and there was a Coach at the Door which had brought two Scotch Gentlemen, of which I thought Sir George Barclay was one, whom I heard to be in Town. I desired to speak with Captain Porter; they told me he was busy above in Company, and could not be spoke with; by which I saw they were not willing that I should come there amongst them, which I took very ill. Captain King came out to me, and was talking with me at the Door, and Captain Charnock comes with another to the Door in a Coach: I saw him, but when, I suppose, he perceived me, he pulls himself back into the Coach, as if he had no Mind to be seen; but finding he could not avoid it, he comes out, and asks me if I would not go up Stairs into the Company? I told him, No, I hear they are busy, and because I was not invited up at first, I would not trouble them. I was then thinking of going to my Lord Shrewsbury's Office immediately, to get some Messengers immediately to apprehend them; but then I thought I had not enough to discover their Intentions, and make it out against them, but I should have one Time or another. I did not see Captain King till Saturday afterwards at 12 o'Clock, and I was then at Charnock's Lodging, to see whether he was gone out, that I might be able to give the King the better Account; they told me he was at the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden: I would not go and dine there, but went home, and afterwards went thither; and King told me, the King did not go out that Day; I told him that I heard so, and would come and see them after Dinner. At this Meeting at Spring Garden I saw Keyes was one, and Kenrick, and Sherbourn, and Bryerly, and two that I did not know. This was Saturday the 15th. On Sunday the 16th, I met Mr. King at St. James's-street, and we went thence to the Dog Tavern, and there we supped together, and he told me Sir George Barclay had brought over Sixteen of the Guards, and two Officers, and a Brigadier, and a Sub-Brigadier; and he told me the Day before, that he knew some of them, and was going to meet them; for they were en Cachet, as he called it in French, and did not stir abroad without Leave, and were subsisted at the Rate of 4 s. a Day, as the Guards were here. He told me, he had been lately with them a drinking. I asked him whither they went; he told me, to the Bear Tavern in the Strand; and he told me Mr. Charnock and Captain Porter had several Conferences with them to contrive how to take off his Majesty, to Murder and to Assassinate him. And he told me—

Charnock. My Lord, I desire he may be ask'd whether he was at the Bear Tavern with these Men.

L. C. J. What he says about this Matter, is what King told him.

Char. That is not Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. That is true, not to affect you, but only Mr. King.

De la Rue. Captain King told me besides, that Mr. Charnock did not argue like a Soldier, and reflected upon him for it; for he said, he seemed to desire to have his Post in as little Danger as was possible. And for Mr. Porter, he did not approve of him; for he told me he had as much Fat in his Brains, as he had in his Body. I remember those Words he said; and that what he and Durant had proposed, was rejected, that was about the Ambuscade: For it was said, that after all their Consideration, Sir George Barclay was not sure of Horse enough to carry them off afterwards; wherefore they resolved to Assassinate his Majesty in the Lane coming from Brentford to Turnham-Green; and Sir George Barclay was to command Eight Persons to assault the King, and those that were in the Coach; and Mr. Charnock was to attack the Guards in the Rear; and one Rookwood, with a Party that came from France, and Captain Porter, in two Wings, were to attack the two Sides of the Guards. I remember on Sunday Night I asked him if he had a good Sword, for I wanted one; and I said to him, Where is your Sword-Cutler? He told me, On the other Side of the Way; and he was sent for to bring a good Sword, and I chose one that was but a little Blade, which he thought would do best, and was ridiculing Captain Charnock's Sword, as being too broad, and of three or four Fingers Breadth. I liked his Sword, and spake to the Man to get me one like his; and he said a Tuesday, that he had sent him to my Lodging, but I had not seen him. On Tuesday, the 18th of February, I went to him, and asked him, whether I should see him in the Afternoon? He told me, No; for he was to go out with Knightly to buy Arms. Shall I see you then at Night? said I. I cannot tell whether you can or no, said he. I cannot remember any Thing more that passed upon the 18th. But I spoke to Mr. Charnock, whom I met near his Lodging in Norfolk-street, and desired to have a Word with him towards the Water-side: I asked him, how the Matter in Hand went; Says he, I find People that were sanguine, and hot, and forward, are now grown cold: I believe the King has Notice of it, and the Thing has taken Air; for he has not been abroad a good while. He was not abroad on Saturday, as he usually does go: and I hear that upon Friday Night it was agreed in Council, to take up several People. Said I, Does the Business go on? No, says he, I believe it is off, because we apprehend the Thing has taken Air; besides Things of such a Nature are not to be communicated to so many, nor delayed, both which are very dangerous; not above Three People should know of it. Said I, How then would they get enough for the Execution? If they be not acquainted with the Design, they will never engage. Well, said he, I believe they are quite off of the Thoughts of it; but you may depend upon the main Business, that will be very speedily, which was the Landing of King James. While I was talking, comes Bryerly from Captain Porter; and after him, came Captain King in a Coach, and asked me, if I would go Home with him? I told him, No, I was not going Home, but was going into White-Fryers, and I took my Leave of them; and nothing pass'd more, that I remember, at that Time. On Wednesday Morning I went to Capt. Charnock's, thinking to learn something how Matters went on; but he was cloister, and more reserved than before. I asked him to lend me a good Sword. He said he had none, but Mr. Porter had a good broad flaming Sword, which I thought to be the Sword that Capt. King mentioned to be his: And we had little Talk that Day; for I had Business to do, and I left him pretty soon on the Wednesday. Next Day after, I went to Captain Porter's Lodging, who was removed from Norfolk-street into Maiden-head-lane, to one Brown a Surgeon's, and very few People knew where he was, but those that were of the Party in this Business; and I went into another Room, into the Dining-room, because his Room had not a Fire, and he came in to us, and I told him what I had heard from Mr. Charnock, that the Thing was quite off. He told me, he heard nothing of it, but found all People that were concerned, as resolute for the Execution of it, as ever they were.

Char. My Lord, he speaks of what Captain Porter told him; that is nothing to me.

L. C. J. No, it is not, nor will it ever be urged against you; it is but Hear-say from another. Go on, Sir.

De la Rue. I stayed there but a short Time: But, Capt. Charnock, since you speak of this Matter, I only say, I told Captain Porter what you told me, That you thought they were off of the Business, and that it had taken Air; and I asked him what he thought: Says he, I know nothing of any Alteration; I believe they are as resolute as ever they were: For they fully purpose, that if the King goes abroad on Saturday Morning, we will have all ready. And he told me how it was to be done. He desired me to lie with him on Friday Night, that we might prepare every thing against the next Day: But I could not do that; and therefore he bid me send at Nine, or thereabouts. I told him I would be at my Lodging about that Time, if he would send to me, to be sure about seven or eight a Clock in the Morning. About that Time in the Morning Capt. Porter sends to me again; a Servant-Maid came to me, for the Black that used to attend him, used only to go abroad at Nights, and was not seen to go in and out a-Days, for Fear of being taken Notice of; because, as I said, none but those that were of the Party knew that he lodged there. I dress'd myself, and went to Captain Porter's Lodging. He was in Bed, but presently he rises, and told me in French, Toutes Parties sont prestes; All Things are ready: And when he was up, he put on his Boots; and by and bye, in comes Mr. Kenrick; and after him in comes Mr. Keyes; and after him, Mr. King and Mr. Pendergrafs: and Captain King takes Mr. Porter into another Room, and there they were whispering a while, but I did not hear what they said; but King told me afterwards, he did not observe that I was in the other Room. The Question then was asked of Cranbourne, When he saw Sir George Barclay? He said, he just came from him: And then Captain Porter takes a Pen and Ink, and writes down a List of the Persons that he was sure of, and puts me down first. What, says Mr. Pendergrafs, are you the Captain? I told him, I believed I was in before the rest of the Company that were there. Then Capt. Porter sends Mr. Cranbourne with the List to Captain Charnock's Lodgings; and in the mean Time, when Mr. Cranbourne was gone, Capt. Porter told me, that Mr. Pendergrafs was to be one of the Eight under Sir George Barclay, that were to Assassinate the King; And now, says he, I am going to lend him a Gun that will carry six or eight Bullets. Says Captain King thereupon to him, I hope you will not fear to break the Glass Windows. No, says he, I will have a Hand or a Finger in the Business. By and bye came in News, that Chambers, one of the orderly Men, as they called them that lay at Kensington to give Intelligence, had sent Word that the King was to go abroad, and the Guards were gone out. Durant was to stay last, to see when the King went out. Chambers had been there all the Week. Mr. Cranbourne came back, and told Captain Porter, that Chambers had sent to Captain Charnock, that the King would go out that Day. At which all the Company seemed joyful. Captain Porter told me likewise of several Disappointments that they had, both as to Time, and as to Men; particularly that one Major Lowick had engaged to bring two Men, and that one of them had told his Wife, that he was to mount for King James's Service; and she went and cried after him when he went to the Coffee-house; and so he was forced to abscond, and so we lost three: And also told me, that Kenrick said he had broke his Arm; and when Captain Porter asked for Sherbourne whom Kenrick had talked of, he said he asked so many Questions that he durst not trust him: so that they had lost Five or Six in the whole: And there was one Plowden that they were disappointed of besides, whom they had very much reckon'd upon. When Mr. Cranbourne brought back the List that Captain Porter sent to Captain Charnock, there were added to it several Names, which Captain Porter said were the Names of the Men that were to be under Captain Charnock, and that it was his Hand; and at the Bottom there were the Letters R. C. which I thought stood for Robert Charnock. The Names made up about seventeen or eighteen: I told him, I thought there had been more. He told me, there would have been more, but that they were under some Disappointments, as I told you before. He asked me to get him some Men to supply the Defect, and I proposed some Names, to make him believe I was hearty in the Business: We agreed to go to the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden, and I went under Pretence to get the Men, and came and told them, I had got them, and I found Mr. Pendergrafs there, and I took Mr. Keyes thither, and Mr. Porter sent Mr. Cranbourne to Captain Charnock several Times; by and bye Word was brought that Chambers had sent Word, the King would not go abroad that Day; upon which they all look'd very blank: And Keyes came two or three times in, and went out again; he was several times up and down, at last he came and told us, the Guards were returned from Richmond foaming; and he went down again to learn further Intelligence, and within a little Time came and told us, the King's Coach was returned to the Mews Gate, and the People very much wonder'd what should be the Reason that the King did not go a Hunting for two Saturdays together as he used to do. They seem'd to be in a very great Consternation at this News, and Captain Porter said he resolv'd to go out of Town, and asked me if I would go: I told him, No; I had a Suit in Doctors Commons, and I would go to my Proctor and Lawyers to consult about it. Then he asked Mr. Pendergrafs to go with him, which he agreed to do; and Captain Porter sent Keyes up to give the rest of the Company an Account, that there was no Occasion for them then, and so they dispersed.

Charnock. Did I go out of Town, can you tell?

Mr. De la Rue. Now you put me in Mind, Mr. Cranbourne brought a Message from you about that Time to Captain Porter, that Sir George Barclay desired to speak with him at his Lodgings. Captain Porter was then apprehensive of Bailiffs meeting with him; and, says he, he knew this, I wonder he would not come to me. But he did not go to him, but resolv'd speedily to go out of Town; and Keyes was to give an Account where he was in the Country, that, if Occasion was, he might be sent for. This is all I can at present recollect, only, I beg your Pardon, I remember, there were several disloyal Healths drunk in the Company, at several Times, as the Restoring the late King, the Health of the Prince of Wales, the late Queen, and the French King; and particularly, I remember, when the News of the Disappointment was, Mr. Porter took an Orange in his Hand, and squeezed it, and gave it into the Hand of the next Person to him, whom he drank to, and began a Health to the squeezing the rotten Orange; and said, Though we are disappointed one Day, I hope to have another: And Keyes was at Dinner with them all the Time, and every Body drank it, I did not see any Body refuse it, but it went from one to another quite round.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, who were there at that Time?

De la Rue. All the Company pledged the Health, and Mr. Keyes was there.

Charnock. Pray was I there?

De la Rue. No.

King. Was I there?

De la Rue. No, there was none of the Prisoners, but Mr. Keyes, who belonged to Mr. Porter's Party; Mr. King for his Part belonged to Sir George Barclay's Party.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before we go to another Witness, I desire to know whether the Prisoners will ask this Witness any Questions.

Char. You say, there was a Note of Names sent by me to Captain Porter; Pray, do you know my Hand-writing?

De la Rue. I cannot say I have seen you write, or that I saw you write that; but I have seen your Writing several Times, and I believe it to be your Hand.

Char. Why so, have you any of my Writing?

De la Rue. I have received several Notes from you, which I believe are your Writing.

Char. But you do not swear, that they were my Writing, or that this was my Writing.

De la Rue. I tell you, you have sent several Notes to me at several Times, and you have owned the Messages came from you, and I do believe it was your Hand-writing, because it was like the rest: and Capt. Porter told me, it was your Hand-writing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did Mr. Keyes use to sit down at Table with Mr. Porter?

De la Rue. Yes, in all Companies he was treated as familiarly as a Companion, and no ways as a Servant; and dined and supped at the same Table with the rest.

Mr. Att. Gen.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was done after that the News was brought of the King's not going abroad, and Captain Porter resolving to go into the Country?

De la Rue. When Captain Porter was gone, the Company broke up; and away goes I to Captain Charnock, to see him, about four of the Clock in the Afternoon. When I came there, his Landlady told me there was a great deal of Company: But I desired her to go in, and tell him that I was there. She did so; and he sent and desired me to come in. I did so, and I saw several Persons there. There was one Douglas, and one Trevor, and four Troopers of my Lord of Oxford's Regiment, and a Trumpeter that was his Servant in Ireland, when he was a Captain in Parker's Regiment; I know Captain Charnock was a great Croney of Parker's, and he sent Letters by me to him: I have seen some of the Letters that Parker sent; and they were drinking the same Healths as were drunk before at the Blue Posts, to the restoring King James, the Queen, the Prince of Wales, and the Grand Monarch (as they called him) the French King.

L. C. J. Who was in Company then?

De la Rue. Mr. Douglas, Mr. Trevor, four Troopers of my Lord Oxford's Regiment, one White, one Lowthorp, and one Mason, whom I know when I see very well; Mr. Charnock, one Day in the Summer, asked me to go and drink a Bowl of Punch, which I was unwilling to do; but he must needs press me, and he carries me where Mason and Lowthorp were, at the George Inn in Piccadilly; whence we went to the Prince of Orange's Head, and Captain Charnock spent in Wine and other Liquors upon them a great deal of Money. This was half a Year ago in the Summer Time, but I do not remember that I saw those two, Lowthorp and Mason, afterwards, till the 22d of February.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is this all that you can say as to the Prisoners?

De la Rue. This is all at present that I can recollect.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then for the Satisfaction of the Court and Jury, give us an Account when you first made a Discovery of this Conspiracy, and in what Manner, and to whom.

De la Rue. The last Year I had discovered it if it had come to a Head, and been ripe enough to have been put in Execution; I did then design to acquaint the King with it; but it coming to no Head then, I deferr'd troubling the King with it: And now this Year I designed (had the King gone out the 15th of February) to have prevented any Mischief, but they had Notice that he was not to go: But my Way was, to have put them all into the King's Hands, by getting two or three General Officers to be acquainted with it; and dividing some of the Guards into several Parties in the Lanes between Brentford and Turnham Green, and so have surprized them and their Horses in their several Inns that they were quartered in. But upon Monday the 17th of February, lest they should alter their Resolution, and I should happen not to be acquainted how it was to be done, I went to a General Officer of my Acquaintance, that is, Brigadier Lewson, to acquaint him with the Matter; but he was gone out of Town with Colonel Fitz-Patrick and another: I went then to Durant's Lodgings for a Colour, and it was told me, he had been out all Night. I went again to Brigadier Lewson's, but he was not in Town, and I left Word for him, that the next Day I would wait upon him, and desired he would not go out till I came to him. I went, he was not then at home, but I afterwards met with him, and acquaints him with this Business, and begs of him to acquaint the King with it that Day, which he told me he would. He asked me which Way I purposed to put them into the King's Hands. I told him the best Way and safest for me, was for his Majesty to go out on the 22d, for the Party that was to execute this Design, were not to go out of Town till the Afternoon, to be at Brentford, when the King came back from Hunting, and that they should have two or three Troops of Horse by Parties to have seized them and their Horses in the several Inns and Publick-Houses, where they were dispersed. He said, it was not safe to run that Hazard, but he would offer it to the King, and let me know his Mind. He sent to me the next Day, and told me, he had acquainted the King with it, who desired to know who they were that were concerned in it; then I gave him the Names of those that I knew, and where they lived. I dined with him on Thursday, and told him what had passed on the Wednesday Morning between Captain Charnock and I, and what Porter said about it on Wednesday Night; and after Dinner he said he would go again to the King and acquaint him with it; and that I should come to him on Friday Night, which was the Reason I was not there with Captain Porter, where Sir George Barclay and they were together; for I went to the Play to pass away the Time. When I came home to my Lodging, I found there were a Couple of Letters from the Brigadier, to whom I went, and he told me, the King was desirous to see me: I told him I would wait on him to the King with all my Heart. I went with him to Kensington, and was introduced to the King by my Lord Portland, where I think I told the King what I have told the Court now.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Day do you say it was you discover'd it to the King?

De la Rue. Brigadier Lewson acquainted the King upon the Tuesday Night before, and that had been done the Day before, if I could have met with him; but it was Friday Night that I was with the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will they ask him any Questions?

Char. No, my Lord, I do not think that any Thing he says against me is material at all.

De la Rue. My Lord, I remember one thing more; that upon Tuesday Night Mr. King told me he had my blue Coat on.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you any thing more to say as to Keyes?

De la Rue. Keyes was the only Man that told me of the Meetings.

Char. Where was it that you say I pull'd myself back in the Coach?

De la Rue. It was at the Nagg's-head in St. James's-street, and he came out of the Coach and asked me to go up; but I took it ill to be refused before, and because I was not invited up at first, I refused, and said, I had Business elsewhere, and went away.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Questions?

Char. No; yet I think I would ask him one Question more. You say, Sir, I carry'd you once to the George Inn in Piccadilly, where there were Lowthorp and Mason: Are you sure it was the George Inn?

De la Rue. Yes, sure.

Char. Are you positive it was the George Inn?

De la Rue. I believe so, I took it to be that Inn.

Char. You did swear it positively, that it was the George Inn before.

De la Rue. I saw those two Men since, which was on Sunday the 23d, at Kensington, and they said they did quarter at the Inn in Piccadilly, where you carried me to them.

Char. Pray, whereabouts is the George Inn in Piccadilly?

De la Rue. The Inn that I speak of is about the Middle of Piccadilly, upon the Left-hand.

Char. There is but one George Inn in all Piccadilly that ever I heard of, and that is at the further End, there is no such Sign in the Middle.

L. C. J. He is not positive as to the Sign, but as to the Place.

Char. I appeal to every Body, if he did not swear before positively, that it was the George Inn in Piccadilly.

De la Rue. I do say, it was to an Inn in Piccadilly; and Lowthorp told me on Sunday the 23d at Kensington, they were quarter'd at an Inn in Piccadilly, I take it to be the George Inn, if it be not the George, I know not what Sign it is; but I think it is not very material what the Sign was.

Char. Yes, it is all material to us; and I think it is very material for every Man to take care how he forswears himself.

L. C. J. No, it is not forswearing himself, when he is not positive as to the Sign.

Char. But I hope every Body considers, that he did swear it was the George Inn, and there is no such Inn there.

De la Rue. This I did not think of, to take so much Notice of it then, as to mind what the Sign was; 'twas you carried me thither.

Char. It was your Interest to mind every Particular; for, according to your own Words, you have been a Trapanner half a Year before.

De la Rue. I have told you already, I intended never to have been an Evidence; but to put you into the King's Hands, and prevent the Execution of the Design, and I begg'd of the Counsel to be excused from giving any Evidence, but I could not by any Means get myself excused.

L. C. J. Will Mr. King ask any Questions? — King. No.

L. C. J. Well, what say you, Keyes, will you ask him any Questions?

Keyes. My Lord, he says I drank the Health to the Squeezing of the Orange, and the other Healths: I was not in the Room while any such Healths were drunk, nor did I sit down while I was there, nor do I know any thing of the Horses, upon my Word, that he speaks of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then if they have done with him, there is a noble Lord, whom he has mention'd, as being present when he discover'd this to the King, who we desire may be examined touching that Matter: We must humbly pray my Lord Portland, that he will please to be sworn.

L. C. J. Hold, my Lord, the Book, and swear him. (Which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I humbly ask your Lordship this one Question, whether Mr. De la Rue did make any Discovery of this Matter in your Presence to his Majesty, on Friday the 21st of February.

E. of Portland. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship has heard what he said now: Was it to the same Purpose?

E. of Portl. Yes, to the very same Purpose, and he did it before he went in to the King to me, being brought to me by his own Desire: It was all the same in Substance as he has told you now; and afterwards he was brought to the King on Friday Night, and there he said the same Things.

Mr. Soll. Gen. This Gentleman did it not to save his own Life, but the King's. Our next Witness, my Lord, is Mr. Pendergrafs.

(Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. But before we go on to another Evidence, I would ask Mr. Porter one Question, and that is, What is become of the Lift which you spoke of? — Capt. Porter. I burnt that Lift.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why did you so?

Capt. Porter. Because I thought the Thing was discover'd, and it was not fit to have such a Paper remain.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Mr. Pendergrafs, pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury what you know about this Matter, how you came to be acquainted with it, who were concerned in it, and when and how it was to be done?

Capt. Pendergrafs. My Lord, about the 11th of February last, I was sent to by Captain Porter, where I was in the Country, to come to Town; the 13th of February I met him at the Blue Posts in Spring-Garden; we dined there, and he told me of a Design that was on Foot to take away the King's Life, and that Sir George Barclay, and other Officers, were come on purpose out of France, in order to execute the same. I was very uneasy when he told me of the Thing, but I said nothing till I had an Opportunity of waiting upon my Lord Portland, which I did as soon as I could, and acquainted him with the whole Matter of the Design, and desired him to acquaint the King: This was upon the Friday Night, which was the 14th, and he told me the King had a mind to speak with me; and afterwards my Lord Portland carried me into the King's Closet, where the King ask'd me some Questions. I told him what I knew of the Design, but desir'd to be excus'd from naming any Persons, because my Intention was only to prevent such a barbarous Action, and I was resolved not to be a Witness. The King promised me I should be safe, and press'd me to name them, and assur'd me I should not be forc'd to come in as an Evidence; upon which I did tell all that I knew, and went out of Town with Mr. Porter as resolving not to be an Evidence; but being satisfied, after we were taken, that Mr. Porter, who had engaged me in it, had himself discover'd, and accus'd me, I thought myself discharged from any Obligation of Honour in concealing it, and am willing to give an Account of any thing that I know.

Mr. Att. Gen. We know you do it voluntarily, as you did it at first honourably, and therefore, Sir, we desire you would please to give an Account of your Knowledge in the Matter.

Capt. Pendergrafs. My Lord, as I told you before, the 11th of February I was sent to by Captain Porter into the Country, where I was with Mr. Bryerly, to come to Town; accordingly the 13th, which was the Thursday, I came to Town with Mr. Bryerly, and found Captain Porter at the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden, and we dined there. There was Keyes, and Bryerly, and Porter, and I in Company, where he acquainted me with the Design. We had no further Discourse that Day; the next Day we dined at the Rose-Tavern in Covent-Garden, where where there was King, Bryerly, Cranbourne, Porter, and I dined together.

King. Pray, was it by way of Rendezvous or set Meeting?

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, you must stay your Time before you ask any Questions of the Witnesses; you shall be heard, when your Time comes, as fully as you desire. Go on, Sir.

Capt. Pendergrafs. This was Friday the 14th of February, we had some Discourse about the Matter; Captain King and Captain Porter went away, and then I went to my Lord Portland's, and was by him introduced to the King. The 15th I came to Captain Porter's Lodgings, and he was getting ready, in Expectation of Notice whether they should execute the Design that Day or no. While he was getting ready, I goes to the Blue Posts, where was Kenrick and Sherbourne, and Mr. Bryerly, and there we were drinking a Glass of Wine, and in comes Durant, who was an orderly Man that lay at Kensington to give Intelligence; and Bryerly directed him to Capt. Porter's Lodgings to carry the Intelligence which he brought, that the King intended to go out that Day; upon that he went away to his Lodging, and Capt. Porter came a little time after, booted, to the Blue Posts, and there he din'd; within an Hour or two after Capt. Porter came in; Mr. Charnock sent a Note to Capt. Porter, to tell him, the King did not go that Day, and so there must be Counter Orders; Capt. Porter told me it was his Hand; the Note was signed R. Robinson, and he shewed me the Note, and acquainted me, and the rest of the Company, that they were disappointed that Day, since the King did not go; there we dined, and drank a Bottle of Wine. The next time we met, there was Mr. King and Mr. Keyes, and Mr. De la Rue, at Mr. Porter's Lodgings; this was Saturday the 22d, in the Morning; there we had some Discourse of the Matter; and Capt. Porter, upon Notice from Capt. Charnock of the King's intending to go abroad, had sent a List of his Men, and receiv'd back a List of Capt. Charnock's; and Capt. Porter, and De la Rue, and we went to the Blue Posts to dine, where we had an Account afterwards, that the King did not go, and so there was another Disappointment; and a little after Keyes came in, and said, the Guards were come home all in a Foam, and the King's Coaches come back to the Mews. Capt. Porter then thought all was discover'd, and says he, I will go into the Country; Mr. Pendergrafs, will you go with me? With all my Heart, said I; so we sent Keyes to get our Horses ready; we lay at Epsom that Night, and from thence to another Place we sent the next Day, where we lay 'till Thursday Morning, when Capt. Porter, Mr. Keyes and I was taken together, the Place was called Leatherhead, in Surry; whence we were brought up to Town, and have remained Prisoners ever since.

Mr. Att. Gen. Which of the Prisoners were there present upon the Saturday the 22d, at Capt. Porter's Lodgings?

Capt. Pendergrafs. There was Capt. King and Mr. Keyes.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray was there any Discourse about a Gun, and who was to have it?

Capt. Pendergrafs. Capt. Porter told me there was a Musquetoon that he had would carry 6 or 8 Bullets, and I should have it, being to join with Sir George Barclay to set upon the King's Coach, and directed me to be sure to shoot some of the Horses to stop their Course if they seemed to drive furiously away; and Mr. Cranbourne was the Person that carried the Messages from Mr. Charnock to Mr. Porter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember, Sir, that Keyes said the Guards were come back?

Capt. Pendergrafs. Yes, and that they were all in a Foam, and the Coaches were come back to the Mews Gate; and one of my Lord of Oxford's Regiment told him there was something extraordinary mutter'd among the People, upon which they concluded it was discovered.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will the Prisoners ask him any Questions?

Char. King, and Keyes. No.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then I must beg the Favour of my Lord Portland to give himself the further Trouble of acquainting the Court how this Gentleman behaved himself in reference to this Discovery.

E. of Portland. My Lord, it was as he has acquainted you. This Gentleman came to me upon the Friday Night, and told me of it; and then upon the same Friday Night, which was the 14th, I think the Night before the first time that it was to have been executed, and declared his Abhorrence of such a barbarous Business: And he told me his Design of coming into it, and keeping Company with them, was to save the King's Life by acquainting me with it, and discovering it, which he would do upon a Promise that he should not be used as an Evidence, nor pressed so much as to name Names; which Promise I made him, and the same Promises were made him that Day seven-night, when I carried him to the King. But the King pressing him to name their Names, assuring him he should be safe, and not forced to be an Evidence, he did then name the Names under that Promise from the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, who was by then besides your Lordship?

E. of Port. My Lord Cuts.

Mr. Att. Gen. We must desire my Lord Cuts will please to be sworn. (Which was done.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, my Lord, will you please to acquaint the Court and the Jury what happen'd at that time.

L. Cuts. My Lords, I was in the King's Closet that same Friday Night when Mr. Pendergrafs was brought in there: 'Twas, as near as I can remember, between 12 and 1 a-Clock at Night; Nobody was present but myself with the King, when my Lord Portland came in with this Gentleman: All that he said to the King at first was, that he had a Discovery to make of a Design to assassinate his Person, if that his Name might not be made use of, nor he forced to be an Accuser or a Witness; and therefore desired to be excused if he said no more; then desiring the King not to go out the next Day, but to take care of himself, because there were some Persons had resolved to assassinate him coming home; but begg'd to be excus'd from naming Names, for he said he would rather die than betray his Friend, and he thought it enough that he had saved his Majesty's Life. It was above half an Hour before the King could persuade him to name Names, and he would not 'till the King had given him his Word and Honour that he should not be obliged to be a Witness, and then he did name the Names. Afterwards, when Captain Porter and Mr.

Pendergrafs were taken, as my Station obliged me to give Orders, and require Intelligence, and assist at the securing and Examination of the Conspirators, I happen'd to see them before they were carried into the Council, and presently knew Mr. Pendergrafs to be the Person that was with the King that Friday Night; I had a great Compassion to see Gentlemen and Officers, whom I had some Knowledge of before, in such a Condition, and I told them naturally what my Opinion was: Mr. Porter did seem sorry for what he had done, and inclin'd to make the King that Atonement for his Fault which he has now done. When I came out and told Mr. Pendergrafs this, and that Mr. Porter had named him, and owned the whole Matter, I only gave him my Opinion upon it, that I thought he was discharged from any Obligation of Friendship: And he seemed then inclin'd to do the same likewise that Mr. Porter had done.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Thomas Bertham. [Which was done.] Pray do you give my Lord and the Jury an Account how long you have known Mr. Charnock to be engaged in this Conspiracy: Tell your whole Knowledge as to him.

Mr. Berth. The 8th or 9th of February last I was crossing Covent-Garden, I lit upon one Mr. Trevor, who is now in Newgate, and he told me he was going down to Mr. Charnock's Lodgings, and that he heard him say he wanted to speak with me; I told him he had no Business with me nor I with him, that I knew of: But he prevailed upon me to go with him and when we came to Mr. Charnock's Lodgings, he met me in the Entry.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did?

Mr. Berth. Mr. Charnock did. He told me he wanted to speak with me, and took me into a back Room, because he had Company in his own; and he told me the King, that is King James, was a-coming, and there was a Piece of Service to be done before he could come, and if I would assist in it, it would answer my Expectation. I asked him what was to be done? He answered, You must only go abroad to take the Air, you will see several of your Acquaintance there. I desired to know what was to be done? He said it was to cut off this Spark or to take off this Spark, I can't tell which, and then the King will come home quietly.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were to cut him off?

Mr. Berth. The Party that I was to meet when we rode out to take the Air.

L. C. J. Who did they say they were to take off?

Mr. Berth. He said we must take off this Spark, or cut off this Spark, I can't tell which, which I understood to be the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long had you known Charnock?

Mr. Berth. By Times, seven Years.

Mr. Cooper. How came you acquainted with him?

Mr. Berth. We were in the Army together; he was a Lieutenant in Col. Parker's Regiment, and I was a Trooper there then.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Discourse was there between you and Charnock after you heard there were Warrants out?

Mr. Berth. Sir, I have not yet done with what pass'd at his Lodgings. He asked me if I would accept of being one in the Business: I told him I could not engage in it, for I had dispos'd of myself otherwise. So we came out of that little Room, and he desired me to come into his Room and drink a Glass of Wine: There were three or four Gentlemen that I did not know; and then there was one Mr. Chambers and Mr. Trevor, and Mr. Lee, which Mr. Chambers fetch'd afterwards in there.

Mr. Att. Gen. He would not be engaged there because he had otherwise dispos'd of himself: Indeed, he was engaged with Sir William Perkins.

Mr. Berth. After I came in I observed great Whisperings among the Company, and frequent calling out of Mr. Charnock for private Discourse; but there was no other particular Discourse about this Matter that Night.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray when did you see Mr. Charnock again, and where?

Mr. Berth. At another time, which was the 22d of February, I met him at Lincoln's-Inn back Gate; and meeting me here, he called me aside and took me within the Inn upon the Pav'd-stones; we took a Turn there: He told me Warrants were out against us, as he heard, and we had as good, if I would come to his Lodging, go out to Kensington and do the Work at once and take him off, and then we shall be quiet, and have the King peaceably here. I am sure he cannot say that I do him a Word of Wrong in what I have said, he knows it all to be true.

Mr. Cooper. Has any Body else engaged you in this Matter? Do you know one Lowick?

Mr. Berth. If that be necessary, I will tell it. But this is all that I know of any thing of the Prisoners; only Mr. Charnock did ask me as to Mr. Trevor, what I thought of him, whether he might trust him? I told him he might do what he pleas'd.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Charnock, will you ask him any Questions? for his Evidence relates only to you.

Char. No, I think not. Pray did I send for you?

Mr. Berth. I met Mr. Trevor, and he told me, he was coming to your Lodgings, and that you desired to speak with me. And when I came, you told me yourself you wanted to speak with me: Indeed I knew no Business you had with me, or I with you.

Mr. Att. Gen. We have one more Witness, and that is one Mr. Boyse. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Boyse, will you give an Account when you were spoke to about this Design, and by whom?

Mr. Boyse. On Friday the 14th of February I went to visit Mr. King, and he was the first that ever told me of the Business; it was in his own Chamber, he told me there was a great Undertaking in Hand, and he had put my Name into the List, and if I would make one, I should have a Horse; and he asked me if I had any Boots; I said No. He desired me to see if I could get any, and to meet him in the Afternoon at the Rose-Tavern in Covent-Garden; but in the mean time he bid me go to Mr. Knightley, and he would inform me further. I went to Mr. Knightley, and I came to Mr. King again in the Afternoon at the Rose-Tavern, and he desired me not to be out of the way the next Day, but to be at my Lodging, and he would come or send for me; and I had Twenty Shillings of him to buy Boots, and he still referr'd me to Mr. Knightley: When I came to Mr. Knightley, I was told there was nothing to be done that Day: But I was desired to be always in the way, for the Business would soon be over. This is all the Discourse that Day. After that I met Mr. King several times, who still referr'd me to Mr. Knightley, and when I asked him for my Horse, he told me I should have one allotted for me time enough; and when this Thing was done we should be happy: But he never told me it was to take off the King.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what did you understand was to be done?

Mr. Boyse. I did believe I should know further of it; for I would not have engaged till I did know. But he did not tell me it was to take off the King, or what it was. This, to the best of my Memory, is what I know of the matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when did you come from France?

Mr. Boyse. He told me indeed several were come from France, and that the King would land very speedily.

Mr. Att. Gen. But when did you come?

Mr. Boyse. I came the Beginning of June last.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember nothing about Sir George Barclay?

Mr. Boyse. Yes, he told me Sir George Barclay would command the Party, and that there were about forty or forty-five, that were concerned in the Design.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember nothing else?—Mr. Boyse. No truly, I do not remember any thing more concerning Mr. King.

L. C. J. H. Mr. King, will you ask him any Questions? for what he says relates only to you.

King. No, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we have done, my Lord; we rest it here till we hear what they can say.

L. C. J. H. Mr. Charnock, The King's Counsel have done all the Evidence they design to give, and now is your Time to make your Defence.

Charnock. My Lord, I have taken some Notes of the Evidence, and made some Remarks, which must be my Defence; and I shall take them in Order of Time as they were given: The first is Capt. Porter; and the main Evidence he hath given against me, is my informing him that Sir George Barclay was come from France, with a Commission all written with King James's own Hand, thereby authorizing us to raise War against the Person of King William. But then he says, at the same time, I told him I never saw it; and I know not how I should; for it is impossible to see a Thing that is invisible, a Thing that never was in being; and to suppose that ever there should be such a Commission under the King's own Hand, and writ with his own Hand, is such a Contradiction to all Sense and Reason, that no rational Man can be guilty of; and therefore I hope the Court and the Jury will consider of it, and reject it all as a foolish, idle, nonsensical Fiction and Story. It is very well known that King James has always had, and still has, notwithstanding his present Sufferings and Circumstances, his Ministers of State about him, in how slender a Condition soever they may be, or be represented to be. He has my Lord Middleton as his Secretary of State, he has been all along with him, and it is not supposable that he should put himself to the Trouble of writing any Commissions with his own Hand, when there were others enough to do it for him, and he need only sign the Top of it James R. much less is it supposable, that he should give any such Commission as this that they speak of, and writ it all with his own Hand, and that Sir George Barclay should bring it over. This is such a nonsensical, ridiculous Story as ought to be rejected with Scorn and Contempt, and is only fit to be laughed at: I hope every body will look upon it as such, and think that such Evidence is very incredible.

My Lord, Another Thing that I observe out of Capt. Porter's Evidence is this: He says, he and I was to command a Party; he knows what he himself intended to do, but I am sure I know of no Party that I was to command. It is all a Dream, a mere Dream and a Fiction. He thinks fit to acknowledge his own Guilt of a very bad Crime, and he may accuse himself as long as he will, but I think that will not make me guilty of any such Thing, only because he says so: He does not say what Men they were, or who they were; and it cannot be an Overt-Act, unless he can tell who they were. He says Sir George Barclay and I met at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and at several other Places where this Matter was discoursed of, and a great many were supposed to be in the Assassination, to the Number of Forty; but he does not mention any thing then of its being discoursed who they were to be: And is it supposable, when the Design he talks of was so near being put in Execution, it should not be known who should engage in it? For my Part, I deny that ever I was with him at any Place where Sir George Barclay, or any Body else, talked of any such thing. When I was examined before the Council, my Lord Keeper asked me when I saw the Duke of Berwick? I thought it not fit to answer that Question, because I knew the Duke of Berwick was out-law'd here, and I might accuse myself if I acknowledged having been in his Company, tho' it were at St. Germain's. But I said I never believed he was in London, and I do not believe he was. I heard that Colonel Parker was in England, but I did not see him; and as to the Major-General, and other Officers they talk of, it is all a Jest to me; and it is no way at all to be believed or credited, that because other Men have Notions of Castles in the Air, I must be so foolish as to believe such Impertinencies too. He says I sent him a List of Men, and written with my own Hand, and subscribed with the two Letters of my Name; he does not swear he saw me write it, and Similitude of Hands was never thought good in Criminal Causes; and I believe it was never look'd upon for Law, that it should be a good Evidence for a Man to swear such a Writing was another Man's own Hand, unless he says he saw him write it, and kept it in his own Custody till it should be produced as Evidence, and produce it in open Court, and not let it go out of his Custody till then. All these Things, I apprehend, the Law judges necessary to make a good Proof of a Writing to be of a Man's own Hand; but here is nothing of that here: Here is nothing produced, nor does he say he saw me write it; and so I think it all goes for nothing, a mere idle Invention of his own. My Lord, upon this Evidence there is not any positive Proof of my doing an Overt-Act, by buying of Arms or Horses, or writing Letters, or any thing of that Nature; and I hope if I speak irregularly, your Lordship will pardon me; I am no Lawyer, and I have no Assistance but my own nonsensical Notes to depend upon for my Defence. My Lord, he speaks about Horses that were to be provided, but there is no Proof of that; I never bought any Horses, or borrowed any; nay, nor is there any Proof, that while this bloody Assassination that he owns himself to have contrived and carried on, was on foot, I had not so much as a Horse any where; and that I should be so vain to get Men to engage in such an Expedition with me, and have never a Horse myself, is very strange. The Conspiracy, he says, was depending a long while, and whenever it was to be put in Execution, we were to go expeditiously to work, lest it should be discover'd; and 'tis very strange then that I should never have provided the least thing in the World to do it with! neither Arms, nor Horses, nor any thing: For there is no Proof of any such thing against me, but only Talk, as he is pleased to swear, to take my Life to save his own: And I hope your Lordship and the Court will declare to the Jury, that here is no Evidence of any Overt-Act against me.

My Lord, there is another Thing he says against me: He says he had a Note from me by the Name of Robinson, to countermand the Orders upon the 15th: My Lord, The Truth of that would depend very much upon the producing of that Note, then it would be seen whether it was my Hand, and what it contained, and what it related to: For my Part, I utterly deny I ever sent any such Note wherein there was a Word of the King, or of any Fact of this Nature that was to be committed, or any thing relating to it, if it were true that I had written any Note to him at all; and I hope the Jury will consider, and the Court will direct them so to do: For I know not that they are any more skill'd in the Law than myself, and therefore I hope your Lordship will give them ample and true Directions, what is Law and what is not Law, and what is Evidence and what is not Evidence; and this cannot be Evidence to affect me at all, there being nothing that doth appear, or is produced.

My Lord, he says, there were four that were to go with Sir George Barclay, that were to be appointed out of each Party; he does not say I named any, nor does he name any himself; but it seems they knew what was to be done; and truly if any thing was to be done, they knew it themselves (and no Body else that I know of) who swear to save their Lives, and get a Reward. If the four were to be out of the Party, which he calls his own, he knows them best, and I believe the Party was his own, and the Plot his own too, and nobody's else; he does not say that I appointed any one, he only says there were four to be appointed out of a Party, which Party was in Nubibus, and so is the whole Design, unless it be in his Head, fram'd there by his own Invention, for it only exists there that I know of.

My Lord, these Observations I make upon Captain Porter's Evidence: The next Witness is Mr. De la Rue, and he is a very good Evidence indeed, if Hear-say be to be believ'd; he says I was very shy of discoursing with him about it, that I told him it would come to Nothing, without saying what would come to Nothing, not that the Plot would come to Nothing, for there was nothing at all spoken of any Plot, much less of a Design to Assassinate the King. This is all that he says, as to me, of his own Knowledge, all the rest relating to me is but what Captain Porter told him. But to begin with the Beginning of his Evidence, he says one Thing which is very odd, That at the Rose-Tavern, the last Year, there was a Consultation about carrying King William away into France, in a Vessel alive, and that Sir William Perkins ask'd him, whether he would go along with me to Deal, to procure a Vessel to carry the King over: He might as well have ask'd him to go with me to Constantinople, or any other Place in the World, as to Deal, and about any other Employment, as that. A pretty Sort of Thing, that I should go to Deal to hire a Vessel to carry the King over into France; I that know no Sea-Man, or any Master of a Vessel at Deal, that I should be employ'd to hire a Ship before the Design was form'd, as he says it was not come to an Head. If we had got the Prince of Orange into our Power: If we had King William in our Power, how was it possible we should ever have carry'd him to Deal? I cannot but think any one would believe us Madmen to entertain such a Chimera in our Heads. What nonsensical Stories are all these, that we should carry King William to Deal, and I hire a Ship to transport him into France! I hope the Jury, and all that hear it, will consider what ridiculous Stuff these Men talk of, as Evidence against Men for their Lives. Then he talks of my coming in a Coach to the Nagg's-head Door, where I was very shy of letting him see me, and afterwards, when I came out, ask'd him to go into the Company; but he was angry that they had deny'd to admit him before, and so would not go up: What a strange Sort of a contradictory Story is all this! Here was a Conference, it seems, appointed the Night before to be at that Place, when Captain Porter, and Captain King, and Mr. Knightley were just come from viewing the Ground, and were to make their Report; and Porter told him of it, and yet they would not admit him, and I was shy of him, and yet ask'd him to go up: What contradictory Nonsense is this! It must needs be looked upon as improbable or impossible to be true, that I should ask him to go up into such a Company, where such a mighty Conference was to be had about such a great Transaction, when I had shewn myself apparently shy of him, by falling back in the Coach, as being unwilling to let him see me; I hope the Jury will consider the Self-contradictoriness and Improbability of such Evidence. Then there is another Thing, and that is, what he says Captain King said, he did not believe it would come to any thing, because he did not like me as being no Soldier, for I was for keeping out of Danger, and having an easy Post: If he means I had no Mind to be in a Plot, he was in the Right of it; for no Man in his Senses would ever be engaged in any such desperate Designs, where there is such apparent Destruction in view: So I cannot apprehend what there is in that of any Objection against me, or any Proof that I had a Hand in this Plot, because I desired to keep out of Danger. It was said, that I was to have attacked the King with Sir George Barclay; but Captain Porter says, we were to be together, to attack the Guards; and both can't be true, nor indeed is either of them true, but a Figment and Invention of their own: Then he says he ask'd Keyes for a good Sword, and he told me I had a very good one: 'Tis true, I had a Sword, I always wore one, but it does not follow that that was to be employ'd upon such an Enterprize as this. And then he tells you a Story again of Captain Porter's having a broad flaming two-edg'd Sword. But what is all this to the Purpose? Does this prove any Thing against me, that I consented to, or was engaged in, any such bloody Design as this? He saith that on Wednesday he came to me, and ask'd me of the Affair, how it went on; he doth not say what the Affair was, nor he doth not say it was about killing the King; nor indeed is it probable it should be, for he says I was always shy of him, and that he could never get any Intelligence but from Captain Porter. He saith I told him it was a Thing would not admit of being delay'd, and that only three People should know such a Thing; but still he doth not tell you what this Thing was, and therefore I do not apprehend how this should affect me, as Evidence of my intending to Assassinate the King. He saith he had it from Captain Porter, that Mr. Chambers was an orderly Man, a Word I do not understand, to convey Intelligence to me; and that Durant was an orderly Man, to convey Intelligence elsewhere: Still this is all but what Captain Porter told him, and there is no Proof that I sent Mr. Chambers any where; Chambers, I acknowledge I know, he is a poor Man, and my Lord Chief Justice Treby, I suppose, cannot but remember that he was in Prison, and try'd before him upon the Account of Piracy; I must needs say, I thought him an honest Man, because he had serv'd with me in Ireland: I knew he was in great want, and therefore gave him his Diet and Lodging; there is no Proof that I furnished him with Money, but I acknowledge I did with Bread and Drink, to keep him from Starving; that I think was an Act of Charity, but it cannot be interpreted, nor is there any Proof to warrant it, that it was with any ill Design, or that I gave it him to hire him or engage him to any such Purpose. My Lord, they would make it as if the Persons that were intended to be employ'd in this pretended Plot, were to be regular Troops, and to have Courts of Guard, and to be dispos'd of into Quarters, and this was to be done by these orderly Men: I profess I know not what to make of it, it is such a Medley, a Fancy, and a Chimera, that it is perfectly Unintelligible, whether these were to be General Officers, or Private Centinels, or what. Then, my Lord, he saith Cranbourne brought a Lift from me to Captain Porter, with R. C. at the Bottom: First, That he does not prove that it was my Lift, nor doth that R. C. being at the Bottom of the Lift make me a Partner in this Conspiracy. Then he saith, that Cranbourne came to the Blue-Polls, as from me, to acquaint them of the Disappointment, because the King did not go out that Day: Surely, my Lord, I need not trouble you with saying any thing to this, for it is all, as to me, but Hearsay; and what am I concern'd in that which other People talk amongst themselves? Tho' they do use my Name, how can I help that? My Lord, he saith himself that he intended to discover this Conspiracy a Year ago, but the Thing failing then, which how ridiculous it was I observed before, he let it alone for that Time; but when I met him at the Nagg's-head Door, and he was so angry for their not admitting him into their Company, which was three Weeks before this Design they talk of was to be executed, he had a Mind to go to the Secretary's, and get Warrants and Messengers to apprehend us; and he saith he hath often come to me, to ask about the Affair, as he calls it; but I was still reserved and shy, and told him nothing would come of it. From all this I would observe that I have very good Reason to look upon him to be no Evidence, not only for the same Reason that I objected against Mr. Porter, that by his own Acknowledgment he is Particeps Criminis, but his coming to me after he resolv'd to discover, plainly declares, that he set himself to be a Trapper, and no Trapper can, in the Judgment of any honest or understanding Man, be a credible Person, as an Evidence to take away any Man's Life: I am sure what he saith of my Shyness to converse with him, and his own frequent Attempts to converse with me, shews plainly he was willing to trap me; for so he himself saith. He came to me several Times, and took me aside, to ask how the Affair went on, but he did it only to enable himself to make the better Discovery; which makes him ten thousand times worse, than if he had only gone at first and told what he pretends he knew, and afterwards forbore the Company. Besides, my Lord, as to trapping, I have read in a Book of Sir Robert Atkins, that to be Particeps Criminis, proves a Person to be a bad Man, and consequently not so Credible, especially if it can appear the Witness has trapped the Prisoner into the committing the Crime; then the Witness will appear to be guilty of a far more higher Crime than the Prisoner, and therefore ought not to be believ'd as a credible Witness against the Prisoner, for he is a credible Witness that has the Credit of being a good and honest Man, which a Trapper cannot have; and this Trapping proves withal, that the Trapper did bear a Spite and Malice against the Person trapped, and intended to do him a Mischief, and design'd to take away his Life: Shall such a one, says he, be a credible Witness, and be believed against him? God forbid!

My Lord, as to Mr. Pendergrafs, who is the next Witness, I do not take myself to be much concerned in all he saith. I think I have seen him but once of a great while, and that was on the Wednesday or Thursday before I was taken up; but, my Lord, I have this to say to his Evidence, I desire your Lordship to observe I was not in the Proclamation, though he was: They took Occasion to have me secured as a Colour, or to save Expences, I suppose, while they themselves went out of the Way, to have their Names put into the Proclamation; that somebody might colourably take them, and get the King's Money. All that he saith of me, is, that Cranbourne brought Messages from me: One Time I writ a Note, sign'd R. Robinson; another Time I sent a Lift subscribed R. C. and that Porter shew'd him them both; but all this is but Hearsay still out of the Mouth of Porter, and can be no Proof at all against me. He saith, upon the Disappointment he and they went to Epsem, which to me seems a very remarkable Thing; for if he say true, it is plain, this was before by him discover'd at Court; and to me it shews, that he had a strong Design of getting Money, and taking away People's Lives upon that Account; and that Capt. Porter was in the same Design: For De la Rue saith, Captain Porter ask'd him to go with them, as well as Pendergrafs. Now, can it be supposed, that these three should agree to go together, unless they were in a Combination; as it appears they now are? And I cannot but think, the Court and the Jury will think it reasonable to believe: For if I was in a Plot of such a Nature as this, and should hurry out of Town after I had discover'd it, with three or four of the People that were concern'd in it, and some of them afterwards pretend to be Discoverers too, nobody in the World can believe but they contriv'd the Thing amongst themselves, and went out of Town only for a Colour, that they might be put in the Proclamation; and pretend to be taken, to entitle themselves to the Reward.

L. C. J. Really, Mr. Charnock, I am loth to interrupt you in any Part of your Defence, but I do not understand what you mean by this, and I very willingly would understand you if I could.

Mr. Char. My Lord, I say, I look upon it, that they were all combin'd together in a Design to get the King's Money, and take away our Lives; that Porter should desire them to go with him into the Country, and particularly Mr. Pendergrafs, who discover'd this to the King, and then that he should agree to go with him.

L. C. J. Truly, I do not understand the Force of your Argument; that because upon the supposed Discovery Capt. Porter went to Epsem, and Mr. Pendergrafs went with him, therefore this must be a Design between them to get the King's Money, I cannot any way see how that must follow.

Char. Pray, my Lord, to what End should he run out of Town, upon the Apprehension of the Discovery, and with Captain Porter too, when he actually had got the King's Promise that he should be safe, and not be a Witness, unless it were a Combination between them, in order to set up as Witnesses against us, to get the King's Money?

L. C. J. I'll tell you why he was willing to go with Captain Porter; because he had not a Mind that the Discovery he had made, should be any Way known to have come from him; for you see how unwilling he was to name Names, and so kept Captain Porter Company still, as his Friend, resolving not to be an Evidence against him.

Char. Well, my Lord, after all, I hope, what he saith cannot be look'd upon as any Evidence against me; because whatsoever he saith relating to me, is about the Notes and Messages that he saith were brought to Captain Porter, and all of it can amount at the utmost to Hearsay from other People's Mouths. My Lord, the last Evidence that I apprehend relates any Way to me, is that of Mr. Bertham, and he talks of what I should say to him upon the ninth of February, that I should take him into a back Room into my Lodgings, and there tell him, That there was something in Hand for the Restoring King James; but there was somewhat to be done first to take off the Spark, or I do not know what, nor do I believe any Body else doth know how to make any thing of it. It is a very improbable Thing, that this Matter which was to be so great a Secret, and which I should say, was not fit to be communicated to above three People at once, I should send for a private Trooper, for he was no otherwise, to communicate so great a Matter to him; besides that, I cannot, nor, I believe, can any Body else tell what to make of the Words, Taking off the Spark, how to construe that to make it an Evidence of an Intention to kill the King. It might be probable I might say there was a Noise that King James would come, for it hath been in the Gazettes and the publick Prints, that there was such an Expectation, and Preparation for it on the Coast of France; but it is not probable, I am sure it is not true, that I should say there was something to be done first, for the taking off the Spark. Evidence of a Thing of this Nature ought to be plain and clear, and distinct: He doth say nothing that I talk'd to him of killing the King, or of Assassinating him, or of my asking him to be one in any such Thing, and that I furnish'd him with Arms, and an Horse on any such Design, but only that he might ride out, and take the Air, and there he should meet with some of his Acquaintance: What unaccountable loose Stuff is all this! It is very strange, my Lord, that if I liked the Man so well, as I must do, if I would send for him to communicate a thing of this Nature to him, that I should not put it into a Method, that he might be one with us in the Execution of it: But there cannot be any Thing inferred of that Nature, for which we stand accused, from any Words that he saith were spoken. My Lord, he doth say, indeed, that he told me, that he had disposed of himself otherwise; but that is no more certain, nor can be referred to any particular Thing, than the rest. He might dispose of himself to a Friend, he might dispose of himself to his Wife; but what is all that to this Purpose? And he might, indeed, if King James came, dispose of himself to assist him, or to oppose him, or to let it alone; but all this is nothing to the Business for which we are here to be try'd; it's all loose, idle, impertinent Talk, and not at all to the Purpose. And then he saith, that afterwards, I met him at Lincoln's-Inn back Gate, and took him into Lincoln's Inn, and told him, there were Warrants out, and we had as good do the Business presently. My Lord, I do remember I met him at Lincoln's-Inn Gate, and it was upon Saturday the Day before I was taken up, and it was about Twelve a-Clock at Noon, and I did hear there were Warrants out, but there never was that Intimacy between him and me, that I should desire him to come to my Lodging, or that I should support him in any Sort. My Lord, I have made a few Remarks to your Lordship and the Jury, upon the Evidence; I am sensible I have given the Court a deal of Trouble, but I hope you will consider it is for my Life, and my All; and I hope you will be of Opinion, that the Evidence produced against me is frivolous and weak, and that the Witnesses have a very bad Cause of it, since all that they talk of, if it were true, is only a Discourse, and they are forced to supply in Words, what they want in Fact.

L. C. J. Have you any more to say, Sir?

Char. Yes, my Lord, I desire to take Notice to the Court and the Jury, that the Business of bare Words was never look'd upon in Law as an Overt-Act to prove a Man guilty of High-Treason, nor that several Persons met together doth prove a Conspiracy. These Persons proving that I met with them, doth not prove that I was concerned in the Assassination, nor that I consented to any such Thing; besides, my Lord, I am taxed in the Indictment with buying Arms and Horses for this Business; but there is not one Word of it proved, or of my riding out to view the Ground, nor any thing, that I was to be concern'd about this villainous Act.

My Lord, if I had bought any Arms, that had not been an Overt-Act of itself; it must be proved first that I bought them with such an Intent to employ them about such a Business; and it neither is, nor can be proved, that I furnish'd any Body with Horfes or Arms: And therefore the bare Buying of Arms of itself, as far as I am informed of the Law, would be no Proof of an Overt-Act. To prove an Overt-Act of Treason by the buying of Arms, it must be prov'd that I declar'd some way that I bought them with such an Intent, or else it is no Proof at all; but now if you have no Evidence that I bought any Arms at all, I look upon it, that there is no Possibility to make that an Overt-Act. If you please, my Lord, to bear with me to give you the Trouble of reading some short Notes, which I have taken out of some Law-Books about Overt-Acts.

L. C. J. No, the Court won't think it any Trouble: Make your Defence as well as you can, and take your own Way.

Char. My Lord, I hope you will allow what hath been collected out of the Books of Law as to Overt-Acts: There is Hale's Pleas of the Crown is positive in it, That an Overt-Act must be alledged in every Indictment, and proved; That compassing the Death of the King by bare Words, is no Overt-Act. Now, if bare Words be no Overt-Act, why then all the Conspiracy that is here proved, supposing all to be true that is said, it is no Overt-Act; for it is all but Words still. And bare Conspiring is no Overt-Act, according to my Lord Coke's Opinion in his Third Institutes; and the utmost of all that any of them prove against me is, that I did say so and so, which is but bare Conspiring. Pray, my Lord, let me know upon what Law it is that I am indicted and try'd, I suppose it is upon 25 Edw. III.

L. C. J. Yes, you are, and only upon that Statute.

Char. My Lord Coke, in his Third Institutes, saith, The open Act must be manifestly proved. If divers conspire the Death of the King, and the Manner how, and thereupon provide Weapons, Powder, Poison, send Letters, or the like, for the Execution of the Conspiracy, or Preparation be made by some Overt-Act to depose the King, or take him by Force, or by strong Hand, or imprison him; these are sufficient Overt-Acts, to prove the compassing the King's Death. But by this it is plain, that bare Conspiring is not Treason, as wanting a sufficient Overt-Act to declare the Intention. Now, my Lord, I say, that in all this Evidence that hath been given against me, there is not one Overt-Act proved of my providing Arms, or sending Letters, or the like. And the same Page of the same Book, the Third Institutes, Chap. High Treason, upon the Words provable Ataint, it must be by Overt-Act, it must be upon direct and manifest Proof, not upon conjectural Presumptions or Inferences, or Strains of Wit: So that the strongest Presumptions upon the whole Earth will never be able to make any Overt-Act, without plain and manifest Proof. And, my Lord, I do insist, here is not plain and manifest Proof, or any Overt-Act, but only Presumptions in the whole Scene of the Thing. I must beg the Favour of the Court as to one particular Thing: Your Lordship, no doubt, knows the Law very well. I am here an ignorant Man, unable to defend myself by the Forms of Law; but I hope your Lordship and the Court will not let me suffer any Damage upon that Account. You are always presumed to be of Counsel for the Prisoners; and I look upon it as assured, that you will do that Justice to Persons in our Circumstances, as truly to instruct the Jury how they shall behave themselves in Relation to this Matter that is now upon Enquiry before them. Particularly, my Lord, I desire they may be told plainly and truly, what is Proof of an Overt-Act, and what is not; and when your Lordship sums up the Evidence, you will tell the Jury directly and plainly, what is Legal Evidence, and what is not; and then what is sufficient Proof of any one Overt-Act or Species of Treason; and that you would not leave it to the Apprehension of the Jury, what they do believe, but inform them really and truly what is Legal Evidence, and what of that Sort hath been given To-day. My Lord, here is a strange Sort of Thing, a Conspiracy, which, consider'd in the general, hath neither Head nor Tail; how many there were to be is uncertain. In the Indictment is said, there were forty Men to do this Fact upon the King in his Coach, and for attacking the Guards. Can it be supposed, that any Man in his Senses would do such an Act as this, without Respect to have Security for himself and his Family, or those he is concerned for? I know not how great Wits these People be in other Things, but I am sure they shew no Wit in this, I look upon it to be so desperate a Thing. The Guards are at least treble the Number, and better appointed; and that forty should go to assault treble the Number, and in divided Bodies too, that were only to mix Fury and Malice with Resolution, to be torn in Pieces by the Mob upon an apparent visible Disappointment. And when we had done this, and made this Attempt, where were we to go? We had no Asylum that we can hear of, nor Castle or Fort to retire to, nor none that were to back or assist us; and I am sure no Man in his Wits would undertake a desperate Attempt without Assurance of a Retreat. If I was resolved to kill any Man, I would propose to myself some Place, to which I might repair for Shelter and Safety when I had done. If then we were in our Senses, it cannot be imagined we should ever engage in so apparently destructive a Design. We ought rather to have been confin'd to Bedlam, than any other Place, if we could be thought guilty of so much Rashness and Folly. My Lord, I pretend not to make any particular Reflections upon these Gentlemen that have given Evidence here; but only I must take leave to say in general, that there are none of them, but that if they have had any Fortunes in the World, their Circumstances as to that Matter are now much altered; and if any Persons will be Evidence against others for their Lives in Hopes to repair those Fortunes, and concerning Matters in which they were engaged themselves in, as they do acknowledge; and if it be true, it must be through the Desperateness of their Fortunes, it is the most barbarous and inhuman Sort of Evidence that ever was given by any that ever had any Sense of Honour, and must be a base Reflection upon any who pretend themselves to be Gentlemen: And I hope the King will think them upon that Account very little deserving Credit. My Lord, I hope your Lordship will please to consider, that what I have offer'd is but what my own sudden Thoughts could suggest to me out of the confused little Remarks I have been able to make upon the Evidence; and it is the more confused and immethodical, because I could have no Counsel to assist me. I would only put your Lordship in Mind, once more, of what I earnestly desire and insist upon from your Lordship, that you would tell the Jury plainly and truly what Evidence it is the Law requires to convict any Person of the Crime for which I stand accused; what Things are necessary to make up that Evidence, what is a Legal Proof of an Overt-Act, and what Overt-Acts have been plainly and manifestly proved against me in this Case, and not leave the Construction of the Evidence to the Apprehension or Inclination of the Jury. This is all the Favour that I have to beg of the Court, and I hope I need not doubt the Justice of the Jury.

L. C. J. Have you done, Sir?

Char. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then what say you, Mr. King?

King. My Lord, I must insist upon a great many Things that Mr. Charnock hath said. But as to what relates to myself, Captain Porter saith, I went with him and Mr. Knightley to view the Ground where this Design was to be executed. Truly, my Lord, I did go abroad with Captain Porter and Mr. Knightley; but it was merely to take the Air, and no other Thing. Truly, my Lord, I have not taken any Notes of the Evidence, nor have I any Counsel to assist me, and so I am not very capable of making any Defence.

L. C. J. Well, have you any more to say?

King. As to Mr. De la Rue, he doth not pretend to say, I did ever tell him of any thing of a Design of destroying the King: And as to the Sword he speaks of, he knows I always wore one, and ever had one.

L. C. J. Well, Is this all you have to say?

King. And as to Mr. Pendergrafs, he saith, he saw me at the Rose-Tavern in Covent-Garden, where we discoursed something of the Matter; but he tells you not what that Matter was, nor what the Discourse was. And as to Mr. Boysse, he doth not tax me with any Design of killing the King: Nay, he saith, I did not mention any such Thing to him. And as to the Matter of an Overt-Act, what is an Overt-Act and what not, and what is good Proof of it, and what not, I must refer to your Lordship and the Court.

Char. My Lord, I beg your Pardon, there is one thing I forgot to offer to your Lordship; there is no Place laid in the Indictment, nor no set Number of Men ascertained.

L. C. J. At present you are out of Time, for that you might have spoke to it before the Evidence was given, or you may speak to it after the Verdict is brought in, if there be Occasion.

Char. My Lord, I am ignorant in the Forms of Law.

L. C. J. If you will observe any thing out of the Evidence, you may; now is the Time.

Char. My Lord, I think the Evidence is inconsistent with the Indictment: for the Indictment doth say positively, that there were Horfes and Arms bought and provided. Now if this be an essential Overt-Act, as I apprehend it is, according to my Lord Coke, to prove the compassing the King's Death, then there hath been no Evidence to support this Indictment; for there is no Proof of the buying of any Horfes or Arms.

L. C. J. They tell you there were forty provided.

Char. My Lord, I have taken some Notes, as well as I could, upon reading of the Indictment; and in the first place it is said, that it was agreed there should be forty Horfemen armed of us, Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes; which I take to be Nonfense and impossible.

Mr. Att. Gen. But there is, And others in the Indictment too.

Char. It is Quadragesim' Homines equestres de ipso Roberto Charnock.

L. C. J. And divers others, to the Jurors unknown. May not they make forty? Thirty-seven and you three will make forty.

Char. That divers others is so uncertain, that no one can tell whether it be five or five thousand; and I know not what will make an Indictment void, if Uncertainty will not.

L. C. J. But your Time of Exceptions to the Validity of the Indictment is not now; we are now only upon the Trial of the Fact.

Char. My Lord, I was advis'd by my Counsel, that if I could find a Flaw in the Indictment, I must mention it, and take the Advantage of it before the Summing up.

L. C. J. You were not well advised; for after the Jury is sworn, we are only to have Regard to the Fact; and we are now upon the Trial of the Fact; and the only Thing we have under Consideration upon the Fact and the Evidence is, Whether upon this Evidence that hath been given, you are guilty or not of the Fact that is charged upon you in the Indictment?

Char. My Lord, I crave your Pardon, and I hope you will take no Advantage of my Ignorance, not being used to these Proceedings.

L. C. J. As to what you said at first, that there was no Overt-Act proved because there is no Proof of buying Horfes or Arms; it is true, that is one Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, and there is some Evidence given of it; but what that Evidence will amount unto will be a farther Consideration by and bye.

Char. There was another Observation, my Lord, that I have made upon the Indictment, that it is uncertain upon the Word tunc; there is no Time assigned, nor no Place: Pray what Time doth this tunc refer to?

Mr. Sol. Gen. When the King went out.

L. C. J. But these things are not proper now, I tell you we are upon the Fact. Mr. King, have you any more to say? because Mr. Charnock interrupted you.

King. My Lord, if there be any Objection that Mr. Charnock hath made, would be of any Advantage to me, I hope you will let me be heard by my Counsel, that I may have the Benefit of it.

L. C. J. I tell you, that is not proper now; you may have the Benefit of any Objection of that Nature, if there be any Occasion, after the Verdict: Now we are only considering the Evidence upon the Issue, Guilty or not Guilty; and you are now to apply yourselves to that.

King. My Lord, I think I have answered all the Evidence.

L. C. J. Well then, Mr. Keyes, What have you to say for yourself?

Keyes. My Lord, all that I have to say is, I was a Servant to Captain Porter, and I did nothing but by his Order.

L. C. J. Is that all you have to say?

Keyes. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then I must tell you, No Man is such a Servant, that the Commands of his Master can excuse him for committing High-Treason.

Keyes. I did but obey his Commands.

L. C. J. But I tell you again, No Man is so much under the Command of his Master, as that he ought to obey him, if he command him to commit High-Treason. It is proved you bought Horses, and he told you upon what Design, and you engaged in it.

Keyes. I did not hear any thing of it, my Lord. My Master was pleased to jest with me several times, and he might say a great many things that I did not much regard.

L. C. J. You were by when your Master, as you call him, promised Mr. Pendergrafs his Musketoon, and Mr. King told Pendergrafs, he hoped he would not fear breaking the Glass Windows.

Keyes. Indeed I do not remember any such thing.

L. C. J. And there are several other Particulars sworn against you: But have you any thing more to say?

Keyes. Nothing; but that I did what my Master order'd me to do.

L. C. J. Have you all done, then? If you have any more to say, you must speak it now, because you cannot speak after the King's Counsel have summed up; they must have the last Word. Have you any Witnesses to call, or any thing more to say?

Char. No, my Lord, we have nothing more to say, but leave it to your Lordship entirely.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the King against the Prisoners at the Bar, and I think the Matter hath been fully proved as Mr. Attorney at first opened it; that there was a Design of an Invasion on this Kingdom from France, and of an Insurrection within this Kingdom, to abet that Invasion, and as an Inducement to both, of a barbarous and abominable Assassination upon the Person of the King, and that the Prisoners at the Bar had an Hand in this Conspiracy.

Now, Gentlemen, I must tell you, that for the two first Parts of this Design, the Invasion and the Insurrection, we have given you no other Evidence now, but some short Hints, that such a Thing was intended; and we did it purposely for this Reason, because the Prisoners, tho' they were concerned too in those other Parts of this Plot, yet they are not now indicted for that Matter, but only for a direct Conspiracy to murder and assassinate the King. We have abundance of Witnesses to prove the other Parts at several Times against a great many as well as them; but we confine ourselves now to this Particular, as it stands charged against these Persons in the Indictment.

Gentlemen, There is an Overt-Act alledged in the Indictment, as it by Law is necessary to do, to prove the Treason; which is, Compassing the Death of the King; and it is by Law a good Overt-Act, That they did at such a Place, that is to say, the Parish of St. Clement's in the County of Middlesex, on the Tenth of February last, consult and agree to carry on such a Design: Now it is not material, as my Lords and Judges will tell you, in point of Law, to prove all the several Consultations to be in that Parish, nor to have been upon the Day alledged in the Indictment; for it be any Day before or after the Times specified in the Indictment, so it be before the Indictment preferr'd, and if it be at any Place within the County wherein the Indictment is laid, it is sufficient; the Thing that is material to be proved is, Whether they did meet upon such a Design before the Indictment, within this County?

This Design, Gentlemen, we in Law call High-Treason; the highest Crime that our Law, or the Law of any other Government, takes notice of: And it very well deserves to go under that Name; for it tends to subvert the very Foundations of the Government, without which no Subject is safe, and to bring all into Confusion and Desolation, by taking away the Life of the King, who is the Head of this Government; which Life the Law makes sacred above all others, because without that be safe, there can be no Safety to any particular Person.

Gentlemen, We have proved this bloody Conspiracy most fully against all the Prisoners at the Bar: I will not take up so much of your Time, as to repeat every Particular of the Evidence that hath been given; but only shortly remind you of what hath been materially said against each of them by the Witnesses that have been produced.

Against Mr. Charnock, there is first Mr. Porter, who hath sworn, That he and others met, and consulted about this Design, agreed upon it, and on the Ways and Methods for carrying it on; and he names the Places where, and the Times when those Consultations were had: Then there is Mr. De la Rue, who saith, he asked Mr. Charnock, how the Affair went on? and he answered, He was afraid it would come to nothing. That shews he was willing it should come to something, tho' perhaps he might be fearful whether it would take place or no. Mr. Pendergrafs saith, Mr. Charnock sent a Note to Mr. Porter to countermand the Orders for the 15th, subscribed by the Name of Robinson; but that is only a concurring Evidence to that of Captain Porter, who said before, he had such a Note; but Bertham tells you, That he asked him if he would be one in the Design to take off the Spark; and that after he heard Warrants were out, he would have had him joined in the putting it in immediate Execution, and assured him there would be Safety in so doing.

Against Mr. King there are the same Witnesses, Mr. Porter and Mr. De la Rue, who tell you of the Discourses at Captain Porter's Lodgings, where Mr. Pendergrafs was likewise, who tells you the Times, viz. the 15th and 22d of February last, the Days when this wicked Design was to have been put in Execution, and there they consulted about carrying it on. Mr. Boyse likewise tells you of the Discourse he had with King; he would not indeed directly tell him, what the Design was, but Mr. Boyse did suspect what it might be; for Mr. King told him Sir George Barclay was come, and Mr. Boyse should have a Horse, and make one, and it would soon be over.

Then for Keyes, there are three positive Witnesses against him; there's his Master, as he calls him, Captain Porter, who swears, That Keyes knew of it, and consented to it. Mr. Pendergrafs saith, Keyes was one that met at Captain Porter's the 15th of February, to put the Design in Execution that Day. De la Rue tells you, Keyes was in the Chamber at that time, and in other Places consulting about it, and so must needs know of it, and consent to it. So that, Gentlemen, if you believe these Witnesses, as I see no Reason offered to the contrary, we have most manifestly proved upon them all three the Matters charged in the Indictment.

As to what they speak of the Witnesses being Trapanners, and swearing them out of their Lives to save their own; it is plain the Prisoners designed to trapan the King out of his Life, and some the Prisoners would have trapan'd to have join'd with them in that Design, who honestly and honourably discover'd it, and now the Prisoners Danger is a Safety to the Nation.

Gentlemen, They argue against the Belief of this Conspiracy, from the Improbability that any Person should be so desperate to engage in so wicked a Design. Truly, had this been a Matter that had been only talked and discoursed of once, that might have been the better alledged; but when there have been so many Meetings at several Times and Places, and such Methods taken for the putting this Conspiracy in Execution, and after a Disappointment one Day, put off to another; nay, and as it hath been prov'd, it hath been a Project that hath been transacting for several Years, from one Year to another, and all this made as manifestly evident, as Proof by Testimony can make it; the Objection of Improbability will soon vanish into nothing; and I hope you will think, as I believe all the World doth, or will after this Trial, That there hath been such a barbarous, bloody Conspiracy, as in the Indictment is alledg'd, and that these Persons are Guilty of it, and that you will give your Verdict accordingly.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, I would only add to what Mr. Solicitor hath said, some few Observations that have been omitted of the Evidence that hath been given against the Prisoners.

The Treason charged, is a Design of Assassinating the King's Person; the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment are, several Meetings and Consultations in order to the bringing it to Effect, and the providing Men and Horses to put it in Execution.

This Charge we have fully proved against the several Prisoners at the Bar, by two Witnesses at the least, and it is manifest that they were all concern'd in the several Meetings and Consultations for the carrying on that Design.

As for Mr. Charnock, Mr. Porter's Evidence is very full as to his providing Arms and Horses; and there is besides, Mr. De la Rue, who tho' he met him at the Tavern, and not being admitted at first, took it ill, yet afterwards at two Meetings he did discourse with him about it; and Bertham gives an Account, how he would engage him in it.

As to Mr. King, there is not only Captain Porter, who testifies, that he dined with him the 14th of February, where they did discourse of this intended Assassination, but De la Rue likewise, that said, there was a Meeting appointed for Porter and King, and another, to go and take a View of the Ground; and the Prisoner himself owns he did ride out with them, but he would have it only to take the Air; Captain Porter tells you, it was to see which was the most convenient Place, and that the Place pitched upon was the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green.

And for Keyes, there are two positive Witnesses, Capt. Porter and Mr. De la Rue, that he was at the Blue Posts, and at Mr. Porter's Lodgings when this Matter was consulted of, and particularly that he came and gave an Account of the Disappointment the second Day, upon the Guards coming back.

Besides, Mr. Porter gives an Account in general, of several that were to provide Arms, Horses, and Men; and Mr. Bertham proves that Mr. Charnock told him, the Design was to take off the Spark, and then the Time would come, that King James would come back quietly. Mr. Boyse swears, King told him on the 14th of February, that he was to go out upon a Design the next Day, and that he should have a Horse provided; which next Day, the 15th, is by all the Witnesses agreed to be the first Time appointed for the Assassination; and Mr. Bertham adds, that he met with Charnock the 22d, who told him Warrants were out, and it was best to go and do the Business presently, and desired him to come to his Lodgings, and he went to his Lodgings, and found several Persons there.

Char. He does say no such Thing, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. He does say that Mr. Charnock desired him to come to his Lodgings.

Mr. Conyers. As I apprehend him, he says, he went thither in the Evening on the 22d.

Mr. Att. Gen. He says, Mr. Charnock would have had him come, but he did not; the Time that he was at his Lodging was before.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, if I mistake, I beg Pardon of the Court, and of the Prisoner too.

L. C. J. As I take it, there is no coming to his Lodging at all, but the 9th or 10th of February.

Mr. Att. Gen. He says the ninth of February he met with Trevor, who carry'd him to Charnock's Lodgings, and then he would have engaged him in the Design of Taking off the Spark; the Meeting of the 22d was afterwards in Lincoln's-Inn, and there was no going to the Lodging that Day.

Mr. Cooper. My Lord, I am very loth to take up any of your Time; but I would beg the Favour to observe two or three Passages relating to this Matter, which have not been observed yet; and shall only mention so much as I think has been omitted.

The Defence that has been made, has been principally by Mr. Charnock; and upon his Defence, it seems, the rest do depend; therefore I would beg Leave to make some few Remarks upon the Defence that he hath made. He says, That all the Evidence is but Hearsay, as to him, and no Overt-Act of his own proved; but, my Lord, I question not, if the Evidence be looked into, it will appear sufficient not only to prove him Guilty beyond Contradiction of all that is charg'd upon him in the Indictment, but particularly, that he was the principal Agent (under Sir George Barclay) in carrying on this whole Conspiracy.

For Captain Porter tells you, That Charnock first acquainted him with Sir George Barclay's coming over with the Commission; that Charnock brought brought Sir George Barclay to the Lodgings, where they both lay; that they had several Meetings, at which he was always present, and a main Promoter of the Design; that he agreed to find a principal Quota of the Persons that were to be concerned; particularly, That he was to find eight Men, and seem'd always most zealous for the Execution of it.

Then as to Mr. King, it is plain, that Knightley, and Captain Porter, and he, went to view the Ground; and Mr. De la Rue tells you, what Report King made of that View; that with great Joy King acquainted him, they had found the rarest Place in the World for the Execution of their Design, a Wood hard by the King's House at Richmond; and then he opens the whole Manner of the Ambuscade, and the Design.

Charnock. It is at the Liberty of any Body to swear what they please; but I hope the Jury will consider the Nature of the Evidence.

Mr. Cowp. Mr. De la Rue tells you further, something more than Hear-say, as to Mr. Charnock; that he ask'd Mr. Charnock about the Matter, what was like to come of it? And he answered him, that he feared the Success of it; for that a Thing of such a Nature was not to be trusted to above three. Which could not refer to the intended Invasion and the Insurrection; for as to that, it is plain from the Nature of the Thing itself, that it must be communicated to a great many, or else they could not be ready to assist in it: And therefore it is evident, it was the Assassination which he was in haste to have executed, saying, it had been delay'd too long, and that was as dangerous as communicating it to too many.

My Lord, I shall make my Words good to you, and rather than take up your time in making Repetition of what has been said, I will chuse to break my Method, and omit what might be further observed: It is true, it was a Mistake of the Day as to Bertam's Evidence of his going to Charnock's Lodging, but that is not material; for it is in Proof he did go to his Lodgings the 8th or 9th of February, and there Charnock told him that King James was a-coming; but there was a Service to be done first, to take off the Spark, and then the King would come in quietly; if that Design took effect, it would answer his Expectation: He was to ride out to take the Air, and meet some of his Acquaintance, and after all was over, we should be very happy. The Words indeed were something dark, but yet the Intent and Meaning of them are pretty manifest, not only from the Words to take off the Spark; but because this Action, whatever it was, was to precede the Invasion of King James with the French Forces, and was to be done in order to it, and therefore could not be meant of it, nor of joining with it.

My Lord, I shall trouble you no farther, but submit to your Direction.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, these three Prisoners at the Bar (viz.) Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes stand indicted of High-Treason, for conspiring, compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of the King, and that in a very bloody and barbarous Manner, by Way of Assassination; and the Indictment charges them, that they did meet and consult with divers other Traitors unknown to the Jurors, and there did resolve upon this Assassination, and Horses and Arms were prepared and provided for the Execution of it.

The Question, Gentlemen, that you are to try is, Whether these Persons who stand now thus accused, are guilty of this Crime or not? And you have heard a very long Evidence; Five Witnesses have been produced, and they have given upon this Occasion a very large Account of the whole Transaction, which I will observe to you as briefly as I can.

In the first Place, Gentlemen, you are told, how there had been a Design forming, even for some Years, for the Restoring of the late King James, and the Depriving and Deposing of this King; it seems it was a Design before the Business of Cape la Hague, which you remember very well was in the Year 1692, about the Time of the burning a great Part of the French Fleet by Admiral Russel; but this Design, though it met with several Disappointments, yet did not die, it had its Ebbings and its Flowings, sometimes it was higher, and at other times lower; and in Winter was Twelve Months it began to be more vigorously prosecuted than at any time before since the La Hague Business, and then there was a Resolution fram'd of attempting the Person and Life of the King, which appears by Captain Porter's and Mr. De la Rue's Testimony. And great Hopes were conceiv'd amongst them, that it might be effected before the King went over into Flanders; but it seems they wanted a Commission from abroad, (which they thought necessary as an Authority for them to act under) which not coming in time, the King went over to Flanders, and so for that time the Execution of it was deferred.

Gentlemen, after the King's Return from Flanders, the Prosecution of this Design was resumed, and Intimation was given, that a Commission was brought over by Sir George Barclay from King James, which was to make War upon the Person of King William, who was called therein, as you may suppose, the Prince of Orange: And you are told by Captain Porter, that at that time, he and Mr. Charnock lodged together in one House in Norfolk-street, and that Mr. Charnock told him Sir George Barclay was come with such a Commission from King James, and imparted to him the Design of Assassinating and Murdering the King, and that would be the readiest Way to bring Home King James: He asked Captain Porter, whether he would engage himself in the Matter. It seems Mr. Porter did freely and readily engage in it, and was in good earnest; and therefore there were several Meetings at several Places, in order to consult and contrive how they might bring it to pass.

Gentlemen, you are further informed, that there were several Meetings at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, another at the Nag's-head, in St. James's-street in Covent-Garden, and at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and that two of the Prisoners at the Bar, Mr. Charnock and Mr. King, with divers others, were at those Meetings, and Keyes was at several of them, and there it was agreed and resolved, that the King should be murdered, as the best Way to bring in the late King.

This being settled and resolved upon as fit to be done, the next Consideration was, in what manner it might be effected; and two Ways were proposed, one by way of Ambuscade on the other Side of the Water, near the King's House at Richmond; the other in the Lane that leads from Brentford to Turnham-Green, upon the King's Return from Richmond, some Evening; for it seems it is usual for the King to go to a House he has on the other Side of the Water, to divert himself once a Week upon the Saturday, and to return in the Evening.

These two Places being proposed, the one on this, the other on the other Side of the Water, there was a Difference in Opinion among the Conspirators, which of the Places would be the best and most proper; And in order to settle that Matter, it was resolved upon, that some Persons should be sent to view the Ground in both Places, and make their Report to the rest; and the Men agreed upon, were Captain Porter and Mr. Knightley, to whom Mr. King added himself, and accordingly they did go out of Town together to take a View of these Places.

[Here the Court was interrupted by Mrs. King, the Prisoner's Mother, who in a very outrageous, violent Manner, got into the Court; but being removed, the Lord Chief Justice proceeded.]

L. C. J. Gentlemen, I was saying that this View was taken by those Persons that undertook it; and the Night of that Day they had viewed the Places; upon their Return, they made a Report to their Accomplices, and thereupon it was resolved to relinquish the Ambuscade, and that the Attack should be made in the Lane that leads from Brentford to Turnham-Green.

The Time that was fix'd upon for this Execution was Saturday the 15th of February: There were two Men that were appointed to lodge at Kensington, whom they called orderly Men, a Title that they gave them: These were to give Notice at what time the King and the Guards went out; the one was to give Notice first of the Guards going, the other was to give Notice when the King went: When Notice was brought them that the King was gone abroad, the Conspirators were to be ready to go after in small Numbers, and were to be quartered and dispersed in the several Inns about Brentford and Turnham-Green, to be gathered into the several Bodies, upon Notice of the King's Return; when the King came over, then they were to make the Attack in this Manner: Captain Porter and Mr. Charnock, with one Rookwood were to attack the Guards, and Sir George Barclay, and his Party, were to come up to the King's Coach, and fire into it, and kill the King, and every one that was in it; and of that Party Mr. Pendergrafs was designed to be one, and he was to have had a Mulquetoon from Captain Porter, that would carry seven or eight Bullets: These Conspirators, and the Persons that were to be concerned, were in all forty, or some few more in Number.

But, by great Providence, this bloody Design was discovered, as was told you, by one of the Witnesses, Mr. Pendergrafs, a Day or two before it should have been put in Execution; and so his Majesty did forbear going out that Saturday the 15th. But they having Notice that the Guards were gone, and after that receiving an Account that the King did not go, it very much alarm'd these Conspirators; but notwithstanding this, as you have been told, they were resolved not to lay aside the Prosecution of this Design, but were rather bent upon executing it the next Opportunity that should offer itself; for which Purpose divers of the Conspirators did meet together, and did consult whether it was fit further to proceed; particularly upon the Friday the 21st Day of February, at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, divers of them met, and there they had Discourse of the Matter, and were troubled at the Disappointment, and were resolved to pursue it, and for that purpose agreed to be in a Readiness upon the next Day, and as soon as they should have Notice that the King was gone from Kensington, they would prosecute it in the same Manner in which they had formerly agreed.

It should seem, some of the Men that they had engaged were gone off, and others were provided in their stead; but there was another full Discovery made, before that, by Mr. De la Rue, by which their wicked Purpose was a second Time disappointed.

Gentlemen, upon the Discovery of this Design, it was thought very fitting to take all possible Care, for preventing such a dismal Stroke, and for punishing such heinous Offenders; there was a Proclamation issued for the Apprehension of a great many of them that absconded, which had a very good effect, by the taking of several of them, besides those that were taken up by Warrants before; and these three Prisoners now at the Bar, are indicted for this horrid and traitorous Conspiracy, and for pursuing this wicked Design, and are now upon their Trial for it.

Now, Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence, which you are to consider of in relation to these Prisoners, and how far they are affected by it. I must tell you, that Captain Porter gives a very full Evidence against all three; he tells you how and in what Manner they were all engaged, and what Parts they had all in the Prosecution of this bloody Enterprize. As for Mr. Charnock, he seems to have been a remarkable Person in almost all the Parts of it, a great Carrier-on and Promoter of it, was to be an Actor in it, and provide his Number of Men: and it seems he was a Person much trusted by Sir George Barclay; and he spoke to Mr. Porter of a Commission that Sir George Barclay brought with him from King James, which was to levy War upon the Person of King William, which it seems was understood to authorize them to Assassinate the King. Mr. King went to view the Ground, and Charnock and he were at the several Consultations, and Keyes was at Porter's Lodgings, and at divers other Consults, when the carrying on of this Design of assassinating the King, was debated and resolved upon. Mr. Porter's Evidence you have heard at large, and I doubt not you take good Notice of it, and the King's Counsel have repeated the most material Parts of it, therefore I need not do it again. And as to Mr. Charnock, you have heard what Evidence is given by De la Rue and Bertam; for though Mr. Charnock says, all that is testified by the other Witnesses is only Talk and Discourse, and that bare Words are not High-Treason, but there must be some Overt-Act; therefore you are here to consider particularly what the other Witnesses say against him, and whether another Overt-Act is not proved. De la Rue (who was one of the Discoverers, and

(as he tells you) he resolved so to be so soon as he could get a perfect Knowledge of the whole Design does inform you, that between the 15th and 22d of February, he met Mr. Charnock, and enquired of him how the Business went; to which Charnock returned answer, That the Design did languish, saying, that People were not so warm as formerly, and did believe the King had Notice, for that he had not been abroad on Saturday; that too many were acquainted with it, and therefore thought it might come to nothing: But the main Business, which was the landing of King James, would be speedy; and though the Discourse may be reckon'd only Words, yet they do import, at least acknowledge, to the carrying on this Design before that time.

But then consider what you are told by Bertham, another of the Witnesses, that he being inform'd by Trevor, that Mr. Charnock would speak with him, he thereupon went to Mr. Charnock's Lodgings, where Charnock took him aside into a back Room, and told him that King James was a-coming, and there were great Hopes of restoring him; but there was something to be done to facilitate it, which he would do well to join in: And when he asked what it was, Charnock told him, he must go abroad and take the Air, where he would meet with some of his Acquaintance; and there was no way to effect it, but by taking off the Spark; and by doing that Thing, it would most probably be brought about that King James should be restored. Now, though it was not directly said they were to kill the King, yet it is manifest what was meant by it: For the Taking off no one Person in England, besides King William, could conduce to the Return of the late King. And for his Encouragement, he told him further, that if Bertham would undertake the doing of it, it would answer his Expectations. And then you are told again by Bertham, that he met Charnock, at Lincoln's-Inn-Gate, upon that very Day that it was last to have been executed, which was the 22d of February, where Charnock told him he suspected a Discovery was made, and that there were Warrants out against them; and that therefore the best Way was, to go immediately and take him off, and then all would be well.

Now I must tell you, Gentlemen, that what he says, that bare Words are not Treason, is very true in some Cases; for loose Words spoken, without Relation to any Act or Design, are not Treason or an Overt-Act; but Arguments, and Words of Persuasion, to engage in such a Design or Resolution, and directing or proposing the best Way for effecting it, are Overt-Acts of High-Treason, as much as if two agree together to kill the King, though the Agreement be Verbal only, and not reduced to Writing: Likewise, consulting together for such a Purpose, is an Overt-Act of Treason. For it is the Imagination, the Compassing and Designing the Death of the King, that is the Treason. For the Law is very careful of the Person of the King, and hath fully provided for his Safety; and this Treason is the first Species mention'd in the Statute. But there is no Way of discovering those Compassings or Imaginations, in order to punish a Traitor, but by some external Act, that may be sufficient to manifest such an Intention and Purpose; and that which is a sufficient Manifestation of such a Design, is another Overt-Act: But there have been proved several Meetings, and Consultations and Proposals at those Meetings, about the Ways and Methods for bringing about the Design of Assassination. And it was never yet doubted, but to meet and consult how to kill the King, was an Overt-Act of High-Treason. Besides, Mr. Charnock's endeavouring to engage Bertham in this Enterprize, and the Argument he used to persuade him to it, that it was a means to restore the late King, and telling him it would answer his Expectation, is another Overt-Act. And therefore, how far Mr. Charnock is Guilty of the Charge in the Indictment, you are to determine when you have well consider'd the Nature of the Evidence, and what Answer Mr. Charnock hath made to it; which shall be open'd to you by and bye.

Then, Gentlemen, concerning Mr. King, who is the next Man, he has these Witnesses against him: Captain Porter says, that he was very frequently at the Meetings and Consultations, and that he came to him when he and Knightley were to view the Ground, and desir'd to be one of them, and they went together, and did view the Ground; this was some Time before the 15th of February, in the same Week.

And you may also remember the Evidence given by Mr. De la Rue, That Mr. King told him about November or December, that a Major-General would come from France, and that Money was to be advanced; and that after Captain Porter and Mr. King told him, that the Major-General was come. On Friday the 7th of February, King said he was to go out of Town with Knightley and Durant, to know whether the King went to Richmond or Hounslow. Being inform'd the King had a Design to go to Hounslow, and be return'd on the Sunday following, Mr. King did say they had found out the rarest Place, and the fittest that could be for that Purpose, within a Quarter of a Mile of the King's House at Richmond; and that there was to be an Ambuscade, and asked the Witness whether he would be one in the Ambuscade; but he liked it not, but had rather attack the Guards. He had been at the Dog-Tavern with Mr. King, and discoursing about this Undertaking, Mr. King the Prisoner had told this Witness, that several of the Guards were come from France, and that several Conferences were had about taking off the King; and he did not approve of Mr. Charnock, in regard he did not talk like a Soldier, and was for an easy Post without Danger; and as for Captain Porter, he had another Objection against him, he had as much Fat in his Brains as he had in his Body; and so the one wanted Skill, and the other Wit. But still Mr. King owned his being concerned in the carrying on of this Design of Assassination: for after the Design of the Ambuscade was disapproved of, and agreed that the Guards should be attacked, and the King in his Coach, at Turnham-Green; he by Discourse with De la Rue, expresses his Consent to it; besides, he told Pendergrafs, who was to be one, and to have Porter's Gun to shoot the King, he hoped Pendergrafs would not be afraid to break the Glass Windows.

Mr. Keyes stands upon it, for his Part, that he was only a Servant to Captain Porter, and if he had done any Thing amiss, it was no more than what his Master bid him do; and that he knew of no Design; and that it was a hard Thing that he should be troubled in this Matter; for if a Master send his Servant to buy Horses or Arms, if he does not know how they are to be employed, afterwards it doth appear they are to be employed in Assassinating the King, that the Servant should be punish'd for obeying his Master. But the Question is, Whether Keyes knew what the Design was? Captain Porter says, he did know when he hired the Horses for what Purpose they were to be used. And he says further, that he was with them at many of the Consults at the Globe-Tavern and other Places, where he did eat and drink with them, and was privy to the Design, and concerned in it.

Then, Gentlemen, by the other Evidence it is proved, that he was in Company several times when the Design was discoursed of, and that he was used as a Companion to Captain Porter, and used to sit and eat and drink with him and the rest of them at the same Table; and when they drank to the Restoration of the late King, and to the Squeezing of the rotten Orange, Keyes was there, and pledged the Health, which shews the Intention of the Man; and this was upon Saturday the 22d; and when News was brought that the Design was disappointed by the King's not going abroad that Day, he went out to get Intelligence, and brought in Word that the Guards were come home, and that all their Horses were in a Foam, and the King's Coaches returned to the Mews; all which is Evidence that he knew of the Design, and consented to it. So that I must leave it to you upon the whole, though there be a great deal more Evidence than I have mentioned; you are the Judges how far it amounts to prove them Guilty.

But then, Gentlemen, as to what they say, that the Witnesses do testify by Hearsay, that's not Evidence; but what they know themselves, or heard from the Prisoners; and so Mr. Charnock insists upon it, that what Mr. De la Rue says against him, is mostly what Captain Porter told him, and therefore cannot make a Proof, by two: It is true, and therefore I did omit repeating a great Part of what De la Rue said, because as to him it was for the most part Hearsay: But whatsoever Evidence has been given of any Fact done within the Witness's own Knowledge, or of any Consult or Discourse of the Prisoners themselves, that you are to take Notice of as good Evidence, and consider of it.

But then there is another thing that is objected against the Evidence, and that is, as to the Fairness and Credibility of it, because the Witnesses, especially Mr. Porter, by their own Acknowledgment, are involved in the same Crime, and therefore cannot be good Witnesses against others. Now, as to that Objection, I must tell you, first, that Prisoners under those Circumstances are good legal Witnesses, but their Credits, as in all other Cases, are left to your Consideration. But, Secondly, as to the Weight of this Objection against their Credit, you may consider that traitorous Conspiracies are Deeds of Darkness as well as Wickedness, the Discovery whereof can properly come only from the Conspirators themselves; such Evidence has always been allow'd as good Proof in all Ages; and they are the most proper Witnesses, for otherwise 'tis hardly possible, if not altogether impossible, to have a full Proof of such secret Contrivances; such Discoveries are to be encouraged in all Governments, without which there can be no Safety: And though Men have been guilty of such heinous Offences, in being Partakers or Promoters in such Designs, yet if they come in and repent, and give Testimonies thereof by discovering the Truth, great Credit ought to be given to them, for such Evidence was ever accounted good. Besides, as to two of them, De la Rue and Pendergrafs, which were the first that discovered, before they were apprehended, or suspected themselves to be in Danger, and therefore do not swear to save their own Lives, but resolved upon it to save the Life of the King. And Mr. Pendergrafs had not any Design to be an Evidence, who though he discover'd it almost as early as he knew it, yet refused to tell the Names, upon a Principle of Honour, till he had the King's Word that he should not be press'd to come in as a Witness; and he tells you himself the Reason why he refused then, and why he comes in now, because Captain Porter was his Friend, to whom he was obliged, and he never intended at first to discover his Name, nor afterwards to be Evidence against him; but upon Captain Porter's being taken, and discovering himself and his Witness, he thought that he was absolved from all that Obligation, and therefore resolved to appear as a Witness against the rest: And this does not depend only upon the Credit of Pendergrafs, but also upon the Testimony of my Lord Portland, and my Lord Cutts, who have given you a full Account of the Manner of it.

And Mr. De la Rue tells you, That it was his Design at first, even a Year ago, if the Conspiracy had so far proceeded as to be ready to be put in Execution, he would have endeavour'd to have prevented the Mischief by acquainting the King with it; and he gives you an Account how he revealed it to Brigadier Lewson, and to my Lord Portland, and after to the King, which is confirmed by my Lord Portland; so that these are Witnesses beyond all Exception, and if such Evidence as this be not allowed to be good, the Government can never be secure against such villainous Enterprizes and wicked Machinations.

Gentlemen, This is not trapanning, for it doth not appear by any Evidence, nor have I heard the Prisoners pretend that these Persons did go about to seduce them into the Design, but indeed were endeavour'd to be seduced into it themselves; and though they kept them Company afterwards, yet it was only with a Purpose to acquaint themselves with the real Intentions of these wicked Men, which is Lawful and Just in order to the making a full Discovery of their so dangerous a Villainy; and therefore they ought to receive all Countenance for doing so great a Service to the Government, without undergoing the Imputation of being Trapanners.

Gentlemen, there is no more occurs to me at present that is material to be observed or taken Notice of; I leave it to you, you have heard what the Witnesses say against the Prisoners, you have heard what the Prisoners have said for themselves, you are the Judges of this Fact; if you are not satisfied that here has been sufficient Evidence given to prove them Guilty, you will acquit them; but if you are satisfied, that upon the Evidence and all the Circumstances of this Case, that they are Guilty, I suppose you will discharge your Consciences, and give your Verdict accordingly.

Then

Then the Jury withdrew to consider of the Evidence, and in less than half an Hour returned, and found all the three Prisoners Guilty of the High-Treason for which they were indicted, and the Court adjourned till six a-Clock that Evening.

Post Meridiem eodem Die.

ABOUT Seven a-Clock the Lord Mayor, and the Common Serjeant, with as many of the Court as would make a Quorum, came upon the Bench, and by Proclamation in usual Form the Court was resumed; and the Prisoners called to the Bar to their Judgment.

Cl. of Arraignments. Robert Charnock, hold up thy Hand (Which he did). You stand convicted of High Treason, for Conspiring the Death of our Sovereign Lord the King by Assassination, What can you say for yourself, why the Court should not give Judgment upon you to die according to the Law?

The Jaylor first made him to kneel; and then, when he rose up, he spoke as follows.

Charnock. Sir, I have a great deal to say, if I knew when was the proper Time to apply myself to the saying what I have to say.

Mr. Com. Serj. You are now called to; to know what you have to say.

Char. Sir, I would put this Question, because I am ignorant in Forms of Law, Whether it be practicable for me to say any thing before Judgment or not? For I have no Pardon to plead to hinder the Judgment; and therefore I would know, if it be practicable to say any thing before Judgment?

Mr. Com. Serj. Yes, Sir, it must be before Judgment; because what you are called to, and asked now, is what you have to say in Arrest of Judgment.

Char. I have many Things to say as to Observations I made out of the Indictment, and upon my Trial, if this be my Time to offer them.

Mr. C. Serj. Yes, Sir, it is your only Time.

Char. Then, Sir, I think the Fact is ill laid: We are indicted here for High Treason, in Conspiring the Death of the King, and no Overt-Act is proved against me; I speak for myself; I suppose these Gentlemen will speak for themselves.

Mr. C. Serj. At present you are the only Person that is asked the Question; therefore pray go on, and say what you have to say in Arrest of Judgment. You say the Indictment is ill laid, wherein is it so?

Char. I do find fault with the Indictment, because it is laid for Assassinating the King; and all that is proved against me, was, That I was in Company where such a Thing was discours'd of: Now I am advised, and my own Reason tells me, that being in Company is no Proof of my giving my Consent to the Thing; and without my Consenting, there can be no Overt-Act to make me guilty of the Treason. It is said, that I and my Accomplices, though there are none named but us Three, did meet together, and consult of this Matter, and that we bought and provided Horses and Arms: Which I take to be the only Overt-Act. And of all these Things there is not one Tittle proved; and therefore, with Submission to the Court, the Indictment is naught in that respect. And this, I think, I may speak, not only for my own Sake, but for the Sake of these Gentlemen that stand by me; if there be nothing proved against us of an Overt-Act, as laid in the Indictment, we ought not to be condemned.

Mr. Com. Serj. Look you, Mr. Charnock, you move nothing against the Indictments, but only run into the Proof: That Matter is quite at an End, and we cannot enter into any Debate about it; you have had a fair and a legal Trial, and upon that Trial the Jury has found you Guilty.

Char. I have not had a fair and an equal Trial, Sir.

Mr. Com. Serj. Yes, you have had both a fair and a legal, and an equal Trial.

Char. If you please to leave out the Word Legal, because it perhaps may be according to the strict Forms of Law: But I say it was not a fair and an equal Trial, because in the last Act of Parliament, which was made for regulating Trials in Cases of Treason, the Equity and Reasonableness of a Prisoner's having that which was denied me, that is a Copy of the Indictment, and Counsel, is laid down as the Ground and Reason of making the Act; and without that it never had been made: It is in the Preamble of the Act, which I have look'd upon since I went out of the Court; and though as to the Time of the Commencement, there is a certain Day prefix'd, yet the Equity of the Act is always the same, and that Equity I take myself to be intitled unto; and therefore being denied the Benefit of it, I think I had not an equal and a fair Trial.

Mr. Com. Serj. Sir, you have very unreasonably objected this Matter of this Act of Parliament at your Arraignment, and upon your Trial, and now; but your Objection is of no Moment or Validity in the World: For the Act is to commence in futuro, and you are tried according to the Course of Common-Law before that Act can take Place; and it is the Common-Law only that this Court can proceed by, and you be tried by.

Char. Sir, I insist not upon the Law itself, but only upon the Equity of it, and the Reasonableness of the thing.

Mr. Com. Serj. Courts of Justice are to go according to Rules of Law, and that is equal that is according to those Rules; I say again, Sir, you have had a fair, a legal, and an equal Trial, and have been treated with all the Candor and Temper that I believe was ever shewn to any Persons in your Condition.

Char. I had not Counsel allowed me to assist me.

Mr. Com. Serj. The Law allows it you not; if it had, you should have had it.

Char. Then my Counsel were ignorant People, to instruct and advise me, that by the Equity of this Act I ought to have it.

Mr. Com. Serj. It was never practicable before, nor can be, 'till the Time that this Act takes Place.

Char. Sir, I cannot argue with the Court in Matters of Law; but as to the Evidence, I say, it did not come up to the Indictment.

Mr. Com. Serj. If you have any thing to except against the Indictment, that is very proper for you to do, and if you will propose it, we will hear you.

Char. Sir, I find fault with the Indictment in several Particulars; all the Facts are laid in the Parish of St. Clement Danes, and there is not one Fact proved to be done there.

Mr. Com. Serj. It is not material that the Facts should be proved to be done in the particular Parish laid in the Indictment; it is sufficient, if they be proved to be done in the County.

Char. There is not one Fact proved to be done in that Parish.

Mr. Com. Serj. All that is against the Evidence, which we cannot at all take Notice of after the Verdict.

Char. I insisted upon several Things, whereby it was impossible that the Evidence could be true, and mentioned several Things, wherein the Indictment was erroneous, and the Evidence not consistent with it, or at least not of such Validity as to affect me; all which Things, if I might have had Counsel to argue for me in Point of Law, (and I look upon it as a very great Hardship that it was denied me,) as likewise that my Lord Chief Justice over-ruled what I offer'd about Trappanners, as I take these Witnesses to be, out of Sir Robert Atkins's Book, and what I quoted out of my Lord Hale's Pleas of the Crown, and Coke's Institutes.

Mr. Com. Serj. Mr. Charnock, If you please to offer any Point of Law to the Court to stop Judgment, we are ready to hear it; but you ought not to reflect upon the Court.

Char. Where a Man is dying, sure he may have Leave to take Notice of what Hardships he has lain under.

Mr. Com. Serj. Pray, Sir, hear me; No Men that ever stood in your Place have had more Indulgence and Favour shew'd them, nor, I believe, so much neither. Those of us that are here, and were at your Trial, do think you do very much amiss; to make any Reflections upon the Court, after you were so fairly dealt with. If you have any thing that is material to offer in Arrest of Judgment, pray let us hear it: But we must over-rule all Discourses of this Nature, it is a vain sort of Discourse, and will be of no Use or Service to you at all.

Char. Truly, I know not what it is possible for me to urge which you will think to be material, if I cannot urge false Latin and Inconsistencies. There have been heretofore Arrests of Judgment, and that must sure have been upon some Error or other.

Mr. Com. Serj. It is true, but you assign none; you abound in Words, but will not offer any thing that is fit for you to offer.

Char. Sir, I assign this particularly as an Error, and if it be not, I cannot tell what is: I am upon my last Legs, and stand here for my Life, and ought to be allowed all legal Advantages. One particular thing is this, Whether the Scene of the Fact being laid to be at the Parish of St. Clement Danes, there ought not to be Proof that such Facts were done there; and if so, Whether it be an not an Error, that there was no Proof of any one Fact done there? And then the next thing is, We are charged to have bought Horses and Arms in the Indictment, and there was no Proof of any Horses or Arms bought; I am sure as to me there was not.

Mr. Com. Serj. I told you before, all this is to no Purpose; you enter into the Evidence, which is Matter of Fact, which is all over, and we cannot enter into any Consideration of it, therefore pray do not spend our Time: but if you have any thing that is an Objection to the Frame of the Indictment, let us hear it.

Char. Then I think that the Indictment is uncertain; it says, quadraginta Homines equestres aut circiter de ipsis Roberto Charnock, Edwardo King, & Thoma Keyes; this is either not true, or it is Nonfense: For if there be forty Horsemen, or thereabouts, of Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, that cannot be true, for they can't make forty; and if you take in the alii Proditoribus ignotis, that will make it uncertain, and that Uncertainty will make the Indictment void.

Mr. Com. Serj. I thought my Lord Chief Justice had satisfied you as to that Objection; you repeat but part of the Sentence: It is said, de ipsis Roberto Charnock, & predictis aliis Proditoribus ignotis, ac aliis, that is certain enough, I thought we should have heard no more of that frivolous Objection, but you had been satisfied with the Judge's Answer to it.

Char. I am satisfied in Point of Fact that they conspired it so; but these are the Words of the Indictment as they were read to me.

Mr. Com. Serj. You shall have the Words read to you again. Read them.

Cl. of Arraignments. Quod quadraginta Homines Equestres aut eo circiter de ipsis Roberto Charnock, Edwardo King, & Thoma Keyes, & predictis aliis Proditoribus ignotis, ac aliis.

Mr. Com. Serj. You took but Part of the Sentence, or else you could never have made that Objection.

Char. Then, Sir, here is tunc & ibidem, what is that.

Mr. Com. Serj. You can easily tell that sure; it is then and there.

Char. What, ibidem? What word is that?

Mr. Com. Serj. It is the best Word that could be used; what Word would you have had?

Char. Tunc & ibi, is then and there.

Mr. Com. Serj. No, ibidem is a better Word, and is always used in our Pleadings at Law.

Char. Then I have only this in general to say; Whether it be possible for a Man that is ignorant in Forms of Law to defend himself without Counsel? I must desire Counsel to look into the Indictment and to assist me.

Mr. Com. Serj. That is what we cannot allow by Law, unless you offer something that may be such an Objection as the Court shall think fit to have argued by Counsel.

Char. But how shall I that am ignorant in the Law, know how to offer you that which you will think fit to hear Counsel to?

Mr. Com. Serj. You may offer any thing that you think is an Exception, and the Court will consider of it; for I think it is my Duty, and every Man's Man's that has the Honour to sit here by the King's Commission, to lay as much Weight upon any Objection that the Prisoner does offer, as it will bear; but if nothing be offer'd that is of the least Weight or Moment, we being to do our Duty equally between the King and the Prisoner, we cannot allow Counsel when there is nothing before us to allow it upon.

Char. You will not, it seems, let me have such Assistance; as I may offer you something material.

Mr. C. Serj. You know well enough we cannot do it; pray do not spend our Time to no Purpose.

Char. Nay, Sir, if you be in Haste, I will not trouble you any longer.

Mr. C. Serj. You have no Reason to say we are in Haste; I am sure you have had all the Indulgence and Patience that could be; you are at Liberty to offer any thing that you can, but to spend the Time of the Court in bare Words is not reasonable.

Char. The Law was never my Practice, Sir, nor Study: I perceive, whatsoever I offer signifies nothing; therefore I beg your Pardon for the Trouble I have given you; I shall not attempt to offer any thing further.

Mr. C. Serj. You may offer what you will, we will hear you.

Char. Sir, I perceive whatsoever I say is unacceptable, and so I had as good let it alone.

Mr. C. Serj. You shall be heard to say whatever you think is for your Interest to say.

Char. I thought these Things were for my Interest to offer; but I see it is to no Purpose; therefore I have no more to say; I have done.

Mr. C. Serj. You may offer what you will, and you shall be heard with all the Patience and Candour imaginable.

Char. I see it is impossible for me to offer any thing that the Court will think material; therefore it is in vain for me to speak, and trouble myself and the Court with what will be of no Use to me.

Cl. of Arraignments. Edward King, hold up thy Hand (Which he did). You stand convicted of the same High-Treason: What can you say for yourself, why the Court should not give Judgment upon you to die according to Law?

(Then he was made to kneel, and rise up again.)

King. What Mr. Charnock has said, all of it I do imagine to be material; and since he is not to be heard, I have done; I can say no more.

Cl. of Mr. Thomas Keyes, hold up your Hand: You are in the same Case with the Prisoner that went last before you: What can you say for yourself, why the Court should not give Judgment upon you to die according to the Law?

(He was made to kneel, and rise again.)

Keyes. Sir, I have had no Counsel, nor no Assistance since I have been in Prison.

Mr. C. Serj. That you alledged upon your Trial, and you were then told you might have had Counsel, if you had thought fit; for you had an Order for it, and you come too late to offer any thing of that Nature now. But the Question that is now asked you is, What have you to say for yourself, why Judgment should not pass upon you?

Keyes. I was only a Servant.

Mr. C. Serj. You have been told, that will not excuse a Man in such a Case.

Keyes. I cannot help it, Sir, I have done; I hope you will take care of my Wife and Children when I am gone.

(Then Proclamation was made for Silence, whilst Judgment was in giving; which the Common Serjeant, sitting down upon the Bench, pronounced thus:)

Mr. C. Serj. Robert Charnock, Edward King, and Thomas Keyes, the Prisoners at the Bar: You have been severally indicted for High-Treason; you have pleaded Not Guilty, and put yourselves, for your Trial, upon the Country, which Country have found you Guilty: You have had the Benefit of a fair, lawful, indifferent, and equal Trial, according to the Laws of this Land; those very Laws, which you are charged in this Indictment to have conspired to subvert. It is a Crime of the highest Nature that the Law knows: You are Gentlemen of liberal Education, and I hope this will bring you to some Reflection, both upon the State of your own Case, and the Blackness of your Offence, in the Time you have to live, which I fear is but short: It is certainly the heinouslest Crime that any Persons can be guilty of; the Murdering of a Prince in cold Blood, and involving your Country in Slaughter and Confusion. I have nothing more to do, but to pronounce the Judgment that the Law has provided for such Offenders, and which the Court doth award:

That you go from hence to the Place from whence you came; and that from thence you be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you are severally to be Hanged by the Neck, and cut down alive; your Bowels and Privy Members to be cut out from your Bodies, and to be Burnt in your View; your Heads to be cut off, your Bodies respectively to be divided into Four Parts; which Heads and Quarters are to be at the King's Disposal: And God have Mercy upon your Souls.

Char. Sir, I desire we may have the Favour to have, our Friends and Relations come to us while we are in Prison.

Mr. C. Serj. You shall have all the Liberty of your Friends and Relations coming to you, that you can reasonably desire.

Char. And I hope we shall have no hard Usage in Prison.

Mr. C. Serj. No, God forbid you should! You may assure yourself you shall have none.

(Then the Sessions of Peace for London, and of Goal-Delivery of Newgate for London and Middlesex, were adjourn'd unto Saturday the 21st of March following.)

Accordingly on Wednesday the 18th of March, 1695, they were all three drawn from Newgate to Tyburn on Sledges, where they deliver'd the following Papers to the Sheriff:

Mr. CHARNOCK's Paper.

THAT I might avoid Distractions, and be compos'd as much as is possible at the Time of my Execution, I thought it much more proper to communicate this to the Sheriffs, than to give myself the Uneasiness of speaking, leaving it to them to publish (if they should think convenient) for the Satisfaction of the World; and in what I have to say, I have taken as much Care as I could to be short, that I might not lose Time in my greatest Concern.

As concerning an Invasion intended by King James upon England, there was certain Intelligence of it from abroad, I presume every Body was satisfy'd, and to the facilitating of which, I own that myself and some others did agree upon the Undertaking to attack the Prince of Orange and his Guards, for which I am now to suffer; but I think myself oblig'd, by all the Ties imaginable both of Conscience and Honour, to declare, that as for any Order or Commission of King James's for assassinating the Prince of Orange, I never saw nor knew of any, but have had frequent Assurances of his having rejected such Proposals when they have been offered.

I confess, I did hear that there was a Commission arriv'd for levying of War; and which was natural to believe, if the King was in such a Readiness to come over as was reported; but if there was any such Authority as that, I declare I never saw it.

As to what regards the Body of the Roman Catholics, I must do them this Justice, and which I dare be positive in, that they had no Manner of Knowledge of this Design; nor do I believe it was communicated to any other Party of such as are reputed the King's Friends, but carried on merely by a small Number, without the Advice, Consent, or Privity of any Parties whatsoever.

I ask Forgiveness of all the World for what Offences or Injuries I have done to them; and I am (I blefs Almighty God) in perfect Charity with all Mankind.

ROBERT CHARNOCK.

Mr. KING's Paper.

I AM now within a few Moments of Eternity, brought to this Place by the just Hand of God, in Punishment of all my Crimes, but particularly of that of which I have been lately arraign'd, and for which I stand here condemn'd; but I hope that Goodness of God, which has given me a Sense of my Wickedness, will accept my Repentance, and shew Mercy on me; which I hope to obtain, through the Passion and Merits of my Redeemer, upon whom I entirely cast myself.

And that I may find his Mercy, I think myself oblig'd to do Justice to my Neighbour, that so none may suffer wrongfully on my Account. And, therefore, as I am soon to answer the Truth of what I say before the Tribunal of God,

First, I declare, that I never saw any Order or Commission for King James's promoting the Assassination, for which I am condemn'd; neither do I know of any such Order or Commission.

Secondly, That this Design was not undertaken with any general Knowledge or Approbation of any Body of Men, either Catholick or Protestant.

Lastly, That I did not engage in it on Presumption of any King-killing Principles that could justify such an Undertaking, but was drawn into it by my own Rashness and Passion; for which, and all other Sins, I heartily beseech God to forgive me.

And I hope, that such who think the Misfortune of their Imprisonment or Trouble is deriv'd from my having been engaged in this Enterprize, or such to whom it has any ways given Scandal, that they will admit me to their Pardon, as I freely and heartily forgive all Mankind. In this Disposition of a sincere Repentance, and true Charity, I commend my Soul into the Hands of God, and hope to find Mercy from him. And for this I beg all your Prayers.

EDWARD KING.

Mr. KEYES's Paper.

I AM going to appear before the living God; I trust in his Mercy, that he will forgive all my Sins committed to this last Moment of my Life. God is just in all his Judgments, and I accept of this Death as the Punishment of my Iniquities. I forgive all my Enemies, and hope, through a hearty Repentance, and the Merits of my Saviour, to obtain Mercy.

Have Mercy on me, O Father of Mercy, and thro' thy only Son forgive me all my Sins.

THOMAS KEYES.

After which they were executed as Traitors, and their Quarters expos'd about the City.

CLIV. The Trial of Sir JOHN FREIND, Knight, at the Old-Baily, for High-Treason, March 23. 1695. 8 WILL. III.

Monday, March 23. 1695.

At the Sessions-House in the Old-Baily, this Day came on the Trial of Sir John Freind, Knight, for High-Treason, upon an Indictment found by the Grand Jury for the City of London, upon the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, on Saturday the 21st Instant.

Clerk of Arraignments.

CRYER, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez. All Manner of Persons that have any thing more to do at this general Sessions of the Peace, Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the City of London, and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London, and County of Middlesex, adjourned over to this Day; Draw near, and give your Attendance, for now they will proceed to the Pleas of the Crown for the said City and County; and God save King William.

Cl. of Ar. Make Proclamation again.

Cryer. Oyez, You good Men of the City of London, summoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoner that is to be at the Bar; answer to your Names as you shall be called, every Man at the first Call, upon Pain and Peril that will fall thereon.

Then the Petty Jury were all called over, and the Appearances of those that answered to the Call were recorded.

About Ten a-Clock the Lord Chief Justice Holt, the Lord Chief Justice Treby, Mr. Justice Nevill, and Mr. Justice Rokeby, came into the Court; and there being a great Confluence of the Nobility and Gentry there present, the Prisoner was order'd to be brought to the Bar: Which was done accordingly.

Cl. of Ar. Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand.

Freind. My Lord, I humbly move that I may have one William Courtney (who is to be a principal Witness for me at my Trial, and is now a Prisoner in the Gatehouse) sent for.

* Sir John Holt. * L. C. J. Is he your Witness, Sir John?

Freind. Yes, my Lord, William Courtney is his Name.

L. C. J. Sir John, why did not you send, and desire this before?

Freind. My Lord, I did not hear of him while last Night; and I humbly beseech your Lordship, that you will please to let him be sent for.

The Judges consult'd among themselves.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir John Freind, I'll tell, if you'll appoint your Agent to come hither, you shall have an Habeas Corpus ad testificandum: But indeed you might have sent this Morning, and then the Writ might have been got ready.

Freind. My Lord, I did not know so much; for it was last Night before I understood that he was to be a Witness.

L. C. J. You might have sent last Night, or this Morning, and you should have had a Warrant for the Writ.

Freind. I assure your Lordship, I did not know so much.

L. C. J. Well, send your Agent, or your Solicitor, and you shall have a Warrant for the Writ.

Freind. I beseech your Lordship, that he may be sent for, and that the Messenger may make Haste.

L. C. J. Let your Solicitor come to my Clerk, and he shall have it.

Freind. My Lord, if you please to give a Rule of Court for it, I suppose it may be done presently.

L. C. J. No, no, Sir John, it must be by Writ; the Keeper of the Gatehouse else cannot bring him.

Freind. My Lord, that will be a long time before it can be done; I desire nothing but that I may have him here to give his Evidence for me.

L. C. J. It will be got ready presently; I believe he will be here Time enough for you to make use of his Testimony.

Freind. But, my Lord, suppose he should not be here: It would be a great Hindrance to me, and a great Injury to my Trial.

L. C. J. No, no, Sir John, you need not fear any thing of that Nature, we are not in such Haste; we will not spur you on: But the Warrant shall be made; and do you make what Haste you can to get the Writ, and your Witness brought.

[The Lord Chief Justice gave order to Mr. Mason his Clerk, to prepare a Warrant for an Habeas Corpus, directed for the Keeper of the Gatehouse, to bring William Courtney immediately hither to give Evidence.]

Cl. of Ar. Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.]

You stand indicted in London by the Name of Sir John Freind, late of London, Kt. for that, Whereas there had been for a long time, and yet is, an open, and notoriously publick, and most sharp and cruel War by Land, and by Sea, had, carried on, and prosecuted by Lewis the French King, against the most Serene, most Illustrious, and most Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. All which time the said Lewis the French King, and his Subjects were, and yet are Enemies of our said Lord the King that now is, and his Subjects. You the said Sir John Freind, a Subject of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, of this Kingdom of England, well knowing the Premises, not having the Fear of God in your Heart, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as a false Traitor against the said most Serene, most Clement, and most Excellent Prince, our said Sovereign Lord William the Third, now King of England, &c. your Supreme, True, Natural, Rightful, Lawful, and Undoubted Sovereign Lord; the cordial Love, and the true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, towards him our said Sovereign Lord the King should and of right ought to bear withdrawing, and intending utterly to extinguish, and contriving, and with all your Strength purposing, designing, and endeavouring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is of Right, duly, happily, and very well Established, altogether to Subvert, Change, and Alter, and his Faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and most miserable Slavery to the aforesaid French King to subdue and bring; the first Day of July, in the seventh Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at London, in the Parish of St. Peter Cornhill, in the Ward of Lime-Street, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traitorously, did compass, imagine, contrive, purpose, and intend our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, then your Supreme, True, Natural, Rightful, and Lawful Sovereign Lord, of and from the Regal State, Title, Honour, Power, Crown, Command, and Government of this Kingdom of England to depose, cast down, and utterly to deprive; and our said Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to put and bring; and the aforesaid Lewis the French King, by his Armies, Soldiers, Legions, and Subjects, this Kingdom of England to invade, fight with, overcome, and subdue, to move, incite, procure, and help, and a miserable Slaughter among the Faithful Subjects of him our said Sovereign Lord the King, throughout his whole Kingdom of England, to make and cause; and that you the said Sir John Freind to the aforesaid Enemies of our said Lord the King that now is, then and there during the War aforesaid, Traitorously were adhering and assisting; and the same your most impious, wicked and devilish Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Intentions, and Purposes aforesaid to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect; and in Prosecution, Performance, and Execution of that traitorous Adhesion, you the said Sir John Freind, as such a false Traitor, during the War aforesaid, to wit, the same first Day of July, in the Year aforesaid, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elsewhere in London aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, advisedly, secretly, and traitorously, and with Force and Arms, &c. with one Robert Charnock (late of High-Treason, in contriving and conspiring the Death of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted), and with divers other false Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propose, treat, consult, consent, and agree to procure from the aforesaid Lewis the French King, of his Subjects, Forces, and Soldiers, then and yet Enemies of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, great Numbers of Soldiers and armed Men this Kingdom of England to invade and fight with, and to levy, procure, and prepare great Numbers of armed Men, and Troops and Legions against our said Lord the King that now is, to rise up and be formed, and with those Enemies, at and upon such their Invasion and Entry into this Kingdom of England, to join and unite, Rebellion and War against him our said Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to make, levy, and wage, him our said Lord the King so as aforesaid to depose, and him to kill and murder; and moreover with the said false Traitors, the same first Day of July, in the Year aforesaid, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, Traitorously you did consult, consent, and agree to send the aforesaid Robert Charnock as a Messenger from you the said Sir John Freind, and the same other Traitors unknown, unto and into the Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond the Seas, unto James the Second, late King of England, to propose to him, and desire of him to obtain of the aforesaid French King the Soldiers and armed Men aforesaid, for the Invasion aforesaid to be made; and Intelligence and Notice of such their traitorous Intentions, and Adhensions, and all the Premises unto the said late King James the Second, and the said other Enemies and their Adherents, to give and exhibit, and them to inform of other particular Things and Circumstances thereunto relating; as also Intelligence from them of the said intended Invasion, and other Things and Circumstances concerning the Premises to receive, and the same to you the said Sir John Freind, and the said other Traitors in this Kingdom of England, to signify, report and declare, in Assistance, Animation, and Aid of the said Enemies of our said Lord the King that now is, in the War aforesaid, and to incite and procure those Enemies the more readily and boldly to invade this Kingdom of England; and the Treasons and traitorous Contrivances, Compassings, Imaginations, and Purposes of you the said Sir John Freind aforesaid, to perfect and fulfil; and all the Premises the sooner to execute, manage and perform, you the said Sir John Freind, during the War aforesaid, so as aforesaid continued, to wit, the same first Day of July, in the above said seventh Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King that now is, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, falsely and traitorously did procure and obtain to yourself, and did receive ceive and accept of a certain Commission or Writing purporting itself to be a Commission under and from the aforesaid James the Second, late King of England, to constitute you, the said Sir John Freind, to be a Colonel of Horse in the Army by you and the other false Traitors against our said Lord the King that now is, within this Kingdom of England to be levied and formed; and in pursuance of the said pretended Commission by you the said Sir John Freind so obtained and accepted of, and your Treasons and all your traitorous Intentions aforesaid the sooner to execute, perform, fulfil, and perfect, you the said Sir John Freind afterwards, to wit, the same first Day of July, in the seventh Year aforesaid, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, Advise, secretly, and traitorously, divers Soldiers, and armed Men, and ready to be armed, with Force and Arms, &c. to raise, and lift, and War and Rebellion against our said Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England to make and wage; and to and with the said Enemies of our said Lord the King, Foreigners and Strangers, Subjects and Soldiers of the said Lewis the French King, being about to invade this Kingdom of England, at and upon their Invasion and Entry into this same Kingdom, then shortly expected to be made, themselves together with you the said Sir John Freind to join and unite, and in Troops and Legions to form, did raise, lift, and retain, and did procure to be raised, lifted, and retained; and divers Sums of Money, in and about the raising, lifting, and retaining of the aforesaid Soldiers, and Men armed, and ready to be armed upon the Account aforesaid, upon the aforesaid first Day of July, in the seventh Year aforesaid, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, and traitorously, did give and pay, and cause to be paid; and those Soldiers and Men, for the Treasons, Intentions, and Purposes aforesaid, then and there, and long after you had in readiness. As also the same first Day of July, in the seventh Year aforesaid, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, divers Horsemens, and very many Arms, Guns, Carbines, Pistols, Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and warlike Things, and military Instruments, falsely, maliciously, secretly, and traitorously you did obtain, buy, gather, and procure, and cause to be bought, gathered, obtained and procured, and in your Custody had and detained, to that Intent to use the same in the said Invasion, War and Rebellion, against our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, Him our said Lord the King of and from the Regal State, Crown and Command of this Kingdom of England to depose, cast down and deprive, and him to kill and murder, and all the Treasons, Intentions, Contrivances and Purposes of you the said Sir John Freind, as aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect, and fully to bring to effect; against the Duty of your Allegiance, and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity; as also against the Form of the Statute in this Case made and provided.

What say'st thou, Sir John Freind, Art thou Guilty of this High Treason whereof thou standest Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Freind. Not Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, How wilt thou be tried?

Freind. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God send thee a good Deliverance.

Freind. I don't know any thing of it, I am as innocent as the Child unborn.

The Warrant for the Habeas Corpus was signed by the Lord Chief Justice Holt, and delivered to the Prisoner, who sent it away to the Crown-Office by his Solicitor, to get the Writ sealed.

Freind. My Lord, I have something to move, if your Lordship please to hear me, and the rest of my Lords the Judges: That if any Matter of Law doth arise upon my Trial, I may be heard by my Counsel, that you may not destroy me without Law.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir John Freind, if any Matter of Law do arise at your Trial, and you will tell us what that Matter of Law is, and the Court see that it is a Matter of Doubt, we can, and ought, and no question shall assign you Counsel; but that is time enough when such Matter does arise.

Freind. My Lord, It is well known to your Lordship, and all the Court, that I am not a Lawyer; but I hope, as you are of Counsel for the King as Judges of Law, so you will be of Counsel for me; for I am not a Lawyer, and cannot know whether any Matter that arises be Law or no; and therefore I humbly beseech your Lordship to be so just and kind, as to tell me whether it be Law or not Law, and I submit myself to your Lordship's Direction.

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, We are bound to tell you when any thing of that Nature appears before us, and to let you have all the Benefit of the Law that possibly you can have; for we are obliged to be indifferent between the King and you.

Freind. My Lord, I don't question it. I desire also I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, by all means.

(And he had them.)

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez: You good Men of the City of London, summoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoner that is at the Bar, who have been called, and made Default, answer to your Names, and save your Issues.

[Then the Defaulters were call'd over.]

Cl. of Ar. You the Prisoner at the Bar, these Men that you shall hear call'd, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they be sworn.

Cryer. Call Thomas Clark.

Freind. Pray, Sir, how many may I challenge?

L. C. J. Look you, Sir John, you may challenge, that is, except against 35, without shewing any Cause: If you don't like them to be of the Jury, you may refuse them; and as many others as you have Cause to except against.

Freind. My Lord, I humbly beseech you, that because perhaps I may mistake in numbering, that I may have timely Notice before the 35 be excepted against, or else it may occasion me a great deal of Prejudice.

L. C. J. Sir, the Clerk shall take care of that, he shall inform you how many you challenge, and you shall receive no Prejudice of that Kind, or by any Slip in Point of Form.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, call Thomas Clark.

(Who appeared.)

Freind. Pray, Sir, must I not see the Gentleman?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, by all Means.

(He was shewn to him.)

Freind. You may swear Mr. Clark; I do not except against him. I desire but honest Gentlemen, and I shall come off, I warrant you: I am as innocent as the Child unborn.

L. C. J. Swear Mr. Clark.

Cl. of Ar. Hold him the Book; (which was done) look upon the Prisoner: You shall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King and Prisoner at the Bar, whom you shall have in Charge, according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Cl. of Ar. Nathan Green.—Freind. I except against him.

Freind. I accept of him for a Jurymen, I have nothing to object against him.

(He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Francis Byer.

Freind. Pray let me see him (He was shewn to him). I do except against him, I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Benjamin Dry.—Freind. I except against him.

Cl. of Ar. James Demew.

Freind. I accept him, I have nothing to say against him, I would have him to be a Jurymen.

Mr. Demew. My Lord, I am not a Freeholder.

L. C. J. Sir John, do you challenge him peremptorily, or do you challenge him for Cause?

Freind. My Lord, I do not challenge him at all, I accept of him.

* Mr. Att. Gen. If he have no Freehold, we that * Sir Thomas Trevor, are for the King will except against him; for I would not have any Body that is not a Freeholder serve upon the Jury.

Cl. of Ar. Henry Hunter.

Freind. Pray, my Lord, is this Gentleman that was called before laid aside? He is not one that I challenge.

L. C. J. No, no, he is challeng'd by the King's Counsel, as no Freeholder.

Freind. Then he is only set aside, I suppose; I speak it for this Reason, I would not be mistaken in my Number.

L. C. J. Care shall be taken of all that; he is not to be reckoned as one that you challenged, he is challenged for want of Freehold by the King's Counsel.

Cl. of Ar. What say you to Mr. Hunter?

Freind. I accept of Mr. Hunter, let him be sworn. (Which was done.)

Cl. of Ar. John Cox.

Mr. Cox. My Lord, I have no Freehold in London.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then let him be set aside.

Cl. of Ar. George Bodington.—Freind. I except against him.

Cl. of Ar. John Hedges.—Freind. I except against him.

Cl. of Ar. You challenge him, Sir, do you?—Freind. Yes, yes, I do.

Cl. of Ar. John James.—Freind. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Poole.—Freind. I accept of him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Peter Parker.—Freind. I accept of him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. George Grove.

Freind. I except against him, for I have him not in my Pannel.

L. C. J. How comes that?

Freind. I can't tell, my Lord; I have been kept alone while Saturday last, only that worthy Gentleman (bowing to Mr. Baker, the Prosecutor for the King) was with me to give me Notice of my Trial before.

Cl. of Ar. Nathaniel Wyersdale.—Freind. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Blewitt.—Freind. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. James Bodington.—Freind. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Wolfe.—Freind. Sir, I do assure you I have him not in my Pannel, upon my Word. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Jackson.—Fr. I accept of him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Nathaniel Long.—Fr. I accept of him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Richard Chiswell.—Freind. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. George Child.—Freind. I accept of him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. William Walker.—Freind. I accept of him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Wills.—Freind. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Hibbert.—Freind. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Pettit.—Freind. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. James Robinson.

Fr. Sir, he is not in my Pannel, upon my Word.

Cl. of Ar. He is in the Original Pannel.

Mr. Sheriff Buckingham. My Lord, here is the Original Pannel, and here's his Name here; and there is not a Person in this Pannel, but what was originally put in, except it be about five or six at the End, and this is none of them.

Freind. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Hollis.

(He did not appear.)

L. C. J. Pray, Sir John, who had you that Copy from? Who gave it you?—Freind. Mr. Solicitor.

Mr. Trotman. My Lord, he had none from me, I am sure: I received the Pannel from the Sheriff, but nobody, from Sir John, was ever with me for a Copy.

Freind. My Lord, my Solicitor brought it to me on Saturday Night.

L. C. J. Who is your Solicitor that gave you that Copy?

Freind. His Name is Mr. Burleigh, my Lord.

L. C. J. Where is he? Let's see this Mr. Burleigh.

Freind. My Lord, he is gone to the Crown-Office, it seems, for the Habeas Corpus.

Mr. Just. Rokely. It is your own Solicitor that has put the Abuse on you, if it be so.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Hollis.

(He did not appear.)

L. C. J. Pray, Sir John Freind, how many have you in all?

Fr. In Number, my Lord? Would you have me tell you how many I have in Number?—L. C. J. Aye, in Number in your Copy of the Pannel.

Mr. Sheriff Buckingham. In the Pannel there are above Four-score.

Freind. I have Seventy-one, my Lord.

[Then Thomas Hollis appeared.]

Cl. of Ar.

Cl. of Ar. Do you challenge him, Sir?

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. Pray let the Secondary produce his Pannel that he had from my Brother and me, and I am sure the Court will find they were all named in that Pannel.

Mr. Trotman. My Lord, I have the Pannel, but they never came to me for a Copy, as I expected: I had got one ready; if Sir John Freind, or any Person for him, had sent to me, they might have had it.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. And these People that are not in Sir John Freind's Pannel, are none of the Half-Dozen that were added, when we came to the Knowledge of them that they were Freeholders.

L. C. J. When were they added, Sir?

Mr. Sh. Buck. They were added on Friday in the Afternoon, and it seems he never came for the Pannel to the proper Officer; and those that he objects against were not added, but are in the original Pannel.

L. C. J. Truly, I can't see any body is to blame in this Matter but your own Solicitor.

Mr. Trotman. My Lord, I assure you I had made a Copy, and wonder'd I did not hear of them: I do not know where he got this Copy.

L. C. J. Treby. In Truth, if you would not send to the proper Officer for a Copy, when you might have had it, you must be content with what you have; for nobody is bound to give you a Copy, unless you ask for it.

L. C. J. Well, what say you to Thomas Hollis?

Fr. I challenge him, my Lord, for he is not in my Pannel.

Cl. of Ar. John Sherbrook. — Fr. I accept of him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. James Blackwell.

Fr. He is not in my Pannel, upon my Word, my Lord.

L. C. J. I can't help it, he is in the Sheriff's Pannel that is returned here. — Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Gardner. — Fr. I accept of him.

Mr. Gardner. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in the City.

Mr. Justice Rokeby. Mr. Gardner, have you not lately conveyed away your Freehold? — Mr. Gard. No, indeed, my Lord, I never had any.

Cl. of Ar. William Prince. — Fr. I accept of him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Simons. — Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Robert White. — Fr. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Joseph Morewood.

Fr. I accept him; his Name is John, I suppose, for so it is in my Pannel. — Cl. of Ar. No, it is Joseph.

Mr. Morewood. My Name is Joseph.

Fr. Well, Sir, I accept of you, I don't question but you are an honest Man. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, countez. Thomas Clark.

Cryer. One, &c.

(So of the rest to the last.)

Cl. of Ar. Joseph Morewood.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, stand together, and hear your Evidence.

The Names of the Jury were these:

Thomas Clark,	Peter Parker,	William Walker,
Thomas Emms,	Samuel Jackson,	John Sherbrook,
Henry Hunter,	Nathaniel Long,	William Prince, and
Thomas Poole,	George Child,	Joseph Morewood.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez. If any one can inform my Lords the King's Justices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, or this Inquest now to be taken, of the High-Treason whereof the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted, let them come forth, and they shall be heard; for now the Prisoner stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance; and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth and give their Evidence, or else they forfeit their Recognizance; and all Jurymen of London that have been called, and have appeared, and are not sworn, may depart the Court.

Cl. of Ar. Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand (Which he did). You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Charge: He stands indicted by the Name of Sir John Freind, late of London, Knight (prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis), and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereupon hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and the Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to enquire, Whether he be Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty? If you find him Guilty, you are to enquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands and Tenements he had at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since: If you find him Not Guilty, you are to enquire if he fled for it: If you find that he fled for it, you are to enquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty: If you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more, and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mountague. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: This is an Indictment of High-Treason, that is brought against Sir John Freind, the Prisoner at the Bar, for associating with, and aiding the King's Enemies, with a Design to procure an Invasion from France, and to raise a Rebellion within this Kingdom; and this was to depose the King, and to restore the late King James; and in order to the effecting these his wicked Purposes, the Indictment sets forth, That the first of July last he did meet, and consult, and agree with one Mr. Charnock (a Gentleman since tried, convicted and attainted of High-Treason), how they should procure an Army from France, to come and invade this Kingdom; and should raise a sufficient Number of Men to facilitate the Landing of the French: And the Indictment particularly charges the Prisoner at the Bar with sending Mr. Charnock into France, to the late King James, to acquaint him with the Design, and to desire him to procure a great Number of Forces from the French King, to come here, and land within this Kingdom: And the Indictment does likewise charge him with procuring and receiving a Commission from the late King James to constitute him, the Prisoner at the Bar, a Colonel of Horse; and likewise with laying out, and expending, and paying several Sums of Money in lifting and keeping Soldiers and Men in Pay under him, which were to be in his Regiment; and with laying out several Sums of Money in buying Arms and Horses for this Invasion and Rebellion that was thus designed to be made, and raised within this Kingdom. To this, Gentlemen, he has pleaded Not Guilty: We shall call our Witnesses and prove the Fact, and we do not doubt but you will find him so.

Freind. Prove this if you can; it cannot be.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: The Prisoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind, stands indicted of High-Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death of the King, and likewise in adhering to the King's Enemies.

Gentlemen, the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment to prove this Treason, are these:

That the Prisoner at the Bar did accept a Commission from the late King James, to raise a Regiment of Horse in this Kingdom, in order to join with the French when they invaded it; and there were several Meetings and Consultations between him and several others whom you will hear named by the Witnesses; upon which it was resolved to send a Messenger, one Charnock, into France, to desire the late King James to prevail with the French King to get a Number of Men, in all 10,000, with an Assurance that they would assist him with a Number of Horse when he came: And in Pursuance of this Design, the Prisoner at the Bar did raise Men, and pay some Sums of Money for their Subsistence, and lifted, and had them in Readiness; and provided Horses and Arms. These are the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment; the Evidence that will be produced to you, to prove this Treason, and these Overt-Acts, will be in this Manner.

Gentlemen, you will see by the Evidence, that there has been a Design and Conspiracy on Foot for several Years to assassinate the King's Person, and to have an Invasion from France at that Time, by armed Force here to subdue this Kingdom. The Prisoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind, I think about two Years ago had a Commission sent him from the late King James, to raise a Regiment of Horse: There was several other Commissions sent likewise, but one was sent to the Prisoner, which he accepted of; and in Pursuance of it, he appointed several Officers, and lifted several Men for that Purpose, and expended several Sums of Money for the raising and subsisting of them.

Gentlemen, you will hear that his Lieutenant-Colonel was to be one Blaire, and his Major was to be one Slater; and this Slater's Father was a Clergyman, and he undertook to bring in a Troop of Clergymen that had refused to take the Oaths. One of his Captains was one Evans; one Richardson was another; and there were several other Officers whom you will hear named by the Witnesses, that were appointed, and engag'd to make up the Regiment.

Gentlemen, you will hear further by the Witnesses, that about May or June last, they having raised a considerable Number of Men, there were several Meetings had between the Prisoner at the Bar and several other Persons, in order to send some Person over to get Forces from France, to invade this Kingdom. The first Meeting that you will hear of, was at the Old King's-Head Tavern in Leadenhall-Street, and there were present the Prisoner at the Bar, my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Perkins, Mr. Charnock (who was lately condemned and executed for the Design of murdering the King), Mr. Porter, and one Cook. At that Meeting you will hear what their Debates were, and what their Resolutions: After several Debates, who they should send, they resolved to send Mr. Charnock, to go into France, to desire the late King James to get 10,000 Men of the French Troops to land upon our Coasts, about 8000 Foot, and the rest Horse and Dragoons: And they did empower him in their Names to assure the late King James, that they would, whenever he landed with his French Troops, be ready to assist him with near Two Thousand Horse among them.

Upon this, Gentlemen, Mr. Charnock undertook to go upon this Message: But about a Week after they met again, for he was unwilling to go upon such an Errand, without having a full Resolution and Assurance from these Gentlemen that were thus engaged, that he might satisfy the late King what they would certainly do. So they met again about a Week after, and that was at a Tavern in St. James's-Street, near Sir John Fenwick's Lodgings, one Mrs. Montjoy's; there was the Prisoner at the Bar, my Lord of Aylesbury, and most of the same Company that were at the Meeting before: And Mr. Charnock desired to know, if they did agree to what had been proposed and resolved on before; for he was unwilling, and did not care to go without a full Assurance of the Performance. They did all agree, and desired that he would go with all Speed, and that he should assure King James, they would be ready to meet him, if they had Notice where he would land.

Pray, Gentlemen, observe the Time when these Meetings were. It was in May or June last, soon after the King was gone to Flanders; and they thought this a fit Opportunity, when the King's Forces were drawn out of England into Flanders, for carrying on the Campaign; then was the proper Time, according as they discoursed the Matter, the People being, as they said, generally dissatisfied, and but few Forces in England to oppose them.

Mr. Charnock accordingly went over into France, and about a Month after return'd again, and acquainted them that he had told King James their Resolution, and how they would assist him, and what they desired of him; and, in short, had delivered his Message: But what King James told him, he thank'd them very much for their Kindness and Readiness to assist him; but at that Time the French King could not spare any Forces, nor could it be all that Summer, and so there was nothing to be done; and thereupon it rested till the last Winter.

Then, Gentlemen, you will hear, that the last Winter the Design was renewed again, about January last: For Sir George Barclay came over from the late King, being a Lieutenant in his Guards there, and then they entered into a Conspiracy to assassinate the King; and that was to be done first, to facilitate the Invasion, which was to follow immediately upon the Execution of the Assassination: For they thought they could have no Assurance of Success in their Invasion, as long as the King lived; and I hope every one will take Notice, how precious that Life is to us, when it is so apparent to all the World, that our Enemies cannot hope for any Success to their Enterprizes and Designs to destroy us, but by taking that Life away.

Gentlemen, this very Conspiracy, you will hear, the Prisoner at the Bar was acquainted with, and privy to, even this Assassination; tho' indeed you will hear he did not much approve of it, because he thought it would be a Diservice to the late King's Affairs; but he was at several Meetings with Mr. Porter, and Mr. Charnock, and Sir William Perkins, and several others that were Conspirators in that Design, and was acquainted with it, as you will hear by the Evidence.

Gentlemen, you will hear further, that about January last, the Invasion being intended to be quickly made, the Prisoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind, had frequent Meetings with Blair, that was Lieutenant Colonel, and other Officers, to consider and prepare how to be in a Readiness. About that Time the Prisoner at the Bar, Captain Blair, and one Captain Ridley, met at a Place in Exchange-Alley, and there they discoursed among one another; and there Ridley said, there was a considerable Roman Catholic that was sent to King James, and he would bring the last Orders; and Sir John Freind said he knew of it very well, it was so, and he hoped he should have them brought very quickly.

At another Time, the Prisoner at the Bar, and Blair his Lieutenant Colonel, met at Jonathan's Coffee-House, and the Prisoner took him up in his Coach, and carried him along with him, and there they had a great Discourse of the Affairs of the Regiment. The Prisoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind, told Blair they must be very good Husbands of their Money; For if the Invasion should miscarry, he should not have Money enough to carry on his Trade, but he would take Care about some Officers that had not Money to mount themselves; but a great many were to prepare for themselves at their own Charges, and for those that were to be under them. They had likewise then some Discourse about the Thoulon Fleet coming about, and that he thought it not advisable, till the Thoulon Fleet came round. He said he would not put a Foot in the Stirrup till that were done, and that he would keep out of the Way till all was in a Readiness, and advised Captain Blair to do so too.

Gentlemen, you will find it further proved, that about May last, the Prisoner at the Bar paid 20*l.* to this Captain Blair, who had laid out Monies in the Affairs of the Regiment, and this was to reimburse him what he had so laid out; and it was in this Manner: You have all heard, I suppose, of one Colonel Parker, who being taken upon his coming over from France, was a Prisoner in the Tower, but made his Escape from thence, to which Escape the Prisoner at the Bar was privy. This Escape cost 300*l.* as you will hear, and the Prisoner laid down 100*l.* of it. But this was to be repaid him again: But how was it? There was one Johnson a Priest, a Conspirator likewise in this Design of Assassinating the King, and he undertook and promised, that the late King should pay this 100*l.* And accordingly one Piggott went over into France, and had this 100*l.* paid him by King James, to repay it to Sir John Freind: But he thought fit to keep the Money, and Sir John Freind could not get it of him, and he durst not ask it, because he knew the Consideration was not fit to be made publick. But he told Captain Blair, I cannot pay you the Money out of my own Pocket; but Piggott ought to pay me, who has receiv'd this Money of mine. If you will prevail with Johnson, who got this Money from the late King to be paid to Piggott, to persuade Piggott to pay 20*l.* I will allow it in Part of the Money he is to pay me, and you shall have it. Captain Blair did prevail with Johnson to persuade Piggott to pay this 20*l.* and Captain Blair did receive it, and Sir John Freind did agree to allow it to Piggott out of the 100*l.* due to him.

Gentlemen, at another Time, about Christmas last, there was another 20*l.* paid by Sir John Freind's Order and Direction, by Piggott to Blair, upon the same Account, by the Mediation of Johnson the Priest; and this was paid and allow'd, as being laid out in the Affairs of the Regiment before, he being intrusted as Lieutenant Colonel, to look after the Regiment.

Gentlemen, I have now open'd the Substance of the Evidence; the Particulars you will hear from the Witnesses themselves. If I have open'd it amiss, you will take Care, when the Witnesses are produced, to observe what they say, who will tell you what really was done, and will rectify any Mistake of mine: For I would have no such Mistake do the Prisoner at the Bar any Prejudice.

Mr. Sol. Gen. [Sir John Hawles.] Gentlemen, Mr. Attorney has open'd the Nature and Course of our Evidence so fully, that I shall make no Repetition of any of the Particulars; but call our Witnesses, and prove it in Order as it hath been open'd. And first, we call Captain George Porter. (Who came in.)

Freind. My Lord, before Mr. Porter is sworn, I desire to know whether he is a Roman Catholick, or a Protestant?

L. C. J. Why do you desire that? Is not a Roman Catholick a Witness? Though he be a Roman Catholick, that's no Objection to his being a Witness.

Freind. My Lord, I desire to ask him the Question, whether he be a Roman Catholick or no?

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, it is not a proper Question.

Freind. My Lord, a Man ought to know what Profession they are of, that are Witnesses against him for his Life.

L. C. J. Will you ask him whether he be a Christian or no?

Fr. My Lord, I desire to know whether he be a Papist or a Protestant.

Mr. Att. Gen. If Mr. Porter be willing to tell you, he may; but it is not a proper Question.

L. C. J. Especially before he is sworn; he is not intitled to ask any Questions whatever, till he be sworn.

Freind. My Lord, I beseech you let me have the Question answered.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sure you don't consider, that the Answer to that Question is to accuse himself; you don't consider the Consequences of it.

Freind. Pray, my Lord, let me have my Right.

L. C. J. The Question is, Whether it is your Right or no?

Freind. My Lord, I would not trouble the Court if I could help it, but my Life and All is at Stake, and I must make the best Defence I can.

VOL. IV.

L. C. J. Indeed your Question is improper in itself; but if he have a Mind to tell you, and answer voluntarily, he may.

Freind. I humbly beg your Lordship that he may answer the Question.

L. C. J. I cannot see you have a Right to have this Question answered you.

Freind. Mr. Porter, you are a Gentleman, and I desire you will answer. Whether you be a Roman Catholick or not?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before he does answer, I desire he may be acquainted with the Danger: He was bred a Protestant, no doubt, and then turning

Roman Catholick, he subjects himself to a very severe Penalty.

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, I told you your Question was not proper to be ask'd.

Freind. Pray, my Lord, let him answer the Question, it will be of great Use to me in my Trial; pray let me have my Right.

L. C. J. You shall have all the Right done you that can be; but in the first Place, if a Man be a Roman Catholick, notwithstanding his Religion, he is a good Witness: And besides that, it may be, his answering the Question may subject him to several Penalties; at least he is liable to Prosecution upon several Acts of Parliament that are very penal; and therefore it is by no Means to be ask'd: but he may answer the Question.

Freind. My Lord, I do with Submission desire it, and it is no great Matter for him to say whether he be Papist or Protestant.

L. C. J. If it be no great Matter, then why do you insist upon it?

But perhaps it may be a great Matter in the Consequence of it to him; a Man, therefore, is not obliged to answer any such Questions.

Freind. I beseech your Lordship, let him answer the Question.

L. C. J. You have my Opinion; if you will, you shall have the Opinions of the rest of the Judges: My Opinion is, That the Question ought not to be answer'd.

L. C. J. Treby. Since your Lordship's Pleasure is, That we should deliver our Opinions upon this Point, I must declare, I am of the same

Opinion, That no Man is bound to answer any Questions that will subject him to a Penalty, or to Infamy. If you should ask him, whether he were a Deer-stealer, or whether he were a Vagabond, or any other Thing that will subject him to Punishment, either by Statute or by Common-

Law, whether he be guilty of a Petty Larceny, or the like, the Law does not oblige him to answer any such Questions.

Fr. Well, I hope the Jury will consider it, that he will not answer the Question; and therefore they are to take it for granted that he is so.

L. C. J. Treby. And now to this present Purpose, to ask a Man whether he be a Popish Recusant, is to subject him to Danger: For when you ask him that Question, if he were not bred up in that Religion, then for him to own himself of that Religion now, is to own as great a Crime as that you are charged with. If it were not so, but he was always bred in that Religion, yet there are very great Penalties that he is subject to, as, the Confiscation of two third Parts of his Estate, and several other Things that he may be liable to, if he should disclose that upon his Answer to the Question, which without this Discovery could not be prov'd, perhaps.

We must keep the Law steady and even between the Prisoner and the Witnesses.

Mr. Just. Nevil. I am of the same Opinion, it does subject him to a Penalty; and unless he will voluntarily answer it of himself, I think it cannot be demanded of him: For he may subject himself to a Prosecution by it.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. I think, it is not a Question that can of Right be imposed upon him; he may answer it, if he will; but he is under no Obligation to answer it, because it may tend to accuse himself of a Crime for which he may be prosecuted, and likewise will subject him to other Pe-nalities, which the Law cannot compel him to subject himself to.

(Then Captain Porter was sworn.)

Freind. I hope, Gentlemen of the Jury, you'll consider this.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Porter, do you know Sir John Freind, the Prisoner at the Bar?

Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray then will you give my Lords and the Jury an Account what Meetings you have had with him, where those Meetings were, and when, and what pass'd between you, about inviting the French over hither, or for a Rising here?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, about the latter End of May last, or the Beginning of June, we had two Meetings; one was at the King's-head in Leadenhall-street, and the other at Mrs. Mountjoy's in St. James's-street.

At the first Meeting there were present my Lord of Ailsbury, my Lord of Montgomery, Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Fenwick, Mr.

Cook, Captain Charnock, and myself; after Dinner Mr. Goodman came in:

Now at both those Meetings it was consult'd of, and agreed, to send

Captain Charnock into France to King James, to desire him to borrow of the French King 10000 Men to come over hither, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons. Captain Charnock said, he did not care to go upon a foolish Message, and therefore desired to know what they would have him to acquaint King James with, and assure him of. They all agreed to meet the King whenever they had Notice of his Landing, with a Body of 2000 Horse; of which every one in particular was to bring their Quota where-ever he would appoint.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was the second Meeting?

Capt. Porter. That was at Mrs. Mountjoy's.

Mr. Att. Gen. But I ask you when it was? How long after the first?

Capt. Porter. I believe it was about a Fortnight after, or so.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was that Meeting for?

Capt. Porter. The second Meeting was to confirm the first. Captain

Charnock inform'd me, that he was to go within three or four Days, and therefore desired to have a Meeting before he went.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse was there at that second Meeting?

What Occasion was there for it?

Capt. Port. Capt. Charnock desired the Meeting once more before he went, to see whether we all kept our Resolution.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what do you know of Sir John Freind's agreeing to raise a Regiment of Horse?

Capt. Port. I know nothing of that Matter, but what I have heard several People talk; but I have heard him say, he would be as ready as any Man, whenever the King came; and I have heard from Capt. Charnock, and from Sir William Perkins, that he had a Commission to be a Colonel of Horse.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, upon that second Meeting, who were present?

Capt. Port. I told you, Sir, the Prisoner at the Bar was present at both Meetings.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who else were there?

Capt. Port. My Lord of Ailesbury, Sir William Perkins, Capt. Charnock, and I cannot tell whether my Lord Montgomery and Mr. Goodman were there; Mr. Cook and myself were there; but the Prisoner at the Bar I am sure was there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Capt. Porter, will you remember and recollect yourself, who were at the first Meeting?

Capt. Port. I have named them already, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Name them again then.

Capt. Port. My Lord of Ailesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Fenwick, Capt. Charnock, Mr. Cook, and myself; we dined there, and after Dinner Mr. Goodman came in.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, when did you see Mr. Charnock after this, and what Discourse had you with him about his Journey, and the Success of it?

Capt. Port. I never saw him till 3 or 4 Days after our Riot Business in Drury-lane, upon the Account of which I had been a Prisoner in Newgate.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, and what did he say to you?

Capt. Port. He told me that he had been in France, but that King James told him, the French King could not spare so many Men that Year; and withal, that he had been with Sir John Freind, and the several other Persons, with Messages from the King; but I do not know whether he had been there or no; only as he told me, that he had been, and brought that Answer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray now tell us, what other Meetings you have had about this Matter this Winter?

Capt. Port. I was once with Sir George Barclay and Sir John Freind, at the Nag's-head in St. James's-street; I cannot tell what Discourse they had; they whispered among themselves.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who else was there?

Capt. Port. There was Sir George Barclay, Sir William Perkins, myself, Mr. Ferguson, and one Humes.

L. C. J. Where was that, do you say?

Capt. Port. At the Nag's-head in St. James's-street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Body else there that you can remember?

Capt. Port. Capt. Charnock came in after Dinner, but I cannot say he din'd there.

Mr. Att. Gen. And who else do you remember?

Capt. Port. There came in one Harrison after Dinner; he is a reputed Ramish Priest, and goes by the Name of Johnson.

Mr. Mountague. Pray, Capt. Porter, what was that Meeting for?

Capt. Port. They had several Whisperings among themselves, but what they discoursed of I cannot tell.

Mr. Mountague. Pray, did Sir John Freind say any Thing that you heard at that Meeting?

Capt. Port. Sir George Barclay did say, that some People that were not so violent had written over into France to stop this Business; upon which, said I, I hope you will have no Letter To-night. Upon which Sir John Freind said, is there any thing that is hid behind the Curtain? If there be, I am not fairly dealt withal; I will proceed no further.

Mr. Att. Gen. If Sir John Freind has a mind to ask him any Questions, he may.

L. C. J. Pray, Capt. Porter, let me ask you this Question, Did all that were present at the first Meeting, at the King's-head in Leadenhall-street, agree to send Mr. Charnock into France to the late King?

Capt. Port. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. All of them?

Capt. Port. Yes; we desir'd Captain Charnock to answer to the King for us that we would meet him at the Head of 2000 Horse.

L. C. J. Did Sir John Freind agree to it?

Capt. Port. Yes, I do positively affirm he did.

L. C. J. Then the second Meeting, which, you say, was at Mrs. Mountjoy's, what was said then?

Capt. Port. We did agree all, That Capt. Charnock should go on with the Message that was resolv'd upon at the first Meeting, and we would go on with the Business; and he said he would go away in two or three Days.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will Sir John Freind ask him any Questions?

Fr. I will only ask him, if they have done, whether he has any thing more to say?—Capt. Port. No, Sir.

L. C. J. The King's Counsel have done with him.

Fr. Then, my Lord, I will hear all they can say, and when I have heard the whole Evidence, I shall know how to answer to it.

L. C. J. Before you go, Captain Porter, I would ask you, What Answer Mr. Charnock brought back from France?

Capt. Port. I say, I did not meet with Captain Charnock, 'till after I came out of Newgate for the Riot Business; and then he told me, he had been there, and he had acquainted the several Gentlemen with the Messages he had brought from King James, who thank'd them for their Kindnesses; but the French King could not spare so many Men that Year.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then the next that we call is Brice Blair (Who was sworn). Pray, Sir, do you know the Prisoner at the Bar, Sir John Freind?

Capt. Blair. Yes, my Lord; and I am very sorry to come on such an Account as I do now against him. I am sorry for it with all my Heart.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, Sir, pray will you give an Account what you know of Sir John Freind's having a Commission from the late King to be a Colonel of Horse, and when it was, and how? Pray tell my Lord and the Jury the whole Matter.

Capt. Blair. All that I can say to this Business is written in my Paper, and I refer to my Paper.

Mr. Att. Gen. You must not refer to your Paper, Sir, you must tell all what you know.

L. C. J. He may look upon any Paper to refresh his Memory.

Capt. Blair. I did see the Commission, Sir, and I did read it.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Commission was it, Sir?

Capt. Blair. It was a Commission from King James to Sir John Freind.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you see it, Sir?

Capt. Blair. I saw it in his Lodgings at the Strand, when he lived near the Strand, in Surrey-street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who shew'd it you?

Capt. Blair. He shew'd it me himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it for?

Capt. Blair. It was for raising a Regiment of Horse.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was it that you did see it? How long ago was it?

Capt. Blair. It is well near two Years ago, or thereabouts, as I remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was to have been Colonel of that Regiment?

Capt. Blair. He was nominated to be Colonel of it himself in the Commission.

L. C. J. Who was the Commission directed to?

Capt. Blair. It was directed to him, to Sir John Freind.

L. C. J. Well, and what was done upon it? Who were to be the Officers?

Capt. Blair. He promised me to be his Lieutenant-Colonel; and I had the same from Mr. Harrison, and there were several Letters that I saw, that came from my Lord Melford and Secretary Caroll, who were with King James.

Mr. Att. Gen. What other Officers were there appointed?

Capt. Blair. There was one Richardson was to be one of his Captains, and there was one Mr. Fisher was to be another, and one Hull another; Fisher was to be his eldest Captain, and one Capt. Evans was to be his Captain-Lieutenant, and one Captain Vernatti was to be another.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember who was to be his Major?

Capt. Blair. No, Sir, I think I cannot be positive as to that. I spoke to Capt. Barnesley, that had been a Lieutenant in King James's Service, to be a Lieutenant, and sometimes he accepted, and sometimes he refused it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what did you do as Lieutenant-Colonel upon this Matter?

Capt. Blair. I endeavour'd all I could to get Officers for them, and to raise Troops. I endeavour'd to get what Men I could myself.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray what did you do? What Officers did you procure for him?

Capt. Blair. I told you Vernatti and Fisher, and one Mr. Hall that lives at Deal.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Troops did you get under you? Did you engage any to serve under you?

Capt. Blair. What? I myself, Sir, do you mean?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, I do.

Capt. Blair. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you name any of them?

Capt. Blair. Yes, Sir, if I make use of my Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You may make use of your Paper to refresh your Memory.

Capt. Blair. There is a Paper of Names that I gave in before the Council.

L. C. J. Mr. Baker, have you his Paper there? Let him see it to refresh his Memory.

Mr. Baker. I have none of the Papers, my Lord; they are all sent before the Council.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, can you tell who was to have been your Lieutenant in your Troop?—Capt. Blair. One Mr. Bertham.

Mr. Mountague. You say, Sir, you were constituted Lieutenant-Colonel; pray, who constituted you, and made you so?

Capt. Blair. I had only a Promise of it from Sir John Freind.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did you lay out any Monies for Sir John Freind? or did he ever pay you any Money afterwards?

Capt. Blair. Yes, I have had several small Sums of Money from Sir John Freind.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what was it for?—Capt. Blair. It was to drink with the Men that belonged to the Regiment, and encourage them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did Mr. Piggott pay you any Sums of Money? and by whose Order?—Capt. Blair. Yes, he paid me first 20l. and afterwards he paid me another 20l.

Mr. Att. Gen. By whose Order was that, Sir?

Capt. Blair. It was by the Order of Sir John Freind.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, How do you know that Sir John Freind order'd him to pay it you?

Capt. Blair. Because it was the Money that Piggott had received to repay Sir John Freind what he had advanced for the furthering of Parker's Escape out of the Tower.

Mr. Att. Gen. How do you know that he advanced any Money for procuring Parker's Escape?

Capt. Blair. He told me so himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. How much did Sir John Freind say he advanced for that Purpose?—Capt. Blair. He told me 100l.

Mr. Att. Gen. How did he tell you he was to be paid it again?

Capt. Blair. He told me that King James ordered the Payment of it at France, when Piggott went over, which was immediately afterwards; and I had of that, first 20l. and afterwards 20l. by the Order of Sir John Freind.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, did Sir John Freind tell you what Piggott had received in France?

Capt. Blair. Yes, he said Piggott had received 100l. in France; and he did not pay it him, but if I could get 20l. of him, he would allow it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray about what Time was it that the first 20l. was received?—Capt. Blair. I have set it down in my Paper; there it is.

Mr. Att. Gen. But can't you tell about what Time it was?

Capt. Blair. It was about last May or June, the first 20l. was paid.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was the last 20l. paid?

Capt. Blair. It was after I was sick, about Michaelmas.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, Sir, Who was by when the last 20l. was paid?

Capt. Blair. Mr. Piggott paid me the last 5l. of it, (for I received it at several Payments from Mr. Piggott) but the last 5l. was before Sir John Freind, at Jonathan's Coffee-House.

Mr. Sol. Gen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, do you know any thing of Sir John Freind's Receiving any Letter from King James?

Capt. Bl. Yes; he told me he had a Letter from King James.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long ago was that?

Capt. Bl. Truly, I cannot tell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I don't ask you the precise Day, but was it within a Twelvemonth?—Capt. Bl. Yes, I believe it might be thereabouts.

Fr. My Lord, I desire he may speak out; for I don't hear half he says.

L. C. J. Repeat it to him again.

Capt. Bl. Sir, you told me you had received a Letter from King James.

Freind. My Lord, I shall answer to all this afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, had you at any Time any Discourse with Sir John Freind about one Slater?—Capt. Bl. Yes, I had.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell what that was.

Capt. Bl. He told me he was to bring him in several Officers; and that he had intended to make two Lieutenant-Colonels, whereof Captain Slater was to be one; but when he saw I was not satisfied with that, he said he should command a Troop of non-swearing Parsons, and they should be an independent Troop.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say that Slater was to command that Troop?

Capt. Bl. Yes, and it was to be an independent Troop.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think you say, that he and you met at Jonathan's Coffee-House?—Capt. Bl. Yes, we did so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what Discourse had you there?

Capt. Bl. I called him aside, and desired to speak to him; and it was when Mr. Fisher told me of this Plot, and desired me to speak to him, a little before this horrible Conspiracy broke out. And I told him what I heard from Fisher, and from Harrison the Priest about it; and he told me that he had heard of it, and he was afraid it would ruin King James, and his Affairs.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it that you told him you had heard?

Capt. Bl. This last horrid Thing, the Conspiracy against the King's Life.

Mr. Cowper. Was it before it broke out that he told you he knew of it?

Capt. Bl. Yes, it was shortly before it broke out.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did you meet with him again? And did he carry you in his Coach at any Time?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he did, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse had you then, when you was with him in the Coach?

Capt. Bl. He took me in his Coach to St. Martin's-le-Grand, and, says he, I will do nothing 'till the Thoulon Fleet meet with the Brest Fleet; at that Time; perhaps, we shall be all taken up; but, says he, you may sculk about the Town better than I can; and therefore I'll keep myself private; and we must be as good Husbands of our Money as we can; for Money will be very scarce. What do you think you shall need, says he? Truly, Sir, says I, I can't tell; that must be according as I am mounted. For I found I had a few indigent Officers at that Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what were you to do?

Capt. Bl. We were to sculk up and down; and when he asked me what Money I should need, I told him I could not tell; for there were several indigent Officers, most of which begg'd at that Time; and here is a Letter that I had from Sir John Freind, to confirm my receiving Money from him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is that Sir John Freind's own Hand?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, it is.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then put it in. Give it hither.

(It was delivered in to the Attorney-General.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, what have you heard Sir John Freind say of Sir John Fenwick's being concerned in this Matter?

Capt. Bl. I heard him say, that he believed that he should command the Party that he was engaged in, and that Sir John Fenwick had Four Troops of Horse, that lay near Reading, to be employ'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. For what Purpose?

Capt. Bl. To be in Readiness upon the Descent.

Freind. Gentlemen of the Jury, I can't hear a Word; I hope you hear.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, look upon that Letter; you say you had that Letter from Sir John Freind, pray, who is that H mentioned in it?

Capt. Bl. It means Harrison, alias Johnson, the Priest.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what was that Letter written for?

Capt. Bl. It was about the last 20*l.* that I was to receive from Piggott.

Mr. Att. Gen. Is that Sir John Freind's Hand?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I think so.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you seen Sir John Freind write?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I have seen him write, and I think it is the same Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then we desire it may be read.

Then a Jurymen desired he might be asked, Whether he saw Sir John Freind write that Letter?

L. C. J. What say you, did you see him write that Letter?

Capt. Bl. No, my Lord; it came to my Lodging.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he ever own to you he had writ you such a Letter?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, let it be read; read it all, for it is but short.

Cl. of Ar. reads.

For Captain Blair, These.

S I R,

Tuesday Morning.

YOU may much wonder you have not received an Answer of yours before now: I have been afflicted with the Gout in my Hand and Foot, that I have not been able to put Pen to Paper; (I thank God) I am somewhat better, and do hope to be in London a Thursday next, about the Hour of Twelve, at Jonathan's Coffee-House, if the Weather do not prevent me; if it do, I shall not come before Monday following: I do desire you for to meet me about that Hour; for it is not convenient for to write a Note to Mr. H. for some Reasons I shall give you when I see you. I wish you good Health. I am,

S I R,

Your affectionate Friend and Servant, JOHN FREIND.

Jurymen. Pray, Sir, what Date is it of?

Cl. of Ar. It has no Date but Tuesday Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Sir John Freind meet you on the Thursday, according to this Letter?

Jurymen. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, How this Letter came to him, whether by the Penny Post, or how?

Capt. Bl. I don't know, I believe it was by a Porter: It came first to me when I was in Bed, and my Wife brought it up to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, answer my Question. Did Sir John Freind afterwards meet you at Jonathan's Coffee-House, according to this Letter?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir, he did.

Mr. Att. Gen. And did you there speak about the Business that's contained in that Letter?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir; and accordingly I had the Order.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Order?—Capt. Bl. An Order for the 20*l.*

Mr. Sol. Gen. Captain Blair, do you remember that you dined with Sir John Freind near the Exchange, in January last?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I think I did, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Discourse was there between you then? Who was with you besides you Two?

Capt. Bl. I must refer that to my Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well then, what Discourse was between you and Sir John Freind there?

Capt. Bl. It is down in my Paper.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know one Capt. Ridley?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was he at any Time present when you and the Prisoner at the Bar were together.

Freind. My Lord, I cannot hear a Word he says.

L. C. J. Here is a great Noise indeed, and he, it seems, is not well, and speaks but low; pray, order Silence in the Court.

(Which was done by Proclamation.)

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, he speaks of a Letter that you sent to him that bears Date some Tuesday Morning, that you would be in Town, and meet him at Jonathan's Coffee-House upon Thursday following, at Twelve a-Clock; and that Letter was read, and he says he met you accordingly, and there was Order taken for the Payment of the last 20*l.* This is that he says: Did you hear it?

Freind. No, my Lord, I did not.

L. C. J. That is what he said. Then go on: You say he met you at Jonathan's Coffee-House according to that Letter?

Capt. Bl. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What was done there, when you met?

Capt. Bl. Nothing but the Order.

L. C. J. Who did he give the Order to?

Capt. Bl. He gave the Order to Harrison.

L. C. J. Why, was Harrison there?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he came there before I came away.

L. C. J. But you say he gave the Order to Harrison?

Capt. Bl. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. What was the Order for?

Capt. Bl. It was to pay me that Money.

L. C. J. What Money was that?

Capt. Bl. It was the last 20*l.*

Mr. Att. Gen. Was the 20*l.* paid you afterwards?

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who paid it?

Capt. Bl. Mr. Piggott; he paid me the last 5*l.* of it before Sir John Freind's Face.

L. C. J. Was this the first 20*l.* or the last, do you say?

Capt. Bl. It was the last.

L. C. J. What was this Money paid for?

Capt. Bl. I believe it was to support me to go about the Business of the Regiment.

L. C. J. You believe; that's not enough: But are you sure it was so?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I am sure it was for that.

L. C. J. Had you ever demanded Money of him before?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I had.

L. C. J. For what was that Money that you demanded?

Capt. Bl. It was to drink with the Men that were brought in; to cherish, and keep them together.

L. C. J. To what Purpose were those Men kept together?

Capt. Bl. They were for his Regiment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, had Sir John Freind any Occasion to pay you any Money upon any other Account?

Capt. Bl. No, Sir, not out of that 100*l.*

Mr. Cowper. You do not understand the Question. Had you any Dealings with Sir John Freind, but about this Matter concerning the Regiment?—Capt. Bl. No, never in all my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, Sir, do you remember your meeting with Sir John Freind when one Ridley was there?

Capt. Bl. Yes, it was at the Chop-house.

Mr. Att. Gen. Give an Account what pass'd there.

Capt. Bl. Mr. Ridley said, A Gentleman was lately gone over to France, about Ten Days before; and Mr. Ridley said, he was a very sensible Gentleman, a Roman-Catholick, an ancient Man, about Threescore Years of Age, what he was, I can't tell; He said, he believed he should bring the last Orders.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did Sir John Freind say?

Capt. Bl. Sir John Freind said, He knew of it; but he named no more.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was the Effect of those Orders, as you understood?

Capt. Bl. I cannot tell that, Sir, indeed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you know Mr. Charnock?—Capt. Bl. Yes, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you know of his going to France?

Capt. Bl. I met him upon the Exchange the last Summer, and I told him, I expected not to have seen him here at that Time, I thought he had been abroad; he told me he was come from France; but who sent him I cannot tell, I do not know, upon my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray what has Sir John Freind said to you about Ferguson? Whether was not he to have been an Officer in his Regiment?

Capt. Bl. No; but Sir John Freind said, he would join; and Mr. Ferguson himself has told me so.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did he tell you so?

Capt. Bl. A good while ago.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long ago?

Capt.

Capt. Bl. Two Years ago, and above.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did Sir John Freind tell you any thing about Ferguson, that he would bring in any Men?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he said he would bring in a great many.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will the Prisoner ask him any Questions?

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, will you ask this Witness any Questions?

Freind. Yes, my Lord, I shall by and bye, if they have done with him.

L. C. J. Yes, they have done with him.

(Then he paused, and perused his Papers.)

Freind. First, as to the Commission you charge me with, that I should receive a Commission from King James; I desire to know, whether it was signed, or sealed, and what Date it was?

Capt. Bl. I cannot tell the Date, indeed, Sir John; for I never thought to come here upon such an Account as this: But I think it was in Paper, signed above James Rex, and below, By his Majesty's Command, Melford; and a little Seal upon the Margin.

Freind. This is the hardest Thing in the World upon a Man; here you have charg'd me with Money to subvert and encourage Soldiers.

Capt. Bl. Yes, Sir.

Freind. I would only say this: You were recommended to me for a very honest Man, and you have come to me several Times, and told me, Sir, my Necessities are very great, I am ready to starve, I have a great Charge; for God's Sake, will you be pleased to bestow something upon me, to relieve my Necessities? It's true, I have given you Money several Times, but I never gave it for any other Use but Charity; God knows my Heart. I desire you to consider with yourself, and answer it. There is a God above, where you must give an Account as well as I, and I hope you will consider of it. Pray declare the Truth, Whether you have not writ those Lines to me several Times, that you were ready to starve, and begg'd of me to relieve your Necessities?

Capt. Bl. I have so, Sir, I acknowledge it.

Freind. Pray take me right, and was not that Money I gave you, only upon pure Charity?

Capt. Bl. Yes, you did give me Charity, but I had expended so much Money in your Business, that reduced me to that; God knows my Heart. I have laid out many a Pound upon this Affair.

Freind. It is the hardest Thing in the World; this is a Roman Catholick too.

Capt. Bl. I am sure it cost me many a Pound more than ever I had of you.

Freind. You say you list'd a great many Men, who were the Men? What are their Names? Who were they for?

Capt. Bl. I have given a List of them to the Counsel.

Freind. Who are they? for God knows, I know nothing of them.

L. C. J. You have a List there, let it be produc'd.

Capt. Bl. I gave it to the Counsel; and, Sir John, I brought in several Officers to you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Remember, and name as many as you can.

Capt. Bl. I have named the Officers already.

Mr. Att. Gen. Name them again.

Capt. Bl. Did not I bring Captain Fisher to you? and did not you promise to make him your eldest Captain?

Freind. No, you never did.

L. C. J. These are Questions of your own asking, so you must hear him.

Capt. Bl. I brought Captain Fisher to you, and accordingly we dined at Captain Simons's; and there was Captain Ridley, Mr. Richardson, and Mr. Fisher and you talked together, and you list'd to him, and in my own Hearing you promised he should be eldest Captain, upon Condition that he would bring in a Troop; and this is true, so help me God.

Freind. Pray, where are your Men? and what are your Men that you list'd?

Capt. Bl. I never spoke of List'ing, I only spoke of Encouraging.

Freind. Did not you say you had list'd a great many Men for to be of my Regiment?—Capt. Bl. No, Sir, I did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think you do mistake, Sir John; he did not say List.

Capt. Bl. I had Money from you upon the Account of Encouraging, and Treating, and Drinking with a great many of the Men: And you said it was impossible to keep them together, but that I must have Money to treat them, and drink with them; but you desired me to be as good a Husband as I could.

Freind. I never said so; these are very hard Things upon me.

Capt. Bl. Did not I bring Captain Cole and Captain Neale to you, and his Brother-in-Law Mr. Robinson, and Mr. Gellibrand? and did not we dine together?

Freind. I know nothing of all this, I declare to you.

L. C. J. If you will ask him any more Questions, do.

Capt. Bl. I brought those three Gentlemen, and we dined together.

L. C. J. Where did you dine then?

Capt. Bl. At Hackney, when Sir John lived there, at his own House.

Freind. When was it?

Capt. Bl. It is above a Year ago. Pray, Sir John, don't think to dash me out of Countenance, tho' I am very ill; I speak nothing but the Truth, and therefore I will not be dash'd out of Countenance. You know what I say to be true; you then drank a Glass of Wine to Capt. Cole: And did not you promise him, because he was one of your Mother's Name, that he should have a Place in the Excise next one of the Commissioners? Says I, Sir John, what will you give me? O, says he, you shall have the Regiment, Man. This was before Robinson, his Mother-in-Law, and Mr. Gellibrand.

L. C. J. Who was to have the Place in the Excise?

Capt. Bl. Captain Cole.

Freind. I know not a Word of all this.

Mr. J. Rokey. Captain Blair, be not dash'd, but speak the Truth, and you need fear nothing.

Capt. Bl. This, I say, was before Mr. Robinson and Mr. Gellibrand.

Freind. I don't know Gellibrand, nor none of them.

L. C. J. Was that Cole to be any thing in the Regiment?

Capt. Bl. Yes, he was to have been a Captain, and to bring in a Troop.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sir John, will you ask him any more Questions?

Freind. No, I must depend upon the Jury, for I cannot remember half what he has said.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any Discourse between you and him, about some brisk Men that were to follow him?

L. C. J. But before you ask him, Mr. Sallicin, we must know whether he will ask him any more Questions, for he is now his Witness. Do you ask him any more Questions, Sir John?

Freind. I can ask about no more than what I hear.

L. C. J. But ask him what you will.

Freind. My Lord, I have not heard half what he has said, I hope the Jury will take Care in it.

L. C. J. Some Part of it was twice repeated to you.

Freind. As to that, my Lord, I would ask him a Question or two. Was that my Letter?—Capt. Bl. Yes, it was.

Freind. Did you see me write it?

Capt. Bl. No, it came to my Hands by a Porter, as I believe, when I was in Bed; my Wife brought it up to me.

Freind. What was that Letter for?

Capt. Bl. In order to pay the last 20<sup>l</sup>, and I did see a Return of a Letter that you writ to King James.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who shewed you that Letter to King James?

Capt. Bl. He shewed it me himself.—L. C. J. How long ago is that?

Capt. Bl. A Year and a half ago, as near as I can remember.

L. C. J. Did he say any thing of an Answer he had to it?

Capt. Bl. Yes; but I cannot remember what it was directly.

Juryman. He was pleased to say, he saw a Letter from King James.

L. C. J. No, no, Sir, it was a Letter to King James.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire he may be ask'd, if he knows the Contents of that Letter?

L. C. J. Did you see him write the Letter, or did he shew you the Letter he had writ?

Capt. Bl. I did not see him write the Letter, I see his Hand to the Letter, and he shewed me the Letter, that he said he had written to King James; and there is this particular Passage to confirm it, it was at Mr. Piggott's Mother's House; I dined with him there that Day, and when he shewed me the Letter, I told him I was so well pleased with the Penning it, that I believed Mr. Ferguson had a Hand in it; and he was very angry, that I should think he was not able to write, and did not write the Letter himself.

Juryman. My Lord, since it seems he perused the Letter, I desire he may be asked, whether he can remember the Contents of that Letter, or any of it?

Capt. Bl. Really, my Lord, I cannot tell that particularly: But I am apt to think it was about the Business of the King, and about the Regiment.—L. C. J. Can you tell truly any of the Contents of it?

Capt. Bl. That it was about the Affairs of the Regiment, I am positive. Mr. Cooper. My Lord, before he goes away (that the Jury may not go away with a Mistake), I desire it may be observed, he does not say, he saw Sir John Freind write the Letter.

L. C. J. No, no, but that he shewed it him himself.

Freind. When was that Letter writ that I shewed to you?

Capt. Bl. It was about a Year and a half ago.

Freind. I declare in the Presence of God, I never writ one.

Juryman. He says you shew'd him the Letter, therefore it is very fit we should see it.

L. C. J. Nay, Sir, you must not talk to the Prisoner; if you have any Questions to ask, you must propose them to the Court.

Freind. I declare in the Presence of God, I never writ any such Letter as this he now charges me with.

Capt. Bl. And I do declare in the Presence of God, you shewed me such a Letter.

Freind. Yes, you may; but I am a Protestant, you are a Papist; you may do any thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. You may ask any Questions of him, Sir John, but you must not rail at the Witness.

Freind. But when you charge me with the writing of a Letter to King James, I ought to speak to it. It seems, I am not to ask whether he is a Papist.

Mr. Att. Gen. He says, you shew'd him a Letter, that you said you had written to King James, which he read, and liked the Penning of it so well, that he thought Ferguson had a Hand in it; at which you were offended, that he should think you could not write such a Letter yourself.

Freind. I declare in the Presence of God, I never writ any such Letter.

Mr. Att. Gen. I suppose you'll disprove him by and bye.

Freind. I can have no Witnesses to this Matter.

Mr. Att. Gen. And you can't expect your own Denial should go for Proof. If you will ask him no more Questions, let him go down and ease himself.

Freind. He must not be asked whether he is a Papist; but I hope you will take Notice, Countrymen, that these Witnesses are Papists, and they think they merit Heaven by swearing against Protestants, whom they call Hereticks.

L. C. J. Indeed, Sir John, I don't hear you: Pray speak so loud that the Court may hear what you say.

Freind. I will, my Lord; I say he is a Roman Catholick, and I have Witnesses to swear he is so; and desire I may prove that he is a Roman Catholick, and therefore he is not to be heard against a Protestant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then the next Witness we call is Mr. Bertham.

(Who was sworn.)

Freind. But I have not done with Mr. Porter.

L. C. J. Well, you shall have him by and bye; let the King's Counsel go on in their Method.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Bertham, do you know Captain Blair that was here just now?—Bertham. Yes.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known him?

Bertham. About Eight or Nine Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse have you had with him about any Regiment that was to be raised for the late King James?

Bertham. Captain Blair had told me for two Years last past, that Sir John Freind was to have a Regiment of Horse, that were to be raised, and lie posted about the Town; and Captain Blair was to be Lieutenant-Colonel to the Regiment, and I was to be Lieutenant to Captain Blair in his Troop.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we only call him to confirm what Captain Blair has said, that he was to be his Lieutenant, and that this was talked of two Years before. Did he tell you Sir John Freind was to have a Regiment of Horse?

Bert. Yes, Sir, and he obliged me to bring in as many Men and Horses as I could into this Regiment, and he told me Capt. Fisher, Capt. Vernatti, and Capt. Cole were to be Captains in the Regiment.

L. C. J. And what were you to be? — Bert. A Lieutenant.

L. C. J. To whom?

Bert. To Captain Blair; he has told me so several Times, and talked to me about the Affairs of the Regiment a great deal, that I cannot now remember, relating to that Purpose.

L. C. J. This is no Evidence against Sir John Freind: he is only called to confirm the Testimony of Captain Blair; that Blair spoke of it long before he gave his Evidence, and so it is not a new thing now invented by him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir John Freind did ask what Men he had engaged, and among others, he named this Mr. Bertram to be his own Lieutenant, and he now tells you Blair promised him so to be two Years ago, and then told him Sir John Freind was to have a Regiment.

Freind. Do you know me, Sir?

Bert. No, Sir, I never was in your Company in my Life; I only tell you what I have heard from Captain Blair; I do not know that ever I saw your Face.

L. C. J. His Evidence, Sir John Freind, hurts you not, as to any particular Thing that he knows against you; he is only brought to confirm what Captain Blair said, that he was to be his Lieutenant in his Troop.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we leave it here.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, the King's Counsel have done, and now you may speak, and say what you have a Mind to say in your own Defence.

Mr. J. Rokeby. And call what Witnesses you have a Mind to call.

Freind. My Lord, in the first Place, I desire to know whether Mr. Courtney is come.

L. C. J. Your Solicitor can best tell that.

Freind. I perceive he is not come.

L. C. J. Well, go on: I suppose he will not be long before he comes, we will stay for him.

Freind. My Lord, I must wait for my Witnesses: But in the mean Time, as to Mr. Porter's Evidence, I own I was at the Meeting at the King's Head in Leadenhall-Street; I declare I was at that Place, and there were some Gentlemen there, but how many or whom I cannot say; but I declare there was not one Word spoken there of any railing of Men, nor any thing of that Nature, that he speaks of, but only we were drinking a Glass of Wine, and eating a Dish of Meat together, and Sir John Fenwick at that Time coming in, said to us, I desire you to come to our End of the Town, and take a Dish of Meat with us. And there was nothing spoke of any Thing relating to the Government. Gentlemen, these are Papists, and I am a Protestant, they don't care what they say, for they think they merit Heaven by destroying Protestants; and they are not to be believed: and that is the Reason that I was not to ask them the Question, for by Law they are not Witnesses, and for that I appeal to your Lordship.

L. C. J. H. Why are they not Witnesses?

Freind. Nay, I appeal to your Lordship.

L. C. J. H. Truly I think they are Witnesses, I know nothing to the contrary.

Freind. My Lord, Papists are not good Witnesses against Protestants for this Reason that I shall tell you: I am advised, my Lord, that a Papist is not a good Witness to prove a Protestant a Traytor within the Stat. of 25 of Ed. 3.

L. C. J. H. Who says so?

Freind. My Lord, I desire to know whether there is such a Statute?

L. C. J. H. Yes, no doubt of it, there is such a Statute as that of the 25 of Ed. 3. about Treasons.

Freind. Pray, my Lord, does not that make it so?

L. C. J. H. No indeed, I know no such Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That cannot be, my Lord, that any such Thing should be, for all were Papists then, there was no such Thing as a Protestant in the Time of Ed. 3.

Freind. My Lord, there is the Statute of the Third of James the First, Cap. 4th. and other Statutes made in the Time of King Charles the Second, particularly in the 30th Year of his Reign Cap. 2d. whereby it is plain they are not to be believed against Protestants, because they believe them Guilty of damnable Heresy; and by those Statutes they are reputed infamous.

L. C. J. Where is your Statute?

Freind. My Lord, I have no Statute-Book, I desire it may be inquired into, this Advice was given me by my Lawyer; I am no Lawyer myself: there is the Statute of 3 James the First, Cap. 4. and the next is 30 Car. 2. Cap. 2.

L. C. J. Well, the Statute-Book shall be looked into.

Freind. My Lord, the Person is not come, who is to give Evidence against Captain Blair; the principal Witness, he is a Prisoner at the Gate-house, and your Lordship was pleased to say you would have Patience till he came.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, we will stay a while.

Freind. I pray, my Lord, do, for it will be very material for me.

L. C. J. Treby. Have you any thing to fill up the Time with in the mean Time? (Then William Courtney appeared.)

L. C. J. Is your Solicitor returned with this Habeas Corpus?

Freind. I believe he is in or about the Court, but I cannot get him to me, the Crowd is so great. (After much ado Courtney came in.)

L. C. J. Is this the Witness you would have?

Freind. Yes, my Lord, it is.

L. C. J. Then what do you say to him?

Freind. My Lord, must I ask him the Questions?

L. C. J. Yes, you must propose your Questions to the Court, and they will ask them of the Witnesses. If this be the Person you speak of, you had best examine him.

Freind. Mr. Courtney, I desire you would speak what you know of Captain Blair.

Courtney. Gentlemen, I have been a Prisoner in the Gate-house about a Month, and while I was there Captain Blair at the same Time came in as a Prisoner, as mentioned in the Proclamation; being my old Acquaintance, (I was in Bed, being in upon some other Accounts) and when they told me

Captain Blair was brought in, I desired him to come into my Chamber. I told him I was sorry to see him there; I told him I hoped he was none of those concerned in this Plot; he said he was in the Proclamation, but that he was innocent, and knew nothing of the Plot, nor of the Assassination, nor any thing like it; there were several other Persons in that Place at the same Time, and he said he was as innocent as the Child unborn.

Freind. Did he mention any thing of me then?

Courtney. At that Time he said nothing of you.

Freind. Pray, Sir, do you believe he is a Roman Catholic?

Courtney. I do not know his Religion indeed.

Freind. But don't you know him to be a Roman Catholic?

Courtney. He bore the Character of one, but I never saw him at any Church.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Pray, Sir, how long have you known Captain Blair?

Courtney. By sight, I have known him 6 or 7 Years.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Pray, upon what Account did you call him Captain?

Courtney. It was a common Name among all the Company: he was called so.

L. C. J. What, all the Time that you knew him?

Courtney. Yes, all the Time that I knew him, I knew no other Name that he had.

Freind. But did you not hear that he was reputed to be a Roman Catholic?

Courtney. I have heard that Character of him among those that I have known, but I have very little Knowledge of his Religion.

L. C. J. Is this what you can say?

Courtney. There are several others that were Witnesses of this, as well as I; I never saw you, Sir John Freind, before in my Life, to my Knowledge, nor ever spoke to you.

Freind. Sir, a Note was sent to me, that you could do me some Service, and that was the Reason I sent for you. I desire Mr. Carpenter, Mr. King, and Mr. Payne may be called.

L. C. J. Have you done with this Man then?

Freind. Do you know Captain Porter, Sir? — Courtney. Yes, I do, Sir.

Freind. Sir, do you know him to be a Roman Catholic?

Courtney. Sir, I have heard that he has such a Character.

L. C. J. What Character has he?

Courtney. That he is a Roman Catholic.

L. C. J. That's only by Hear-say.

Freind. My Lord, I have done with this Man.

L. C. J. If you have done with him, then the Keeper may carry him back again.

Courtney. Sir, I have something else to say.

Freind. My Lord, he says he has something else to say.

L. C. J. Then set him up again: (which was done.) Well, Sir, what is it you have more to say?

Courtney. Two or three Days after that Time, there was a Prisoner then in the Gate-house, who was an Ensign in the Army, was reading the Flying-Post in my Chamber, and in that Flying-Post, there was News that Capt. Blair was making a great Discovery, and that he had accus'd Sir John Freind, for having received a Commission for a Regiment in which he was to be a Lieutenant Colonel, and said a great deal about that Regiment, how he had received Subistence Money for them from Sir John Freind. A little after Captain Blair came into the Room, and ask'd me if I had got the News? I told him yes; and Captain Blair then ask'd what was the Import of it? I told him it was there, that he was making a great Discovery, and particularly, that he was to be Lieutenant Colonel to Sir John Freind, and had received Subistence Money from Sir John Freind for the Men of the Regiment. Captain Blair answer'd, that they might put what they would in the News, but he knew nothing of it, nor did he receive any Money: And this was a great Surprise upon me, and upon those others that heard him, when we were told he was to be the main Evidence against Sir John Freind.

Freind. Well, Sir, do you know any thing else?

Courtney. Captain Blair was bemoaning himself afterwards, that he went against his Conscience in this Thing; and his Wife told me, that he was very much concerned, because he was going to do this against his Conscience, and she was sure it would break his Heart.

Freind. Do you know any Thing more?

Courtney. And he told me in his Chamber upon Friday Night last, about Nine a-Clock I came to see him, he lay upon his Bed very ill, and his Wife was with him; I ask'd him how he did? and he clapt his Hands, and said he was very ill. Pray, said I, what ails you? Sure you have gotten some very great cold. Oh! no, says he, Life is sweet, I don't know what it is I ail, but were it not for Life, I should never do what I do.

L. C. J. Did he tell you, he went against his Conscience?

Courtney. His Wife and he spoke at first, that he went against his Conscience, and he believed his Conscience was in a miserable State; and this I spoke innocently among some of the Prisoners, and I did not know that it was taken Notice of, but it seems some Body has acquainted Sir John Freind, and so I am brought here; I know nothing of being a Witness, I assure you.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. Pray, who were present when this Discourse was between you and Blair? You say there were two other Persons present when this Discourse was between you, and Captain Blair, and his Wife: Who were those two Persons?

Courtney. What Discourse do you speak of, my Lord?

L. C. J. You said there were two Persons in your Chamber.

Courtney. Does your Lordship mean at the Reading of the Flying-Post?

L. C. J. Yes.

Courtney. My Lord, this Gentleman that I was speaking of, was lying down upon the Bed, and Captain Blair came into my Room, just after the News was read, and ask'd me if I had got the News? I told him, yes; he ask'd me what was the Import of it? I told him, they said he was making a great Discovery, and particularly against Sir John Freind.

L. C. J. Well, and who were there then?

Courtney. This Ensign that is now a Prisoner in the Gate-house, who I suppose can say the same Thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, my Lord, let Mr. Blair be called while he is here, and let him know what this Witness says, that the Court and Jury may know what he has to say to it.

L. C. J. Yes, pray let Mr. Blair be brought in again. (Which was done.)

L. C. J. Treby. Now, let Mr. Courtney repeat what he said now before about Captain Blair's Declarations to him.

Courtney. My Lord, I tell your Lordship, there was one Tooley a Prisoner in in the Gate-house, when he heard the Flying-Post cry'd, bought it, or it was order'd to be bought; and it being brought into my Chamber, I desir'd him to read it, and I was walking about the Room: In the mean Time Capt. Blair came in, and ask'd if we had got the News? We said yes; and he ask'd what News there was in it? I reply'd, it is said that you are making a great Discovery, that you were to be Lieutenant Colonel to Sir John Freind, and had received a great deal of Subfistence Money for the Regiment: Says he, They may put what they will in their News, but I know of no Regiment, nor of any Subfistence, nor of any Commission. The Man that read the Book will say the same that I do.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this?

Courtney. This was one Day when the Flying-Post came out, the last Saturday but one I think.

L. C. J. But you talk'd of something he should say to you of going against his Conscience.

Courtney. That was upon Friday Night last, I came to see Capt. Blair, and his Wife was with him, and Captain Blair was very ill, and clapping his Hands, and groaning, and moving himself, and in a very miserable Condition, truly, I thought he was giving up the Ghost. I ask'd him upon what Account he was so sad? and told him I thought he had got some great Cold: He told me No. Well, said I, Captain Blair, I understand you are going To-morrow to Hicks's-Hall, and I pray God direct you. Says he several Times, I pray God direct us all, Life is sweet. Oh! says his Wife, dear Sir, he would never do it, but to save his Life; but it goes against his Conscience: So said I to him, you have had the Character of an honest Gentleman; I hope you will shew yourself such, and I pray God direct you: I wish no Man's Blood may lie at your Door. Says he, I am an unfortunate Man; that is the thing that troubles me; or something to that Purpose; which shew'd all the Remorse of Conscience which could be in the World. I spoke of this innocently among the Prisoners, and it seems, it was communicated to Sir John Freind, and so I am brought here to testify it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what say you to this, Capt. Blair? You hear what he says; do you give an Account what you know of it.

L. C. J. You hear what Discourse he says he had with you; What say you to it?

Capt. Bl. My Lord, this Gentleman crowded himself in upon me; my Wife was with me, and he told me he had a Cup of Brandy, which would be good for me if I had a Cold. God knows my Heart, I desired no Company might come to me. Says he, Capt. Blair, I have heard you have been an honest Gentleman all along; and you are going to Hicks's-Hall To-morrow; (and a great deal of such Discourse as that,) and I pray God Almighty direct you! That's all that I know pass'd. I was very ill, very sick, as I am far from being well now; but as for any thing of Remorse of Conscience, as I hope for Mercy and Salvation, I never express'd any such thing to him.

L. C. J. Did your Wife say, that you were troubled, that you were going to do that which went against Conscience, and you would not do it, but to save your Life?—Capt. Bl. No, I am sure she did not.

L. C. J. Did that Gentleman thrust himself into your Company, or did you desire him for to come to you?

Capt. Bl. No, he thrust himself into the Room.

Courtney. The Sink was hard by, and I heard Captain Blair groan, and so I went in to see him; every Body had Access to him.

Capt. Bl. Pray, where is the Keeper?

Keeper. Here I am, Sir.

Capt. Bl. Did not I beg of you for God's Sake, that no one should come to me but my Wife?

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Keeper of the Gate-house be there, pray swear him.

(The Keeper of the Gate-house was sworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. What do you say as to Captain Blair's desiring that no Body should come to him, but his Wife?

Keeper. No body was to come to him unless they forced themselves upon him.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you know of that Man's coming to him?

Keeper. No, Sir, I know nothing of it.

Capt. Bl. I always desir'd to have the Door lockt with the Key on the Inside, that no Body might come to me, but whom I had a Mind to.

Keeper. He did so, because he was ill, and no Body did come to him that I know of.

Capt. Bl. My Wife being with me came to me to the Bedside, while this Man was with me, and I was lying upon my Back; and said she, For Christ Jesus's Sake, dear Blair, do not speak any thing.

L. C. J. When was this?

Capt. Bl. When this Gentleman was with me, she desired me not to say any thing before him; because, said she, I do not know but he may be a Trepan.

Courtney. Upon the Word of an honest Man, and my Reputation is as dear to me, as yours is to you, she said nothing of that. She told me, you were going to do that which was against your Conscience, and you would not do it but to save your Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what is this Man committed for, you Keeper?

Keeper. He is committed for Suspicion of Treason.

Courtney. I have been taken up five times upon Suspicion, and this last Time I was committed to the Gate-house.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where do you live, Sir?

Courtney. In Old Southampton Buildings.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you lived there?

Courtney. I have lodged there about four Years and an Half; there are several Persons can come and give a Testimony of me.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came you, Sir, to be brought as a Witness here?

Courtney. I was surpriz'd at it: for my part what I did was by way of Pity, seeing him in such a Condition; I pitied your Soul, because you and your Wife both shew'd so much Trouble and Remorse of Conscience: As for Sir John Freind, I never saw him till To-day in all my Life, that I know of.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Countryman are you, Sir?

Courtney. I am an Irishman born.

Mr. Att. Gen. Have you any Estate in Ireland?

Courtney. No, Sir, I have not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, how came you to go to Mr. Blair?

Court. I have known him a long Time; I have been often in his Company at the Coffee-house; I cannot say I am intimately acquainted with Capt. Blair, but only as I have seen him in the Coffee-house a great many Times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But I ask you how you came to go to him; because it seems he desired nobody should come to him but his Wife?

Courtney. He may say what he pleases; for he lay first in one Room, and then in another, and he could never go to the necessary House, but he must go thorow my Room; but if you please to send for Mr. Tooley and Capt. Courtney, they will say and swear that these Things pass'd in their Presence, or to the same Purpose, except what pass'd between him and me in his own Chamber. Ensign Tooley did read the Paper of the Flying-Post; and as for what he said of his knowing nothing of the Plot, it was talk'd of up and down the Prison, and so it came to me; and I invited him into my Chamber as my old Acquaintance; though I was not very familiar with him; and as he declared, he knew nothing of the Matter.

L. C. J. You hear what he says; Capt. Blair, did you tell him you knew nothing of the Plot?

Capt. Bl. Yes, I believe I might at first; as we were talking when I first came in, and I told him the Truth: for I was innocent as to the Assassination, for indeed I was so; and as to the Invasion there was only some general Discourse, and I was not willing to explain myself among such People as they were, when they asked me any Questions about it: I had to do with the King and Counsel.

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, have you any more Witnesses to examine?

Freind. Yes, my Lord, I desire Mr. King may be called.

(Which was done, and he appeared.)

L. C. J. There he is, Sir, what would you ask him?

Fr. I desire to know of him, whether he does not know Capt. Blair and Capt. Porter to be Roman Catholics, and whether he does not know me to be a Protestant.

King. I am of Opinion Mr. Porter is a Papist; he was always taken to be so at Epsom, where I used to go, and where he used to go, and he was never look'd upon as a Protestant.

L. C. J. And what do you take Sir John Freind to be?

King. I take Sir John Freind to be a Protestant; so he is, and so he ever was.

Fr. But when you have been in my Company, and they have been speaking of the Government, what have I said or done?

King. Whenever they started any reflecting Words upon the Government, he was used to say, Forbear, I do not admit of any such Discourse.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known him?

King. He has been my Acquaintance this fifteen Years, and married a Relation of my Wife's Husband. (At which there was very great Laughing.)

King. I mean her former Husband.

L. C. J. He has reconcil'd the Matter very well for this Point; for he tells you he meant her first Husband.

Freind. Ay, my Lord, no doubt of it, he will recover it; it was her former Husband. Mr. King, don't you mean it was her former Husband?

King. Yes, Sir, I have told you it was so; her former Husband's Name was Thomas Case.

L. C. J. Mr. Tanner, you are to look upon two Statutes, the one is 3 Jac. 1. Cap. 4. and the 30th Car. 2. Cap. 2.

King. My Lord, I have heard him say, if I had not taken the Oaths to King James, which Oaths are binding to my Conscience, I could as freely take the Oaths to the present Government, as any Man in England; but I will live peaceably and quietly under the Government: but because I do not take the Oaths, I am double taxed, and I will pay it.

Freind. My Lord, I desire Capt. Kaines may be call'd. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What do you ask him, Sir?

Fr. Capt. Kaines, I desire to know of you, whether Mr. Porter and Mr. Blair are Roman Catholics; and I desire you to speak as to myself, what I am.

Kaines. They are so reputed to be at Epsom; it was always so reported there; and I have been acquainted with Sir John Freind several Years, being concern'd together in the Train'd-bands of the Tower-Hamlets, and I have been in his Company several Times since the King came in, and never heard him give any reflecting Language against the Government in my Life.

L. C. J. Have you done with him, Sir?

Freind. My Lord, I did not hear him; but I suppose he has declar'd, as to Capt. Porter and Capt. Blair, that they are Catholics.

L. C. J. He says, Porter and Blair are reputed Papists; and he has known you a long time, and been concern'd with you in the Train'd-bands, and never heard you reflect upon the Government since the King came in.

Fr. My Lord, I desire to know, whether he believes me to be a Protestant?

Kaines. I did always take Sir John Freind to be a Protestant.

Fr. Then, next, I desire Mr. Carpenter may be call'd. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What do you ask him, Sir?

Fr. I desire, Mr. Carpenter, that you will acquaint the Court, whether you know Capt. Porter to be a Roman Catholic, and what you know of me?

Carpenter. I have been at Epsom several Summers, and usually am there in Summer-time, and he was so reputed there: But as to Sir John Freind, I have known him above these twenty Years; I keep a Brew-house, as he does, and we have been concerned together, and have had several Occasions, upon the Account of Trade, to meet him upon Particulars of Appraisement, when any Partners came in, and I never knew him but very orderly and civil; I never heard him reflect any thing upon the Government, but was always peaceable and quiet: He was always look'd upon as a Protestant, and went to Church. That's all that I can say.

Freind. My Lord, as to the Statute-Book, will your Lordship please that the Statute-Book be sent for?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, we do not forget it. Have you any more Witnesses? Call all your Witnesses, and we will consider of that afterwards.

Fr. I desire Mr. Hawkins may be called. (Who appeared.)

L. C. J. What say you to this Gentleman?

Fr. I desire you, Mr. Hawkins, to give an Account what I am; whether you know me to be a Roman Catholic or a Protestant?

Hawkins. I have known Sir John Freind these twenty odd Years, and have had Dealings with him many times before the Change of Government, and since, I never heard him reflect upon the Government; nor never heard him to speak slightly of it: And as to his being of the Protestant Religion, I do know as much as any Man, as much as another: I always believed him to be a Protestant of the Church of England, as good as any Man alive; he always went to Church.

L. C. J. What, since the Revolution?

Hawkins. I have not been so conversant with him since that, because

I was

I went out of Town, and liv'd out of Town; but I believe there are those at Hackney, that can give an Account of that Matter.

Fr. I desire Major Mould may be called?

L. C. J. Then I suppose you have done with Mr. Hawkins?

Fr. Yes. (Then Major Mould stood up.)

L. C. J. Well, what say you, Sir?

Mould. My Lord, I have known Sir John Freind many Years, above these twenty Years, and I always look'd upon him as a sincere Protestant; and I have often been in his Company since the Revolution, and I never heard him speak diminishingly of the Government. I believe him to be as good a Protestant as any in England.

L. C. J. How! as any in England? That's a great Character.

Fr. Then, I desire Dr. Hollingsworth may be called. [But he did not appear.] — Fr. Then, my Lord, I desire Mr. Lupton may be called.

L. C. J. There is Mr. Lupton, what would you have with him?

Fr. I desire he will give an Account what he knows of me, what Religion I am of?

Lupton. My Lord, as to Sir John Freind, I have known him this ten Years; he was pleased to employ me as a Chaplain in his House a considerable Time, both before and after the Revolution; and after the Revolution we always used the Prayers according to the Church of England, and we did always pray for the present King, and the late Queen Mary, at which Sir John was many times present.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long is it since you left him?

Lupton. About four or five Years, as I remember: Then Sir John's Family lessened; he was pleased to say to me, Mr. Lupton, I am going to Tunbridge, and my Family lessens, (this is about five or six Years ago,) and I shall have no Occasion for you at present; but if ever I make use of a Chaplain again, I will make use of you: This he was pleased to say.

L. C. J. How long is it, do you say, that you have left him?

Lupton. About five Years; and as to any Objection of his being a Papist, I have often discoursed with Sir John Freind about the Popish Religion, and he has often spoken with Detestation of the Principles of the Papists.

Freind. What have you heard me speak of the French; and about any thing of an Invasion, how I would venture my Life for the Protestant Religion, or any thing of that?

Lupton. I have often heard you say, as to the present Government, that though you could not comply with it, yet you would live peaceably under it. When we have been talking of these Things, you said you never would be in a Plot; and tho' you could not comply with the present Government, yet you would never concern yourself in any Design against it. For my part, my Lord, I know nothing by him, but that he is an honest and a worthy Gentleman, tho' he be so unfortunate to be under this Accusation.

Fr. I desire Mr. Hoadley may be called. [Who appeared.]

L. C. J. Well, what say you, Sir?

Fr. Pray, Mr. Hoadley, will you give an Account to the Court what you know of my being a Protestant, and of my Life and Conversation?

Hoadley. I believe Sir John Freind is a very settled Protestant in the Church of England; and I have Reason to believe so, because I have frequently discoursed with him, because I have had a Couple of Children that were his Nephews, upon whose Account I have been forced several times to wait upon him; and he has often said he never would be in any Plot, and his Words that he used to me were really very remarkable, Catch me in the Corn, and put me in the Pound.

L. C. J. What were his Words, Sir?

Hoadley. He used to say he would never be in any Plot; for, says he, Catch me in the Corn, and put me in the Pound: and I have heard him express himself with a great deal of Detestation of King-killing, and those Principles of the Papists, the Assassinating of any crowned Head.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, how came you to discourse with Sir John Freind about King-killing and Plots? You are a Schoolmaster it seems; how happen'd this Sort of Discourse between you?

Hoadley. There will be Discourses about these Things sometimes.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, pray, how was the Discourse introduced? What was the Occasion of the Discourse? Sure there was some Occasion extraordinary for him to express himself to you.

Hoadley. I cannot remember the particular Occasion, but such Discourse there was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, how long ago is this time that this Discourse was?

Hoadley. I believe it was five or six times within these two Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. What, have you had the same Discourse five or six times one after another?

Hoadley. I cannot say that; but those used to be his Words.

Mr. Att. Gen. What, in common Discourse?

Hoadley. He said he would never be in any Plot.

Freind. My Lord, I can bring a great many more Witnesses of this kind, and I believe I could have a thousand to prove me a Protestant.

L. C. J. Call whom you will, Sir John, we will hear them.

Fr. My Lord, I am very loth to trouble you.

Mr. Justice Rokeby. No, it will not be reckoned any Trouble, we will hear all your Evidence.

Freind. There is one Mr. Willis and one Mr. Hemings; but I desire it may not be forgotten as to the Acts of Parliament, for they are very material for me, as I shall shew by and bye. (Mr. Willis appeared.)

L. C. J. Well, what say you to this Gentleman?

Fr. Mr. Willis, I desire you'd give an Account to their Lordships, what you think of me, as to my being a Protestant, and how I have behaved myself in every Respect all along?

Willis. My Lord, I have always taken it for granted, that those that come to Church are Protestants; and I did always take Sir John Freind to be a Protestant. The Acquaintance I had with him was since he lived in the Parish of Hackney, and we have had some Converse together; and there have past friendly Visits between us; and I do not remember any Discourse while I was there that tended to the Government one Way or another. I was never very often with him, but his Discourse was always very obliging, discreet, and prudent, whenever I was there.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir, when did you see him at Church?

Willis. Truly, my Lord, I cannot call to mind when it was.

L. C. J. Cannot you name any time?

Willis. He may be at Church sometimes, and I not see him; our Seats are at a Distance from one another, and there are Pillars between, that one can't see every Body; and I cannot call to mind when I did see him last at Church.

L. C. J. Has he been there within this Year or two?

Willis. He has been gone from Hackney a Year and above.

Mr. Mountague. Pray can you say you have seen him at Church within these four Years?

Willis. Truly I cannot call to mind whether I have or no.

Freind. I desire Mr. Hemings may be called. I could call a great many more, but they are much to the same Effect as these are.

L. C. J. Call whom you will, Sir John, if you think fit to call them, we will hear them.

Fr. Being they are not here, I will not trouble you farther; it is all to the same Purpose.

L. C. J. Well, take your own Course; if you'll call them, the Court will be sure to hear them.

Fr. But, my Lord, here is one Thing that I must desire your Lordship's Direction in: If these Gentlemen, my Lord, Capt. Porter and Capt. Blair, who are the two Witnesses, and none but those two against me, if they are Papists, they are not good Witnesses against a Protestant, to prove him a Traitor within the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third. For the Statute says, He that is indicted must be proveably attainted; which cannot be by the Evidence of Papists, and those that refuse to take the Oaths of Obedience, which are required to be taken: And therefore I humbly beseech you, that you will please to tender them the Oaths, for there is a Statute in the 3 Jac. 1. Cap. 4. which appoints the tendering of the Oaths to them.

L. C. J. That is not our Business at this Time.

Fr. Then I must beg your Pardon that they are not substantial Witnesses; for this is the Law, as I am inform'd. I humbly submit to your Lordship, whether this be not the Law. I only speak it to know whether it be convenient for me to rehearse it. I ask'd the Question before they were sworn. I know not whether it be convenient for me to move it now.

L. C. J. Ay, ay, it is very convenient now; now is the proper Time.

Freind. Before ever they were sworn I would have ask'd them the Question, whether they were Papists or not, but it was not allow'd, it was over-ruled: Now, my Lord, there is such a Statute, and I humbly beseech you to tender them the Oaths, and that would be a Demonstration that they were Papists, and then they could be no good Witnesses.

L. C. J. You say well, if we could find such a Statute, that no Papist should be a Witness; but there is no such.

Freind. My Lord, I beg your Pardon, and I hope you will not take it amiss; I offer what I am advis'd to offer.

L. C. J. No, no, by no Means, there will be nothing taken amiss.

Freind. For the Statute of the 25th of Edward the Third, and that of the 30th of King Charles the Second, and that of the 3d of King James the First, Cap. 4. here it is plainly demonstrable, that Papists are not to be believ'd against any Protestant, who is with them esteem'd a damnable Heretick; and then they believe the Pope and their Priests can absolve them from all Oaths, and they are declared to be given to Evasions, and Equivocations, and mental Reservations, and can have Dispensations for all their Villainies; and therefore they are not to be credited: Their Evidence is of no Value, unless they will in this Manner upon their Oaths renounce these Principles: Therefore I humbly beg they may have the Oaths tender'd to them.

L. C. J. That is not our Business now.

Freind. And, my Lord, your Lordship was pleased to promise me that if any Matter of Law did arise, my Counsel should be heard.

L. C. J. First, let us know, whether there be any such Law as this you mention, or to any such Purpose.

Freind. My Lord, I desire my Counsel may come in, and speak to it: For my Life is in Danger, and so is every honest Gentleman's Life every Day. I am as clear as the Child unborn, I have no Witnesses to prove any thing, and therefore I desire my Counsel may be heard.

L. C. J. If the Court did think there were any Colour in this Objection that you make, we would let you have Counsel: We would do it; nay, we are desirous to do it if it could.

Freind. What, my Lord?

L. C. J. To allow you Counsel, if there were any Colour in this Objection in Relation to Papists not being Witnesses. I would be glad to see the Counsel that would own this Objection; but indeed, I see no Colour in it: The Statute shall be produced that you quote, and then we shall see, whether there be any thing like it in that Statute. Pray will you read those Words that you say are in that Statute to that Purpose?

Freind. I am not so expert to know the Words before and after; and therefore I think it is requisite I should have Counsel.

L. C. J. It is supposed you have had Counsel, and I suppose your Counsel that have advised you to make this Objection, have instructed you whereabouts in the Statute it is.

Fr. My Lord, I desire my Counsel may be call'd in and heard to it.

L. C. J. I tell you, that by Law we cannot hear Counsel to any such Matter that has no Colour of Objection in Law in it; tho' for my Part, I wish we could, because I would fain hear what any Counsel can say to make out such an Objection, that Papists are not good Witnesses.

Fr. My Lord, I wish you would hear my Counsel to it.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, you have desir'd that this Statute may be turned to, and you desire to have them read, and they shall be all read from the Beginning to the End.

Fr. I desire the Statutes of the 25th of Edward the Third, the 3d of K. James the First, Chap. 4. and the 30th of K. Charles the Second, may be read.

L. C. J. What Chapter is that of the 30th of K. Charles the Second?

Fr. Really it is not put down in my Paper.

L. C. J. Then look out the Chapter, while he is reading the other. Look ye, Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir John Freind does desire the Statute of the 25th of Edward 3. may be read, which is the Statute about Treasons, and the Statute upon which he is indicted, and it shall be read, therefore pray hearken to it.

Cl. of Ar. (Reads it.) This is made in the 25th Year of K. Edward the Third.

Third. A Declaration which Offences shall be judged Treason. Item, Whereas divers Opinions have been before this Time, in what Cases Treasons shall be laid, and what not.

Fr. My Lord, I beg the Favour I may speak one Word before it go on to be read. — L. C. J. Yes, with all my Heart.

Fr. I speak it, my Lord, because it will be to the very Thing now in Question; I am advised that Consultation to levy War is no Treason, without Rebellion and Insurrection; and inviting Men to come from beyond Sea is no Treason, unless a Foreign Prince be invited to come with his own Subjects; for English, Scotch, and Irish are not Enemies, but Rebels, and to be dealt with otherwise; therefore I leave it to your Lordships, for I am no Lawyer, only I am advised to insist upon these Things.

Then the Statute of the 25th of Edward III. about Treasons was read throughout, only about the middle the Prisoner made some Interruption.

Fr. I believe this Statute is not the Statute I go upon; that which I mainly insist upon, is the Statute of the Third of King James the First, Cap. 4.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. This is the same Statute you are indicted upon, the great Statute for Treasons; and as to your Objection last mentioned, what is Treason and what is not, he is not yet come to that Part.

Fr. Well then, let him go on with it. (It was read to the End.)

L. C. J. Now it has been read, is this the Statute you would have?

Fr. There must needs be a Mistake as to the Chapter, it is set down the 25th of Edward III. but there is no Chapter.

L. C. J. Yes, this must be the Statute, it relates to Treasons, and it has those Words in it, that what you read out of your Papers relates to. Well, that we may go on in Order of Time, what Statute of King James is it that you mention?

Fr. It is the 3d of King James I. Cap. 5. it is upon Account of tendering the Oaths appointed to be taken by that Statute, and (reading out of a Paper) to tell the Court that they ought to have the Oaths tendered them.

L. C. J. That is the Business of another Time; read the Statute.

Cl. of Ar. An Act for the Discovering and Repressing Popish Recusants. What Part is it? — Fr. Truly, my Lord, I can't tell.

L. C. J. It is a long Statute, but if he'll have it read, it must be read all.

Fr. My Lord, I would not give the Court any Trouble, but it is about having the Oaths tender'd to them.

Cl. of Ar. I believe this is the Paragraph, And for the better Trial how his Majesty's Subjects stand affected in Point of their Loyalty and due Obedience, &c.

(A great Part of the Statute was read, relating to that Matter.)

L. C. J. What else would you have read, Sir John Freind?

Fr. I only gather from thence, that no Roman Catholick is capable of Swearing against a Protestant, because the Pope and the Priests can absolve them from their Oaths.

L. C. J. Well, what have you more to say?

Fr. My Lord, I only speak this as to Roman Catholicks, they do not regard an Oath against a Protestant, because they have their Priests that can absolve them, and therefore how such a Man's Oath can weigh any thing, I cannot apprehend; therefore if I have omitted any thing, I hope your Lordship will supply it, as you are my Counsel; for you are a Counsel for me, as well as the King.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, I would help you in any thing I could.

Fr. My Lord, I thank you; I desire you to help me, for I am as innocent as the Child unborn, whatsoever these Men have sworn: These are hard Things that are laid upon a Gentleman, and no Man is safe at this Rate, they being sworn by two Papists, who will swear any thing against Protestants.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir John Freind, have you any Witnesses to produce, that these two Men have any Displeasure or Malice against you, that they should accuse you falsely?

Fr. My Lord, I am sorry I have not my Witnesses; I have been so kept up, that I had not Time for People to come to me; I had not my Counsel come to me before Saturday.

L. C. J. How happen'd that?

Fr. My Lord, there was a Mistake in that, I think it was Friday, either Friday or Saturday; I had them not till Friday in the Afternoon: I was kept so close that none were permitted to come at me: On Thursday I had an Order, but there was a Mistake in the Order, and I desired to get another Order, but I could not get any Body to get another Order for me, to have my Friends to go and enquire into Things, or else I should have found out enough of Witnesses.

Mr. Att. Gen. I am sure he had an Order for Counsel, at the same Time that Notice was given him of his Trial.

L. C. J. When was that? — Mr. Att. Gen. On Tuesday, my Lord.

L. C. J. What say you to it, Mr. Baker?

Mr. Baker. My Lord, I did attend Sir John Freind on Tuesday last, to give him Notice of his Trial as this Day; and I at the same Time told him if he would name his Counsel to me, I would procure an Order for them to come to him. The next Morning he was pleased to name to me Sir Bartholomew Shower; I took the Liberty to tell him, that he being so concerned at the House of Lords, and at the Committee about Parliamentary Business, some other Persons that had named him of their Counsel, notwithstanding Orders were procured for him to go to them as their Counsel, yet by that Means they were disappointed of him, and great Delay was given to the Prisoners; and therefore I desired him to consider of it, and to send to Sir Bartholomew Shower, and any other Counsel that he had a Mind to, and know their Pleasures, whether they would attend him; and if he would send me Word, I would procure an Order for him. But not hearing from him, I went on Wednesday to him again, and he said he had sent to Mr. Northey, but he would not come to him till he had spoke with Sir Bartholomew Shower, but he would send me Word that Night, yet he did not. But the next Day came Mr. Burleigh to me to the Duke of Shrewsbury's Office, and brought me the Names of the Persons that he would have assign'd him of Counsel, and immediately I procured an Order for it, and away he went with it. This was upon the Thursday; Mr. Welden, and Mr. Cresset, or one of them, were named in the Order, I am not positive which, and Mr. Underhill, and Mr. Burleigh were to be admitted to him. Mr. Burleigh had the Order; if he did not carry it to him, I can't help that.

L. C. J. When was that Order for the Counsel?

Mr. Baker. It was upon Thursday, my Lord.

Fr. My Lord, may I speak?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, what you will.

Fr. My Lord, the Reason why I had not my Witnesses was this: There was a Gentleman, one Colonel Cash, Lieutenant to my Lord Lucas, he undertook to go, and put in his Name, and three more, one John Neale, and one Phillips to have an Order to go about to look after my Witnesses; but they did not put in any one of their Names, but they took up and secured my Kinsman Cash, and put him into the Messenger's Hands, and would not suffer me to have any of his Assistance; therefore I saw what a Design there was upon me.

Mr. Att. Gen. As for Mr. Cash, there was very good Reason for it, he was secured for Suspicion of Treason.

L. C. J. If you had wanted any Witnesses, and had not been so fully prepared as you expected to be, you should have moved before the Trial came on to put it off.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. But my Lord put a Question to you before, Can you shew any Reason why these Persons should have any Malice against you?

Fr. My Lord, I was not so much a Lawyer as to know these Things; but it's a hard thing, that a Man that's innocent must suffer at this Rate: I have been disappointed in every thing; for these Gentlemen have not been permitted to answer, whether they are Roman Catholicks or no.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Nor have your Witnesses prov'd that they are Roman Catholicks, but only that they are reputed so.

L. C. J. Well, I can't tell what Avail that would have been of, if they had been proved so. Have you any more to say, Sir John Freind?

Fr. No, my Lord, I leave it to God, and you, and the Jury to consider of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordships, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the King, against Sir John Freind, the Prisoner at the Bar; and it comes to my Turn to sum up the Evidence that has been given. Sir John Freind, the Prisoner at the Bar, cannot but own, that he hath hitherto had a very fair Trial, and he shall have no Reason to complain, that I do him any Injury in my Part. I am sure both he, and you, and all of us, very well remember, when Persons of as good Quality as he is, or better, had not the same Usage or Liberty of Defence, in such Cases as this Gentleman has had: And tho' all Things are very well now, yet the Time was, within all our Memories, when Innocency was no Safety for a Man's Life, much less for his Liberty; and when those two are taken away, and are invaded, Property signifies nothing. The Time was, when the Protestant Religion, and the Church of England, of which the Prisoner boasts himself to be, (and for a very good Reason, because it is the best of Religions,) I say, the Time was, when that was in Danger; and when Popery (for which he now reflects upon the Witnesses) was like to have over-run both us and it; and if his Majesty, with the Hazard of his Life, and at a great Expence, had not rescued us, there is nobody doubts, but that all that we feared at that Time, would have been made good upon us ere now. And it is a melancholy thing to consider, that there should be a sort of People amongst us, so in Love with what we then dreaded, as to be continually endeavouring to bring it about again. And it is an ungrateful thing, when his Majesty ventured his Life then, and has done it several Times since to defend us, and does all that he can to keep our Enemies at a Distance, there should be a Party of Men, that do what they can to invade their Country, to destroy his Majesty's Subjects, and to fall upon himself, when he is present amongst us. I will not accuse the Prisoner at the Bar particularly, though it is plain he knew of it.

Fr. Know of it? I declare before God, and the World, I know nothing of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. This, if it were among Equals, were certainly a most ungrateful thing, when another Person is fighting in my Defence, that I should design against his Life; or when he does what he can to protect my Estate, I should be invading and spoiling his.

Gentlemen, if the Prisoner at the Bar is not Guilty of what he is accused of, and what you have heard the Witness give Evidence of, then nothing of this doth relate to him: But if what has been given in Evidence against him is true, then the Prisoner at the Bar is one of those Persons, that has done all he can to make this Country, which has been the Place of Retreat for all Protestants to fly to, from Persecution in their own Countries; I say, to make it as unsafe for them, as that from which they came.

Gentlemen, The Evidence against him is, first, Mr. Porter, and he gives it in Evidence, that at the Old King's Head in Leadenhall-street, there was a Meeting of the Prisoner, and Porter, and several others, in order to consider the best Means, how to bring back the late King James; and they concluded at last, that the best Means would be to send somebody into France, to advise the late King James to borrow of the French King 10000 Men, 1000 Horse, 1000 Dragoons, and 8000 Foot, and that he should make what Speed he could to land with them here; and to encourage and invite him to do so, they promised him their Assistance, and they did not doubt but to be ready to meet him with 2000 Horse at his Landing.

Gentlemen, The Person that was pitched upon to go upon this Errand, was Mr. Charnock, a Person lately executed for the Treasons of which he was attainted. Mr. Charnock was diffident whether this was the Effect of sober Consideration, and therefore would not undertake to carry this Message till there had been another Meeting of the same Persons; to see whether they continued in the same Mind. Another Meeting accordingly was appointed, and agreed upon, and that was at Mr. Mountjoy's Tavern at St. James's, and there, he says, there were almost all the Persons that were in Leadenhall-street; and at that Meeting the Question being ask'd, Whether they were of the same Opinion, that Mr. Charnock should go to France to the late King upon that Message, that I told you of before? they did all agree to abide by the old Resolution; that he should go, and make as speedy a Return as he could, and bring back the late King's Answer.

Captain Porter tells you, that Mr. Charnock did go to France, and comes and brings Word back, that the French King could not at that Time spare that Force that was then desir'd; and so it was delay'd at that Time, because the French King was not at Leisure then to employ his Men in this Service; but it was likely to have taken Place, but very lately, if the Providence of God had not prevented it.

Gentlemen, our next Witness is Captain Blair, and he tells you, That about Two Years ago, Sir John Freind, the Prisoner at the Bar, shew'd him a Commission that he had receiv'd from the late King James, to raise a Regiment of Horse, of which he was to be Colonel; that this was signed James Rex at the Top, and countersigned by my Lord Melford, and it was in Paper. And that there were a great many Consultations between Sir John Freind, himself, and others, about the Raising of this Regiment, and providing Officers for it. He tells you he was to have been Lieutenant Colonel, and was to procure as many Officers and Troopers as he could; and he tells you, he did procure several Officers; and he names them; one Fisher was to be eldest Captain, one Vernatti, and one Hall, and one Bertham, and that Bertham was to be Lieutenant to Blair in his own Troop.

Gentlemen, a great deal of the Evidence which Captain Blair has given, is indeed out of Sir John Freind's own Mouth, and that is as strong an Evidence as possibly can be given; and he does for that Purpose tell ye, that he said one Evans was to be a Captain of Horse, and one Colonel Slater was grown so much in Sir John Freind's Favour, that he rivalled Captain Blair, in the Opinion of Sir John Freind; and Sir John Freind for that Reason would have two Lieutenant Colonels, whereof Slater was to be one. Captain Blair says, he took that amiss, that any one besides himself should be in that Post, and resented it to Sir John Freind; and therefore Sir John Freind found out another Office for Slater; and that was to be a Captain of a Troop of Horse, that should consist of Non-wearing Parsons, and which were to be an independent Troop.

Gentlemen, He tells you that he did list several Men, but the particular Persons, though he has named the Officers, he did not so distinctly remember, but they are in the Paper that he delivered to the Counsel, which he has not about him: He tells you, that Sir John Freind told him, that one Richardson was another Captain of Horse, and the like of one Mr. Cole, that he was to be a Captain likewise.

He also acquainted you, Gentlemen, that he did receive from Sir John Freind several Sums of Money, and he acquaints you in particular with the Manner how; he says that Sir John Freind had expended 100*l.* towards the 300*l.* that was paid for the Escape of Colonel Parker out of the Tower; and that Sir John Freind was to be reimbursed by Monies that were to be transmitted from King James at St. Germain's. He tells you that Piggott had received the Money, but did not deal with Sir John Freind so fairly as to pay it to him; but when Captain Blair was pressing on Sir John Freind for some Money, Sir John Freind was contented that he should have 20*l.* provided he got it from Piggott out of this 100*l.* Captain Blair had not Interest enough it seems to get it himself from Piggott, but he applies himself to one Harrison or Johnson, (for it seems he goes by both those Names) a Priest, who had an Interest in Piggott, by which Means he got 20*l.* of Piggott, and this he says was in June or July last.

Then, Gentlemen, he tells you afterwards, he was pressing upon Sir John Freind to have another 20*l.* and Sir John Freind was contented he should have it, provided he had it from Piggott, and he produces ye a Letter that was from that very Person, the Prisoner at the Bar, which is to that Purpose; excusing himself that Captain Blair had not heard from him, but that he would meet him at such a Time, and at such a Coffee-house. The Matter indeed is not directly express'd in Words, but at the Time and Place the Prisoner did meet Blair, and there was Harrison and this Piggott, and there 5*l.* of the last 20*l.* was paid him; and the other 15*l.* was paid him afterwards; and he swears these Two Twenty Pounds were paid to him by Sir John Freind, upon Account of the Charge that Blair had been at in drinking with, and treating those Men who were to be engaged with Sir John Freind in his Regiment.

Gentlemen, he tells you likewise, that Sir John Freind told him he had written a Letter to King James, and he shewed him this Letter, and this was at that Piggott's Mother's House; and when Blair read it, he tells you he thought it was so well penned, that he did apprehend Ferguson must have a Hand in it, and that it was none of Sir John Freind's own; and that upon this Sir John Freind was angry, that he should suspect that Sir John was not the Writer of this Letter; all this shews an Intelligence with King James, and makes out all the rest of the intended Invasion by King James, and a French Force here.

Captain Blair likewise tells you, Gentlemen, that Sir John Fenwick had Four Troops of Horse, as Sir John Freind told him, by way of Encouragement, which were all ready for the Service; and that Ferguson undertook to bring a Number of Men, and was to be one himself in that Party; and all this was to be put in Practice when the Thoulon Fleet came about, and join'd the Brest Fleet. And lastly he tells you, when he went in the Coach with Sir John Freind, Sir John told him they must act very warily, and be very good Husbands, for in truth it had cost him so much, that if the Fleet did not come soon, or the Design should miscarry, he should want Money to carry on his Trade. All this positive Evidence is of the Witness's own Knowledge, from the Prisoner's own Mouth.

Against this Evidence, Gentlemen, he takes Exception; that the Two Witnesses are Roman Catholics; but this is no Exception to their Evidence at all; for it was never yet allowed, or indeed objected, that I know of, before, that Roman Catholics were not good Witnesses. A Roman Catholic may be an honest Man, notwithstanding his Religion: But, I think, that every body knows that Men who have been ill in other Things, though Roman Catholics, may, as to those particular Things, be good Witnesses. Nay, not long ago, but on Wednesday last we produced some Witnesses, who were Roman Catholics, and yet allowed for good Evidence, though engaged in that horrid Conspiracy against the Life of the King; and if any thing would have taken off their Evidence, certainly the Guilt of such a Crime would do it, more than the Pretence of any particular Persuasion of Religion. Nay, I must crave Leave to say farther, that this Argument is so far from making him no Witness, that it makes it the more likely he does speak the Truth, and therefore is a good Witness. For though Roman Catholics may be honest Men, yet they are more likely to engage in such a Design than any other Men. And I think I may very safely add, Sir John Freind would not have found so many that he could engage in such a Business as this, that were of any Religion but the Roman Catholic, and therefore he applied himself to these Persons, as most likely to embark with him on such a Bottom.

Gentlemen, as to what Courtney, that was brought from the Gate-house, says about his Discourse with Captain Blair in the Prison; Captain Blair has upon his Oath declared, that he did not go so far as to say, he did any thing against his Conscience, but only Courtney bid him take care what he swore, and press'd him no farther. He pretends he came casually into Blair's Chamber, but it is plain he intruded into his Room; for it is sworn by the Jaylor, and Blair himself, that he had given Directions none should come into his Room but his Wife, so that does not discountenance the Evidence of Blair at all; and if you do believe what our Witnesses have said, Captain Porter and Captain Blair, then Sir John Freind is guilty of all the Crimes that are charged upon him in this Indictment, and I hope you'll be so just to your Prince, to your Country, and to yourselves, as to find him Guilty accordingly.

Mr. Cowper. If your Lordship please, spare me a Word on the same Side. My Lord, I do not trouble your Lordship out of an Apprehension that there is any thing necessary to be said to the Court in this Matter, or for the Satisfaction of the Jury, but, if possible, that we might convince the Prisoner at the Bar, that he has had no hard Measure, in this Prosecution, meted to him, but that he is proved Guilty of the Crime of which he stands accused, and that really there is no Weight at all in the Defence which he has made.

The first Part of it goes to discredit one of our Evidences, Captain Blair, from some Discourse that he would object to have pass'd between him and the Person here produced, in the Prison of the Gate-house. And the first Part of that Discourse was, upon Blair's first coming into the Prison; and as to that Time, the Objection amounts to no more than this; That Captain Blair would not confess, when he was pump'd by a Fellow-Prisoner, that he was engaged in so horrid a Design. What Weight there is in such an Objection, truly I cannot see, but will leave it to any Man's Judgment to consider, That a Man, when he is freshly taken up on such an Occasion, does not immediately confess his Guilt to every Body that meets him, nay, to Persons that would not have lik'd him for making such a Confession, but perhaps would have destroy'd him in Prison for so doing.

The other Discourse was upon Friday, the next Day, I think, before Captain Blair went to Hicks's-Hall, to his Examination; and then he intrudes himself into Blair's Chamber, when he lay very ill upon the Bed, accosts him with a Cup of Brandy in his Hand, and with good Advice at the same Time, that he should take great Care in what he should say at Hicks's-Hall, and the like: And then Captain Blair, it seems, did express some Reluctancy in the Thing he was going about, as if it were against his Mind and Inclination. If that were true, (though Captain Blair denies it positively upon his Oath) yet it was no more than, I am willing to observe for the Prisoner, Captain Blair did express here, when he first came into Court; and it is no more than what is natural, since the Prisoner had been his Friend and Intimate, and he was going to depose that against him, which was likely to prove fatal to him.

My Lord, As to another Part of his Defence, it consists chiefly in this: The Evidence brought to prove, that the King's Witnesses are reputed Roman Catholics, and that the Prisoner is a reputed Protestant of the Church of England. If that be true too, all that can be rationally and fairly collected from thence is this, that they (the Witnesses I mean) when they engaged in such a black and execrable Design, might be very good Papists; but I am sure it will be agreed, That the Prisoner in so doing was a very bad Protestant.

My Lord, he objects to their Evidence this likewise, That, if they be Papists, they may be absolv'd by the Pope, or their Priests, though they should swear falsely. Possibly that may be so, for aught I know; I confess, I am not very well acquainted with the Principles of that Religion: But this I dare say, that every one, who has heard what has been sworn by them, will think it so great a Disservice to the Popish Cause and Interest, that it will be one of the last Things their Priests will ever absolve them of.

My Lord, there's another Matter the Prisoner has thought fit to insist upon; he has brought two or three Clergymen to depose, that whenever he discoursed with them (it seems at all Times) he was talking about being in a Plot, and very readily told his Resolution not to be in any. It seems it still swam uppermost; his Professions were made very cautiously: For they all say nothing introduc'd them; but of his own meer Motion he was always declaring he was not then in a Plot, nor ever would be. I have heard, that one Way, weak Men and Children often discover their Knowledge of a Secret intrusted to them, is, by a repeated and unnecessary declaring, that they know nothing of the Matter.

My Lord, in the next Place for his Defence, he just offered a Point of Law; but the Court so well satisfied him in that, that I think he waved it. He alledged, that a bare Conspiracy to levy War is not Treason; and the Court did him right in declaring (as God forbid but they should) that it is not Treason: But I desire the Gentlemen of the Jury would consider that the Prisoner at the Bar is not accus'd barely of a Conspiracy to levy War, but you are told to what End that War was to be levied, to join the late King upon his Descent into this Kingdom with a French Power, in order to drive his Majesty out of the Kingdom, and to depose him from the Crown; which is a Killing him in the Eye of the Law: And that is High-Treason, by whatever Means they intended to effect it; whether by War, or a Stab, or any other Manner, it is indifferent.

In the next Place, my Lord, I would not take Notice of another Part of his Defence, which had been better let alone, wherein he admits that he was present at the two Meetings he is accused to have been at by Porter; but he only differs in one Point, that there was nothing talked then but general and indifferent Discourse. The Witnesses have sworn what the Discourse was, and you will weigh the one against the other; his Affirmation of a Thing unlikely in Defence of himself, and what is deposed upon Oath by the King's Witnesses to the contrary.

My Lord, there is one thing more I would take Notice of, and that is the Evidence of Mr. Bertham, which we do not produce as a direct Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, but as a Confirmation of what was sworn by Blair. And it does shew that the Matter sworn by Blair, was not of late devised out of Malice, or otherwise, to destroy the Prisoner; for that Blair acquainted Bertham with, and discoursed him about the principal Matters of Fact, that are now sworn, at least Two Years ago, and besides his Evidence and the Evidence of Blair concur in this Particular, that he was to be Lieutenant in Blair's Troop.

My Lord, such a Concurrence of Evidence and other Circumstances in this Matter, greatly increase the Weight of the Proof against the Prisoner, especially when there is nothing material alledged by him in his Defence, and therefore I shall trouble your Lordship no further.

L. C. J. Look ye, Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir John Freind, the Prisoner at the Bar, is indicted for High-Treason. The Treason that is mentioned in the Indictment is Conspiring, Compassing, and Imagining the Death and Destruction of the King. To prove the Conspiracy and Design of the King's Death, there are two principal Overt-Acts that are mainly insisted upon. The one is the Consulting and Agreeing with divers others to send Mr. Charnock into France to King James, to desire him to persuade the French King to send over Forces here to assist them; who were to furnish other Forces for the raising of a War within this Kingdom; in order to depose the King; and accordingly Mr. Charnock was sent upon that Design. The other Overt-Act is the Prisoner's having a Commission from the late King, and preparing and directing Men to be levied, and to be ready to be in a Regiment, of which Sir John Freind was by that Commission to be Colonel; and this was always to assist in the Restoration of King James, and in order thereunto in the Deposing and Expulsion of King William.

These, Gentlemen, I tell you, are the two Overt-Acts that are principally insisted upon: And to prove Sir John Freind guilty of these there are two Witnesses that have been produced; the one is Captain Porter, who speaks to the first, the other is Captain Blair, who speaks to the second.

Captain Porter tells you, That, the latter End of May, or the Beginning of June last, he and Sir John Freind, and others that he mentioned, were at the King's-Head Tavern in Leadenhall-street, and there they entered into a Discourse about the Returning of the late King James; and they did consider among themselves which was the most effectual Way, and what were the most probable Means to have him restored: And thereupon it was agreed among them, that they would send a Messenger into France to him, to desire him that he would solicit the French King to furnish him with 10,000 Men, to be sent into England, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons; and they did agree, that when these Forces were sent, consisting of this Number of Men, then they would be ready to meet and join them with 2000 Horse: every one of them was to furnish his Quota: To which Sir John Freind did expressly agree. The Messenger that they agreed to send was with them in Company, and heard the Consult, which was Mr. Charnock, who was lately tried and since executed.

This being at that Time determined, Mr. Charnock intended to go upon the Execution of that Design, and made ready for his Journey: But before he went, he had a Desire to meet with the Company again, and have a further Discourse upon this Matter, to see whether they did persevere in the Resolution they had so taken. There was another Meeting about a Week or a Fortnight after, which was at Mr. Mountjoy's, a Tavern in St. James's-street, where met Sir John Freind, Captain Porter, and divers others of the Company that were before at the King's-Head. And there they entered into a Debate of the Matter again; the Question there was, Whether Mr. Charnock should be sent into France, as it was formerly agreed? And there it was again determined he should go; to which he agreed; and Captain Porter says, that he did go about two or three Days after.

Mr. Porter tells you farther, That, about the time that Mr. Charnock came back, Mr. Porter was in Prison, and he did not see him upon his first Return, but afterwards he met and spoke with him, and asked him what was the Effect of his Negotiation? And Mr. Charnock told him, that he had done as he was directed; that he had been with King James, and he had spoke to the French King; but the Answer returned was this, That the French King had Occasion for his Forces that Year to be otherways employed, and therefore he could not afford such a Number of Men that Year; and Mr. Porter ask'd him whether he had been with the rest of the Gentlemen, and acquainted them therewith? And he said he had. This is the Substance of Mr. Porter's Evidence; whereby you may perceive what the Meetings were for, what Resolutions were there taking, and what was the Issue and Effect of them.

The next Witness is Capt. Blair; and his Evidence goes to the other Part, that is, to Sir John Freind's having a Commission from the late King James, and engaging him and others to be in his Regiment, whereof Sir John was to be Colonel, and the providing of Officers. And for that the Evidence stands thus:

Captain Blair tells ye, that about two or three Years ago, he was with Sir John Freind at his Lodgings in Surrey-street, and there he did produce a Commission that he had from King James to be Colonel of a Regiment of Horse; he was to raise it himself, and was to appoint, and provide what Officers he thought fit. He says, he read the Commission, and it was signed at the Top James Rex, and countersigned at the Bottom Melfort; this he is positive in; And farther, that Sir John Freind did promise that he should be Lieutenant Colonel of this Regiment, and also desired that Captain Blair would get as many Men as he could; and that there were other Officers that were appointed in that Regiment, and particularly one Fisher was brought to Sir John Freind by Captain Blair, to be his first Captain, and one Colonel Slater, who was much in Favour with Sir John Freind, was to have been another Lieutenant Colonel; for, said Sir John Freind, I have a mind to him to be my Lieutenant Colonel, and though you are so too, yet it is no Matter if we have two in this Regiment; at which Blair took very great Offence, and expressed as much to Sir John Freind; whereupon Sir John Freind told him, it should not be so, but said he would make another Provision for Mr. Slater; that he should be a Captain of an independent Troop, that should be composed of Non-swearing Parsons, and that shall satisfy him.

And Sir John Freind did intrust Captain Blair with the providing of Men, and managing of them. And Captain Blair tells you, he was at a great deal of Charge, and laid out diverse Sums to careis them, and keep them together; and wanting Money to proceed in that Affair, he came to Sir John Freind, and made great Complaints, that he wanted Money to carry on the Design, by obliging the Men to keep together, and therefore pressed Sir John Freind to furnish him with some Money; says Sir John, There is 100*l.* due to me, because I laid down 100*l.* to further the Escape of Colonel Parker, and Piggott has received it, and had Directions to pay it me, but I cannot yet get it. You shall have 20*l.* out of that 100*l.* if you can get it. Well, but how is that 20*l.* to be had? It seems there was one Harrison or Johnson a Priest, who had some Interest in this Piggott, and he was to help him to it; and thereupon the 20*l.* was actually paid the latter End of June or the Beginning of July last. This 20*l.* he swears he did receive upon that Account, by the Direction of Sir John Freind, to be so employed as you have been told.

Then Captain Blair had Occasion for more Money, which was some time after Michaelmas last, which was to be employed as the former was; and he was very importunate to obtain it of Sir John Freind: at length he did obtain it, as he tells you, and the Manner how. He produces a Letter under Sir John Freind's own Hand, which seems to be an Answer to a Letter that Capt. Blair had sent to him before, he thinks it to be his own Hand, for he is acquainted with his Hand-writing. But that is not all to prove it his Hand, for the Contents of the Letter are remarkable, which are about the Payment of Money to Blair: The Letter bears Date on a Tuesday Morning, and is directed to Captain Blair; and a Porter brought it, as he thinks, to his House; and thereby it was appointed they should meet on Thursday next at Jonathan's Coffee-house about the Hour of Twelve. And accordingly Captain Blair came to Jonathan's Coffee-house, where he accordingly met with Sir John Freind, and there was Harrison the Priest, and Piggott, and there he does receive a Sum of Money upon the same Account: So that now the Proof of this Letter does not depend barely upon the Knowledge of the Hand, but the Contents of it; and the subsequent Meeting at the Time and Place mentioned in the Letter, is a great Evidence that it was Sir John Freind's Hand-writing, and more Money is proved to be actually paid in the Presence of Sir John Freind, which is the most material Part of the Evidence. And you are told further, that as Sir John Freind and Captain Blair were going together in a Coach, from Jonathan's Coffee-house to St. Martin's-le-grand, there was a Discourse between them; and Sir John Freind said, For his part he would not stir till such time as the Thoulon Fleet was come about, and joined with the Brest Fleet. That he did think he was in Danger of being apprehended when it came about, and therefore Captain Blair was to sculk till then, as he himself told him he would do, but yet he should get what Men he could. And this is a great Argument of his being concerned in the intended Invasion, and that his making Preparation for his Regiment had Relation to the French Invasion which was expected.

It seems two Years ago, there being a great Intimacy between Blair and Sir John Freind, as appears by all the Evidence, Blair was acquainted with this Design. For you are told of the Letter that was writ by him to King James, which he shewed to Captain Blair, and it was concerning his Regiment; he says, that Sir John Freind own'd he writ that Letter himself, that Blair did read the Letter, and finding it so well penn'd, he said, that he thought Ferguson had a Hand in it, at which Sir John Freind was angry; but Blair says, the Letter was concerning the Regiment of which Sir John Freind was Colonel.

Then, Gentlemen, you have Bertham called to prove, that Blair did tell him, that he was to be his Lieutenant Colonel, which was long before there were any Thoughts of any Discovery of this intended Invasion, and before the Discovery of the Plot of Assassination, which Sir John Freind did own he had some Knowledge of, but he disliked it, and said it would ruin King James's Affairs. So that, Gentlemen, I think this is the Sum and Substance of the Evidence that has been given upon this Occasion against Sir John Freind, to induce you to believe him to be guilty of this Crime with which he now stands charged.

But now you are to consider what Sir John Freind says on behalf of himself. In the first place, he makes an Objection against the Credit of all these Witnesses, that they are not to be believed, because, says he, they are known or reputed to be Roman Catholics and Papists, and their Consciences and their Oaths are large, especially when they think they can do an Injury to any Protestant; and therefore they are not to be allowed as Witnesses, at least their Credit is not sufficient to induce a Jury to believe them. At first indeed, he urged there was a Statute and a Law that did disable them from being Witnesses; but I must tell you there is no such Statute, nor indeed is their being Papists any Diminution at all to the Credit of their Testimony: For Papists are legal Witnesses, and though there are severe Laws to punish them for their Non-conformity to the Church of England, and for other their Popish Practices; yet I know of no Law that renders them infamous, or incapable of being Witnesses. For you are to consider Papists are Christians, and swear by the same Evangelists that Protestants do; and as for that Supposition, that they look upon Protestants as Hereticks, and can have a Dispensation for their Oaths that they take against them; you are to consider, as it has been very well observed by the King's Counsel, that they are never like to obtain any Dispensation or Pardon, if they should forswear themselves to defeat the Designs of the Popish Party; and therefore it is a very considerable Objection, and in this Case hath no Weight.

But then he does insist upon it, that Captain Blair is not to be believed; and there are two Objections he makes against him. First, That he did deny that he knew any thing of the Plot. For Blair being upon this Occasion brought Prisoner to the Gate-house, and afterwards, upon a Discourse of some News in the Flying-Post, wherein it was mentioned that Captain Blair had confes'd all, and made a full Discovery, and thereupon he should say, He was innocent of the Plot, and knew nothing of it. You, Gentlemen, are to consider the Weight of this Objection. First, Suppose he had said so, it might be, he was not willing (as he was not oblig'd) to own it, and would not confes it at that time, and to those Persons. It was not his Interest and Prudence to be too open; and therefore it does not follow, but because a Man would not trust others with his Confession, but deny'd his Knowledge of a Plot when there was no Occasion for him to own it, that now he swears it positively, therefore he should swear falsely.

But Secondly, Captain Blair, who was called for the Vindication of himself, and his Testimony, has upon his Oath declared to you, that he did not say he knew not any Thing of the Plot, but did deny any Concern in, or Knowledge of the Assassination. Now this Business for which Sir John Freind is tried, is not for being a Party in the designed Assassination, but of a Design with Force to depose the King, and restore King James.

Then as to the other Matter that was upon Friday Night last; Courtney the Witness says, that he came to Captain Blair's Chamber, and took Notice of his being to be a Witness at Hicks's-Hall the next Day, and said, I pray God direct you; and he says his Wife, then present, said it was against his Conscience, and he seem'd to be in very great Trouble about it, and own'd as much. But now Captain Blair himself, being examined upon his Oath, does deny positively, that either he or she said any such thing as that it was against his Conscience: He says, that Courtney got in to him on Purpose to surprize him, and he was aware of it, and his Design being to keep himself free from all Company, he gave Directions to the Keeper (as the Keeper himself swears) to let no Body come to him but his Wife; and Mr. Courtney intruded himself upon him.

Besides, Gentlemen, you are to consider the Probability of that which Mr. Courtney saith: When a Man is to be a Witness the next Day upon a Bill of Indictment before a Grand Jury, that he should be so indiscreet, as to tell any Body he was going to swear against his Conscience, is strange and very unaccountable. You are therefore to consider of this whole Matter, what Evidence Captain Blair has given, and the Import of it, and the Weight and Credibility of that Evidence which is given against him.

Then Sir John Freind insists upon another Matter: Says he, I am a Protestant, and it is not likely that I that am a Protestant should conspire with Papists against Protestants; and for that he has called eight Witnesses, who tell you they have known him, some twenty Years, some more, others ten, and that they have frequently conversed with him, and never knew that he was ever popishly affected, and they have been frequently in his Company since the Revolution, and they never knew that at any time he reflected upon the Government; nay, I think one said, that once he did reprove a Man for talking undecently of the Government; that he used constantly to go to Church four or five Years ago (though there is no Account of that since.) And particularly there is one Mr. Lupton that was his Chaplain, and he tells you he was in his House; and there he read the Common-Prayer in the Family since the Revolution, and pray'd for the King, and the late Queen, and Sir John Freind was often present at the Prayers, and particularly when he prayed for the present King, and the late Queen; but he says he himself has been gone thence five Years, and has been little conversant with him since.

There is another Witness tells you, he has been in Sir John Freind's Company divers times, whom he believes to be a Protestant of the Church of England, and hath had a Discourse concerning the present Government; and that Sir John Freind said, that tho' he could not take the Oaths, and thereby conform to the Government, yet he was resolv'd to live quietly under it; and would not engage in any Manner of Plot, for he that catch'd him in the Corn should put him in the Pound.

This is the Sum and Substance of the Evidence on both Sides; and you, Gentlemen, are to consider, the Weight of this Part of his Defence too; whether it be a sufficient Answer to the Evidence given against him, and has Weight enough to out-balance what the Witnesses for the King have sworn? For although he was a Protestant, yet it is plain he had no great Liking to the Government; and therefore would not take the Oaths; and though he was present at the Common Prayer, when the King and Queen were pray'd for, yet whether he joined in those Prayers is very uncertain. There are a great many, who are not very well-affected to the present Government, that come to Church, and are present at the publick Prayers; but it may be a very great Doubt, whether they join in their Prayers for the present Government or no; his Conscience that scruples the taking the Oaths, might scruple that too; but whether Sir John Freind's being a Protestant, and his Declaring he would never be in a Plot, be a sufficient Proof, that therefore he never was in one; and that his former Discourse of that Kind should discredit these Witnesses, that have sworn he has been so much concerned in a Plot, you are to consider; and comparing the Weight and Nature of the Evidence on the one Side, and the other, it must be left to your Determination.

Then there is another Thing that he did insist upon, and that is Matter of Law. The Statute of the 25th Ed. III. was read, which is the great Statute about Treasons; and that does contain divers Species of Treason, and declares what shall be Treason. One Treason is the Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King; another is the levying War: Now, says he, here is no War actually levied; and a bare Conspiracy or Design to levy War does not come within this Law against Treason. Now for that, I must tell you, if there be only a Conspiracy to levy War, it is not Treason: but if the Design and Conspiracy be either to kill the King, or to depose him, or imprison him, or put any Force or Restraint upon him, and the Way and Method of effecting of these, is by levying a War, there the Consultation, and the Conspiracy to levy a War for that Purpose, is High Treason, tho' no War be levied: For such Consultation and Conspiracy is an Overt-Act, proving the Compassing the Death of the King, which is the first Treason mentioned in the Statute of the 25th of Ed. III. For the Words of that Statute are; That if any Man shall compass or imagine the Death of the King. Now because a Man designs the Death, Deposition, or Destruction of the King, and to that Design, agrees and consults to levy War, that this should not be High-Treason, if a War be not actually levied, is a very strange Doctrine, and the contrary has always been held to be Law. There may be a War levied without any Design upon the King's Person, or endangering of it; which, if actually levied, is High-Treason; but a bare Designing to levy War, without more, will not be Treason. As for Example*, if Persons do assemble themselves, and act with Force in Opposition to some Law, which they think inconvenient, and hope thereby to get it repealed; this is levying a War and Treason, though Purposing and Designing it is not so: So when they endeavour in great Numbers with Force to make some Reformation of their own Heads, without pursuing the Methods of the Law, that is a levying of War, and Treason, but the Purposing and Designing it is not so.

But if there be, as I told you, a Purpose and Design to destroy the King, and to depose him from his Throne, or to restrain him, or have any Power over him, which is proposed or designed to be effected by War that is to be levied, such a Conspiracy and Consultation to levy War, for the bringing this to pass, is an Overt-Act of High-Treason. So that, Gentlemen, as to that Objection, that he makes in Point of Law, it is of no Force, if there be Evidence sufficient to convince you, that he did conspire to levy War for such an End.

Gentlemen, the Evidence you have heard what it is, you may consider the Weight of it, and the Circumstances that do attend it; and likewise the Answers that have been given by the Prisoner to invalidate that Evidence, and to prove the Improbability of what they have testified against him. You have heard, I say, the Evidence on the one Side, and on the other: If you are not satisfied, that what the Witnesses have sworn is true, that Sir John Freind did engage in such a Design for such a Purpose, then you are to acquit him; but on the other Side, if you believe that Sir John Freind is guilty of what the Witnesses have deposed against him, then you are to find him Guilty.

Juryman. My Lord, we desire we may have that Letter with us that was produced here.

L. C. J. No, no, you cannot have it by Law.

Juryman. May it not be left with the Foreman, my Lord?

L. C. J. No; but you may look upon it in Court before you go away, if you will.

Then the Letter was handed to the Jury, and one of them handed it to the Prisoner.

L. C. J. Why do you do so? You should not give the Prisoner the Letter.

Juryman. It was done to see whether it was his Hand; and we desire, if there be any Body here that knows his Hand-writing, or that saw him write it, may be produced.

L. C. J. Why? Did not he own the Letter to the Witnesses afterwards? It was sworn to you he did; and that he met according to the Appointment in the Letter, and that Money was paid.

Then the Jury withdrew to consider of their Verdict, and an Officer was sworn to keep them according to Law, till agreed; and about a Quarter of an Hour afterwards they returned into Court, and the Prisoner was brought to the Bar.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, Answer to your Names. Thomas Clark—
Mr. Clark. Here.

(And so did all the rest of the Twelve.)

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, are you agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner: How say ye, is he Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not guilty?

Foreman. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements had he at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since?

Foreman. None, to our Knowledge.

L. C. J. Jaylor, look to him, he is found Guilty of High-Treason.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You say that Sir John Freind is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, but that he had no Goods, nor Chattels, Lands, nor Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge.

L. C. J. Discharge the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, the Court discharges you, and thanks you for your Service.

L. C. J. Then we had best to adjourn the Court till To-morrow Morning.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez: All Manner of Persons that have any thing more to do, at this General Sessions of the Peace, Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the City of London; and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London, and County of Middlesex, may depart hence for this Time, and give their Attendance here again To-morrow Morning at Seven of the Clock; and God save the King.

Then the Prisoner was carried back to Newgate, and was brought the next Day to the Bar to offer what he had to say for Stay of Judgment; and afterwards received Sentence of Death as a Traytor.

CLV. The Trial of Sir WILLIAM PARKYNS, Knight, at the Old-Baily, for High-Treason, March 24. 1695. 8 W. III.

Tuesday, March 24. 1695.

This Day the Trial of Sir William Parkyns, Knt. came on at the Sessions-House in the Old-Baily, for High-Treason.

Clerk of the Arraignments.

CRYER, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez. All Manner of Persons that have any thing more to do at this General Sessions of the Peace, Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the City of London; and Gaol-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the City of London and County of Middlesex, and were adjourned over to this Day, draw near, and give your Attendance, for now they will proceed to the Pleas of the Crown for the same City, and County; and God save the King.

Cl. of Arr. Middlesex. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, You good Men of the County of Middlesex, summoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoner that shall be at the Bar, answer to your Names as you shall be called, every Man at the first Call, upon Pain and Peril shall fail thereupon.

Then the Jury that were returned in the Pannel were all called over, and the Apppearances of those who answered to the Call were recorded.

About ten of the Clock the Judges (to wit) the Lord Chief Justice Holt, the Lord Chief Justice Treby, and Mr. Justice Rokeby came into the Court.

Cl. of Arr. Set Sir William Parkyns to the Bar. (Which was done.) Sir William Parkyns, hold up thy Hand.

Parkyns, My Lord, if you please, I humbly beg the Favour of one Word before I am arraigned. My Wife coming to see me in my Distress, sent up a Trunk of Linnen for our Use, and the Sheriffs of London have seized it, and do detain it. It has Linnen in it, and all her necessary Things, and all Things have been torn from me, since I was apprehended, but what is there; I have nothing to subsist upon but what is there; for no Money can I get from any Body, no Body will pay us a Farthing.

Mr. Sheriff Buckingham. My Lord, we were sent for to Mr. Secretary Trumball's Office, and when we came there, there was a Trunk that had been seized, as belonging to Sir William Parkyns; and when we came thither it was opened, and there was in it some Household Linnen, and some Plate; and Mr. Secretary Trumball was pleased, after having searched the Trunk, to seal it up, and deliver it to my Brother and me, to be kept; and this is all we know of it.

* Sir John * L. C. J. Where was this Trunk seized?

Holt. Mr. Sh. Buckingham. We found it in the Secretary's Office, and it was delivered to us there, and we gave a Receipt for it to bring it down again when called for; we did not seize it.

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir William Parkyns, your Trunk was seized, I suppose, in order to search for Papers.

Parkyns. Yes, I believe it was; but I hope it shall be delivered back now they have found nothing in it, and I have nothing else to subsist upon but what is there.

L. C. J. Is there any Plate there? What is there in the Trunk?

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. There is some Diaper and Damask Linnen, a Carpet, and some Pieces of Plate, two or three hundred Ounces of Plate, for ought I know. We had it from the Secretary's Office; we did not seize it.

[Then the Judges consulted among themselves.]

L. C. J. He ought to have his Plate to sell, to support him that he may have Bread.

Parkyns. Will your Lordship please to direct the Sheriff to deliver it back?

L. C. J. Well, some Care or other shall be taken in it.

Parkyns. My Lord, I have nothing to subsist upon, unless I can make something of what is there; I have a Wife and four Children, and nothing to subsist upon.

L. C. J. Let your Wife make Application for it at the Secretary's, it cannot now be done here. Why did you not make Complaint of it before? If you had, Care had been taken in it.

Park. I was told there was a Petition; for, my Lord, I was a close Prisoner, and they told me there was a Petition; but my Wife never mentioned any thing of it to me till afterwards; and they talk'd of an Order of Council that they had for the Sheriff's seizing it; but when I came to enquire into it, there was no Order about it, but only to search and examine it.

L. C. J. Well, some Order shall be taken about it.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. My Lord, we have given a Receipt to the Secretary for it.

L. C. J. But he must have wherewithal to subsist and buy him Bread while he is in Prison.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. My Lord, I see Mr. Burleigh there, who was Sir John Freind's Solicitor; I would humbly move your Lordship that it may be inquired into, how he came by the Pannel of the Jury yesterday? For it seems to reflect upon us, as if we had given the Prisoner a wrong Pannel.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. No, I think there can be no Reflection upon you; but I think it would be very proper to have the Matter examined.

L. C. J. Ay, let Burleigh come in. [Which he did.] Pray, how came you by the Pannel which you gave to Sir John Freind?

Burleigh. My Lord, I had three several Copies sent me by Sir John Freind's Friends, to the Horn Tavern about three or four a-Clock, and I deliver'd one of them to Sir John Freind; but he had one before I delivered mine.

L. C. J. Who sent them to you, or brought them to you?

Burleigh. I had them brought to me by a Porter.

Mr. Baker. You know you might have had it from the proper Officer, for asking.

Burleigh. I had them brought me from Sir John Freind's Friends.

L. C. J. Can you tell who had it from the Sheriff?

Burleigh. My Lord, I know not: I had three Copies sent me in a Quarter of an Hour's Time; whence they came, I know not; the Sheriff knows me, and every Body else.

Mr. Sh. Buck. I do know you, and would have you be fair in your Practice.

Mr. Baker. The Inquiry is made, because a false Copy is put upon him; you might have had a true Copy, if you had applied yourself right.

Burleigh. I sent to Mr. Farringdon for it.

L. C. J. The Sheriff delivered it the Secondary, who is the proper Officer.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Sir John Freind said he had it from him yesterday.

Burleigh. But he had one before; how he came by it, I can't tell; nor whence those came that were brought to me.

Mr. J. Rokeby. If you will not take care to go to the right Place, it is nobody's Fault but your own, if you suffer by it.

Burleigh. I was with my Lady, and delivered a Petition for this Trunk.

L. C. J. But it seems it was under the Conuzance of the Secretary, and Direction was given to go thither: some Care or other must be taken in it, and shall; but go on now to arraign the Prisoner.

Cl. of Arr. Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thou standest indicted in Middlesex by the Name of Sir William Parkyns, late of the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middlesex, Kt. For that, Whereas an open, and notoriously publick, and most sharp, and cruel War, for a long time hath been, and yet is, by Sea and by Land had, carried on, and prosecuted by Lewis the French King, against the most Serene, most illustrious, and most Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. During all which Time, the said Lewis the French King, and his Subjects were, and yet are Enemies of our said Lord the King that now is, and his Subjects, You the said Sir William Parkyns, a Subject of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is of this Kingdom of England, well knowing the Premises, not having the Fear of God in your Heart, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as a false Traytor against the said most Serene, most Clement, and most Excellent Prince, our said Sovereign Lord William the Third, now King of England, &c. your Supreme, True, Natural, Rightful, Lawful, and Undoubted Sovereign Lord; the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said Lord the King that now is, towards him our said Lord the King, should bear, and of Right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguish, intending and contriving, and with all your Strength purposing, designing and endeavouring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our said Lord the King that now is, of Right, duly, happily and very well established, altogether to subvert, change, and alter; as also the same our Sovereign Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to put and bring; and his faithful Subjects, and the Freeman of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and most miserable Slavery, to the aforesaid French King, to subdue and bring; the first Day of July, in the seventh Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, devilishly and traitorously did compass, imagine, contrive, purpose, design and intend our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, then your Supreme, true, natural, rightful, and lawful Sovereign Lord, of and from the Regal State, Title, Honour, Power, Crown, Command, and Government of this Kingdom of England, to depose, cast down, and utterly to deprive; and the same our Sovereign Lord the King, to kill, slay, and murder; and the aforesaid Lewis the French King, by his Armies, Soldiers, Legions, and Subjects, this Kingdom of England to invade, fight with, conquer, and subdue, to move, stir up, procure and aid; and a miserable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King, throughout all this whole Kingdom of England, to make and cause; and that you the said Sir William Parkyns, to the aforesaid Enemies of our said Lord the King that now is, then and there, during the War aforesaid, traitorously were adhering and aiding; and the same most abominable, wicked and devilish Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Contrivances, Intentions, and Purposes of yours aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect and bring to effect; and in Prosecution, Performance, and Execution of the traitorous Adhesion aforesaid, you the said Sir William Parkyns, as such a false Traytor, during the War aforesaid, to wit, the same first Day of June, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elsewhere in the same County, falsely, maliciously, advisedly, secretly, and traitorously, and with Force and Arms, with one Robert Charnock, (late of High-Treason, in contriving and conspiring the Death of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted) and with divers other false Traitors, to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propose, treat, consult, consent, and agree, to procure from the aforesaid Lewis the French King, of his Subjects, Forces, and Soldiers, then and yet Enemies of our said Lord the King that now is, great Numbers of Soldiers and armed Men, this Kingdom of England to invade and fight with, and to levy, procure and prepare great Numbers of armed Men and Troops, and Legions against our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, to rise up and be formed; and with those Enemies at and upon such their Invasion and Entrance into this Kingdom of England, to join and unite; Rebellion and War against him our said Sovereign Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to make, levy, and wage; and the same our Sovereign Lord the King so as aforesaid to depose, and him to kill and murder. And further, with the said false Traitors, the same first Day of July, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, traitorously you did consult, consent, and agree to send the aforesaid Robert Charnock as a Messenger from you the said Sir William Parkyns, and the same other Traitors unknown, as far as, and into the Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond the Seas, to James the Second, late King of England, to propose to him, and desire of him to obtain of the aforesaid French King, the Soldiers and armed Men aforesaid, for the Invasion aforesaid to be made; and Intelligence and Notice of such their traitorous Intentions, and Adhesions, and all the Premises to the said late King James, and the said other Enemies and their Adherents, to give and exhibit; and them to inform of the said Things, Particulars, and Circumstances thereunto relating; as also Intelligence from them of the late intended Invasion, and other Things and Circumstances concerning the Premises to receive, and them to you the said Sir William Parkyns, and the said other Traitors in this Kingdom of England, to signify, report and declare, in Assistance, Animation, and Aid of the said Enemies of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, in the War aforesaid: And to stir up and procure those Enemies the more readily and boldly this Kingdom of England to invade, the Treasons and traitorous Contrivances, Compassings, Imaginations and Purposes of you the said Sir William Parkyns aforesaid to perfect and fulfil, and all the Premises the sooner to execute, manage and perform, and the Invasion aforesaid to render and make the more easy, you the said Sir William Parkyns afterwards, to wit, the 10th Day of February, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elsewhere in the same County, falsely, maliciously, advisedly, secretly, traitorously and with Force and Arms, with the aforesaid Robert Charnock, and very many other false Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propose, treat, consult, consent and agree, him our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, by lying in wait and deceit, to assassinate, kill and murder; and that execrable, abominable and detestable Assassination and Killing the sooner to execute and perpetrate, afterwards, to wit, the same Day and Year, there traitorously you did treat, propose and consult with those Traitors, of the Ways, Methods, and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, which Way, and how our said Sovereign Lord the King, so by lying in wait, the sooner might be killed and slain; and did consent, agree and assent with the same Traitors, that forty Horsemen or thereabouts of those Traitors, and others by them and you the said Sir William Parkyns to be hired, procured and paid, with Guns, Carbines and Pistols with Gun-Powder and Lead-Bullets charged, and with Swords, Rapiers and other Weapons armed, should lie in wait and be in Ambush our said Lord the King in his Coach being, when he should go abroad, to attack; and that a certain and competent Number of those Men so armed, should set upon the Guards of our said Lord the King then and there attending him, and being with him, and should over-power and fight with them, whilst others of the same Men so Armed him our said Lord the King should kill, slay, and murder; and that you the said Sir William Parkyns, then and there, did take upon you to provide five Horses for those Men which should so kill and murder our said Sovereign Lord the King; and also that you the said Sir William Parkyns, your Treasons, and all your traitorous Intentions, Designs and Contrivances aforesaid to execute, perpetrate, fulfil and bring to Effect, afterwards, to wit, the Day and Year last aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, divers Horses, and very many Arms, Guns, Carbines, Rapiers and Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition and Warlike Things, and Military Instruments, falsely, maliciously, secretly, and traitorously did obtain, buy, gather, and procure; and to be bought, obtained, gathered, and procured did cause, and in your Custody had and detained, with that Intention them in and about the detestable, abominable and execrable Assassination, Killing, and Murder of our said Lord the King, and the Invasion aforesaid, as aforesaid, to use, employ and bestow; and also your Treasons and all your traitorous Intentions, Purposes, and Contrivances aforesaid to execute, perpetrate, fulfil and fully bring to Effect, you the said Sir William Parkyns, afterwards, to wit, the Day and Year last aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, advisedly, secretly and traitorously, divers Soldiers and Men Armed, and ready to be Armed, after the said detestable, abominable and execrable Assassination, Killing, and Murder of our said Sovereign Lord the King so as aforesaid should be done, perpetrated and committed, to rise and muster, and War and Rebellion within this Kingdom of England to make and wage, and with the Enemies of our said Lord the King, Foreigners and Strangers, Subjects and Soldiers of the said Lewis the French King, being about to invade this Kingdom of England, at and upon their Invasion and Entrance into this Kingdom then expected to be shortly made, themselves, together with you the said Sir William Parkyns, to join and unite, and into Troops and Legions to form, you did levy, list, and retain, and did procure to be levied, listed, and retained; and those Soldiers and Men for the Treasons, Intentions and Purposes aforesaid, then and there, and afterwards in Readiness you had, against the Duty of your Allegiance, and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, His Crown and Dignity; as also against the Form of the Statute in this Case made and provided.

How say'st thou, Sir William Parkyns, Art thou Guilty of this High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or Not Guilty?

Parkyns. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, How wilt thou be Tried?

Parkyns. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God send thee good Deliverance.

Parkyns. My Lord, If your Lordship pleases to favour me with a Word or two.

L. C. J. Aye, What say you, Sir?

Parkyns. My Lord, I have been kept in hard Prison ever since I was committed, nobody has been suffer'd to come to me till Friday last, then my Counsel came to me; and being charged with many Facts as I see in this Indictment, it will be necessary to have divers Witnesses to clear myself of these Particulars; they are dispers'd up and down, and I have had no Time to look after them, and therefore I beg your Lordship to put off my Trial till another Day.

L. C. J. When had you first Notice of your Trial?—Parkyns. The first Notice of my Trial was on Wednesday last, in the Afternoon.

L. C. J. That is a sufficient Time of Notice; sure you might have provided your Witnesses, and prepar'd for it by this Time.

Parkyns. But, my Lord, being kept so close Prisoner, I had no Opportunity for it; for it was not possible for me to get any Body to come to me till Friday Noon, not so much as my Counsel, and then there was but two Days, Saturday and Monday, (for Sunday is no Day for any Business) and it is impossible for me to be ready in the Manner that I ought to be. It is a perfect Distress and Hardship upon me, to be put so soon upon my Trial without my Witnesses, and what should enable me to make my Defence; therefore I humbly intreat your Lordship to put it off till another Day.

L. C. J. What Witnesses do you want, Sir William?

Parkyns. I have divers Witnesses, my Lord, that can give an Account where I was from time to time; but they are many of them out of Town, and I have sent about every Way, but cannot get them together in so short a Time.

L. C. J. When had he Notice of his Trial?

Mr. Baker. On Wednesday I told him, that he must expect to be try'd this Day, and withal, that if he would name me any Counsel that he would have come to him, he should have an Order next Morning for them.

L. C. J. You were told; it seems, on Wednesday that you might have what Counsel you would.

Mr. Baker. And he had an Order upon Thursday Morning for his Counsel.

Parkyns. I could not have it without Application to the Court at White-Hall, and could have nobody come to me till Thursday, and it was Friday before I could get my Counsel to me.

L. C. J. You might have sent for your Witnesses on Thursday, and employ'd somebody about that Matter then.

Parkyns. The Solicitor that I employ'd was employ'd otherways, and I could not employ any Body else.

L. C. J. Yes; you might have employed any other about that Business.

Parkyns. I had nobody to send, I was kept close, and nobody permitted to come to me.

L. C. J. Your Solicitor you desir'd had Leave to come to you.

Mr. Baker. You know that those you sent for, you had an Order for.

Parkyns. I could not get him till Thursday to me, I had no Messengers to send till then.

Mr. Baker. I gave the Keeper Direction, to let him have Persons come to him to send on any Errand.

L. C. J. The Keeper had Orders, it seems, to let any Messenger come to you; and he would have help'd you to somebody to send of this Errand, to be sure.

Keeper. I always did it, as soon as I know they have Notice of their Trial.

Parkyns. But the Keeper is not always in the Way; and besides, when I had Notice given me of my Trial, it was Execution Day, and he was not at home that Day.

L. C. J. He names no Witnesses, only he says he has divers Witnesses, neither is there any Oath made of any Witnesses: Pray how long is it since you were committed?

Parkyns. I was committed this Day Fortnight.

L. C. J. Your Commitment charged you with High-Treason, and therefore you knew what you stood accus'd of; were you not committed for High-Treason?—Parkyns. Yes, my Lord, I believe I was.

Mr. Sol. Gen. (Sir John Hawles) My Lord, he had a very fair Time to prepare for his Defence, for he saw his Name in the Proclamation a good while before he was taken, and there it is declar'd what he stands charg'd with.

L. C. J. You might have had a Copy of your Commitment, you had a Right to have it, and thereby you might have seen what you were accus'd of.

Keeper. We never do deny it, if it be demanded.

L. C. J. You cannot deny it; you know what Penalty you are under if you do.

Parkyns. Nobody was permitted to come to me.

L. C. J. You might have ask'd for a Copy, or any Body else; for you had Notice of your Trial so long ago as Wednesday last.

Mr. Baker. I gave him Notice of his Trial on Wednesday, and then told him he must prepare for it against this Day; he said he would endeavour to petition for a longer Time; I told him it would be in vain, for he must prepare for his Trial To-day, and could have no longer Time.

L. C. J. Sir William, truly we do not see any Reason to put off the Trial upon these Suggestions.

Parkyns. My Lord, it is very hard; then I humbly beg I may have the Favour, that I may have Counsel allow'd me; I have no Skill in Indictments.

L. C. J. We cannot allow Counsel.

Parkyns. My Lord, if I have no Counsel, I do not understand these Matters, nor what Advantage may be proper for me to take in these Cases.

L. C. J. You are not ignorant, Sir William, that Counsel has been always refused when desired in such Cases.

Parkyns. My Lord, there is a new Act of Parliament that is lately made, which allows Counsel.

L. C. J. But that does not commence yet, Sir William.

Parkyns. My Lord, it wants but one Day.

L. C. J. That is as much as if it were a much longer Time: For we are to proceed according to what the Law is, and not what it will be.

Parkyns. But it is declarative of the Common Law, because it says it was always just and reasonable.

L. C. J. We cannot alter the Law till Law-makers do it.

Parkyns. Will your Lordship be pleased to let it be read?

L. C. J. Ay, if you have a Mind to it, it shall be read.

Parkyns. Yes, if your Lordship pleases.

L. C. J. Read it.

Cl. of Ar. (Reads) An Act for Regulating of Trials in Cases of Treason, and Misprision of Treason.—

[All the first Paragraph of the new Act was read.]

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir William Parkyns, this Law has not taken any Effect as yet; but the Law stands as it did before the making of this Act.

Parkyns. But, my Lord, the Law says it's just and reasonable that it should be so.

L. C. J. We go according to the Law as we find it is.

Parkyns. And, my Lord, what is just and reasonable To-morrow, sure is just and reasonable To-day; and your Lordship may indulge me in this Case, especially when you see how straight Notice I have had, and what a little Time has been allowed me, that I am not able to make any Defence.

L. C. J. We cannot make a Law, we must go according to the Law, that must be our Rule and Direction.

Parkyns. Yes, my Lord, but what is just and reasonable, sure is Law: the Law is grounded upon Reason.

L. C. J. The Parliament has thought fit to make such a Law, which is to commence from the 25th of this Month: It is not a Law till the Time comes that the Parliament hath appointed for its being a Law.

Parkyns. But, my Lord, if my Notice had been a convenient Notice, I had been within the Time limited by the Act of Parliament; and no one can want the Advantage of that Act from henceforward, nor suffer for such Want but myself, which is a particular Hardship upon me.

L. C. J. We cannot alter the Law, we are bound by our Oaths to proceed according to the Law, as it is at present.

Parkyns. Pray, my Lord, let the Trial be put off till another Day then.

L. C. J. You shew no Reason for it; you name no Witnesses that you want, nor have we any Oath as we ought to have in such a Case.

Parkyns. I will do both if your Lordship will oblige me to it.

L. C. J. There ought to be an Oath certainly; but we think you have had fair and convenient Notice: For you have had as much Notice as Sir John Freind had, who was tried Yesterday.

Parkyns. As I am inform'd, he was charged with single Facts about the Town, but I am charged with many particular Things more than he was.

L. C. J. The Act of Parliament says nothing of Notice of Trial; that still continues as it was before; and you have had very convenient Notice: Go on, Mr. Hardesty, to swear the Jury.

Cl. of Ar. Sir William Parkyns, you the Prisoner at the Bar, Those Men that you shall hear called and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, you are to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Parkyns. I hope your Lordship will be of Counsel for me then.

L. C. J. So we will; we will do you all the Right we can. Look ye, you know you may challenge 35 without Cause, and as many as you will with Cause, but no more than 35 without Cause.

Cl. of Ar. Sir Goddard Nelthorpe.—Parkyns. I except against him.

Cl. of Ar. Leonard Hancock, Esq;

Parkyns. I except against him, he is the King's Servant.

Cl. of Ar. William Withers, Esq.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Powell, Esq.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Northey, Esq.

Parkyns. Well, I don't except against him.

Cl. of Ar. Hold Mr. Northey a Book. (Which was done.) Look upon the Prisoner. You shall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, whom you shall have in Charge, according to your Evidence; So help you God.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Tench.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Wolf.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. James Bodington.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Smith.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Edward Gould.

Parkyns. I have no Exception against him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. John Raymond.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Daniel Thomas.

Parkyns. I have no Exception against him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Isaac Honeywood.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Underwood.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Arthur Bayley.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Nehemiah Erming.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Webber.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Cane.—Parkyns. I have no Exception to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. We challenge him for the King.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Glover.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Henry Whitcomb.

Parkyns. I have no Objection against him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Timothy Thornbury.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Dormer Sheppard.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Temple.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Nathaniel Gold.—Parkyns. I have no Exception against him.

Mr. Gold. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in this County.

Mr. Baker. Nor have you no Copyhold, Sir?

Mr. Gold. Yes, Sir, I have.

Mr. Att. Gen. However, let him be set by.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Breedon.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Teylor.

Parkyns. I challenge him, he is the King's Servant.

Cl. of Ar. Joseph Blisset.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Billier.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Francis Chapman.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. John Cleeve.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Bampton.

Parkyns. I have no Exception to him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. William Atlee.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Sutton.

Parkyns. I have no Exception to him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Eding.

Parkyns. I have no Exception against him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Robert Sanderson.

Parkyns. I have no Exception against him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Ralph Marsh.

Parkyns. I have no Exception against him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Richard Bealing.

Parkyns. Pray, Mr. Hardesty, how many have I challeng'd?

Mr. Hardesty. I will tell you presently, Sir.—You have challenged 25.

Parkyns. But there are two that I gave Reason for: Do you put them in among them? that is, Mr. Hancock and Mr. Teylor as the King's Servants.

Cl. of Ar. You may speak to my Lord about it; but if that be allow'd, then there are but 23.

Parkyns. Well, Sir, Go on then.

Cl. of Ar. Richard Bealing.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Partridge.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Nicholas Roberts.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Peter Lavigne.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Joseph Whiston.

Parkyns. I have no Objection to him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Andrew Cook.—Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Samuel Hosper.

Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Heames.

Parkyns. I have no Exception to him. (He was sworn.)

L. C. J. Sir William Parkyns, you have challenged two, and have assign'd the Cause of your Challenge, that is, Hancock and another, and the Reason of your Challenge is, because they are the King's Servants. I am to acquaint you, that is no Cause of Challenge; but however, the King's Counsel do not intend to insist upon it, if there are enough besides. They are willing to go on with the Pannel; and I speak this because I would not have it go for a Precedent, nor have it understood that the Cause you assign is a good Cause: But however, they will no stand with you, if there be enough to serve.

Parkyns. My Lord, I submit to it; the Jury is full, I think.

Cl. of Ar. No, there are but Eleven sworn yet.

Parkyns. But how far have I gone in my Challenges?

Cl. of Ar. There are Four which you may challenge more.

Parkyns. There are Two allow'd me, though it be not a Precedent: Are there Four still?

Cl. of Ar. Yes, you may challenge Four more, and no more. Edward Thompson.

Parkyns. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. Nicholas Rufford.

Parkyns. I have no Exception of him. (He was sworn.)

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, countez. William Northey.

Cryer. One, &c. (and so the rest 'till the Twelve.)

Cl. of Ar. Nicholas Rufford.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, stand together, and hear your Evidence.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, If any one can inform my Lords the King's Justices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inquest now to be taken, of the High-Treason whereof the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted, let them come forth, and they shall be heard; for now the Prisoner stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance; and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or else they forfeit their Recognizance. And all Jury-Men of Middlesex that have appear'd, and are not sworn, may depart the Court.

The Names of the Twelve sworn were these:

William Northey, Esq.

Edward Gold, Esq.

Daniel Thomas, Esq.

Henry Whitcomb, Esq.

Robert Bampton, Gent.

Thomas Sutton, Gent.

Thomas Eding, Gent.

Robert Sanderson, Gent.

Ralph Marsh, Gent.

John Whiston, Gent.

Tho. Heames, Gent. and

Nicholas Rufford, Gent.

Cl. of Ar. Sir William Parkyns, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause: He stands indicted by the Name of Sir William Parkyns, late of the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middlesex, Knight, that whereas (prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis.) and against the Form of the Statute made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to inquire, whether he be Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty; if you find that he is Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods and Chattels, Lands, Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since: If you find him Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty; if you find him Not Guilty, not that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mountague. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury—

Parkyns. My Lord, your Lordship was pleas'd to say, you would be my Counsel. I am ignorant in Matters of Indictments, I beg if there be any Fault in it, you will let me know it.

L. C. J. Truly I have observ'd no Fault in it; I do not know of any.

Mr. Mountague. Gentlemen, this Indictment does contain as heavy an Accusation as can be laid upon any Man; for it not only charges the Prisoner with a traitorous Design of subverting the Government, and raising War and Rebellion within this Kingdom; which was to be done by adhering to the King's Enemies, and promoting a Foreign Invasion, but likewise with a Conspiracy against the Life of the King, which was to have been taken away by a bloody Assassination.

Gentlemen, the Indictment sets forth, That Sir William Parkyns, the Prisoner at the Bar, did meet several Times with Charnock, and other false Traitors; and there it was consulted and agreed, how they should procure French Forces to land within this Kingdom, and then they were to raise Rebellion amongst his Majesty's Subjects, to join with the Invaders. Mr. Charnock was sent from the Prisoner at the Bar and the rest, as a Messenger into France, unto the late King James, to acquaint him with this bloody Design, and to desire him to borrow of the French King as many Troops as he could spare, to make a Descent upon this Kingdom; and they at the same Time were to facilitate the Descent, by getting as many Men as they could to make the Assassination; and the Number of Forty was pitched upon, who were to be provided for that Purpose; of which the Prisoner at the Bar was to find Five, who were to lie in wait with the rest, and set upon the King as he came along in his Coach, upon his Return from Hunting. Some were to assault and attack the Guards, while others were barbarously to assassinate and murder the King in his Coach: And particularly it charges the Prisoner with undertaking to procure and provide Five Horses and Arms, that were to be employed in this bloody Assassination; and also with gathering together great Quantities of Arms and Ammunition that were to be used in the Insurrection. To this Indictment the Prisoner has pleaded Not Guilty; if he be not guilty, God forbid he should be convicted! But if he be guilty, and we prove the Fact, the Nation expects that you will do Justice to the King and Kingdom, and find him so.

Mr. Att. Gen. (Sir Thomas Trevor.) May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; the Prisoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns, stands indicted of High-Treason, for Compassing the Death of his Majesty, and Adhering to his Majesty's Enemies: And the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment to prove this Treason are, That he with others had several Meetings and Consultations about this Design, and sent a Messenger over to France to the late King James, to procure French Forces to invade the Kingdom, to depose the King, and subject the Kingdom to a French Power: And likewise that he did enter into a Conspiracy with several Persons for the Assassination of his Majesty's Royal Person. These are the Overt-Acts mentioned in the Indictment, to prove this Charge of Treason against the Prisoner.

Gentlemen, the Evidence to prove these Overt-Acts, and which we shall produce, will be in this Manner: It will appear that the Prisoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns, has had a Commission from King James to raise a Regiment of Horse; and about May last, he with several others had a Meeting at the Old King's-Head in Leadenhall-street, where were present my Lord of Ailesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Freind, Sir John Fenwick, Mr. Charnock, Mr. Porter, and one Mr. Cook; and Goodman came in to them after Dinner. And at that Meeting it was consulted and concerted among them, how they should bring back the late King James, and depose his present Majesty; and in order to that, they did resolve to send Mr. Charnock as a Messenger to the late King James, to desire him to obtain from the French King 10,000 Men to invade this Kingdom; 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons; and to encourage the late King to this, they did assure him by the same Messenger, that they would meet him with 2000 Horse upon his Landing; and they did all undertake and agree that they would do it; and Mr. Charnock undertook to go of this Message.

Gentlemen, about a Week after this Meeting, Mr. Charnock not being willing to go upon this Errand without a good Assurance that they intended to perform what they had resolved upon, they therefore had another Meeting of most of the same Persons that were at the former, and particularly the Prisoner at the Bar was one; and that was at Mrs. Mountjoy's, a Tavern in St. James's-street. And at that Meeting they did all agree, as formerly, and continued in their former Resolution, to send Mr. Charnock to assure the late King, that they would meet him, according as they had promised, if he would give them Notice where he was to land, and he should not fail of their Assistance. And at these Meetings they did take Notice, that then was the most proper Time for such an Invasion: For the King was gone to Flanders, most of the Forces were drawn thither, and the People were dissatisfied, and so it would be the fittest Opportunity to accomplish their Design. And they desired Mr. Charnock to make haste to carry this Message, and to intreat King James that he would be speedy and expeditious in his coming, that they might not lose this Season.

Gentlemen, after these Meetings, Mr. Charnock did within a few Days go over into France, and did deliver his Message to the late King James; who took it very kindly, but said that the French King could not spare so many Forces that Year, having other Work to employ them about: Upon which, within a Month's Time, or less, he came back again, and brought an Account of his Message to those Gentlemen who sent him. This was in May or June last, and so the further Prosecution of the Design ceased at that Time.

But, Gentlemen, the last Winter it was revived again, and attempted, and carried on very near to the obtaining a fatal Success. And you will hear, that the Prisoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns, has had too great a Hand, and been a very great Instrument in both the Parts of this wicked Conspiracy and Treason; not only in the Invasion, which he with others sent the Messenger over to procure; but also in the other Part, the blackest Part, even the Assassination of the King's Person.

About January last Sir George Barclay, a Lieutenant of the Guards to King James in France, was sent over into England to engage Persons to join in the Conspiracy and Assassination; and for his Assistance there were sent over with him, and before and after him, some 20 Troopers of the late King's, that were his Guards in France. And Sir George Barclay, to encourage the Persons that were to join, and whom he had brought over with him, pretended an Authority to justify it, that is, a Commission from the late King James; and he communicates this Design to Mr. Charnock, Mr. Porter, and several others, and amongst the rest to the Prisoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns, having a great Confidence in him, and did acquaint him he had such a Commission, and he shewed it him, and that Commission was to levy War against the King's Person; which they took to be a sufficient Authority for them to assassinate the King's Person.

Gentlemen, in order to the accomplishing this horrid Conspiracy, there were several Meetings and Consultations had, at which the Prisoner at the Bar was present, and very active. Sometimes they met at Captain Porter's Lodgings, at another Time at the Nag's-Head in Covent-Garden, at another Time at the Sun in the Strand, and another Time at the Globe in Hatton-Garden, in order to accomplish this Design: And at these Meetings you will hear they did propose several Ways and Methods for the Execution of it; and several Persons, particularly one of them that have suffered the Punishment of the Law for this, were appointed to go and view the Ground, where the King's Person might most conveniently be assaulted. Mr. King, that was executed for it, was one, Captain Porter was another, and one Knightley was the third; and these did go to see the Ground. And the Day before they went there was a Meeting, at which was present the Prisoner at the Bar, and others, wherein it was concluded upon, that they should go; and they went accordingly to see the most convenient Place for it. They went to Brentford, and afterwards to the other Side of the Water to Richmond, and survey'd all the Ground; and the Place they pitch'd upon as the most proper for their Purpose, was, when his Majesty should return from Hunting, to do it in the Lane betwixt Brentford and Turnham-Green. And accordingly, when they return'd in the Evening, they came by Appointment to the Place where the rest of the Accomplices were to meet, at the Nag's-Head Tavern in St. James's, and gave an Account of their Proceedings; and at that Meeting likewise was Sir William Parkyns, the Prisoner at Bar, Mr. Charnock, and several others; and upon the Report of Captain Porter and Mr. King's Expedition, they did resolve the Thing should be done in that Place, and that it should be done in this Manner.

Sir George Barclay with about Eight or Ten in his Party, who were to be chosen out of all the other Parties, were to assault the King's Coach, and endeavour to kill the King, and all the rest that were in the Coach with him, whilst the others in two Parties were to attack the Guards; and the Number in all was to be about 40. This was fully agreed upon.

And, Gentlemen, the first Time that they resolved to put this traitorous Design in Execution, was the Fifteenth of February, which was a Saturday, the usual Day that the King was wont to go a-Hunting on; but it happened by great Providence, that the King did not go abroad that Day.

They had contrived further, to make the Thing sure, that there should be two Persons, whom they called orderly Men, who should be placed at Kensington, to give Notice when the King went abroad; and Chambers was one, and Durance that was a Fleming was another; and Durance was likewise employ'd to view the Inns about Turnham-Green and Brentford, for the Lodging of their Men, who were to be placed Two or Three in an Inn, that they might not be observed.

Gentlemen, the first Day appointed for the accomplishing this Design, which was the 15th of February, being over, and they disappointed; yet they did afterwards resolve to go on and execute it. And the next Saturday, which was the 22d of February, was pitched upon for the Time of Execution; and accordingly on Friday the 21st of February, the Day before, there was a Meeting at the Nag's-Head in Covent-Garden; and there was present Sir George Barclay, Capt. Porter, and several others, and amongst the rest the Prisoner at the Bar was there: They had at first some Discourse among them that they were in doubt, because of the first Disappointment, whether there had not been some Discovery, but that Doubt was soon over; for it was said, it could not be so, for then they should not have been there together. That seemed probable, and the Disappointment was imputed to some Accident; and that gave them new Assurance to go on, and they were resolved to do it in the same Manner, as they had formerly resolv'd, on the next Day, which was Saturday.

Gentlemen, at that Meeting Mr. Porter acquainted them, that he had the Misfortune to have some of his Horses fallen sick or lame, and he acquainted the Prisoner with it; and Sir William Parkyns was careful to supply him with other Horses, and told him, he could get a Note from one Lewis, who I think is Major of the Horse to my Lord Feverham, to get three Horses; and accordingly he did send a Note for three Horses to Mr. Lewis.

Upon the 22d of February in the Morning, which was the Time for the Execution of this bloody Conspiracy, they had met together, and resolved to go on with it, and put it in Execution; and that they had Notice from Chambers, that the King did go a-hunting that Day, and there was great Joy among them all, thinking themselves sure; and so they order'd all Things to be got ready. But afterwards, about One a-Clock, there came other News, that the King did not go abroad, but the Guards were all come back in great haste, their Horses being all of a Foam, and the King's Coaches were sent back to the Mews; then they began to be in a great Consternation, and they thought the Thing had taken Air, and was discovered. This, Gentlemen, is a short Account how it will appear upon the Evidence, as to the Conspiracy of Assassinating the King, and the several Meetings and Consultations about it; at which the Prisoner at the Bar, Sir William Parkyns, was present.

But, Gentlemen, there will be a little more Evidence, if it be necessary, to confirm this former Evidence, and to shew the Part that the Prisoner at the Bar had in this treasonable, this barbarous Conspiracy: For it will appear, that, as the Prisoner had a Commission from the late King James to raise a Regiment of Horse, and had sent a Messenger into France to invite the late King over, with 10,000 French; so he had made great Preparation of Arms to be ready for that Purpose. About

Michaelmas

Michaëlas last the Prisoner at the Bar sent a Parcel of Goods, as he called them, which were put into Cases, I think they were about eight small Boxes, put into very large Cases, and sent down by his Order into the Country, unto one Haywood. It seems this Haywood had married Mr. Charnock's Sister; and Charnock writ a Letter to him, and desired that he would give Sir William Parkyns Leave to lodge some Goods there, which were of great Value, and he durst not trust them at his own House in Warwickshire, because his Servants were not there to look after them; and accordingly upon that Letter Mr. Haywood did give Leave that the Goods should be carried thither, and they were so, and there they were lock'd up privately, and kept till this barbarous Conspiracy was discovered; then you will find, the Prisoner at the Bar sent his own Servant down, the Tuesday after the Discovery, and gave him Orders immediately (his Name is Eubank, and he is the Groom, and looks after his Horses) to go down to Warwickshire to one Evans, who carried the Goods, and desire him with all Speed to remove those Goods, and to take Care to remove them privately, and to secure them, and to hide them. And accordingly on Wednesday he came there, which was Ash-Wednesday; and acquainted Evans with what Sir William had ordered him, and they went that very Night with a Cart to Mr. Haywood's; and though it was late, and they were desired to stay till the next Morning, they would not; they said they could stay no longer, but would remove the Goods immediately; and accordingly they were carried from thence that Night, to Sir William Parkyns's own House in Warwickshire; and there they were buried in the Garden. These Goods that were of this great Value were put into the Ground to preserve them. But after this Discovery, Sir William Parkyns being accused, and his Name put in the Proclamation, and a Search being ordered to be made at his House, these Goods that lay hid at Haywood's, and upon the Removal thence were thus buried in the Ground, came to be discovered, and the Cases were broke open, and then they did appear to be Goods of an extraordinary Nature indeed, for you will find they were Horse Arms for Troopers; there were two and thirty Carabines, five and twenty Cases of Pistols, and about forty odd Swords without Hilts upon them, but the Hilts lay loose by them; so that this will make it apparent, without Dispute, how far the Prisoner at the Bar has engag'd in this Conspiracy, and what Preparations he had made for the Execution of it.

Gentlemen, it will appear farther against the Prisoner at the Bar, that he hath had a considerable Number of Horses, that have frequently been brought up from his House in Hartfordshire, to the George-Inn in Holbourn.

But before we come to that, I would acquaint you with another particular Part of our Evidence, that is precedent in Point of Time. About Christmas last, the Prisoner did acquaint one Sweet, who is an Officer in the Excise, (and I am very sorry that we should have any such Officers that should be thought fit to be intrusted with Secrets of this Nature) Sir William Parkyns acquainted this Sweet, and gave him an Account that he had long had an Assurance that King James would land; but now he had it under his own Hand, that he would land very speedily, and that he had made Preparations for that Purpose to meet him. That great Things were expected from him; that his own Troop was ready, and it consisted chiefly of old Soldiers; and that several Persons who had been Officers would be Volunteers under him. He said he intended to go into Leicestershire, and there he was to meet several Gentlemen from the North, and from the West, to consider and settle a Correspondence how to meet the late King upon his Landing; and accordingly Sir William Parkyns did go; and you will have an Account that he came to Leicester on Friday Night, one Scudamore went along with him; there he staid all Saturday, and a good Part of Sunday. There came several Persons to him while he was at Leicester, particularly one Captain Yarborough, the Son of Sir Thomas Yarborough, and a Parson, who said they came as far as from York to meet Sir William Parkyns at Leicester; and there was great Refort thither at that Time, as you will hear from the Witnesses. Sir William Parkyns came back again from Leicester to Erck-hill that Night, and returned to his own House on Monday Night; and after his Return, he acquainted this Sweet, that he had been his Journey to Leicester; that he met with several Gentlemen there from the North, and other Places, and had settled a Correspondency, and had found them all fully engaged, and well inclined; all went well, and there was no Danger of any Misfortune at all; and this was about January last, that this Expedition was made by the Prisoner.

And now, Gentlemen, as to that Particular about the Horses, which were so frequently brought up this last Winter from his House in Hartfordshire, to the George-Inn in Holbourn, there is one very unfortunate Circumstance that attends this Matter; that is, that these Horses were brought to Town just the several Nights before the King was to be assassinated; for upon Thursday the 13th of February, he being in Town, sent Directions to his Groom to bring up three of his Horses on Friday, which was the 14th in the Afternoon, and all these Horses were furnish'd with Pistols and Furniture for Troopers; according to those Directions his Servant brought up the three Horses, and he came and acquainted his Master that they were brought up according to his Order; Sir William Parkyns was then at his Lodgings, which were in the same House where Mr. Charnock did lodge; when his Man had told him the Horses were come, he pretended at first that he had some Thoughts of going out of Town that Evening, but that he had changed his Mind, and would go in the Morning; and he would have the Horses ready against the next Morning, which was Saturday the 15th, the first Day upon which the Assassination was intended to be put in Execution.

The next Morning when his Man came to him again, he had changed his Mind, and he would not go out of Town in the Morning, but he would go in the Afternoon; and it will appear that he did not go out of Town that Day, nor the next Day, nor till Monday; and then the Design had miscarried by the King's not going abroad a Saturday, and the Horses were carried back; and when he went out of Town upon Monday, one Holmes went along with him, and he went with him to his House in Hartfordshire; and there he staid until Friday after, which was the Day before the next Time that was appointed for the Execution of the Assa-sination. And upon the Friday they came up again, and then there were more Horses, four or five, that were brought up that Day; and all of them with Pistols, and Jack-Boots, and other Furniture and Accoutrements for Troopers; and these came to the George-Inn, where Sir William Parkyns gave his Man, Eubank, particular Orders to be very early the next Morning at Kensington; that was the 22d, and he was to go, as he told him, to one Brown, that he said was concerned in the King's Kitchen, and liv'd two Doors off the Gate that turns up to the King's House; and he was to tell him he was Sir William Parkyns's Servant, but that he came from a Man that lodg'd at a Confectioner's House over against Gray's-Inn; in which Place, by the Description of the Person, you will find Sir George Barclay lodg'd.

The Man went accordingly at Eight a-Clock in the Morning to Kensington, and inquired out this Brown, and met with him, and told him he was Sir William Parkyns's Servant, but came from the Gentleman that lodg'd at the Confectioner's in Holbourn. Brown said he had nothing to say to him; but did him give him his Almanack, and he writ in it, that he would be in Town in two Hours himself, and wait upon him; and bid him carry that to the Man that lodg'd at the Confectioner's: And this Brown by the Circumstances of the whole, must probably be one of the orderly Men who lodg'd at Kensington, to give Notice when the King and the Guards went out.

Sir William Parkyns's Servant came back to the Confectioner's House, and there he met with a Man that went by the Name of Rogers; he'll tell you he was a Scotch Man, for he spoke broad Scotch, and he'll give you a particular Description of the Man, by which, I believe it will appear that it was Sir George Barclay. Sir William Parkyns's Servant, after he had deliver'd his Message to this Rogers, came back to his Master, and told him he had done his Errand according as he was order'd; and Sir William Parkyns ask'd him what Rogers said, and he told him that he bid him tell his Master, if he would come to him he would be ready at home for him. This was upon Saturday Morning the 22d of February.

About Eleven a-Clock that Day Sir William Parkyns, and this Lewis that we spoke of before, came to the George-Inn; and there Sir William Parkyns ask'd his Servant whether he had receiv'd any more than two Saddles, for there were two Saddles sent in thither, according to an Order that had been given, to furnish two other Horses that stood there at the George-Inn, and which Sir William Parkyns told his Groom belonged to two Friends of his, and bid him be sure to take care of them, and to see them well fed, and order'd two Saddles to be bought for them. Lewis said he did think they had more than two; but you will see by the Evidence that this same Lewis had provided thirty Saddles for Sir William Parkyns; but there seem'd to be a Controversy between them at that Time how many had really been sent in, and Lewis affirm'd there was twenty-four; but Sir William Parkyns said, I have had but twenty-two of the thirty yet, for I have but two brought in here, and I had twenty before. This you will hear fully proved; and I think it is impossible for any Body to believe, but that all this Preparation of Saddles, Pistols, Boots, and other Things, must convince any Body of the Prisoner's being so far engaged in this Design, that he can never answer it without giving you a very good Account what this Preparation was for.

Gentlemen, a great Part of this will be prov'd to you by one that acted in it, as a Servant to Sir William Parkyns, that is, as to the coming up of the Horses, Jack-boots, Pistols, and other Arms at that Time; and that when on the last Saturday it was disappointed, all the Horses, not only those Sir William Parkyns brought, but the other two, went away in a great Hurry and Confusion, and nothing was ever heard of them more; and that will be prov'd by the Servants in the very Inn.

Gentlemen, I have now open'd to you the Nature and State of the Evidence; we will call our Witnesses, and make it out very undeniably and substantially, and therefore I will not give you any farther Trouble.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Porter. (Who was sworn.) Mr. Porter, pray will you give the Court and the Jury an Account of the Meeting at the King's-Head in Leadenhall-street; and who was there, and what Resolutions and Agreements they came to?

Capt. Port. About the latter End of May last, or the Beginning of June, there were two Meetings had, the one was at the King's-Head in Leadenhall-street, the other was at Mrs. Mountjoy's near Sir John Fenwick's. At the first Meeting there was my Lord of Ailbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns the Prisoner at the Bar, Sir John Fenwick, Capt. Charnock, Mr. Cook, and myself. Mr. Goodman came in after Dinner, and there we consulted which was the best Way for King James's coming in; and we all resolv'd to send a Messenger to him, to invite him over, and to desire him to interpose with the French King for the getting 10,000 Men, to come over with him, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons. It was then consider'd who should be sent; and all the Company agreed Mr. Charnock was the properest Person. Says Mr. Charnock, If you send me, pray tell me what Errand I shall go upon: We did likewise then agree, that he should assure the King, if he would come over at such a Time, we would meet him with a Body of 2000 Horse.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did Charnock undertake to go upon that Message?

Capt. Port. Yes, he did, and to propose this Matter to him, that he might propose it to the French King for the getting of the Men.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before you go away, I desire to ask of you one Thing, Did Sir William Parkyns, the Prisoner at the Bar, agree to the Message?

Capt. Port. Yes, he did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Had you any other Meeting about this Business, and when was it, and who was there?

Capt. Port. My Lord, Capt. Charnock said at first he would not go of a foolish Message; and thereupon we all agreed to be at the Head of 2000 Men to meet King James at his Landing, and every one should bring his Quota.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was the second Meeting, and where was it, and who was there, and what was agreed upon?

Capt. Port. The second Meeting was at Mrs. Mountjoy's, where Captain Charnock desired us once more to meet, before he went away, to know whether whether we kept to our first Resolution? And we did agree to what was resolved upon at first, and he said he would go in two or three Days time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did the Company agree to it then?

Capt. Port. Yes, they did, Sir, all that met at that Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray name them over again who they were?

Capt. Port. Sir William Parkyns was actually there, and my Lord of Ailesbury, and Sir John Freind, and Capt. Charnock, Mr. Cook, and myself; I cannot tell whether my Lord Montgomery was there, or Mr. Goodman.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray when did you see Capt. Charnock, or speak with him, after that?

Capt. Port. It was when I was in Prison about the Riot, and he told me he had been there; but there would be nothing done in that Matter at present, for King James said, the French King could not then spare so many Men, though he thanked us for our kind Offer: And he said he had been with my Lord of Ailesbury, Sir William Parkyns, and the several other People of Quality, which he did not name, and had carried them the particular Messages that he had in command from the King to carry to them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, pray tell us, what you know about the Design of Assassinating the King, and what hand the Prisoner at the Bar was to have in it?

Capt. Port. About some Weeks before I heard of the Assassination, I came to lodge in the House in Norfolk-street, where Capt. Charnock lodged; and where Sir William Parkyns lodged when he came to Town. Most commonly we used to go in the Evening to the Tavern, or drink a Bottle of Wine at our own Lodgings; and one Morning I ask'd Mr. Charnock, if I should see him at Night? He said he was engaged in private Company for that Night, and he could not go with me to the Tavern. For, says he, there are some Gentlemen that are lately come from France, and there is something to be done for the King's Service. If there be so, says I, pray let me be concerned: Says he, They are but newly come, and they will see no Body else but me at present. A little after I fell sick of a Fit of the Gout, and Mr. Charnock came to visit me, and we fell into Discourse, and I ask'd him about those Gentlemen that were come from France, what they came about? He told me it was Sir G. Barclay that came from France, and several other Officers with him, and that he had a Commission from the late King James to levy War against the Person of King William, or the Prince of Orange, as I think it was named in the Commission.

L. C. J. Who told you this?

Capt. Port. It was Capt. Charnock: he desired to know how many Men I could bring. I desired a little Time to consider; but I said there would be a great many would join if the King landed, whom I did not think fit to trust with a Thing of this Nature before-hand. Some few Days after, Capt. Charnock came into my Chamber, and brought Sir George Barclay, and Major Holmes that said he was come from France; and there we had little more but a general Discourse: But a little after that I got well of the Gout, and we had several Meetings at several Places; at the Globe-Tavern in Hatten-Garden, at the Nag's-head in Covent-Garden, and at the Sun in the Strand, where Sir William Parkyns was always present. And there we did consult of the best Ways to assassinate the King, as he came from Richmond after Hunting. Sir George Barclay said, he had received 800l. from King James's Secretary towards the buying of Horses, and furnishing both Horses and Men for the Expedition; and it was consider'd of how many Men it would be necessary to bring. The Number agreed upon was about Forty, of which Sir George Barclay was to provide Twenty; I promised to bring Seven or Eight, Sir William Parkyns engaged to bring Five, whereof Three should be mounted with his own Men, and the other Two my Men were to mount upon.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know the Names of those People that he was to mount? — Capt. Port. I never had the Names myself.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, what was done after these Consultations?

Capt. Port. I ask'd Captain Charnock one time; if I might not see the Commission that King James had given: He said he had never seen it himself, but Sir William Parkyns had. I ask'd Sir William Parkyns, one Evening as we were smoaking a Pipe by the Fire-side, whether he had seen the Commission? He said, he had; and that because King James would not trust any of his Ministers, it was written and signed with the King's own Hand.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray did he tell you what it was for?

Capt. Port. He said it was for raising and levying War upon the Person of the King, but I do not know whether he called him King William, or the Prince of Orange; but I suppose it was the Prince of Orange.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray then give us an Account of your going to view the Ground, where it was most convenient to do the Business.

Capt. Port. There were several Propositions about the Place where it was to be done; one was to be on the other Side of the Water by Ambuscade in Richmond Park; the other was to be on this side of the Water after the King was landed. Sir G. Barclay was for that that was upon the other side of the Water; I thought that it would take up too much time to go over thither, that it was better to be done on this side; but because there was Difference of Opinions, it was resolved upon that somebody should be appointed to view the Ground; and I was appointed for one, Mr. Knightley for another, and Mr. King would needs go with us for a Third; and we three did go. We lay all Night at Knightsbridge, and the next Day went and viewed the Grounds on both Sides the River; and came back that Evening to the Nag's-head according to Appointment, where was Sir William Parkyns the Prisoner, and Sir George Barclay, and Mr. Charnock, and we gave an Account that we had view'd both Places: And upon our Report it was resolved, that it should be done on this Side the Water, in the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you sure Sir William Parkyns, the Prisoner at the Bar, was there, at that Meeting at the Nag's-head?

Capt. Port. Yes, he was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he agree to the Resolution?

Capt. Port. It was in general agreed to by all that were there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Capt. Porter, then give us an Account of the Days that were fixed for the Execution of this Design?

VOL. IV.

Capt. Port. There was Saturday the 15th, and Saturday the 22d, because Saturday was the Day the King used to go a-Hunting and Shooting.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any Men at Kensington, to give you Notice when the King went abroad?

Capt. Port. There were two Men that had a Lodging at Kensington, the one was one Chambers, who belonged to Captain Charnock, and the other was a Fleming, one Durance, who came over with Sir G. Barclay, and he went every Day, and thrust himself among the Guards to bring Intelligence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What was the Reason the Design was not executed?

Capt. Port. The first Day, Durance brought Notice in the Morning that the Guards were gone abroad; and afterwards there came Notice, that the King would not go abroad that Day; for which Reason we adjourned it to the next Saturday.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Method you was to take in the Execution?

Capt. Port. The Method agreed upon was this: There was one Rockwood that came from France upon this Expedition, he was to command one Party, and Captain Charnock and myself were to command another Party, to attack the Guards; and Sir G. Barclay was to have four Men out of each Party to attack the Coach while we attacked the Guards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, You say the first Day you was disappointed by the King's not going. When was the next Meeting?

Capt. Port. The next Meeting was upon Friday, the Day before the 22d. I was sick all the Week, and I do not know whether I lay a-bed all the Week, or no; but upon Friday they met, and it was at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand: There was none but Sir G. Barclay, Capt. Charnock, Sir William Parkyns, and myself.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse was there then?

Capt. Port. Sir George Barclay came in, and said, he was afraid the Thing was discovered; I told him I fancied not, for if it had, we should not have been in that House at that time. Then, says he, let us go on, and try another Day. Sir William Parkyns was asked if his Horses were come to Town: He said they were come to Town that Night. Said I, I have had a Misfortune with my Horses, two of them are fallen lame, and won't be fit for Service. Says he, If I had known that, I could have brought more Horses out of the Country: But, says he, I will send to Mr. Lewis, who was Gentleman of the Horse to my Lord Feversham, and I believe he can help us to more Horses; he will be with me To-morrow Morning, and I'll get a Note from him for two more. In the Morning I sent to him, and he sent me a Note for two Horses to mount my Men: and he sent me Word Mr. Lewis could help me to two or three others, that they were all three saddled, and one was accoutred with Holsters and Pistols, but the other two had only Saddles. I did not see Sir William Parkyns on Saturday the 22d, but I met some of my Friends, who were to go along with me upon this Enterprize; and we had first Notice that the Guards were gone abroad, and that the King would go, at which all were very glad: But when we had Notice that the King did not go, we were afraid the Thing was discovered, and I went out of Town, and I did not see any of them afterwards till they were taken.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Capt. Porter, have you heard any thing from Sir William Parkyns of his having a Commission from King James?

Capt. Port. I have heard Captain Charnock ask Sir William Parkyns, why he did not go along with us in this Expedition? He said, he did not go, because he could not go.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he not to be one in the Number that was to act in the Assassination?

Capt. Port. No; he said he had other Business to do, he had a Regiment to look after.

L. C. J. How many Horses had you from Lewis?

Capt. Port. I had never a one, only Sir William Parkyns sent me Word, if I wanted I might have three, for I had told him I would not send for them, till I heard whether the King went abroad; and then I had Notice that the King did not go.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you a Note for them?

Capt. Port. Not for those three Horses; but Cranbourn said he had a Note for two Horses.

Parkyns. Did he say he had a Note from me?

Capt. Port. No, I don't say so, Sir William; Cranbourn told me, he had a Note whither to go for them.

L. C. J. Will you ask him any Questions, Sir William?

Parkyns. No, my Lord.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, Whether at any of those Meetings there was any Discourse of the Assassination before Sir William Parkyns?

L. C. J. What say you to that, Captain Porter?

Capt. Port. Yes; he was at all the Meetings and Consultations.

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, I desire to know, whether Sir William Parkyns discoursed of it himself, and what he did say about it?

Capt. Port. I cannot say exactly what he did say in particular, only he agreed to it, and was to furnish five Horses for it, and said it was necessary to be done; for it would bring the King in more easily, though he could not personally engage in it himself, because he had other Business; he was to look after his Regiment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If Sir William Parkyns will ask Captain Porter no Questions, we will go on to our next Witnesses, which is one Abraham Sweet; whom Mr. Attorney mentioned.

[He was brought in and sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Sweet, will you give the Court and Jury an Account, what Sir William Parkyns said to you about King James's Landing?

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you give an Account what Discourse you had with Sir William Parkyns, the Prisoner at the Bar, about King James's returning and landing with French Forces?

Sweet. Sir William Parkyns did tell me, that he did expect King James's Landing; and he said his own Troop was composed of old Soldiers.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you known Sir William Parkyns?

Sweet. This three Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell the Time when this Discourse was. About what Time was it?

Sweet. This was since Christmas, about Christmas last.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was it that you had this Discourse?

Sweet. It was about his own House.

L. C. J. What Discourse?

Sweet. We were talking about King James's coming.

L. C. J. Who told you that King James was coming?

Sweet. Sir William Parkyns.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he say?

Sweet. He said he had bought a great many Saddles, thirty Saddles; and that his own Troop was composed of all old Soldiers.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you of any Assurance that he had of King James's Landing?

Sweet. Yes; he said he had the King's Word for it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was there any Discourse between you about any Journey that Sir William was to take?

Sweet. Yes; he did tell me he was to go into Leicestershire, and was to meet several Gentlemen in Leicestershire; and he did go, and after he came back again, he said he had met his Friends, and all was well, and that the West was as much inclin'd to King James's Interest as the North, and that a Lord's Brother was concerned.

Mr. Att. Gen. What other Discourse had you about this Matter?

Sweet. Nothing else, as to Particulars, that I can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Orders had you to come up to Town in February, and when, and from whom?

Sweet. Sir William Parkyns sent for me, and he sent me a Letter about the 11th of February that I should come to him the next Day; and I did come the next Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did you come? Where did you find him?

Sweet. At his Lodgings in Norfolk-street, at the House where Mr. Charnock lodged; and after I had spoken with Sir William Parkyns about the Letter which he had sent me to come up, he told me, that the Business that he had designed for me, he did not think fit I should do, because of my Family.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what Directions had you from him, what you were to do when you went into the Country?

Sweet. When I went into the Country, he order'd me to go to his House, and send up three of the strongest Horses.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was this, do you say?—Sweet. It was in February.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time in February?

Sweet. The Eleventh or Twelfth, which was Wednesday; and at my going away, he told me if I had not a Letter from him the Friday following, I should come to Town again. I did come to Town again, and then he asked me, if I had made Provision for my Family? I told him, No; then he asked me, why I came up to Town? He told me I might go into the Country again on the Morrow Morning.

L. C. J. What did he tell you?

Sweet. He said I might go back again into the Country. I came upon the Saturday Morning to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what Day was that Saturday?

Sweet. I believe it was the 13th or 14th of February.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say, Wednesday was the 12th.

Sweet. Yes, I believe Wednesday was the 12th, and I came to Town the Friday after that 12th, that was the 14th, and on the Saturday I went home again.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say you came to him on the Saturday Morning, what passed between you then?

Sweet. I went the next Morning to Sir William Parkyns's Lodgings, but he was gone out, and had left Word, that I must come again about Eleven of the Clock: I did go about that Time, and he was not come in, and there I met one Mr. Chambers, and one Mr. Lee, whom I had seen there the Night before.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what Discourse had you then with them?

Sweet. We had little Discourse, for I had only seen them the Night before; but I think Chambers told me he had been at Kensington, and I desired to know what News there; and he told me William kept as close as a Fox; and he shew'd me his Wounds, and said those Wounds wanted Revenge.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did he say he received those Wounds?

Sweet. At the Boyne.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Mr. Sweet, did he tell you for what Use his Troop was?—Sweet. He did not tell me positively; but I understood it to be to join King James when he landed.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Sir, where did you dine that Saturday?

Sweet. With Sir William Parkyns, and Mr. Charnock, and Chambers, and one or two more that I did not know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any Questions, Sir William?

Parkyns. Did I tell you, Mr. Sweet, that I had a Troop of Horse?

Sweet. I will tell you your own Words, and no other: You said, Your own Troop was compos'd of old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Pray let me ask you one Question: How many Horses were you to bid the Man to bring up to Town?—Sweet. Three, my Lord.

Mr. Att. Gen. And were they not his strongest Horses?

Sweet. Yes, my Lord, they were.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he say any thing to you about Volunteers?

Sweet. Yes; he said there were some Gentlemen that were Captains and old Officers that would be Volunteers under him.

Parkyns. Pray, where were those Words spoken?

Sweet. Either in your House or in the Garden, I can't tell directly which, but somewhere about your House it was.

Parkyns. Where is that House?—Sweet. In Hertfordshire.

Parkyns. Then I am in your Lordship's Judgment, whether Words spoken in Hertfordshire can be an Evidence of a Treason acted here in Middlesex?

L. C. J. Sir William Parkyns, if there be a Design to kill the King, and there are several Overt-Acts to prove that Design, and one is in one County, and another is in another County, the Party may be indicted in either of the Counties, and Evidence may be given of both those Overt-Acts, though in several Counties. It is true, you being indicted in Middlesex, makes it necessary that some Evidence should be given of some Things done in Middlesex, as there is; as your Meeting at Mrs. Mountjoy's, and at the Nag's-Head in Covent-Garden, and the Shin in the Street, where were several Consults, which are Overt-Acts of the same Treason; and if Treason be committed in several Counties, the Party may be indicted in any one, and the Evidence may be given of Facts done in all.

Parkyns. Then, Mr. Sweet, you do not say that I had raised a Troop, or would raise a Troop.

Sweet. I told you your own Words, that your Troop was made up of old Soldiers.

L. C. J. But yet I must tell you further, Sir William Parkyns, if I remember right, there is Evidence given of a Discourse you had in Norfolk-street, where you lodg'd, and that is in Middlesex.

Parkyns. My Lord, I did not observe that he said any thing of me about Norfolk-street.

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes; this is what he says: You told him you had thought of a Business for him, but you would not engage him in it, because of his Family.

Parkyns. Pray, Mr. Sweet, did I tell you any thing what you were to do?—Sweet. No, Sir, you did not.

Parkyns. I hope the Jury will take Notice of that: I did not tell him any thing that he was to do.

L. C. J. Well, that was no great Matter. Will you ask him any more Questions, Sir?—Parkyns. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then our next Witness is James Eubank.

(Who was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know Sir William Parkyns?

Eubank. Yes, he is my Master.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Servant was you to him?

Eubank. I was Groom to him.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you been his Groom?

Eubank. Not a Twelvemonth yet.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, first give an Account what Journey you took with him.

Eubank. I went into Leicestershire with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell us what you know of that Matter.

Eubank. Yes, my Lord, we went from our own House to Stony-Stratford, and there we lay all Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time was this?

Eubank. I cannot tell the Day of the Month, it was in January.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?

Eubank. It was on a Thursday.

Mr. Att. Gen. And where did you go from Stony-Stratford?

Eubank. We came the next Day to Leicester.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who went with him?—Eub. One Captain Scudamore.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did you tarry at Leicester?—Eubank. When we came the next Day to Leicester, we staid there till Sunday Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Company came to your Master when he was at Leicester?—Eubank. Sir, I am a Stranger, I know none of them, I was never there before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you remember whether there was one Yarborough there?

Eubank. There was one that said his Name was Yarborough.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whence did he come?

Eubank. He said he came out of Yorkshire.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who came with him?—Eubank. There was a Gentleman in black Cloaths, that said he was a Minister.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe any others that came thither to your Master?

Eubank. It was Market-Day, and I had my Horses to look after; there were a great many People went up and down Stairs; but whether they went to him, or no, I can't tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did you come back again?

Eubank. We staid there till Sunday Morning, and then we came away.

Mr. Att. Gen. To what Place did you go that Night?—Eubank. To a Town call'd Brickhill, and the Night following we came home.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who came back with him?

Eubank. None but Captain Scudamore, who went with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did you go the next Day?

Eubank. We came to Bussy about 8 a-Clock a Monday Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, after this, did you bring up any Horses to the George-Inn to your Master, and when?—Eubank. Yes, three Horses.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ay, when?—Eubank. I cannot tell the Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Day of the Week was it?—Eub. Upon a Friday.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Month was it in?

Eubank. Indeed, I can't say that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember Valentine's Day?

Eubank. Yes; it was upon that Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is the 14th of February, a remarkable Day, and was then of a Friday, the Day before the Assassination was to have been executed. Whither did you bring them?—Eubank. To the George-Inn.

Mr. Att. Gen. How were they furnish'd? Were there Pistols upon them?

Eubank. No; the Pistols were in Town, and the Horses were sent after my Master.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where were the Pistols left?—Eub. Indeed, I don't know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, when you came to Town, did you go to your Master, and acquaint him with it?—Eubank. Yes, Sir, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what did he then say to you?

Eubank. He said he thought he should go home that Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he change his Mind?

Eubank. Yes, for he did not go till Monday.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you he should go a Saturday?

Eubank. Yes; he said he thought he should.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you come to him to know his Mind, and what did he say?—Eubank. He said in the Morning, he would go in the Afternoon; but he did not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Afterwards when did he go?

Eub. Upon Monday,
Mr. Att. Gen. Who went with him that Monday?
Eub. One Holmes, a fat, thick Man.
Mr. Att. Gen. Well, pray when did you come to Town again?
Eub. Upon the Friday following.
Mr. Att. Gen. How many Horses did you bring up then?
Eub. On the Friday following we brought up Four; my Master himself came up with them.
Mr. Att. Gen. Who came with him?
Eub. Mr. Holmes, and I, and another Servant.
Mr. Att. Gen. How were the Horses furnish'd?
Eub. Every Horse had Pistols.
Mr. Att. Gen. What did you bring beside? Were there any Boots?
Eub. None but what we rid in.
Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you leave those Horses?
Eub. At the George Inn in Holborn.
Mr. Att. Gen. What Directions did your Master give you that Night for going the next Morning upon an Errand, and whither?
Eub. I had no Message from him; but there was a Note that I was to carry to Kensington to one Brown; and I was ordered to go to the Gentleman that lives within a Door or two next the Going into the King's Gate, I forget his Name; but this Man where Brown lodged belonged to the Court, some Officer in the Kitchen to the King; either Confectioner, or Cook, or something; and this Man lay there.
Mr. Att. Gen. What was your Message to him?
Eub. I was to tell him, that I came to speak with one Brown, and that I came from a Gentleman that lay at the Confectioner's in Holborn, over-against Gray's Inn. I know the Gentleman by Face again, if I see him;
Mr. Att. Gen. Well, what did he say to you?
Eub. He bid me set my Horse at the Red Lion, and he would come to me presently; and so he did. Says he, I have no Business that I need to send; but I'll write in your Almanack, and you may carry it back and shew it him, that I will come to Town betwixt nine and ten o'Clock. I did go back and tell that Gentleman at the Confectioner's.
Mr. Att. Gen. What kind of Gentleman was it?
Eub. A lusty Man, with a great Nose, and a black Wig; he speaks broad Scotch, and he was a swarthy colour'd Man, and he had a wide Mouth.
Mr. Att. Gen. What Age was he of?
Eub. A middle-aged Man.
Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what did he say to you?
Eub. He ask'd me if I had seen the Gentleman? I told him, Yes. He ask'd me what the Gentleman return'd for Answer? I told him, he had writ in my Almanack, which I had shewn him, that he would be in Town between nine and ten o'Clock. He ask'd me then where I was going? I said, To my Master. Says he, Tell your Master that I will be in my Chamber ready for him.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you go to your Master, and tell him so?
Eub. Yes, I did.
Mr. Att. Gen. And what did he say to you?
Eub. He said he designed to go home in the Afternoon, and therefore bid me go to the Inn, and make ready the Horses, and know what was to pay for them, and he would come by and bye thither.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did he afterwards come to the Inn?
Eub. Yes, Sir, about three or four o'Clock in the Afternoon.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, who came with Sir William Parkyns?
Eub. One Lewis.
Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know him?
Eub. I have seen him before with my Master.
Mr. Att. Gen. What is he?
Eub. They say he is my Lord Feversham's Gentleman.
Mr. Att. Gen. What did he say to you about any Saddles?
Eub. They ask'd me what Saddles, and how many had been sent in there? And I said but two.
Mr. Att. Gen. What said Mr. Lewis?
Eub. Mr. Lewis said there must be a Mistake, because my Master said he had but twenty-two, for he reckoned he had more; there should be twenty-four in all.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did he say so, or Sir William Parkyns?
Eub. It was Mr. Lewis that said there were twenty-four, to the best of my Remembrance.
Mr. Att. Gen. Where were they sent?
Eub. Indeed I know not, I never saw any of them but those two.
Mr. Att. Gen. Who delivered those two to you?
Eub. My Master, Sir William Parkyns.
Mr. Att. Gen. Who were those Saddles for?
Eub. They were for two Gentlemen's Horses that were there.
Mr. Att. Gen. Whose Horses were they?
Eub. They were not my Master's; but they stood at that Place,
Mr. Att. Gen. Did your Master ever speak to you about them, to look after them?
Eub. He said, if at any time I was there, I should see that the Hostler gave them their Corn.
Mr. Att. Gen. Were they your Master's Horses, or not?
Eub. Not that I know of.
Mr. Att. Gen. What Time did you go out of Town?
Eub. I went out of Town with them about four o'Clock in the Afternoon.
Mr. Att. Gen. When did you hear from your Master after that?
Eub. Upon Monday I had a Letter from him.
Mr. Att. Gen. What was that Letter for?
Eub. It was to go to my Master's House in Warwickshire, to one Richard Evans that was his Servant, to whom he sent a Letter.
Mr. Att. Gen. What were the Contents of that Letter?
Eub. I did not see what they were, it was sealed.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you carry that Letter to Evans?—Eub. Yes, I did.
Mr. Att. Gen. What Time did you come thither?
Eub. I came there a Tuesday at four o'Clock.
Mr. Att. Gen. What did Evans and you do after you had read the Letter?

Eub. We went to fetch some Boxes that my Master had order'd Evans to fetch home. It was about two Miles, or more from Home, at a Tradesman's.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was his Name, was it Haywood?
Eub. Yes, I think it was something like that Name.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you go with Evans to fetch the Boxes from thence?
Eub. They had a Man that drove the Team to fetch them.
Mr. Att. Gen. Were they carried in a Team then?
Eub. Yes, they were.
Mr. Att. Gen. Were you there when the Goods were brought back?
Eub. Yes, I was at my Master's House.
Mr. Att. Gen. What did they do with them?
Eub. They buried them in the Garden, Sir.
Mr. Att. Gen. What, in the Boxes?—Eub. Yes, Sir.
Mr. Att. Gen. How many Boxes were there?
Eub. Five or six, I think, I know not what was in them.
Mr. Att. Gen. You help'd to bury them, did you not?
Eub. No; but I was there, I saw them buried.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did Evans tell you what they were?
Eub. Evans told me they were choice Goods.
Mr. Att. Gen. Evans told you so, did he?—Eub. Yes.
L. C. J. What Time of the Day or Night were they fetch'd Home?
Eub. They went away about four o'Clock in the Afternoon.
L. C. J. How far is it from Sir William Parkyns's House to Haywood's?
Eub. I think about three or four Miles, I can't tell how far exactly.
L. C. J. What Time did they return?
Eub. About ten or eleven o'Clock at Night.
Juryman. My Lord, I understand he says they buried them immediately; was he there, and did he help to bury them?
Eub. No, I did not help to bury them; but I saw Earth put upon them.
Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Eubank, let me ask you one Question: The Person that lay at the Confectioner's, did you observe whether he had a lame Arm, or no?
Eub. No, I did not take Notice of any such thing.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Will Sir William Parkyns ask him any Questions?
L. C. J. What say you, Sir William, will you ask him any Questions?
Park. You say one Holmes went out of Town with me; pray give an Account what Holmes that is?
Eub. It is Fat Mr. Holmes, if it please your Honour, he lives at the Golden Key in Holbourn.
Park. My Lord, I observe this to distinguish it, that it was not, as Mr. Attorney opened it, Major Holmes that is in the Proclamation; it was one that us'd to be at my House frequently; he was at my House all the Summer.
Mr. Att. Gen. You did well to ask him that Question to explain it.
L. C. J. Will you ask him any more Questions?
Par. No, my Lord.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Then our next Witness is one Thomas Hipwell, (Who was sworn.)
Mr. Att. Gen. Where do you live?
Hip. At in Warwickshire.
Mr. Att. Gen. With whom do you live?—Hip. I live of myself, Sir.
Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know of any Goods that were carried from Mr. Haywood's House to Sir William Parkyns's House?
Hip. I came from Litchfield Fair upon Ash-Wednesday, where I had been to carry Goods for my Master-----
Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you say you lived of yourself? I ask'd you before, who you liv'd with? Who is your Master?—Hip. Mr. Haywood.
Mr. Att. Gen. You said before, you had no Master.
Hip. That is, when he pleases to employ me, I work for him.
Mr. Att. Gen. Pray tell what you carry'd from Haywood's House, and who came for them?
Hip. There were, to the best of my Remembrance, either seven or eight Boxes.
Mr. Att. Gen. Who came for them?
Hip. There was one of Sir William Parkyns's Men, one Richard Evans, that was his Servant, and one Whetstone, that was Tenant to Sir William.
Mr. Att. Gen. Well, how did they come, and what did they do?
Hip. They brought a Waggon and Two Mares.
Mr. Att. Gen. About what Time was it?
Hip. It was about nine or ten o'Clock at Night when they went away.
Mr. Att. Gen. What Orders had you from your Master?
Hip. It was near upon seven o'Clock, when the Waggon came, and my Master wish'd me to go to borrow a Mare of at I did so, and I brought the Mare I had borrowed with me home.
Mr. Att. Gen. What was that Mare borrowed for?
Hip. I know not.
Mr. Att. Gen. What Use was she put to afterwards? What did you see more?
Hip. Why, before the Team came (about a Quarter of an Hour before) to fetch these Goods, my Master told me, that Sir William Parkyns's Men were to come to fetch some Bedding and other Goods, what they were he knew not; and he order'd me, when they knock'd at the Gate, to let them in; and I did so.
Mr. Att. Gen. Well, Friend, did they carry away any Goods, and what were they?
Hip. They were in Boxes at first, in three Boxes; and then Sir William Parkyns's Servant did knock off the outside Lining, which was a Deal Board, and he drew the Nails, and took out of two Boxes three Boxes a-piece, and two out of another: to the best of my Remembrance I think there were eight, but I am not sure whether there were seven or eight.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did they carry them away that Night?
Hip. Yes, Sir William Parkyns's Man Richard and the Tenant carry'd them to the Waggon, and I lighted them down with a Lanthorn, according to my Master's Order.

Mr. Att. Gen.

Mr. Att. Gen. When, what Day was this?

Hip. It was Ash-Wednesday at Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then let up Mr. Haywood (Who was sworn before). Pray give my Lord an Account, when Sir William Parkyns's Goods were brought to your House, who brought them, and what Directions were given about the careful Keeping of them.

Haywood. My Lord, about Michaelmas last, Sir William Parkyns's Man came to me with a Letter from one Mr. Charnock, and the Effect of the Letter was, to desire the Favour of me to lodge some Goods of Sir William Parkyns at my House; for he was taking his Servants from his House, and he was loth to leave his Goods in an empty House, and he desired me to let them lie at my House, which I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. How were they put up?

Haywood. I think in three Chests, pretty big Chests, nailed up and tacked; and there was a Bed, and Bedding, and a Piece of Tapestry or two.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did that Letter come from Mr. Charnock?

Haywood. Yes; Evans, Sir William Parkyns's Man, brought it me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, how are you related to that Mr. Charnock? What Kin is he to you?-----Haywood. I married his Sister.

L. C. J. You took the Goods into your Custody upon that Letter from Charnock?-----Haywood. Yes, my Lord, I did.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, will you give an Account, whether you were in Town before this Discovery, and had any Discourse with Mr. Charnock or Sir William Parkyns about these Goods? When did you see Mr. Charnock afterwards?

Haywood. I came up to London the 16th Day, and I was in London the 17th, 18th, and 19th; I think those three Days; and I went to see Mr. Charnock at his Lodgings, but I was hardly with him a Quarter of an Hour; I told him Sir William Parkyns had sent some Goods to my House, and I desired to know when he would fetch them away. Says he, I can't say when I shall see him again. Said I, I shall have some Business at the Temple, and I will meet you at the Temple Coffee-House. Says he, I will meet. And bring Sir William Parkyns with you, if you can, said I. He came about Eight or Nine o'Clock on Tuesday Morning; says he, Sir William Parkyns is at my Lodgings, just a-going out of Town, and would desire to see you. So I went up, and Sir William Parkyns was ready to go out of Town. I told him I had some Goods of his at my House, and I desired to know how he would dispose of them; what he would do with them. He would take them away, he said, the first Opportunity, or to that Effect.

L. C. J. When was this? What Month?

Haywood. It was in February last.

L. C. J. What Day?

Haywood. I think it might be about the Eighteenth Day.

L. C. J. It was you that desired to have them taken away, it seems, was it not?

Haywood. I asked him when he would take them away, or what he would do with them.-----L. C. J. And what Answer did he make?

Haywood. He said he would take them away the first Opportunity, as soon as he could dispose of them, or to that Effect.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, when you came home, tell us who came for those Goods, and when?

Haywood. I think it was upon a Shrove-Tuesday that I came home, and my Wife said Sir William Parkyns had sent for his Goods, and desired to have them away; but that she had made Answer, I was not at home, but should be at home soon, and then he might have them away. The next Day I came home from Litchfield Fair, about Five or Six o'Clock at Night: It was Ash-Wednesday at Night when I came home, and the Man came to me between Six and Seven, and told me his Master desired to have the Goods away. I told him he might have them when he would; he said he would have them away that Night. I told him it was an unreasonable Time: But, says he, the Waggon is a-coming, and I desire you would give me leave to take them away; which I did: Then he said he had but two Horses, and he desired me to lend him a Horse; which I did, and he took the Goods, and went away with them; but for what he did afterwards with 'em, I know nothing at all of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear Mr. Whetstone. (Which was done.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, do you give an Account when you went with Evans to Haywood's House, and what happened.

Whetstone. His Man came to me-----

Mr. Att. Gen. Whose Man?

Whetstone. Sir William Parkyns's Man, to desire me to go to Mr. Haywood's to fetch some Goods of Sir William Parkyns, some Bedding, and some odd Things, which I did; and said he, I will go the next Way to the House, and I will meet you before you can get thither; and he did meet me half a Mile off the House, and told me I must stay, and not come to the House till it was Night, 'till it was later.

L. C. J. Who told you so?

Whetstone. Sir William Parkyns's Man told me so; so he went forwards to the Gate, and then came back, and called me to come in; then we went to the House, and loaded the Waggon with Boxes and Bedding that was there.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many Boxes were there?

Whetstone. I cannot tell whether there were seven or eight.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whither did you carry them?

Whetstone. We carried them to Sir William Parkyns's House.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was done with them?-----Whetstone. There they were put into the Ground by the Wall Side, where they were found.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why, was you present when they were found?

Whetstone. Yes, I saw them dug up.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then you can give us an Account of them: What were they?-----Whetstone. They were Arms.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many were there? What Quantity?

Whetstone. Truly, I cannot tell.

Mr. Baker. Where is the Constable Thomas Watts?

Watts. Here am I.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you the Constable?

Watts. Yes, Sir, I am the Constable, and search'd Sir William Parkyns's House, and upon searching in the Garden I found some Arms there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what Quantity of Arms did you find there?

Watts. Four Dozen of Swords, thirty-two Carbines, twenty-five Brace of Pistols.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Kind of Swords were they?

Watts. They were broad Swords, two-edged Swords.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any Hilts to the Swords?

Watts. No; but there was a Box of Hilts that I suppose was prepared for them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where did you find them?

Watts. In a Border under the Wall by the Wall Side.

Juryman. Did you see the Boxes broke open, Sir?

Watts. Yes, Sir, I took them and broke them open my own self.

Juryman. Was Whetstone by, pray, Sir, when they were broke open?

Watts. He was not there by at the first, when we dug them up; but I brought them to my own House, and there I broke them open, and there we saw them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will you ask him any Questions, Sir William?

Parkyns. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then call Turton, Freeman, Fielding. (Who were all sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray set up Mr. Freeman.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where do you live?

Freeman. At the George Inn in Holborn.

Mr. Att. Gen. What are you?-----Freeman. I am Hostler there.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray do you give an Account what Horses were kept there of Sir William Parkyns, and how many.

Freeman. He was a Guest to the House all this last Summer, sometimes more, sometimes less.

Mr. Att. Gen. How was it last Winter about February last, how many Horses had he then?-----Freeman. He had sometimes three came in, sometimes four; the most that ever he had was five.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time was that that he had five, pray?

Freeman. To my best Memory, it was just the Week before the Disturbance, before the Plot broke out.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Before the Proclamation, you mean?

Freeman. Yes, before the Proclamation.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was it? what Day of the Week was it?

Freeman. They came in on Friday Night.

L. C. J. Holt. What, did five come in then?-----Freeman. Yes, I think so.

L. C. J. Holt. Who was with him?

Freeman. I only saw his Groom and another Servant.

Mr. Att. Gen. How were they accoutred?-----Freeman. Four with Holsters and small Pistols, one was a led Mare with a Portmanteau; and in a Horse-Cloth wrapp'd up there was one or two Pair of Jack-Boots, and, I think, a Collar in one; I cannot tell whether there was one Bridle or two.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did they go away?

Freeman. On Saturday in the Afternoon.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe any Persons to come there on Saturday Morning?

Freeman. There were two Men that were there that rid out between two and three Hours; they rid out between Nine and Ten, and they came in again between Twelve and One; where they had been I cannot tell; but they had rid pretty hard for the Time they were out, for the Horses came in in a Sweat.

Mr. Att. Gen. Before this Time that you now speak of, what Horses came up? Can you remember how many Horses came up the Week before?

Freeman. The Week before there were some, but how many I cannot remember; they very rarely stay'd above a Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of any other Horses that were left there?

Freeman. There were three Horses that were at our House a Week, that were very good Horses; but I do not know whose Horses they were, nor the Names of the Gentlemen that owned them. The Gentlemen that brought them in paid for the Horses, only the Groom told me his Master, Sir William Parkyns, had ordered him to see the Horses fed. I never received a Farthing of Sir William Parkyns, but always of the Groom.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did you observe any particular Horse that was brought in there, a Roan Horse?

Freeman. Yes, there was one Horse brought in.

Mr. Att. Gen. From whence did that Horse come?

Freeman. As was told me, from Mountague-House.

Mr. Att. Gen. I believe you mistake the Place; recollect yourself a little.

Freeman. Somerset-House, I mean; a Porter brought it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Are you sure it was Somerset-House?

Freeman. Yes, it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know one Lewis?

Freeman. I do not know him; perhaps the Tapster does.

L. C. J. Holt. How many Horses came from Somerset-House?

Freeman. Only the Roan Gelding, and a very fat Man mounted him, and rid out with Sir William Parkyns.

Par. Pray, Sir, what sort of Horse was that Bay Gelding that you say the fat Man rid upon?-----Freeman. I say he rid upon a little Roan Gelding about fourteen Hands high.

Par. But the Bay Gelding, how high was that?

Freeman. About fourteen Hands high.

Par. There's your mighty Horse for Service!

Freeman. They were no great-sized Horses, none of them.

Par. And have not you known these Horses to have been mine a great while?

Freeman. Yes, I have known them to be yours a good while.

L. C. J. Holt. What, was the Roan Gelding Sir William Parkyns's?

Freeman. No, not the Roan, but the others; they were no strange Horses, they were frequently there all last Summer; there was no new strange Horse but the Roan.

L. C. J. Holt. Will you ask him any more Questions?

Par. No, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then set up Mr. Turton.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you give an Account what you know of Horses that were standing at the George Inn in Holborn? Turton. I have known Sir William Parkyns to have used the Inn this four or five Years, ever since the Inn was built; and in last February he came to Town with three Horses the first Time.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Day of the Month was that?
Turton. I cannot say what Day of the Month, but it was about the Week before his last coming there, which was just before the Discovery of the Plot.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know what Day of the Week it was?
Turton. No, truly I do not, for I keep no Account of Horses going in or out. The last time of his coming was with about four or five Horses, to the best of my Knowledge, and that was upon the Friday before the Plot broke out; and then upon that Friday, Sir William Parkyns gave order to his Groom to get the Horses ready against Saturday Morning.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he go out with his Horses on Saturday Morning?
Turton. He did not go out with all the Horses according as he had given order; but two Gentlemen rid out with two of the Horses, and staid out about two or three Hours, and came in again, as if they had rid pretty hard, the Horses being in a Sweat; and in the Afternoon they all went fairly out of Town, and gave out that they expected to be in Town on Sunday or Monday following, but they did not return; but then came down one Mr. Lewis, I know not that that is his Name, only when I formerly belonged to my Lord of Oxford, I knew him to be Gentleman of the Horse to my Lord Feversham, but I did not know his Name.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you not seen him there before? What time did he come?
Turton. I do not know that I ever saw him there before; he was on Saturday in our Yard.

L. C. J. H. You are asked when Lewis came?
Turton. The first time I see him was on Saturday, in the Yard, asking for Sir William Parkyns.

L. C. J. H. What time on Saturday was that?
Turton. It might be three of the Clock in the Afternoon, about an Hour or thereabouts before Sir William Parkyns's Horses went away; and asking for Sir William Parkyns, and he not being there, he returned back again; and after they were gone, he came again, and I told him they were gone; but the Groom had acquainted me, and given me an Account, that he would be there again on Sunday or Monday. On Sunday in the Afternoon, about five or six, Mr. Lewis came to enquire if Sir William Parkyns's Horses were come to Town; I told him No; and so he came again upon Monday Morning betwixt eight and nine of the Clock, and asked me if I heard nothing of his coming to Town; I told him No, I did not hear of his coming again.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Horses that came up on Friday Night, how were they accounted for?
Turton. Two or three of them had Holsters; I cannot say but for Pistols they had four or five Case.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had they no Carbines?
Turton. No; but only Horse-Pistols.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you not observe any other Arms, or other Furniture?
Turton. I did see a Pair or two of Jack-Boots that they rid in, but I did not see any more.

Mr. Att. Gen. Were there any that were wrapt up in a Horse-Cloth?
Turton. No, I did not see any, they were not brought into the House.

Mr. Cowper. Do you know what time the Horses were saddled that Day?
Turton. No, I did not.

Parkyns. You observed, and said there were two or three Cases of Pistols, did not I always ride with Pistols?
Turton. Yes; you seldom came without two or three Pair when you came with Servants.

Parkyns. And as to the Jack-Boots, you said we rid in them.
Turton. I suppose so.

Parkyns. We alighted at Mr. John's House, and so our Boots were sent thither: And these were small Horses all of them; pray will you tell the Court what siz'd Horses they were; was there ever a great Horse among them?
Turton. Never a one, I believe, that exceeded above fourteen Hands and a half, some under fourteen.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you see the Roan Gelding? What Size was that?
Turton. A small Pad that might be about thirteen and a half.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever see him come with so many Horses before?
Turton. I have seen more at the Sword and Buckler, when I lived there; and he used to inn there.

Mr. Att. Gen. How many have you seen at the Sword and Buckler?
Turton. I have seen four or five at a Time; but this is many Years ago, seven or eight Years ago, when he used to keep his Coach and four Horses, and come up with several Saddle Horses with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long have you lived at the George Inn?
Turton. About two Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe any other Horses that stood there?
Turton. There were two that were pretty sizeable Horses, larger than any of Sir William's own.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whose were they?
Turton. I cannot tell.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did any Body own them?
Turton. I don't know who owned them; there was one that paid for their Meat, and took them away.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who is that?
Turton. Truly, Sir, I cannot tell; I do not know who he was; I never saw him in my Life.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Has Sir William Parkyns any more Questions to ask him?
Parkyns. No, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we shall call no more Witnesses, unless he gives further Occasion; we leave it here till we hear what he says to it.

L. C. J. Sir William Parkyns, Mr. Attorney General, and the King's Counsel have done; now is your time to make your Defence.

Parkyns. My Lord, I rely upon your Lordship for my Defence; for I am ignorant of these Proceedings; I rely wholly upon your Lordship, to give a true Account of them to the Jury; I hope your Lordship is so just, that you will repeat the Evidence to the Jury as it is, and no otherwise. But I do not observe, that as to the Assassination there is more than one Witness, and that is Captain Porter: There is not a Tittle more! and as to that, I suppose your Lordship will declare to the Jury, that I was not concerned in it; and Captain Porter declares, I was to have no Hand in it, only I was to furnish five Horses, and accidentally I was at some Meetings, but he does not declare that I was to do any thing in particular.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, you agreed upon the Debates to the several Resolutions of Assassinating the King, and said, that it was necessary and fit to take him off.

Vol. IV.

Parkyns. Still, that is but one Witness, I deny it utterly; and the Law says positively there shall be two Witnesses.

L. C. J. Not to every Overt-Act, there is no Law says so.

Parkyns. As to the Assassination there is but one, no other but he; and so as to the Regiment, he did not say that I was to raise a Regiment; but that he was told by a Gentleman that I had been desired to be in the Matter, but I would not, because I had engaged in another Business, about a Regiment; but this was all but Hear-say.

L. C. J. Yes; he said you owned you had a Regiment. Besides, it is said, you owned you had your Saddles, and your Troop consisted of old Soldiers.

Parkyns. No, Captain Porter never said so.

Mr. Att. Gen. That was Sweet.

L. C. J. You told Porter, you had a Regiment to look after.

Parkyns. Captain Porter is here, I desire he would explain himself.

L. C. J. Yes, and you told Sweet, that your Troop consisted of old Soldiers, and that you had bought thirty Saddles.

Parkyns. My Troop, aye! But still there was nothing of a Regiment; nor did they say I had raised a Regiment, or a Troop, or was to raise a Regiment.

Sweet. You told me your Troop consisted of old Soldiers. I did not say that you said you had raised or would raise, but it did consist of old Soldiers.

L. C. J. He says that which makes it plain, that you were to have a Troop, or had a Troop, consisting of old Soldiers, besides Volunteers that had been Officers: and that you had bought a great many Saddles, thirty Saddles; and you were to go into Leicestershire; and accordingly you did go, and upon your Return, you did give an Account that all was well, and the West was as well inclined to King James's Interest as the North.

Parkyns. That I went into Leicestershire, and met several Gentlemen, and that they were all well inclined; I hope that is no Evidence of Treason against me: every Body ought to be well inclined.

L. C. J. Aye! but they were all well disposed or inclined to King James's Interest.

Parkyns. He did not say so; if your Lordship pleases to call him again,
L. C. J. Call him again.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did Sir William Parkyns tell you of his Journey into Leicestershire?
Sweet. He said he had been there, and had met his Friends, and all was well.

L. C. J. What did he say? Did he name King James?
Sweet. He did not name King James to me at that time.

L. C. J. What was the Discourse about, that they were all well inclined to?

Sweet. He always named it the King's Interest, and did not name King James; but I understood it, and always took it to be King James he meant.

Mr. Mountague. What did he say of the North and West?
Sweet. He said that the West was as well inclin'd to the King's Interest as the North.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he say before he went?
Sweet. He told me he was to go into Leicestershire to meet some of the King's Friends.

Parkyns. Pray, recollect yourself, and consider what you say.

Sweet. He said, some Gentlemen rid as far to him, as he did to meet them.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was that the Time he talked about the Troop?
Sweet. No, that was before this Time. I cannot remember the particular Time; it was at his own House, and Capt. Scudamore was with him.

Mr. Att. Gen. When was the Discourse about King James's Landing?
Sweet. He told me that he believed now that King James would land, he said he had his own Word for it; it was about Christmas.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did he say about Preparation for it?
Sweet. He said his own Troop was to consist of all old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Did he tell you he had a Troop?
Sweet. I speak his own Words; he said, My Troop consists of all old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Was it consists, or will consist, though I think there may be no great Matter of Difference in this Case?

Parkyns. Yes, my Lord, but there is a great deal, sure; for will consist shews nothing yet done, and all is but Words.

L. C. J. Sweet, Answer to Sir William Parkyns's Question.

Sweet. I tell your Lordship, I repeat his own Words, my Troop consists or is composed of all old Soldiers.

Mr. Cowper. What did he say of Volunteers?
Sweet. He said, there were some Gentlemen that would go along with him as Volunteers, that had been old Officers.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, let me ask another Question? When he discoursed of the present King, by what Name did he use to speak of him?

Sweet. He called him by the Name of the Prince of Orange.

Parkyns. Pray, recollect yourself, Mr. Sweet, and think of what you say: Since he was declared King, did I ever call him Prince of Orange? I am upon my Life, and pray speak nothing but the Truth.

L. C. J. Consider, and answer the Question, What did he use to call him?

Sweet. Truly, my Lord, I am not positive as to that, I understood it so. I never knew that he allowed him to be King of England.

Parkyns. Did you ever hear me call him Prince of Orange, since he was King?

L. C. J. Look ye, Sir, how long have you been acquainted with him?
Sweet. About three Years, my Lord.

L. C. J. Well, that is long since his Majesty was declared King; have you ever heard Sir William Parkyns call this King Prince of Orange?

Sweet. I am not positive in that, but I understood he did not allow him to be King.

Mr. Sol. Gen. You frequently discoursed with him about the Government, it seems; pray, what did he use to call him?

Sweet. I have heard him call him King William, and the Little Gentleman.

Parkyns.

Parkyns. When ever did you hear me call him the Little Gentleman? Mr. Sweet, pray, when you are upon your Oath consider well, and recollect yourself, and don't answer rashly and suddenly, but think of what you say. I always express'd myself, when I had occasion to speak of him, and called him King William, as other People use to do, I never used the Words, Little Gentleman, nor Prince of Orange neither.

L. C. J. Did you ever hear him call him otherwise than King William?

(He paused a while.)

L. C. J. Pray speak the Truth, and no more.

Sweet. I have heard him call him Prince of Orange.

L. C. J. But you have heard him call him King William too?

Mr. Sweet. Yes.

Mr. Cowper. But pray, when he spoke of the King, what King did you understand by it?

Sweet. I used to understand King James.

Parkyns. What is that to me what he understood?

L. C. J. But I would observe to you one thing, when you came from Leicestershire, you talked how well disposed they were to the King's Interest; he says, he understood that King to be King James, and you said the West was as well disposed as the North; pray now, were you employed by King William to see how the Gentlemen stood affected to him?

Parkyns. No, nor by King James neither.

L. C. J. Why then should you concern yourself for the King's Friends in the West and the North?

Parkyns. I never was in the West in my Life, and therefore I can't tell why I should tell him any thing about the West.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, when was it that Sir William Parkyns spoke about the King's landing?

Sweet. It was about Christmas, he said he believed he would land.

Parkyns. Did I tell you positively it would be so then?

Mr. Att. Gen. He tells you he said you did believe it, for you had it from his own Mouth.

Parkyns. That shews it is not probable I should tell him so; that I should have it from his own Mouth, carries such an Improbability with it, that the Evidence is Felo de se, it destroys itself.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He does not say you had it from his own Mouth, but that you had his Word for it; and this being about Christmas, long after our King was returned, it could mean no other King but King James.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir William Parkyns, there is another thing I would observe, Why did you send your Man to Kensington to one Brown? Who is that Brown? and what was the Man that lodged at the Confectioner's in Holborn?

Parkyns. I cannot tell who it was, I know neither Brown nor the other Man; but I sent my Man at the Request of Mr. Charnock, who lodged in the same House with me; he desired he might go upon an Errand for him to Kensington, and I directed him to go upon such an Errand, for he was formerly Mr. Charnock's Servant, and I desired him to go of the Errand if he requested it. Who these Men were, I know not, neither of them, nor any of their Business.

L. C. J. But he was bid by the Man that lodged at the Confectioner's to tell his Master that he would stay within for him.

Parkyns. That might be Mr. Charnock, for he was his Servant once.

L. C. J. But he says he carried the Message to you, and you received it. Well, have you any more to say?

Parkyns. My Lord, I think there is but one positive Evidence of any one Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Yes; what do you think of the Design of bringing in King James, and consulting about it, and assisting in the Invasion, and preparing a Troop, and providing Arms and Horses? Are not these Overt-Acts? Do you think your having a Troop of old Soldiers is no Overt-Act?

Parkyns. There is no positive Proof of any Troop or any Arms.

L. C. J. It is proved there were Arms sent by you at Michaelmas last to Mr. Haywood's, Charnock's Brother-in-Law, and these lay there till Alb-Wednesday last, after your Name was in the Proclamation; and then they were removed in the Night, and buried at your House, and were taken up there; and here is an Account given what Arms they were, four Dozen of Swords, twenty-five Pair of Pistols, thirty-two Carbines.

Parkyns. First, it does not appear when these Arms were brought, nor for what Intent they were brought from Haywood's.

L. C. J. But what Use had you, a private Man, for so many Arms? And then your going into Leicestershire to meet some Gentlemen, and your giving an Account how they stood affected to the King's Interest, whether that be understood for the Interest of King James, I must leave to the Jury, since you give no Account that you were employed by King William.

Parkyns. My Lord, I went upon my private Occasions, and then talked of News as other People do.

L. C. J. But when you returned back again, you declared all was well, and gave an Account how Persons were disposed in the West and North.

Parkyns. Is there any Persons named, or Particulars? Can it be an Overt-Act of Treason for me to discover my Acquaintance?

L. C. J. But your going with that Design to engage in an Interest against the King, and for the late King.

Parkyns. He does not say I discovered my Design. I went to meet with some Friends of my own.

L. C. J. Did he not tell you he was to go to Leicestershire?

Sweet. Yes, he did so.

L. C. J. Did he tell you to what purpose?

Sweet. He said he was to go to meet some of the King's Friends.

Parkyns. Did I tell you who?—Sweet. No.

L. C. J. But there was a Lord's Brother, what did he tell you of that?

Sweet. He said all Things were well, and the West was as well inclined as the North.

L. C. J. To what?—Sweet. To the King's Interest.

L. C. J. Treby. You spoke of a Lord's Brother that was concerned?

Sweet. He said several Persons of Quality in the West were concerned, and a Lord's Brother was among them.

Juryman. My Lord, I desire he may be asked, when he said the King would land, what King he meant, whether he named the late King, or King James?

L. C. J. Well, Answer that; when he discoursed to you of the King's landing, did he name the late King James? or did he say the late King James?

Juryman. Was he mentioned in the Discourse?

Sweet. He never used to mention King James to me, but only the King, which I understood always of King James.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what time was it that he spoke of the King's landing?—Sweet. It was about Christmas.

Mr. Att. Gen. Therefore no other King could be meant but King James, for there was no other King to land at that time; and he said he had the King's Word for it. I suppose he can't pretend he had King William's Word for it.

Parkyns. I hope, to talk of the King's landing is no Treason; it is but Words! If I tell an idle Story of what I think may come to pass, shall that be reckoned Treason? Then for him to say, I had it from the King's own Mouth; it is impossible to be true, and is no Overt-Act, being only Words, and cannot be reputed Treason. And then as to the other two Parts of the Charge, the Consultations with my Lord of Ailesbury, and those other Persons; there is but one Witness; nobody but Porter; neither is there any more but he for the Assassination; his Evidence is but a single Proof, and there ought to be two positive Witnesses, by the Law, to each Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Holt. No: There ought to be two Witnesses to each Species of Treason, that's all.

Parkyns. There ought to be two Witnesses to both these Parts of the Treason.

L. C. J. Holt. I must tell you, Sir William Parkyns, if any Person does design and contrive that the Realm should be invaded, or the King deposed, and another set upon the Throne, that conspiring to invade the Realm, or depose the King, are Overt-Acts of High-Treason, within the Statute of 25 Ed. III. and the same Species of Treason as designing to assassinate him is. It is compassing, designing, imagining his Death and Destruction. Now the Question is, whether there is not another Witness, besides Capt. Porter, to prove another Overt-Act of this Design?

Parkyns. I don't find there is; for all the rest is only Discourse.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, for what? Do you think providing Arms for that Purpose is only Discourse?

Parkyns. The Witnesses don't say for what Purpose the Arms were bought.

L. C. J. Holt. Nor do you tell us of any other Purpose.

Parkyns. My Lord, it does not appear when they were bought.

L. C. J. Holt. Aye, but what Occasion had you for such a Quantity of Arms?

Parkyns. My Lord, I did not buy them, after all. I found them. If I had had Liberty to have sent down for Witnesses, I could have proved that these Arms were in Boxes all rusty in my House when I first came to it.

L. C. J. Holt. Aye: But why were they buried, just at the Time when the Plot was broke out, and the whole Design discovered?

Parkyns. I can't tell, my Lord, how to help it, if they will make an ill Interpretation.

L. C. J. Holt. What Interpretation would you have us make?

Parkyns. My Lord, it is very easy to imagine, People don't care to be found with Arms at such a Time; but, however, the Having of Arms is no Treason. They are as much a Commodity as any thing else.

Mr. Att. Gen. And then the Horse coming to Town just at such a Time, and the Saddles.

Parkyns. I have not bought a Horse this two Years, and I travelled in no other Manner than I used to do. So the Groom tells ye, I used to come to Town with three or four Horses always. I never kept less than six or seven Horses this twenty Years; sometimes a great many more; and they were very little Horses, Pads, no way fit for the Service they are presumed to be for.

L. C. J. Holt. Have you any thing more to say, Sir?

Parkyns. I hope, my Lord, as to the Assassination I am clear: Perhaps the World would imagine, I have had some Inclinations to King James's Service, and perhaps they may not think amiss; but I never did any thing, nor had an Opportunity to do.

L. C. J. Holt. God be thanked you had no Opportunity.

Parkyns. And I hope my Life shall not be taken away without Proof; I hope it will be rather thought, that every one should be taken to be innocent; and it would better please the King, that I should be acquitted, than to let me be found guilty upon slight Grounds and Imaginations, of which little or nothing can be made.

L. C. J. Holt. No question of it: It will please the King and every Body else, that you should be found innocent.

Parkyns. Then I hope, my Lord, you will not strain the Law to take away my Life; according to the Rule, That it is better five guilty Men should escape, than one innocent Man suffer: For the Blood of a Man may lie upon every Body, if it be causelessly shed; and it is very severe to strain the Law to take away any Man's Life.

L. C. J. Holt. Look ye, Sir William Parkyns, I must tell you, you may be under a very great Mistake: You may think it necessary to have two Witnesses to every Overt-Act, but that is not so; for if there be one Witness to one Overt-Act, and another Witness to another Overt-Act of the same Species of Treason, that is all that the Law requires.

Parkyns. Here are two Species of Treason, levying War is one Species, and Assassination is another.

L. C. J. Holt. Your Design was, originally, the restoring of King James, and in order to that the dethroning of King William.

Parkyns. That appears but by one Witness, which is not according to Law, which requires two.

L. C. J. Holt. One way of effecting your Design was by Assassination, the other by Invasion, or by Force.

Parkyns. Still, my Lord, here is the same Witness, and that is but one.

L. C. J. Holt. Yes, there are two.

Parkyns. None but Captain Porter.

L. C. J. Holt. What, not as to the Restoring of King James, which tends to the Dethroning King William?

Parkyns. In what Particulars, my Lord?

L. C. J. Holt. Your providing Arms, and going to Leicestershire, and sending Charnock on that Errand into France. As to the Assassination, indeed, deed, there is but one positive Witness, besides other Circumstances, which have their Weight; but as to the other, you said the King would come.

Par. It was my Opinion, that's all.

L. C. J. But you said you had his Word for it.

Parkyns. Does not that answer itself, my Lord? Is it possible it should be true, that I who was in England, should have the Word of one that is at such a Distance beyond Sea?

L. C. J. And then your buying of Saddles, for what Purpose were they?

Par. My Lord, does he say it was in order to it? I am sure he does not, and I hope I shall not be presumed out of my Life.

L. C. J. When you talk'd of the King's Landing, and said, you had his Word for it; you likewise said, your Troop was made up of old Soldiers, besides Volunteers that had been Officers.

Par. Still there is nothing done; he does not say there was one Man raised.

L. C. J. And your going into Leicestershire upon such an Errand, as you told him you went upon.

Par. Well, my Lord, I must leave it to your Lordship. I hope you will consider well of it.

L. C. J. We must do that which is right between the King and his Subjects.

Par. And, I hope, my Lord, the Conversion of Subjects is more acceptable than the Destruction of them; and the Government is more concern'd to save the Innocent, than to stretch the Law to punish the Guilty.

L. C. J. It will be more acceptable, and, indeed, the King and Kingdom are very much concerned in this Matter, and at this Time, Sir William; and the Government ought to take Care to preserve itself. Have you any more to say, Sir? If you have, pray speak it.

Par. I have no more. I submit it to your Lordship: I think there is but one Witness, and all the other is but Conjecture and Nonsense; and one Witness is not sufficient, by the Law of England, for by the Statute there must be two.

L. C. J. I have told you my Opinion.

Par. Besides, your Lordship has known me this many Years, and you know that my Education was not to War and Fighting, but the Gown; and your Lordship knows how peaceably I have lived.

L. C. J. I have known you heretofore, Sir William, while you kept your Profession and your Gown.

Par. And now in my old Age, my Lord, I am grown lame, and have lost the Use of my Hands with the Gout, and scarce able almost to go on my Feet. Therefore it cannot in Reason be thought probable, that I should engage in such a Business as this; and therefore I hope you will interpret all Things in a milder Sense, in Favour of Life, rather than for the Destruction of it, and the Ruin of a Man's Fortune and Family.

L. C. J. I tell you, You have had my Opinion concerning the Number of Witnesses. I suppose my Lord and Brother will declare theirs.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lord Chief Justice, it seems, does please to have us deliver our Opinions; I think we ought to be very tender in a Case of Blood: I think the Life of Sir William Parkyns is at Stake, and we ought to be careful that he have no Wrong done him. But I think in the Cases of Treason, especially of this Nature, the Life of the King, and the Lives of all the innocent People of the Kingdom are also at Stake; and we must be indifferent in this Case, and by the Grace of God we will be so. The Question that Sir William Parkyns proposes, is, Whether there are two Witnesses upon this Evidence, to this Matter of which he is indicted, which is, the Compassing and Imagining the King's Death? One Witness, at least, does positively prove, That you Sir William Parkyns did agree to the Design of Assassinating the King's Person, and promise to provide and contribute Horses and Arms to that Purpose. Now suppose this is prov'd but by one Witness, and the Evidence had gone no farther, then your Objection would have had a very good Ground, that this could not be a legal Proof of Treason; but I must tell you, That this Treason of Compassing and Imagining the King's Death may be made evident by other Overt-Acts, besides that of Assassination: To conspire with a Foreign Prince to invade the Realm, to provide Arms, to join with Invaders, and to make an Insurrection against the King, these are Overt-Acts of Imagining the King's Death. For it cannot be supposed, but that he that would have an Invasion and an Insurrection against the King's Person, does intend the Destruction of the King; he that would take away all his Defence, which he might have by the Assistance of his Subjects, and leave him exposed to his mortal Enemies, cannot but be presumed to design the King's Ruin and Murder. Therefore, Sir William, such Things being in their Nature a Compassing and Imagining the King's Death; your providing Arms and a Troop are Evidences and Overt-Acts of this Treason; and so will your going up and down and meeting People in order to rise, if that were your Business, in Leicestershire, &c. as it seems by the Evidence it was.

Par. But that is not said, my Lord, I humbly beg your Pardon for interrupting you; it is not said, That I met them to rise, by no Evidence whatsoever; and therefore, pray, my Lord, do not enforce it beyond what the Evidence has proved; he said, I went to meet my Friends: Was there any thing said it was in order to a Rising?

L. C. J. Treby. I think you mistake your own Words, as you spoke them to the Witnesses, if I did take them, as I think I did, right, for they were several Times repeated. I will do you no Wrong, Sir William, I assure you. You went into Leicestershire, and you say, It was to meet your Friends; the Witness says, It was to meet the King's Friends; by the King, it is very plain, you meant not King William, but King James; for you spoke before of the King's Landing, which was at Christmas last, when every body knows King William was in England. These coupled together—

Par. I beg your Pardon, my Lord; those two Things are not both to be join'd together; the Discourse of the King's Landing was at Christmas, as he says; the other thing, my Journey into Leicestershire, was a Month afterwards, and therefore they cannot be coupled together.

L. C. J. Treby. The Coupling of them, that I meant, was only to shew who was understood to be spoken of by you, when you named the King; so the Question is, Whether you did not mean the same Person in January that you meant in December, by the Word King, especially since, as a Discovery you had made, you said farther, that the West was as well inclined to the King's Interest as the North, and a Lord's Brother was concerned in it? If by the King you had meant King William; how impertinent and insensible had been all this Discourse, that the West was as well inclined as the North; and that a Lord's Brother was concerned in it; concerned in what? In being inclined to King William; to what Purpose could that be said?

Par. It may as well be interpreted that Way as the other.

L. C. J. Treby. I must leave that to the Jury. And I confess, if there was not somewhat more in the Case, you might the better argue upon this as to the Interpretation. But laying aside the Consideration of your Riding into Leicestershire, &c. here is this Providing of Arms, proved by four or five Witnesses, and the Serving of them in that Manner; and there is no Account given by you, that they were provided for the Service of the Government, or that you were employ'd so to do. Certainly it is not lawful to provide Arms, especially for a whole Troop, as for aught I perceive here was, though indeed I am not skilful enough in those Businesses, to know how many make up a Troop; but it's plain here was an Insurrection intended, when the Invasion was made; and that is an Evidence that these Arms were to be employ'd upon that Account, for no other Use was to be made of them, nor is pretended. If you had found those Arms in your House (as you say) it had been your Duty to have deliver'd them up, or disposed of them to the Use and Service of the Government, which Service too, could only be when you had a Commission from the Government, and not of your own Head. And then, besides all this, you acknowledg'd that you had a Troop of old Soldiers.

Par. It is but slidingly that; for he only tells you, that a Troop would be composed of old Soldiers.

L. C. J. Treby. How can that be? when he says, he repeats your own Words, My Troop consists of old Soldiers; can any body say, that his Troop consists of old Soldiers, without having a Troop?

Par. Pray, Mr. Sweet, speak; my Life is at Stake, Did I say to you, it did consist, or it was to consist? Recollect yourself, and consider well before you speak.

L. C. J. What was it that he did say? It did consist, or it would consist?

Sweet. He said, his Troop was composed all of old Soldiers.

Par. But does it appear by any Evidence, that I had a Troop? If I had, who were they? None of these Men do appear. Does this Troop consist of Men in the Air? that I should list Men that are all in Nubibus, and not one of them to be known. Suppose I should tell him a Lye, or make some Brags, is this Treason? Here is no Person proved to be listed or named.

L. C. J. But Arms were found in your House for a Troop.

Par. But where they were bought, and when they were bought, and made ready, it does not appear; and I affirm to your Lordship, if you would give me but one Day's Time, I would prove, that they were at my House in Warwickshire when I first came down thither, which is two Years ago. And I'll fully make it out to your Satisfaction, or I'll be crucify'd, or any thing in the World. I can prove it by a great many Witnesses, by my Friends, and all the Servants that belonged to me, they were there long before this Discourse was had or thought of.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. If your Lordship expects that I should deliver my Opinion, I am ready to do it. As to this Matter of Law that Sir William Parkyns has proposed, he says, There are not two Witnesses to the same Overt-Act, and therefore no Evidence of Treason; truly, I take it, and always did, that the Law is, there need not be two Witnesses to the same Overt-Act; but if there be two Witnesses, one whereof speaks to one Overt-Act, and another to another Overt-Act of the same Species of Treason, these are two Witnesses within the Law. Now, I think, there are two Overt-Acts in the Indictment of this Treason. The Treason is Compassing the Death of the King; the Overt-Acts are first, the particular Design of the Assassination upon his Person, and the other is, the bringing in of a foreign Force, and preparing Horses and Arms to meet that foreign Force here: All to the same Intent and Purpose, the Compassing and Imagining the King's Death. Now, besides that of the Assassination, there are a great many Witnesses that prove there were Arms prepared; for there were found a great Quantity, when they opened the Boxes; which Boxes, it is plain, he himself sent down to Haywood's House: For tho' Charnock writ a Letter, yet it was by his Direction, as he own'd to Haywood, when he was here in Town. And then his Servant fetched them away from this Place, and this I take to be another Overt-Act, and proved by several Witnesses. Sir William Parkyns speaks of his being a Gown-Man; but I do not know what a Gown-Man has to do with such a Quantity of Arms.

Par. If you will give me Leave to fend for some People, I will demonstrate it to you as clear as the Sun, that they were in the House two Years ago, when I came first thither.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. There were Preparations two Years ago, it appears, for the Destruction of the King and Kingdom; however, the Men that were accused of it, had the Luck to escape and be acquitted.

Par. My Lord, I hope I shall not be interpreted out of my Life, I desire the Statute may be read.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. What Statute do you mean?

Par. The 25th of Edw. III. and the new Statute too, let them both be read to the Jury, that they may consider of it.

The Statute of the 25th of Edw. III. was read.

Par. There is nothing of two Witnesses there.

L. C. J. No; but there is another Statute of the 5th of Edw. VI. cap. 11. that may be more for your Advantage: Will you have that read?

Par. Yes, if you please; I know there is another Statute that does direct it, and I expected to have found it in this Statute.

Cl. of Ar. This is an Act made in the 5th and 6th Years of King Edw. VI.

The Statute was read to these Words, Unless without Trial he shall confess the same.

Par. There's enough.

L. C. J. You have heard the Statute read, would you infer any thing from it?

Par. I infer that there ought to be two Witnesses, and here is but one.

L. C. J. There are two Witnesses.

Par. Not direct to the same Thing.

L. C.

L. C. J. I shall leave it to the Jury, whether this Evidence does not prove an Overt-Act, to demonstrate a Design, against the King; if the Design be to depose him, and that's manifested by two Overt-Acts, undoubtedly that is Treason within the Statute of 25 of Edw. III.

Parkyns. That I agree, but yet there must be two Witnesses of it.

L. C. J. Suppose Dethroning the King be the main Design that strikes at his Life, and you resolve it shall be done one Way or other. One Way by Assassination, the other by Insurrection; or by Invasion and joining with a foreign Army.

Par. My Lord, I conceive there ought to be two Witnesses for each.

L. C. J. No, no; for that very last Act that is to take Effect in a few Days, declares it is sufficient, if there be one to one Overt-Act, and another to another; but still it must be of the same Head or Species of Treason; and deposing the King and assassinating of him, and preparing to raise an Army against him, or to excite an Invasion, are but one Sort of Treason.

Par. It may be so, if they were Overt-Acts of one Sort of Treason; but rising in Arms, and Assassination are as different Things as can be in the World, and therefore there ought to be two Witnesses to each of them.

Mr. J. Roakey. That which I deliver'd as my Opinion was, that one Witness proving one Overt-Act, and another Witness proving another Overt-Act of the same Sort of Treason, are two good Witnesses, according as the Law requires. And I am the more fully confirm'd in it, by the Clause that is in this new Act of Parliament, made for Trials in Cases of Treason, that a Man shall not be convicted of Treason, but by and upon the Oaths and Testimony of two lawful Witnesses, either both of them to the same Overt-Act, or one of them to one, and the other of them to another Overt-Act of the same Treason.

Parkyns. Of the same Treason, aye.

Mr. Just. Roakey. And here it is the imagining the Death of the King, that is the Treason.

Parkyns. Then you may say every Thing else is so; but if you please to let the whole Statute be read.

L. C. J. You shall have it read if you will; but this is all that is in it concerning this Matter. Now a Design to depose the King, which is manifested by some Overt-Act, is an Overt-Act to prove the Design of the Death of the King.

Parkyns. Then it must be manifest, and not by Interpretation; and all these Things are by Interpretation, except it be what Porter swears.

L. C. J. If by Overt-Act it be proved, that you designed his Deposition, that is an Overt-Act to prove your Design of his Death.

Parkyns. They are very different Things, Death and Depositions. We have seen a King deposed, and yet he is alive.

L. C. J. Treby. I am sure we have seen a King agreed to be assassinated, and yet, God be thanked, he is still alive.

L. C. J. It is not the Succeeding in the Design, but the Design itself that is the Treason. God forbid that it should have Success to make it Treason.

L. C. J. Treby. But whenever People will agree together to bring in foreign Forces, or to prepare Men and Arms against the King that is in Possession, this is reckoned an Overt-Act of a Design against his Life, and has always been reckoned so by my Lord Chief Justice Hales, my Lord Chief Justice Coke, and by all those Men that have been reputed the most tender in Cases of this Nature: For any Act that expresses an Intent of dethroning the King, by Means of an Invasion by a foreign Force, and an Insurrection against the King, is a proper Proof of a Design of his Destruction; and if not, then agreeing to shoot him is not an Overt-Act. Men may say also, that there need be actual Shooting to make out the Overt-Act in that Case.

Parkyns. If your Lordship pleases to have the Act read, I shall submit to your Lordship's Judgment.

L. C. J. Let it be read.

Parkyns. If you please to read the Act, the Preamble of it:

Cl. of Ar. This is an Act made in the 7th Year of our Sovereign Lord the King: Is that the Act? It is an Act for Regulating of Trials in Cases of High-Treason, and Misprision of Treason. Is that the Act?

Parkyns. Yes, yes. (The Act was read.)

Mr. Just. Roakey. I believe if you look into the great Case in Parliament, the Case of my Lord Stafford, you'll find it was declar'd for Law, that one Witness to one Overt-Act, and another Witness to another Overt-Act of the same Treason, they were two Witnesses within the Law, and this was a solemn Resolution in Parliament in the House of Lords.

Par. I believe it has been done; but there is a beneficial Law made, which if my Trial had been put off a few Days, I should have had the Benefit of it.

L. C. J. It would have been the same Thing as to this Matter, for this Act declares the very same Thing, as to the two Witnesses.

Parkyns. And then, my Lord, I could have had Witnesses to have taken off a great Part of this Evidence, and the Law comes to take Effect within one Day, and it turns here upon this Matter of Sweet, who is not a good Evidence; for it is manifest he has contradicted himself, and it is manifest he has sworn what cannot be true.

L. C. J. Wherein?—Parkyns. That I should say the King would land here, for I had his Word for it.

Mr. Just. Roakey. You might have his Word, and not delivered by his own Mouth; there are other Ways to convey a Man's Word besides speaking.

Parkyns. But then we don't call it his Word, that's Hearsay.

Mr. Just. Roakey. If a Man write his Note that he will do such a Thing, we may very well say, we have his Word for it.

L. C. J. It is not impossible but that you might speak with him.

Parkyns. It is impossible I should speak from hence to France.

L. C. J. You might have been over with him; I believe a great many others have, and it's proved Mr. Charnock went over.

Mr. Just. Roakey. If any Man should have said at the latter End of the last Month, I believe that there was an Assassination intended against the King, because I have his Word for it, merely from reading his Speech to the Parliament, wherein he affirms that he had several Proofs of it, that had been a proper Expression, tho' he did not hear the King speak it.

Parkyns. Yes, if he had the Speech to produce.

Mr. Just. Roakey. Then if it come by Letter, or Message, or common Fame, he might send you Word by particular Messenger.

Parkyns. Yes, if there was any such Authority as that it were true. But he has manifestly contradicted himself, and Captain Porter swears for his own Life, and I must leave it to you, whether they are to be believed.

Mr. Just. Roakey. Captain Porter's Testimony has been sufficiently confirmed by the Acknowledgment of dying Persons.

L. C. J. Well, Have you any more to say, Sir William Parkyns?

Parkyns. No, my Lord, I submit it to your Lordship's Direction.

L. C. J. Then what say you to it, Mr. Attorney, or Mr. Solicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel for the King in this Matter, and it is my Turn to sum up the Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar: He stands indicted for compassing the Death of the King, for designing to depose the King, for promoting a foreign Invasion, for intending an Insurrection here at home, and for aiding and abetting the King's Enemies, and for doing what he could to procure the Subjection of his own Country to Foreigners and Strangers.

Gentlemen, some of these Crimes run into one another; designing the Death of the King by Assassination, and designing to depose the King, amount to one and the same Thing with compassing and imagining the Death of the King.

My Lords the Judges have given you their Opinion in that Point of Law, and I think it is agreeable to all the Resolutions that have been since the Making of the Statute of 25 of Edw. III. I think that it has been explained so in the Time of Richard the Second; but this I am sure of, that it was so resolv'd in the Time of Harry the Fourth, when there was a Design to set up Richard the Second again, and it was adjudged to be High-Treason in compassing and imagining the Death of the King. For deposing the King, is destroying him in his politick Capacity, as much as Assassination and Murdering of him is destroying him in his natural Capacity; and the Conspirators in such Cases know what the great End is they aim at, to subvert the Government as it is established by Law, whereby every Man enjoys his own Property, and the Freedom of his Person, and those that will be quiet may have their Liberty and Property preserved entire to them; but some People are so very impatient of submitting to the Law, that they cannot be content to be in Servitude themselves, but they must needs do all they can to bring it upon their Fellow-Subjects. And it were very well if that those who were in Love with Slavery, would but go to some other Places, where they may have enough of it, and not bring it upon those who are so little desirous of such a Thing, as we are, and I hope always shall be.

Gentlemen, to prove Sir William Parkyns Guilty of this Treason, whereof he stands indicted, we have produced several Witnesses; and first there is Mr. Porter, and he tells you Sir William Parkyns told him he had seen a Commission from King James, written with his own Hand, for making War against the Person of King William.

Parkyns. Sir, I beg your Pardon for interrupting you, but there was not one Word of that said; here is Mr. Porter, pray ask him, if ever I saw a Commission from King James.

L. C. J. Porter did say so, if I remember any Thing Porter said; you told him you had read the Commission, and it was written with his own Hand.

Parkyns. All that I heard of it was, that when I was desired to make one in the Assassination, I refused it because I said I was busy about the Matter of my Regiment.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray call Porter again. (Capt. Porter came in.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Capt. Porter, will you give the Court and the Jury an Account what you heard Sir William Parkyns say about the Commission that came from King James?

Capt. Porter. I ask'd Mr. Charnock why I might not see the Commission, and he told me he had never seen it himself, but Sir William Parkyns had. I did ask Sir William Parkyns, whether he had seen it, and he told me he did see it, and read it, and it was to raise War against the Person of the Prince of Orange.

Mr. Att. Gen. Whose Hand was it in, did he say?

Capt. Porter. It was written with King James's own Hand.

Parkyns. This was my Mistake, I thought he had said I told him I had a Commission for a Regiment.

Mr. Mountague. Did he give any Reason, why it was written with King James's own Hand?—Capt. Porter. We used to say amongst ourselves, it was, because he would not trust any of his Ministers with it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I would not do Sir William Parkyns any Wrong, but only sum up what is material in the Evidence given against him. I remember very well Mr. Porter said, Mr. Charnock told him Sir William Parkyns had seen the Commission, but I would not offer that as Evidence against the Prisoner what another told him, but he says besides that Sir William Parkyns told him himself, that he had seen it, and that it was written with King James's own Hand. He says that they had several Meetings together, Sir William Parkyns, and a great many others; and he names the Places, the Naggs-Head in Covent-Garden, the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden; he tells you particularly, that it was agreed that King (who was executed), and Knighly, and himself should go and view a Place that should be proper for the Assassination, and to give a Report to the Prisoner, and the rest of the Conspirators, what they thought the most proper Place; and that accordingly they did view the Place, and came home at Night, and met the Company, whereof Sir William Parkyns was one; and they gave an Account how the Place was viewed, and which was thought most proper, and then all the Company agreed to it. He says indeed, that Sir William Parkyns was not one that was to execute it in his own Person, but one Sadamore was to be the Man employed by him; and he did say it was a Thing that was very necessary to be done, and would facilitate the Introduction of King James, and the bringing him back again: And there is likewise this concurring Evidence of Mr. Porter's with what I shall observe by and bye, that Sir William Parkyns was to procure five Horses, three whereof he was to mount himself, and two he was to send Captain Porter to mount; and if there were further Occasion he could procure more from Mr. Lewis, Gentleman of the Horse to my Lord Feversham; and accordingly we have produced to you two Witnesses, Freeman and Turton, the one a Tapster, the other an Hostler that lived at the George-Inn in Holbourn, who give you an Account that upon Friday before the first Day that was designed for the Assassination, there did come three Horses to Town, for Sir William Parkyns; but it being put off upon the Disappointment, they were sent out of Town again. Upon the Friday afterwards, the Day before the Discovery, then there were four Horses brought to Town, and a 5th was of Mr. Lewis, which was a Roan Gelding.

Park. Pray, Sir, will you please to observe what Sort of Horses they were; and particularly the Height of them, that it may be known how fit they were for this Business.

*Mr. Ser. Gen. I will do you no Wrong, Sir William, if I can help it. The Jury have heard the Evidence; and by and bye they will hear my Lord's Directions: But they do say there were 4 brought to Town, and a 5th was sent; a Roan Gelding; first, the Witness said the Horse came from Montague-House, but then presently he recollected himself, and acknowledged the Mistake; and afterwards said it was from Somerſet-Houſe. So there were the 5 Horses, 3 whereof Sir William Parkyns was to mount, and a Captain Porter, as he himself says; and these Facts I instance in, as making a concurring Evidence, and very near to two Witnesses to prove this Part of the Conspiracy.*

*Then, Gentlemen, Captain Porter goes further, and says, that he had heard (but Sir William Parkyns did not tell him so himself) that Sir William Parkyns had a Commission to raise a Regiment of Horse, and was preparing so to do, against the Time of the Invasion, to join with the Forces that were to come from abroad. To confirm which, we have called Mr. Sweet to give you an Account that he had been acquainted with Sir William Parkyns for three Years, and that he had often talk'd with him about the King, that is, his present Majesty, whom he called the Prince of Orange, and the Little Gentleman; and about King James, whom he used to call always King; and he said the King was to land very speedily, and that he had a Troop which consisted of old Soldiers, and that there were several Volunteers that were Officers; he said he was to take a Journey into Leicestershire, and accordingly he went; and when he returned back again he said, the West and the North were very well inclined to the King's Interest, or to that Purpose. And to strengthen his Evidence we prove, that he did go accordingly into Leicestershire, and we prove it by his Servant that went with him, where he met with several Persons, particularly one Yarborough, and a Parson; what they did transact the Servant cannot prove, but he is a concurring Witness to prove, that he went into Leicestershire; and we have all the Reason in the World to believe that he went on that Errand that he spoke of before, that is, to meet the King's Friends, as he called King James. And then there is a further concurring Evidence of his having a Regiment, or a Troop, it is not material, whether it be one or the other; and that is the Matter of the Arms, 4 Dozen of Swords, 32 Carbines, 35 Cases of Pistols, that were hid in the Garden of his House: And these Arms we have traced further, he sent them from his House to Haywood's House; there he thought they would not lie safe, and therefore Sir William Parkyns sends for them privately; they were to come away at Night, and be brought back to his House, and they were accordingly brought back in the Night to his House, and there they were buried; and the same Person saw them taken up afterwards, which brought them to Sir William Parkyns's House, and proves they were the same Boxes that were buried, and which upon Opening proved to be these Arms, that were first sent to Haywood's, and afterwards brought back to his own House.*

So that this, Gentlemen, is a concurring Evidence both to what Sweet says, and to what Porter says; and those are the Two Witnesses to this Part of the Treason, that there was a Provision of Arms and Men for this Purpose, which he said he had a Commission for.

Now, Gentlemen, against all this he makes but a very small Objection.

As to the Matter of two Witnesses to every Overt-Act, that has been over-ruled by the Court; and as to the Arms, he says he found them at his House when he first came to it; and then they were old rusty Arms, but of this he gives you no manner of Evidence. But if they were there when he came to the House, how came he at this Time of Day to hide them, and secrete them? Why might they not be as publick now as they were before he came, which he has had Time enough to prepare to prove since the Finding of them? And he does not give you so much as any colourable Reason why he so secreted them. And therefore 'tis a most just and violent Suspicion, that they were for the Purposes that the Witnesses have given you an Account of; and you have Reason to believe they were provided for to arm that Number of Men, which he was to raise to assist the French when they came to land here. So that if you believe what the Witnesses have sworn, you cannot say but that he is guilty of the Treason charg'd upon him; and we doubt not you'll find him so.

Mr. Cowper. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of the same Side of Counsel for the King. Sir William Parkyns has given us a good Caution, which I shall take care to observe: And that is, not to strain either Fact, or Law, to his Prejudice. But, my Lord, when such a Matter as this, a Crime of this Nature, is so far proved against the Prisoner at the Bar, that nobody can in his private Judgment reasonably acquit him; then I think it a good Piece of Service to the Public to make the Matter so plain, that it may be put beyond all Manner of Doubt, both for the Ease of the Jurors, and for the Satisfaction of all others that hear this Trial.

My Lord, Sir William Parkyns has truly divided his Indictment into two Parts, the one that accuses him of being concerned in the Assassination, and the other that accuses him of being concerned in Inviting the French into the Kingdom, and Engaging to meet them with an armed Force.

*My Lord, As to the first Part, I must do Sir William Parkyns that Right, that there is but one positive Evidence as to the Assassination; but that Evidence tells ye he agreed to it at several Meetings; nay, that he was one who said it was necessary to be done, in order to the other Design he was engaged in, the facilitating the Landing of the French, and King James his Descent and Restauration. There is, I say, indeed, but one Witness of that Matter, but the Evidence of that one Witness is confirmed by many concurring Circumstances; by his sending for Horses to Town the Day before the first Saturday, when this execrable Treason was to have been executed; by sending them out of Town again that Day upon the Disappointment; by sending for them again the Friday before the second Saturday that the King was to have been assassinated; by his having more Horses than were usual with him that Day; by his taking care then of three Horses that were none of his own, and one of them brought very suspiciously from Somerſet-House; and that all these eight Horses should be immediately hurried and carried away upon the Disappointment the second Saturday, and nothing ever heard of them afterwards. I say one of* *them was brought very suspiciously; for, my Lord, you observe it came from Somerſet-House, and was sent by Lewis according to the Prisoner's Promise to Capt. Porter, which Lewis, it is apparent by all the Witnesses of this Matter, was privy to this Design.*

My Lord, there is another Circumstance besides this, which, I think, has not been observed; and that is, his sending for Sweet up to Town before the second time that the King was to have been assassinated; he came up indeed before both the times: The first time he was told by the Prisoner, he had once designed to have used him in a Business; but upon second Thoughts he had Compassion for his Family. And when he came the second time, he was first ask'd what Condition he had left his Family in, whether he had provided them Money. He said No; and there upon he was chid: And the Prisoner said, he might then as well have staid at home. All these Circumstances, besides the one positive Evidence, favour strongly of his having a great Hand in the Design of Assassinating the King.

*But then, my Lord, As to the other Part; his Inviting the French, and preparing to meet them, that is positively proved by two Witnesses. Capt. Porter tells you, That the Prisoner was at the two Meetings in Leadenhall-Street, and St. James's-Street, where it was expressly resolved by all that were present, and the Prisoner among the rest, to send Charnock over to invite the French to invade this Kingdom, and to promise to meet King James at his Landing with two thousand Horse. He swears, That Sir William Parkyns did particularly agree to what was resolved upon at both the Consults. And Sweet tells you, that he had prepared for the same Design; for that Sir William Parkyns told him the King would land, he had his Word for it; and he himself had a Troop of old Soldiers. My Troop does consist (he spoke it in the present Tense; for it being a Doubt, Sir William Parkyns did himself that Right as to examine the Witnesses again, and he repeated it as his Words) My Troop consists of old Soldiers, or is composed of old Soldiers; and he was to have several Volunteers that had been Officers.*

My Lord, These two positive Witnesses are Evidence that goes to the same Species of Treason, nay, to the same Design, the raising a Rebellion, and the Deposing the King, which is Killing him in his politick Capacity; I say, these Two go home to the same Design.

*And, my Lord, this Evidence upon this Branch of the Indictment, is corroborated too by very strong Circumstances. There is a Journey to Leicester, which Sweet speaks of, that Sir William Parkyns told him he would undertake: This Journey it is proved by his Servants that he did undertake; that he met there with several Persons, and came back and made his Report to Sweet of the Success of his Journey, and how well disposed the King's Friends were, by which Name he always meant King James; for when he spoke of our present King, he called him the Little Gentleman, or sometimes King William, and sometimes, as the Witness at last said positively, the Prince of Orange: But when he spoke of the King, without any thing else, he always meant King James; and besides, he spoke of a King that was beyond Sea at Christmas last, which could not be King William, who was then, and had been in England so long before.*

*My Lord, the Prisoner in his Defence says, That this Servant of his that went with him into Leicestershire, had been formerly Charnock's Servant, and was sent by Charnock with the Message to Kensington, and not by him. Yet I must observe, that the Evidence swore positively he was sent by Sir William Parkyns, his Master, and brought the Note in the Almanack back to the Person to whom he was directed to carry it, who lodged at the Confectioner's House; and when he had so done, that the Person that lodged at the Confectioner's did not remit him to Charnock, but to his Master Sir William Parkyns, with a Message that he would be at Home, and stay there ready, whenever he should have occasion for him; and this was upon the very Saturday the King was to have been assassinated.*

*My Lord, Sir William Parkyns has complained, that if he could have had his Evidence here, he could have proved the Arms had been two Years in his House, and that he found them there when he came thither first. If we should admit that Matter, we might confess, and avoid it; for it is apparent that these Arms were on this Occasion put up in a suspicious Manner in Boxes, and sent to Haywood's (who is a suspicious Person, by reason of his Relation to Charnock, upon whose Letter and Recommendation they were received), and concealed till the Plot was disappointed; and then they were carried away from that Place, and buried in Sir William Parkyns's own Garden. This was just after the Breaking out of the Plot; and they were buried for the better securing them as choice Goods. And whereas the Prisoner says they were old and rusty when he found them, it now appears they were clean and new-furnished Arms, and the Hilt was off the Swords, and packed together.*

My Lord, he has Recourse to another Argument in the last Place, the most moving, I must confess, of all, and that is the Argument of Pity: He has spoke of his Education in the Profession of the Gown, of his Infirmities, his Age, and his Family. Arguments of Pity I am very unfit to give an Answer to, and should be very unwilling to extinguish any Motions of it; but this I must observe, even by Way of Answer to that Argument, That the Time was when he should have pitied himself, and not engaged in such an abominable and merciless a Design; That he should have had Pity upon his Country, which he plotted to bring under the greatest Confusion and Desolation; That he should have had Pity upon the best of Kings, and the best of Men; but then there was no Pity, when they thought they had laid their Designs so that they had him in their Power, but they resolved barbarously to murder him, and persisted in the Resolution of Assassinating him after they were once disappointed; That, it seems, did not discourage them, but they undertook it a second Time; and it does not appear that they ever had any Remorse at last for it; but the Plot broke out, and so their whole Design was frustrated.

My Lord, This is the Sum, I think, of his Defence; I have, as well as I was able, given an Answer to the Objections made to it, and I must now leave it with you, Gentlemen of the Jury: And tho' these Considerations that I have mentioned may not quite remove all Compassion, yet they may serve to confirm you in a Resolution of doing the King, and Kingdom, and yourselves Justice; and that is all we ask of you.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, Sir William Parkyns is indicted of High-Treason, for Designing, Imagining, and Compassing the Death of the present King. There have been several Witnesses produced that have given Evidence upon this Indictment; the first of them is Mr. Porter, who has been a Witness heretofore against several upon the like Occasion; and he gives you this Account, That about the latter End of May, or the Beginning of June last, there was a Meeting of divers Persons at the Old King's-Head Tavern in Leadenhall-street, in the City, where they dined together; and there was Sir William Parkyns, Captain Porter himself, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, and divers others that he has mentioned to you. At that Meeting they did consult together, which Way the late King James might be restored, and it was thought very necessary that there should be a French Force sent over hither to join with others for his Restoration. And they did among themselves agree and determine, what Number of Forces might be convenient for that Purpose; they did propose 10000; 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons; and that a Message should be sent over to King James, to persuade him to solicit the French King to furnish him with such a Number of Men, to be sent over into England. Mr. Charnock, that was then in the Company, was the Person agreed upon among them to be the Messenger to be sent upon this Errand; which Employment he did undertake, upon their Promise, that they would raise among themselves 2000 Horse for to meet the late King at his Landing.

This being at that Time determined, and Mr. Charnock having accepted this Employment, he did make Preparation to go upon this Errand. In some Time after (a Week or a Fortnight, or thereabouts) there was another Meeting, at which were several of the same Persons that were present at the former, and among them Sir William Parkyns was one: And this Meeting was at one Mrs. Mountjoy's, that keeps a Tavern in St. James's-street, where they did discourse of what they had formerly agreed upon, and did again consider, whether they should proceed to send Mr. Charnock with that Message; to which they all agreed, that Mr. Charnock should go, and he accordingly went: And Captain Porter met him about five or six Weeks after the Meeting at Mrs. Mountjoy's; and Charnock told him he had been in France, and that since his Return he had been with the several Persons who had sent him, and had acquainted them with the Answer of K. James; which was, That at that Juncture of Time the French King had such Occasion for his Forces, that he could not spare them, or furnish him with so many to come over here. This is the first Matter that Porter gives you an Account of.

But then Captain Porter tells you farther, how the Design of Assassinating the King was set on Foot about the latter End of January, or the Beginning of February last; about which Time Sir George Barclay was sent over with a Commission from the late King James; which seems to have given great Encouragement to that Party of Men: For Sir George Barclay, Captain Porter, and Sir William Parkyns, with divers others, had several Meetings at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, the Nag's-Head Tavern in Covent-Garden, the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and other Places. And at these Meetings they entred into Consideration, what was the best Way to restore the late King James to the Throne; and it was agreed among them, that the best Means for the effecting that Restoration would be to kill King William, which they resolved to undertake; and at these Debates and Resolutions Sir William Parkyns, the Prisoner at the Bar, was present. Captain Porter being asked whether Sir William Parkyns, at these Consults, did consent to the King's Murder, he said they did all agree to the Assassination of the King; and Sir William Parkyns said, he thought it was very necessary to be done, to facilitate the Restoration of the late King.

Gentlemen, This Design of Assassinating the King being thus resolved upon, the next Thing considered among them was, how it might be effected. There were several Ways proposed: One was by an Ambuscade; for the King having a House in the Country by Richmond, his Majesty used to go once a Week a-hunting thereabout, and to return at Night; and therefore an Ambuscade on that Side of the Water, near the House, was proposed. Then another Proposal was made to fall upon the Guards on this Side the Water, and at the same Time that the King's Coach was to be set upon. And these two Places being proposed, there was some Difference of Opinion among them; whereupon it was agreed that some Persons should be sent to view the Ground on both Sides the Water, which Persons were Captain Porter, King that was executed, and one Knightley: And so some Days before the 15th of February they did go on both Sides the Water, and viewed the Ground, and return'd in the Evening to the Nag's-Head Tavern, according to Agreement; where were met together Sir George Barclay, Mr. Charnock, and the Prisoner at the Bar Sir William Parkyns. And there they made their Report of their View of the Ground; upon which both the Proposals were debated; and at last they did all agree that the Attack should be made upon the King on this Side of the Water, in a Lane that was between Brentford and Turnham-Green; and the Attack upon the Guards was likewise to be made thereabouts.

Sir William Parkyns was to furnish five Horses, whereof three of them were to be mounted by Men of his own providing; the other two were to be mounted by Men of Captain Porter's providing; Mr. Porter, Mr. Charnock, and one Rookwood were to be principally engaged in Attacking the Guards. The Number of Men agreed upon for the whole were about Forty, or few more, and Sir George Barclay was to have a Party out of them all, of about Eight; and as those others went to fall upon and charge the Guards, Sir George Barclay, with his Party of Men, was to attack the King in his Coach, and by shooting into the Coach to kill the King and all that were with him.

The Time agreed upon for putting this Design in Execution was on Saturday the 15th of February. That Day it was expected the King would go a-hunting. And two Men were planted at Kensington to give Notice when the King went; and upon such Notice, these Men were to march out in small Parties, and to lodge in the Inns and Publick-Houses about Brentford and Turnham-Green, upon Notice of the King's Return from the other Side of the Water, and Sir George Barclay was to be in Readiness to set upon the Coach in the Lane; and the other Party to attack the Guards.

But this horrid Design was very happily discovered, which prevented the King's going abroad on that Day; and though they were disappointed for that Time, yet the Design was not at an End: But their Resolutions continue to make the like Attempt when they could have another Opportunity. And for that Purpose there was another Meeting; as Captain Porter tells you, upon the Friday following, at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, at which Sir William Parkyns, Sir George Barclay, Rookwood, and Charnock, and Captain Porter, were present; and they did agree to attack the King and the Guards the next Day, in the same Place and Manner that they had formerly agreed upon. But by good Providence the King had Notice of it, so that he did forbear to go abroad that Day; whereby these Conspirators were totally disappointed of their barbarous and villainous Design which they had resolved upon, and had made such Preparations to compass.

It is true, Captain Porter does tell you, Sir William Parkyns was not to be one that should be actually present at the Assassination; but he was to furnish five Horses; three of them to be mounted by Men of his own providing, and two by Men that Captain Porter was to provide. And you are told positively that Captain Porter, at this last Meeting, did complain that two of his Horses were fallen lame, and acquainted Sir William Parkyns with it; and he promised to help him to two more by the means of one Lewis that was Gentleman of the Horse to my Lord Feversham.

Then you are told, that Sir William Parkyns sent to Sweet to come to Town the 11th of February, and Sweet comes to Town accordingly on Wednesday the 12th of February; and then he had Discourse with Sir William Parkyns at his Lodgings; where Sir William told him, that because of his Family, he would not employ him in the Business he intended for him, and therefore bid him go home again; and withal directed him to return to Town the Friday following, and order his Groom to bring his Horses to Town; he mentioned three Horses which should be the strongest he had. The Groom brought up the three Horses, and Sweet came to Town with him, and staid till Saturday. Sir William Parkyns said, he thought to go out of Town in the Afternoon, but did not, but staid till Monday, when he went out of Town.

But upon the Friday following the Horses of Sir William Parkyns were brought to Town again, which now were Four, and were set up at the George Inn in Holbourn; and it appears that Mr. Lewis furnished one Horse; for there were five Horses upon the Account of Sir William Parkyns, of which a Roan Horse was one, which came from Somerset-House. This is proved by the Hostler; and that Lewis himself came in on Saturday in the Afternoon to inquire for Sir William Parkyns; but he was gone, and the Horses were taken away, and he once came with Sir William Parkyns to the Inn. These are Circumstances that do concur with and confirm Captain Porter's Evidence concerning the providing Horses for this Design.

Then there is another Particular of Captain Porter's Evidence concerning the Commission from King James, which is remarkable: It was told you, that he askt Charnock whether he had seen the Commission: He said, No, but Sir William Parkyns had: And Sir William Parkyns was askt by Porter, as they were sitting by the Fire-Side, whether he had seen the Commission; and Sir William Parkyns answered, that he had seen it, and had read it, and it was written with King James's own Hand; and that the Substance of it was to make War upon the Person of the present King, who was called in the Commission, as you may suppose, the Prince of Orange. So that, Gentlemen, as to the Design of the Assassinating the King, and of this Commission, which was understood by them to be for that Purpose, this is the Sum and Substance of Porter's Evidence, so attended with and confirmed by these Circumstances, as you have heard.

Besides, the other Witness, Sweet, who was a great Acquaintance of Sir William Parkyns, tells you, That about Christmas last he was informed by Sir William Parkyns, that the King would come, which he understood to be meant of King James. He asked Sir William Parkyns, how he knew it? and he said, He had his Word for it; and that his Troop consisted of old Soldiers, and he had thirty Saddles; and besides, there would be some Volunteers, which were Old Officers. Then he said, He was to go into Leicestershire, and he did go with one Scudamore; and this was in January, about the latter End, as I remember. They lay that Night at Stony-Stratford, and the next Night at Leicester, and Scudamore went with him; and afterwards one Yarborough, and a Parson, came to him out of Yorkshire: And when he came back he said, He found all there to be very well; and the West was as well inclined to the King's Interest as the North; and a Lord's Brother was concerned.

Then in the next Place you are told, That at Michaelmas last Mr. Charnock did write a Letter to one Haywood, who had married his Sister, and lived near Sir William Parkyns in Warwickshire, to desire him to receive some Goods into his House that were to come from Sir William Parkyns, and lay them up very carefully; for they were choice Goods, which Sir William durst not leave in his own House, because he had left it. And accordingly there were these Boxes and Chests sent to Haywood's, and received by him into his House, where they continued till the latter End of February. Haywood about this Time, when the Design of the Assassination was on Foot, met with Sir William Parkyns in Town, and asked him how he would dispose of those Goods? Thereupon Sir William Parkyns sent his Servant into the Country; and Notice was given on Ash-Wednesday, the Wednesday after the first Proclamation that issued upon the Discovery of this Conspiracy, that these Goods should be removed: And a Man, in the Evening, went to Haywood's House with a Cart and Horses, and removed these Chests; they were three in Number; and those being opened, there were eight lesser ones taken out, and carried away about Nine or Ten a-Clock at Night to Sir William Parkyns's House in Warwickshire, where they were buried in the Garden, and afterward were dug up; which was at the Searching Sir William's House upon the breaking out of the Plot; and when they were opened, it did appear what Sort of Goods they were: They were Arms, a considerable Quantity of them; Four Dozen of Swords without Hilts, Twenty-five Pair of Pistols, and a great Number of Carbines, Thirty-two as I remember, and a Parcel of Hilts pack'd up in a Box by themselves. This, Gentlemen, is sworn to you by the Persons that were present at the Digging them up, and Opening the Boxes.

Then, Gentlemen, you are told, That though Sir William Parkyns pretends they were Arms that he found in the House when he came thither, yet they were not old rusty Arms, as he pretends, but they were very bright, and fit for Use and Service.

There is one Circumstance more that seems to affect Sir William Parkyns, about the Business of the Assassination; and that is proved by Eubank, Sir William's own Servant. There was a Note sent upon Saturday, the 22d of February in the Morning, to one Brown at Kensington, by Sir William Parkyns's Man; and this Brown writ in the Servant's Almanack, that he would be in Town himself in a little Time, and bid him carry it to a Man that lodged at a Confectioner's over-against Gray's-Inn Gate in Holbourn: Sir William Parkyns's Man accordingly goes to this Confectioner's, and speaks with the Person there that he was directed to go to; and he says he was a Scotch Man, and talked broad like a Scotch Man, and he bid him go and tell his Master, That he would stay within for him till he came: and he did accordingly.

Gentlemen, This is the Sum and Substance of the Evidence that is given against Sir William Parkyns. Now you are to consider what Sir William says for himself: He does admit, and agree, That what Porter says is very positive and full; but that is but the Evidence of one Witness: For, says he, by the Law no Person ought to be convicted of High-Treason upon the Testimony of one Witness. As to the Matter of Law he is in the right: No Man ought to be convicted of Treason upon the Testimony of a single Witness. Now, first suppose the Design to assassinate the King had not been proved; consider then whether there be not Two Witnesses besides. Porter proves, That Charnock was sent into France, by Sir William Parkyns, and others, upon that Errand; to which, if you add the Testimony of Sweet, that swears, that Sir William Parkyns told him the King would come, and he had a Troop, and had bought Saddles; and what is said concerning his going into Leicestershire, and his having a Quantity of Arms: If all which be understood in Pursuance of the Design against his present Majesty, then there are at least Two Witnesses of several Overt Acts of the same Treason.

For, Gentlemen, I must tell you, tho' there had been no Evidence of a Design to Assassinate the King, but the Design and Purpose had been to Depose him, and set the late King upon the Throne, or join with a Force to invade the Realm, that is High-Treason within the Statute of 25 Edw. the Third, as being a Designing the Death and Destruction of the King. There hath been a full Proof by Two Witnesses, if what Sweet, and the other Witnesses besides Porter say, to prove Sir William Parkyns to be concerned in that Design, which shall be considered further of by and bye.

But in the next Place, suppose that the Meetings at the King's-Head in Leadenhall-Street, and at Mountjoy's, had not been proved; but the Design to Assassinate the King is proved by one Witness, and the providing Men and Arms to fight against him is proved by one other Witness; this is a Proof of the same Treason: For though the Overt Acts be several, yet they both tend to the same End, the Destruction of the King, though in a different Manner; and though the Law requires two Witnesses to the same Sort of Treason, yet it does not require two Witnesses to any one Overt Act. For if one Witness prove one Overt Act at one Time, and another Witness prove another Overt Act at another Time, these are two Witnesses within the Meaning of the Law; and so it has been always practised, and never denied to be Law that I know of.

Besides, it is observable upon this Point, which my Brother has mentioned, That this new Act of Parliament, which does not yet take Effect, provides, that there shall be either two Witnesses to one Overt Act, or one Witness to one, and another to another of the same Species of Treason; and you have had the Opinion of all of us now that are here, that these are Overt Acts of one and the same Species of Treason.

But then Sir William Parkyns objects, That Sweet does not prove any Overt Act. Now for that, you are to consider the Force of Sweet's Evidence, who tells you the Discourse of Sir William Parkyns, about Christmas last, of the King's Coming, of his Saddles, and of his Troop consisting of old Soldiers, and Volunteers that were old Officers. But says Sir W. Parkyns, this is only Words, and Words are not Treason. But then consider, that they are Words that relate to Acts and Things. You hear he had a great Quantity of Arms, beyond what he, as a private Man, could have Occasion for, or would use. He does not give you any Account what he was to do with those Arms, or to what Purpose he should keep them, nor why he caused them to be removed in the Night, after they had lain privately in Haywood's House, and caused them to be carried back to his own House, and buried them in the Ground, and at such a Time when there was a Plot, and after the Plot was discovered, and a Proclamation out for his own Apprehension.

Sir William Parkyns's Discourse with Sweet, of King James's Coming, and his Troop consisting of such Men, plainly shews what those Arms were for. For, Gentlemen, Men's Discourses and their Words explain their Actions; and an indifferent Action in itself may be so explained by Words, that it will be unlawful. It is lawful for a Man to buy a Pistol; but if it can be plainly proved from his Words or his Speeches, that the Design of Buying it was to use it against the Person or Life of the King, that will be an Overt Act. Now, when Sir William Parkyns said, The late King would come, and that he had a Troop which consisted of such Soldiers; then these Arms being found in that Manner, I must leave to your Consideration whether it is not a Proof, for what Purpose he did provide them, and to what Use he intended to put them; especially since he gives you no Account, what Use or Occasion he had for them. He says, indeed, he found them in the House two Years ago; how probable that is, you may consider.

Then there is another Thing, his Going into Leicestershire with Scudamore, and his Meeting there with Yarborough and other People in that private and hasty Manner. He went out on the Thursday, and came Home again upon Monday Night; and then he meets with Sweet, and tells him that all was well; and the West was as well inclined to the King's Interest as the North. What King must he mean? He had no Commission from King William to go into Leicestershire to discourse with People, to see how they stood affected to his Interest. Sweet comes and tells you, that when Sir William Parkyns spoke of the King, he understood he meant King James. I must leave it to your Consideration, how you will interpret these Words.

It is true, Gentlemen, it is not fit there should be any strained or forced Construction put upon a Man's Words or Actions, when he is tried for his Life. You ought to have a full and satisfactory Evidence to convince you, that he is Guilty, before you pronounce him so; but however, you are to consider the Nature of Things, and the Circumstances that attend them. If you can suppose that he went into Leicestershire to King William's Friends, and that he was of Opinion, the West was as well affected to King William as the North; then you make a different Construction from Sweet, who tells you, that always when he spoke of the King, he understood it of King James; and at Christmas, when he spoke of the King's Coming, it must be meant King James; for King William was here before, and he pretends not he had any Authority to raise a Troop for King William.

So that, Gentlemen, I must leave it to you upon the whole Matter; if you are satisfied, that Sir William Parkyns is guilty of the Matters of which he stands charged, you will find him guilty; you have heard the Evidence, and will consider of it; and if, upon the whole, you are not satisfied that he is guilty of the Matters charged in this Indictment; then you are to acquit him.

Then an Officer being sworn to keep the Jury according to Custom, they withdrew to consider of their Verdict, and in less than Half an Hour returned into Court.

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen of the Jury, Answer to your Names. William Northey—

Mr. Northey. Here.

(And so of the rest.)

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, are you all agreed on your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who shall say for you?—Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Ar. Sir William Parkyns, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner; how say ye, is he guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?—Foreman. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

L. C. J. Jaylor, look to him, he is found Guilty of High-Treason.

Cl. of Ar. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You say that Sir William Parkyns is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, but that he had no Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge, and so you say all?—Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, the Court discharges you, and thanks you for your Service.

While the Jury was withdrawn to consider of the Verdict, Sir John Freind was brought from Newgate to the Bar, in order to his being called to Judgment, and after the Verdict, he address'd himself to the Court thus: Freind. My Lord, I humbly beseech your Lordship to give me leave to read this Paper.

(To which the Court gave no Answer.)

Freind. My Lord, will your Lordship give me Leave to read it?

L. C. J. Ay, if you will. (Reads.)

Freind. My Lord, I humbly move in Arrest of Judgment, that I am not convicted of Treason by Two Witnesses, as I ought to have been within the Statute of the 25th of Edw. the Third: For Mr. Porter swears, That I, with others, in May or June last, sent to the French King to invade England; he is the only Witness to that Matter. Mr. Blair swears, That I shewed him a Commission in Surrey-street, about two Years since, sign'd by King James, and counter-sign'd Melford, to be a Colonel of Horse, and that I gave him some Moneys for the Cherishing of the Men. My Lord, here is no Levying of War sworn by Mr. Blair; and Conspiring to levy War not being Treason, I am convicted by one Witness, and therefore I pray Counsel may be assigned me, to plead this Matter.

L. C. J. Sir John Freind, that which you move now is not in Arrest of Judgment; it is Matter that does arise upon the Evidence, and what you now say, arraigns the Verdict, and the Proceedings upon your Trial. There were Two Witnesses against you, that is plain. You were not indicted for Levying War, but for Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King; and we told you the Design of the Invasion, and Conspiring to depose the present King, and restore the late King, was an Overt Act of that High-Treason. The Commission was not so much stood upon, but the Advancing Moneys upon this Account, to Blair your Lieutenant Colonel, to give to the Men, that was a plain Overt Act, and so there were certainly Two Witnesses against you.

Freind. My Lord, I hope I can clear myself: I thank God, I am as Innocent as the Child unborn, of the Assassination of the King. I would not have the People think that I am such a Man.

L. C. J. But you remember, it was sworn you knew of it, and we have told you, that the Design of Restoring the late King by Force, and Deposing the King, are Overt Acts of imagining his Death, if such an Intention be proved, as it was in your Case, and the Jury have found it so.

Freind. My Lord, I humbly beseech you, because I do not understand Matter of Law, and am advis'd to move this in Arrest of Judgment; I desire my Counsel may be heard to it.

L. C. J. We cannot hear Counsel, but upon a Matter that arises upon the Record itself, that is, the Indictment. We cannot enter into any Examination of this Matter that you now speak of, you had a long Trial Yesterday.

Freind. My Lord, I am sorry to give your Lordship any Occasion of Trouble; but I humbly beseech you, if it may be, that I may be heard by my Counsel, for the Satisfaction of the World; pray, my Lord, hear what they can say.

L. C. J. They cannot say any Thing; no Counsel in the World that understand themselves, can argue any Thing against what has been so often settled and always practised.

Freind.

Freind. My Lord, if it be to be granted, I beseech your Lordship to grant it.

L. C. J. It cannot be granted; besides, the Matter you now move upon is improper; it was all considered upon your Trial. It was told you, we did all agree, that a Conspiracy to levy War to depose the King is Treason, or to invade the Realm is Treason. All this was considered at your Trial, and that is now over.

Parkyns. My Lord, if your Lordship pleases, I desire I may have the Liberty of some Friends and Relations, and a Minister to come to me.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, by all Means.

Parkyns. If your Lordship pleases, that they may come and be private with me, and pray let me have a Rule of Court for it, otherwise I shall not have any Benefit of it.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, it is very fit you should have it; there shall be an Order of Court for it: See that the Keeper take Care it be done with Safety.

Freind. My Lord, I desire the same Liberty of a Minister, and my Relations and Friends to come to me; that for what Time I have to live, I may make the best Use I can of it for my Soul, which I hope God will enable me to do.

(Then the Court was adjourned until Five a-Clock on the Afternoon, and about Six the Justices returned, and the Court was resumed.)

Cl. of Ar. Set Sir John Freind to the Bar: (Which was done.) Sir John Freind, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thou standest convicted of High-Treason, for traitorously Compassing and Imagining the Death of our Sovereign Lord King William the Third. What canst thou say for thyself, why the Court should not give thee Judgment according to the Law?

(Then being made to kneel, he afterwards stood up.)

Freind. I have said already, what I have to say in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Com. Serjeant. Sir, you have heard the Judgment of the Court, as to what you have said; if you have nothing else to offer, the Court must proceed to Judgment.

Cl. of Ar. for Middlesex. Sir William Parkyns, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thou standest convicted of High-Treason in Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King, and adhering to the King's Enemies. What canst thou say for thyself, why the Court should not give thee Judgment to die, according to the Law?

(He was made to kneel, and rise up again.)

Parkyns. I have nothing more to offer.

Cl. of Ar. Then, Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes; all Manner of Persons are commanded to keep Silence, while Judgment is in giving, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

(Which Proclamation was made on both Sides the Court; and then Mr. Common Serjeant sitting with the Rest of the Court upon the Bench, pronounced the Sentence.)

Mr. Com. Serj. You the Prisoners at the Bar, Sir John Freind and Sir William Parkyns, you have been indicted for High-Treason, in Compassing the Death and Destruction of the King: For your Trial, you have put yourselves upon the Country, which Country has found you Guilty. The Offence is the greatest in the Judgment of the Law that a Man can commit; and it is justly and reasonably so. For Robbery and Murder are Injuries to private Persons, but Compassing the Death of the King, is Compassing the Destruction of the Father of your Country, and letting in Rapine, Death, and Desolation upon Thousands of People. And even this, the heinousness of Offences, is capable of Aggravation; for there have been always Excuses, and sometimes Justifications for Rebellion: And as to Murder and private Revenge, there may be somewhat said in Mitigation from the Violence of Men's Passions. But to sit, and conspire, and consult, and debate the Destruction of a Prince; no Man yet ever had the Confidence to make an Excuse for it. I would not add to your Affliction; I am sensible of the severe Judgment that is to follow, and which you have brought upon yourselves, and cannot but pity you for the great Burden of Guilt that you have laid yourselves under. I only say this to offer it to your serious Consideration, in the few Moments you have to prepare for another World, and another Judgment. All that remains for me, is to pronounce the Judgment of the Law in these Cases, and the Court does Award it.

That you, and each of you, go back to the Place from whence you came, and from thence be drawn on a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you shall be severally Hanged up by the Neck, and cut down alive; your Bodies shall be ript open, your Privy-Members cut off, your Bowels taken out and Burnt before your Faces; your Heads shall be severed from your Bodies, your Bodies respectively to be divided into Four Quarters, and your Heads and Quarters are to be at the Disposal of the King: And the Lord have Mercy upon your Souls.

Then the Prisoners were carried back to Newgate.

On Friday April 3. 1696. Sir John Freind and Sir William Parkyns were drawn on Sledges from Newgate to Tyburn, where they deliver'd the following Papers to the Sheriffs.

Sir JOHN FREIND's Paper.

KNOWING that I must immediately give an Account to God of all my Actions, and that I ought to be specially careful of what I say in these last Hours, I do solemnly profess, that what I here deliver is from my very Soul, with all the Heartiness and Sincerity of a dying Christian.

The Cause I am brought hither to suffer for, I do firmly believe to be the Cause of God and true Religion, and, to the best and utmost of my Knowledge and Information, agreeable to the Laws of the Land, which I have evermore heard do require a firm Duty and Allegiance to our Sovereign; and that as no foreign, so neither any domestick Power can alienate our Allegiance. For it is altogether new and unintelligible to me, that the King's Subjects can depose and dethrone him on any Account, or constitute any that have not an immediate Right in his Place. We ought, I think, not to do this; and surely, when it is done, to assist him in the Recovery of his Right, is justifiable, and our Duty. And however Things may seem at present, I do believe, I am sure I heartily pray, that he shall be one Day restored to his rightful Throne and Dominions.

As for any sudden Descent of his Majesty upon these his Dominions, in order to the Recovery of them, I declare I had no certain Knowledge of it; nor can I tell what Grounds there was to believe it, so little Reason had I to be in a present Preparation for it. I suppose it is not expected I should here endeavour to clear myself of the Assassination, which was not the Thing alledged against me; however, it was mention'd, through what Means I know not. As it was insinuated to my Disadvantage, I forgive such as were therein instrumental; and I do also, from the very Bottom of my Soul, freely forgive, and beg of God to do so too, such as were any ways accessory towards the taking away my Life, which I really look upon to be their Misfortune more than mine.

I profess myself, and I thank God I am so, a Member of the Church of England, though, God knows, a most unworthy and unprofitable Part of it; of that Church which suffers so much at present for a strict Adherence to Loyalty, the Laws and Christian Principles; For this I suffer, and for this I die.

Though I have a perfect Charity for People of all Professions, and do heartily wish well, and would endeavour to do so to all my Fellow-Subjects, of what Persuasion soever. And indeed I have met with a great deal of Uprightness and Sincerity among some People of very different Opinions in religious Matters.

And I hope and desire it may not be taken as an uncharitable Censure, or undue Reflection, that I objected to the Legality of Popish Evidence, being advis'd so to do for my better Security, upon the Foundation of a Statute-Law.

Having owned myself a Member of the Church of England, I must take this Opportunity, and I do it for God's Glory, to apply myself to you that are Royalists of that Church, and of the same Faith and Principles with myself: And I beg of you, for God's sake, and the Love of your Souls, to be very constant and serious in all religious Offices, and holy Duties, of divine Worship and Service, which I have too much neglected, as I own to my great Sorrow: Let no Excuse, no Dangers, prevent or hinder you in the most necessary and serious Matters; and be, I beseech you, very careful and circumspect in all your Actions, Behaviour, and Conversation, as I earnestly exhorted all that came to me.

I have, I thank God, a great deal of Satisfaction in my present Sufferings, and have found it so ever since I have been under them: And blessed be God it doth continually increase upon me. And I do now lay down my Life with all Cheerfulness and Resignation, in sure and certain Hope of a Resurrection to eternal Life, through our Lord Jesus Christ; through whose Merits alone I hope for the Pardon of my Sins, and the Salvation of my Soul.

And so, O Lord! into thy Hands I commend my Spirit; for thou hast redeemed me, O Lord! thou God of Truth!

JOHN FREIND.

Sir WILLIAM PARKYNS's Paper.

IT hath not been my Custom to use many Words, and I shall not be long upon this Occasion, having Business of much greater Consequence to employ my Thoughts upon. I thank God I am now in a full Disposition to Charity, and therefore shall make no Complaints, either of the Hardships of my Trial, or any other Rigours put upon me. However, one Circumstance I think myself oblig'd to mention. It was sworn against me by Mr. Porter, That I had own'd to him that I had seen and read a Commission from the King to levy War upon the Person of the Prince of Orange. Now, I must declare, that the Tenour of the King's Commission, which I saw, was general, and directed to all his loving Subjects, to raise and levy War against the Prince of Orange, and his Adherents; and to seize all Forts, Castles, &c. which, I suppose, may be a customary Form of giving Authority to make War; but I must confess I am not much acquainted with Matters of that Nature: But as for any Commission particularly levell'd against the Person of the Prince of Orange, I neither saw nor heard of any such.

It's true, I was privy to the Design upon the Prince, but was not to act in it; and am fully satisfied that very few, or none, knew of it but those who undertook to do it.

I freely acknowledge, and think it for my Honour to say, that I was entirely in the Interest of the King, being always firmly persuaded of the Justice of his Cause: and I look'd upon it as my Duty, both as a Subject, and an Englishman, to assist him in the Recovery of his Throne, which I believe him to be depriv'd of contrary to all Right and Justice; taking the Laws and Constitutions of my Country for my Guide.

As for Religion, I die in the Communion of the Church of England, in which I was educated.

And as I freely forgive all the World, so whoever I may any ways have injur'd, I heartily ask them Pardon.

WILLIAM PARKYNS.

Jeremy Collier, a Nonjuring Minister, publicly absolv'd them at the Gallows.

After which they were executed according to their Sentence.

CLVI. The Trial of AMBROSE ROOKWOOD, for High-Treason, the 21st of April, 8 Will. III. 1696. At the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer for the County of Middlesex sitting in the Court of King's-Bench at Westminster.

THE Court being sat, at which were present the Lord Chief Justice Holt, the Lord Chief Justice Treby, Mr. Justice Nevil, Mr. Justice Powell, and Mr. Justice Eyre; the Court proceeded in this Manner.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, Oyez, Oyez: All Manner of Persons that have any Thing more to do, at this Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the County of Middlesex, draw near and give your Attendance. God save the King.

Then the Grand Jury were called over, and the Appearances marked, and Witnesses being sworn in Court, to give Evidence to them upon a Bill of Indictment against Alexander Knightley, they in a little Time after withdrew to hear the Evidence.

Then the Keeper of Newgate was order'd to bring his Prisoners to the Bar. (Which he did.) to wit, Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne; who were thus arraigned.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Ambrose Rookwood, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.)

You stand indicted in the County of Middlesex, by the Names of Robert Lowick of the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middlesex, Gentleman; Ambrose Rookwood of the same Parish, Gentleman; and Charles Cranburne of the same Parish and County, Yeoman; for that you, together with one Christopher Knightley, of the same Parish and County, Gentleman, not yet taken; not having the Fear of GOD in your Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as false Traytors against the most serene, most illustrious, most clement, and most excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, King of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, Defender of the Faith, &c. your supreme, true, rightful, lawful, and undoubted Lord, the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said Lord the King that now is, towards him our said Lord the King should bear, and of right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguish intending and contriving, and with all your Strength resolving, designing, and conspiring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, of Right, duly, happily, and well establish'd, altogether to subvert, change, and alter, as also our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to put and bring, and his faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and most miserable Servitude to Lewis the French King to subjugate and intral, the 10th Day of February, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Paul, Covent-Garden, aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traitorously, did compass, imagine, and contrive, resolve, design, and intend, our said Lord the King that now is, to kill, slay, and murder, and a miserable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to make and cause, and the same your most impious, wicked, and devilish Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Contrivances, and Purposes aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to effect, you the said Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, together with the said Christopher Knightley, and very many other false Traytors, to the Jurors unknown, afterwards, to wit, the same 10th Day of February, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, and divers others Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elsewhere in the same County, Falsely, Maliciously, Advicedly, Secretly, Traitorously, and with Force and Arms, did Meet, Propose, Treat, Consult, Consent, and Agree, him our said Lord the King that now is, by Lying in wait, and Guile, to Assassinate, Kill and Murder; and that execrable, horrid, and detestable Assassination, and Killing the sooner to execute, and perpetrate, afterwards (to wit) the same Day and Year, and divers other Days and Times, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, Traitorously did Treat, Propose, and Consult, of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place, where, when, how, and in what Manner, our said Lord the King, so by Lying in wait, the more easily you might kill; and did consent, agree, and assent, that forty Horsemen, or thereabouts, whereof the said Christopher Knightley, you the said Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, should be four; and every one of you traitorously took upon himself to be one, with Guns, Muskets, and Pistols, charged with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets, and with Swords, Rapiers, and other Weapons being Armed, should lie in wait, and lie in Ambush, our said Lord the King in his Coach being, when he should go abroad, to invade, and that a certain and competent Number of those Men, so armed, should set upon the Guards of our said Lord the King then attending him, and being with him, and should fight with them, and overcome them, whilst others of the same Men so armed, our said Lord the King should assassinate, slay, kill, and murder; and you the said Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, together with the said Christopher Knightley, the Treason, and all the traitorous Intentions, Designs, and Contrivances aforesaid, to execute, perform, fulfil, and bring to Effect, afterwards (to wit) the aforesaid Tenth Day of February, in the seventh Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, divers Horses, and very many Arms, Guns, Pistols, Swords, Rapiers, and other Weapons, Ammunition and warlike Things, and military Instruments, falsely, maliciously, secretly, and traitorously did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure, and cause to be bought, obtained, gathered together, and procured with that Intention, then in and about the detestable, horrid, and execrable Assassination, Killing, and Murder of our said Lord the King that now is, as aforesaid to be used, employed, and bestowed; and the same Premises the more safely and certainly to execute, do, and perform, the aforesaid Christopher Knightley, with one Edward King, late of High-Treason, in contriving and conspiring the Death of our said Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted, by the Consent and Agreement of divers of the Traytors and Conspirators aforesaid, the said Tenth Day of February, in the Seventh Year aforesaid, went and came to the Place proposed, where such intended Assassination, Killing, and Murder of our said Lord the King by Lying in wait, should be done, performed, and committed, to see, view, and observe the Convenience and Fitness of the same Place for such Lying in wait, Assassination, and Killing, there to be done, performed, and committed: And that Place being so viewed and observed, afterwards, (to wit) the same Day and Year, their Observations thereof to several of the said Traytors and Conspirators did relate and impart, (to wit) at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid: And you the aforesaid Charles Cranburne, the same Day and Year there, in order the said execrable, horrid, and detestable Assassination, and Killing of our said Lord the King, by the Traytors and Conspirators aforesaid, the more readily and boldly to execute, perform, and commit, advisedly, knowingly, and traitorously did bring and carry between divers of those Traytors and Conspirators, forward and backward, from some to others of them, a List of the Names of divers Men of those who were designed and appointed our said Lord the King so as aforesaid by Lying in wait to kill and murder; against the Duty of the Allegiance of the said Christopher Knightley, you the said Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, and against the Peace of our said Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided.

How say'st thou, Robert Lowick? Art thou Guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou standest Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Lowick. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, How wilt thou be try'd?

Lowick. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God send thee good Deliverance. How say'st thou, Ambrose Rookwood? Art thou Guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou standest Indicted, or Not Guilty? — Rookwood. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, How wilt thou be Try'd?

Rookwood. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God send thee good Deliverance. Charles Cranburne, How say'st thou? Art thou Guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou standest Indicted, or Not Guilty? — Cranburne. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culprit, How wilt thou be Try'd?

Cranburne. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God send thee good Deliverance.

Cranburne. My Lord, I desire your Lordship would grant me the Favour for my Wife to come to me in private, and that I may have Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. Pen, Ink, and Paper, you must have; but as to the other, we must consider of it. Keeper of Newgate, Sir John Holt, What has been usual in those Cases?

Keeper. My Lord, we let nobody come to them in private but their Counsel.

L. C. J. That's provided for by the Act that allows them Counsel: But has it been usual heretofore to permit any Body else to be with them in private; the Wife, or any other Relations?

Keeper. It has not.

L. C. J. It is very dangerous if it should; therefore let him have his Wife come to him in the presence of the Keeper.

Cranburne. And Pen, Ink, and Paper, I hope, my Lord?

L. C. J. Yes, yes, that you shall have.

Cranburne. You don't deny me, my Lord, that I may have my Wife come to me?

L. C. J. No, we don't, but she must not be in private with you, for fear of an Escape.

Rookwood. I beg the same Favour, my Lord, to have my Brother come to me, and Pen, Ink, and Paper.

L. C. J. You shall have the same Rule; but you, Keeper, must have especial Care whom you do permit to come to them, and be private with them; for it is still at your Peril if any ill Accident happens by your Indulgence to them: And yet it is fit they should have all that is reasonable for preparing for their Defence at their Trials.

Lowick. And I desire, my Lord, I may have my Sister come to me, and the Liberty of her being in private with me.

L. C. J. Your Friends may come to you at seasonable Times, in the presence of the Keeper; you shall have any thing that is reasonable, but the Safety of the Government must be look'd after. Therefore, Keeper of Newgate, take back your Prisoners, and bring them here this Day Sevennight at Seven a Clock in the Morning, without any other Order.

They staid at the Bar about half an Hour, the Judges consulting among themselves about the Precept for the Petty Jury upon a late Act of Parliament, which has appointed six Days for the Jury to be summon'd before they appear to try any Cause, and upon the last Act in Regulating Trials in Cases of High-Treason; which requires that the Prisoner shall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jury duly return'd, at least two Days before his Trial.

Then the Prisoners were carried away, and the Grand Jury withdrew to consider of the Evidence against Knightley, and in a Quarter of an Hour came back, and being called over, delivered in a Bill to the Court.

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, you are content the Court shall amend Matter of Form, or false Latin in this Indictment, without altering any Matter of Substance without your Privy. — Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Then, Gentlemen, you may go for this Time; and you are to take Notice if there be Occasion at any Time to call you together, you shall have sufficient Warning given to you beforehand. This is Billa Vera against Alexander Knightley for High-Treason.

Then the Judges resumed the Debate among themselves, and at last resolved that there should go three several Venires for the Petty Jury, returnable this Day sevensnight; one to try between the King and Robert Lowick, the second to try between the King and Ambrose Rookwood, and a third between the King and Charles Cranburne; because, though the Indictment be against them jointly, yet it was a several Offence in every one of them, and they might sever in their Challenges, and that would be troublesome, and therefore it was thought best to sever them in their Trials; and therefore the Court adjourned for an Hour or something more, while the Precepts for the Jury were preparing, and according to the Adjournment met, and signed and sealed the Precepts, and then adjourned the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer until this Day sevensnight, at Seven in the Morning.

Die Martis Vicesimo primo Aprilis, Anno Regni Regis Willielmi Tertii Octavo, Anno; Dom. 1696.

THE Court sat about Eight a Clock, at which were present a great Number of Noblemen, and Persons of Quality, who were in the Commission, and Seven of the Judges; to wit, the Lord Chief Justice Holt, the Lord Chief Justice Treby, the Lord Chief Baron Ward, Mr. Justice Nevil, Mr. Justice Powell, Mr. Justice Eyre, and Mr. Baron Powis.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, O yes, O yes. All Manner of Persons that have any Thing more to do at this Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, adjourned over to this Day, draw near and give your Attendance. And God save the King.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, Sheriffs for the County of Middlesex, return the Precepts to you directed, upon Pain and Peril will fall thereon.

The Under-Sheriff returned the Precept.

Cl. of Ar. Mr. Baker, pray, Whom do you intend to begin with?

Mr. Baker. With Ambrose Rookwood.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, You good Men of the County of Middlesex, summoned to appear here this Day, to try between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoners that are, and shall be at the Bar, answer to your Names, as you shall be called, every one at the first Call, and save your Issues.

The whole Pannel was called over, and the Appearances of those that answered recorded; and the Defaulters were again called over.

Cl. of Ar. Keeper of Newgate, set Ambrose Rookwood to the Bar. (Which was done.) You the Prisoner at the Bar, Ambrose Rookwood, those Men that you shall hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they be sworn.

Sir B. Shower. If your Lordship pleases, We have a Doubt or two to propose to Your Lordship, in respect of the Trial this Day: But before I offer it, we beg Your Favour for a Word in behalf of ourselves.

My Lord, We are assigned of Counsel, in Pursuance of an Act of Parliament, and we hope that nothing which we shall say in Defence of our Clients shall be imputed to ourselves. I thought it would have been a Reflection upon the Government and Your Lordship's Justice, if being assigned we should have refused to appear; 'twould have been a Publication to the World, That we distrusted Your Candour towards us in our future Practice upon other Occasions. But, my Lord, there can be no Reason for such a Fear; I am sure I have none; for we must acknowledge, we who have been Practisers, at this Bar especially, that there was never a Reign or Government within the Memory of Man, wherein such Indulgence, such easiness of Temper, hath been shewn from the Court to the Counsel, as there always hath been in this. Never was there such Freedom and Liberty of Debate and Argument allowed to the Bar, and we thank Your Lordship for the same.

My Lord, We come not here to countenance the Practices for which the Prisoner stands accused, nor the Principles upon which such Practices may be presumed to be founded; for we know of none, either Religious or Civil, that can warrant or excuse them. But the Act of Parliament having warranted the appearing of Counsel for Persons accused to make Defence for them, we hope Your Lordship will give us Leave to make what Objections we can on their Behalf.

L. C. J. Holt. Look ye, Sir B. Shower, go on with your Objections; let us hear what you have to say.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, It appears to be a Doubt to us, upon this Act of Parliament, whether this Cause can be tried this Day: And if it be a Doubt, we hope, though it should not have that Weight with the Court, that we apprehend it has; yet Your Lordship will excuse us, and settle it according to your Judgment. The Act requires, That all that shall be Accused and Indicted for High-Treason, whereby any Corruption of Blood may, or shall be made to any such Offender or Offenders, or to any the Heir or Heirs of any such Offender or Offenders, or for Misprision of such Treason, shall have a true Copy of the whole Indictment; and afterwards shall have Copies of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try them, duly returned by the Sheriff and delivered unto them; and every one of them so Accused and Indicted respectively two Days at the least before he or they shall be Tried for the same. Now if your Lordship will please to cast your Eye upon this Venire facias, and it will appear to be returned but this Day, and that is not according to the Intent of this Law. And it is impossible then, if it be as we apprehend it, and put it, that this Trial should go on at this Time; and that this Construction should be so as we say, not only the Words, but, as we take it, the Intent and Meaning of the Act of Parliament too are for us, that there ought to have been a Copy of the Pannel after the Return two Days before the Trial. For in the first Place, My Lord, the Words are plain: It must be a Copy of the Pannel duly returned by the Sheriff. Now though it be a Copy of the Array of the Pannel which we have delivered to us, yet it is not a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors returned; for it is no Return till it come into Court. And the King's Counsel must admit, that in the Case of all Writs returnable, it cannot be said that there is a Return, where there is a Writing upon the back, or a Label annexed, till it be actually returned into Court. As in the Case of a Fieri Facias, or a Mandamus, an Action for false Return cannot lie till the Writ be actually returned. For such Action must be brought into the County of Middlesex, where the Court resides, before whom the Return is made, and not in the County where the Sheriff lived that made the Return; for it is not a Return till filed in Court. Now here the Words of the Act are; He shall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try him, duly Returned by the Sheriff two Days before the Trial. Now we humbly insist that the Words duly Returned must be antecedent to the having the Copy, or else he cannot be said to have a Copy of the Pannel duly Returned. The Act of Parliament does not say which shall be duly Returned; and therefore there does arise a Doubt, whether your Lordship will not direct us to have a Copy after the Return made, which is but this Day.

Mr. Phipps. If your Lordship pleases to spare me a Word of the same side: We take it, that by this Act of Parliament the Jury must be duly returned before the Pannel is delivered to us. Now the Return is the Answer that is Indorsed upon the Writ with the Pannel annexed, and deliver'd into Court; for the Return is to the Court, and till it be deliver'd into Court, it cannot properly be said to be a Return. We acknowledge the Copy of this Pannel has been delivered unto us, two or three Days ago. But the Venire being not returned till To-day, we think we have not a Copy of the Pannel within the Intent of, and according to the Act of Parliament. And I desire to put your Lordship this Case: This Act of Parliament does likewise provide, that the Prisoner should have a Copy of his Indictment five Days before his Trial, to enable him to consult with his Counsel how to plead and defend himself; suppose then a Copy of a Bill that is intended to be presented to the Grand Jury, be deliver'd to the Person accused five Days before the Grand Jury are to meet, and they afterwards meet, and find it, and the Party is brought immediately, and arraign'd upon it: This is a true Copy of the Indictment, yet certainly the Intent of the Act of Parliament is not answered, for it was not a true Copy of the Indictment at the Time it was deliver'd. And I take this Case to be under the same Reason. This is not a Pannel duly returned, till now; and therefore by Consequence we have not that Advantage that this Act of Parliament intended to give us; for which Reason we humbly apprehend we ought not to be tried To-day; which we submit to your Lordship.

L. C. J. What say you to it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, with Submission, this Objection will receive a very plain Answer. If I understand it aright, they say that they ought to have a Copy of the Pannel after it is returned, and that it cannot be said to be duly delivered, according to the Provision in this Act of Parliament, till after the Venire facias be duly returned into the Court, and then they are to have it two Days before they are tried. They say the Venire facias is returned but To-day, and so the Copy delivered to them, is not pursuant to the Act of Parliament; and so they cannot be tried To-day: This I take to be the Objection. But with Submission, My Lord, it will be plain both by the Words of the Act, and the Reason and Intention of it, that there is no Occasion at all, nor no Necessity of having the Writ returned before the Copy of the Pannel be delivered. The Words of the Act of Parliament are these; That every Person and Persons who shall be accused, indicted, and tried for Treason, or Misprision of Treason, after the 25th of March, 96, shall have Copies of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try them, duly returned by the Sheriff, and delivered to them two Days before they be tried. Now, first, My Lord, I think it is apparent what the Meaning and Design of the Act of Parliament was, that the Prisoner should know two Days before the Trial, who were the Jury that were to pass upon him, that he might have an Opportunity to consider how he should make his Challenges as he thought fit, and Time to enquire into the Qualifications of them, that if there were any particular Ground of Challenge, he might not lose that Benefit; so that if he has a Copy of the Pannel array'd by the Sheriff, which is afterward returned by the Sheriff into Court, and there is no Variation of that Pannel afterwards; then certainly the End and Intent of the Act is entirely pursued: For by that Means the Prisoner has the Names of all the Jury returned, and are afterwards called, and has a full Opportunity of making such Challenges as he thinks fit. And as the Reason and Intent of the Act is answered by this Construction, so the very Words of the Act are answered: For it is not said in the Act, that he shall have a Copy of the Pannel after it is return'd, but it is said a Copy of the Pannel duly returned by the Sheriff; that is, when the Sheriff has arrayed a Pannel, then he is to have a Copy of that Pannel; and if afterwards the Sheriff return the same Pannel into Court, is not this a Copy of the Pannel duly return'd? With Submission it is, and sufficient to answer both the Words and Intention of the Act of Parliament. It is true, My Lord, if the Act of Parliament had said he should have a Copy of the Pannel after it was return'd, then we could not have said but that the Objection would hold. But when the Words are general, and it is most reasonable to be interpreted that the Copy is to be delivered when the Array is made, because that answers the Intent and End of the Act of Parliament.

Parliament, which was to enable the Prisoner to make his Challenges, we take that to be sufficient; and if another Interpretation should be made, it would render the Trial in such Cases liable to all the Mischief in the World, and make it impracticable that any Person should be tried; at least it would introduce a new Method of Proceedings that never was practised, nor ought to be introduced, unless this Act of Parliament by express Words had appointed and constituted such a new Method; and we suppose your Lordship will never make any such Construction, that the Act intended a new Method, unless expressly declared; for if it were, as they would have it, that the Copy of the Pannel was not to be delivered till after the Return of the Writ, then the Prisoner cannot be tried upon the Return of the Writ; for upon the Return of the Writ, the Jury must be brought to the Bar, the Prisoner must be brought to the Bar, and adjourned over to a further Time, that in the mean Time a Copy may be deliver'd to them. I believe that they can never shew any Precedent that there was such an Adjournment of a Jury of Life and Death, over to another Day, for a Person to have a Copy of the Pannel, to enable him to make his Challenges; and either that must be the Consequence, or else the Jury must not come upon the Return of the Venire facias, but there must go a Habeas Corpora, and the Prisoner tried upon that Habeas Corpora: For first there must be the Return of the Writ, then the Copy of the Pannel delivered, then the Habeas Corpora returnable another Day; and upon that the Trial must be had: But I believe there can be no Instance given of a Trial for Treason upon a Habeas Corpora. Now if the Parliament had intended that they would not have the Copy of the Pannel deliver'd till after the Return of the Venire facias, they would certainly have express'd and provided how the Method of Trial should have been; that is, that either the Jury should have been adjourn'd over till another Day, or else brought to the Bar upon a Habeas Corpora; which is the only Way that can be thought of. Indeed, My Lord, I do agree, that if the Sheriff should give a Copy of the Pannel, and afterwards should vary that Pannel, tho' but in one Name, that would not answer the End of the Act of Parliament, because the Prisoner is deprived of the Opportunity of knowing the Name of the Person that he so altered, in order to his making his Challenges against him: But if the Sheriff do return the same Persons that are in that Copy delivered to the Prisoner, then we do, to all Intents and Purposes, answer the End of the Act of Parliament, and avoid the absurd Construction that they would make of this Act for the Changing the Method of Trials, and no Body can well tell what Method should be pursued: But certainly if the Act of Parliament intended a new Method should be pursued, they would have described and settled what it should be.

Sir John Hawles. Mr. Solicitor General. If your Lordship pleases to spare me a Word of the same Side; My Lord, this is an Objection that has been foreseen, and I think has been prevented; for, with Submission, I take it, the Act has been sufficiently answered both as to the Words, and as to the Intent of it in the Prisoner's having the Copy of the Pannel before the Jury be returned; there must be such a Thing as a Pannel array'd before the Jury be summon'd, and therefore it is sufficient that the Prisoner have a Copy of that Pannel so many Days before his Trial; which was only intended for that particular Reason, that he might be provided sufficiently to make his legal Challenges. Certainly within the Intent of the Act of Parliament it is well enough if he had but a Copy of the Pannel two Days before the Return of the Writ, provided the Jury was not alter'd that was array'd, nor any other Names put in but those that he had a Copy of before: Now, my Lord, I think this Act of Parliament must be taken according to the Intent and Meaning of it, or else it will bear hard upon the Prisoner, and harder sure than it was designed it should: This Act says, he shall have a Copy of his Indictment so many Days before his Trial; now I would fain know whether they would have it construed, that the Copy does not need to be delivered till after Issue joyn'd, which must be if their Doctrine holds true, that the Act is to be construed according to the strict Letter of it, for Trial is the Trial of the Issue; what if the Indictment be delivered five Days before the Trial, tho' after Issue joyn'd it is well enough according to such an Exposition, for the arraignment of the Prisoner is no Part of the Trial, and yet it was the Intent of the Parliament that he should have a Copy of the Indictment five Days before he was arraigned, and that for this Reason, because he might have several Pleas to plead, and Objections to make before he pleaded the General Issue; he might have Pleas in Abatement, which after Plea pleaded of Not guilty he could not have the Advantage of, nor could he afterwards move to quash the Indictment, which he might otherwise have good Reason for, if he had the Copy before he was put to plead, so that I take it the Act is to be interpreted every where according to the Intention of it, and the Prisoner at the Bar, according to the Intention of the Act, has had a Copy of this Indictment five or six Days before his Arraignment, and therefore we have acted according to the Purpose and Meaning of the Parliament; and likewise he has had a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors that are to try him, which is duly returned by the Sheriff, which is likewise according to the Act of Parliament. As for what they say that even a Copy of the Indictment before it be found would not be good according to this Act; that's true, but the Case is not the same, nor the Reason of the Case alike between that and the Pannel of a Jury, because it is sufficient in Law to make it a good Pannel if it be array'd by the Sheriff before the Jury be summoned, for the Sheriff must array and compleat his Pannel to let his Bailiff know who must be summoned; but in the Case of an Indictment, tho' a Bill be first form'd by the Clerk, yet it is not look'd upon as a formal Indictment in point of Law, till it be found by the Jury as their Verdict, and preferred to the Court; and it is not necessary that this Indictment should be formed for the Jury before they find it, for they are properly to make their own Presentments themselves; and the ancient Practice was, that they only presented the Fact, and the Matter was put into Form afterwards by the Court, and in many Cases it is so at this Day, as we have had some Instances lately; but as to the arraying of a Pannel it always was so, and always must be so array'd by the Sheriff before the Jury summoned, and there's the Difference between the giving a Copy of an Indictment and the Copy of a Pannel, the one is taken Notice of in Point of Law to be necessary, the other is not. This giving a Copy of the Pannel, my Lord, we say, is within the Intent of the Act, which was only to enable Persons accused to make their just Challenges, and that they may as well do when a Copy is delivered after it is array'd by the Sheriff, as when it is return'd by the Sheriff, and being so done, with Submission, it is well done within the Words, and within the Intent of this Act of Parliament.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, the Words of this Act of Parliament are, that they shall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors who are to try them, duly returned by the Sheriff, and delivered to them, and this, two Days before the Trial: My Lord, that this is the Pannel of the Sheriff of the Jurors that are to try them, as soon as it is array'd, has been observ'd already; now it would be a forc'd Construction to construe these Words that follow, duly returned by the Sheriff, to be meant, that a Copy should be delivered after the Jury is returned, because that would be a Delay of Justice, and keeping off the Trial longer than was intended by this Act of Parliament, and more than will answer the End of this Law; for the End of it was to give the Prisoner all Benefit and Advantage of Exceptions against any of those that were to try him, and if he has this Pannel two Days before his Trial, he has that Benefit the Law intended him. Now, my Lord, as to what has been said of an Indictment, which by this Law, he is to have a Copy of too, that is plainly quite another Case; for it is not an Indictment till it be found, and so answers not the Words nor Intention of the Act till found by the Grand Jury; till then it is not a Copy of his Charge, and therefore by no Construction can it be called a Copy of the Indictment. I think I need not trouble your Lordship any further in this Matter, because this Objection was foreseen, and has been already considered of by the Court upon the Prisoner's Arraignment.

Sir Barth. Shower. My Lord, in Answer to what Mr. Solicitor has said, that there is as much Reason to expect that the Copy of the Indictment should not be delivered till after Plea pleaded, as that the Pannel should not be delivered till after the Jury return'd, because in the Case of the Indictment it is said so many Days before the Trial, and the Trial cannot be till Issue joyn'd, there can be no Weight in that Objection at all; for the Words of the Act are quite differently penned in the Case of the Indictment from what they are in the Case of the Pannel; for tho' it be said it should be done five Days before the Trial, yet it is added, "in order to the advising with Counsel how to plead;" which must be before Plea pleaded, and therefore it must be absolutely necessary to be done before the Arraignment. My Lord, I have propos'd my Doubt, it may have Consequences on the one Side and the other, we submit intirely unto your Lordship's Judgment; it is a new Law, and never has received any Opinion; the Words of it are, duly return'd by the Sheriff, and the Question is, Whether a Copy of the Pannel upon the Array before it be return'd be a Copy of the Pannel duly return'd, tho' the same Pannel be afterwards duly returned.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, Mr. Attorney General owns, that the Pannel after it is arrayed may be amended and altered by the Sheriff; and it was never intended by this Act of Parliament, that any Copy of the Pannel should be delivered to the Prisoner but of those Men that were really returned; so that we take it, we ought to have it two Days after the Return and before the Trial; for certainly it must be a Copy of the Men returned, which if the Sheriff may alter at any Time before the Return, the Intent of the Act of Parliament can never be answered by any Copy but what is a true Copy of the Return. Mr. Conyers would answer the Objection that I made about a Copy of the Indictment by this, that it is not an Indictment till it be found by the Jury; but I think it is no Answer to our Objection at all, though it be but a Copy of the Bill intended to be presented to the Grand Jury, yet if the Grand Jury afterwards find it, it is as true a Copy of the Indictment as this is a Copy of the Jury intended to be returned, and afterwards returned. As to what they say, that this will introduce a new Method of Trial, contrary to all Form or Proceedings, that can be no Objection neither; for if it be so, we can't tell how to help it, the Parliament have thought fit to have it so, and we must submit to take it as the Law has made it: If there be a Necessity for a Habeas Corpora upon the Provision made in this Act, so it must be, for we must take the Law as it is. We submit our Objection to your Lordship; we think we have not had the Benefit of this Law.

Mr. Cowper. Surely, my Lord, what Mr. Phipps has now said has no Weight in it; that because the Sheriff had it in his Power to alter the Pannel before it was returned, therefore this is not now a true Copy of the Pannel of Jurors who are to try the Prisoner, duly returned by the Sheriff; which are the Words in the Act. It is true, if the Sheriff had in fact altered the Pannel from what it was, and return'd it so alter'd into Court, no doubt of it, the Prisoner would be very well intitled to make this Objection, that he had not a Copy of the Pannel, or the Names of the Jurors that were summoned to try him; but now we can aver, that we have pursued this Act of Parliament literally; for in Answer to their Objection, we may ask this Question of them upon the Words of the Act, Have you not had a true Copy of the Names of those that are to try you, and are duly returned by the Sheriff for that Purpose? and was not that Copy delivered unto you above two Days ago? They cannot say they have not had it so, and if they cannot say so, then both the Words and Meaning of the Act of Parliament are in every Respect answered; if when the Jury come to be called the Prisoner finds the Pannel to be altered, he has Reason to object, and will have the Benefit of the Objection, that he has not that Advantage which the Law intended him, but till that prove to be the Fact, we think here is a full Compliance with this Law.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir Barth. Shower mistakes my Objections about the Copy of the Indictment; for we say, if the Intent of the Act of Parliament be complied with, it is sufficient, especially where the Words are any Way doubtful; according to the Words of this Act of Parliament a Copy of the Indictment need not be delivered but five Days before the Trial; but it appearing that the Intention of these Law-makers was, that he should have a Copy of the Indictment to enable him to plead to it if he had Cause, therefore tho' the Words be "before the Trial," we have taken it that he should have a Copy five Days before his Arraignment, and so we have complied with the Meaning of the Law in that point, as we have also in this, which was, we take it, only to enable the Prisoner to make his Challenges,

lenges, and if that be done two Days before his Trial, with Submission, it fully answers this Law.

L. C. J. Have you done, Gentlemen?

Courf. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Then look you, Sir B. Shower, as to this Point that you now insist upon, we have had it under Consideration heretofore; we were here this Day seven-night, and then we did consider in what Method we should proceed; so that the Prisoner might have the Benefit intended him by this Act of Parliament: The Act of Parliament does design, in the first place, that every Prisoner that is to be tried for High-Treason should have a Copy of his Indictment, at least five Days before the Trial; that, I think, was all the Makers of this Act of Parliament intended at the first; but then there being subsequent Words, which shew the Reason why they gave him the Copy so long before the Trial; which is, that he might advise with his Counsel what to plead; these Words, we conceive, have given the Prisoner a further Time than what was originally intended, therefore we have thought it necessary that the Prisoner should have a Copy of his Indictment five Days before he be arraigned, which is five Days before he was put to plead; and your Client, the Prisoner at the Bar, has had the Benefit of this Act in that respect before we arraigned him; then after he has pleaded, the Question was, when he was to have a Copy of the Pannel? Now the Design of this Act of Parliament was, That the Prisoner should have a Copy of the Pannel two Days before his Trial, in order that he might consider of the Persons that were to try him; that he might inform himself of their Qualities, Tempers, and Dispositions; that so he might make use of the Benefit the Law gives him of Challenging Five and Thirty, without shewing any Cause, if he did not like the Men, and as many more as he should think he had good cause to challenge: Now in this Case, the whole Design of this Act of Parliament is answered, for he has had a Copy of the Pannel, as you yourselves acknowledge, two Days before the Day of his Trial, so that he has the full Benefit that the Act of Parliament intended; he is by this Copy as well enabled to make his Challenges as the Law design'd he should be, and has had the same Time allowed him, that the Act of Parliament meant he should have; then supposing the Design of this Act of Parliament be fully answered and complied with in the Case, the next Question is, Whether the Words of the Act are satisfied? For we would be very loth, in a Case of this Nature, where an Act of Parliament intends a Favour to a Prisoner that stands at the Bar for his Life, to abridge him of any Part of that Favour which the very words of the Act would allow him, though the Intent of the Act of Parliament were answered otherwise: Now in the first place it is observable, that the Act of Parliament does not say, that the Prisoner shall have a Copy of the Return, nor does it say, he shall have a Copy from the Court, but he shall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors duly returned that are to try him; now if the Sheriff array his Pannel several Days before the Trial upon the Venire facias, and does give him a Copy of that very Pannel, which Pannel is afterwards returned in Court, has not he then a Copy of the Pannel duly returned? Does not this answer all the Words of the Act? For you yourselves say that it is not said in the Words of the Act, that the Copy shall be delivered after the Pannel returned, nor does there need a Copy of the very Return. Surely we must not carry it farther than the Words, if the Meaning be complied with, and we think this answers both Words and Meaning: It is a Copy of the Pannel, and a Copy of that Pannel that's duly returned. Now to make another Construction would indeed not only alter the usual Course of Trials, but be contradictory to the very Process itself. We are by the Course of Law to award Process to summon a Jury to appear at a certain Time, to try the Issue joined between the King and the Prisoner; and yet when we have done this, and the Jury thereupon are summoned and do appear, they may go as they came; for the Issue cannot be try'd, because after the Return, the Prisoner must have a Copy of the Pannel two Days before he can be tried. I do think the Design of the Act of Parliament, and the very Words of the Act are fully satisfied in giving a Copy of the Pannel two Days before the Return. We had this Matter under our Consideration before, and upon Debate among ourselves, we did think fit to award the Precept returnable this Day, and resolved to try the Prisoner this Day, unless better Reasons were offered us to alter our Opinion, and we are not satisfied that any such better Reason has been given, but that this Trial ought to go on, the Prisoner having the full Benefit that was designed him by this Act of Parliament. And the Giving a Copy of the Pannel that is return'd, tho' before the Return, sufficiently satisfies the Words of the Act: No other Construction can be made without great Absurdities: This is my Opinion.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I hope we shall be excused for our Client, we have another Doubt to propose to the Court.

L. C. J. You have had my Opinion upon this Point, if my Lords and Brothers are of another Opinion, they will tell you.

Judges. No, my Lord, we are all of the same Opinion.

L. C. J. My Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, and my Brothers are all of the same Opinion.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we say we have another Doubt to propose upon this Act of Parliament: It is a new one, and never put in Practice till now, and therefore we hope your Lordship will please to excuse us, if we offer our Objections, because there has yet never been a Determination about it, and we are assigned of Counsel by your Lordship.

L. C. J. Never make Apologies, Sir Bartholomew, for it is as lawful for you to be of Counsel in this Case, as it is in any other Case where the Law allows Counsel. It is expected you should do your best for those you are assigned for, as it is expected in any other Case that you do your Duty for your Client.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, our Exception is this, we say that this Trial cannot go on at this Time, upon this Act of Parliament, because we have no true Copy of the whole Indictment; it does not appear, in the Copy we have delivered to us, before whom it was taken, or whether it was taken at all, or in what Place it was taken; it says only Middlesex in the Margin, and then Juratores pro Domino Rege presentant: That might be before the Justices of the Peace at the Quarter-Sessions, or it might be at the Monthly-Sessions at Hicks's-Hall, or it might be at the Sessions at the Old Bailey, or it might be before Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer, as perhaps it really was; but non constat where it was taken, nor how it comes hither: It might be before your Lordship here, as we believe it was, but this Copy not letting us know where and how it was taken, we think we have not the Benefit of this Law; for the Party accused is by this Act of Parliament to have a Copy to advise with Counsel, that he may be enabled to plead. And that is the Reason why the Words of this Act are so penned, that he shall have a Copy of the whole Indictment, which we cannot plead to, unless we know where it was taken, if we should have Occasion to plead any special Matter. And besides, my Lord, there is another Reason why we should have the whole Indictment to enable us to plead, because if we had the Caption, it might perhaps appear, that the Indictment was taken before the Time of the Fact alledged in the Indictment, and then that would make it vicious; it might be before the 9th of February, when this Treason is said to be committed, and then we ought not to be brought to Trial. Now the Design of this Act of Parliament, in giving the Prisoner a Copy of the Indictment so long before the Trial, was not only to enable him to make his Defence upon the Trial, but also to advise with Counsel to plead; for so the Words are, "the better to enable him to plead." Now we say, to answer this End, it is necessary we should have a Copy of the whole Indictment, as it stands before your Lordship in Court. And another Reason is this, it is no Indictment, unless it be presented by the Jury, as their Inquisition upon Oath, unto some Court that has Jurisdiction of the Matter: What we have delivered to us is only a Copy of a Bill as to be delivered to a Grand Jury to be found; non constat, that it is found. Now the Intent of the Act of Parliament being to give the Prisoner this Advantage to enable him to plead, he may have several Pleas, of which he might take a legal Advantage if he had a Copy of the whole, which he knows not how to come at now; and in truth it is very necessary, because if he be tried upon an Indictment found in another Country, then these Commissioners have not a legal Authority to try him; and if the Trial should go on, and he be acquitted, he is subject to be indicted and tried again, and never can relieve himself by the Acquittal upon such an Indictment before Persons that had no Authority to try him. I doubt he can never plead the Acquittal, because he cannot make out, that he was duly tried and acquitted: And for these Reasons we humbly submit it to your Lordship, whether we have had the Benefit of this Law, in having a Copy of the whole Indictment to enable us to plead; and if we have not, till we have that Benefit, we humbly conceive this Trial ought not to go on.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, the Question is, Whether the Style of the Court, the Persons before whom it was taken, and to whom the Presentment is made, the Time when it was taken, and the Place where, ought not to appear in the Indictment? this Law requiring that the Prisoner should have a Copy of the whole Indictment to enable him to plead; for if it should happen, that the Indictment was taken before Persons that had no Jurisdiction, then I believe it will not be denied but that the Prisoner might plead to the Jurisdiction, and there might be several other Pleas that he might take Advantage of. I would desire to know of the King's Counsel, whether ever they saw a Copy of an Indictment given in Evidence, or pleaded without the Caption. It is not a true Copy without it; there ought to be the Time, the Place, and the Style of the Court before whom it is taken.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think I need say no more to this Objection, than it does not come at a proper Time; for, with Submission, if the Prisoner will upon this Act say he has not had a Copy of his Indictment to enable him to plead, he ought to have taken the Advantage of it before he did plead; that is the proper Time for him to object this Matter to the Court; for if, after he has had such a Copy as this Prisoner has had, he does submit to plead, with Submission it is too late to come at his Trial and make this Objection, he cannot be received to make it after.

L. C. J. That is a full Answer, Mr. Attorney.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think it is, my Lord, with Submission, not that we would wave giving other Answers to it, if it were in a proper Time; but the Method of proceeding must be, and we think we have no Occasion at this Time to say any Thing more to this Objection.

L. C. J. No, no, that is a full Answer in this Point; for look ye, you that are of Counsel for the Prisoner, when once you have pleaded, you admit you have had a Copy; for the Copy was given you to enable you to plead, and when you have pleaded, you have pass'd by all Advantage that you could have from the Copy, as to any Plea that you can make: For it's taken for granted ye had a Copy to enable you to plead, and to advise with your Counsel about it; since you did plead, and did not insist upon it at the Time of your Arraignment that you had not such Copy.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we have proposed one Doubt, and we humbly submit it to the Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. It was their own Fault, that this Objection was not made in Time.

L. C. J. That Doubt of yours may serve at another Time, but now certainly it is quite out of Time.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Nay, my Lord, even upon the Arraignment that would not serve their Turn neither.

L. C. J. We will not enter upon that now, pray go on to swear the Jury. Cl. of Arr. You the Prisoner, look to your Challenges, as I told you before. Cryer, call Sir Jeremy Sambrook.

Cryer. Vous avez.

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Rookwood, you are to make your own Challenges.

Rookwood. I do not challenge him.

Cl. of Arr. Then hold Sir Jeremy the Book.

Sir Jer. Sambrook. My Lord, I am incapable of serving upon this Jury, for I have been deaf these several Years, these Dozen Years; I cannot hear what is said in Court, though I am now so near the Court; I could not hear what your Lordship said, nor what was said at the Bar. I have a Certificate here, if your Lordship please to have it read; and most of the Persons of Quality here about the Court know it to be true.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I am afraid it is so.

L. C. J. Nay, if it be so, it is not fitting that he should be upon the Jury when he can't hear what's said: You must excuse Sir Jeremy Sambrook. Go on to the next.

Cl. of Ar. George Ford.
Cryer. Vous avez.
Cl. of Ar. Look upon the Prisoner.
Rookwood. I challenge him.
L. C. J. Mr. Ford, you must not go away, for you are upon another Pannel, wherein you may be employed, tho' you are now challenged.
Cl. of Ar. William Underhill.
Rookwood. I challenge him.
Cl. of Ar. William Withers.
Rookwood. I challenge him.
Cl. of Ar. Samuel Powell.
Rookwood. I do not except against him.
Cl. of Ar. Then swear Mr. Powell.
Cryer. Look upon the Prisoner. You shall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King, and the Prisoner at the Bar, whom you shall have in Charge, and a true Verdict give according to your Evidence. So help you God.

The Names of the Twelve sworn were these.

Samuel Powell,	Timothy Lennox,	John Marsh,
Arthur Bailey,	John Harris,	Samuel Freebody,
John Webber,	George Carter,	Daniel Byfield, and
George Tredway,	William Atley,	Benjamin Noble.

L. C. J. Look ye, Mr. Phipps, your Objection upon the Indictment slipt me, and therefore I would speak to it now: You said it might be as well a Copy of the Indictment before it be found, as well as this a Copy of the Pannel before it be returned. Now that can't be, for an Indictment is not an Indictment till it be found, it is only a Writing prepared for the Ease of the Jury, and for Expedition; it is nothing till it is found, for the Jury make it an Indictment by finding it, they may alter what they please, or refuse it absolutely. And if the Jury, upon examining the Witnesses, would only present a Matter of Fact with Time and Place, the Court might cause it to be drawn up into Form, without carrying it to the Jury: Again, There needs no Billa vera; for that is only the Jury's Owning that which the Court has prepared and drawn up for them: But a Pannel is a Pannel when it is arrayed, before it be returned, and a Copy of the Pannel given before it be returned, is a Copy of the Pannel returned, if it be afterwards returned, as it must.

Sir Barth. Shower. But, my Lord, that Notion strengthens our Objection that we last made, that makes it necessary that we should have a Copy of the Caption, as well as the other Part, to make it a true Copy of the whole Indictment.

L. C. J. That's another Thing, we will talk of that another Time; but I speak of this only as to his Objection, which slipt my Memory, because I would have nothing remain unanswered.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, when the Bill is found, the Copy that we delivered before is as much a true Copy of the Indictment as our Copy of the Pannel is a Copy of the Jury returned.

L. C. J. A Pannel is a Pannel, when it is arrayed, but a Bill is not an Indictment till it be found; one cannot say a Man indictatus existit, till it be found; all that we say of it before it be found is, that there was quedam Billa preferred to the Grand Jury, and if the Jury bring it in Ignoramus, whereby they disown the Presentment, it is cancelled, and there is no Record of it, nor nothing, only a Memorandum in the Clerk's Book perhaps, that such a Thing was. Well, go on.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. O yes, If any one can inform my Lords, the King's Justices of Oyer and Terminer, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney General, before this Inquest to be taken, of the High-Treason whereof Ambrose Rookwood, the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted, let them come forth, and they shall be heard; for now the Prisoner stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance, and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or else they forfeit their Recognizance.

Cl. of Ar. Ambrose Rookwood, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of Ambrose Rookwood, of the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. for that he, together with Christopher Knightley, not yet taken, Robert Lowick, and Charles Cranburne, and divers others, false Traytors, &c.—prout in the Indictment, mutatis mutandis—and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and upon his Arraignment hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to enquire, whether he be Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty; if you find him Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since: if you find him Not Guilty, ye are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty: if you find him Not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so and no more: And hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mountague. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of this Jury, this Indictment that has been read to you, does charge the Prisoner with High-Treason for Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King, for endeavouring to subvert the Government, and to subject the People of England to the Slavery of Lewis the French King; and for this End the Indictment sets forth, that the Prisoner at the Bar did privately meet with several false Traytors, to consult how they might compass the Death of the King, and commit those other Treasons; and that the 10th of February, at Covent-Garden, in this County, it was agreed among them, that they should get together Forty Horsemen, whereof the Prisoner at the Bar was to be one, and they were to lie in Ambush, and set upon the King in his Coach upon his Return from going abroad; some were to attack the Coach, others to attack the Guards, and there were some to kill the King in the Coach: And the Indictment does likewise charge the Prisoner with gathering together Horses, and providing Arms for this Purpose. To this Indictment, Gentlemen, he hath pleaded Not Guilty; we shall call our Witnesses, and prove the Fact, and when we have so done, we do not at all doubt but you'll do your Duty.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, before the Witnesses are called we have a Doubt to propose to your Lordship upon this Act of Parliament, and that is, whether we are to take our Exceptions to this Indictment before the Evidence be opened or given?

L. C. J. It should properly be before the Jury is sworn.

Sir B. Shower. The Words of the Act, my Lord, are "before the Evidence given."

L. C. J. That Act provides, That if you do not take the Advantage of it before the Evidence given, you shall not move that in Arrest of Judgment.

Sir B. Shower. It only says before Evidence given, and no Evidence has yet been given.

L. C. J. But you are certainly very irregular in point of Practice, nobody ever took Exceptions to an Indictment after the Jury was sworn.

Sir B. Shower. If your Lordship pleases to let the Words be read of the Act of Parliament, they are these: That no Indictment shall be quash'd, unless Exception be taken in the Court where the Trial shall be, before any Evidence given in Court upon that Indictment. Which, we say, strongly implies, that the Law-makers thought it might be done at any Time before the Evidence was given in open Court, besides that the Law takes Notice that after Conviction it should be of no Avail; it would have been a very improper Expression before Evidence given in open Court, if it had meant before the Jury were sworn and charged; for the Word Evidence supposes the Trial commenced; If they had intended it otherwise, that is, that it should be before the Jury is sworn, they would have express'd it to be done at the Arraignment; but mentioning it to be done in the Court where the Trial is to be, before Evidence given, that supposes the Indictment to be at Issue before the Party needs to make his Exceptions. Therefore, my Lord, we hope we are regular in offering our Exceptions now.

L. C. J. Pray, what say you to it, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I think they are no Way regular; for, with Submission, I take it, that though this Act of Parliament has indulged them with several Things which were not allowable by Law before, yet as to this Part they are not allowed to take Exceptions to the Indictment, otherwise than they could before this Act was pass'd: Nay, so far from that, that if your Lordship looks into the Act, you find they are restrain'd in this Point from an Advantage that they had before, that is, they shall not move any such Things as are there mentioned, after Verdict in Arrest of Judgment: So that this Part is restrictive to the Prisoner, and takes away some Advantage that he had before; which was, moving in Arrest of Judgment after Verdict; but it leaves the making Exceptions as to any Time before the Verdict, as it was before, which was before Plea pleaded, but not after the Jury sworn: For it cannot be denied that in point of Practice, such a Thing as this that is now offered could not have been done before the Act. I would be glad to know whether they can shew any Precedent of any such Thing as they now contend for. They say, the Words of the Act are, Exception must be taken before Evidence given; but that must be taken at such a Time as they might by the Course of Law do it before: For when the Jury is sworn, they must give a Verdict, and I do not know how they can be discharged without giving a Verdict; therefore unless the Act had given Directions for a particular Manner of proceeding in this Matter, which it has not done, your Lordship will not, I presume, do it in any other Manner than as it was before the Act made; and if there be no Precedent to be shewn of any such Thing as this, of taking Exception to an Indictment after the Jury sworn and charged with the Prisoner; then there is no Power in this Act of Parliament, given to them to take Exceptions to this Indictment at this Time; we take it the Motion is very irregular upon all Accounts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we first say, that it is not proper for them to make any such Motion as this upon this Act of Parliament, till they tell us what their Exception is, that we may see whether it be within the Words and Meaning of this Act of Parliament. The only thing now that is proper for us to consider, is the Issue joined, and the Inquiry whether the Prisoner at the Bar is Guilty of the High-Treason of which he is Indicted, to which Indictment he has pleaded Not Guilty: That's the Thing that is now before your Lordship to be tried, they have Room for Exceptions to the Indictment afterwards, for some Exceptions I mean, (I do not know what their Exceptions are) but if they be such as may be taken after the Verdict, then I am sure they are irregular now in their Motion, and they can shew no Precedent, when it was done after Plea pleaded and Issue joined, as it is in this Case.

Mr. Conyers. The Advantage that the Act gives the Prisoner, of having a Copy of his Indictment so long before Trial, is to enable him to plead, or to take Exceptions to quash it; but I never heard a Motion to quash an Indictment after a Jury is charged to hear the Evidence. Certainly they ought to do it before Plea pleaded, and not now to come to make a Motion to quash the Indictment, after they have pleaded, and the Jury sworn: Therefore we submit it, upon the constant Practice in like Cases, to the Judgment of the Court.

Sir B. Shower. In Answer to that which Mr. Attorney hath said, That it is an improper Time; I thought truly I had moved it for the Advantage and Ease of the King's Counsel, that they might not proceed upon this Trial, when perhaps after all their Trouble, the Foundation, which is the Indictment, may fail. I have a great many Exceptions to the Indictment; they say we should name what our Exceptions are: I will acquaint them with them as fast as I can; if your Lordship please, the Indictment is very loose and uncertain.

L. C. J. Certainly the Motion is irregular in point of Practice.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we were afraid, we should be excluded from taking these Exceptions after the Evidence given.

L. C. J. So you are by the express Words of the Act.

Sir B. Shower. Then certainly we may do it before the Evidence given.

L. C. J. But the Act does not say, Ye shall do it any Time before the Evidence given, especially in such an irregular Manner, after Issue joined, and the Jury sworn. Suppose Mr. Attorney had given some Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, I agree we had been without the Words; therefore I now move it before the Evidence, because the Act of Parliament has given me Liberty to do it before the Evidence given: For the Law having given this Liberty to the Prisoner, to make such Exceptions within such a Time, your Lordship will not restrain us from making Use of that Liberty further than the Law has restrained, but we may make Use of our Exceptions before the Evidence given, either to induce your Lordship to quash the Indictment, or the Jury to find us Not Guilty, as we hope your Lordship will direct them to do: for what is more common upon Indictments after the Jury are sworn, than if Facts appear upon the Record not to be sufficiently alledged, the Court will direct the Jury to find the Party Not Guilty. We think this Act does give us this Liberty, otherwise I know not to what Purpose it was made; the very Meaning seems to be, that the Exceptions of the Counsel for the Prisoner might be of Prejudice to the King; and therefore it says after the King's Evidence given, and the Fact discovered, no such Exceptions shall be made: Therefore we must make it before the Evidence given, otherwise this Act of Parliament, that was designed in Favour of the Prisoner, will prove a very great Hardship upon him, especially in Case of an imperfect Indictment, as we apprehend this is, and he will be in a worse Condition than ever he was; he must take his Exceptions now or not at all. The Act says, He is not to take it after Evidence given; and by Construction the King's Counsel would have it, That he should not give it before: And consequently he has no Time at all to give it.

L. C. J. Have not you had Time to do it before now, Sir Bartholemew Shower? Certainly you had. You had Time this Day Seven-night, when you were arraign'd; you have had your Opportunity if you would have taken it; the Jury are now charg'd, the Indictment is opened, they have been told what they are to enquire of, and now you would break in and take Exceptions to the Indictment.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, this is a new Act of Parliament, it says we shall take our Exceptions before the Evidence given; which, we take it, is any Time before the Evidence given; and if your Lordship will not allow us to do it now, it may be, we may lose the Benefit of it absolutely.

L. C. J. It is one Question whether we shall allow it or no; and another Question whether you can claim it or no: Certainly it is an irregular Motion, and the like of it was never offered in any Case before, be it Criminal or Civil: For if it be a Criminal Case that is not Felony or Treason, when the Issue comes to Trial upon an Indictment, Did you ever know any Exception taken to the Indictment after the Jury were charged? Certainly it is contrary to all Practice; and it is not fair, the Court is not well dealt with; you have had an Opportunity before, and will you now put the Court and the Jury to so great deal of Trouble, to stay till the Jury be called over? The Prisoner called to his Challenges, he has challenged Thirty-four, the Jury is sworn, the Indictment is read to them, the Charge given them, the Counsel have opened the Indictment; and now when the Business is only to try the Issue with which the Jury are charged, you come to turn us quite round, by taking Exceptions to the Indictment.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, we take it the Act gives us this Time to do it in.

L. C. J. You know you had another Time more proper to do it in.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, If we have not Time now; then this Clause, with humble Submission, signifies nothing at all.

L. C. J. The Clause was made in this Respect, to your Disadvantage, because you should have a Copy of the Indictment, whereby you might have an Opportunity to advise with Counsel, that they might instruct you how to plead, and to take any manner of Exception before Plea pleaded, it ought to be before the Trial, and now because of this Advantage, it provides that you shall take your Exceptions before the Trial, and not move them in Arrest of Judgment, that is the Meaning of the Act.

Mr. Phipps. Then, my Lord, there needed no Time at all to be mentioned in the Act, but have left it as it was at Common Law.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, there did need a Time to be limited; for this Clause was made I say in your Disadvantage, in depriving the Prisoner of the Benefit of such Kind of Exceptions in Arrest of Judgment, because of the Advantage that was given in the former Part of the Act, where you had Time given you to make your Exceptions, for which End you are to have a Copy of the Indictment five Days before you are called to plead.

Sir B. Shower. We could not come before, my Lord, as we apprehend, because the Words of the Act are "before Evidence given."

L. C. J. But I tell you, this Clause was not for your Benefit, but for your Disadvantage.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, what we press arises from the very Words of the Act of Parliament, if the Meaning of the Law-makers was as the King's Counsel now contend to have it; they would never have used those Words "before Evidence given in open Court," but have said they should have had no Advantage of the Exception, unless it were before Plea pleaded; it does not say it shall be after the Verdict, or before the Verdict, but before the Evidence given: Now if they had meant what these Gentlemen say, they would have appointed it to be before the Verdict, which would have included the Trial; because then it had been like the Penning of other Acts of Parliament, the Statutes of Jeofails and the like, which say, That after a Verdict, such and such Exceptions shall not arrest a Judgment: But if they can shew me any Statute that is penn'd like this, they give me an Answer: All those Statutes are, That no Judgment shall be arrested or delay'd upon such or such Exceptions after a Verdict: But here it says they shall not arrest Judgment, unless the Exception be taken before Evidence given in open Court. My Lord, We submit it to you, we think the Law-makers did intend somewhat by that particular Way of Expression, different from all other Acts of Parliament; and truly if it be not as we offer to your Lordship, we think it can have no Meaning at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Truly, my Lord, we think it is very plain what the Parliament meant, by this Clause in this Act; the Design was, to restrain the Prisoner from moving in Arrest of Judgment, for Mis-spelling, or false Latin, or little Matters of Form, if he did not move it in a proper Time, having such a Liberty allow'd him, as to have a Copy of the Indictment so many Days before he was compelled to plead: They insist upon it, that the Words are, Before Evidence given; It is so: But what can be the Meaning of that? It must be at such Time as the Law allows; it is not making a new Method of Trial; you shall take Exception before the Evidence, that is, before the Trial, for it can never be intended, that they they meant to alter the Course, and let the Counsel break in between the Time of the Jury's being sworn, and the Evidence given; that by no Law could ever have been done before.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Mr. Attorney, when would you have us do it?

Mr. Att. Gen. Regularly before Plea pleaded, at least-wise before the Jury be sworn.

L. C. J. Undoubtedly this is not regular, it is contrary to all the Course of Practice, it is not fair Dealing with the Court. But then there is another Consideration in the Case, that I would have you think upon: If so be this had been at a Trial by Nisi Prius, then the Judge of Nisi Prius is only to try the Issue; but now here the very Record is before us, and we are Judges of the Record, as well as we are to assist the Jury in Trying the Issue. Now take it in any other Case of the like Nature; Suppose a Trial at the Bar in any Civil Cause, though this be contrary to Practice, and the Court not fairly dealt with, yet when we have the Record before us, and find an Error in the Record, cannot we quash the Indictment and discharge the Jury? That is the Question, Mr. Attorney, though I must confess, I do not know that it has been practicable.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, in a Case of Treason, where the Jury are once charg'd, they are to give a Verdict, they must either Acquit or Convict.

Sir B. Shower. It was done in Whitebread's Case *.

Mr. Att. Gen. But I know what has been usually thought in that Case, and I believe they cannot shew me another.

L. C. J. Nay, that this is a very irregular Motion, is very plain.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Certainly, my Lord, you must take it as the Law was before this Act, for this Clause does nothing for the Prisoner, but is against him.

L. C. J. I know it is not for the Advantage of the Prisoner, therefore I put it as a Case in an Action, or an Indictment, as the Law was before, whether this being a Trial in the same Court where the Indictment was found, and we find an Insufficiency in the Record before us, whether we cannot quash the Indictment?

Mr. Sol. Gen. Your Lordship mentions Civil Actions; with Submission, nothing of that kind could be done after once the Cause came to Trial, but in Criminal Causes according to the Course of Practice, which will always be the Law till particularly altered: I believe nobody can pretend, that after Issue join'd, and a Jury charg'd, any one can move to quash the Indictment. I think I have heard it often said in this Court, that in Capital Cases, as High-Treason, you may put in a Plea in Abatement of, but not a Motion to quash an Indictment; I am sure it was disallowed where I moved to quash an Indictment of Murder, let them but show any Precedent of this Nature.

Sir B. Shower. We will show you, though this is the first Case upon this Act of Parliament, therefore to show any Practice upon it would be very hard to require of us.

L. C. J. But can you show it before this Clause in this Act of Parliament? which, as I told you, is not for your Advantage; it does not give that Liberty that you desire.

Sir B. Shower. All the Clauses in this Act of Parliament shew'd their Intention was this, that the Sense of the Law-makers was, that we should have this Liberty at any Time before Evidence given, for if there be such Words as shew'd they thought it might be quash'd at any Time, though they were mistaken in the Practice, yet we shall have the Liberty that they intended us; and the Wording of this Act shows, that the Parliament thought it might be done after the Trial begun, before Evidence given, because they restrain us from taking those Exceptions after the Evidence given; and it is no Prejudice to the King at all really, it is rather for the Advantage of the Prosecution, because there is none of the Evidence disclosed, and therefore if the Indictment should be found faulty, still the Evidence remains undiscovered upon another Indictment; and I have often heard it said at this Bar in Cases of Indictments for Felony or Treason, as Murder, or the like; if any one did come as amicus curiæ, and acquainted the Court, that they were going to proceed upon an erroneous Record, or give an erroneous Judgment, or do any other erroneous Act, he ought to be received with Kindness, because he would prevent a Wrong doing.

L. C. J. That is in the proper Time, not to interrupt the Trial when the Jury is once sworn.

Sir B. Shower. We are ready to offer our Exceptions, and we hope it is no Prejudice at all to the King before the Evidence of the Fact is given.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I perceive that this Clause, as they would have it, is intended to prevent us from moving that in Arrest of Judgment, which we could have moved before, and ties us up to do it before Evidence given; now I would fain know, if we could not before this Act move in Arrest of Judgment, for mis-spelling, or false Latin, or improper Latin.

Mr. Att. Gen. You might, no Doubt of it.

Mr. Phipps. They say we might; why then, if we could have a Time to move it after the Verdict, and that Time is abridg'd by the Act of Parliament, which directs that it shall be before Evidence given in open Court, sure we may take any Time before the Evidence given, and shall not be restrain'd further than the Letter of the Law has restrain'd us; for this Act was intended for the Benefit of the Subject, and ought to be construed as much in their Favour as the Letter of it will permit.

Mr. Att. Gen. No doubt of it, it is to be done before Evidence given; but the Question is, at what Time it must be before the Evidence given, whether it must not be at such Time as by the Course of Practice and Usage of the Law it should have been done before; if you will satisfy my Lord and the Court that ever such an Exception was taken, or an Indictment quash'd between the Swearing of the Jury and the giving the Evidence, ye say something; but I believe not one Instance of that Nature can be given, and therefore it is very irregular for them to do it.

L. C. J. They don't pretend to it, for aught I hear, for I would put them upon it, to show me whether they could do it before.

Sir B. Shower. I don't question, my Lord, but it might be, with Submission.

Mr. Conyers. Did you ever know it before that any one undertook to inform the Court as amicus curiæ, but it was to prevent a wrong Judgment? And for that you have your proper Time either before Plea pleaded by Motion to quash the Indictment, or after Verdict to arrest a Judgment; this Act of Parliament has restrain'd you in particular Instances that are mention'd from doing it after Verdict in Arrest of Judgment; but having given you a Copy of the Indictment before you pleaded, you have had a proper Time to make these Exceptions; and if you have laps'd your Time you come too late to do it now, for sure nobody ever made a Motion to quash an Indictment after Issue join'd, and the Jury sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I would only mention one Case, and that was of Sir Richard Mansell, upon an Indictment of Murder, for Killing the Apothecary in Holbourn; I did myself move to quash the Indictment, because it was not express'd in what Year of the King the Fact was done; but the Court was of Opinion we could not move to quash an Indictment for that, or any such notorious Crime, till after the Fact determined.

L. C. J. No, we were always of that Opinion, never to allow Motions to quash Indictments for Perjury, Murder, or any great Offence, but it must be moved in Arrest of Judgment afterwards.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, these Gentlemen seem to beg the Question upon this Act of Parliament, as if it had appointed this to be the Time of making Exceptions to the Indictment; the Act of Parliament does not say you shall make your Exception immediately before the Evidence given in open Court, as if it had pointed out and directed to them that particular Time, that then they should take their Exception and no other Time: The Act has only set a Bound, that they shall not do it afterwards; but as to the particular Time, it is left as it was before, to the regular Course and Method of Proceedings, which is before Plea pleaded.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, they do not answer my Objection; it is, it seems, a Restriction of a Liberty that we had before of moving in Arrest of Judgment; if so, we ought not to be restrained further than we are by the Words of the Act of Parliament, which say, before Evidence given, that is, at any Time before Evidence given, as well after as before Plea pleaded.

Sir B. Shower. I would ask these Gentlemen, whether the Law-makers intended that we should have no Advantage of excepting against false Spelling and improper Latin?

Mr. Conyers. Yes, they did, but that you should do in your proper Time.

Sir B. Shower. Then the Time for doing it must be that which the Words of the Law say, before the Evidence given in open Court, and that's now.

Mr. Conyers. No, you might have come at the Day of Arraignment, and have taken the Advantage of it then before you had pleaded.

L. C. J. Ye have had my Opinion what I think of it, my Lords and Brothers, I suppose, will tell you theirs.

L. C. J. Treby. My Lord Chief Justice has delivered his Opinion in this Matter, and he thinks fit that we should deliver ours. I think this Motion of the Prisoner's Counsel to quash this Indictment after the Jury sworn, is irregular and quite out of Season; the Intent of this Clause in this Act of Parliament, certainly was not in Favour of the Prisoner; it abridgeth him of a Liberty he had before, but gives him nothing: For the Law-makers did think they had given the Prisoner an extraordinary Favour in the foregoing Part of the Act, in giving him a Copy of the Indictment five Days before he should plead, and a Copy of the Pannel two Days before he should be tried, and allowing him Counsel; and all these Advantages were to enable him to quash the Indictment, or the Process returned, for the Clause extends to both; the Words are, That no Indictment nor Process or Return thereupon, shall be quash'd on the Motion of the Prisoner or his Counsel for Mis-writing, Mis-spelling, false or improper Latin, unless Exception concerning the same be taken and made in the respective Court where such Trial shall be by the Prisoner or his Counsel assign'd before any Evidence given in open Court upon such Indictment, nor shall any such Mis-writing, &c. after Conviction be any Cause to stay Judgment: Therefore they made this extraordinary Provision to restrain the Prisoner, in Part, by this Clause; as much as to say you have an Advantage of the Copy of the Indictment, and you may make use of that to quash it by Motion, if you think fit, as you may also the Process, but it shall be before Evidence given. 'Tis true, those are the Words, but the using that Term, viz. quashing such Indictment or Process, shows it must be done in such a Way and Time as is proper for quashing; and the very Words are, that it shall be upon Motion. Now we are to expound those Words. And I say, a Motion to quash an Indictment, must be understood a Motion in the proper Season, which I think is before Plea pleaded; but at least before the Jury is sworn. There were three Times when the Prisoner might have had the Advantage of a Fault in the Indictment before this Act. 1. By Motion to quash it before Plea pleaded. 2. Then afterwards in Arrest of Judgment: And 3. After that by Writ of Error. Now this Clause of this Act takes away the Privilege of moving in Arrest of Judgment for Mis-writing, &c. but saves the Advantage upon a Writ of Error, and upon a Motion to quash the Indictment. We are to consider what is a proper Time for a Motion to quash an Indictment; the Motion is to be made to the Court, and to them alone. It is not to be made to the Court and the Jury. When the Jury is sworn, all Application is to be made to the Court, as having a Jury present which they are to assist in the Trial and Determination of the Fact only. What Use then is there of the Jury, when you make this Motion, which consists only in Points of Law? They must stand by and be out of Office all the while this Motion is making: And it is not reasonable, nor certainly ever was intended, that after a Jury is sworn to try a Matter of Fact, they should stand idle, while you move a Thing which you should have moved before they came to the Bar: Suppose you should now move some Exception to the Verdict, and the Return thereupon, should we, when we and you also have admitted the Jury to be sworn, quash the Process whereby they are return'd? And yet we may as well do that as this. For, the Act provides in the very same Words concerning Quashing Process and Indictments. But, when the Jury is sworn, and ready to receive their Evidence, sure, then it is out of all Season to make such a Motion; therefore I do not think the Parliament intended by this Clause (which was a kind of Exception to the Favour the Prisoner receiv'd by having the Copy of the Indictment) to institute a new Method of Proceedings for Motions to quash Indictments, even when a Jury is at the Bar and sworn to try the Issue, and there is nothing proper to be proceeded upon, but only to hear the Evidence produc'd for the Proof of that Issue, till the Jury is discharged. But still this I would say; this is a new Case, and upon a new Statute. I am truly of Opinion, that the Motion is altogether unseasonable and irregular, and it should have been made before, and you had a full Opportunity to make it this Day Seven-night before Plea pleaded, and you might likewise To-day before the Jury was sworn; therefore when the Jury are now at the Bar actually enter'd into, and employ'd upon the Service, the Court ought not to be interrupted by such a Motion. Yet nevertheless I would propound this, that, seeing it is a new Case and upon a new Statute, the Court would forgive the Irregularity, (for I think it does need Forgiveness) and if the King's Counsel will consent to it (to prevent any Error or any Pretence of Hardship upon a new Law) that we should hear their Exceptions.

Sir Edward Ward. L. C. Baron. This Act of Parliament, as it has given a Benefit to the Prisoner that he had not before, in allowing him a Copy of his Indictment, in order to his making Exceptions; so it has restrained him as to the Time of making those Exceptions: That he should have Time, there is no Doubt; the Time limited for it, as this Act says, must be before Evidence given, because they thought it unreasonable that there should be any Quashing of the Indictment after such Time as the King had given any Evidence whatsoever in the Case; for that would be a Discovery of the King's Evidence, and great Inconveniences would ensue thereupon; but the Question is at what Time this is to be done; Whether it may be at any Time before Evidence given or no; it did intend surely that the Motion to quash the Indictment and the Exceptions to it might have their proper Effect, and that must be before the Trial; for it was not the Intent of the Act to alter the Method of Proceedings, and it is to no Purpose after the Jury is sworn, for then their proper Office is to determine the Fact; now if before this Act of Parliament it never was allow'd to take any such Exception as this after the Jury sworn, it will be consistent with the Words of the Act of Parliament, which are, That it shall be done before Evidence given: If then it be in the regular Time for Motions, which is before Plea pleaded or Jury sworn, that is, before Evidence given; for it is not said, as Mr. Cowper observed, that it should be immediately before the Evidence given, I think sure such an Exposition as was formerly made ought to be made in this Case, the Time not being precisely fix'd by this Act; if there were a certain Time determin'd when Men should take their Exceptions, as we know it has been in Practice before Issue join'd, then after the Jury is sworn it is an improper Time then, I think, to make such Exceptions: I do not suppose this Act, as to the Method of Proceedings —, than it was before, but this Exception ought to be taken before Plea pleaded: Truly it is a new Act of Parliament, and this is so far within the Words of the Act that it is before Evidence given, as the Counsel for the Prisoner say. If this can be govern'd and ruled by Proceedings and Practice in former Times in Cases not of Felony or Treason, but only in Criminal Cases: If nobody should suffer by any Interpretation, I should think it ought to bear a conformable Construction to what the Practice was before, I take it you have lost the regular Time for making your Exception, and you invert the whole Method of Proceedings upon Trials: For to what Purpose is it to take Exceptions to quash the Indictment when the Jury are once charged with it? If it be an Indictment that ought to be quash'd, the Jury ought not to be charged, you have had two Times, and they are both of them elaps'd, for this Matter, that is, at the Arraignment, and before the Jury sworn; yet I would propose it to the King's Counsel as my Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas has done, it being a new Case, that it should be better consider'd of and agreed upon, that in these Cases we may go on upon a certain Rule that it may be establish'd for all Time to come.

Mr. J. Nevile. I would begin with the Proposal, because, I believe, I may not be so clear in my Opinion, otherwise I must deliver my Thoughts according to my Judgment, but I would have the King's Counsel consider of the Proposal.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, for us to consent to that in such a Case as this, where the Court thinks it not regular, would be pretty hard to desire of us; if any Thing of Advantage should happen on the other Side, I verily think the Counsel for the Prisoner will not be so ready to consent to waive any such Advantage, nor am I for asking them to do it; this Clause goes only to some Faults in the Indictment; Mis-spelling, Mis-writing, false and improper Latin, that is all that they are restrain'd from moving in Arrest of Judgment; any Thing else, any Uncertainty or other Matter, that is not comprehended under these Particulars, they may take Advantage of to move in Stay of Judgment after a Verdict; this Clause does only abridge them from moving in Arrest of Judgment for Mis-writing, Mis-spelling, false or improper Latin; therefore if your Lordship should think it reasonable we should consent to let them in to make any Exception now, it must be confin'd to those particular Objections of false and improper Latin, there can be no Colour to make the Liberty larger, because for any Thing else they are not restrain'd from moving it in Arrest of Judgment, for there can be no Hardship in that Case, as I think, they have no Reason to complain that there has been in any other Part of the Case; but for those Particulars that there may be no Complaint of Hardship, if your Lordship thinks it reasonable we should consent, it may be we may be prevail'd upon to do it, though whatever Hardship does happen it is their own Fault, and the Prisoner may thank his own Counsel for that Hardship: If we assist them now to let them in, it ought to be taken as a great Kindness; and truly, my Lord, I am unwilling to do any Thing that your Lordship and the Court should think hard upon the Prisoner. Certainly it is the Fault of their own Counsel, now the Law has allow'd the Prisoner Counsel, not to take the proper Time, and pursue the usual Methods; and it is a Strain beyond what is usual, that we must help their Faults by our Consent; however, if the Court think it reasonable, I shall not be against it, but then I am sure the Court will take Care they shall be confin'd to those Particulars that are mentioned in the Act.

L. C. J. No Doubt of it: Therefore Sir Bartholemew Shower, are your Exceptions for Mis-spelling, Mis-writing, or false or improper Latin? for if they be such Things as you may move in Arrest of Judgment, and have that Advantage, then there is no Colour that we should break through all the Rules of Proceedings to admit such an irregular Motion as this.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, in the Case of the Life of a Man I will not take upon me to say what is Mis-spelling, Mis-writing, or false or improper Latin, or what is substantial; but all that I say is, I have Five Exceptions, every one of them imports a Doubt, as I take it, worthy the Consideration of the Court, and some of them effectual enough to quash the Indictment; but for me, when a Man's Life is at stake, and it partly depends upon me as his Counsel, to say what is proper or improper Latin, or to admit it to be Matter of Substance, and then To-morrow to have it come and told me, you should have mov'd this To-day, then I am sure they would have Reason to say, it was the Fault of the Prisoner's Counsel; for he would have chosen very ill Counsel, in me, I confess, if I should consent to put any such Disadvantage upon him. I beg the Favour that I may have the Liberty to propose my Objections, which I think are worth Considering of; it is for the Advantage of the King for us to take our Exceptions all together, because, else if any of them prove material, the Trouble of the Trial will be but Mispence of Time.

L. C. J. No, we cannot hear all your Objections, but those that are mention'd particularly in the Act of Parliament; for such as are not mentioned in the Clause, you have a proper Time to move them in Arrest of Judgment.

Sir B. Shower. Then we will put those that are within the Act.

Mr. Att. Gen. If we do any Thing by Way of Consent in this Matter, we must insist upon it, that they be confin'd to the Particulars in the Act; we desire they may open their Objections to the Court, and if the Court shall think they are properly under those Heads, then they will consider of them, if the Court be of another Mind, then they must be reserv'd till the proper Time.

L. C. J. Do you consent then, Mr. Attorney, that they shall now take those Exceptions that are mentioned in the Act of Parliament?

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Court think it reasonable upon those Terms, I do.

Mr. J. Powys. Let them open them if your Lordship please, and let us keep the Power in our own Hands to do as our Discretions shall direct.

L. C. J. Truly I do not know whether we can do any Thing in this Matter, I question much whether it be Discretionary in us to break through all the common Method of Proceeding, and admit of such Irregularities.

L. C. J. Treby. I have a great Inclination to hear them, that we may get rid of these pretended Exceptions, which I am apt to think will, when opened, disappoint the Expectations that may be rais'd by this mentioning them in general; for, I have that Opinion of the Ability and Circumspection of the Counsel, that I believe if they had had Exceptions sufficient to quash the Indictment, we should have heard of them at a Time more proper than this now between the Swearing the Jury and giving Evidence to them. But, possibly, the Counsel may think fit to make an Essay, and try what can be got out of this unusual Expression in this new Act.

L. C. J. No, no, I know this is a Piece of Art, and the Court is not well dealt with in it.

L. C. J. Treby. Indeed I am very willing to hear them for that Reason.

L. C. J. I look upon it only as mere Trick, and a Piece of Art to take the Opinion of the Court.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, it was my Mistake then; for I take it, if the Act of Parliament had intended otherwise, they would have express'd it otherwise.

L. C. J. Does the Act of Parliament give you another Liberty, and a greater than you had before? Does it not design to abridge you of a Liberty that you had before? Certainly it never intended that the Court should admit of any irregular Proceedings.

Mr. J. Powell. You should have tim'd your Motion better; for certainly now the Jury is charg'd they must give a Verdict either of Acquittal or Conviction; and if you move to quash the Indictment, and your Exceptions are material, the Jury cannot proceed; you see what a Pains your Motion has brought it to, 'tis certainly a mighty irregular Motion.

L. C. J. Treby. What Judgment would you have us give? I would ask you that: If any Exception were moved before the Jury were sworn, and it proved material, the proper Judgment were, that the Indictment be quash'd; but now they are sworn, what Judgment must we give? Must we not expect the Verdict of the Jury first upon the Fact? And must we then give Judgment upon your Exception?

Sir B. Shower. I know not whether your Lordship may not give Judgment first to quash the Indictment, and then discharge the Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. And what if we do not find Cause to quash it, then you'll say, we must go on with the Evidence, as we were going before this Interfering? Are we to be doing two Things at once? I am pretty certain you can show me no Precedent for any like Proceedings in any Case: It is confounding the Offices of the Judge and Jury.

Mr. Phipps. If your Lordships try'd the Validity of our Exceptions, and find Occasion to quash the Indictment, there will be no need of a Jury.

L. C. J. Upon the Statute of Jeofails in a civil Cause, suppose at a Trial at Bar, it appears upon the Face of the Declaration, that there is such a Mistake as will be cured by the Verdict; but if the Party had demurred, and shown it for Cause, it would have been fatal. Do you think, when he has wav'd the Benefit of Demurrer and pleaded to Issue, that you shall move this and help yourself by such a Motion, because it will be helpt after a Verdict?

Sir B. Shower. If this Act had been worded as that Statute of Jeofails is, it may be we might not.

L. C. J. Why, it is not said, in the Statute of Jeofails, that it shall be good after Issue joined, before the Jury is charg'd or sworn, but that it shall not be good after the Verdict.

Sir B. Shower. It is before the Evidence given.

L. C. J. Could he do so in any Case before this Act, and does the Act enlarge your Liberty, or abridge it?

L. C. J. Treby. Sir Bartholomew Shower, you insist upon Part of the Words of the Act of Parliament; it says, no Indictment or Process shall be quash'd upon the Motion of the Prisoner or his Counsel, unless it be made before any Evidence, &c. Now, I suppose, the Parliament use that Expression, upon the Motion, in the same Sense as it is used in Law, viz. for such a one as should be in the Time when Motions for quashing the Indictments are properly to be made; now, when is that? It is plain, it was always before the Jury come to the Bar, nay before the Plea of the Party. If that be the proper Time to make such a Motion, then that Expression in this Act of a Motion to quash the Indictment will very well help to construe the other Part of the Clause that you insist upon: For if the Motion be made before Plea pleaded, it is certainly before the Evidence given in your Sense. And I conceive, that under that Expression [Evidence given] which signifies the main Part, the Parliament intended to comprehend the whole Proceeding to Trial, beginning, if not from the Pleading Not Guilty, at least, from the Swearing the Jury. Before Evidence given in Court, may reasonably be expounded, Before the Prisoner hath fully entered into that Contestation of the Fact, which is to be determined only by Evidence in Court. I attended the Court of King's-Bench a long Time, and I believe that I have heard it said a hundred Times, upon Motions to quash Indictments of great or odious Offences: No, try it, says the Court, we will not quash it, plead to it, let the Fact be tried, you may then move it in Arrest of Judgment. Those Expressions shew'd that the proper Time for a Motion to quash an Indictment was before Plea, tho' they, in their Discretion, would not grant a Motion to quash, in Cases of such great Offences. But sure they did not think that when a Jury came to the Bar, it was a tolerable Time to move to quash an Indictment; there was no Expectation of hearing of such a Motion then. And certainly this Clause which is made wholly against the Prisoner, should not be construed to help him to such a new extraordinary and absurd Liberty.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, with Submission, that Practice goes upon another Reason, the Court would not quash it at all upon a Motion; this Act of Parliament supposes that you will quash upon a Motion at any Time before Evidence given: We never heard of a Motion to quash an Indictment for Felony or Treason, but still the Court would always say, Demur, or Plead, or move in Arrest of Judgment; but by this Law it seems the Sense of the Parliament was, that it might be quash'd upon a Motion.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir B. Shower is come to what I said, that in Truth there is no such Thing as quashing an Indictment for Treason or Felony, as I mentioned in Sir Rich. Mansel's Case, and I think the Rule that was given in that Case will serve now in this Case; I am for consenting, if they be kept within the Limits of the Act of Parliament; but I must desire the Opinion of the Court before we do consent.

L. C. J. Holt. Aye, aye, Go on, Brother Nevile.

Mr. Just. Nevile. I must confess I cannot but doubt, as this Act is, there were two Times that they had Liberty of taking these Exceptions to Indictments; but indeed, in Murder and Treason they were seldom admitted, till they came to move in Arrest of Judgment; but still there was always a Privilege, and a Time given to the Prisoner, be the Crime what it would, to take that Advantage which the Law gave him, to prevent Judgment against him. Now I agree, it is irregular and unseasonable to offer it now, and quite different from all former Practice; you might have done it before now, the Act says expressly it must be done before Evidence; but you might have taken Advantage before the Jury was sworn, nay before you had pleaded, but you have lapsed your Time. Yet truly, notwithstanding you have lapsed your Time, I cannot satisfy myself to take away the Liberty that the Law has given the Prisoner sometime or other, to except against the Indictment. It is plain that before this Act, after Verdict he might have moved in Arrest of Judgment, now he cannot do so; whether the Fault be in the Counsel I cannot tell, but the great Prejudice is to the Person that is to be try'd, who will now be wholly precluded from making any Advantage of the Exceptions he has to the Indictment, because by the Act he cannot move in Arrest of Judgment. This seems a strong Implication that the Parliament intended he must have some Time or other, but before Evidence given, to offer his Exceptions. I say this only to those particular Things that are mentioned in the Act, Mis-writing, Mis-spelling, False or Improper Latin; as to these four particular Things which the Party is barr'd from moving in Arrest of Judgment, I cannot satisfy myself but that he should have one Time or another to take this Advantage before the Evidence given, and therefore I think he should have it now: It is true, it is altogether irregular, the Jury being sworn, and it ought to have been done before; but I hope if it be admitted now, it will be with such Observation, that nobody will ever offer at it for Time to come. As this Case is before us, and the Act of Parliament, which perhaps may have led the Counsel into that Mistake, that it might be any Time before Evidence given, tho' they know the proper Time, and the regular Method in other Cases; yet I doubt it is hard to put such a Construction upon this Act on the sudden, quite to debar the Prisoner of the Benefit of his Exceptions to the Indictment.

Mr. Just. Powell. I have already declar'd my Opinion, that the Prisoner has had his proper Time for making his Exceptions, but he has lapsed that Time; but I am not against that Motion in a Case of Life, upon an Indictment for so great a Crime as Treason is; and where the Consequence is so great, if it may consist with the Rules of Law, and it be the Sense of the Court, and the King's Counsel consent to let them be heard, I submit to it, nay I would Second or Third that Motion that they may be heard.

Mr. Just. Eyres. Truly I am of the same Opinion, I think we ought not to alter the ancient Course of Law by Words of Implication, nor go any further than the Act of Parliament does express. The Act appoints that a Copy of the Indictment should be delivered to the Prisoner so many Days before, to enable him to make his Exceptions, and therefore deprives him of the Benefit of those Exceptions after Conviction in Arrest of Judgment. I see no Words in the Act of Parliament that do alter the Course of Proceedings as to this Matter, from what it was in all Civil and Criminal Causes before; Persons must take their Advantage of Excepting in their proper Time, but when it comes to Issue, the next Thing to be done is the Trial; and truly I must needs say the Counsel are to blame, that knew this so very well, that if they have any Advantage of Excepting, they did not take that Advantage sooner, it is their Fault; but seeing it is so, I am of Opinion not to foreclose the Prisoner, as the Case stands. I would be tender of Life, but at the same Time I declare my Opinion upon this Act of Parliament as the rest of my Brothers have done, to prevent the Objection for the Time to come; yet seeing there is this Misfortune, and there would be a Hardship upon the Prisoner by the Default and Neglect of his Counsel in the Case of a Man's Life, I would be so tender as to indulge them to make their Objections now.

Mr. B. Powys. I am of the same Opinion the Prisoner has lapsed his Time, for I take it this Clause of this Act of Parliament has not altered the common Course of Proceedings; nay, I take it, it signifies very little in this Case; for certainly it was intended to disable the Prisoner, and not enable him at all; and therefore, as the Case is, I think it very Irregular and Impracticable to introduce so great a Novelty, as to admit the Motion for quashing the Indictment, when the Jury is sworn, and when the Fact is the only single Point to be determin'd, and every Thing else ought in legal Course to come before or after; but for us to confound Time, one Time for Pleading, another Time for Trial, and another for Arrest of Judgment, all at once, and to have a Jury attending merely to hear Counsel at the Bar moot Points of Law, which might be determin'd either before or after the Trial, is so very irregular, that it really introduces nothing but Confusion, which Courts of Justice ought to avoid above all Things, and ought to keep to the proper Seasons that the Law allows. Therefore, truly, I think in Strictness of Law we ought not to allow it; but it being in a Case of Life, and it being a new Case upon a new Act of Parliament, if the King's Counsel thinks fit to Consent, I shall be for it; if not, I think in Strictness of Law we cannot allow it.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I am very unwilling to deny the Prisoner any Advantage that he might have had by this Act of Parliament, though his Counsel have slipt the proper Time; if Sir Bartholomew Shower will say his Exceptions are to any of the four particular Heads mentioned in this Clause of the Act of Parliament, for we must confine them to that, then we do consent that he should make them now.

L. C. J. Truly, Mr. Attorney, if you do consent that they take their Exceptions now, we may consider of it whether it can be; but I know not how we could admit them to that Liberty otherwise, for if there be any Thing material, they may move it in Arrest of Judgment.

Mr. Att. Gen. And I believe they won't say their Objections are so slight, as to be only Matter of Form; they say they are Substantial, and then your Lordship will hear them in a proper Time.

Sir B. Shower. I don't know whether I am mistaken in the Law, I am sure you are mistaken in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Well, do you consent to let them make their Objections, as to those four Heads in the Act of Parliament?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, my Lord; if it be any Matter of Substance, that is out of the Case at present, for the Provision of the Act of Parliament is only for meer Matter of Form, and I should be very unwilling in any Point that is material, to make a Precedent in such a Case as this.

L. C. J. I confess if you had consented farther, I do not know how we should have admitted of it.

L. C. J. Treby. I tell you how I thought it might be done; you might have committed an Irregularity, for which in a Case of Life, and upon a new Law, I believe and hope we should have been forgiven.

L. C. J. Well, for my Part I will not commit any Irregularity upon any Account whatsoever; I cannot see how by Law they can take any Exceptions to the Indictment; Mr. Attorney cannot consent, and if he did, I think it could not be, unless he did also consent to discharge the Jury; but I see they will not offer any Objections according to your Consent, Mr. Attorney, and therefore pray go on to open the Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar, Ambrose Rookwood, stands indicted for High-Treason, in Compassing and Imagining the Death of his Majesty. Gentlemen, the Overt-Acts that are laid in the Indictment to prove this Treason, are; that He, together with divers Others, had frequent Meetings and Consultations in order to Assassinating His Majesty's Royal Person, and did provide Horses and Arms for that purpose.

Gentlemen, the Evidence that you will hear, to prove these Facts that are thus laid, will be of this Nature; you will hear by the Witnesses, That there has been for some Years a Design carried on to Murder the King's Person; that this was discoursed of, and several Debates and Consultations were had about it the last Year, some Time before the King went to Flanders; there was several Meetings, where were Sir William Parkyns, Captain Porter, and Charnock that was Executed, and several others, and there they did consider in what way to take off the King at that Time; and you will hear they did expect a Commission to authorize it from the late King James; but then the Commission did not come, they had not any such at that Time; but they did think fit to put it in Execution without any such Order and Authority, and therefore they endeavour'd to have got a Vessel to have carry'd them off after they had Executed this bloody Conspiracy; but it happen'd His Majesty went to Flanders sooner than they thought, and they could not provide themselves of a Security for a Retreat, and so at that Time the Design was laid aside.

But, Gentlemen, you will hear this Conspiracy was renewed, and set on Foot this Winter; and in Order to the Accomplishment of it you will hear, that about Christmas last there were several Persons sent from France by the late King James, on purpose to put this horrible Design in Execution. Sir George Barclay was to be at the Head of it; he was a Lieutenant in one of the late King James's Troops of Guards in France, he was sent over with a Commission, and Mr. Rookwood, the Prisoner at the Bar, was a Brigadier in the Guards there; these came over; and several other Troopers of the late King James's Guards, by two or three at a Time, that they might not be observ'd; particularly you will hear, that when Sir George Barclay was come over, several Troopers were sent by King James himself to come to him at St. Germain's; and there he told them he had a Piece of Service for them to do in England, and that they should observe Sir George Barclay's Orders and Directions. More particularly there was one Harris and Hare, two Troopers in the Guards, were sent for by the late King James into the late Queen's Bed-Chamber at St. Germain's, where Colonel Parker was present; they were told by the late King, He was sensible they had served him faithfully, and he would advance them, and he had now a Piece of Service for them to do, which would enable him to do it. He told them they must go over into England, and be sure to obey Sir George Barclay's Directions; and they were order'd to endeavour to find out Sir George Barclay when they came into England; and were told by him, that they would meet Sir George Barclay twice a Week in Covent-Garden-Square, in the Evening, and the Token by which they should know him was, he would wear a white Handkerchief out of his Pocket; this they were told by the late King, when he sent them upon this Errand. Colonel Parker was by at the same Time, and being there, he was ordered to go to Mr. Carol, Secretary to the late Queen, who had order to furnish them with Money to bear the Charges of their Journey into England; and if they were detained by contrary Winds, they had Letters of Recommendation to Monsieur Latour the French King's President at Calais, to furnish them with Money to bear their Charges over into England; and accordingly they went; but being detained at Calais for want of Wind, they were furnished by the French President; and by the Beginning of February they came over.

But I omitted one Thing, Gentlemen: Before they came over, the late King when they were with him took a List out of his Pocket of Names, and told these two, Harris and Hare, what Names they should go by in England; Harris was to go by the Name of Jenkins, and Hare by the Name of Guiny; and accordingly they came over in a Boat, and landed in Kent; and when they came to Town, they endeavoured to find out Sir George Barclay: The first Time I think they did not find him; but the second Time they did find him; and he saluted them, and told them he was glad to see them come over, and he would furnish them with Money; and he sent Major Holmes to them; and accordingly he did come, and give them Subistence-Money.

Now, Gentlemen, you will hear that Sir George Barclay being come over with these Troopers, and many others, to the Number of Sixteen, that at several Times were sent upon this Conspiracy; I say, after they were come, Sir George Barclay had frequent Meetings and Consultations with several other Persons that were to be engaged in the same Design; and they met at several Places, sometimes at Captain Porter's, sometimes at the Nagg's-Head in Covent-Garden, at another Time at the Sun Tavern in the Strand; and you will find by the Evidence, that the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Rookwood, was present at most of those Meetings; and there they did consult of the best Ways and Methods for putting this Conspiracy in Execution; sometimes they thought of doing it by an Ambush laid on the other Side of the Water, by Persons on Foot, in a little Wood there near Richmond, where the King was to pass by, whilst others on Horseback were to take Notice of their Firing, and then to attack the Guards. This was propos'd; but there was another Proposal to do it on this Side the Water; and therefore to settle the Matter, one of the Conspirators, King, was sent to view the Ground on the other Side of the Water; and he did glory that he had found a very proper Place, and thought it a very convenient Method; but yet they were not all satisfied; and at the Nagg's-Head Tavern in Covent-Garden they did debate the Matter again, and it was resolved to have the Ground viewed again; and Porter, and Knightley, and King that was executed, went to view the Ground on both Sides the Water, to see which was the most convenient Place; this was about the 12th of February they did take an Account of the most convenient Places on either Side; and when they had done it, they came back in the Evening to give an Account what they had done, to several others of the Conspirators who met for that Purpose; and I think the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Rookwood, was present there at this Meeting; and you will hear, the Place agreed upon was the Lane that leads from Turnham-Green to Brentford; that they thought the most convenient Place, because there were several Inns in and about Turnham-Green and Brentford, where they might place their Men by two or three in an Inn, that they might not be liable to Observation: This was the Place that was approved of.

Then next, the Manner of doing it was to be considered and adjusted, and that was thus: That the whole Number should be divided into three Parties; one Party to be commanded by Sir George Barclay to attack the Coach, and kill the King and all that were in it, while at the same Time the two other Parties, to be commanded by Captain Porter, and Mr. Rookwood the Prisoner at the Bar, were to set upon the Guards; and the Time agreed upon to put it in Execution was the Fifteenth of February on Saturday, that being the usual Day the King went to Richmond a-hunting; and you'll find, that on Saturday Morning they met in several Parties, not all together, but under the several Heads of the Parties, in order to be ready, if the King had gone out that Morning, to have Assassinated him.

Gentlemen, I say, you will hear of several Meetings that Day; there was one Meeting at Mr. Charnock's, where were present Mr. Porter, Sir William Parkyns, and several others; and another Meeting you will hear of, where the Prisoner at the Bar was present, at the Lodgings of one Counter, another of King James's Friends, that came over for this Purpose; and there was Sir George Barclay, and there was the Prisoner at the Bar; and those that were to be under Sir George's Command met that Saturday Morning, in order to make ready, in case the King had gone abroad, to have attack'd him: You will find by the Evidence, that the Prisoner was there; and Harris, that was one of the Troopers sent over from France, was sent for, and came in and found them in a great Hurry; for Harris was not acquainted at St. Germain's with the immediate Design of Assassinating the King; but finding them in a great Hurry, he asked them what was the Matter? And they told him they were to make ready immediately upon the Design. He wonder'd at it, and asked what it was; and then they told him they were to go to attack the Prince of Orange to assassinate him; and Rookwood the Prisoner at the Bar told him, if he would go to Counter, he should have particular Orders and Instructions from him what to do. Accordingly Harris went to Counter; he told him where his Horse, and Hare's Horse, and Hungate's Horse were; and their Horses happened to be placed in Somerset-House, by Mr. Lewis, in a Stable there recommended by him, to the Care of my Lord Feversham's Servants, who were to take care of them, and of two or three more that were placed there; in all, six of these Conspirators Horses by the Recommendation of Mr. Lewis were lodged in that Stable in Somerset-House, and look'd after by my Lord Feversham's Men; and thither Harris, Hare, and Hungate were directed by Counter to go for their Horses.

But it happen'd by very good Providence, that his Majesty did not go abroad that Day; and Durance, one of the Orderly Men that lodged at Kensington to give Intelligence, came from thence and acquainted them that the King did not go out that Morning, so there was nothing more done; but Harris was told that he should have his Horse at that Time, and take it away; and in the mean time, till they were to go upon their Design, they were to ride out upon their Horses, as they had Opportunity, to make them fit for Service; or else it would be thought the Rider's Fault, if, at the Time of the Attack, they did not come up in good Time and Order to join with the rest, and it would be thought Want of Courage in the Rider; and accordingly Major Holmes, another of those Conspirators, went with Harris and Hare to Somerset-House to take away their Horses, and they carried them to a Stable in Soho; but for several Nights they had been kept at Somerset-House.

You will find, Gentlemen, that Mr. Rookwood, the Prisoner at the Bar, was concerned in all these Consultations and Meetings, in making Preparations for the Assassination; they intended, as I said, to do it on the 15th of February; but that not taking Effect at that Day, between that and the Saturday following, Mr. Harris was frequently in the Company of Mr. Rookwood, and Mr. Lowick, and others, where they did discourse of this Assassination, and they did think it a very barbarous Thing; but however, they resolved they would do it, for they had Orders to obey Sir George Barclay: And this was expressly declared by Lowick and the Prisoner, that they had Directions to obey Sir George, and what he would have them to do they would do: They must and would obey Orders; that was their Resolution, even upon discoursing of the Heinousness of so bloody and barbarous a Design.

You will likewise hear, Gentlemen, by the Evidence, that the next Saturday, being the Two-and-twentieth of February, they resolved to put it in Execution again; and accordingly there was a Meeting on the Friday before at the Sun Tavern, where were present Sir G. Barclay, Mr. Porter, and others; and there they did resolve upon it, tho' they had at first some Apprehension the Thing was discovered; but they were soon satisfied there was no such Thing, because, they said among themselves, that if it had been so, they should have been taken up, and not have been permitted to meet there: Therefore they resolved the next day to put it in Execution; and accordingly they met at several Places, and got ready in the Morning, in case the King had gone abroad. The Prisoner met that Morning at Porter's Lodging, with several other Troopers, to make ready for the Enterprize; and there the Prisoner at the Bar did, at that Time, give a List of the Names that he was to command; for he was to have one Party of those that were to attack the Guards, of whom Harris was one, and Hare was another, and Richardson was another, and Blackburne was another, and his own Name was Chief; and he ordered Harris to go and see to get them ready, for they must go out that Morning: Accordingly Harris did go and got them ready, and came back and gave an Account of it. His Majesty did not go abroad that Day, as it happened very fortunately, by reason of the happy Discovery; so that News being brought back again, though they had made all things ready, those Preparations were put off, and they did nothing that Day; and quickly after the Discovery was fully made, and made publick by the Apprehension of the Conspirators.

Gentlemen, you will have this Matter fully proved to you by several Witnesses, that I think there can be no Room to doubt the Truth of it, that there was such a Conspiracy, and that the Prisoner was as highly concerned in it as those who suffered the just Punishment of the Law. We will call our Witnesses to prove this; and I believe they will be able to give you an Account of the whole Affair better and more fully than I can do, or can pretend to open it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Call Mr. Harris and Mr. Porter.

Sir B. Shower. We oppose the Swearing Mr. Porter: I must beg the Favour of the Court to hear us in it; if my Instructions be true, we insist upon it, that he is not capable of being a Witness; he stands convicted of Felony: Here we have the Record, and we desire it may be read.

Capt. Porter. I know nothing of the Matter, that there is any such Thing standing out against me.

Sir B. Shower. Then sure we are mistaken in the Man. Pray let us hear it read.

Cl. of Ar. (Reads the Record.) This is an Indictment of Murther against George Porter, for the Killing of Sir James Hacket, Knight.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know any thing of this, Mr. Porter?

Capt. Porter. I came off with Manlaughter, and pleaded the King's Pardon in Court.----Mr. Att. Gen. Pray read what was done upon it.

Cl. of the Crown. Here's the Jury's Verdict: Quod predictus Georgius Porter est culpabilis de felonica Interfectione predicti Jacobi Hacket, & non culp. as to the Murder. Here is a Curia advisare vult, and I suppose there was a Pardon afterwards.

Mr. Justice Powell. Was he not burnt in the Hand?

Capt. Porter. No; I pleaded the King's Pardon.

L. C. J. And there are several Acts of Pardon since.

Mr. Cowper. See the Time when the Indictment was.

Cl. of Ar.

Ch. of Ar. It is the Eighth of December, in the Thirty-Sixth Year of King Charles the Second.

Sir B. Shower. We agree that he did plead the King's Pardon; and then the Case is no more than this, a Man is convicted of Manslaughter, and the King pardons him, he still remains unqualified to be a Witness; we say, this has been the Case that has been much debated in Westminster-Hall, and upon Debate it has been resolved.

Mr. Just. Powell. It has been so, but always against you.

Sir B. Shower. It was in the Case of my Lord Castlemaine at this Bar; one of my Lords the Judges went to the Court of Common-Pleas to ask their Opinion, and these Cases were put: In Case a Man be out-law'd of Felony and pardon'd; in Case a Man be convicted of Felony and had the Benefit of his Clergy; and in Case a Man was convicted and not attainted, but pardoned upon the second Case; they were of Opinion, that the Receiving the Punishment of Burning in the Hand had purged the very Guilt, and did set him upright by the Statute of the 1st of Queen Elizabeth, they thought it did operate to that Purpose; but in the Case of a Pardon of a Man attainted or convicted, it was agreed he was not qualified to be a Witness; and Dangerfield, against whom the Objection was made, being burnt in the Hand, was received to be a Witness; and it was only made use of against him to take off his Credit. The Record of that Case is in this Court, and I looked upon the Print of the Trial, this Day. We say, that there is a Case in 1 Brownlow 47. a Man attainted of Felony cannot be of an Inquest, though pardon'd; and we think, he that cannot be a Jurymen, sure cannot be a Witness; there is the same Exception to his being a Witness as there is in the Case of a Jurymen; for the one ought to appear as free, and stand as clear and unsuspected, in Respect of his Probity and Verity as the other, as the one is sworn to try and determine upon Oath, so the other is sworn, and his Oath is to sway and determine the Jury, and in Consequence it is all one; and upon these Reasons we hope he is not a good Witness.

L. C. J. Where is that Case in Brownlow?

Sir B. Shower. It is 1 Brownlow 47. and then there is 11 H. IV. 41. 2. Bull. 154. there my Lord Cook says, if a Man be convicted of Felony, and pardoned, he cannot be a Jurymen; for though the Punishment is pardoned, the Guilt remains, so that he is not probus & legalis Homo; and every particular Person has an Interest in it, that they have free and clear Persons to be Jurymen and Witnesses.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, that is the Distinction we go upon, which was taken in Dangerfield's Case, upon the Trial of my Lord Castlemaine, where the whole Court were of Opinion, that a Pardon from the King only, would not make him a good Witness; but if he were burnt in the Hand, that by the Statute of decimo octavo Elizabethæ, amounted to a Statute Pardon, and set him right to all Intents and Purposes: And there they did take Notice of that Book that Sir Bartholemew Shower cited of 11 of Hen. IV. that a Man attainted could not be a Jury-man, though pardoned by the King: It was objected he might be a Witness; but Mr. Justice Jones said, it was the same Reason if he be not fit for a Jury-man, he is not fit for a Witness; they ought to be both probus & legalis Homines, thus the Case stood there. And that other Book of Bulstrode is the same; it was in the Case of a Prohibition for a Modus Decimandi, where the Suggestion is to be prov'd by two Witnesses, it was objected he had not prov'd it by two Witnesses, because they were both attainted of Felony, and though they were Pardoned, yet that did not make them good Witnesses in the Opinion of the Court.

L. C. J. This is quite another Case, it does not come up to your Point; here is no Attainder, and here is Pardon upon Pardon, by Act of Parliament.

Mr. Phipps. As to that, we think the Parliament Pardon is out of the Case; for if the Pardon from the King be a good Pardon, there is no Guilt for the Act of Pardon to work upon.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, this we think to be a good Distinction as to that Matter, a Man that is actually pardon'd the Punishment by the King's Pardon, and afterwards an Act of Pardon comes and pardons all Offences, that we say does nothing, for he is not a Subject of Pardon, for he was discharged of his Punishment before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sure these Gentlemen are not in earnest when they make this Objection.

Sir B. Shower. When the King has once pardon'd him, he is not an Offender within the Meaning of the Act of Parliament, and therefore the Act works nothing as to him, and so he stands as much disabled from being a Witness, as he was before.

Mr. Just. Powell. In the Case of Cutington in Hobbs, there it is said the Pardon takes away tam Reatum quam Pœnam, &c. An Action being brought for calling a Man Thief, who had been indicted for Felony, and convicted, and pardon'd, the Court adjudged, that he ought not to be called so; for he was no Thief, for the Pardon had washed him entirely clean, and he was discharged both of the Guilt and the Punishment, and all the Consequences of it.

L. C. J. Those Cases that have been put are no Authorities at all in this Matter; for where there is a Conviction of Manslaughter, and the Party is pardon'd, we think that Pardon of the King works in a Way of Discharge as much as the Burning in the Hand. I take it, it is the same Thing: They admit, that will discharge him to all Intents and Purposes, and so we think does this as effectually; for having his Clergy, and being burnt in the Hand, works by Way of Statute Pardon: For the Case of a Jury-man, I take it not to be the same with this Case; but even in that Case, I do not think that the Party convicted, after the King hath pardoned him, is disabled from being of a Jury; but supposing that to be so, yet there are many Cases wherein a Man may be a Witness, that cannot be a Jury-man. It is true, the Credit of such a Witness is left to the Jury, but it is no Objection against his being a legal Witness; and it is a very strange Argument to me, that because he was pardoned by the King, if that should be deficient, that therefore the Act of Pardon should have no Effect. Truly, that is to say, that the King's Pardon works so, as to have nothing left for the Parliament Pardon to work upon, and certainly it sets him so right, that to all Intents and Purposes he is as good a Witness as ever he was; and if any Thing remained to be done, the Act of Parliament has done it, and supplied the Defect; but I think the King's Pardon is sufficient.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I suppose they do not insist upon it, as thinking there is any great Weight in it, but only for Objection sake; but we hope that notwithstanding this Objection Mr. Porter shall be sworn.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, they take this Exception at an improper Time, for they speak to his Credibility.

L. C. J. No, they except to his being a Witness.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If so, your Lordship remembers a Case that was before your Lordship not long since, but in Easter Term last, when one was try'd at this Bar for Treason, and Aaron Smith was produced as a Witness, and the Prisoner took Exception against him as no good Witness, because he had stood in the Pillory; and your Lordship and the Court did say, that the Act of Pardon did restore him to all Intents and Purposes ad liberam Legem.

Mr. Conyers. In the Case of the Earl of Castlemaine, both the Courts of King's-Bench and Common-Pleas held Dangerfield a legal Witness, though burnt in the Hand for Felony, and so was the Opinion of Rolls: In Stiles Reports 388, one that hath been burnt in the Hand for Felony, may notwithstanding be a Witness.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, in answer to that Case that was put, that after the King's Pardon for one convicted of Felony, another Man has not the Liberty to call him Thief, that was an Objection in my Lord Castlemaine's Case, that may stand as good, and our Notion that we contend for, be good too; he cannot be impeach'd, or have Guilt imputed to him, when once the King has forgiven him, and yet that may not restore him to his entire Credit, as was my Lord Chief Justice Seaggs' Distinction in the Case of Dangerfield; and as to the Case of Aaron Smith, that was very different: The Reason in that Case was, because the Crime for which Mr. Smith was indicted, did not import any such scandalous Offence for which his Credit could be impeached.

L. C. J. No, no, we did not meddle with that, we went upon the Pardon.

Sir B. Shower. But in that Case, they did not insist upon it that he had a Pardon antecedent to the Act of Pardon, so that he was Subjctum capax, for the Act to work upon, he was an Offender that needed a Pardon; whereas Mr. Porter being pardon'd before, could not be an Offender needing a Pardon, and consequently not within the first Words of the Act of Indemnity, because he was pardon'd by the King before; but he was not by that Pardon, say we, restor'd to his Credit to make him a good Witness, and the Act of Parliament did not affect him, he being not Subjctum Mæritæ, as not being an Offender.

Mr. Phipps. As to Mr. Solicitor's Case of Aaron Smith, we agree the Act of Parliament did restore him, because he never was pardon'd before by the King, so there remained an Offence for the Parliament Pardon to work upon.

L. C. J. Do you agree that, then you may agree the other; for the Act of Parliament pardons none but those that the King can pardon generally.

Mr. Phipps. It is true, my Lord; but we say that an Act of Parliament Pardon removes those Disabilities which the King's Pardon does not; for every one is in Law a Party to an Act of Parliament, and therefore no Person shall be permitted to alledge in Disability of another, any Crime which he himself hath pardon'd, for that is to aver against his own Act; but 'tis otherwise in the Case of the King's Pardon.

L. C. J. Why, the very Parliament Pardon comes from the King; the King has a full Power of Pardoning, and where he does pardon under the Great Seal, it has the full Effect of the Parliament Pardon. A Pardon, before Attainder, prevents all Corruption of Blood, so that tho' a Man forfeits his Goods by Conviction, yet after a Pardon he is capable of having new Goods, and shall hold them without any Forfeiture whatsoever; for the Pardon restores him to his former Capacity, and prevents any further Forfeiture. Indeed, if he had been attainted whereby his Blood was corrupted, no Pardon, whether it were by the King or by the Parliament, could purge his Blood without Reversal of the Attainder, by Writ of Error, or Act of Parliament, or express Words in the Act to restore Blood; but either Pardon makes him a new Creature, gives him new Capacity, and makes him to all Intents and Purposes, from the Time of the Pardon, to be probus & legalis Homo, and a good Witness. Indeed this Crime might be objected against his Credit; but it is not to be urged against the Sufficiency of his Evidence, that is, his being a Witness.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we desire he may be sworn. (Which was done.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, Mr. Porter, do you give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know of this intended Assassination, how it came to your Knowledge, and what Share the Prisoner at the Bar had in it.

Capt. Porter. My Lord, the first Account that I had of this Assassination was from Mr. Charnock, who brought to me Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes to my Lodging in Norfolk-street, where I was sick of the Gout. Sir George Barclay did not then particularly acquaint me with the Business, but said, he would leave it to Mr. Charnock to tell me what it was.

L. C. J. Who told you so?

Capt. Porter. Sir George Barclay; and after that we had several Meetings, at which the Prisoner at the Bar was present, particularly at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, where it was consulted of the best Ways and Means to Assassinate the King as he came from Richmond: Some were of Opinion that it was best to be done on the other Side of the Water; others were of Opinion that it should be done on this Side, by a Party of Men on Horseback: Upon this Difference of Opinion, there were Persons appointed to go and view both Places; I was appointed for one to go with Captain Knightly, and Mr. King went along with me, and we did view the Ground on both Sides, and when we came back, we gave an Account to Sir George Barclay, and those that sent us; and upon our Report, Sir George Barclay's Mind was chang'd, who was for the other Side of the Water before. And he agreed to do it in the Lane that leads from Turnham-Green to Brentford. Afterwards there was a Meeting at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, and there it was agreed that the King should be attack'd on Saturday the 15th of February, by Sir George Barclay and his Party; and Mr. Roskwood, the Prisoner at the Bar, was to command a Party of Men that came over from France, who were to assault the Guards on on one Side, and I and Mr. Charnock were to set upon the Guards on the other Side. Sir George Barclay, with four Men out of each Party, was to attack the King in his Coach, and to kill him and all that were there in it.

L. C. J. Who were at that Meeting?

Capt. Port. There were Sir George Barclay, Captain Charnock, Sir William Parkyns, Myself, Major Holmes, Captain Rookwood, and Captain King.

L. C. J. Where was this?

Capt. Port. At the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, upon Saturday Morning the 15th, we having two orderly Men that lay at Kensington to give Intelligence, had Notice brought us first that the King would go out; Durance, who was one of them, used to go every Morning to Court to get us what Intelligence he could, and Sir George Barclay told me upon the Friday, that he should give me an Account as soon as ever he could, the next Morning; and the next Morning at my Lodging in Little Rider-street in St. James's, he came to me, and told me, the Advance Guards were gone out, and the King's Kitchen was gone, and all was preparing for the King's going abroad, and there went a great many Noblemen and Gentlemen a-Horseback with him, and therefore he thought there would be no Opportunity of effecting the Thing: Said I, that's no Objection at all, nor any Reason for putting it off, because when the Sport is over, all the Company goes away, and the King comes only in his Coach with the Guards; he said, he would give Sir George Barclay an Account of it, and he came back with Sir George Barclay and Mr. Rookwood to my Lodging, and upon repeating that Objection, and my giving the same Answer, it was agreed, if the King had gone out that Day to have put the Design in Execution.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was the Prisoner at the Bar there at that Time when that was agreed upon?—Capt. Port. Yes, he was.

L. C. J. Where do you say was that Meeting?

Capt. Port. At my Lodging in Little Rider-street.

L. C. J. Had you that Discourse with Sir George Barclay in the Presence of the Prisoner?

Capt. Port. Yes; Sir George said, he doubted we could not do it, because there would go so many with the King; but I objected against that, that after the Sport was over, all the Company went away, and the King came back in his Coach; then it was agreed to go on; there was Sir George Barclay, Durance, and the Prisoner at the Bar, and myself in the Room.

L. C. J. This you say was Saturday the 15th, in the Morning?

Capt. Port. Yes, my Lord; but I cannot say I saw the Prisoner at the Bar at any Meeting after that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, tell my Lord and the Jury, what Method you were to take in putting this Design in Execution.

Capt. Port. There were to be so many Horsemen armed and prepared for the Purpose. Sir George Barclay told me, we should be about 40 or 45 Horsemen, and they were to be divided into two Parties, and Sir George Barclay was to have four Men out of each Party, and his Business was to attack the King, and all that were with him in the Coach. Captain Rookwood was to command those that were come out of France to serve under Sir George Barclay, and Captain Charnock and I were to command the other Party, and both Parties were to set upon the Guards at the same Time that Sir George Barclay attacked the King's Coach.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Prisoner will ask him any Questions, let him.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Captain Porter, when was that first Meeting at the Globe-Tavern?

Capt. Port. It was one Day in the Week before the 15th.

Sir B. Shower. Was Mr. Rookwood, the Prisoner at the Bar, there that Day?—Capt. Port. Yes, he was.

Sir B. Shower. How long before the 15th?

Capt. Port. One Day that Week, but I cannot tell what Day.

Sir B. Shower. He says it was agreed so, and so I desire to know what Words Mr. Rookwood uttered at that Time?

Capt. Port. It was discoursed by every one round, which was the best Way and Method. I heard Mr. Rookwood say, indeed, he believed it a very desperate Thing, and he was not very willing to engage in it; but when Sir George Barclay told him he should command his Party, he replied in French—

Mr. Sol. Gen. What's the Meaning of that?

Capt. Port. There's an End of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. You say the Prisoner was at your Lodging Saturday the 15th, in the Morning, What Discourse had you there?

Capt. Port. He was there upon Saturday in the Morning, the 15th of February, and Durance brought an Account that the King's first Guards were gone, and the King's Kitchen was gone before, and it was expected that the King would go about Eleven a-Clock; but it was said, that there were a great many preparing to go with him, and therefore it would not be convenient to do it that Day: Said I, that is no Objection at all, for the Nobility and Gentry go out of the Field as soon as the Sport is over, and the King used to go with a few People to Mr. — House at Richmond, and therefore it might be as well done at that Time as any Time: Durance made that Objection at first himself; and when I made him that Answer, he went to Sir George Barclay, and he came back with Sir George Barclay, and the Prisoner was there by at the same Time, and Sir George Barclay made the same Objection; it was at my Lodging in Little Rider-street, and when I told them my Reason against the Objection, as I had done before, they all agreed to do it that Day.

Mr. Phipps. At that second Meeting, did Mr. Rookwood make any Proposal there?

Capt. Port. I only say, he came with Sir George Barclay, and what I heard; I tell you Sir George Barclay made that Objection, and I gave it that Answer.

Mr. Phipps. But what did he say?

Capt. Port. I cannot say that I heard Mr. Rookwood say any thing in particular; but they all agreed to do the Thing that Day.

Sir B. Shower. You remember nothing that he said?

Capt. Port. Sir George Barclay said, We will go and prepare; and he went away with him.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, when did Sir George Barclay come into England?

Capt. Port. Truly, Sir, I don't know that; the first Time that I saw him after he came, Mr. Charnock brought him to my Lodging in Norfolk-street; but before that, Mr. Charnock told me he was come into England.

L. C. J. Hark you, Mr. Porter, when you came back from viewing the Ground before the first Saturday, and you said you made your Report, and then it was agreed that it should be done at such a Place; Do you say the Prisoner was there?

Mr. Att. Gen. No, my Lord, he does not say so. Do you say Mr. Rookwood was there at that Time?

Capt. Port. No, my Lord, I don't say so.

Sir B. Shower. I am sure he did not say so before; and besides, your Lordship will observe there is no such Overt-Act as that laid in the Indictment against the Prisoner, that Mr. Porter made his Report upon the View; that only concerns Mr. Knightley.

L. C. J. No, that is not an Overt-Act, I agree it; but I only ask the Question, Whether the Prisoner was there?

L. C. J. Treby. If it were an Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, it would not affect the Prisoner, because the Viewing of the Ground, and making the Report, is Captain Porter's Act, and it must be the Consulting and Debating afterwards that must affect the Prisoner, if he be concern'd.

Mr. Congers. The Meetings and Consultations that are laid in the Indictment are the Overt-Acts.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Well, if they have done with Capt. Porter, we desire Mr. George Harris may be sworn.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we beg Leave to oppose Mr. Harris's being sworn; here was a Proclamation that did take Notice of this barbarous Conspiracy to assassinate the King, and the Proclamation did signify, That the King had received Information of several Persons concerned in that Conspiracy; and for the Encouragement of taking those so accused, he did promise a Thousand Pounds Reward for the taking of any of the Conspirators; and in the Conclusion of the Proclamation there is a Clause, 'That if any of the Conspirators should discover or apprehend any of the other Persons that were therein named, so as that they should be brought to condign Punishment, such Conspirator so discovering should receive a Thousand Pounds Reward for any of the other Persons apprehended, and his own Pardon.' My Lord, we have a Witness here ready to prove that this was Mr. Harris's Case; he was himself in the Proclamation, he did actually discover Mr. Rookwood, the Prisoner at the Bar, and was instrumental in the taking of him; and consequently upon this Clause of the Proclamation, if he be brought to Justice, then is Mr. Harris intitled to this Reward and his Pardon; and consequently he has such an Interest and Advantage to himself as will prevent his being a Witness. It is true, indeed, where it is at the King's Suit, in a capital Case, it is pretty hard to say that a Man has an Interest; but we think, as this Case is circumstantiated upon this Proclamation, that the same Objection lies against him as would do if this were a civil Cause; if we shew how he is to have an Advantage by the Event of this Cause, then he is not to be admitted a Witness.

L. C. J. Did he apprehend any Body upon the Proclamation?

Sir B. Shower. Yes; he apprehended Mr. Rookwood himself, or was the Cause of it, and thereby is intitled to the Reward and his Pardon.

Mr. Phipps. That upon which we ground our Objection is the different Penning of the Proclamation; for if any one that is not a Conspirator do but discover and apprehend any of the Persons named in the Proclamation, he is intitled to the Thousand Pounds; but the Conspirators themselves must go further; for a bare Discovery and Apprehending any of their Accomplices will not entitle them to the Reward mentioned in the Proclamation, but they must discover and apprehend their Accomplices so as they be brought to Justice, before they can be entitled to the Reward: And to be brought to Justice for any Crime, is in common Understanding to be brought to such Punishment as the Law inflicts for the Offence. Now, Mr. Harris's Case is this: He discovered Mr. Rookwood, and went with the Guards to the Computer and seiz'd him: And if Mr. Rookwood be not convicted, Mr. Harris is not to have any Thing for his Pains; but if he be convicted, Mr. Harris is intitled to the Thousand Pounds and his Pardon. And therefore, surely, Mr. Harris cannot be admitted an Evidence against Mr. Rookwood, since he is to receive so great a Benefit by his Conviction. Upon an Indictment for an usurious Contract, the Person whose Deed it is cannot be a Witness, because 'tis to avoid his own Act: So in an Indictment for Perjury, on the Stat. 5 Elizabeth, the Party injured by the Perjury cannot be a Witness, because he is to have half the Forfeitures.

Mr. Att. Gen. I suppose they will make out their Objection before they expect an Answer from us.

Sir B. Shower. I hope your Lordship will not put us to prove a Copy of the Proclamation from the Inrolment, but that we may have the same Favour as in the Case of the Statute Book, that the Print of it may be allowed for Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we will not stand with them for that, we know they are mistaken throughout, we consent the Proclamation should be read.

Cl. of Arr. reads.

By the King a Proclamation.

William R.

WHEREAS His Majesty has received Information upon Oath, that the Persons herein after named have, with divers other wicked and traitorous Persons, entered into a horrid and detestable Conspiracy to assassinate and murder His Majesty's sacred Person, for which Cause several Warrants for High Treason have been issued out against them, but they have withdrawn themselves from their usual Places of Abode, and are fled from Justice: His Majesty has therefore thought fit, by the Advice of his Privy Council, to issue his Royal Proclamation, and His Majesty does hereby command and require all His loving Subjects to discover, take, and apprehend James Duke of Berwick, Sir George Barclay, Major Lowick, George Porter, Capt. Stow, Capt. Walbank, Capt. James Courtney, Lieutenant Sherborne, Brice Blair, — Dinant, — Chambers, — Boife, George Higgins, and his Two Brothers, Sons to Sir Thomas Higgins, — Davis Cardell, — Goodman, — Cramburne, — Keyes, Pendergrafs alias Pendergrafs, — Bryerly, — Trevor, Sir George Maxwell, — Durance, a Fleming, Christopher Knightley, Lieutenant King, — Holmes, Sir William Parkyns, — Rookwood, wherever they may be found, and to carry them before the next Justice of Peace or Chief Magistrate, who is hereby required to commit them to the next Gaol, there to remain until they be thence delivered by due Course of Law. And His Majesty doth hereby require the said Justice, or other Magistrate, immediately to give Notice thereof to Him or His Privy Council. And for the Prevention of the going of the said Persons, or of any other, into Ireland, or other Parts beyond the Seas, His Majesty does require and command all His Officers of the Customs, and other His Officers and Subjects of and in the respective Courts and Maritime Towns and Places within His Kingdom of England, Dominion of Wales, and Town of Berwick upon Tweed, that they and every of them, in their respective Stations and Places, be careful and diligent in the Examination of all Persons who shall pass or endeavour to pass beyond the Seas, and that they do not permit any Person whatsoever to go into Ireland, or other Places beyond the Seas, without a Pass under His Majesty's Royal Sign Manual until further Order. And if they shall discover the said Persons above-named, or any of them, then to cause them to be apprehended and secured, and to give Notice as aforesaid. And His Majesty does hereby Publish and Declare to all Persons who shall conceal the Persons above-named, or any of them; or be aiding and assisting in the concealing of them, or furthering their Escape, That they shall be proceeded against, for such their Offence, with the utmost Severity, according to Law. And for the Encouragement of all Persons to be Diligent and Careful in endeavouring to Discover and Apprehend the said Persons, We do hereby further Declare, That whosoever shall Discover and Apprehend the Persons above-named, or any of them, and shall bring them before some Justice of Peace, or chief Magistrate, as aforesaid, shall have and receive as a Reward the Sum of One Thousand Pound; which said Sum of One Thousand Pound; the Lords Commissioners of His Majesty's Treasury are hereby Required and Directed to pay accordingly. And if any of the Persons above-named shall Discover and Apprehend any of their Accomplices, so as they may be brought to Justice, His Majesty does hereby Declare, That every Person making such Discovery shall have His Majesty's Gracious Pardon for his Offence, and shall receive the Reward of One Thousand Pound, to be pay'd in such manner as aforesaid.

Given at our Court at Kennington, the 23d Day of February, 1695-6, in the Eighth Year of our Reign.

GOD SAVE THE KING.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, The different Penning of the Clauses is not only in that Proclamation, but it is the Language of every Proclamation that has gone out for the Apprehending any of the Conspirators.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, all that we say in Answer to this Objection, is, That Mr. Harris is not nam'd in that Proclamation.

L. C. J. What say you to that, Sir Bartholomew Shower? He is not named in the Proclamation: And so if he hath discovered and apprehended the Prisoner, he has earn'd his Money, whether he be Convicted or not, because Rookwood's Name is in the Proclamation, tho' his is not.

Mr. Phipps. Then, my Lord, with humble Submission, here is another Proclamation wherein he is nam'd; we desire that may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And when it is read, it will be as little to your Purpose as the other.

Mr. Att. Gen. Let them read what they please, we need say nothing at all to it.

L. C. J. Certainly upon this Proclamation, there's no Objection; for he is intitled to his One Thousand Pound already, tho' Rookwood be never convicted.

Mr. Phipps. But is he not by this Proclamation, which mentions his Accomplices, intitled to his Pardon? If so, he swears to secure himself.

L. C. J. By the Apprehending and Discovering, he's intitled to his Pardon.

Mr. Phipps. But not without he be brought to Justice; that is to say, till he be convicted; therefore he cannot be an Evidence to convict him.

L. C. J. That is, as to any that are there named, if any of them discover and apprehend one another, it must be so as that they be brought to Justice: But if any Person that is not named there does apprehend any that is, he is intitled to the One Thousand Pound, barely by the Apprehension.

Mr. Phipps. Then there is another Proclamation where they are both named, as Mr. Rookwood tells me.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, We will set this Matter right; we will show the other Proclamation, in which, if I am rightly inform'd, for I have not read it, Mr. Harris is nam'd.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you have not read it, I would advise you not to trouble the Court with it; for you will find the latter Part is restrain'd to three or four particular Persons, of which he is none.

Rookwood. I am named in the Proclamation.

Mr. Att. Gen. Aye, but read the latter Part of it, and you will find you are not nam'd in the Clause that they refer'd to: You need not read the former Part of the Proclamation, we agree the Prisoner is named there but only look towards the Bottom, which is the Clause that they refer to.

Cl. of Ar. (reads.) And we do hereby further declare, &c.

Mr. Att. Gen. They have not considered the Proclamation, and therefore make an Objection of they don't know what.

Sir B. Shower. We are in your Lordship's Judgment.

L. C. J. For what? See if you can make or state a Case for our Judgment.

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Rookwood is mention'd in the first Proclamation, and Harris is not: but there are the Word Accomplices: He is likewise mentioned in the last Proclamation, but not in the last Clause of it. I confess, if he had, it had been plain it would have taken off his Testimony; but now we must submit it to you, whether he is not an interested Person, and consequently no good Witness.

L. C. J. Truly I do not see any Colour for the Objection. Is he not as well intitled to his One Thousand Pound, tho' Mr. Rookwood had never been try'd, by the bare Apprehending of Mr. Rookwood, as if he was convicted?

Sir B. Shower. No, my Lord; because the Words are, so as he may be brought to Justice.

L. C. J. That is not so, as to any Person that apprehends one mentioned in the Proclamation, if the Person that apprehends be not mention'd in it, and named himself; if any one that is not mention'd apprehend one that is mention'd, he is intitled, by the Apprehension, to the One Thousand Pound. If any one that is mention'd apprehend another, then he is to bring him to Justice; now Mr. Harris is not named in this Proclamation, and so as to the One Thousand Pound, he stands in the same Condition as any other Person that discovered or apprehended one of the Persons there nam'd.

Vol. IV.

Sir B. Shower. But it seems he was one of the Conspirators, because he is himself described in another Proclamation.

Mr. Att. Gen. If it were so, it would not be material, nor any Manner of Objection; but as they have made their Objection upon these Proclamations, we think there is nothing for us to give an Answer to.

Mr. Cowper. Nay, my Lord, if it were so, will Sir Bartholomew Shower say his Client is not brought to Justice unless he be convicted? I am sure the Words Convicted or Attainted, are not in the Proclamation.

L. C. J. There is nothing in it: you must swear Mr. Harris. (Which was done accordingly.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, what you know of this Conspiracy against the King's Life, from the first Time you were acquainted with it, and what Hand the Prisoner at the Bar had in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give an Account of the whole Thing, your Coming over, and who sent you, and upon what Errand, and the whole that you know of this Conspiracy.

Capt. Harris. Upon the 14th of January last, the French Stile, New Stile, I was at St. Germain's, where I was sent for by King James, and was ordered to wait his Dinner till it was over, and accordingly I did wait till his Dinner was over; and then I came in, and Col. Parker was with him, and one Mr. Hare, who is also mentioned in the Proclamation, was there also: The King told me he was sensible I had served him well, and now he had an Opportunity of doing something for me; he told me he would send me into England, where I should be subsisted, and I was to follow the Orders of Sir George Barclay; and accordingly he order'd me ten Lewidores to be paid by Mr. Caroll, who is Secretary to the late Queen; and Col. Parker went along with me, and Mr. Hare, to Caroll, and told him he came from the King, and we had the Lewidores, and we went to Calais, in Order to our coming over hither: But we were told if we were wind-bound, that the Money we received would not bear our Charges; there was Orders given for our further Subsistence at Calais, to the President there. Accordingly we came to Calais, and the Wind did not serve us for eight or nine Days; and while I stay'd there, the Money that I spent at Calais was paid by the President of Calais, Monsieur Latour. Afterwards I landed in England, near Romney Marsh, as I was told, and I came to the House of one Hunt, and he provided me and my Comrade with a couple of Horses; and coming from thence, I came in the first Place to one Tucker's an Apothecary in Sandway, and next from thence we came to Rochester, to Charles Croft's, and from thence in a Coach to Gravesend, and from thence by Water to London: That Night we lay in Grace-Church-street at an Inn, it being Night, the Night-Tide, and something late. The next Day I came to a Lodging at an Acquaintance's of my Comrade's, Mr. Hare, at the Unicorn in Brownlow-street, one Mr. Wateman's. The next Night I went to look for Sir George Barclay, whom the King told me I should certainly find by such a Sign of a white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket, on Mondays and Thursdays, in Covent-Garden, where his Walk was to be in the Evening, because he was not to appear in the Day-Time openly. It happen'd that upon Monday Night after I came to Town, I went there, and did not find Sir George Barclay according to the King's Direction, which I admired at; but there was one Mr. Berkenhead, who told my Comrade, a Day or two after, That Sir George Barclay would needs speak with me, and accordingly I met with him; and he asked me how the King, Queen, Prince, and Princess did, and I told him they were very well; I told him I was appointed to attend him, and obey his Orders. He told me he had no Money at present, but in two or three Days he would send some; and so he did, by Major Holmes. I had five Shillings a Day for Subsistence, and I had no Horse; and when I had a Horse, it was six Shillings a Day; after which rate I had Subsistence for a Month at five Shillings a Day, Guineas going then at Thirty Shillings. Major Holmes paid me the Money by Sir George Barclay's Order, as he told me, and he afterwards gave me a Guinea, and that was the first Saturday when the Assassination was design'd; for that we told him we wanted Money, and it was not reasonable we should take our Horses out of the Stable before we paid for them: And I met Sir George Barclay several Times at Covent-Garden, and he told me it was a suspicious Place, and desired me not to come any more there; but when he had any particular Orders to give me, he would give me Notice of it where I should meet him; and accordingly I did meet him several Times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Now, Sir, will you tell what you know as to the Prisoner at the Bar?

Capt. Harris. As to Mr. Rookwood, the Saturday that the Assassination was design'd to be, the first Time that I knew of it, I met Mr. Rookwood at one Mr. Burek's Lodging, where he was up, and I saw him in a great Hurry and some Confusion, and in came M. Bernarde; I ask'd him the Meaning of it, and what they were going about; and Mr. Rookwood told me, if I would go down to Captain Counter I should know; accordingly I went, and to the best of my Remembrance, he gave me a little Note to Captain Counter, but that I am not positive in. I went to Capt. Counter, and as soon as ever I came, he told us, We must be immediately ready to go to Turnham-Green.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where was that?

Capt. Harris. At the Woolpack, that was the Sign—as near as I remember. Mr. Hare and I were ordered together to come there, and there was Mr. Hungate, who had been there some Time, and when I came in, Sir George Barclay did declare Laughing, These are my Janissaries: And he talk'd something of bringing the Garter, and of attacking the Coach; but he went out of the Room, and afterwards he came in and declared, We were all Men of Honour, and that the Business we were going about, was to attack the Prince of Orange; but Durant came in after that, and said, The Prince of Orange did not go out that Day. When he talk'd of attacking the Prince of Orange, I was very much startled, not knowing any Thing of it before; and I came the next Morning to Mr. Rookwood, and ask'd him if we were to be the Murderers of the Prince of Orange: Says Mr. Rookwood to me, I am afraid we are drawn into some such Business; but if I had known it before I came over, I should have begg'd the King's Pardon at St. Germain's, and not have come over hither: and said I, This is very fine, we have serv'd to a very good Purpose, to be sent over upon such an Errand and Account. After this Mr. Rookwood, and Mr. Lowick, and I, had a Meeting at Red-Lyon-Fields, where we did discourse about the Matter. I did often declare against it, That it was so barbarous a Thing, that no Man of Honour almost would be guilty of it; but Major Lowick answered, That we were to obey Orders; for sure Sir George Barclay wou'd not undertake a Thing of that Nature without Orders.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray what said Mr. Rookwood?

Capt. Harris. He own'd it was a barbarous Thing; but he was sent over to obey Sir George Barclay's Orders, which he had several Times declared he was resolv'd to do; upon that we parted: So afterwards I came to Mr. Rookwood's Lodging; it was the Saturday Morning I came to him, and so went to Sir George Barclay's; while he was there, Mr. Rookwood gave me a Note, naming so many Names, particularly Mr. Hungate, Mr. Hanford, Mr. Hare, and his own Name at Top, not the Name that he is arraigned by here; but a sham Name that he had, as the rest of us all had sham Names, which at that Time we went by.

L. C. J. What was your Name?—Capt. Harris, my Name is Jenkins.

L. C. J. Who gave you that Name?

Capt. Harris. King James at St. Germain's, and he gave Mr. Hare the Name of Guiney, and Mr. Rookwood's Name was Roberts. King James told us in his Bed-chamber, We were to go by those Names.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, what did Rookwood say to you, when he gave you that Lift?

Capt. Harris. He told me, he was to go to Turnham-Green, and I was to go along with him, and says he to me smiling, You shall be my Aid de Camp; and get the Rest of the Gentlemen ready; and accordingly I went to look for several of the Persons—particularly for Mr. Blackburne: When I came back again, I found him lying on his Bed, and that Sir George Barclay had told him the Prince of Orange did not go out that Day; and from thence we went to Dinner, where Major Lowick din'd with us, and Mr. Bernarde and Major Lowick seeing me in a Heat, ask'd me, Why I was in such a Sweat? I told him I were getting those Men ready for Mr. Rookwood, who had made me his Aid de Camp: Says Major Lowick to me, You may very well do it, for you have Six Shillings a-Day allow'd you, and I have nothing; I bring two Men at my own Charge. Said I, Major Lowick, I wonder you don't apply yourself to Sir George Barclay, and then, I believe, you may be substed too. He answer'd me, He did not think it worth the while to trouble him, since he had never spoke to him of it before: and Rookwood, and Bernarde, and Lowick, and myself, several Times met in Red-Lyon-Fields, and talk'd of attacking the Prince of Orange.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who did?

Capt. Harris. Rookwood, Bernarde, Lowick, and myself.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, let me ask you one Question. Where was your Horse at first?

Capt. Harris. At first it was at my Lord Feversham's Stables, as they told me, in Somerset-House.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where were the other Persons Horses?

Capt. Harris. There was Mr. Hungate's and Mr. Hare's Horses in the same Place, at the same Time, as they told me.

Mr. Att. Gen. How came you by your Horse there?

Capt. Harris. Major Holmes did deliver my Horse, and committed it to my Care, and I carry'd it thence to another Place.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you observe there was any more Horses there?

Capt. Harris. I believe there was Five or Six, as near as I can guess.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you know where Rookwood was to have his Horse?

Capt. Harris. He had a Horse; but whence he had it I don't know.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Arms delivered you?

Capt. Harris. Yes, I had by Capt. Counter.

Mr. Conyers. Were you at no other Place together that Saturday Night, the 22d of February, because you say you din'd together?

Capt. Harris. Yes, we were at the Bear Tavern.

Mr. Conyers. What Discourse pass'd between you there?

Capt. Harris. They were talking about the Assassination; but what any particular Person said, I cannot tell.

Mr. Conyers. Pray who were there?

Capt. Harris. There was Mr. Knightley, Captain Rookwood, and Mr. King; and Knightley went out, and came in again, and declared, we must have a great deal of Care of ourselves, or we should be taken up: and he whisper'd at first, and afterwards I ask'd him what it was; and he told me, and said, We must have a Care of ourselves. Says Mr. King, staring this Way with his Eyes, Surely God Almighty is on our Side; and so we parted.

L. C. J. When was this?

Capt. Harris. This was the Night of Saturday the 22d, when it was discover'd; for some of them were taken up the next Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was Rookwood there at that Time at the Bear Tavern?

Capt. Harris. I cannot positively say whether he was or not.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse had you there?

Capt. Harris. We talk'd of Assassinating the King; but what it was in particular, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. Was Rookwood there?

Capt. Harris. Yes, I believe he was; but I cannot positively say.

L. C. J. You say it was the last Saturday that the King was to go abroad, that you apprehended you were discovered?

Capt. Harris. Yes, we apprehended we were discovered before that; for Mr. Lowick told me, that three or four Days before, in that Week, that his Name, and one Harrison's, were given into the Council, and another, and another, Two or Three of them, as he told me; I think Three or Four; and upon that Account Major Lowick went from his Lodging, and did not lie at his Lodging the Night before; and I came to Major Lowick, and he told me the same Thing at the King's-Arms Tavern.

Mr. Att. Gen. Can you remember what Discourse you had that Saturday Night?

Mr. Cowper. You say that on Saturday the 22d, Mr. Rookwood gave you the Lift.

Capt. Harris. I do not say it was the 22d, for I cannot swear to the Day of the Month; but it was the second Saturday that we were to have gone about this Business.

Mr. Cowper. You say he gave you a Lift of Names: Pray, when he gave you that Lift, what Discourse happened in the Room just before, or after the giving of the Lift?

Capt. Harris. Sir, I think I told the Court that before.

Mr. Cowper. Sir, I desire you would repeat it.

Capt. Harris. My Lord, I humbly desire to know whether I am to answer that Gentleman that Question?—L. C. J. Yes, you are to answer, being upon your Oath, and to tell the whole Truth.

Mr. Cowper. I asked him the Question so fairly, what Discourse introduced the giving of the Lift, and what followed upon it, that I perceive this Gentleman does not know which Side I am of.

Capt. Harris. Mr. Rookwood said we were to go to Turnham-Green; and he told me, that I was to be one of his Party, that we were to attack the Prince of Orange.

L. C. J. You say you were to be one of his Party; pray was it there that he told you, you should be his Aid de Camp?

Capt. Harris. Yes, he did tell me I was to be his Aid de Camp.

Mr. Phipps. Whose Hand-writing was that Lift?

Capt. Harris. I cannot tell, I had it from that Gentleman.

Mr. Phipps. But whose Writing was it?

Capt. Harris. Indeed I know not his Hand-writing, and therefore cannot tell whose it was: He is for his Life, but I believe he cannot deny any Thing that I have said, I suppose not: I should be very sorry to accuse Mr. Rookwood of any Thing that was not true.

Mr. Phipps. Pray whose Names were in that Lift?

Capt. Harris. I have mention'd Mr. Hare, Mr. Hanford, Mr. Blackburne, myself, and you, Mr. Rookwood, had your own Name at Top.

Rookwood. What is that Blackburne?

Capt. Harris. He is a Lancashire Man.

Rookwood. It's a very strange Thing I should give you a Lift with a Man's Name that I don't know; I declare it, I know no such Person.

Capt. Harris. Mr. Rookwood, I believe you are very sensible I do not accuse you of any Thing that is not true.

Mr. Phipps. When did you see that Lift last?

Capt. Harris. He gave it into my Hands, and had it from me again, or I threw it away afterwards.

Rookwood. But you that were to be an Evidence ought to have kept it to justify your Evidence.

Capt. Harris. Truly I did not intend to have been an Evidence at that Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they will ask him any Questions, let them.

Sir B. Shower. No, indeed, I will ask him no Questions.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have another Piece of Evidence which we would offer to your Lordship, which is not direct Evidence against the Prisoner, but only to prove a Circumstance or two of what has already been sworn: We do acknowledge, my Lord, it does not affect Mr. Rookwood, but only to strengthen and confirm what they have sworn.

Sir B. Shower. With Submission, we hope it will not be Evidence fit to be given as to the Prisoner at all; for because a Man may swear true in the particular Circumstance of a Thing, that therefore he swears true what he swears against the Prisoner, I think is no Consequence in the World.

L. C. J. It is a Thing distinct and foreign to the Matter, as to Mr. Rookwood.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we do not say it directly affects Mr. Rookwood; but when your Lordship has heard it, we shall submit it to you, how far it confirms even the Evidence given against him.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, we say the Prisoner was to have his Horse from Somerset-House; and that there were Horses plac'd there for that Purpose we are going to prove.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, it is one entire Conspiracy, in which every one had his Part; one was to have his Horses and his Party in one Place, and another in another: Now that there were at such Time such Horses at Somerset-House, and those Horses were delivered out from Somerset-House, is certainly a Confirmation of the Truth of what the Witnesses have said.

L. C. J. It is so. If that be it you offer, it is very material.

Mr. Conyers. We shall prove, That upon the Disappointment on the first Saturday, the 15th of February, they were to be ready against the 22d; and you will hear how the Horses were dispos'd of in the mean Time. Call Chamberlain, Maskel, and Allen.

Mr. Att. Gen. Call any of them, I believe it is enough.

(Mr. Chamberlain appeared, and was sworn.)

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know of any Horses that were brought to Somerset-House about February last, and how long they stay'd there?

Chamberlain. There was six Horses.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who brought them in?

Chamberlain. They were sent in by some Persons in Mr. Lewis's Name.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you any Direction to take Care of them?

Cham. Mr. Lewis sent in a Note to take Care of them for a Night or two.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who carried them away?

Chamberlain. I cannot tell: Some People came to see 'em that I never saw before, and they took care of them; I know not who they were, and I never saw them since.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Time was it that they came for them?

Chamberlain. It was about the middle of the Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Month was it in?

Chamberlain. I think it was much about the latter End of February, to the best of my Remembrance.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long was it before the Plot was discover'd?

Chamberlain. It was about a Week, or a small Matter, before the Plot was discover'd, to the best of my Knowledge.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long staid the Horses there at Somerset-House?

Chamberlain. Three of them staid a Night or two; but the other three of them about a Matter of a Week or ten Days.

Mr. Att. Gen.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who own'd those Horses ?

Chamberlain. They were sent in in Mr. Lewis's Name ; but who own'd them I cannot tell indeed.

Mr. Conyers. Then swear John Allen.

(Who was sworn.)

Pray tell my Lords and the Jury what you know concerning any Horses about the Time of the Breaking out of the Plot.

Mr. Att. Gen. We mean in Somerset-House Stable.

Allen. There was seven Horses came in.

Mr. Conyers. Who brought them ?

Allen. There was six in the first Place ; one came in afterwards in the Evening.

Mr. Conyers. By whose Order were they brought there ?

Allen. By Mr. Lewis's Order.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long did they stay there ?

Allen. Some of them staid there several Days ; three of them went away the next Day, as I think.

Mr. Conyers. Do you remember about what Time those Horses were brought thither ?

Allen. They were brought there, I believe, about seven or eight Days before the Plot broke out.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, We only call these Witnesses to confirm the Testimony of the others, that there were such Horses there at that Time, and for the present we rest it here.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen, what say you to it for the Prisoner ?

Sir B. Shower. If your Lordship please, we are of Counsel for the Prisoner ; and that which we are to insist upon is this, which we submit to your Lordship's Judgment : In the first Place, whether here be two Witnesses against the Prisoner to prove this Treason, according to the Statute of Edw. VI. which requires two Witnesses in High-Treason, and lawful ones ; but that in the first Place we say, there are not two Witnesses at all, at least not to any Overt-Act that is laid in this Indictment. As to what Captain Porter says of what passed between him and Durance, the Dialogue between them where Rookwood was present, we are in your Lordship's Direction ; and we doubt not but the Jury will take it into their Consideration, how far that affects the Prisoner ; that he shall not be concerned in any Transaction between Mr. Porter and any other Persons ; none of their Declarations, none of their treasonable Practices, can be imputed to or affect him in any Way whatsoever. Now all that Captain Porter says of Mr. Rookwood is, that he was once at the Globe Tavern, and there was a Discourse about this Matter ; and then he tells your Lordship of a Dialogue between him and Durance, and an Account of what passed between them ; but he does not say any thing of Mr. Rookwood being any Ways concern'd in the Matter, but only that he dropped this Expression, It was a desperate Adventure, a dangerous Enterprize, and he seemed against it ; but in the End he concluded with something in French, which what they are, and what they mean, we must submit to your Lordship and the Jury ; he interprets it, when Sir George Barclay said he must have a Share in it, then Rookwood replied, There's an End of it. But there is not one Word of Agreement sworn to, that Mr. Rookwood spoke to shew his Consent. There is but one Time more that Mr. Porter swears to, about the Prisoner at the Bar, and that is, at his Lodgings in Little Rider-street ; for as to the other Consults, Mr. Rookwood was not present there : It seems there was a Discourse about the Affair, but that Rookwood said nothing, but went away ; there was not so much as the least Intimation of an Agreement to any such Design, or Approbation of what was agitated in the Company ; and we insist upon it as to this in Point of Law, that it amounts to no more than Misprision of Treason at most. My Lord, I will not now contend about Notions, nor will I argue whether Consulting and Agreeing be Evidence of an Overt-Act ; I submit to your Lordship's Directions, notwithstanding the Variety and Difference of Opinions that have been.

L. C. J. Sir Bartholomew Shower, I know not what Variety of Opinions you mean ; there have been some Discourses in Pamphlets, I agree ; but it was always taken and held for Law, that Consulting and Agreeing was an Overt-Act.

Sir B. Shower. Here is no Evidence of any Agreement.

L. C. J. Pray let us hear what you say to that.

Sir B. Shower. It is not the being present where Traitors do consult and conspire the Death of the King, unless they actually agree ; nor is it Evidence sufficient to guide or prevail upon a Jury's Conscience to affirm upon their Oaths, that such a one is guilty of High-Treason, because such a one was there, and said nothing at all ; for the not discovering afterwards, nor accusing, is no Evidence at all against Mr. Rookwood. As to Mr. Harris, he gives you an Account of a great deal that does not affect Mr. Rookwood, neither all that passed at St. Germain's, nor in their Journey into England ; for all that may be true, and yet the Prisoner no way concerned in it. As to what he affirms of the Prisoner, we shall submit it to your Consideration : What it amounts to, and all that his Deposition comes up to, is, That Mr. Rookwood complain'd that he was to obey implicitly Sir George Barclay's Orders ; and Harris gives an Account but of one particular Time that Mr. Rookwood undertook, or did agree to be concern'd in this Matter ; it was but once, and that was, when he gave him the Note of those that were to go to Turnham-Green, and that he was to be his Aid de Camp : And as to that, we shall give you an Account by Witnesses whom we shall call, that these two Witnesses ought not to be believed as to what they have sworn, tho' they do not come up to make two Witnesses according to Law upon this Indictment. What they have said as to this Man, is not credible, tho' they may speak true as to others ; and no Doubt there was a barbarous Conspiracy ; it appears there was such, beyond all Exception and Contradiction ; and the Persons that have been condemned as Conspirators have acknowledg'd it : But, my Lord, that which is now before your Lordship and the Jury is, to enquire whether the Prisoner is concern'd in this Affair at all, and how far ; and we hope the Jury will be of Opinion he is not concern'd. The Heinousness of the Crime, and the Aggravations of it, being to be abhorr'd by all Mankind, we think ought not to sway with the Jury, nor influence their Judgments to believe a Witness ever the sooner in accusing any other Person ; it ought rather to have a contrary Allay ; for the greater the Crime is, and the farther off from having any tolerable Opinion in the World, they ought to expect the greater Proof ; and no one is to be presum'd guilty of such an Act, without very sufficient Evidence of it ; and the greater the Crime, the Proof ought to be the more positive and undeniable. It is not their being plainly positive that is sufficient, but whether it is such that is good in Law ; and about that we are sure your Lordship will give true Directions in point of Law : And whether the Witnesses be credible or no, must be submitted and left to the Jury, after we have call'd some Witnesses, who will give you an Account of their Reputation.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, we humbly insist there are not two Witnesses, such as the Law requires, to prove the Charge upon this Indictment against the Prisoner : The two Overt-Acts that touch Mr. Rookwood are, first, Consulting and Agreeing how to kill the King ; the other is, the finding Arms and Horses for that Purpose. But as to this latter, the finding Arms and Horses, there is not one Evidence that comes up to it : And as to the former, the Consultations, whether there be sufficient Evidence that comes up to that, is very much a Question with us : But we say, with Submission, there are not two Witnesses in that Case ; for Mr. Porter says only what he was told by Sir George Barclay, that Sir George proposed this Matter ; but withal he tells you, that when Sir George Barclay proposed it, and Mr. Rookwood was inform'd what the Design was, he was so far from Conspiring, Consulting, or Agreeing to do it, that he said it was a barbarous Act, and he recoil'd at it. Then at last says Sir George Barclay, You must command a Party.

L. C. J. Well, and what said Rookwood then ?

Mr. Phipps. Porter says, he then said, There's an End of it. Now, my Lord, what Evidence is this of a Consultation and Agreement ? And this is all that Porter says. As to what Mr. Harris says, we are to consider whether the List given to him be an Overt-Act ; and there the Point in Question is, Whether that List can be given in Evidence against Mr. Rookwood, upon this late Act of Parliament, as an Overt-Act, it not being laid in the Indictment ? There is indeed an Overt-Act of a List laid in the Indictment, as given to Cranburne, but none as given to Mr. Rookwood.

L. C. J. Pray take the Evidence right : First, What will you make an Overt-Act ? What do you think when there is a Debate among divers Persons about killing the King ?

Sir B. Shower. With Submission, that will be no Overt-Act, if there be a Debate of such a Matter, tho' he be present.

L. C. J. Aye ; but when there is a Consult, and upon Debate a Resolution is formed, and tho' he does at first dislike it ; yet when he is told he must command a Party, he says he is content, or there's an End of it---What do you make of that ?

Sir B. Shower. He said he did not like it ; it was a barbarous, desperate Design.

L. C. J. It's true ; but when Sir George Barclay said he should command a Party, he acquiesced, and said there was an End of it. There was a Discourse about Cutting off the King, and that was agreed upon in the Company at that Time ; and tho' at first he did not like it, yet he might afterwards agree to it.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, that is it which we deny ; we say there is no Proof of his Agreement to it.

L. C. J. Captain Porter says, he did declare that he said he look'd upon it as a desperate Design, and was averse from being engaged in it, but afterwards did agree to it : Whether is not that such an Overt-Act as is laid in the Indictment ?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, We must beg Leave for the Prisoner in a Case of this Nature, that it may be recollected what the Evidence did say. Mr. Porter did not take upon him to affirm that Mr. Rookwood consented to it, but only said, There was an End of it. Now we must leave that to the Jury, what they can make of such a doubtful Expression.

L. C. J. Call Mr. Porter in again.

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, the first Meeting Mr. Porter speaks of, where the Prisoner Mr. Rookwood was, is at the Globe Tavern, where this Discourse was ; the next Meeting that he speaks of was on the Friday Night before the first Saturday when the Business was to be done ; and afterwards he met at Porter's Lodgings, on Saturday Morning, in Rider-street.

(Then Capt. Porter came in again.)

L. C. J. Hark ye, Mr. Porter, the first Time that this Matter was proposed, when Mr. Rookwood was present, you say was at the Globe Tavern ?

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, it was.

L. C. J. And you say he disliked it, and did not care to be concerned in it ?

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, he did so.

L. C. J. Well, what said Sir George Barclay ?

Capt. Porter. Sir George Barclay said, he ought to obey his Orders, for he had such a Commission for such a Thing, and he drew out a Scheme how it was to be done ; and when Sir George Barclay told Mr. Rookwood he should command his Party, he replied in French,

There's an End of it.

L. C. J. This was at the Globe Tavern, was it not ?

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord, it was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray then, Capt. Porter, let me ask you another Question : Was he afterwards with you at any other Meeting, and when and where ?

Capt. Porter. He was with me upon Saturday the 15th, at my Lodging in Little Rider-street, where was Sir George Barclay and others.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Discourse happen'd then, I pray ?

Capt. Porter. They did there discourse the whole Matter, and Sir George Barclay was not for going at that Time, because there was so many People that went with the King, that there would not be a good Opportunity to effect the Design : But I told him they would go off after the Hunting was over, and so it was agreed upon to go on with the Undertaking.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, at that Time did Mr. Rookwood pretend to dislike the Affair, or refuse to be any Way at all concern'd in it ?

Capt. Porter. No, my Lord, I can't remember that he spoke one Word.

L. C. J. Was Mr. Rookwood there ?

Capt. Porter. Yes, there was Mr. Rookwood, Sir George Barclay, and Mr. Durance.

Mr. Att. Gen. And had you Discourse at that Time about this Business ?

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord ; there was that Objection made of so many People going with the King, and I made that Answer that I tell you.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Why then, suppose at the Globe Tavern such an Expression had not dropt from the Prisoner, but a Man is present at two Consults that are held about the Death of the King, but says nothing either at the first or second, What wou'd you make of that Case?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I confess this is a Case of a very barbarous Nature, of which I hope my Client will acquit himself: But I think we have the Authority of Parliament on our Side, that this does not amount to a Proof of Treason. It seems they lay a Stress upon this, that Mr. Rookwood came to Captain Porter's Lodgings on the Saturday Morning the 15th: But then take the Case as it is; for aught that does appear upon the Proof, he knows not upon what Account the Meeting is, beforehand. I think that is the Case of my Lord Russell, upon which the Reversal of his Attainder went, that the Evidence came short, and that it was but Misprision; for the Evidence was, That he was present at the supposed Declaration's reading, but said nothing at all to it.

L. C. J. But I speak of two Meetings; there was but one.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I do not know whether there were two Meetings or one then: But this is the Ground we go upon, there ought to be two Witnesses: And if there be two Meetings upon such a Design, the second may be accidental, and it does not appear to be a design'd Meeting; and there was no Appointment of Mr. Rookwood to be there, nor any Negotiation by way of Message or otherwise, to that Purpose. Is this, my Lord, an Overt-Act? Suppose a Man be present at a Consult about treasonable Practices, and he uses Words that are indifferent: It is true, in the Case of a Wager it amounts to an Assent, but it hardly will come to that when People meet by Accident, or for they don't know what.

L. C. J. How is this by Accident?

Sir B. Shower. It does not appear that it was by Design or Appointment.

L. C. J. They were Acquaintance.

Sir B. Shower. He had no Acquaintance with him but in Sir George Barclay's Company.

L. C. J. But besides, there was an express Consent at the Globe Tavern, when Rookwood said, There is an End of it.

Sir B. Shower. That is as much as to say, I will not do it, I will not go with you—

Mr. Sol. Gen. Sir George Barclay was the Person whom they were to obey; and Harris tells you he told them what they were to do, and six Horses were first plac'd, and three of them afterwards remov'd.

Sir B. Shower. That won't affect him what Sir George Barclay said, any more than Lewis's appointing of the Horses.

L. C. J. Then here is another Thing, Why did he give a List to Mr. Harris? The List that was given had Mr. Rookwood's Name at Top, as he was to command the Party, and there was Harris's Name and Hare's Name as of his Party; that is, their feign'd Names: Mr. Rookwood's feign'd Name was Roberts that was at Top, and they were to go to Turnham-Green, and Rookwood told Harris he should be his Aid de Camp.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, for that I think we have a Point of Law, that we apprehend will turn off all that Evidence, and sure we may take that Exception now: The Words of the Act are, That no Evidence shall be given of any Overt-Act that is not expressly laid in the Indictment. Now cannot I shew upon this Indictment, that there is an Overt-Act in such a positive direct Manner as they now urge about this List? Will not that satisfy your Lordship's Judgment to set aside all this Evidence? To make the Indictment good for Treason, there ought to be a Compassing of the Death of the King laid, and an Overt-Act laid declaring that Compassing; but no Evidence is to be given of any Overt-Act that is not laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. You are not to take Exceptions to the Indictment now, but only to the Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. I have this one Exception more; there is never a Quodque, nor a Juratores ulterius presentant.

L. C. J. There does not need; but that is a Fault, if any, in the Indictment, and is not to be stirr'd now.

Sir B. Shower. If there be not a Presentment by the Jury, then there is no Overt-Act alledged: And if there be no Overt-Act alledged, or no such Overt-Act, then we are within the Words of the Act, That no Evidence shall be given of any such Overt-Act but what is alledged; and it is, if not expressly alledged, as if it were not alledged at all: Now here it is very loose, Ecce idem Christophorus Knightley, and so it goes on with the rest, did so and so. There is a Presentment at first, that they did compass and imagine the Death of the King; and then the Indictment comes farther, and says, that Forty Men should do this Business, and of those Forty these four should be some; and then the idem bought Horses and Arms, and so it must go to the last Antecedent, and then there is no express alledging of any Overt-Act; and then it is as if no Overt-Act at all was alledged.

L. C. J. This Exception is not to the Evidence, but to the Indictment: It begins Juratores presentant quod; Does not that relate to all?

Sir B. Shower. No, my Lord; and I can tell you a Reason why not: If it be not so well alledged as it should be, it is in an Indictment as if it were never alledged at all; and so within the Words of the Act of Parliament this is not an Overt-Act alledged, and therefore they cannot give Evidence upon it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Truly, my Lord, I can't imagine what they are doing, they are moving in Arrest of Judgment before a Verdict given: They say the Overt-Act is not expressly laid; Is that an Exception to the Evidence, or to the Indictment?

Sir B. Shower. If my Lord will please to give us the Liberty, we would shew there can be no Verdict given upon this Indictment.

L. C. J. Certainly this is an irregular Proceeding; this is not a Time of Exception to the Judgment.

Mr. Phipps. Then, my Lord, we are in your Judgment, as to the Proof that has been given: If a Man be present at a Meeting of several Persons, and there is a treasonable Debate about killing the King, and this Man is only present, but neither assents, nor makes the Proposal how it shall be done, whether the bare being silent, and saying nothing, is such an Overt-Act as shall convict a Man of Treason?

L. C. J. I tell you, Consenting to a traitorous Design is an Overt-Act of High-Treason, if that Consent be made to appear by good Proof: Now the Question is, What is a good Proof and Evidence of this Consent? A Man is two or three Times at a treasonable Consult for killing the King, and though perhaps at the first he did not, yet at the second he did know that the Meeting was for such a Design, (suppose for the Purpose there was but two Meetings) and at the second it is determined to go on with the Design; Is not that an Overt-Act, though it cannot be proved that the Prisoner said any Thing?

Mr. Phipps. If the first Meeting is not a Consent or an Overt-Act, neither will a second or a third be, if there was no more done than at the first, but they are like so many Cyphers without a Figure.

L. C. J. The first Meeting possibly might be accidental, he might not know what it was for, though that will go a great Way if he does not dissent or discover; but when he meets again with the same Company, knowing what they had in Design; Does not that prove a Consent? That was the Case of Sir Everard Digby in the Powder Plot.

Mr. Phipps. But where it may be uncertain, my Lord, whether it were with a good Design, or a bad Design, that he met with that Company, it ought to be taken most favourably for the Prisoner: This Man might be present in Order to a Discovery.

L. C. J. But besides, that is not this Case; you are mooted upon Points that are not in the Case. When Mr. Harris came to Mr. Rookwood, and finding them in some Disorder, and being inquisitive what was the Occasion, he was sent to Counter; and when he discovered what they were to go about, he afterwards meeting Mr. Rookwood, says to him, Are we sent over to murder the Prince of Orange? says Rookwood, if I had known of this Design before I came from France, I would have begged the King's, that is, King James's Pardon, and desir'd to have been excused. Hereby he expresses his Knowledge of the Design, and what he was to do; and though he disliked, yet would obey Orders.

Mr. Phipps. There is no Doubt, my Lord, but he knew of it; but whether your Lordship will construe his Silence as a Consent, in Treason, is the Question.

L. C. J. A Man is at frequent Consults about Killing the King, and does not reveal it, it is a great Evidence of his Consent.

Mr. Phipps. But it is not prov'd that he did actually consent to it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we must submit it to your Lordship, whether this is not totally improper and irregular at this Time? They are arguing how far the Evidence is to be believ'd, before the Time proper for such an Argument comes.

Mr. Att. Gen. If they will call their Witnesses, let them; or if they say they have none, then they may make their Observations upon the Evidence; but else we desire we may be kept to the usual Method of Proceedings.

Mr. Phipps. With Submission, we thought it fit to know the Opinion of the Court first, if there be two Witnesses against the Prisoner; for if there be not two Witnesses, as the Law requires, we need not trouble the Court with our Evidence.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we must desire that the Record may be read of Captain Porter's Conviction of Manlaughter; a Man that has been guilty of doing such an Act, feloniously, maliciously, and voluntarily, as that is, sure is not a competent Witness.

Cl. of Ar. It has been read already.

Mr. Att. Gen. I thought we had been over that Objection before.

Sir B. Shower. We think it is proper for us to move it now again; for though it is no Objection to his being a legal Witness, yet we hope it will influence his Reputation as to his Credit; for he that has been guilty of killing a Man in such a Manner as the Indictment lays it, will find but little Credit, we hope, with a Jury of Countrymen. But since it has been read, and your Lordship and the Jury have taken Notice of it, we will call some other Witnesses as to Mr. Porter's Reputation and Behaviour, we think they will prove Things as bad as an Attainder. I shall not open them to your Lordship, but beg Leave to call our Witnesses, who will acquaint you what they have to say.

Mr. Att. Gen. Certainly, my Lord, you will not think fit to let them do so. I desire they would not utter in any Thing of Evidence without acquainting the Court what they call them for: For that were the Way to let them in to call Witnesses to Things that are not proper.

L. C. J. Nay, without doubt it is not regular to produce any Evidence, without opening it.

Mr. Att. Gen. For if it be for any Crime that a Man may be presented for, and there is no Conviction; I think that ought not to be given in Evidence to take away a Witness's Credit: If it be only to his general Reputation and Behaviour, so far they may go, and we can't oppose it. Therefore I desire Sir Bartholomew Shower will open to the Court of what Nature his Evidence is.

Sir B. Shower. Well, I will tell you then what I call them to.

L. C. J. You must tell us what you call them to.

Sir B. Shower. Why then, my Lord, if Robbing upon the Highway, if Clipping, if Conversing with Clippers, if Fornication, if Buggery, if any of these Irregularities, will take off the Credit of a Man, I have Instructions in my Brief, of Evidence of Crimes of this Nature, and to this Purpose against Mr. Porter; and we hope that by Law, a Prisoner standing for his Life is at Liberty to give an Account of the Actions and Behaviour of the Witnesses against him. I know the Objection that Mr. Attorney makes, a Witness does not come prepar'd to vindicate and give an Account of every Action of his Life, and it is not commonly allowed to give Evidence of particular Actions; but if those Actions be repeated, and a Man lives in the Practice of them, and this Practice is continued for several Years, and this be made out by Evidence; we hope no Jury that have any Conscience, will upon their Oaths give any Credit to the Evidence of a Person against whom such a Testimony is given.

Mr. Phipps. We are speaking only, my Lord, to the Credit of Mr. Porter; and if we can shew by Evidence that he is so ill a Man as to be guilty of those Crimes that we have open'd, according to the Instructions in our Brief, we hope the Jury will not think him fit to be a good Evidence against us in this Matter.

L. C. J. What say you to this, Mr. Attorney?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, they themselves know, that this Sort of Evidence never was admitted in any Case, nor can be, for it must tend to the Overthrow of all Justice and legal Proceedings; for instead of trying the Prisoner at the Bar, they would try Mr. Porter. It has been always deny'd where it comes to a particular Crime that a Man may be prosecuted for; and this it seems is not one Crime or two, but so many and so long continued, as they say, and so often practis'd, that here are the whole Actions of a Man's Life to be ript up, which they can never shew any Precedent when it was permitted, because a Man has no Opportunity to defend himself. Any Man in the World may by this Means be wounded in his Reputation, and Crimes laid to his Charge that he never thought of, and he can have no Opportunity of giving an Answer to it, because he never imagined there would be any such Objection: It is killing a Man in his good Name by a Side-wound, against which he has no Protection or Defence. My Lord, this must tend to the preventing all Manner of Justice; it is against all common Sense or Reason, and it never was offered at by any Lawyer before, as I believe, at leastwise never so openly; and therefore I wonder that these Gentlemen should do it, who acknowledge, at least one of them did, that as often as it has been now offer'd it has been over-ruled; and I know not for what End it is offer'd, but to make a Noise in the Court: They know that it is irregular as much as any thing that could be offer'd.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Indeed, my Lord, if the Prisoner at the Bar had offer'd this Matter, it had been excusable; but that Gentlemen of the Long Robe, and who are so well acquainted with the Practice of the Courts of Law, should pretend to do such a Thing, is unaccountable. There was somewhat like this that was offer'd at Manchester, but that was by the Prisoner, to prove that one Lunt who was a Witness had two Wives, and they brought a Copy of an Indictment upon which there was no Process; after that they endeavour'd to prove him guilty of several Robberies; but all that Sort of Evidence was refus'd. I only give them this Instance to shew, that where the Prisoner has attempted it, it has been always rejected; and I am sure they cannot shew me that ever it was allowed, even to the Prisoner himself, to give any Thing of this Kind in Evidence; and this I must say, they can never shew me any one particular Instance, when Counsel ever endeavour'd to do it, before this Time.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I mentioned the particular Crimes, the Faults which I had in my Instructions to object against the Credit of the Testimony of Capt. Porter, in Answer to Mr. Attorney's Desire, that I would open the Particulars of the Evidence, that I would call my Witnesses to the Truth of it; I was loth to repeat the Words, I think the Things themselves so abominable; but we conceive, with Submission, we may be admitted in this Case to offer what we have offered. Suppose a Man be a common, lewd, disorderly Fellow, one that frequently swears to Falshood for his Life: We know it is a common Rule in Point of Evidence, that against a Witness you shall only give an Account of his Character at large, of his general Conversation; but that general Conversation arises from particular Actions, and if the Witnesses give you an Account of such disorderly Actions repeated, we hope that will go to his Discredit, which is that we now are labouring for, and submit it to your Lordship's Opinion whether we may not do it.

L. C. J. Look ye, you may bring Witnesses to give an Account of the general Tenour of his Conversation, but you don't think sure that we will try now at this Time, whether he be guilty of Robbery or Buggery.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we will give you an Account that he used to have a private Lodging, and come in with his Horse tir'd, and several other such Things, as that he us'd to go out in Disguises, and the like.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I cannot imagine why a Man that has been guilty of any such Crimes, and is not taken, should be of greater Credit than a Man that has been taken and punish'd.

L. C. J. What is that you say, Mr. Phipps?

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, I say 'tis the Crime that renders a Man infamous, and I do not know why a Man that has had the good Fortune not to be taken and punished for great Crimes by him committed, should be in a better Condition as to the Credit of his Testimony, than one that is taken and undergoes the Punishment of the Law.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Charnock urg'd that as far as it would go, but we are oblig'd, it seems, to hear Things that have been over-ruled over and over; but I desire to know of them, whether they can shew he has been guilty of a greater Crime than he has confess'd himself guilty of in Court, I mean of the intended Assassination.

Mr. Phipps. No, we agree we can't; but pray let us prove him guilty of as many Crimes as we can.

Mr. Sol. Gen. But, my Lord, I hope you'll keep them to the general Question of the common ordinary Tenour of his Conversation.

Sir B. Shower. Call Mr. Oldfield, Mr. Nicholas, Mr. Milford, Black Will. [Mr. Milford appeared.]

Cryer. Lay your Hand on the Book. The Evidence that you shall give on behalf of the Prisoner at the Bar shall be the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth. So help you God.

Sir B. Shower. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account whether you know Captain Porter, and how long you have known him?

Milford. I have known him about Four Years.

Sir B. Shower. What Reputation is he of?

Milford. I never knew any Hurt by him in my Life.

Sir B. Shower. Pray what is your Name?—Mil. Frederick Milford.

Sir B. Shower. But the Name in my Brief is John Milford, that is my Man.

L. C. J. But you see this Man knows him.

Sir B. Shower. Call Mr. Oldfield.

[Which was done, and he appeared accordingly.]

Mr. Phipps. Do you know Captain Porter?—Oldfield. Yes, I do.

Mr. Phipps. How long have you known him?

Oldfield. I believe about Twenty Years.

Mr. Phipps. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of his Life and Conversation.

Oldfield. I can say nothing, he was always civil in my Company, but he was lewd in his Discourse.

Sir B. Shower. What do you mean by being lewd in his Discourse?

Oldfield. Why, he would be talking very extravagantly.

VOL. IV.

Mr. Phipps. What do you mean in talking? Was it of what he had done himself, Sir?

Oldfield. No otherwise than that he had whor'd; and those kind of Things.

Sir B. Shower. What other Things beside Whoring?

Oldfield. I know no other Part of it.

Sir B. Shower. Where is Edward Bouche? (He did not appear.)

Mr. Phipps. Call William O Bryan. (He did not appear.)

Sir B. Shower. Where is Mr. Page, and Mr. Hardiman?

(None of them appeared.)

Cryer. There is not a Man of them here, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Webber, Do you know where they are, for the Court stays for them.

Mr. Webber. Indeed I do not, they were summon'd to be here.

Sir B. Shower. Where is Black Will?

Cryer. Black Will. (He appear'd, and was a Moor.)

L. C. J. Ask him if he be a Christian.

Cryer. I have ask'd him, and he says he is a Christian.

(Then he was sworn.)

L. C. J. Well, What do you ask him?

Rookwood. Will, Pray give an Account of your Master, and of his Life and Conversation.

Mr. Phipps. You are sworn to tell the Truth, Sweet-heart.

Will. I served him almost Eight Years, and he has been a very good Master to me, my Lord.

Sir B. Shower. What do you know him to be guilty of?

Will. Nothing at all.

Sir B. Shower. I believe they have put in these Men to confirm his Reputation.

L. C. J. Indeed, I think the King's Counsel should have called these Witnesses, if there had been Occasion.

Sir B. Shower. We submit it to your Direction, how far this Evidence will affect him; there is nothing said, as we apprehend, that will amount to Treason: If the Prisoner has a Mind to say any Thing himself, we hope your Lordship will please to hear him.

L. C. J. Aye, if he will, let him.

Rookwood. My Lord, Mr. Porter does not say, that I consented to command a Party.

L. C. J. Is that all you have to say? Then, Gentlemen, will you sum up?

Mr. Conyers. My Lord, we are agreed; we submit to the Court on both Sides.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar Mr. Rookwood is indicted for High-Treason, in Compassing, Imagining, and Intending the Death and Destruction of the King, by a most barbarous and wicked Assassination; you have had an Account of this Design from Two Witnesses that have been produced; the one is Captain Porter, and the other is Mr. Harris, who swear they were both concerned as Actors in it.

Captain Porter tells you, about the latter End of January, or the Beginning of February last, Sir George Barclay came over into England from France; and there was a formed Design to murder the King; and after several Meetings and Conferences among the Conspirators, they came to a Resolution that he should be assassinated; but which way to effect it, admitted of a Dispute among them; for the King, as you have heard, going frequently, about once a Week, a Hunting on the other side the Water near Richmond, the Design was first to assassinate him at Richmond Park, or thereabouts, as he returned from Hunting, and Preparation was made accordingly; but that not being so fully agreed upon, the Conveniency of the Place held still some Debate; for some were of Opinion, that it was better to make the Attempt on this side the Water, than on the other; therefore, as Mr. Porter tells you, to determine that Difficulty, there were several Men sent, whereof he was one, Knightley another, and King a Third, to view the Ground on both sides the Water, and to make their Report; the Ground being view'd, and the Report made to some of their Accomplices, who to receive it met at the Nagg's-Head in Covent-Garden, which was about the Tenth or Twelfth of February last; it was then agreed, that the King and his Guards should be attack'd on this side the Water, about Turnham-Green.

Mr. Porter has told you, that at several Meetings for the carrying on this Design, the Prisoner Mr. Rookwood was present, more particularly at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, where were also Sir George Barclay, Mr. Charnock, Sir William Parkyns, himself, and others, and there they did enter into a Consult how they might assassinate the King; and it being propos'd, Mr. Rookwood did not like it, as Mr. Porter says, but said it was a desperate Attempt; and thereupon Sir George Barclay pulled out a Scheme that he had, and shew'd it at that Time to Mr. Rookwood, and said, You are sent over from France, and are to obey my Orders, and you are to command a Party; and then Mr. Rookwood made an Answer in French, There's an End of it, which, as he says, imports a Consent.

Then at another Time, which was the Saturday Morning the 15th of February, they met at Captain Porter's Lodging, and there was a Discourse about going on to put the Design in Execution; and one Durant, one of the Men that was to watch the King and the Guards going out at Kensington, came in, and the Question was, whether they should go that Day upon the Design? They had Discourse about it, and Mr. Rookwood the Prisoner was there present, and there did not appear any Dissent in him to the Prosecution of the Design, but it seems it was readily agreed among them, to pursue it according to the former Determination.

Then the next Witness that is produc'd is Mr. Harris, who gives you a large Account of the Beginning of his Knowledge, and of his being concern'd in this Matter; he tells you he was in France, and at the Court of St. Germain, where the late King then was, and that he spoke with him, and where was also Colonel Parker; and King James took Notice of him and of his faithful Service, and told him, he always design'd him a Kindness, and then had Opportunity of doing it, and said he would send him over into England, where he should be substituted, and directed him to obey the Orders of Sir George Barclay; and there being one Hare by, who was to come over with him, King James gave them both Names of Disguise which they were to go by in England, and, as it seems, others that came over did also assume; for Mr. Rookwood went by the Name of Roberts, Harris was to go by the Name of Jenkins, and Hare by the Name of Guiney; they were directed to apply themselves to Sir George Barclay, and had Directions how they should find him, which were to go into Covent-Garden in the Evening, upon a Monday or a Thursday; and if they saw a Person that had a white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket, they were to take Notice of him to be Sir George Barclay, and they had Ten Lewis d'Ors a-piece for their Journeys to carry them off; and you have heard from whom they had them; and they were told, that if at Calais they were kept longer than they expected, whereby their Money was spent, Care was taken that they should be supplied from the Governor of Calais, the President there; and it seems Mr. Harris and Mr. Hare went together to Calais, and lay a considerable Time for want of a Wind, whereby their Money fell short of defraying their Expences; but they were afterwards supplied by the Governor of Calais, according as was promised at St. Germain's.

Gentlemen, he tells you, that after they came into England, the first Time they went to seek Sir George Barclay, was upon the Monday Night, but they did not find him at that Time; but afterwards they met with him, and Mr. Harris had Subsistence-Money from him, according to King James's Promise, which was at the Rate of 5s. a-Day, when he had no Horse, and afterwards when he had a Horse, at 6s. a-Day; this is the Account he gives you how he came over, and of his Journey and Meeting with Sir George Barclay.

And now he comes to speak particularly concerning the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Rookwood: He tells you, that on Saturday Morning the 15th of February, the first Day when this Assassination was designed to be committed, he went to the Lodging of one Burk, where Mr. Rookwood was, with others, and he found them all in a great Disorder; and thereupon he ask'd them, What was the Matter, and what they were going to do? And Rookwood bid him go to one Counter, and he should know of him what was the Matter: Accordingly he went to his Lodging, and Counter told him and those who were with him, That they must get ready to go to Turnham-Green; and at the same Time and Place he met with Sir George Barclay, and after some Discourse of attacking the Coach, Sir George Barclay at the first said, They were his Janizaries; and afterwards going out, he came in again and said, they were Men of Honour, and that they were to go abroad to attack the Prince of Orange.

The next Day, or a little Time after, Mr. Harris met with Mr. Rookwood, and enters into Discourse with him to this Effect: What! are we sent over to murder the Prince of Orange? It is a strange Sort of Employment: (for it seems they were not informed in France what they were to do here, but they were to put themselves under the Conduct of Sir George Barclay, and obey his Orders.) Mr. Rookwood said, He was afraid the Thing was so, and that they were drawn in; but said, If he had known of the Design before-hand, he would not have come over, but have begg'd the King's Pardon. Which shews not only his Knowledge of the Design, but his being engaged in the Prosecution of it.

And then, Gentlemen, you are told further, That upon the Going out upon Saturday the 22d, which was the second Time it was to have been put in Execution, there was a List of Men that Mr. Rookwood gave to Mr. Harris of several Names that he has mentioned to you; he says, Mr. Rookwood's Name was at the Top, as one that was to command the Party, and the Name he went by was Roberts; and there was Harris's counterfeit Name, which was Jenkins; and Hare's counterfeit Name, which was Guiney; and they were to make ready to go to Turnham-Green. He told him, There was a List, and that he and Harris was to be of his Party, that he was to attack the Prince of Orange, and that Mr. Harris should be his Aid du Camp.

Gentlemen, I forgot to tell you, That between the first Saturday and the Second, Mr. Harris, Mr. Rookwood, and Mr. Lowick, walking in Red-Lyon-Fields, and there in Discourse among themselves, Mr. Harris and Mr. Rookwood did express themselves to be much concerned that they were to be employed upon such a Design as this was, which they owned to be very barbarous; but Mr. Rookwood and Lowick said, They were under Command, and must obey Orders, tho' Mr. Rookwood did not like the Design they were engaged in.

Gentlemen, they have told you of Horses that were placed at Somerset-House in a Stable there, under the Care of Mr. Lewis, my Lord Feversham's Gentleman of the Horse, about six or seven Horses, and those six Horses that were there at that Time were afterwards taken away; but that is only a Circumstance.

So that, Gentlemen, this is now the Sum and Substance of this Evidence that has been given you, as far as it relates to the Prisoner: His Counsel in his Defence have insisted upon several Things; in the first Place, tho' it was last mentioned in Time, yet it ought to have the first Consideration; the Counsel for the Prisoner have endeavoured to take off the Credit of Mr. Porter, and have opened indeed very great Crimes that he should be guilty of, which must render him a Person not to be believed, but they have not proved any Thing; no Witness that they have called against Mr. Porter says the least against him to invalidate his Testimony, or to induce you to disbelieve what he has said.

Then they say in Point of Law, There is no Overt-Act proved of any Design against the King's Life that affects Mr. Rookwood; now that Matter you are to consider of, Whether or no it does appear by the Testimony of two Witnesses, that Mr. Rookwood was concerned in this Design of Assassinating the King: Capt. Porter is positive that he was at the Consult at the Globe-Tavern, where it was proposed, debated, and resolved upon; but Mr. Rookwood says, he did dislike it; so says Captain Porter, he did not approve of it at the first upon his being acquainted with it; but being sent over to obey the Orders of Sir George Barclay, and Sir George Barclay producing a Scheme ready drawn, wherein he was to command the Party, telling him, That he must obey Orders. You hear what he said, and the Answer he return'd in French, There's an End of it; Whether that does not amount to a Consent and Agreement to be engaged in this Design, is left to your Consideration; for if it do, it is plainly an Overt-Act.

Then, Gentlemen, you hear further, that Harris was told by Mr. Rookwood, that he should be of his Party, and be his Aid du Camp, and go to Turnham-Green to attack the Prince of Orange, and he had a List of Men given him by Rookwood, and was directed to get the rest ready.

Rookwood. That was not in the Indictment.

L. C. J. But you were at that Meeting, which is laid in the Indictment.

Rookwood. My Lord, that List is not in the Indictment; the List in the Indictment refers to Mr. Cranburne.

L. C. J. No, but that is an Evidence of your being in the Design; I hope that List of Men will be some Evidence of the Consent and Agreement that Mr. Rookwood was to command a Party.

Sir B. Shower. With Submission, my Lord, the Words of the Act seem otherwise, and that no Overt-Act should be given in Evidence, that is not expressly alledged.

L. C. J. But cannot there be one Act, that may be Proof of another Act which is alledged?

Sir B. Shower. Then there is no Advantage of this Law; for, my Lord, the End of the Act was, That they should know the particular Crimes that they were to answer to.

L. C. J. That could never be the End of the Law, that all particular Facts that are but Evidence of the Facts alledged should be set forth in the Indictment; it was sufficient before the Act, to alledge any Overt-Act; and any other Overt-Act, though not alledged, and had no Relation to the Overt-Act that was alledged, yet if it were to the same Sort of Treason, might be given in Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. The Law says, Ye shall not give Evidence of any Overt-Act that is not expressly mentioned.

L. C. J. It is not urged as an Overt-Act, but as Evidence of an Overt-Act that is alledged; for Instance, the Overt-Act alledged is, That they did meet and consult, shall not they give in Evidence what was said and done at those Meetings, tho' not alledged? Sir George Barclay produced a Scheme at the Globe-Tavern, shall not the producing of that Scheme be given in Evidence? If it may, Why not the giving the List to Harris?

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, it is plain it was Mr. Attorney's Opinion, it could not be given in Evidence, unless it was alledged in the Indictment; because he has particularly alledged the List in Cranburne's Case, in this very Indictment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. I know not what those Gentlemen mean by this Sort of Practice; certainly there never were so many Irregularities committed in any Trial as in this, and now particularly to break in upon the Court in the midst of the Charge.

L. C. J. Nay, nay, if there be any Mistake, let us hear them, that it may be rectified.

L. C. J. Treby. I think we should receive them, to try if they can make it out. But the Objection I do not very well understand yet; for, as I take the Matter to stand, it is alledged in the Indictment, That they had prepared Men and Arms, and Horses, for the Execution of this Design. Now is it not reasonable, or can there by any thing more proper, than to give in Evidence, and prove that the Prisoner had, and delivered to some of the Complices, a List of those Men that were to do it? Why it proves the very Thing alledged; but let us see whether it be so.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, there is no such Thing alledged.

L. C. J. That is strange! Pray see if it be not in the Indictment.

Clerk of Arraignment. (Reads.) 'Conveniebant, proposuerunt, tractaverunt, consultaverunt, consenserunt, & agreeverunt, ad ipsum Dominum Regem nunc ex Infidiis & Dolo percutiendum, Anglice, to assassinate, interficiendum, & murdrandum; & ad execrabilem, horrendam, & detestabilem Assassinationem, Anglice, Assassination, & Interfectionem illam citius exequendum & perpetrandum, postea, scilicet eisdem Die & Anno, ac diversis aliis Diebus & Vicibus, apud Parochiam prædictam in Comitatu prædicto, proditorie tractaverunt, proposuerunt, & consultaverunt de Viis, Modis & Mediis, ac Tempore & Loco, ubi, quando, qualiter & quomodo dictum Dominum Regem sic ex Infidiis facilius interficerent; & consenserunt, agreeverunt & assenserunt, quod quadraginta Homines equestres aut eo circiter, quorum iidem Christopherus Knightley, Robertus Lowick, Ambrosius Rookwood & Carolus Cranburne forent quatuor, & quilibet horum proditorie super se suscepit esse unum, cum Bombardis, Sclopis & Sclopetis, Pulvere bombardico & Globulis plumbeis oneratis, & cum Gladiis, Ensisibus & aliis Armis armati infidiati forent, & essent in Subseffu, Anglice, in Ambush, ad eundem Dominum Regem in Rheda sua, Anglice, his Coach, existentem, quando foris iret invadendum; quodque quidam & compe ens Numerus de Hominibus illis sic armatis in Satellites, Anglice, the Guards, ipsius Domini Regis cum tunc attendentes & secum existentes aggressi forent, et eos expugnarent & devincerent, dum alii eorundem Hominum sic armatorum ipsum Dominum Regem percuterent, interficerent, occiderent & murdrarent.'

Mr. Conyers. And, my Lord, there is Evidence of some of these Forty Men, whose Names were given in a List by Rookwood to Harris?

Mr. Phipps. But now, in Cranburne's Part, the List is expressly alledged as an Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Never talk of Cranburne, we have not him before us now; but what do you say to this of the List given by Rookwood to Harris?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we say this is not Evidence of an Overt-Act, according to this Act of Parliament; which says, No Evidence shall be given of any Overt-Act, that is not expressly alledged in the Indictment; now the Indictment says, they did agree that Forty Horsemen armed, of which the Four named were to be Four, and every one undertook to be one, who should lie in wait to set upon the King in his Coach, and a competent Number should set upon the Guards; and then it says, in order to fulfil this, they did prepare Horses and Arms, and one of them by the Consent of all the rest did carry forward and backward a List, that is, Cranburne; and that particular List is a particular Overt-Act alledged in the Indictment; which makes it plain, they thought it necessary to be particularly alledged by this Act of Parliament, or they could not give any Evidence of it; now the List that Evidence is given of, is supposed to be delivered by the Prisoner to Harris. Now first we say, it is not Evidence that Forty should do it, for they may do it without a List; and next, it is not Evidence of the List that they have mentioned, for that is alledged to be be carried about by Cranburne; and as the Prisoner himself has observed, this List given to Harris is not in the Indictment, and therefore no Evidence can be given of it.

Mr. Conyers. It is an Evidence of that Overt-Act which is expressly alleged in the Indictment, that they met together to consult how to effect this Treason.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, we are in a very strange Case here, if we be not very proper in this Part of our Evidence; the Overt-Act laid is, That the Prisoner met together with others to consult how to assassinate the King, and there the Prisoner among the rest did agree it should be done so and so. 'Tis admitted the Prisoner was there; but, say they, if you only prove that he sat by while there was a general Discourse of such a Matter, but do not prove that he said or did any thing expressing his Assent, that will not amount to a Proof of the Overt-Act laid; and yet, if we go about to prove further, any Act done that manifests his Assent, then they say you go too far, and prove an Overt-Act that is not mentioned in the Indictment. Thus they grant, the Agreement is a sufficient Overt-Act, but object, that being present barely is not a sufficient Proof of his Agreement; then when we go to make Proof of any Thing that is a sufficient Proof of his Agreement, they tell us it is not proper upon this Act of Parliament, because not laid in the Indictment, though his Agreement be laid in the Indictment: And so they would amuse us, rather than make any solid Objection to our Evidence. This Doctrine is certainly very odd, my Lord, and we doubt not will have little Weight with the Court or the Jury.

Mr. Att. Gen. According to this Doctrine, all the Evidence must be put in the Indictment.

L. C. J. They ask you, what this giving this List does prove.

Mr. Att. Gen. His Agreeing at that Meeting to the Conspiracy, and the Execution of it, by giving that List of the Names of them that were to be of his Party, and his own Name as Commander of that Party, this he gives to one that was to be of the Party, and particularly was to be his Aid du Camp, in order to get them ready for the Execution; is not this an Evidence of the Agreement, which is the Overt-Act? No Man in the World can be convicted of Treason, if this Doctrine be true.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, they have not express'd something in the Indictment that has been read, which will make it plain that this is the most proper Evidence of the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment. The Indictment says, they agreed there should be forty Men or thereabouts armed, of which a certain Number should make an Assault upon the King's Coach, while another Part should set upon the Guards: Now the Proof we make is, that Mr. Rookwood the Prisoner was to command a Party that was to set upon the Guards; and in order to it, he gives a List of his Men to Harris, who was to be his Aid du Camp, and bids him get those Men ready; and this was upon the Day that this Matter was to be acted: So that it proves very plainly that Overt-Act that we suggest in the Indictment, that a certain Number of those Men were to assault the King's Person, and another the Guards. And therefore they needed not to have interrupted your Lordship; for this List that Harris speaks of is a very good Proof of the Overt-Act that is laid in the Indictment.

L. C. J. Then, Gentlemen, as to this Matter which they have objected, that this List given on the Day of the intended Assassination, ought not to be allowed as Evidence to prove the Treason, because it is not specially laid in the Indictment, but is by the late Act of Parliament excluded from being proved to convict the Prisoner: Now tho' the Act doth exclude the giving in Evidence of any Overt-Act that is not laid in the Indictment, yet it doth not exclude such Evidence as is proper and fit to prove that Overt-Act that is laid in the Indictment. Therefore the Question is, Whether this giving of the List does not prove some Overt-Act that is alleged in the Indictment? There is in the Indictment an Agreement laid to kill the King; and if that be proved, that's an Overt-Act of this Treason. Now when the Consent and Agreement of Mr. Rookwood to that Design is proved, surely the Proof of his giving a List of Men, is a further Proof that he did agree to it, and then it is very proper to be given in Evidence; for if by the new Statute no one Act can be given in Evidence to prove another, then must not only the Overt-Act, but also the Evidence of that Act be expressed in the Indictment.

Gentlemen, You have heard the Witnesses what they say concerning this Matter. In the first Place, If you do believe that there was such Consults and Meetings, where this intended Assassination of the King was debated and resolved upon, and that Mr. Rookwood was present and did agree to it, that is an Overt-Act: And again, If you are satisfied that there was an Agreement to prepare and provide a Number of Men to set upon the King and his Guards, in the Manner you have heard, and he was concern'd in making this Provision, and was to have a Post, and command a Party in that Attack, that is a further Proof of that Consent and Agreement that is laid in the Indictment.

Gentlemen, I must leave it to you, upon the Evidence that you have heard. If you are satisfied, upon the Testimony of these two Witnesses that have been produced, that Mr. Rookwood is Guilty of this Treason of which he is indicted, in Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King, then you will find him Guilty: If you are not satisfied that he is Guilty, you will acquit him.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, swear an Officer to keep the Jury.

(Which was done.)

L. C. J. Now, if you have any thing to move on behalf of your other Clients, pray do it.

Sir B. Shower. Yes, we have an Exception, but never a one of false Spelling.

L. C. J. If so be it be any such Matter as you can move in Arrest of Judgment, it had best be reserved till after the Verdict.

Sir B. Shower. Our Exceptions will serve, if Occasion be, for Mr. Rookwood in Arrest of Judgment, and they will serve for the others also to prevent the Trouble of the Trial, if we have your Lordship's Opinion that they are good Exceptions.

(Then the Jury withdrew to consider of their Verdict, and after a Quarter of an Hour's staying out return'd, and gave in their Verdict.)

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen of the Jury, Answer to your Names. Samuel Powell. — Mr. Powell. Here.

Cryer. Vous avez.

(And so of the rest.)

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen, are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Ar. Ambrose Rookwood, hold up thy Hand (Which he did). Look upon the Prisoner: How say you? Is he Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the Treason committed?

Foreman. None, to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Ar. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You say that Ambrose Rookwood is Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, but that he had no Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge, and so you say all?

Jury. Yes.

Mr. Powell. We desire we may be discharged.

L. C. J. We cannot do that, till we see whether there be enough upon the other Pannel: We will give you as much Ease as we can: We shall not, I suppose, try the other till the Afternoon, therefore you may take your Ease for the present; but you must be about the Court when the other Trials come on.

(While the Jury was withdrawn, the Court offered to the Counsel for the Prisoners, that they might move what Exceptions they had before the Jury was sworn as to any of the other; which accordingly they did; but that relating to the Case of Mr. Charles Cranburne, in whose Presence, being then at the Bar, the Objections were made, that Part is left to his Trial.)

CLVII. The Trial of CHARLES CRANBURN, for High-Treason, April 21, 1696.

8 WILL. III.

At the Session of Oyer and Terminer for the County of Middlesex, sitting in the Court of King's-Bench, at Westminster.

AFTER the Trial of Ambrose Rookwood was over, while the Jury were withdrawn to consider of their Verdict, the Court proceeded in this Manner:

* Sir John Holt. next? Mr. Attorney, Whom will you have try'd

+ Sir Tho. Trevor. Mr. Att. Gen. + Cranburne, if your Lordship pleases.

Cl. of Ar. Then, Keeper of Newgate, set Charles Cranburne to the Bar.

L. C. J. You, Gentlemen, that are of Counsel for the Prisoner, if you have any Thing to move for your Client, you may move it; but first let the Prisoner be here.

(Then Charles Cranburne was brought to the Bar in Irons.)

L. C. J. Look you, Keeper, you should take off the Prisoners Irons when they are at the Bar, for they should stand at their Ease when they are try'd.

Keeper. My Lord, we have no Instruments here to do it just now.

Cl. of Ar. You may send to the Gate-House, and borrow Instruments.

Mr. J. P. well. It should be done, indeed; they ought to plead at Ease.

L. C. J. Well, go on, Sir Bartholomew Shower.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, before Sir Bartholomew Shower enter upon his Exceptions, unless those Exceptions of his are some of the Particulars mentioned in this Act, he must not do it now, after Plea pleaded, before the Trial; but he must do it in Arrest of Judgment.

L. C. J. Treby. It is true, regularly; but let him use his own Judgment.

L. C. J. It is very true; the Course has not been to allow them to move to quash an Indictment for Treason, or Felony; but it may be done.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sure, it must be only for such Things as they cannot take Advantage of in Arrest of Judgment after the Verdict.

L. C. J. It has not been the Course, but it may be done.

Mr. Att. Gen. Not where there is an Issue join'd, and a Jury return'd to try that Issue; I believe that never was done, nor attempted.

L. C. J. Treby. If there were any Prejudice to the King by it, it were not fit for us to alter the Course; but let us hear what his Exceptions are.

Sir B. Shower. I have several Exceptions; five at least; one of them is within the very Words of the Act, that is, improper Latin; I am sure some of it is so.

L. C. J. Well, let's hear what that is.

Sir B. Shower. It says, Anno Regni dicti Domini Regis nunc Septimo, and Lewis is the last King mentioned before; and so here is no Year of the King of England mention'd. It is a certain Rule, that Relatives must refer to the last Antecedent; and that Rule holds always, unless there be Words that accompany the Relative, which undeniably shew to what it refers.

L. C. J. Ay; but do we call the French King Dominus Rex?

L. C. J. Treby. He would have been so, if he had succeeded in his Invasion, and this Assassination.

Sir B. Shower. In every Indictment, if there be Occasion to mention a former King, it is always nuper Rex, and such a one, naming the Name of the the King, where the present King's Name does intervene, to prevent Confusion; and so in civil Actions it is the same; and so it should have been here.

L. C. J. Ay; but I tell you, it is Dominus Rex nunc, which is our King. Mr. Phipps. It is not said Angliae.

L. C. J. But wherever it is Dominus Rex, we understand it of the King of England, and nobody else. Read the Indictment.

Cl. of Ar. Necnon eundem Dominum Regem ad Mortem & finalem Destructionem porere & addicere, ac subditos suos fideles, & Liberos Homines Hujus Regni Angliae in servitutem intolerabilem & miserrimam Ludovico Regi Galliae subjugare, & mancipare, Decimo Die Februarii, Anno Regni dicti Domini nunc Regis septimo, & diversis aliis Diebus, &c.

L. C. J. Can any Man imagine this to be the French King?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, your Lordship is not to imagine, one Way or other.

Mr. Cowper. In the strictest Sense and Grammar in the World, it must mean King William, and no other. We do not need any Imagination, when in the strictest Construction it is plain who it refers to.

Sir B. Shower. I am sure no Grammar can make it good; nothing but a Supposition can help it.

Mr. Cowper. When it is said Dictus Dominus Rex, if Sir Bartholomew Shower can find out another Dominus Rex in the Indictment, then he may make something of his Objection; but the Dominus is only apply'd to our own King throughout.

L. C. J. Treby. Besides, as to the Rule that Sir Bartholomew Shower mentions, it is that ad proximum Antecedens fiat Relatio nisi impediatur Sententia. That's the Restriction of the Rule, it must relate to the next Antecedent, unless the Sense would be prejudiced; but here if this Construction should be, it would make this Clause to be no better than Nonsense, viz. That the Subjects and Freemen of this Realm were to be brought into intolerable Slavery to Lewis the French King, such a Day in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our Lord the French King.

Sir B. Shower. We say it is little better than Nonsense; I am sure it is loose, and uncertain, and not Grammar, but carries a new Form with it.

L. C. J. No, it is as well as it can be.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, there is another Exception; it is said, Diversis Diebus & Vicibus tam antea quam postea; and then afterwards it says, postea scilicet eodem Decimo Die Februarii; that is repugnant; it is as much as to say, That upon the Tenth of February, and two Days afterwards (to wit) the said Tenth Day of February; that is, after two Days after the Tenth of February, viz. upon the same Tenth Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. That Postea is another Sentence, and relates to other Matters.

Sir B. Shower. It can't in Propriety of Speech be said to be afterwards the same Day.

* Sir John Hawley. Mr. Sol. Gen*. If Sir Bartholomew Shower remembers the Evidence that we have given this Day, he will find it was in Fact so; they met on the Saturday Morning, and afterwards met again the Night of the same Day.

L. C. J. There is nothing in that Objection, sure; it is a common Form; when they tell of different Matters.

Sir B. Shower. Well then, if you will hear the rest which are not of the same Nature, we shall come to what we think a fatal Exception; we say this Indictment of High-Treason being against a Subject born, ought to have had the Words in it, Contra supremum naturalem Ligeum Dominum suum; according to Calvin's Case in the 7th Report, Fol. Septimo.

L. C. J. It is Contra Ligeantiam suae Debitum, is it not?

Sir B. Shower. That won't help it, my Lord, for all that is applicable to an Alien born: And so is the Case in my Lord Dyer, 144. where it is said, That if an Indictment of Treason be against an Alien, you must not put in the Word naturalem; if you do, it will be faulty, because he owes but a local Allegiance to the King of England, and not a natural one. Now we say, there are none of these Prisoners but are Subjects born, and the constant Form in Queen Elizabeth's Time, and Queen Mary's, was to put in the Words Naturalem Dominum, and they cannot shew me any of those Precedents without it. There was Occasion in Tucker's Case to look into this Matter, and search all the Precedents. I have look'd into my Lord Coke's Entries, and all the Precedents; I have seen my Lord of Essex's Indictment, and all the others in Queen Elizabeth's Time, and those of the Traitors in the Powder-Plot, and those of the Regicides, and Tucker's own Indictment itself; all along it is Naturalem Dominum suum; and the Reason for it is, he that is Alien born, you never put in Naturalem Dominum suum, because he owes a double Allegiance; one Natural, to his own King under whose Dominion he was born, and the other Local, to the King in whose Dominions he resides, for he is bound to observe the Laws of the Place where he lives: And if he violate them, he does break the Allegiance that he owes to the Government where he lives, upon Account of the Protection he enjoys under it. But if he be born a Subject of the King of England, he has but one natural Liege-Lord; and he being an Englishman born, the King stands in that Relation to him, as he does to all his native Subjects, but not to Foreigners; and therefore it was thought requisite to be, and has always been inserted into Indictments of Treason against Subjects born. And, my Lord, we think the very Resolution of the Court, afterwards affirm'd in the House of Lords that revers'd Tucker's Attainder, went upon this Opinion, That the Law required naturalem Ligeum Dominum to be put in. There the Exception was, that Contra Debitum Ligeantiae suae was omitted: To which it was objected, that there was Dominum Supremum Naturalem, which was equivalent: No, it was answered, both were requisite, because every Act charg'd in the Indictment ought to be laid against the Duty of his Allegiance. Now in Indictments of Treason, there are certain Words that are essential, because of their Relation between the King and his People. There are certain Forms of Words, which if the constant Practice has been to make Use of them, the Omission is an Error. Those usual Forms ought to be observ'd, and the Want of them will be a fatal Exception; so we think it would be in this Case, as much as if the Word Proditore had been left out; or as if in a Case of Felony and Burglary, the Words Felonice and Burglariter had been left out.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, we take the Practice and Precedents to be the Rule of Law in the Case; and I have look'd over a great many Precedents, besides those that Sir Bartholomew Shower has cited; and I never saw any one Precedent of an Indictment of Treason against a Subject born, without the Word naturalem; and all the Cases cited by Sir Bartholomew Shower are full in the Point. Counter's Case in my Lord Hobart, 271. where 'tis said, that if there be an Indictment against a Subject born, it must be Contra naturalem Dominum; if against an Alien, naturalem must be left out. To say Contra Ligeantiam suae Debitum will not do, it is not enough, for that may be said against an Alien, because he owes a local Allegiance, though not a Natural one. And I take it, upon this Difference, this Indictment is not good.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I do not know how far you will think it proper to enter into this Matter before the Trial.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, I think you had as good speak to it now as at another Time; tho' I must confess it is not so proper in Point of Practice.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, my Lord, then we will speak to it now. The Objection is, That the Words naturalem Dominum is not in the Indictment; which they say is contrary to the usual Form: As to the Precedents, there are a great many where it has been, and I am sure a great many where it has not been; and I am sure for this Six, Seven, or Eight Years last past, it has always been omitted: And, with Submission to your Lordship, it is not at all necessary, if there be Words in the Indictment which shew, that what he did was against the Duty of his Allegiance to his Lawful and Undoubted Lord (which are the Words in this Indictment). It is true, if he be not a Subject born, naturalem cannot be in, because that is contradictory to the Obedience which he owes, for it is not a Natural Allegiance that he owes, but a Local; but if a Man be a Subject born, and commits Treason against the Allegiance that he owes, that is against his natural Allegiance; for whatsoever he does against his Allegiance, he does against his natural Allegiance, and so there's no need to put in the Word naturalem; because he owes no other Allegiance but that; it is sufficient if that be put in which shews its being against his Allegiance. If they could shew that a Subject born has two Allegiances, one that is natural, and the other that is not natural; then if you would prosecute him, you must shew, whether it was against his natural, or against his other Allegiance. But when he has none but a natural Allegiance, certainly against his Allegiance, without putting in natural, will be well enough. It is true, where there is no natural Allegiance, it must be wrong if you put it in, because you put in that Allegiance which he does not owe; but where he is a Subject born, to put in natural Liege-Lord, there is no Ground at all for it; there are Words enow that shew it was against his Allegiance to his Lawful and Undoubted Lord.

L. C. J. Look you, Sir Bartholomew Shower, how does it appear, that these Men are Subjects born? The Matter you go upon does not appear upon the Indictment, and you are not to go off from that.

Sir B. Shower. Every Man is presum'd to be so, unless the contrary appears.

L. C. J. You quote Calvin's Case, and the other Cases that are there put; those are all Cases of Aliens; there is Dr. Lopez's Case: He being an Alien comes into England, and commits High-Treason: Why, say they, how shall we indict this Man? We cannot say it is Contra Naturalem Dominum suum; for he owes no natural Allegiance to the Queen of England; How shall we do to frame a good Indictment against this Man? They considered of this; and they said it will be a good Indictment, to charge him with High-Treason, or any one else, leaving out the Word Naturalem: For if it appear he has committed an Offence against the Laws of the Kingdom, and against the Duty of his Allegiance, which is High-Treason, that's enough. Now as to Tucker's Case, it was reversed for want of the Conclusion, contra Debitum Ligeantiae suae. Those Words are material; for let the Offence be never so much against the Person of the King, as to assassinate him, or levy War against him, yet still if it be not against the Duty of his Allegiance, as it cannot be if he owes him none, it is not High-Treason. And therefore if it be against his Allegiance, whether that Allegiance be natural or local, it is all one, it's enough to make it High-Treason.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In that Case in Dyer, they shew where it was a Fault to put the Word in, but they can shew no Case where it has been adjudged to be a Fault to leave the Word out.

L. C. J. No Doubt it would be a Fault to have that in, Contra Naturalem Dominum suum, where there is only a local Allegiance due.

Mr. Phipps. How does it appear whether it is the one or the other that is due?—L. C. J. It is no Matter whether the one or the other do appear, it is High-Treason be it the one or the other, if it be against the Duty of his Allegiance.

Mr. Phipps. Suppose an Indictment against an Alien were, Contra Naturalem Dominum.

L. C. J. That would be ill, because then you had laid it more specially, and otherwise than really it is, and restrained it where you ought not to do it.

Mr. Phipps. How then, my Lord, shall it appear that he only ow'd a local Obedience?

L. C. J. It may be given in Evidence, That he is an Alien born.

Mr. Sol. Gen. He may plead it in Abatement to the Indictment.

L. C. J. He ought to be acquitted, for you have indicted him of a Crime against his natural Allegiance, when he owes no such. But Allegiance generally comprehends all Sorts of Allegiance, Natural and Local.

Sir B. Shower. How then, my Lord, come all the Lawyers of all Ages to put in those Words in Indictments of High-Treason against Subjects born?

L. C. J. No, I have seen Abundance of Precedents, that have only Contra Ligeantiam suae Debitum generally, and so the most part are; for Allegiance is the Genus, and if that be suggested, all the Species are contain'd under that.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, have they any more?

Sir B. Shower. Yes, we have more.

L. C. J. Well, you shall have them all in time.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, here is another Objection, and that's this: Here is one Fact that they have laid, and that's the 2d Overt-Act in this Indictment, dictament, that they consented and agreed that Forty Men, (whereof these Four were to be Four) but do not lay it to be done traitorously. They say Consenserunt, Agreeverunt & Assenserunt, but not proditorie; and I never saw an Indictment that laid an express Overt-Act, without repeating the Word again. If your Lordship pleases, the Words in the Indictment are thus; as to the first Overt-Act, it is laid in this Manner; Et ad execrabilem Assassinationem illam exequend. at such a Time and such a Place proditorie tractaverunt, proposuerunt & Consultaverunt de viis et modis mediis, &c. and then comes this which we except against; & Consenserunt, Agreeverunt & Assenserunt quod Quadraginta Homines, &c. Now this is a plain distinct Act, and there is no proditorie to it; and if ever they can shew me any Indictment, in which an Overt-Act was laid, of which they gave any Evidence, and it had not the Word proditorie in it, I am very much mistaken. I am sure, I never saw any such. And it is not enough to say, that the Nature of the Thing is such, as that it cannot but be a Treasonable Act; but they must alledge it to be so, by the express Use of that Word which the Law has appointed to express this Crime by. In the Case of an Indictment for Felony, if it be not said Felony, it is not good. They are not to describe that by Circumlocution, which is a particular Crime fixt by Law, they must use the Verba Artis, the Terms of Art, and no other: If your Lordship pleases it may be read.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Let it be read if you please; but take it in English, and it is no more than this, they did traitorously compass the Death of the King, and for that purpose they did traitorously meet, and consult about the Ways and Means, and did consent and agree that forty Men, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Reads, Et ad Execrabilem Horrendam & Detestabilem Assassinationem, Anglice Assassination, & Interfectionem illam Citius exequendum & anno ac Diversi aliis Diebus & vicibus apud parochiam predictam in Comitatu predicto proditorie tractaverunt, proposuerunt & Consultaverunt de viis modis & mediis ac Tempore & Loco ubi quando qualiter & quomodo Dictum Dominum Regem sic ex Infidiis facilius Interficerent.

Sir B. Shower. There is an End of that, now go on.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, Sir Bartholomew, you mistake, there is no End of it, that's done at the same time with that which follows.

Sir B. Shower. No, it is not the same Overt-Act; but let him go on.

Cl. of Arr. Et Consenserunt Agreeverunt & Assenserunt quod quadraginta Homines Equestres.

Sir B. Shower. Well you need read no further for our Objection. We say there wants the Word Proditorie: For there are two Overt-Acts, the one is, that they traitorously did consult of the Ways and Means how to kill the King, and that Overt-Act we agree to be well laid: But then it says they consented and agreed that there should be Forty Men, whereof these Four should be Four, but does not say they traitorously agreed; are not these distinct Acts?

Mr. Phipps. Surely, My Lord, they are distinct Acts; for this Part of the Indictment upon which Sir Bartholomew grounds his Objection, is that Overt-Act of which the List in Mr. Rookwood's Case was urged by the King's Counsel, and agreed by the Court to be an Evidence.

Then the Jury against Mr. Rookwood came in, and delivered in their Verdict, as it is in his Trial, then afterwards the Court went on thus.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, the Objection is, that Proditorie is not inserted into that particular Clause of the Indictment, which shews their particular Agreement that there should be forty Men, whereof the Four named in the Indictment were to be Four. Now your Lordship observes how the Indictment runs; it is for Compassing and Imagining the Death and Destruction of the King; and it sets forth for this purpose, that to effect this Compassing and Imagining, they Proditorie tractaverunt & Consultaverunt de viis mediis & Modis how they should kill the King. Now that which immediately follows after is, the particular Method and Means that were agreed upon, that is, that there should be forty Men. Now this is the strangest Suggestion that ever was, when we have set forth, that traitorously they did so agree of the Ways and Means, and then set forth the particular Means, that here must be proditorie again to that. This is such a Construction as I cannot but admire how it could come into any one's Head. It is Part of the Sentence; for the other Part, as we have laid it, is not compleat before: It may be it might be sufficient without setting forth the particular Ways and Means; but when it is set forth it is Part of the Sentence, and refers to the first Beginning.

L. C. J. Aye, sure it does.

Mr. Att. Gen. I cannot tell what they would have, unless they would have us repeat the Word proditorie in every Line.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Or before every Verb.

Sir B. Shower. No; but I think it ought to be repeated at every Overt-Act.

Mr. Conyers. If your Lordship pleases, after that they have set forth that this was the particular Method and Way agreed upon at their Consultation, that forty Horsemen or thereabouts should go about it, of which the Persons indicted were to be Four, it goes on, Et Quilibet eorum proditorie super se suscepit esse unum, there it is put in, and it appears to be as particular as possible can be.

Mr. Cowper. Sir Bartholomew Shower says, that when we have alledg'd that they did traitorously treat, propose and consult of the Means and Ways of killing the King, there we have done the Sentence, and made that one Overt-Act. Now how is the Sentence done? The next Word is a Conjunction Copulative, & Consenserunt, &c. And what is the Use of a Conjunction Copulative, but to convey the Force of the Words in a former Sentence to the Sentence following, and to prevent the Repetition of every Word in the subsequent Sentence that was in the Precedent? But it is plain, they are both one and the same Overt-Act, and these subsequent Words are only an Explanation, more particularly of the Overt-Act set forth in the precedent Words.

Sir B. Shower. In Answer to that that has been said, if they shew me any Precedent, where an Indictment has been for High-Treason, setting forth several Overt-Acts, and not the Word proditorie set to every Overt-Act, then they answer my Objection. If the Word Quod had come in, that would have made them distinct to be sure; and I think they are as distinct Acts now; suppose they had concluded at the End of the Word Interficerent, that had been a good Overt-Act; I am sure they will agree to that: And if it be so, then the other is a good Overt-Act too. For it is a distinct Thing from that which was a perfect Sentence before; and it either requires a Likewise, or the Word Proditorie must be repeated. They have not so much as said similiter Consenserunt, or simili modo; there is an (&) indeed, but that does not so couple the Sentences together, as not to make them distinct Acts. There are several Ets thorough the whole Indictment, but that does not, as Mr. Cowper would have it, couple all together to make one Overt-Act.

Vol. IV.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, if what Mr. Cowper says be allow'd, (viz.) that the (&) makes it one intire Sentence, then there is no Overt-Act at all; for after the Treason alledg'd, the Clauses are coupled to one another by an Et, and consequently, by Mr. Cowper's Way of arguing, the whole Indictment is but one intire Sentence.

L. C. J. I do not understand your Meaning as to that; they tell you Proditorie is alledged to the Consulting, Contriving and Agreeing, then they tell you what was the subject Matter of that Contrivance and Agreement, to assassinate the King, and in order to that they agreed there should be 40 Men; is not that good enough, without Proditorie to every Line?

Sir B. Shower. No, it is not said in Ordine ad, there is no such Thing; but only they did consult of the Ways and Means, and did agree that 40 Horsemen should do it, and afterwards did agree to provide Horses and Instruments of War. Now that being with a Quodque, they say makes a new Overt-Act; but I cannot understand why Quodque is not as much a Copulative as Et, and the one should not have the same effect as the other.

L. C. J. First, it tells you there was a Consult and Agreement to assassinate the King, and for the Accomplishment of the said Assassination; afterwards eisdem die & Anno Proditorie Tractaverunt & Consultaverunt de viis & modis, how they should kill the King.

Sir B. Shower. That is one Overt-Act, say we, and there you should stop.

L. C. J. Et Consenserunt & Agreeverunt quod quadraginta Homines, &c. it is all at the same time, and must be intended the same Consult and Contrivance; that they consulted of the Ways and Means, and then agreed so many Men should be provided.

Mr. Phipps. No, My Lord, we say that is another Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Treby. It seems to me to be a specifying and particularising the Ways and Means, that they had consulted of, and concluded on.

Sir B. Shower. If it had been a specifying, it had been much better to put in either then and there, or that this was the Result of the Consultation.

L. C. J. Treby. It does seem to me so, that it was the Result of the Consultation, and it is well enough.

L. C. J. You had better have sav'd these kind of Exceptions till the Trial was over.

Sir B. Shower. But, my Lord, if there be one Overt-Act ill laid, I submit it whether they can give any Evidence of that Overt-Act.

L. C. J. Treby. No doubt of that, they cannot; but we think it is as well laid as it could be laid.

L. C. J. Truly I am not well satisfied, that it is necessary after you have laid the Proditorie, as to the particular Treason, to lay it again to the Overt-Act. For the Overt-Act is but Evidence of the Treason: The Treason itself lies in the Compassing, which is an Act of the Mind.

L. C. J. Treby. You cannot Indict a Man of Treason for Assassinating or Killing the King, but you must in every such Case frame the Indictment upon the Article for Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King; which must be laid to be done traitorously. Then, when afterwards you say the Person accused did wound him, or imprison him, or consult and agree to assassinate him, or did actually assassinate him, these are but so many Overt-Acts of compassing the Death; and you having first said that he did Proditorie compass and imagine the King's Death, you have thereby shewn that you charge him with a greater Offence than Felony (which my Lord Coke says is the Use of the Word Proditorie); and that being thus done, I do not apprehend it to be necessary that you should add Proditorie to all the rest of the following Particulars; for they are only external Discoveries of the inward Treason; and more properly deemed to be Evidence of the Treason, than to be the Treason itself.

L. C. J. The Treason is consummate in the Intention; besides the Words of the Statute make that the Treason, not the Overt-Act, that is but Evidence, and so it was held, (not upon this Exception, but upon the Reason that my Lord speaks of) in the Case of the Regicides of King Charles the First, That the Indictment should not be for killing the King, but for compassing and imagining his Death, and the Killing was alledg'd as an Overt-Act.

Sir B. Shower. It must be so if it were for levying of War.

L. C. J. Most true; for levying the War is the Treason; but in this Case we think it is no Exception.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then let us have the Fifth.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, here is another Thing. It is a Question whether there be any Overt-Act presented by the Jury at all. The Indictment says, Juratores pro Domino Rege presentant, that they as false Traytors did compass the Death of the King and the Slaughter of his Subjects, and they did meet, and consult, and agree how to do it, Et iidem Christophorus Knightley and the rest, to fulfil their said traitorous Intentions and Imaginations did, afterwards, the tenth of February, buy Arms and Horses. Now our Objection is, That it does not appear, that any one of these Overt-Acts are the Presentment of the Jury; with Submission they ought to have begun it again, either with a Quodque, or something that should have referred it to the first, Juratores presentant, or else they must have begun quite again, with a Juratores Ulterius presentant, and not have coupled them as this is with an Et. The most Forms begin with an ulterius presentant, but here we find no Overt-Act is so introduced. They might present Part, and not present the other Part, for any Thing that does appear. Every Thing ought to be laid positively, as the Jury's Dictum; it may be only the Clerk's Saying, and not the Jury's, for any Thing that does appear. Your Lordship remembers the Case of the King and Trebridge, upon a Writ of Error to reverse a Judgment for erecting and continuing a Cottage against the Form of the Statute; now Contra formam Statuti was in the Beginning of the Indictment, but not in the Conclusion; to the erecting but not the continuing. And though there was there Juratores ulterius dicunt, it was not super Sacramentum suum, and they did not say, he did continue it against the Statute; and there being no formal Presentment, that he maintain'd the Cottage notwithstanding the Act, Et did not so couple it to the first Part, as to make it a good Presentment. So we say in this Case, this is a Fault, and different from all the common Forms; there ought to be a direct Presentment of each Overt Act, and not coupled by an Et. For Et will not do it; for it is a distinct Overt Act every one, and should have been Et quod Consultaverunt, quodque Agreeverunt, that a certain Number should do so and so; and to be sure, it should have been so at the last Overt Act, which is only, Et iidem Christophorus Knightley, &c. did buy Arms and Horses. Now this last Et, being a loose Conjunction Copulative, in common Sense ought to refer to that which they had agreed upon, for that is last mention'd there, and the natural Sense leads thither, and not to the Beginning of the Bill Juratores presentant quod.

Mr. Phipps. I shall not trouble your Lordship further; they ought to have put in a Quodque, or an Uterius presentant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Where would you have the Quodque, or the Uterius presentant?

Mr. Phipps. Either to every Overt Act, or at least to that last.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Indictment sets forth, that they committed such and such a Treason: Their Objection is, that Quodque is not put into every Overt Act; and our Answer is, that the first Quod governs all that relates to that Treason. It may be, if there were two distinct Treasons in the Indictment, when you come to set forth the Second Treason, you should say Juratores ulterius presentant the Second Treason; but the Overt Acts to prove the same Treason, are all Parts of that Treason, and make but one Species of Treason, which is the Imagining the Death of the King. There's the Treason; and to bring it to pass, they did so and so: This, my Lord, must be Part of the Finding of the Jury as well as the Treason itself, of which these are the Overt Acts. But then if you will lay the levying of War in the same Indictment, then it may be you must say Juratores ulterius presentant quod, &c. But it had been a strange Absurdity to say, Juratores ulterius presentant, such and such Overt Acts: For the Overt Act is not a further Indictment, but only a setting forth that which is Evidence, upon which they found the Indictment for Treason.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What the Indictment says, is as direct Affirmation as can be all along of the Presentment of the Jury, that the Prisoner and others did compass and imagine the Death of the King; and to bring it about, they did consult together, and did agree to make use of such and such Means, and were to have a Party of 40 Men, and they bought Arms and Horses. Now it does not repeat quodque, or ulterius presentant quod, to every one of those Sentences, that they did so and so, and that they did so and so. Now I would fain know the Difference between Saying, and they did such a Thing, and Saying, and that they did such a Thing. That's all the Difference that they think to overturn this Indictment for. The omitting of a Juratores ulterius presentant, certainly is nothing; for the first Presentment runs through the whole Indictment, and there does not need an Uterius.

Sir B. Shower. Certainly there should have been a Quodque at least.

L. C. J. No indeed, I think it is better as it is, than as you would have it; because the first Quod goes through the whole, That in order thereto he did so and so; would you have it said Et quod in order thereto he did so and so; but tho' that may be good Sense, I think it is not so good as the other. This Indictment is for one Sort of Treason, and that is, for Compassing the Death of the King: and it is, I think, more proper to have but one Quod, than to have more; for it makes the whole Indictment more entire. As to the Juratores ulterius presentant, that is never proper, where the Species of Treason is the same: For indeed if there had been two distinct Treasons, the one for compassing the Death of the King, and the other for levying of War, in that Case you must bring it in by ulterius presentant: Because they are two several Offences, though compris'd in one Bill, and they are in Law as two Indictments. And so it is in the Case that you mentioned of Cottages: It is one Offence to erect a Cottage, and another Offence to continue a Cottage, and they are to have several Punishments; and because they there jumbled them both together in one Indictment, that Indictment was held to be nought: For by Law, the Indictment for erecting a Cottage, ought to conclude contra formam Statuti; and then the Jury must begin again, Et ulterius presentant quod the Cottage was continu'd against the Form of the Statute; because they are several Offences. But here the High-Treason is but one and the same Offence, and the other Things are but Overt Acts to manifest this Treason, the Compassing the Death of the King; and truly I think it is better as it is.

Mr. Phipps. I have seen several Precedents of Indictments, where the several Overt Acts were to the same High-Treason, but still they had each an ulterius presentant.

Mr. Att. Gen. I believe it is hard to find many Indictments in the same Words: I am sure all are not.

Sir Edward Ward. L. C. Baron. Is it not as great an Affirmation to say, and they did such a Thing, as to say, and that they did such a Thing?

L. C. J. I cannot reconcile it to my Reason, but it should be as good Sense without that as with it.

L. C. J. Treby. In a long Deed it begins, This Indenture Witnesseth that the Party granted so and so, and the Party covenants thus and thus; and so it goes on commonly, without renewing the Word That to the subsequent Clauses: But yet the first Expression (This Indenture witnesseth that) governs the whole Deed, though it be many Skins of Parchment.

L. C. J. If you begin with an Indenture, you begin, That it witnesseth so and so; without renewing, unless it be a very distinct Thing.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we think that Similitude makes for us. A.B. covenants so and so in a Conveyance, and then further, that so and so.

L. C. J. But there you refrain that in the Beginning of the Covenant to every particular in that Covenant.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will your Lordship please to call the Jury now?

L. C. J. Have you a Mind to go on with the Trial, or to go to Dinner? Mr. Att. Gen. I believe your Lordship can try but one more to Night, and that may be as well after Dinner as before.

L. C. J. Well then, adjourn till 5 a-Clock, and in the mean time, you Keeper, knock off the Prisoners Fetters.

Keeper. They shall, my Lord.

Then the Court adjourned till 5 a-Clock in the Afternoon, it being then about 3.

Post Meridiem, the 21st of April, 96. The Court returned, and was resum'd about 6 in the Evening.

Cl. of Ar. Keeper of Newgate, bring Charles Cranburne to the Bar. (Which was done.) Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did) Those good Men that you shall hear called and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; and therefore if you will challenge them or any of them, your Time is to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Cranburne. My Lord, I humbly desire I may have Pen, Ink and Paper.

Court. Aye, Aye. (He had them.)

Cl. of Ar. Where is George Ford?

Cryer. Vous Avez.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Underhill.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Withers.

Cranburne. I challenge him.

Mr. Phipps. If your Lordship pleases, those that were of the last Jury I hope shall not be call'd of this Jury; this Prisoner being tried upon the same Indictment the last was.

L. C. J. If they be not, it shall be in Ease to them, but it is not in Favour of you.

Mr. Phipps. We humbly conceive, having given their Verdict upon the same Indictment, they are not such indifferent Persons as the Law intends they should be, and think it is good Reason they should not serve upon this Jury.

L. C. J. What though it be upon the same Indictment? The Evidence is not the same; for they are distinct Offences.

Mr. Phipps. I do not know whether it be a good Cause of Challenge, but submit it to your Lordship.

L. C. J. Well, you may doubt of it if you please, and try the Exception.

Cl. of Ar. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez. If any one can inform my Lords the King's Justices of Oyer and Terminer, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney-General, before this Inquest be taken, of the High-Treason whereof the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted, let them come forth and they shall be heard; for now the Prisoner stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance: And all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or else they forfeit their Recognizance.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Do you think we shall be able to try the other to Night?

Mr. Att. Gen. That is according as this holds, my Lord.

L. C. J. I speak it for the Ease of the Jury, that they might be dispatched, and not attend another Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. I doubt we cannot try any more than this to Night.

L. C. J. Well, it is no great Matter, it will be but a Morning's Work; it may be too great a Stress and a Hurry to do any more to Night; and therefore we will discharge the Jury for to Night, those of them that are not sworn; but we will be here To-morrow Morning by Seven a-Clock; and therefore pray, Gentlemen, attend early.

Cl. of Ar. C. Cranburne, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of Charles Cranburne, late of the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middlesex, Yeoman; for that he, with Christopher Knightley, late of the same Parish and County, Gentleman, Robert Lowick, late of the same Parish and County, Gentleman, and Ambrose Rookwood, late of the same Parish and County, Gentleman, the Fear of God in their Hearts not having, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, but being mov'd and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, against the most Serene, most Illustrious, most Clement, and most Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord, William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. their Supreme, True, Rightful, Lawful, and Undoubted Lord, the Cordial Love, and the true and due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance which every Faithful Subject of our said Lord the King that now is, towards him our said Lord the King shou'd bear, and of Right ought to bear, withdrawing, and wholly to extinguish, intending and contriving, and with all their Strength, purposing, designing and conspiring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our said Lord the King that now is of Right, duly, happily, and very well established, altogether to subvert, change and alter; as also our said Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to put and bring, and his Faithful Subjects, and the Freeman of this Kingdom of England into intolerable and most miserable Slavery to Lewis the French King to subjugate and enthrall, the 10th Day of February in the 7th Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traitorously, did compass, imagine and contrive, purpose, design and intend our said Lord the King that now is, to Slay, Kill, and Murder, and a miserable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of him our said Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England to make and cause; and their said most wicked, impious, and devilish Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Contrivances and Purposes aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, they the said Christopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, and very many other false Traitors to the Jurors unknown; afterwards, to wit, the same Tenth Day of February, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elsewhere in the same County, falsely, maliciously, advisedly, secretly, traitorously, and with Force and Arms, did meet, propose, treat, consult, consent, and agree, him our said Lord the King that now is, by lying in wait and wile, to Assassinate, Kill and Murder: And that execrable, horrid, and detestable Assassination and Killing the sooner to execute and perpetrate; afterwards, to wit, the same Day and Year, and diverse other Days and Times, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, traitorously did treat, propose, and consult of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, how, and in what manner our said Lord the King so by lying in wait the more easily they might Kill: And did consent, agree, and assent, that Forty Horsemen, or thereabout (of whom they the said Christopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, should be four; and every one of them traitorously took upon himself to be one) with Guns, Muskets, and Pistols, charged with Gun-powder and Lead-en Bullets, and with Swords, Rapiers, and other Weapons Armed, should lie in wait, and be in Ambush our said Lord the King, in his Coach being, when he should go abroad, to set upon; and that a certain and competent Number of those Men so armed, upon the Guards of our said Lord the King, then attending him, and being with him, should set upon, and them should fight with and overcome; whilst others of the same Men so armed, him our said Lord the King should Assassinate, Slay, Kill, and Murder. And they the said Christopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, the Treasons, and all their treasonable Intentions, Purposes and Contrivances aforesaid to execute, perform, fulfil, and bring to effect, afterwards, (to wit) the aforesaid Tenth Day of February, in the Seventh Year above said, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, divers Horses, and very many Arms, Guns, Pistols, Swords and Rapiers, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and Warlike Things, and Military Instruments, falsely, maliciously, secretly and traitorously did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure; and to be bought, obtained, gathered together, and procured did cause, with that Intent them in and about the detestable, horrid, and execrable Assassination, Killing, and Murder of our said Lord the King that now is, as aforesaid, to be us'd, employ'd, and bestow'd: And the same Premises the more safely and certainly to execute, do, and perpetrate, the aforesaid Christopher Knightley, with one Edward King (late of High-Treason, in contriving and conspiring the Death of our said Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted), by the Consent and Assent of divers of the Traitors and Conspirators aforesaid, the aforesaid Tenth Day of February, in the Seventh Year aforesaid, traitorously did go, and came unto the Place proposed, where such intended Assassination, Killing, and Murdering of our said Lord the King, by lying in wait, should be done, perpetrated and committed, to view, see, and observe the Convenience and Fitness of the same Place for such lying in wait, Assassination, and Killing, there to be done, perpetrated and committed; and that Place so being seen and observed, afterwards, to wit, the same Day and Year, his Observations thereof to several of the said Traitors and Conspirators did relate and impart, to wit, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid; and the said Charles Cranburne the same Day and Year there, in order to the same execrable, horrid, and detestable Assassination and Killing of our said Lord the King, by the Traitors and Conspirators aforesaid, the more readily and boldly to execute, perpetrate, and commit, advisedly, knowingly, and traitorously did bear and carry among divers of these Traitors and Conspirators forward and backward from some to others of them, a List of the Names of divers Men of them who were designed and appointed our said Lord the King, so as aforesaid, by lying in wait, to Kill and Murder, against the Duty of his Allegiance, and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided. Upon this Indictment he hath been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to inquire, whether he be guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty: if you find him guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since: If you find him not guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him guilty: if you find him not guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more: And hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mountague. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; this is an Indictment of High-Treason that is found against four Persons; but the particular Treason against the Prisoner at the Bar, is for Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King, and endeavouring to subvert the Government, and enslave the Nation to Lewis the French King; And the Indictment sets forth, that the Prisoner at the Bar did for this purpose meet and consult with several false Traitors to the King and Government, of the Ways, Manner, and Means how, and the Time and Place when and where to Assassinate the King; and at length they agreed that forty Horsemen should go together, and set upon the King in his Coach, as he returned from Hunting; some to attack the Coach, while others set upon the Guards. The Indictment does further charge him with getting Horses and Arms, and particularly with carrying a List of the Assassimators from one to another. These are the particular Things charged in the Indictment, and to this Indictment he has pleaded not guilty; if we prove the Fact, Gentlemen, we don't doubt your Justice.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; the Prisoner at the Bar, Charles Cranburne, is indicted for High-Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death of the King. Gentlemen, the Overt-Acts laid in the Indictment to prove the Prisoner guilty are, That he was at several Meetings and Consultations about the Manner of putting this Design in Execution; at which Meetings it was agreed, that there should be about forty Horsemen in Number prepar'd, and arm'd for that Purpose, and they did provide Horses and Arms for that very Thing, and did agree to put it in Execution.

Gentlemen, the Evidence that you will hear produced against the Prisoner at the Bar will be of this Nature. You will hear from the Witnesses, that about Christmas last, or the Beginning of January, Sir George Barclay did come over from France from the late King James, to whom he was an Officer in his Guards, with a Commission for attacking the Prince of Orange, or levying War upon his Person. He came over about that Time, and several Troopers of the late King James's Guards, to assist him in that barbarous Conspiracy. When Sir George Barclay came over, he did acquaint with this Design several Persons in England, that he thought proper to be Accomplices with him in it; particularly Capt. Porter, Mr. Charnock, Sir William Parkyns, and several others whose Names you will hear of, and they had several Meetings about it the Beginning ginning of February, at Capt. Porter's Lodgings, at the Nagg's-head in Covent-Garden, at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, at the Globe Tavern in Hulton-Garden, and several other Places where they consulted in what manner they might attempt and accomplish this bloody Design.

Gentlemen, you will hear, that at these Meetings it was propos'd, that they should do it by Ambuscade as the King came from Richmond a Hunting, whither he used to go upon Saturdays: Others were for doing it on this Side the Water. And so their Opinions being divided, it was thought necessary to find out and settle which was the best Place; and in Order thereunto they employ'd Capt. Porter, Mr. Knightley, and Mr. King (who was executed) to view the Ground; and accordingly they went, and pitch'd upon the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green for this Purpose, as the most convenient Place: And having so done, they came back, and gave an Account to those that had appointed to meet 'em, to hear the Success of their Expedition, at the Nagg's-Head in Covent-Garden; and in that Place, you will find by the Evidence, that those Persons who were the Heads of the Conspiracy, undertook to find their several Proportions of Men, for whom they would undertake that would go with them, and be concern'd in this Design. Sir George Barclay was to furnish about twenty. He had the Command of the Troopers that came from France, and those other Officers that came thence were under him. Capt. Porter was to furnish seven, Charnock was to furnish eight, Sir William Parkyns was to furnish five Horses and three Men, and, I think, Lowick was to furnish some more: In the whole Number they reckon'd there should be about forty.

It will appear, Gentlemen, that the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Cranburne, was one of the Men that Capt. Porter undertook to get, and engage in this Design; and accordingly Capt. Porter did acquaint Mr. Cranburne with it; and he did undertake to be one, and to be ready to go with him, and be concerned in this Assassination. You will find he was acquainted with it about the 14th of February, the Day before the first Time that they intended to assault the King: Then he did undertake and agree to prepare himself against the next Day. The next Day, which was the 15th of February, they had several Meetings, and they were making Preparation in Order to go out. It happen'd, by great Providence, his Majesty did not go abroad that Day, and thereupon they dispers'd themselves; but they had Meetings afterwards, at which Meetings the Prisoner was present with Capt. Porter, Mr. Pendergrafs, La Rue, and several others that were concerned in the Conspiracy, particularly the 21st of February, the Day before the second Time they were to have put this in Execution. Capt. Porter being at the Sun-Tavern, with several other Gentlemen, and they resolving to have it executed the next Day, if the King went abroad; Capt. Porter sent for Cranburne, and Keyes that was executed, and Kendrick and Sherborn, four of those that he had undertaken for, (of whom, I say, Cranburne, the Prisoner at the Bar, was one) and then he acquainted 'em that they were resolv'd to go on with it the next Day. And then they agreed to be in a Readiness accordingly. The next Day the Prisoner, with some others, met at Mr. Porter's, where they were preparing to go out and attack the King, and they had several Discourses about the Ways and Means of doing it; and particularly Capt. Porter at that Time said, that he had a very good Gun that held about six or eight Bullets, and that Mr. Pendergrafs was to have, who was to attack the Coach, and shoot into the Coach: Mr. Cranburne was there present at that Time, and Mr. Cranburne was employ'd particularly by Capt. Porter to carry a List that Porter writ of the Names of several Men that were to act in it under him, and this he was to carry to Charnock; Porter writ it and gave it him, and he carry'd it, with Directions to bring it back with the List of the Names of Mr. Charnock's Men. Cranburne did accordingly at that Time carry the List of the Names to Capt. Charnock, and brought it back, with an additional List from Capt. Charnock, of his Men.

At that Time, you will hear further, when Cranburne brought the List, he brought an Account that he heard the King did certainly go abroad: For Mr. Charnock had Intelligence so from Chambers, who lay at Kensington to get Intelligence: At which there was very great Rejoycing among all that were present at that Time, hoping they should have an Opportunity to put this execrable Design in Execution; and so they prepar'd all of 'em to go out. There were several Inns in Turnham-Green and Brentford, and thereabouts, and they were to be placed two or three in an Inn, that they might be ready to get together when Time should serve. It happen'd the King did not go abroad that Day neither, there being some Discovery of this Design, and so they did disperse themselves, as apprehending it was discovered.

Gentlemen, it will appear by several Witnesses, that the Prisoner at the Bar was engaged in this horrid treasonable Design, and was to have acted a Part in it. We will call our Witnesses that will make the Particulars out to you, and we do not question but you'll do what is right. First, call Capt. Porter.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, if you please, Capt. Porter, give the Court and the Jury an Account what you know of this wicked intended Assassination, and what Share the Prisoner at the Bar had in it?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, before this wicked Assassination was on Foot, the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Cranburne, was employ'd by me to buy Arms; I used to give him Money to go to the Brokers to buy Arms at second-hand, and he brought a Sword-Cutler to me, of whom I bought about twenty Swords. And when Sir George Barclay, came into England, and this Business was resolv'd upon, I acquainted him with the Design, and promis'd to mount him. He never was at any of the Meetings with Capt. Charnock, Sir George Barclay, or Sir William Parkyns; but he went to look for a Horse, and was ready both Saturdays to go along with me. On Saturday the 22d I sent him with a Message to Sir William Parkyns, for the Note for the two Horses, which he had promis'd me to furnish me with, out of his five that he was to furnish; he came back again, and told me that there was a Messenger came and said that the King did go out, and he knew where to have the two Horses; that Mr. Charnock was afraid we should not have the full Number of Men, and desired me to send him the Names of my Men; I did write a List of the Names of my Men, and I went afterwards to the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden, whither he was to come to me; he did so, and he brought back the List of my Men, with the List of Mr. Charnock's Men written underneath it, and at the same Time News was brought that the King did not go abroad that Day.

L. C. J. You say, that before the Assassination was set on foot, you employed him to buy Arms and Horses?

Capt. Porter. My Lord, I acquainted him with it the Friday before the first Saturday.

L. C. J. You said before the Assassination you employed him to buy Arms: When was that?

Capt. Porter. I said before the Assassination was on foot I employed him to buy Arms. I told him I was to be a Captain in Colonel Parker's Regiment, and promis'd to make him my Quarter-Master.

L. C. J. How long ago was this? Was it a Week before the Assassination was on foot?

Capt. Porter. He has known of my being a Captain in Colonel Parker's Regiment this two Years.

Mr. Att. Gen. I do doubt my Lord, he does not distinguish the Times when he bought the Arms, and when the Assassination was.

L. C. J. Yes, yes, he does now; I misapprehended him at first, and thought he said he had employed him to buy Arms a Week before the Assassination was on foot; but he says it was a longer Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire, my Lord, he may be ask'd what Time he bought Arms before this Assassination: When was the last Time he bought Arms?

Capt. Porter. It was several Months before the Assassination.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was it within a Year before it?

Capt. Porter. Yes; I believe it was within a Year. I gave him several Times Money for that purpose, in all above ten Pounds, and he told me, one with another, he had bought ten Case of Pistols, and kept them in the House till there were Occasion.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long ago is it?

Capt. Porter. I believe about a Year; within a Year.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did you first acquaint him with the Assassination?

Capt. Porter. Presently after Sir George Barclay acquainted me with it; I sent to him, to desire him to get the Pistols clean and ready.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you tell him of the Design?

Capt. Porter. I told him there was a Design on foot, and I would tell him more when I saw him next; and I desired him to get the Swords from the Sword-Cutlers, and the Pistols clean and ready. And I met him afterwards, and told him of the Design, and that we intended to do it on Saturday the fifteenth; and he engaged to be ready and make one. On the Friday before the twenty-second he went with me to the Cock-pit, and there we met with one Mr. Gunn, and I ask'd him if he knew where any good Hackney-Horses might be had? He said he believed he did; and I sent Cranburne with him, and he came back, and told me he had found two or three out in Bloomsbury.

L. C. J. Look ye, Capt. Porter, you must not speak so fast, it is impossible to understand so much Matter as you deliver without distinguishing of Times. You said, that some long Time before the Assassination was on foot you sent him to buy Arms; for what Purpose were those Arms?

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he has told you---

L. C. J. Pray, let me hear it from him again.

Capt. Porter. I say my Lord, he knew of my being a Captain in Colonel Parker's Regiment this two Years.

L. C. J. But what were those Arms for that he bought?

Capt. Porter. To be ready against King James landed, which was designed several Times.

L. C. J. Why, now you make the Matter clear to me.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, that is not the Thing we go upon, that is but introductory to the Business that we are now Trying. Therefore we desire to know of him: Captain Porter, when did you first acquaint Cranburne of the Assassination of the King?

Capt. Porter. As soon as Sir George Barclay acquainted me with it, and desired me get what Men I could to effect it. I sent for Cranburne to my Lodgings in Norfolk-street, and he came to me one Morning; and I told him there was a Design on foot, and I would tell him more of it afterwards.

Mr. Sol. Gen. When was it that Sir George Barclay acquainted you with it?

Capt. Porter. About the latter End of January.

Mr. Att. Gen. And what said he to it when you acquainted him with it?

Capt. Porter. He did agree to go with me, and I promis'd to furnish him with Horse and Arms; and on Friday before the fifteenth I sent him with three Case of Pistols to Sir William Parkyns, to furnish the three Men he was to mount with his own Horses.

L. C. J. Who was to have those three Case of Pistols?

Capt. Porter. Sir William Parkyns was; and he carried them to Sir William Parkyns's.

Mr. Att. Gen. How long was this, do you say, before the Assassination was to have been?

Capt. Porter. It was Friday before the fifteenth.

Mr. Att. Gen. That was before the first Time that it was to have been done?

Capt. Porter. Yes; and Friday before the last, I sent him to look after the Horses that Gunn said he believed he could help me to, and he came to me to the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and told me he and Jeffery Gunn had found three Horses in Bloomsbury, and I came out of the Room where I was with Sir George Barclay and others, and there was Kendrick, and Keyes, and Cranburne, and I told them we were resolv'd to put it in Execution the next Day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, pray what Discourse had you with him the next Day?

Capt. Porter. The next Day, the 22d, he came to my Lodging at Maiden-Lane, and I sent him to Sir William Parkyns for a Note for the two Horses, that I was to mount of his: He came back and told me, he knew where to have them, and that Capt. Charnock was afraid we should not have our Complement of Men, and desired me to send him an Account what Men I could bring, which I did by Mr. Cranburne, and being to go to the Blue-Posts, ordered him to bring it me thither, and he did bring it back to me to the Blue-Posts, with Captain Charnock's List underneath.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Captain Porter, was there any Body present when you sent the List, and the Prisoner brought it back to you?

Capt.

Capt. Porter. Yes, there was Mr. De la Rue, and Captain Pendergrafs, and Mr. King, I know of none else.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray do you remember what Healths were drunk after you heard the King was not to go abroad?

Capt. Porter. I don't remember what Healths were drunk that Day particularly; but whether it were Thursday or Friday, (I cannot tell particularly the Day) We drank a Health to the Squeezing of the Rotten Orange upon the next Saturday.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who was present that Day when that Health was drunk?

Capt. Porter. Mr. Cranburne was there present at that Time, and did drink the Health.

Mr. Cowper. Pray, Sir, did he meet you by Appointment on Saturday the 15th, or was it by Accident?

Capt. Porter. By Appointment, as all the rest did, to get ready, as all the rest did, to go upon the Design; and so it was both Days.

Sir B. Shower. If they have done with Mr. Porter, we would ask him a Question or two for the Prisoner: We desire to know when it was that those Arms were bought that he talks of? For we must acknowledge that Mr. Cranburne heretofore went upon several Messages for Capt. Porter; When was that buying of Arms?

Capt. Porter. I tell you, I cannot exactly tell the Month.

Mr. Cranburne. Do you remember the Year?

Capt. Porter. I believe it was less than a Year before the Assassination was on Foot.

Mr. Cranburne. If you remember, Sir, it was a Month before Colonel Parker was put in the Tower.

Capt. Porter. It was several Times; I cannot tell the particular Times.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I desire to know, when he first communicated this Design to Mr. Cranburne? and who was by, and where it was?

Capt. Porter. I told you I sent for Mr. Cranburne one Day in the Week before the 15th, and he came to me at my Lodging in Norfolk-street, and I acquainted him that Sir George Barclay was come, and there was such a Design on Foot; and I desired him to get those Pistols that he had of mine ready, and cleaned, that they might be ready for the Execution.

Sir B. Shower. What Day was that?

Capt. Porter. One Day in the Week before the 15th.

Mr. Cranburne. Did you ever name Sir George Barclay to me in your Life?

Capt. Porter. Yes, I did; I told you he was come from France.

Mr. Cranburne. Where was that, at Mr. —?

Capt. Porter. In Norfolk-street, where I lay.

Mr. Cranburne. Who was by? — Capt. Porter. Nobody but myself.

Sir B. Shower. Upon what Occasion did you meet there?

Capt. Porter. I sent for him to my Lodging.

Sir B. Shower. How long had Sir George Barclay been in Town, before that Time?

Capt. Porter. I cannot tell the Time when he came to Town.

Sir B. Shower. How long was it after he came to Town before you saw him? Had you seen him a Week or a Fortnight before? Pray recollect yourself.

Capt. Porter. I told you that the first Time I heard of him, was the latter End of January; Capt. Charnock told me he was come, but I was then sick of the Gout.

Sir B. Shower. Now then I would desire to know, who was by, upon the Friday before the 22d, at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, when you and Mr. Cranburne were there? — Capt. Porter. I did tell you, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. I desire to know, whether there was any Body besides Mr. Cranburne, Kendrick, and Keyes?

Capt. Porter. Sir, I will tell you all I can remember; I was in one Room with Sir George Barclay, and there was Sir William Perkins, Capt. Charnock, and myself; and afterwards I went into another Room, where there was Kendrick, and Cranburne, and Keyes; and Jeffrey Gunn came in afterwards; I remember nobody else.

Mr. Phipps. Was not Gunn there when you first came in?

Capt. Porter. To the best of my Remembrance, he came in afterwards.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, this may be a very material Part of our Defence, and therefore we must enquire a little the more into it. Mr. Porter is pleased to say, that he was in a Room with Sir George Barclay, and Charnock, and Sir William Perkins; and he came out into another Room, where was Mr. Cranburne, Kendrick, and Keyes; and there he says, after he had been there some Time, Gunn came in; I desire to know whether Gunn was there when he first came in?

Capt. Porter. To the best of my Remembrance, he came in afterwards; but I cannot positively tell, for I was in and out several Times.

Mr. Phipps. At the Time that you communicated this Design to Mr. Cranburne, what said he to you?

Capt. Porter. When I first communicated the Thing to him, I told him there was a Thing on Foot for the Service of King James, and desired him to go along with me.

L. C. J. What Kind of Service did you tell him it was?

Capt. Porter. He asked me, what kind of Service it was? I told him Sir George Barclay was come over, and I told the whole Design of the Assassination of the Prince of Orange, that it was intended to take him off, as he came from Richmond from Hunting.

Mr. Phipps. And pray what did Mr. Cranburne say to you?

Capt. Porter. He said he would be ready to go along with me.

Mr. Phipps. You say, you sent by him three Cafe of Pistols to Sir William Perkins; at that Time did you tell him for what Design those Pistols were?

Capt. Porter. I told him, they were for the three Men that Sir William Perkins was to mount upon three of his five Horses.

Mr. Cranburne. Did you speak to me to carry those Pistols to Sir William Perkins?

Capt. Porter. I think so, to the best of my Remembrance I ordered you myself to carry them.

Sir B. Shower. Captain Porter, I desire you to recollect yourself, and tell us plainly, whether the Design was communicated to Mr. Cranburne before the 15th? — Capt. Porter. Certainly, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Are you sure of it?

VOL. IV.

Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir, I am sure of it.

Sir B. Shower. I ask you, because you know what has been said upon this Occasion in other Trials.

Cranburne. Where did you write the Note, that you say you sent to Sir William Perkins? Was that Note sealed, or was it not?

Capt. Porter. I did not tell you that I wrote a Note.

Cranburne. You swore that you wrote a Note, and sent it by me to Sir William Perkins for two Horses.

Capt. Porter. I said no such Thing, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Look you, Capt. Porter, let him ask you any Questions; and if they be proper answer them, and let not his Affirmations or Mistakes provoke you to be angry.

Capt. Porter. I said, I sent him to Sir William Perkins, for a Note to have the Horses from Mr. Lewis.

Mr. Phipps. Did you send him with a Letter, or was it a Message by Word of Mouth?

Capt. Porter. I did send him by Word of Mouth, for a Note.

L. C. J. Pray, Gentlemen, observe the Evidence: Sir William Perkins was to give a Note for two Horses, and Capt. Porter sent Cranburne for the Note.

Mr. Phipps. The Question therefore that I ask, is, Whether he sent a Letter for the Note, or whether by Word of Mouth?

Capt. Porter. I sent by Word of Mouth.

Mr. Cranburne. Pray will you tell the Court what you said upon the 22d to Mr. Pendergrafs and me, after you came down from the Blue-Posts, leaning upon the Rail.

Capt. Porter. I don't remember a Word of it, for I cannot remember every Word that I have spoken.

Sir B. Shower. If you can remember one Particular, sure you can remember another. If you can't remember this, how came you to remember any Part of the Discourse that happen'd at the Blue-Posts?

Capt. Porter. Because that was material to this Business, for I had very soon after a particular Occasion to recollect it upon the breaking out of the Plot.

Mr. Cranburne. Pray what Hour was it this Saturday the 15th, that you communicated this Design to me?

Capt. Porter. I cannot tell what Hour, but I say you met me at the Blue-Posts Saturday the 15th.

Mr. Cranburne. You say, you communicated it to me the 15th?

Mr. Att. Gen. He says he communicated it to you, before the 15th.

Mr. Cranburne. I desire to know where he was the 14th?

Capt. Porter. I say, one Day before the 15th; in that Week I sent for you to come to my Lodgings, and you did come, and there I communicated it to you.

Cranburne. Sir, I was not at your Lodgings that Week.

Mr. Phipps. What Day of the Week?

Capt. Porter. I cannot be positive whether it was Thursday, or Friday, or what Day; but one Day that Week it was.

Mr. Phipps. You ought to be positive when it was.

Capt. Porter. I do tell you as near as I can.

Mr. Phipps. With Submission, my Lord, he ought to be positive one Way or other.

L. C. J. Nay, I don't see that he ought to be positive to a Day; he may be so if he can.

Cranburne. Pray what Day did you say you sent me to Sir George Barclay?

Capt. Porter. I do not say that I ever sent you to Sir George Barclay.

Mr. Phipps. Can you take upon you to say, That he was at your Lodgings that Week before the 15th?

Capt. Porter. To the best of my Knowledge it was one Day that Week.

Mr. Phipps. To the best of your Knowledge! Are you sure of it?

L. C. J. Speak as certainly as you can.

Capt. Porter. Indeed, I believe so, it was before the 15th. I am sure, I think, it was within three or four Days after Sir George Barclay had acquainted me with it, I sent to the Prisoner to come to me to my Lodgings, at Mrs. — in Norfolk-street, and acquainted him with it.

L. C. J. And when you acquainted him with it, What did you tell him? What Part was he to act in it?

Capt. Porter. I told him, I would have him go along with me, and that I had set him down for one of my Party, and would provide him Horse and Arms; and he did agree to go along with me.

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Webber, Pray let me see Charnock's Trial.

Mr. Sh. Buckingham. Why, Sir Bartholomew, is the Trial any Evidence?

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Sheriff, I know what Use I can make of it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Will you ask him any more Questions?

Sir B. Shower. No, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then swear Mr. De la Rue. (Which was done.)

Pray, Sir, give the Court, and the Jury, an Account what you know of the intended Assassination, and what Share the Prisoner had in it.

Mr. De la Rue. It is too long a Story to tell you all that I know of this Matter; but, if you please, I will tell you what concerns the Prisoner at the Bar. I am heartily sorry that I have Occasion to appear against him, as I would be truly against any Body: But since I am here upon my Oath, I must declare the Truth, and nothing but the Truth; and I hope I shall not declare any Thing but what is Truth. Upon Saturday the 15th of February, the Day that the Design was to have been put in Execution against his Majesty, and all that were in the Coach with him, and against his Guards; I went to Mr. Charnock's Lodgings in Norfolk-street, to inform myself whether they resolved on that Day to go out upon the Design; and I found by Mr. Charnock that they did resolve it, and I stayed there awhile, till such Time as Mr. Chambers came in; I did not know whence he came then, but, as I was informed afterwards, he came from Kensington to Mr. Charnock, and his Boots were dirty; and Mr. Charnock told me he had sent a Messenger to Mr. Porter; And, says he, if you will stay a little Time, I shall have an Answer. The Messenger came back, and told him, That Capt. Porter din'd at the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden. I did not go to dine with him, but went Home, where I saw Mr. King at my Lodging, who told me, that the King did not go out that Day. I told him, I heard he did not: I found by Mr. Chambers's coming back, and that we had no Notice from Mr. Charnock, that it was concluded the King did not go out as it was supposed he should have gone. When I had dined at my Lodging, I went to the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden to Mr. Porter, and there were four, or five, or six People with him; there was one Mr. Sherborn, and Mr. Kendrick, and two People that I never saw before, and another Person, but I can't tell now who he was. When we had been there a little while, in comes this unfortunate Man at the Bar, Mr. Cranburne; I don't know where he had been; but by his coming in so late, I suppose he had not dined, and he ordered the Drawer to get him some Coftelets. This is all I can say as to that Day. I had seen Captain Porter twice or thrice between that and the 22d, and he desired me to be at home on Friday Night between Eight and Nine, and he would send to me: He did send, and I was from home. But when I came I was informed his Servant had been to speak with me; and in the Morning, about Eight or Nine o'Clock, Saturday the 22d, he sent his Servant to me to tell me his Master would speak with me at his Lodgings. I went to his Lodgings, and he then lay in Maiden-Lane, at one Brown's a Surgeon: When I came in, he was in Bed; and he told me in French, Tous Parties sont prests, All Parties are ready. I understood all along that there were three Parties to be engaged; one to attack the King's Coach, and the two others the Guards: Sir George Barclay was to head the first, and Porter, and Rookwood, the rest. Mr. Porter arose and dressed himself, and in came Mr. Cranburne; and Mr. Porter went out to him in the Dining-Room, and what he said I can't tell: But soon after came in Pendergrafs, Mr. Keyes, and Mr. King, and then he takes Pen, Ink, and Paper.

Sir B. Shower. Who took that?

Mr. De la Rue. Captain Porter took Pen, Ink, and Paper, and writes down a List of his Party, and puts me down first. Mr. Pendergrafs asked me if I was the Captain? And I made him some Answer, but what in particular I cannot tell; I think I told him I knew of the Thing before the most did. But I can remember particularly that List was given to Mr. Cranburne, to carry to Mr. Charnock; upon what Account it was, I cannot tell; but I concluded, that Mr. Charnock was to be acquainted with those Persons that Mr. Porter was sure of: And Mr. Porter at that time told me that he was disappointed of some People, and desired me to get him some other Men in their Rooms; and he sent particularly to one that Mr. King proposed; and I did go, and brought him to the Blue-Posts, where Captain Porter told me he was to dine; and the Gentleman I went to, told me he would meet me at the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden. When I came back to Mr. Porter's Lodgings, Mr. Porter and Mr. Pendergrafs, and Mr. Oldfield, and I, went in a Coach to the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden; and when we had been there a little while, Mr. Cranburne came back to give an Account of the Errand Mr. Porter had sent him upon, and he brings this List.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who brought it? — Mr. De la Rue. Mr. Cranburne.

Cranburne. Whither did I bring it?

Mr. De la Rue. To the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden.

L. C. J. You must not ask any Questions till they have done with him. But, Mr. De la Rue, let me ask you what Day was this?

Mr. De la Rue. This was Saturday the 22d of February; and he told Mr. Porter there was a List of Mr. Charnock's Men at the bottom of that List; and I took the List in my Hand, and there was Mr. Charnock's List of Six or Seven, or thereabouts, of his Party, and at the bottom of it was R. C. I think, for Robert Charnock. Mr. Porter takes Mr. Cranburne from the Company into another Room, and I went after them, and he told Captain Porter, in my hearing, that the King did not go out that Day. There is one Thing I forgot which now I recollect, and I am upon my Oath to tell the Truth, and the whole Truth. When I was at Mr. Porter's Lodging, he told me the King was to go out; and that Mr. Chambers, the orderly Man, had sent word, That the King resolved to go out between Ten and Eleven. — L. C. J. Who said so?

Mr. De la Rue. Mr. Cranburne told me so at Mr. Porter's Lodgings: I say I had forgot it, but it occurs to my Memory now, that he told me there before he went to the Blue-Posts, that the King did go out that Day between Ten and Eleven; for Mr. Chambers, the orderly Man, had been with Mr. Charnock or Sir William Perkins, to let them know so much. And afterwards when he came back with the List of Captain Porter's Men, to Captain Porter at the Blue-Posts in the Spring-Garden; there was at the Foot of that List, a List of Mr. Charnock's Men in another Hand, I suppose writ by himself, but that I cannot swear whose Hand it was; and Mr. Porter took him into another Room, and then Mr. Cranburne told him the King did not go out, and I believe it was then between Eleven and Twelve o'Clock; and he also told Mr. Porter, that Mr. Charnock was apprehensive the Thing was discovered, and therefore desired him to have a care of himself, for he himself was resolved not to lie at home that Night; I think, my Lord, Mr. Porter did send back Mr. Cranburne to Mr. Charnock; I cannot be positive whether he did or not, but I believe he did; because I am sure Mr. Cranburne did tell Mr. Porter, Sir George Barclay would speak with him; and Mr. Porter made Answer, Why should he desire me to go to him, when he knows I am under some ill Circumstances, and he can better come to me? And I believe Mr. Porter did send Mr. Cranburne once again to Mr. Charnock.

L. C. J. Well, pray do not say any thing of any Matter, but what you can be positive in.

Mr. De la Rue. But Mr. Porter did not go to Mr. Charnock, nor did Mr. Charnock come to him, therefore they staid there and dined; and after Dinner, or a little before Dinner, Keyes the Trumpeter came up and told us, that my Lord of Oxford's Regiment of Guards was returned from Richmond, foaming: Keyes went down Stairs again to learn Intelligence, as I thought, and came up and told us he saw the King's Coaches newly returned to the Mews, and Mr. Cranburne was by all the Time; I think this was before Dinner, and then we went to Dinner.

L. C. J. I tell you again, don't speak any thing that is material, but what you can be positive in.

Mr. De la Rue. I am positive as to the Thing, and that it was the 22d of February, but I cannot be positive as to all the Circumstances. After Dinner there was the usual Healths, the Jacobite Healths to King James, and the Prince of Wales, and the Restoration, and the like; and after that I think it was Mr. Porter took an Orange in his Hand, and squeezed it, I am sure one in the Company did, and drank something to the Rotten Orange, I cannot very well remember just now what it was; but I would be cautious of saying any thing but what is Truth; but if your Lordship will give me leave to recollect myself, I will tell you what it was — Oh! it was to the squeezing of the Rotten Orange, and the Health went round, and Mr. Cranburne was in the Company, and drank the Health. But being disappointed and frustrated of the Design by the King's not going abroad that Day, and Mr. Porter being cautioned by Mr. Charnock to take care of himself, and being told that Mr. Charnock would not lie at home that Night, and the Guards returning in that manner, they were all apprehensive that the thing had taken Air, and the Design of Assassinating the King was discovered, and therefore Mr. Porter concluded of going out of Town; several Healths were drunk round, and I think about Two o'clock he went out of Town, and then the Company broke up. This is what I can say as to the Prisoner, and I hope I have said nothing but what is Truth.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we desire to know whether they will ask him any Questions?

Mr. Phipps. At the time you say this List was given by Captain Porter to Mr. Cranburne, did Mr. Porter declare to what purpose the List was sent?

Mr. De la Rue. No, Sir, not a Word of any such thing. Mr. King was by, and Mr. Pendergrafs was by, and I think Mr. Keyes was by, and he writ a List of his Party, putting me down first; and Mr. Pendergrafs said to me, You are Captain, and he gave it to Mr. Cranburne to carry it to Mr. Charnock; what the particular Message was, I cannot be positive: Indeed I don't very well remember the Message, but the List was carried to Mr. Charnock, and to the best of my Memory it was to give Mr. Charnock an Account what Men he was sure of; for Mr. Porter told me of several Disappointments he had had, of Persons that had promised him, and failed.

Mr. Phipps. Can you remember what Mr. Cranburne said upon that?

Mr. De la Rue. No, I do not.

Cranburne. What Message was that, you say, I brought from Sir George Barclay?

Mr. De la Rue. I do not say that you brought any Message from Sir George Barclay.

Cranburne. You said that I brought a Message, that Sir George Barclay would see him.

Mr. De la Rue. I do not say so; but I say that you told Mr. Porter that Mr. Charnock sent you with a Message to let him know that Sir George Barclay was desirous to see Mr. Porter, to confer about taking care of themselves.

Cranburne. Did you hear me name Sir George Barclay's Name?

Mr. De la Rue. Yes, I say you told Mr. Porter that Mr. Charnock bid you caution him to take care of himself, and that he would go that way, for Sir George Barclay, and he, desired to see him; and Mr. Porter said it was an unreasonable thing for Mr. Charnock to desire it, because they knew he was under Circumstances that it was not proper for him to go, and he wondered they would not rather come to him.

L. C. J. What time a-Day was this?

Mr. De la Rue. It was about Twelve o'clock, I think.

L. C. J. Was it after such time as the News was brought that the King did not go abroad that Day?

Mr. De la Rue. Yes, my Lord, it was after that time.

Mr. Phipps. Were you with Sir George Barclay when he was here in England? Did you see him here?

Mr. De la Rue. I did not see him on this side of the Water. I knew him abroad, and a great many other unfortunate Persons, that were concerned in this Affair; I knew some of them here, and that they were concerned in the Design, but I did not converse with many, indeed with but a very few about it; for to shew that I was not a Man that designed to trepan or ensnare any Man, I did never exchange two Words about this Matter with any Persons that I knew were concerned in it, but Sir William Perkins, (and that but in a small measure) and Mr. Charnock and Mr. Porter, and Mr. King, and Col. Parker; except what passed upon the 22d, between Mr. Porter and Mr. Charnock, when Mr. Porter sent Mr. Cranburne to Mr. Charnock. Mr. Cranburne was one who Mr. Porter called his Quarter-Master: I know this Gentleman was commonly depending upon Mr. Porter, but I think I never was much in his Company; I did not know what Design he had upon him, but I was told by Mr. Porter, that he intended to make him his Quarter-Master, and I understood Mr. Porter was to have a Troop of Horse in Col. Parker's Regiment.

Mr. Phipps. You say you knew a great many of them that were concerned, but you discoursed and conversed but with a few?

Mr. De la Rue. I do so, Sir.

Mr. Phipps. How do you know that they were concerned, when you did not discourse with them?

Mr. De la Rue. By Information from Mr. Charnock and Mr. Porter.

Mr. Phipps. Do you know any thing more of Mr. Cranburne, than the List, and what you have said already?

Mr. De la Rue. I give you an Account of all that I do know.

L. C. J. Answer that particular Question. Do you know nothing more than what you have said?

Mr. De la Rue. No, my Lord, I do not remember nor know any more as to Mr. Cranburne than what I have declared, and I am sorry I had occasion to declare so much.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then call Mr. Pendergrafs. (Who was sworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account of what you know of the Intended Assassination, and how far Mr. Cranburne, the Prisoner at the Bar, was concerned in it.

Capt. Pendergrafs. My Lord, the 13th of February last, I came out of Hampshire, Mr. Porter sent for me to come to Town, and I met him that Day at the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden, and there he told me of the Assassination that was to be done on Saturday following: The next Day we dined at the Rose-Tavern, where the Prisoner dined with us, and we talk'd of the Business; that was Friday the 14th, and we were to be in readiness the next Day to assassinate the King, as he was coming from Richmond; but some Company coming in afterwards, we left off the Discourse, and talk'd no more that Night. The next Day that we were to do the Business, we met at the Blue-Posts in Spring-Garden, and finding the King did not go abroad that Saturday, we dined there at the Blue-Posts, and talk'd over again of Assassinating the King, and the Prisoner was by at the same time; they were all mightily concerned the King did not go that Saturday; but when we had dined there, we had no further Discourse about the Assassination that Day, but every body was to prepare against the next Saturday.

L. C. J. Was that agreed upon then?

Capt. Pendergrafs. Yes, it was by all the Company; so we parted that Day. Some time the next Week I met Mr. Porter, and Mr. Porter ask'd me, if I had a Horseman's Sword? I told him, No: Says he to Mr. Cranburne, Let Captain Pendergrafs have one of the Horsemen's Swords that you have got. Says Mr. Cranburne to me, If you will come to my House you shall make choice of one yourself, for I have several at home. Said I, Mr. Cranburne, I cannot go that Way, but I'll take one of your choosing, if so be you'll leave it at my Lodgings: He said he would do it, and did; he left it at my Lodgings in Suffolk-Street, which Sword I have still. The Day following I met him, and he ask'd me if I had received the Sword? I said, I had it; and he said it was very well. After this I did not see Mr. Cranburne till Saturday the 22d, at which Time I came to Mr. Porter's Lodgings between Nine and Ten o'Clock in the Morning, and the Prisoner at the Bar was there, and I heard Mr. Porter give him a Message to go to Sir William Perkins for some Horses, I know not how many. The Prisoner went, and in some time after came back again, and brought an Account that the King went out that Saturday the 22d to Richmond; so every body was to get ready: And Mr. Cranburne said, that Mr. Charnock desired that Mr. Porter would send a List of his Men; upon which Mr. Porter wrote a List of his Men, and gave it to the Prisoner to carry to Mr. Charnock, and bid him meet him at the Blue-Posts; and Mr. Porter, and Mr. De la Rue, and I, took Coach, and went down to Spring-Garden, and when we came to the Blue-Posts, there were some Persons that I think Mr. De la Rue had appointed to come there: the Prisoner comes thither, and brought the List back, with a List of Mr. Charnock's Men underneath. I know not who the Men were, for I saw it only on the one Side of the Table in Mr. Porter's Hand; at the same Time the Prisoner brought an Account, that the King did not go abroad that Day, and presently after we had the same Account from other Hands; and Captain Porter and I went out of Town, and we heard no more of it.

L. C. J. Are you sure that he did agree to this Matter before the 15th?

Capt. Pendergrafs. Yes, I am sure of it; he agreed to it Friday the 14th, at the Rose-Tavern, in Covent-Garden.

L. C. J. On the 15th, it seems they were disappointed; are you sure there was an Agreement to pursue it the 22d?

Capt. Pendergrafs. Yes, I am sure there was, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was the Prisoner there?

Capt. Pendergrafs. Yes, my Lord, I am sure that the Prisoner at the Bar was there.

Cranburne. Pray, Mr. Pendergrafs, was there any Discourse about this Thing when I was there?

Capt. Pendergrafs. Yes, Mr. Cranburne, you cannot but remember there was.

Cranburne. What Hour did I come there, pray, Sir?

Capt. Pendergrafs. Truly, I cannot be positive to an Hour; but you were there while the Discourse was.

Cranburne. Whether I did stay there all the while, and who was in the Company?

Capt. Pendergrafs. All the Company broke up about six o'Clock; there was Mr. King, Captain Porter, Mr. Kendrick, Mr. Cranburne, Mr. Keyes; and myself.

Cranburne. Was Kendrick there when I was there?

Capt. Pendergrafs. Yes, I am sure of it; I will do you all the Justice in the World that I can.

Sir B. Shower. You say, Sir, he did agree upon the 14th to this Design; pray what Words did he use?

Capt. Pendergrafs. He did agree that we should attack the King the next Day.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Sir, if you can recollect yourself, what did the Prisoner say, or whether you took him to agree by being silent?

Capt. Pendergrafs. He said, he hop'd we should execute our business the next Day.

L. C. J. What Day was that?

Capt. Pendergrafs. That was the 14th of February, and the same Night I gave Account of the Matter to my Lord Portland.

Mr. Phipps. Did he agree to be one in the Execution of the Design?

Capt. Pendergrafs. Yes, he did; he discoursed the Matter to me himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done with our Evidence.

L. C. J. Well, then, what say you to it for the Prisoner?

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, what we have to say on behalf of the Prisoner in this Respect is this: Here are but three Witnesses produced, and as to one of them, De la Rue, there is no Evidence that he gives your Lordship and the Jury that affects this Matter, but only that there was a List given by Captain Porter, and carried by the Prisoner to Mr. Charnock, and so brought back again. But he does not recollect, nor swear to any Message that was sent from Porter by the Prisoner to Mr. Charnock: Now, my Lord, the bare carrying of a Note of Names will be no Evidence of Treason. Mr. De la Rue does not swear to any Privy of the Prisoner, what the List was for, nor to the Delivery of the List, which is the Overt-Act in the Indictment; nor upon what Account this List was written, or sent, or brought back again, or any Word that proceeded from Captain Porter to him upon giving the List, or any Word when it was brought back again. So that as to De la Rue's Testimony, we must submit it to the Memories and Recollection of your Lordship and the Jury; we think he only proves a Plot in general, of which there is no Peradventure, every body is satisfied that there was such a horrible Conspiracy: Those that have been condemned and executed for it, have own'd it, and so it can never be doubted; but he does not say any Thing to affect the Prisoner at the Bar; for as to the Drinking of Healths, and being present when those Healths were drunk, tho' it be an Evidence of Disaffection to the Government, or too much good Manners and Complaisance to the Company a Man is in; yet that Disaffection, or civil Temper, or Complaisance, we hope are no Evidences of Treason. It is plain the Prisoner did depend very much upon Captain Porter; he was in Truth his Servant to go of his Errands, and expected an Office from him, God knows when; but it does not appear by any particular Action, that he did any Thing that can be Treason, upon Mr. De la Rue's Evidence. Then, as to what Mr. Pendergrafs says, I must confess his Evidence comes Home: for he says there was a Design of the Assassination, and some Agreement of the Prisoner to it; but I must beg your Lordship's Favour to observe, upon Mr. Pendergrafs's Evidence, if that stand alone, it will be but one Witness, and then we are safe by the Purview of this Act of Parliament.

L. C. J. Ay, and by the Law, before the making of that Act.

Sir B. Shower. Then, as to Captain Porter, I must beg Leave to say, If our Witnesses are come that were absent at the other Trial, and they prove what is in my Instructions, it will be very much questionable, whether there be any Credibility due to his Testimony: Then if you take off his Testimony, there is only the Evidence of Mr. Pendergrafs; and if he be to be believed, to which I have nothing to say at present, in the Case of a Man's Life, upon an Indictment of Treason, where the Law requires two credible Witnesses, his single Testimony is not sufficient to convict the Prisoner. We beg Leave to call our Witnesses, and then we shall leave it to your Lordship, and the Jury.

Mr. Phipps. As to the particular Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, the carrying about the List, only Mr. De la Rue speaks to it, and Sir Bartholomew Shower has given it an Answer, and I shall not repeat it.

L. C. J. Look ye, for that, if any one Overt-Act is prov'd by two Witnesses, it's well enough.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Besides, they mistake, my Lord, extremely; for Captain Porter and Mr. Pendergrafs speak both of them to that Particular as to the List.

Sir B. Shower. We do not deny it; the Question is, Whether you have two credible Witnesses?

Cranburne. Pray, Mr. Pendergrafs, do you remember what Captain Porter said to you, and I, when we came down to the Blue-Posts, leaning upon the Rail? — Capt. Pendergrafs. Indeed, Sir, I do not.

Cranburne. I would have you recollect yourself; as we stood against the Rails in Spring-Garden, when we came down from the Blue-Posts, after the Design miscarried, Mr. Porter said, Mr. Charnock and they might thank themselves if it were discovered; For, says he, I never communicated a Word of this Thing to any of my Party.

Capt. Pendergrafs. Indeed, I don't remember a Word of it, Sir.

Mr. Phipps. My Lord, we have one Piece of Evidence to offer against the Testimony of Captain Porter: He says, That he sent Cranburne with Gunn from the Cock-pit to see for Hackney-Horses, and that Cranburne came to him to the Sun-Tavern, and there they had some Discourse about executing the Design the next Day; and being ask'd, Who was by, when he communicated the Design to Cranburne? and particularly, Whether Mr. Gunn was by? He says he came in afterwards, but was not there at the Time of the Communication about the Design. Now we shall prove that Gunn came in with the Prisoner, and was with him all the Time, and there was no such Discourse happen'd.

Sir B. Shower. Call Jeffery Gunn, and Mary Gerrard. [They appeared.] Your Lordship will observe, what Captain Porter swore, That he went in to the Room to Cranburne, and Gunn was not there: Now, if we falsify him in that Particular, we shall submit to your Lordship how far he is to be believed in the rest.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir Bartholomew, ask your Witnesses what you will, but make no Descants upon their Evidence till you have heard them.

Then the two Witnesses were sworn.

L. C. J. Well, look ye, you are both upon your Oaths, consider what you say, speak the Truth, and tell all that you know, and nothing but the Truth. Which do you begin with?

Mr. Phipps. Jeffery Gunn—Pray, Mr. Gunn, did you go to the Sun-Tavern at any Time with Mr. Cranburne? — Gunn. Yes, I did.

Mr. Phipps. What Day of the Month was it?

Gunn. I cannot positively tell the Day, it was of a Friday.

Sir B. Shower. Was it of a Friday, in February, or January?

Gunn. It was in February.

Mr. Phipps. Was it before the Plot broke out? — Gunn. Yes, it was.

Mr. Phipps. How long was it before the Plot broke out?

Gunn. I cannot tell that, truly.

Mr. Phipps. Whence did you go?

Gunn. I was at the Cock-pit, and I went from thence to the Sun-Tavern.

Sir B. Shower. Whom did you meet there?

Gunn. I saw Captain Porter there.

Sir B. Shower. What Room were you in?

Gunn. We went into a Room next the Street.

Sir B. Shower. Who was there with you?

Gunn. There was Mr. Cranburne, and I, and Mr. Keyes.

Sir B. Shower. How long was it before Mr. Porter came in to you?

Gunn. He came in about half a quarter of an Hour after I was there.

Sir B. Shower. Were you there from the Beginning till Mr. Cranburne went away?

Gunn. Mr. Cranburne and I went from the Cock-pit together.

Sir B. Shower. How long did you stay there?

Gunn. I was there about an Hour and a half.

Sir B. Shower. Were you out of the Room at all in that Time?

Gunn. Yes, I was out of the Room once.

Sir B. Shower. How long were you out of the Room?

Gunn. I went Home to my Lodging.

Sir B. Shower. Were you ever with Mr. Cranburne at the Sun-Tavern at any Time besides this?

Gunn. Never in my Life.

Sir B. Shower. Whom did you leave with him when you went out?

Gunn.

Gunn. Capt. Porter, and Mr. Keyes, as I remember.
 Sir B. Shower. Were you there before Captain Porter came to him?
 Gunn. I was with Mr. Cranburne, and Captain Porter came in about a Quarter of an Hour after; we came from the Cock-pit together.
 Sir B. Shower. Pray recollect yourself, and tell us upon your Oath, were you there when Capt. Porter came in?
 Gunn. Yes, I think I was there when Capt. Porter came in.
 Sir B. Shower. Did you go and leave him there?
 Gunn. We went all out together. I was there about an Hour and a half.
 L. C. J. Nay, but you said you were absent some Time.
 Gunn. I went Home, and came back again.
 Sir B. Shower. When you went Home, did you leave Mr. Cranburne behind you?
 Gunn. Yes, I think so.
 Mr. Phipps. Did you leave Captain Porter with him?
 Gunn. I think Capt. Porter was with him then.
 Mr. Phipps. But, upon your Oath, was you in Company with Mr. Cranburne at the Sun-Tavern, when Capt. Porter came first in?
 Gunn. Capt. Porter went in and out several Times.
 Sir B. Shower. Did you see Captain Porter before you went to your own House?
 Gunn. Yes, sure.
 Mr. Phipps. Then it cannot be true what Mr. Porter says, that Gunn did not come in till afterwards.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Now, Mr. Gunn, I would ask you a Question or two first, Were you there all the while that Mr. Cranburne was there, or did you go Home? — Gunn. I went Home.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you come back again?
 Gunn. Yes, I went home and eat some Victuals.
 Mr. Att. Gen. How long were you absent?
 Gunn. I came back in half a quarter of an Hour.
 Mr. Att. Gen. How far is it to your House?
 Gunn. 'Tis not above 100 Yards.
 Sir B. Shower. Did Mr. Porter come in to you before you went Home, when you first came in with Cranburne?
 Gunn. He came in after we were in the Room.
 Mr. Phipps. Capt. Porter said, when he came into the Room Gunn was not there.
 L. C. J. He did not say positively, but, as he remember'd; now I would ask you a Question or two.
 Sir B. Shower. Pray, my Lord, our Inference from this Evidence is this: Capt. Porter says, that upon Friday the 21st of February he was with Cranburne at the Sun-Tavern, and out of one Room into another; he came to Mr. Cranburne, and talk'd with him of this Design, and after that Gunn came into the Room, after the Communication was over: Now this Man swears he went from the Cock-Pit with Mr. Cranburne, he was with him in the Room at first when Capt. Porter came; some Time afterwards he went to his own House, and left Captain Porter with Mr. Cranburne, and came back again, and they came away together: Now, we say, these two are inconsistent; for Capt. Porter swears that Gunn was not there till after the Communication was over.
 L. C. J. As he remembers.
 Mr. Phipps. Nay, I think he was positive he came in afterwards.
 L. C. J. As I remember, he was not positive; but call Capt. Porter again.
 Mr. Phipps. When you came back from your House, who were in the Room?
 Gunn. The same Company as I left, as far as I remember.
 Mr. Mountague. Was Capt. Porter in the Room when you came back?
 Gunn. Indeed I can't directly tell, I believe he was.
 L. C. J. Pray observe what your Witness says: He says, Capt. Porter came in and out, and was there several Times before he went away.
 Gunn. Yes, my Lord, he was so.
 L. C. J. And you were absent some Time; but were you there some Time before Porter came in? — Gunn. Yes, I believe I was.
 Then Capt. Porter came in.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Look ye, Capt. Porter, you see that Man there?
 Capt. Porter. Yes.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray give an Account of what you know of that Man's coming in to you at the Sun-Tavern.
 Capt. Porter. I came several Times out of Sir George Barclay's Room into theirs, and to the best of my Remembrance, Mr. Cranburne was there before Gunn came in.
 Sir B. Shower. Do you remember whether the first Time that you went out of Sir George Barclay's Room to speak with Mr. Cranburne, Mr. Gunn was there?
 Capt. Porter. To the best of my Remembrance he was not; to the best of my Remembrance, Mr. Gunn, I saw Mr. Cranburne in the Room before you was there.
 Sir B. Shower. Did you not order Gunn to come with him to the Sun-Tavern?
 Capt. Porter. Yes, Sir, I did.
 Sir B. Shower. Cannot you tell whether they came together?
 Capt. Porter. I was not in the Room when they came in first, but to the best of my Remembrance he was not there when I came in the first Time.
 L. C. J. Now, Gunn, you hear what Capt. Porter says; Before you went away to your own House, did Mr. Porter come into the Room to you?
 Gunn. Indeed, my Lord, I am not positive, I think he did.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Neither of them is positive, and it is a Circumstance not very material; for it seems he was absent, and then the Discourse might be.
 L. C. J. No, it is not material, but you see upon a strict Examination what it comes to.
 Sir B. Shower. They are agreed upon it, I perceive, to be positive on neither Side.
 Mr. Phipps. Mr. Cranburne, pray ask Mrs. Gerrard what you have a mind.
 Cranburne. Pray what do you know of Capt. Porter's going out in Disguise, and wearing false Hair and Vizards, and going upon the Highway, and such things?
 Gerrard. I know not what Mr. Cranburne means.

[At which the People laugh'd.]

Sir B. Shower. It is no laughing Matter, when a Man is upon his Life.
 L. C. J. No, no, let him have fair Play; answer the Question.
 Cranburne. Do you know any thing of your Master's going abroad in Disguises?
 Gerrard. I do not know any thing of my Master's going upon the Highway.
 L. C. J. Did he go out with Vizards, or any such Things?
 Gerrard. I never saw him wear a Vizard or false Beard in my Life, but he had once a Patch on when he was forced to keep out of the way, upon the Account of the Dog-Tavern Business in Drury-Lane.
 Mr. Phipps. See if Mr. Edward Boucher is here.
 [He was call'd, but did not appear.]
 Sir B. Shower. Call Mrs. Burton. [Which was done, but she did not appear.]
 Mr. Phipps. Is William Hardyman here? [He was call'd, but did not appear.]
 Sir B. Shower. Then call Simon Dawson, and we have done. [Which was done.]
 Crier. They are all call'd, but they do not appear.
 Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we must submit it to your Lordship's Directions, upon the Evidence that has been given, as to the Credibility of these Witnesses, and whether what Capt. Porter says, and what Gunn says, be consistent; so that you can be satisfied there are Two Lawful Credible Witnesses to prove any Overt-Act.
 L. C. J. Yes, sure; but I would have you debate it, if you believe there be any thing in it.
 Sir B. Shower. I submit it to your Lordship's Directions.
 L. C. J. The Question is, Whether I should give any Directions at all or no, or whether there be any Occasion for it?
 Cranburne. I declare this openly before this Honourable Court, and so many Noblemen as are here, that Mr. Porter never made me acquainted with this Design, till what he swore here.
 L. C. J. I can't tell; 'tis sworn by two Witnesses.
 Cranburne. I do declare, tho' Capt. Pendergrafs says he does not remember it, that Capt. Porter did declare in Spring-Garden the 22d, when he came out of the Blue-Posts by the Rails, If this Design miscarry, says he, Mr. Charnock may thank himself: for I never communicated this Secret to any of my Friends.
 L. C. J. But hark ye, do you consider what you say, If this Design miscarry? Pray, what Design was that?
 Cranburne. He never named any thing but the Design, he did not say what it was.
 L. C. J. But why were you employ'd to carry a Lift from Capt. Porter to Mr. Charnock, and to bring a Lift back again from him to Capt. Porter?
 Cranburne. I did carry the Note, but there was nothing mention'd what the Lift was for.
 L. C. J. Then you were there on Friday the 14th, and there the Design was proposed to Assassinate the King the next Day, and you engag'd in it.
 Cranburne. Not a Word of it true, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Ay, but Mr. Pendergrafs swears it, and that you were hearty in the Matter, and hop'd you should do your Business the next Day.
 Cranburne. I can't help it if he does swear it.
 L. C. J. Then you were at the Meeting at the Sun-Tavern, the 21st.
 Cranburne. My Lord, you hear what Gunn says.
 L. C. J. As to that, they are neither of them positive; but you did there promise and undertake the Matter, that Capt. Porter is positive in, that it was agreed by you all to do it the 22d; and Mr. Pendergrafs says, when you were disappointed the 15th, you all agreed to pursue the same Design the Saturday following.
 Cranburne. My Lord, I did not dine at the Blue-Posts that Day.
 L. C. J. But you were there; I think indeed Mr. Pendergrafs says you came in after Dinner, and had some Steaks.
 Cranburne. I never heard directly nor indirectly of this Design, till what I heard them swear here.
 L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, You do understand for what Crime this Prisoner at the Bar is Indicted: It is for High-Treason, in Designing and Compassing the Death of the King, which was to be effected by an Assassination in the most barbarous and wicked Manner, that any Attempt of that Nature can possibly be made, being to surprise the King, and murder him in his Coach.
 The Question, Gentlemen, is, Whether this Prisoner be Guilty of this Crime or no? There have been three Witnesses produced that have given Evidence against him, Capt. Porter, Mr. De la Rue, and Mr. Pendergrafs; and they do all tell you that there was such a Design on foot to Assassinate the King, as he came from Hunting at Richmond, after he came on this Side the Water, in the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green. There were diverse Persons engaged in this Design, which Sir George Barclay was come from France to promote and manage: Capt. Porter, as it does appear upon his Evidence, was a Person that was principally engag'd, and at that Time was hearty in the Prosecution of it.
 As to Mr. Cranburne, Capt. Porter tells you he was a Man that he had had a long Acquaintance with, and had employed him, and designed to employ him as an Officer under him, in case a Revolution happened, which it seems about that Time, and some Time before it, was expected. Captain Porter was to have been a Captain, and I think he designed to promote Cranburne to be his Quarter-master; and he sent him to buy Arms; and Preparations were made for that Business; but that is not the Thing that we are now upon; the Matter that now properly falls under our Consideration, is this: The Coming over of Sir George Barclay, the latter End of January, or the Beginning of February last; upon which, as it seems, Mr. Porter was engaged; and having an Interest in this Cranburne, and there being Horses to be furnished to attack the King and his Guards about Turnham-Green, this Man, Cranburne, was a Person that was engaged to be one of the Horsemen that were to make the Attack; and he tells you that he did employ him to provide Horses and Swords, and to prepare the Pistols; and that he did engage in it, and particularly that the Design was to be executed on Saturday the 15th of February, and that he was then ready to go with Capt. Porter; but on that Saturday the King did not go abroad, whereby the Design was disappointed for that Time: Afterwards, there was a Meeting at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, where he met with Sir George Barclay, and others of them; and there comes to that Tavern Mr.

Cranburne and others, and they were in another Room, and Capt. Porter says he came to them, and did discourse about pursuing the Design the very next Day, which was agreed, and Cranburne was ready to go the next Day.

Then he tells you further, that the next Day being Saturday the 22d, the second Time that this Assassination was to have been executed, upon the Desire of Mr. Charnock, who was a Person also that was engaged in this Design, Captain Porter writes a List of the Men he could bring, and sent it by Cranburne to Charnock; Cranburne carries the List to Mr. Charnock, and brings it back again with an Addition of the Names of Mr. Charnock's Men underneath.

Mr. De la Rue is called, and he swears to that very Circumstance, that Mr. Cranburne was sent by Captain Porter with a List to Mr. Charnock, and brought it back again from Mr. Charnock, with an Addition of other Names.

Then Mr. Pendergrafs tells you, that he was with this Mr. Cranburne, the Prisoner at the Bar, the Fourteenth of February, and there was a Discourse of going in pursuance of this Design the next Day, and the Prisoner agreed to it, which he is positive in: He tells you, that when they were disappointed the 15th, being at the Blue-Posts, they then agreed to pursue it the next Saturday; Cranburne was one of them that agreed.

Captain Porter and De la Rue inform you that Healths were drank to the late King, and the late Queen, and the Prince of Wales, as they called him, and then at length, as the concluding Health, Captain Porter, or some of them in the Company, having an Orange in his Hand, squeez'd it, and drank a Health to the Squeezing of the Rotten Orange, which was pledged by all, and particularly by Mr. Cranburne, as is proved by both Captain Porter and De la Rue.

So that now, Gentlemen, I must leave it to you, whether this is not Evidence sufficient to prove this Man guilty of the Treason whereof he is indicted, that is, of Designing and Intending the Assassination of the King, and being engaged as a Party to execute this Design, whenever there was an Opportunity.

The Counsel insist upon it, on the Behalf of the Prisoner, that what Captain Porter says is not Evidence: In the first Place, they urge that he is not a Man of Credit, for they have mentioned that he used to be disguised, and wear a Vizard Mask, and go abroad under odd Circumstances, and therefore his Reputation they hope is not good enough to make him a credible Witness against the Prisoner: Now the Prisoner's Witness being produced, says he never knew him go in Disguise, or wear a Vizard Mask, but once he wore a Patch, because he was under some ill Circumstances about a Riot in Drury-Lane; every Body understands what the Meaning of that was, his Drinking of Healths at a riotous Assembly, upon the 10th of June, and he being under some Prosecution for that, occasioned him to wear that Disguise, but it was not done to hinder any Person, or do any Mischief.

But then, say they, he is mistaken in his Evidence, of the Meeting at the Sun-Tavern the 21st of February, the Day before the last, that this Design was to have been executed, for whereas he says, that Gunn was not there when he came to them, yet Gunn was in the Company at that Time, and whereas he swears positively that they discoursed of going upon the same Design to assassinate the King the next Day, as was agreed the Saturday before; Gunn heard no such Discourse. Gunn is called, and he tells you he did come to the Sun-Tavern at that Time, with Cranburne and Captain Porter, he came into the Room, and he heard no such Discourse. They did open it indeed that Gunn had been there all the while, and if so, then if there had been such a Discourse, he must have heard it.

Gunn has been examined, and does tell you he was not there all the while, but went out and was absent for some Time, about half a quarter of an Hour.

They have made a Question, whether Captain Porter came in when Gunn was there? He says truly he thinks that Captain Porter did come into the Room while he was there, before he went out, but he cannot tell certainly; he was there some Time, while he was there. Then Captain Porter was called again, and Captain Porter does say he knows Gunn was there, but whether he was there at that Time he came in, he cannot say positively; but Gunn says Capt. Porter was going in and out several Times, as Porter says himself; and Gunn was absent for some part of the Time. So that I cannot see any sort of Contradiction between the Evidence that Porter gives, and the Evidence that Gunn gives; the one is uncertain, and so is the other as to that Circumstance.

But, Gentlemen, they would infer, that if there was any such Discourse while Gunn was there, it must be of necessity that Gunn must have heard it; but it is not necessary the Discourse should be when Gunn was there: Captain Porter swears positively, that there was such a Discourse of going the next Day to pursue the Design, and he says he thinks Gunn was not present at that Time when the Discourse was, and Gunn says he was absent some part of the Time.

And so I must leave it to you: Upon the whole Matter, if Mr. Cranburne the Prisoner at the Bar, did consent and agree to act in this bloody and wicked Design, then you are to find him Guilty; if you are not satisfied of that upon the Evidence you have heard, or you think there is any Inconsistency, or Incoherence in the Testimony on the one side, and the other; and that there is good Reason to disbelieve the Evidence against the Prisoner, then you are to acquit him. You have heard your Evidence, and you had best consider of it.

Cl. of the Crown. Who keeps the Jury?

Crier. There is an Officer sworn.

Then the Jury withdrew to consider of their Verdict, and about a Quarter of an Hour after returned.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, answer to your Names, John Caine?

Mr. Caine. Here.

[And so of the rest.]

Cl. of Arr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict? — Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you? — Jury. Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] Look upon the Prisoner; how say you, is he guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or Not Guilty? — Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, had he at the Time of the Treason committed, or at any Time since?

Foreman. None, to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it. You say that Charles Cranburne is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, but that he had no Goods, Chattels, Lands, or Tenements, at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge, and so you say all.

Jury. Yes.

Mr. Caine. My Lord, the Jury humbly desires they may be discharged from their Attendance To-morrow.

L. C. J. We cannot do it, unless the Jury be full without them; if you come early, we shall dispatch you presently.

Then the Prisoner was taken from the Bar, and the Court adjourned till Seven o'clock the next Morning.

CLVIII. The Trial of ROBERT LOWICK, for High-Treason, April 22, 1696. 8 W. III.

THIS Day the Justice of Oyer and Terminer holden for the County of Middlesex, met, and the Court was resum'd by Proclamation in usual Form.

Clerk of the Arraignments. Keeper of Newgate, set Robert Lowick to the Bar. [Which was done.] You the Prisoner at the Bar, Robert Lowick, those Men that you shall hear called and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Mr. Mompesson. If your Lordship pleases to favour me with one Word for the Prisoner at the Bar, I shall not trouble your Lordship with any thing that was urged by the Gentlemen that were of Counsel Yesterday, but I shall rely upon something that has not yet been spoken to. My Lord, they have not laid any Time or Place where the Consent or Agreement was, for the forty Men that were to set upon the King and his Guards: There is a Time laid before where they met and discoursed of the Ways and Means how to assassinate and kill the King; but when it comes to the Assenserunt, Consenserunt, & Agreaverunt, with Submission, this being another Act, there ought to be another Time and Place laid, and for that I shall cite your Lordship two or three Cases; for Men may meet and propose, and discourse, and consult of such Things, tho' they be very ill Things, and yet that may not be Treason. It's the Agreement that is the Treason, and so it was held in Captain Blague's Case about taking the Tower. They may meet at one Time and Place, and at another Time and Place they may agree, in Dyer, 68 B. and 69 Pl. 28. A Man was indicted for Murder, That he at such a Place in and upon the Person that was murdered, infultum fecit, & ipsam, the Person that was murdered, cum quodam cultello, of such a Price, percussit; and he does not shew the Place where he struck him, nor had the Indictment the Words, ad tunc & ibidem, and therefore the Court held it void: So it is likewise ruled in Goodrick's Case, Hell. 35 & 119. and therefore in Indictments for Murder, since they generally set forth not only the Time and Place of the Assault, but likewise of the Blow; so likewise in Things of a more inferior Nature, as Rescues returned by the Sheriff, that the Capias was served, but does not shew where the Rescue was; or tho' he shews where the Arrest was, and an & coupled the Rescue to it, yet it was adjudged an ill Return, Dyer 69. Pl. 29. 10. Edw. 4. 15 Fitz. Ret. Vice. 32 Bro. Ret. Det. Bre. 97. and Error 193. Palm 564. and in Noy 114. there are these Words, Note, It was moved in Discharge of Rescue, the Return was, that they, viz. A. B. aforesaid, the Bailiffs, ad tunc & ibidem vulneraverunt, &c. And the aforesaid George, &c. Refuserunt without ad tunc & ibidem, referred only to the Vulneraverunt, and not to the Refuserunt, and therefore the Return was adjudged insufficient; for, my Lord, although in Conveyances, a Clause or Word in the Beginning or End may refer to the Whole, yet in Indictments, every Sentence must be certain, plain, and express, and have its own Time and Place: Therefore in Noy's Rep. 122. Raymond was indicted for stopping a Cross-Way leading from a certain Ville called Stoake, into a Ville called Melton, in the County of Dorset, and the Indictment was quash'd, because in the County of Dorset shall refer only to Melton, and not to both: So an Indictment of forceable Entry into a Messuage exiens Liberum Tenementum of J. S. is not good for want of the Words ad tunc, though the Participle exiens does strongly imply that it was his House at that Time, 3 Cro. 754. Het. 73. Noy 131. Palm. 426. Bridg. 68. 2 Cro. 214, & 610. Sid. 102. Lat. 109. &c. And my Lord Coke tells us in Calvin's Case 5 B. that Indictments of Treason, of all others, are the most curiously and certainly indited and penned; and all those that I have seen and observed, have contained more Certainty than the Indictment now before your Lordship: In Reginald Tucker's Case, the Indictment was, That he and Thomas Place apud Bridgwater, in Com. Somerset. prædict. Compasserunt, to kill and depose the King, &c. and to bring their treasonable Purposes to effect, they the said Reginald Tucker and Thomas Place, the same Day and Year, at Bridgwater aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, against the King, with a great Multitude of People, array'd in a warlike manner, viz. with Swords, &c. seipsos illicite & proditorie infimul ad tunc & ibidem congregaverunt & assemblaverunt & guerram publicam contra dictum Dominum Regem apud Bridgwater prædict. in Com. prædict. dicto vicesimo Die Junii Anno primo supradicti proditorie paraverunt, ordinarunt & levaverunt. So in the Indictment of

Gate, as it is set forth at large in a Plea in Bar of Dower, brought by his Wife, he with Force and Arms, apud Villam de Ware, &c. assembled with a great many Persons, & Bellum crudele contra dictam Dominam Reginam apud Ware, prædict. ad tunc falso & proditorie publicavit & levavit, ac insuper ad tunc & ibidem falso & proditorie, proclaimed the Duke of Northumberland, to be Lieutenant-General of their Forces; & etiam falso & proditorie apud Ware prædict. ad tunc, proclaimed the Lady Jean Dudley Queen. This is in Bendlowe's Reports, published by Serjeant Rowe, fol. 55. placitò 91. So in the Earl of Leicester's Case, Plowd. Com. 385, the Indictment is laid much after the same manner, and many other Indictments, which at present I am unwilling to trouble your Lordship with; and this being one of a new Form and of the first Impression, I hope your Lordship will hold it insufficient. And, my Lord, when they go farther, and say, Et quilibet eorum proditorie super se suscepit esse unum, there is no Place or Time alledged where that was done, which of Necessity should be mentioned: For it is a constant Rule in our Books, that what is issuable, ought to have a Place where it may be tried. Now, this is issuable, and the most material Thing in the Indictment is, for Compassing the King's Death. The Overt-Acts are, That Christopher Knightley the Prisoner, and two others, did consult to kill the King; and afterwards did agree how to do it, viz. by forty Horsemen, Quorum these should be four, and every one of them did agree to be one; then comes the other Overt-Act of providing Arms for them. Now suppose they should not prove the last, viz. the providing Arms; then, my Lord, they must resort to one of the other Overt-Acts, that these four did consult and agree to kill the King; or that these four did agree the manner how to do it, as is laid in the Indictment; and 'tis plain they must fail of Proof of either of these; for by the not prosecuting any one of the Name of Christopher Knightley, but preferring a new Indictment against one Alexander Knightley, it appears that Christopher Knightley was not there; and the proving these three others making a Consult and Agreement, is not a Proof of the same Overt-Act that is laid in the Indictment, as it ought to be by the late Act; unless they can prove that a Consult of Three is a Consult of Four: And if it be answered, that it is alledged, that Quilibet eorum super se suscepit, then will that come to be issuable, and the most material Part of the Indictment; and consequently a Place ought to have been laid where it should be tried; this, my Lord, is a distinct Sentence of itself, it is in a Parenthesis, and though you take it away, the Sense of what remains is perfect and intire; and consequently this Sentence is or should be intire of itself, and therefore ought certainly to be expressed. Besides, if your Lordship pleases, it is not positively laid, what these Persons severally undertook to be, there is indeed mention made before of Forty Horsemen, agreed upon to set upon the King, then comes the Parenthesis, Quorum iidem Christophorus Knightley, Robertus Lowick, Ambrosius Rookwood & Carolus Cranburne forent Quatuor, & quilibet eorum proditorie super se suscepit esse unum: It is perhaps expressed fully enough by the Word Quorum, that it was agreed these should be four of the forty Horsemen; but there wants the Repetition of the Word Quorum, to express what they severally engaged to be; and the Word & cannot join and connect the Sentences: For forent and suscepit differ not only in Number, but also in Mood and Tense, and the Sense is not necessarily coherent; for it might be true, that the Majority of the Company might agree these should be four, and yet they themselves might not severally engage therein, and one or some of them might undertake it, and yet the Company not agree to it; and it cannot be mended by Intendment. There was Vaux's Case, in the 4 Rep. 44. he was indicted for Murder, for persuading a Man to take Cantharides; it was laid, That he persuadebat eundem Nicholaum recipere & bibere quendam potum mixtum cum quodam veneno vocat. Cantharides; and the Indictment says, Quod prædictus Nicholaus nesciens prædictum potum cum Veneno prædicto fore intoxicatum, sed fidem addibens dictæ persuasioni Willielmi Recepti & Bibit; but does not say, venenum prædictum, but yet it adds, Per quod prædictus Nicholaus immediate post receptionem veneni prædicti languished and died; here, one would think, was a sufficient Implication, that he took and drank the Poison; but it was ruled, that none of these Words were sufficient to maintain the Indictment; for the Matter of the Indictment ought to be plain, express, and certain, and shall not be maintained by Argument or Implication, and therefore for Want of those Words the Indictment was held insufficient, and the Man again indicted for that Offence; and there seems much more Incertainty in this Indictment, and therefore I humbly pray your Lordship that it may be quash'd.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we think the Objection is fully put, and therefore we desire to have their Answer to it.

Sir Thomas Trevor. Mr. Att. Gen. We think, my Lord, this Objection will receive a very plain Answer. The Indictment sets forth, That at such a Place the Prisoner at the Bar did imagine and compass the Death of the King: There is a particular Case where the Imagining was, and that they, to accomplish that Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death of the King, did, among others, postea eisdem die & anno apud parochiam prædictam, meet and consult, &c. so there's the same Place set forth again, wherein they did meet and consult of the Ways and Means, and Time and Place, when, where, and how to assassinate the King: And immediately it follows, & consenserunt & agreeverunt, &c. that forty Men, whereof they were to be four, and every one of them undertook to be one, should do so and so. Now, my Lord, say they, It is not said that the Agreement that there should be forty Men to do it, was at the same Time and Place where they did meet and consult about the Ways and Means: But, my Lord, with submission, it is very plain, that the Agreement for forty Men, and the particular Agreement for them to be of the Number, is but the Effect of the Consultation that is mention'd just before: For it is said, they consulted how they should do it, and they agreed to do it in this manner; the particular manner is set forth immediately after that, it is said they did consult of the manner; so that, my Lord, it is Part of the former Sentence; a Particularizing of what they did agree upon at that Consultation; but it is no distinct Overt-Act: If it had been a distinct Overt-Act, then the Cases that have been cited by the Counsel, do shew, that there should be a particular Time and Place mentioned for every Overt-Act; but this is only a Part of that Overt-Act that was mentioned generally before: This tells you particularly what the Means were they did agree upon, and the Sentence is not compleat till you have gone over this; so that, my Lord, with submission, it had been very improper when they agreed at such a Time and Place, of the Means and Ways how it should be effected, then to set forth that it was at the same Time and Place where they did consult of the Ways and Means, that cannot be proper; for it is not laid at first, that there was any particular Way proposed, but only in general, they consulted of the Ways and Means; therefore, my Lord, all this that Mr. Mompesson has said, will not be pertinent to this Case, it is impossible to have been otherwise; it is but a Part of the Sentence; and it is not compleat till you have gone over the several Particulars: As to the Case of a Rescous, that is, the Offence upon which the Matter is to be grounded; the Verberavit and Vulneravit are not the Rescuing; but where there is not one Sentence compleat, till you come to the End of these Words, there it must be all taken together; so it is here, they consulted of the Way, and agreed this to be the Way, which they set forth in particular: It is joined to the former Part of the Sentence, and the whole is not compleat without it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. With submission, my Lord, it cannot be otherwise, nor can they make it Sense otherwise. Sir John Hawles.

L. C. J. They say you might and should have put in, Sir John Holt, ad tunc & ibidem.

Mr. Sol. Gen. With submission, my Lord, I say it cannot be repeated again: Indeed if you would make it like the Case, as Mr. Mompesson would have it, that forty Men did agree to it, and forty Men did it, it were necessary to name Time and Place, as it is in the Case of Murder: That he did agree to murder him, and afterwards knock'd him on the Head, there you shall lay Time and Place where he agreed, and where he did the Act, for there is an Act done; but in this Case there is no Act done, but only an Agreement that forty should do it, whereof these four were to be part of the Number. Now, they cry, you do not say what these four were to be for. Yes, we do: The Forty were to do such an Act, and these were to be four of that forty, and every one of them undertook to be one; so that it cannot be express'd otherwise than it is; for what they say of the Indictment's being not in the same Form that other Indictments are, that will be no Argument at all; for it does not follow, that there must be one express'd Form of Indictment; of Right there are divers Forms of Indictments, and all of them good, because Indictments are to be framed according to the particular Case, and they cannot put me an Instance of such a particular Case as this. As to that of the Mistake of the Name of Knightley, that unquestionably can be no Objection at all: For how does it appear to the Court, that this is against the same Person that was before indicted by the Name of Christopher? there may be another Christopher, for aught they know: But I will suppose, that the Consult was proved not, as it is laid, that there were to be four; but only that they were to be three of them, it would be well enough against the Prisoner at the Bar, if he be proved to be one.

Mr. Conyers. First, we have here laid a Time and Place for the Treason alledged in the Indictment, and also for the two Overt-Acts, how, when, and where it was to be done, and the providing of Arms for it; and for this Particular of the forty Men, that they would have us put the ad tunc & ibidem to that, is but Part of the Overt-Act, which was before alledged; for the first Overt-Act mentioned, is the Meeting and Consulting, and there we lay both Time and Place; that on such a Day, and at such a Place, they did meet and consult of the Way and Manner how to do such an Act: And then we continue on the Sentence, by particularizing how it was to be effected; that they did agree there should be forty Horsemen to do it, whereof they were to be four: This is but a Part of the Overt-Act, which is the Consulting and Agreeing upon the Ways and Means; this particular Means agreed upon, being but the Result and Effect of the Consultation before: So that we conceive there is no Want of Time or Place upon which to take Issue in this Case.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, I think, with submission, there is nothing in their Objection, and I take it to have received a full Answer already: Yet I would ask one Thing of the Gentlemen of the other Side, had the Sentence run without the Words de iis modis & mediis, &c. which follow after the Word consultavit, and before the Words & agreeavit; in this manner, That they did then and there traitorously treat, propose, consult, and agree, that forty Horsemen, or thereabouts, with Guns, and so forth. If then there had been any Colour to think it necessary, that it should be laid in this manner, That they did then and there traitorously treat, and then and there traitorously propose, and then and there traitorously consult, and did then and there traitorously agree: And if not, then I would desire them to tell me why then and there is more necessary to one Verb did agree, than it is to all the rest, in Sense and common Speaking. The only Use of a Conjunction copulative, is to derive the Force of some Words, in a Sentence foregoing, down to a Sentence following, to avoid Repetition: And here, tho' after the Consultation be put, many Words that relate to that Matter, by Way of Parenthesis; yet the ad tunc & ibidem still does refer to all the Verbs following, being joined by the Conjunction copulative; it does not vary the Case at all, the putting in that Parenthesis; it is notwithstanding but as one Sentence: And the supposing that the Parenthesis stood out, makes it very plain, there can be no Colour to say there wanted a Repetition of the ad tunc & ibidem to every Verb.

Sir B. Shower. With submission to your Lordship's Judgment, there is no Answer made to this Objection. I do agree, if there had been several Verbs, and no other Words had intervened, that an & would have coupled all together, and you need not have repeated ad tunc & ibidem to every one: But here is a Fact after the Verbs, that makes one compleat entire Sentence; and if this of the forty Men were left out, it had been a good Sentence, that they did propose and treat how, where and when; that's a Sentence of itself, the Consulting and the Treating of the Ways and Means: But then they say, and they did agree and assent that forty should do it: Now there is no Necessity for the interpreting of these Words, That they should consult and agree at the same Place and Time; there is no necessity to conjoin this Agreement for the forty Men with the Consultation; they might propose and consult at one Time and Place, and not agree, and afterwards agree at another Time and Place: It is not a Specification, or, as they call it, a specifick Account of the Consultation, nor a necessary Effect of it, so as to make it necessary to join them together; they might meet and consult at one Time and Place,

Place, and at another Time and Place they might agree that forty should do it; and therefore when you say at one Time and Place they did consult and propose, and afterwards they did agree; it is not necessarily implied, that it must be at the same Time and Place; and when it is not necessarily implied, we think it necessary in Indictments, for Certainty-sake, to have ad tunc & ibidem inserted again.

Mr. Mompeffon. My Lord, Mr. Solicitor says, That as to other Precedents, that does not make it necessary that this should be like them; and that it is no Argument that it ought to be so here. My Lord Coke, in Calvin's Case, tells us, That by Precedents the Law is known, and that Indictments of Treason are of all Things the most curiously penn'd; and it is common to infer the Law is so, because usually it is so in the Precedents of Indictments. Mr. Solicitor says likewise, That there may be a Christopher Knightley besides an Alexander; but I cannot take that for an Answer to the Exception I urge, which is the Want of ad tunc & ibidem at the Quorum, and the Quilibet; for the Quilibet may come to be in Question as the most material Part of the Indictment, because the Agreement of the Four upon the Meeting of the Four is alledg'd as an Overt-Act. Now, with Submission, they must prove the Assembly of the whole Four, or they do not prove the Overt-Act expressly laid: Then as to the Quilibet suscepit, which is the most material Part, it has no Time nor Place.

Mr. Att. Gen. No sure: We do not need to prove all four, for it is a distinct Offence in each, and if any one undertook, it is well enough against him: and for the Time and Place we tell you it is Part of the former Sentence, and makes but an intire One.

Mr. Mompeffon. As for the Residue of the Verbs, if they had been omitted, it had been good Sense; but this is a perfect intire Sentence of itself, when it tells you what they consulted and treated of, as in the Case of the Rescue that I put; if it had stopp'd there, it had been a good Sentence without the Vulneraverunt.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Rescous is the Offence in that Case, the other is distinct: But here, in this Case, nothing can be plainer than that all is one Act, as we have laid it, That at such a Time and Place they did consult and treat of the Ways and Means; but then there is no Agreement mentioned till after we have said they did consult of the Ways and Means, and did agree that this should be the Way: This is certainly one intire Sentence that shews what the Agreement was upon the Consultation as the Result of it.

Mr. Cowper. As to what Sir Bartholemew Shower says, That we ought to repeat the ad tunc & ibidem, unless the Sense of the Words implies a Necessity that the Consultation and the Agreement should be at one Time and Place: My Lord, there can be nothing in that, for it does not arise from the Necessity of the Thing one Way or t'other; but we take it as an intire Sentence, and that the whole Matter is sufficiently connected, and laid to one Time and Place, though it might be divided, it must be taken, as alledged, to be one intire Fact, or else it recurs to the same Objection, that ad tunc & ibidem must as well be put to every Verb; for 'tis possible they might propose at one Time and Place, and consult at another, and debate at another as well as agree at another: So that nothing is to be argued from the Necessity of the Thing more in one Case than the other; for one Man might propose it in one Place, and the rest might then shake their Heads at it; and then they might again meet and consult at another Place, and afterwards agree at a Third: But when it is said then and there they did meet, consult, and agree, it cannot be understood but that the Agreement was at the same Time and Place with the Meeting and Consult.

Sir B. Shower. But this can be no Answer that Mr. Cowper gives now, for proposing, and consulting, and treating, and debating, are all of the same Signification; for one Man's proposing to another, and the other's proposing to him, is consulting, treating, and debating; but now consulting and agreeing are different Things.

Mr. Cowper. So is proposing and consulting: One may propose: but there must be at least Two to consult: There is that nice Difference between them.

Sir B. Shower. Every one must agree for himself, and that must be certainly laid with Time and Place, let the Proposal and Consultation be what it will.

L. C. J. Mr. Mompeffon puts that Case in Dyer upon an Indictment of Murder, That on such a Day, and at such a Place, the Party made an Assault upon the Persons slain, & percussit; but does not say, Et ad tunc & ibidem percussit, and for not alledging that, the Indictment was held nought.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, that is a different Case from this, because insultum fecit, and the percussit, are different Crimes; there is a great Difference between an Assault and a Stroke: But here it is, That they did propose and consult of the Ways and Means, and agreed upon this particular Way; that is the same Thing; it is not an intire Sentence till you come to the End of it, then it is complete when you shew what was the Effect of the Consultation; what they were agreed upon, and not till then.

Mr. Mompeffon. A Man's holding up his Hand is an Assault, but he must actually strike to be guilty of Murder: So a Man may debate, and yet not agree: It is the Agreement that is the Treason.

L. C. J. Read the Indictment.

Mr. Mompeffon. The Consult is like the Assault, and the Agreement is like the Stroke.

L. C. J. Treby. It is a nice Case as you would have it, but I think it is very natural as the King's Counsel put it at first; they lay the Consultation of the Ways and Means how it should done, and then they conclude that thus it shall be done: All which makes but one intire Thing.

L. C. J. They say they met that Day at St. Paul Covent-Garden, that's in the Beginning, and did consult how to kill the King; and they consented and agreed among themselves, that it should be done in this Manner: Does not this refer to both Time and Place in the Beginning? It is a continuing on of the same Sentence, and makes all but one and the same Act; it is the Result of the Consultation at that Time and Place.

Sir B. Shower. But, my Lord, it might be at another Place: They might consult at one Place, and conclude at another.

Mr. Conyers. But it is laid to be at the same Place, for no other Place does appear, and it is one continued Sentence.

L. C. J. Treby. You would make the Repetition so frequent and reiterated, that it would become absurd.

Mr. Att. Gen. Indeed I do not know what these Gentlemen would have.

Sir B. Shower. We would have this Indictment as all others are, the Precedents are as we say, and we hope this shall pursue 'em, or else be quash'd.

L. C. J. Look ye here, Sir Bartholemew Shower; suppose this Part should not be right, that will not vitiate the whole Indictment.

Mr. Mompeffon. But your Lordship won't suffer them to give Evidence of that Part that is vicious.

L. C. J. Yes, yes; it comes within the first Words of the Time and Place laid; they may give Evidence of it, because this is but a setting forth for the Manner agreed upon for the Execution of the Design that was before consulted and treated of; it is comprehended in the former Words; and if they had omitted this out of the Indictment, the Indictment had never been the worse; there had been a sufficient Overt-Act alledged to prove the Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King; for if People at such a Place and Time meet; and propose the Way and Means how to effect it, do you think the Indictment would not be good enough without laying the particular Means agreed upon? Certainly it had been well enough if this had been omitted. Do you think they cannot give this in Evidence as a Proof of the Overt-Act? Certainly they may.

Sir B. Shower. The Question will be, my Lord, then upon the Whole, Whether the Conclusion of the Indictment, contra legiantia sue Debitum, shall be taken distributively to every Fact? And if so, then there ought to be Time and Place alledg'd to every Fact.

L. C. J. Suppose you lay several Overt-Acts, and prove but one, yet he is to be found guilty of the High-Treason, which is the Imagining and Compassing the Death of the King, which is the Crime laid in the Indictment; then suppose this was left out of the Indictment, they might give it in Evidence as a Proof of the Overt-Act, that it is well laid for Time and Place; and therefore though it be express'd, and not so fully and particularly laid, we cannot quash the Indictment for it, because the Indictment would have been good, though that had been omitted.

L. C. J. Treby. That is certainly true, it is no Cause for quashing the Indictment.

Mr. Sol. Gen. The Indictments against the Regicides were for Compassing the Death of the King, and they gave in Evidence that he was put to Death, though they charged in the Indictment, only the Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King.

L. C. J. Ay sure, that is an Overt-Act with a Witness, the Indictment was not laid for Murdering the King, but for Compassing his Death, which is the Treason according to the Act of Parliament of the 25th Ed. III. and as an Overt-Act they gave the Cutting off his Head in Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Indictment says, they compassed and imagined the King's Death, and they agreed to do it in this Manner; if this be not all one intire Sentence, I know not what is.

L. C. J. As to your Case, Mr. Mompeffon, which you quote out of Dyer, it is possible a Man may make an Assault at one Time, and at another Time make an Assault and give a Stroke; but this is all one Act, it does but specify what was generally consulted of and proposed.

L. C. J. Treby. Pray, do you think a Man may demur upon a common Action of Battery, where 'tis said first, at such a Time and Place, Insultum fecit, verberavit, & vulneravit, because there is not a Place set to every Word.

Mr. Mompeffon. Indictments ought to be very curiously penn'd, and what is good in an Action will not be good in an Indictment, with Submission.

L. C. J. Treby. But suppose you shew'd it for Cause upon special Demur.

Mr. Mompeffon. My Lord, I cannot tell what it would amount unto.

L. C. J. You cannot quash the Indictment at this Time; that is not possible, because the Indictment is good as to the rest, supposing this was not so well as it might be.

Mr. Mompeffon. Then, my Lord, I am in your Lordship's Judgment, whether they shall be admitted to give Evidence in this particular Thing?

L. C. J. They may certainly give in Evidence the Agreement to have Forty Men to kill the King, as a Proof of the Consultation, Agreement, and Consent to kill the King; and the Consenting to have Forty Horsemen is an Evidence of their treating, proposing, and consulting to kill the King. Then for your Objection of Quilibet suscepit to be one, that is well enough, it is all still but one Sentence.

Sir B. Shower. One of which is it? for they have not laid in the Indictment what is, whether it be one of the Four, or one of the Forty.

L. C. J. Whether it be one of the Four, or the Forty, is not material; for cannot one be found guilty, and the rest acquitted? The one is not charged with the Act of the other, but they are several Offences, and each must answer for himself. In all Indictments, Offences are several. Suppose an Indictment of Conspiracy, and it is laid in the Indictment that Four did conspire; can't you prove that two conspired? no Question you may. It is not certainly necessary that every one should be proved to have conspired. Suppose it were alledged that Four did beat a Man, and does not say Quilibet eorum beat him, you may give in Evidence that one did beat him.

Sir B. Shower. No Question of that in Case of a Battery, but in the Case of a Conspiracy there must be more than one.

L. C. J. Nay, I will ask you even in an Action of Conspiracy, where the very Gift of the Action is Conspiring together, cannot two be found guilty, and the rest acquitted? In Riots there must be Three or more. It may be you'll lay Ten, but it is sufficient, I hope, if you prove it upon any Three of them.

Mr. Att. Gen. The Difference is betwixt Contracts and Crimes; for Contracts they are joint, but Crimes they are in their own Nature several.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Besides, my Lord, though they be out of Time, yet this is not to the Abatement of the Indictment, but to the Evidence; how do they know but we will give it in Evidence that Christopher Knightley was one?

L. C. J. Treby. Mr. Mompesson moves it as a Caveat against your giving it in Evidence.

Sir B. Shower. If in an Outlawry against diverse, they leave out these Words, Nec eorum aliquis comparuit, that is every Day held to be nought, and for that Reason we say, the Quilibet eorum suscepit is necessary too, and without being laid cannot be given in Evidence, and if it be laid, it ought to have Time and Place.

L. C. J. Treby. The Default of Appearance must be a several Thing, and when he lays it jointly non comparuerunt, it may be true that all did not appear, if any one made Default; but when you charge Men with a Fact done, though in the plural Number, yet it is a distinct separate Charge upon every one.

Cl. of Arr. Elias Fletcher.

Cryer. Twelve good Men and true, stand together, and hear your Evidence.

L. C. J. Now the rest of the Jury that have appeared are discharged.

Cl. of Arr. Cryer, make Proclamation.

Cryer. Oyez, If any one can inform my Lords, the King's Justices of Oyer and Terminer, the King's Serjeant, or the King's Attorney-General, before this Inquest be taken, of the High-Treason, whereof the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted, let them come forth, and they shall be heard; for now the Prisoner stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance, and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or else they forfeit their Recognizance.

The Names of the Twelve sworn are these.

George Ford, Esq;	George Hawes, Esq;	William Pitts, Gent.
Thomas Trench, Esq;	Matthew Bateman, Esq;	William Smith, Gent.
John Wolfe, Esq;	Thomas Ramage, Gent.	Benjamin Boltby, Gent.
John Raymond, Esq;	William Wild, Gent.	Elias Fletcher, Gent.

Cl. of Arr. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted by the Name of Robert Lowick, late of the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middlesex, Gentleman, for that he, together with Christopher Knightley, late of the same Parish and County, Gentleman; Ambrose Rookwood, late of the same Parish and County, Gentleman; and Charles Cranburne, late of the same Parish and County, Yeoman; not having the Fear of God in their Hearts, nor weighing the Duty of their Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as false Traytors against the most Serene, most Illustrious, most Mild, and most Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. their Supreme, True and Rightful, Lawful, and Undoubted Lord, the Cordial Love, and True and Due Obedience, Fidelity and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said Lord the King that now is, towards him our said Lord the King should, and of Right, ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguish, Intending and Contriving, and with all their Strength Purposing, Designing and Conspiring the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, our Right, duly, happily, and very well established, altogether to subvert, change, and alter, as also the same our Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to put, and bring, and his faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and most miserable Slavery to Lewis the French King to subjugate and inthral, the 10th Day of February, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times as well before, as after, at the Parish of St. Paul, Covent-Garden, aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traitorously, did compass, imagine, and contrive, purpose, design, intend, our said Lord the King that now is, to kill, slay, and murder; and a miserable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to make and cause, and the same their most wicked, impious, and devilish Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Contrivances, and Purposes aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect and bring to Effect, they the said Christopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, and very many other false Traytors, to the Jurors unknown; afterwards, to wit, the same 10th Day of February, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, and divers others Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elsewhere in the same County, falsely, maliciously, advisedly, secretly, and traitorously, and with Force and Arms, did meet together, propose, treat, consult, consent, and agree, him our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, by lying in Wait and Wild, to assassinate, kill and murder; and that execrable, horrid, and detestable Assassination, and Killing the sooner to execute and perpetrate; afterwards, to wit, the same Day and Year, and diverse other Days and Times, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, traitorously did treat, propose, and consult, of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place, where, when, how, and in what Manner, our said Lord the King, so by Lying in wait, the more easily they might kill, and did consent, agree, and assent, that Forty Horsemen, or thereabouts; of whom the said Christopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, should be four; and every one of them traitorously took upon himself to be one, with Guns, Muskets, and Pistols, laden with Gunpowder, and Leaden Bullets, and with Swords, Rapiers, and other Arms armed, should lie in Wait, and be in Ambush, the same our Lord the King in his Coach being, when he should go abroad, to set upon, and that a certain and competent Number of those Men, so armed, should set upon the Guards of him our said Lord the King then attending on him, and being with him, and should fight with them, and overcome them, whilst others of the same Men so armed, him our said Lord the King to assassinate, kill, slay, and murder; And they the said Christopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, their Treasons, and all their Traitorous Intentions, Designs, and Contrivances aforesaid, to execute, perpetrate, fulfil, and bring to Effect, afterwards, to wit, the aforesaid 10th Day of February, in the Seventh Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, divers Horses, and very many Arms, Guns, Pistols, Rapiers, and Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and Warlike Things, and military Instruments, falsely, maliciously, secretly, and traitorously did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure, and did cause to be bought, obtain'd, gather'd together, and procured with that Intent, them, in and about the detestable, horrid, and execrable Assassination, Killing, and Murder of our said Lord the King, that now is, as aforesaid, to use, employ, and bestow; and the same Premises the more safely and certainly to execute, do, and perpetrate, he the aforesaid Christopher Knightley, with one Edward King, late of High-Treason, in Contriving and Conspiring the Death of our said Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted, by the Consent and Assent of divers of the Traytors and Conspirators tors aforesaid, the said tenth Day of February, in the seventh Year above-said, traitorously did go and come to the Place proposed, where such intended Assassination, Killing and Murder of our said Lord the King, by lying in Wait, should be done, perpetrated and committed, to view, see, and observe the Conveniency and Fitness of the same Place, for such lying in Wait, Assassination and Killing, there to be done, perpetrated, and committed; and that Place being so viewed and observed, afterwards, to wit, the same Day and Year, his Observations thereof to several of the said Traitors and Conspirators did relate and impart, to wit, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid; and the aforesaid Charles Cranburne, the same Day and Year there in order, the same execrable, horrid, and detestable Assassination, and killing of our said Lord the King, by the Traitors and Conspirators aforesaid, the more readily and boldly to execute, perpetrate and commit, advisedly, knowingly, and traitorously, did bear and carry among divers of those Traitors and Conspirators forwards and backwards, from some to others of them, a List of the Names of diverse Men of those who were designed and appointed, our said Lord the King, so as aforesaid, by lying in Wait to kill and murder, against the Duty of the Allegiance of them the said Christopher Knightley, Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne; and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, as also against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided: Upon this Indictment he has been arraigned, and thereunto hath pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and the Country, which Country you are: Your Charge is to inquire, whether he be guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty; if you find him guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements he had at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since, to your Knowledge. If you find him Not Guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels, as if you had found him Guilty; if you find him Not Guilty, and that he did not fly for it, you are to say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mountague. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, this is an Indictment of High-Treason against Robert Lowick, Prisoner at the Bar; and the Indictment does charge him with compassing and imagining the Death of the King, and endeavouring to subvert the Government, and enslave this Kingdom of England, and bring it under French Tyranny and Slavery; and the Indictment sets forth that Robert Lowick, the Prisoner at the Bar, the Tenth of February, met several false Traitors, and there consulted and treated how to assassinate his Majesty; and agreed, that forty Horsemen do get together, some to attack the Guards, while others were to assassinate the King in his Coach; and the Indictment charges him likewise with getting together Horses and Arms for this purpose; to this he hath pleaded Not Guilty. We will call our Evidence, and prove the Fact against him, and we do not doubt but you will do your Duty.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn, this is an Indictment of High-Treason, in conspiring and compassing the Death and Destruction of the King; the Nature of our Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar is this.

You will hear, Gentlemen, by the Witnesses, that about Christmas last a Conspiracy and Design was set on foot to assassinate the King; and accordingly to accomplish it, there were several Persons sent over from France by the late King James, who were Part of his Guards, and particularly Sir George Barclay was to be the Head of them; he was a Lieutenant of the Guards there, and he was sent over in January last, and there were a great many Troopers sent over, who were to be under his Direction, particularly Mr. Harris, who will give you an Account, that he was sent over by Order of King James, and he was told particularly King James had a Service for him to do in England, and he hoped it might be an Opportunity to advance him. He was to observe the Orders of Sir George Barclay, and by what Token he should know him; he was to meet him in Covent-Garden, and he was told he might find him there twice a-Week in the Square, about six o'clock, after it was dark; and that he might know him, he told him, he would have his white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket; accordingly Mr. Harris came over, and Mr. Hare came with him, and they came and did meet with Sir George Barclay; and they, together with Sir George Barclay, and several others here in England, Mr. Porter, Mr. Charnock, and Sir William Perkins, did enter into Consultation how to effect it: There were several Meetings about it, and you will find the Prisoner at the Bar was at several Meetings to that Purpose; and they did undertake among them, to provide so many Men as might make about the Number of Forty, which they thought sufficient for the Execution of this Design.

Gentlemen, you will hear that the Prisoner at the Bar did treat with several Persons to be engaged in it; particularly about the 5th of February, he sent to one Bertram, and asked him if he would be engaged in a Design for King James's Service, that was quickly to be executed, without asking of Questions; and afterwards, I think, he undertook he would: So about the 14th of February he met him again, and that was the Day before the first Time they intended to attack the King, and then being so near the Time when it was to be executed, he thought it proper to acquaint him with the Thing he had engaged him in; and he did acquaint him, That the next Morning they were to be ready to attack the King and his Guards, and bid him be sure to get his Boots and other Things ready for that purpose, and he gave him a Guinea in order to it. Bertram, it seems, on the 15th of February did not come, and the King it seems did not go abroad that Day, so they were disappointed at that Time; but the Sunday after Bertram met him, and Mr. Lowick complained that he had not come upon the Saturday according as he had undertaken; and he told him it would have been the same Thing, he would have disappointed them if the King had been in the Field.

Gentlemen, you shall find, That as he thus engaged Mr. Bertram, so he was to provide several others; and did declare, That at his own Charge he had got two or three; he complained of it as a Hardship put upon him, That whereas Mr. Harris had 6 s. a-Day Subsistence, and was only to take care of himself, he, Mr. Lowick, had at his own Charges engaged and provided several.

VOL. IV.

You will find, Gentlemen, that Mr. Rookwood, who was tried Yesterday, had several Meetings about it with Mr. Lowick and Mr. Harris; they did think it to be a barbarous Thing: But however, they were resolved to obey Orders, and the Prisoner in particular said he would obey Orders, though he thought it a very wicked Thing.

Gentlemen, you will find by the Evidence how the Matter was carried on; the Prisoner was to be engaged in it, and did not only embark himself in Person, but engaged others, and did treat with them about it. We shall call our Witnesses, who will give you a full Account of it, and then we shall leave it with you, who we question not will do Justice. First call George Harris.

(Who appeared, and was sworn.)

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury, what you know of the intended Assassination, and what Part the Prisoner at the Bar had in it?

Mr. Conyers. Begin from the first, and tell your whole Knowledge as you did Yesterday.

Mr. Harris. On the 14th of January, New Stile, I was ordered to wait on King James at Dinner; after Dinner was over, I was called in, where was Col. Parker and Mr. Hare at the same Time, and King James told me he was very sensible of the good Service I had done him; and now he had an Opportunity of doing something for me: I was to go into England, and there to be subsisted, and I was to follow the Orders of Sir George Barclay; the King told me I should find Sir George Barclay in Covent-Garden, with a white Handkerchief hanging out of his Pocket, on Mondays and Thursdays between the Hours of six and seven in the Evening, and that was the Sign I was to know him by; and he ordered me to go to Mr. Caroll, that is Secretary to the late Queen, and Col. Parker went along with me, and he ordered me ten Levidores, and Mr. Hare as much, which Mr. Caroll gave us; and if that were not sufficient, or if we were Wind-bound at Calais, we had Orders to apply to the President of Calais to be furnished with what we wanted: Accordingly we went, and the Wind not serving when we came to Calais, we were forced to stay there, and our Charges were paid to our Landlady by the President of Calais, according to the Order we received at St. Germain; when the Wind served fair we went on board, and came to Rumney-marsh, to one Mr. Hunt's House, and from thence he furnished us with a Couple of Horses; and we came the Sandy-way to one Mr. Tucker's, and from thence to Mr. Croft's, and from thence to Gravesend, and from thence to London: We came up in the Night-tide, and being late when we came to Town, Sunday-night, we lay at an Inn at the lower-end of Gracechurch-street; the next Day we went to look for Sir George Barclay, but not finding him in Covent-Garden, according to what King James told us, I admired at it; but one Mr. Berkenhead meeting my Comrade the next Day, said, Sir George Barclay desired to see us, and appointed us to meet him, which we did that Night; where Sir George Barclay ask'd us how the King and Queen, Prince and Princess did; he told us at that Time he had no Money for us, but in a few Days we should have Money; and accordingly he sent us Money. We had five Guineas, but it was at twice; two Guineas at one Time, and three at another, and this was for a Month's Subsistence at five Shillings a-Day, Guineas going then at thirty Shillings. And afterwards when Major Holmes delivered the Horse, upon Saturday the 15th, we had another Guinea, that made up what we had to be six Shillings a-Day when we had Horses, and five Shillings a-Day when we had none: And as for Mr. Lowick, the first Saturday which was designed for the Assassination, I happened to be at Mr. Counter's Lodgings in Holbourn, a Confectioner's; and there I see Mr. Lowick come in.

Mr. Conyers. Who lodged there, pray, Sir?

Harris. Sir George Barclay and Mr. Counter had Lodgings there; and Mr. Lowick came in there, but I cannot say he stay'd there any Time, I think he went out presently afterwards. The next Week I met Mr. Lowick in Red-Lyon Fields, and discoursed with him there about this Matter, and I told him what a barbarous and inhumane Thing it was that we should be the Murderers of the Prince of Orange, and that it would render us odious to the World, and that we should be a continual Reproach to ourselves; he did agree it was so: But in conclusion, Mr. Lowick said he would obey Orders, and he said Sir George Barclay, he was sure, would not do it without Orders. That Day when we were walking out, we met Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes riding in the High-way up towards Islington, and we spoke to him, for Mr. Lowick told me the Thing was discovered, and his Name was given up, and other Gentlemen's, and I think another; and so he told me that one Harrison told him of it, and forewarned him that Night from lying in his Lodging; and he told him that he believed it would not be safe for the Rest to lie in their Lodgings, or to that effect.

Mr. Att. Gen. When he said he would obey Orders, What was the Discourse about?

Harris. We were talking of murdering the Prince of Orange; And not only that, but I do believe that Mr. Lowick is so sensible that what I say is true, and he is a Man of so much Conscience and Honour, that he will not contradict any thing that I affirm or have said here. On Saturday the Two-and-Twentieth we dined at the Castle, a Tavern or a Cook's Shop, at the End of Red-Lyon Street. I was much in a Sweat, and he asked me what made me so? I told him I had been getting Captain Rookwood's Party ready; and I told him (laughing) that Captain Rookwood said I should be his Aid du Camp, and so I was getting the Men together: Says he to me, You may very well do it, for you have Six Shillings a-Day, and I have nothing. Mr. Lowick, you know what I say to be true; I know not why you lift up your Hands; but you did tell me I might very well do it, having six Shillings a-Day, and you had nothing, and yet brought a Couple of Men at your own Charge, and that their Horses could not be discharged unless you went. These were his Words, my Lord, or to this effect.

Mr. Att. Gen. What do you mean by being discharged?

Harris. I mean this, that I believe he paid for them; and they were waiting at a House till he came.

Mr. Conyers. Why were they to be discharged that Day?

Harris. The Reason why they were to be discharged that Day, was, because Captain Rookwood had told him before, that the Prince of Orange did not go out that Day; and therefore we went together to walk towards Islington.

L. O. J. What Day was that?

4 Z

Harris,

Har. The second Saturday that it was to have been executed. I was not a Spy upon any Man's Actions: I cannot tell what they did any more than I tell you: I do not wrong you any Way in the World, Sir, I am sure on it.

L. C. J. When was it that you spoke with Mr. Lowick about murdering the King?

Har. It was Munday, Tuesday, Wednesday, or Thursday, I cannot be exact to the Day, but it was one of these Days, after the first Saturday; I cannot be positive what the Day was.

L. C. J. Well, it was between the two Days?—Har. Yes, it was.

L. C. J. How did you know of that Design of murdering the King?

Har. I was inform'd of it by Captain Rookwood the first Saturday, and I met Mr. Lowick, and had this Discourse about it: and afterwards they inform'd me that Mr. De la Rue did not lie at his Lodgings, and the Thing was discovered, and they believed that Rue had discovered it: And I desire you'll call Mr. De la Rue as to this Matter; for I believe he will own it.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How came you to trust him with such a Discourse?

Har. Because we met there at Counter's Lodgings, and we had several times Discourses of it; there was Major Bernard and Capt. Rookwood besides, and I always declared against it as a barbarous and inhuman Thing, not to be answer'd before God or Man, and that we should be odious to all the World if the Thing were effected, as I believ'd it would not be. I would never shew my Head after such a Thing.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember who began the Discourse of this Matter?—Har. I cannot tell that. I can't come to every Particular.

Sir B. Shower. You said just now, you apprehended Mr. Lowick to be a Man of Conscience and Honour; Pray what were his Sentiments about it?

Har. His Sentiment was, That he would obey Sir George Barclay's Orders; and he was sure Sir George Barclay would not do it without Orders.

Sir B. Shower. Did not he declare it to be a barbarous Design?

Har. I can't remember every particular Thing that he said; for I am not a Spy upon any Man's Actions.

Lowick. When you were talking of that Design that you speak of, pray, did I consent to any such Thing?

Har. I tell you how far you consented; you said you wou'd obey Sir George Barclay's Orders, and you was sure he would not do it without Orders.

Mr. Mompesson. Did you see any of Sir George Barclay's Orders?

Har. No, I did not, I was to follow his Orders; but what Orders he had I cannot tell.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What did Sir George Barclay tell you you were to do?

Har. Sir George Barclay declared, on the first Saturday, that we were his Janizaries, and talk'd of attacking and bringing away the Garter: I cannot say this Gentleman was by then; and afterwards Sir George Barclay went out and returned, and came in again into the Room, and declared that we were Men of Honour, and that we were to attack the Prince of Orange.

Mr. Mompesson. Did Sir George Barclay give the Prisoner at the Bar any Orders?—Har. I don't tell you he did.

Mr. Mompesson. You say you met Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes upon the Road going to Islington: How do you know the Prisoner was there?

Har. Why, was not I with him? I am very sorry to come upon this Account; but you know it is Truth all that I say; and I am sure you are sensible I do you no Wrong: He met Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes, and he went down and said something to Sir George Barclay in the Highway, what it was I don't know; but I stood, and Captain Rookwood and Mr. Bernard said something to him, which you very well know.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was it?—Har. I can't tell, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. We do not desire you to tell what you can't tell: Is this all you know?

Har. It is all at present that I recollect.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then pray swear Mr. Bertram. [Which was done.]

Mr. Conyers. Pray will you give an Account to my Lord and the Jury what you know of this intended Assassination, and how far the Prisoner was concerned in it.

Bertram. My Lord, about the Beginning of February last, Major Lowick came to me, and ask'd me if I would espouse a Thing with him that might be for my Advantage; I told him that I thought I might espouse any Thing that he thought fit to engage in.

Mr. Mompesson. Whom did you tell so?

Bertram. Major Lowick: And he told me it was well, and desired me to ask no more Questions: I did not; but it went on to the 14th of February, when he desired me to be at his Lodgings at Twelve o'Clock. I was so about that Time, but he was not within, and I stay'd till he came in, and he took me up into his Chamber, and told me he believed they should ride out in some little Time; and he told me he believed the King was to be seiz'd in his Coach, and he gave me a Guinea to buy me Necessaries.

L. C. J. What Necessaries?—Bertram. I can't say he nam'd any.

Mr. Att. Gen. But for what Purpose were those Necessaries?

Bertram. I don't know that he nam'd any Thing, indeed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well; did he tell you when you were to be ready?

Bertram. If you please to give me leave, I'll tell you: He desired me not to be out of the Way; and the next Morning I was to meet him at the Purl-House in Hart-street. I did not meet him; and the next Time I saw him, I am not positive whether it was the next Day after the Fifteenth when I was to meet him at Hart-street, but did not so; but the next Time I saw him, he ask'd me why I did not meet him according to his Appointment? I told him, I had some Reason for it; and he answer'd me again, That he believed, if the King had been in the Field, I would have done the same; but I have not seen him since, till I saw him at the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had you no Discourse of Horfes that you were to provide?

Bertram. I do not remember any particular Thing more than I have told you.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he not tell you what the Design was you were to go about?

Bertram. He did not tell me of any other Design than as I tell you, for he believed I knew of it; I thought so at least: The first time I knew of it was from Mr. Charnock.

L. C. J. What did he tell you was the Design that you should engage in for your Advantage upon Friday the 14th, when he gave you the Guinea?

Bertram. He told me, he believed they should ride out very suddenly, and that the King was to be seized in his Coach.

L. C. J. Did he tell you when the King was to be seized?

Bertram. No, he did not tell me when; but this was the 14th, the next Morning I was to meet him at Hart-street, but did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Who did he tell you the King was to be seiz'd by?

Bertram. He did not nominate any one else, for he oblig'd me not to ask him Questions, nor I did not.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did he name himself to be concerned?

Bertram. He named himself so far, as that he believed he should ride out very suddenly.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Was it the next Morning, or the next Day?

Bertram. I cannot say that he named any particular Time.

Mr. Att. Gen. Will they ask him any Questions?

Sir B. Shower. No, I think we shall not.

Mr. Mountague. Pray, Mr. Bertram, will you answer me one Question, What did he say to you when he check'd you for not coming according to his Appointment?

Bertram. I took it as a Kind of a Check: He told me, that if the King had been in the Field, he believed I would have done the same.

Sir B. Shower. There is one Thing we must a little examine this Gentleman to: Were not you under a Necessity before that Time that he gave you the Guinea? Pray what Condition were you in?

Bertram. Under Necessity, Sir! I was never very plentiful of Money of late.

Sir B. Shower. Did he never give you a Guinea or two before in Charity, and out of Compassion to your Necessities?

Bertram. He has given me Money several Times before; and I believe if I would have ask'd him for any Money, he would have given it me.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was this Money given you for Charity, or for any other, and what Purpose?

Bertram. I did not ask him for any thing; but he gave it me, and said, There's a Guinea to buy you Necessaries.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was the Discourse before that?

Bertram. I told you, he said, he believed they were to ride out very suddenly, and he believed the King was to be seized in his Coach, and he desired me not to be out of the Way.

Mr. Cowper. And when he gave you the Guinea to buy you Necessaries, was it immediately after this Discourse?

Bertram. Sir, it was at the same Time.

Lowick. Did not I give your Wife a Guinea two Months before this?

Bertram. Yes, Sir; I acknowledge I was inform'd you did, I was not in Town then.

Lowick. Pray, let the Court know that.

L. C. J. Did he tell you the King was to be seized in his Coach, before he told you they were to ride out very suddenly?

Bertram. No, afterwards; and then he gave me the Guinea.

Sir B. Shower. His words are not coupled together, they have no Relation to one another.

L. C. J. No; but he told him they were to ride out very suddenly, and the King was to be seized in his Coach, and gave him a Guinea to buy him Necessaries at the same Time.

L. C. J. Treby. There's no doubt he was engaged in the Design with those other Persons.

Mr. Conyers. And afterwards he rebuked him because he had not met him; and he said, it would have been the same Thing if the King had been in the Field.

Mr. Mountague. What Day in the Week was it that you failed him?

Bertram. It was on a Saturday.

Juryman. Pray, my Lord, we desire to know, who he did understand by the King that was to be seized?

L. C. J. What did he call the King?

Bertram. He said nothing but the King.

L. C. J. Who did you understand by that?

Bertram. I leave it to the Court, I am not to interpret Things.

L. C. J. Treby. Did he name the Prince of Orange, or King James? Did you think King James was to be seized?

Bertram. My Lord, I tell you what he said, I am not to interpret his Words.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you believe he meant King James, or this King, that was to be seized?

Bertram. I believe it might be the King here.

L. C. J. Take the Words as they are; he ask'd him before, Whether he would engage in a Design that might be for his Advantage? On Friday the 14th of February he meets him at his Lodging, and tells him, he was to ride out suddenly, and that the King was to be seized in his Coach, and appointed him to meet him the next Morning, and gave him a Guinea to buy him Necessaries.

Mr. Mompesson. Pray, has not Mr. Lowick given you Clothes, Linen and other Things at any other Time?

Bertram. Sir, you have been always ready to serve me, I must acknowledge, and you have been very kind to me.

Lowick. If you please to give an Account of my Character, whether ever I was guilty of any bloody Thing,-----Bertram. No, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. How long have you known Mr. Lowick?

Bertram. I believe I have known him this 20 Years.

Sir B. Shower. What Behaviour has he been of?

Bertram. He has always had very good Behaviour, and the best; he has had the best Character of all Mankind.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ever know him inclin'd to do a rash Action?

Bertram. Never in my Life.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ever know him do a malicious Action?

Bertram. No; but he had always the Character of a good Man, and was always ready to serve any Man in his Necessities, and to do Good; he has that general Character abroad.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Where does he live?
Bertram. He lived last at Brownlow-street, but he has no Wife nor Family, and so has no fix'd Being.
L. C. J. What was his Way of Living?
Bertram. He was bred a Soldier, and has been abroad.
L. C. J. Where?—Bertram. In Ireland.
L. C. J. In whose Service?
Bertram. In the Service of King James.
Lowick. He knows particularly, that once I was upon a Party, and saved five Officers from being killed in cold Blood.
L. C. J. What Countryman is he?—Bertram. Yorkshire.
Mr. Mompesson. Was he accounted of a cruel or a bloody Nature?
Bertram. No; of a quite contrary.
Juryman. My Lord, I desire to know for what Cause he gave him or his Wife a Guinea.
Bertram. I know not what that Guinea was for that he gave me the fourteenth of February, any otherwise than as I have told you.
Mr. Mompesson. What was the Guinea given to your Wife for?
Bertram. For that Guinea given to my Wife, it was out of his own Kindness and Goodness to my Family and me.
Mr. Att. Gen. What was the other Guinea for? You are upon your Oath.
Bertram. Indeed, Sir, I cannot tell; he gave it me to buy me Necessaries.
Mr. Att. Gen. Was there nothing else mentioned, what Necessaries those were to be?
Bertram. No, Sir; upon my Oath there was not any Particular mentioned.
Mr. Att. Gen. What made him so kind to you, pray?
Bertram. We were both born in a Town, and I believe we are near related.
Sir B. Shower. You say you are Towns-People, and have been long acquainted, and you knew him in Ireland; pray, did you ever know that he saved any People's Lives?
Bertram. I was not in that Action myself, but all that were in it gave that Relation, that he was very favourable, and did save People's Lives, particularly one Captain Harlow, and brought him and other Prisoners, and I remember the Thing: It was about a Fortnight before the Buſiness of the Boyns, upon a Sunday Morning, that they took those Prisoners, and he did persuade several Parties that he commanded, to decline killing as much as they could: I was not in this Action, but this I heard of all that were in it, and from the Prisoner.
Mr. Sol. Gen. When he gave you that Guinea, did not he speak any Thing of a Horse that was to be provided for you?
Bertram. Not a Word: I never did see a Horse upon that Account, nor was I Master of a Horse, nor was I told I should have a Horse in any respect whatsoever.
Juryman. How could you ride out, as you say they were to do, without a Horse, or without knowing any Thing of a Horse to be provided for you?
Bertram. I did not know of a Horse.
L. C. J. But he said you were to ride out speedily.
Bertram. No: he said in general, we should ride out suddenly.
Mr. Att. Gen. Who was there besides yourself?—Bertram. Nobody.
Mr. Att. Gen. Then that we must mean you and him. And how were to ride out without a Horse? Pray mind what you swear.
Bertram. I was to meet him the next Morning, but did not.
Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what cou'd you understand by that, that you were you to ride out suddenly, and had no Horse?
Bertram. That was understood, that if I did ride out, I must have a Horse.
Mr. Att. Gen. Who should you have it from? Had you a Horse of your own?—Bertram. No, I had not.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did you intend to hire a Horse?
Bertram. No, I did not.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did not you ask where you were to have a Horse?
Bertram. No, I did not ask nor inquire, nor was it promis'd me I should have a Horse.
Mr. Att. Gen. Did he tell you where you were to ride?
Bertram. The next Morning I was to meet him.
Mr. Att. Gen. For what? To ride out was it?
Bertram. I can't really tell whether it was upon that Account or not.
Mr. Att. Gen. Whether did he tell you where he was to ride?
Bertram. Indeed, he did not.
Juryman. It is very strange that you did not ask him where he was to go, nor ask him for a Horse.
Bertram. I was so senseless, that I neither did ask him about a Horse, nor ever knew of any that was to be provided for me.
Juryman. Did you understand what was meant by the Riding out suddenly?
Bertram. I did take it to be about the Buſiness, the seizing of the King.
Juryman. Did he compare it to attacking him in the Field?
Bertram. No, he did not; but he said, he believed the King would be seized in his Coach; he made no Comparisons.
Mr. Mountague. Pray, Mr. Bertram, why did you not meet him? What Reasons had you for not doing it?
Bertram. I thought it not requisite to meet him.
Mr. Mountague. What! had you no Mind to the Thing?
Bertram. No, I had not; because I thought the Thing very unlawful.
Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, what was that Thing you speak of, that you thought was unlawful?
Bertram. I thought it was about seizing and killing the King.
L. C. J. Pray, mind; there is nobody desires you should speak more than the Truth; but on the other side, being upon your Oath, you are to speak the whole Truth; for if you conceal any Part of the Truth, though you have a Kindness for your Countryman, Mr. Lowick, who has been kind to you, you will forswear yourself, for you make a different Representation of the Matter, and make it appear quite otherwise than it is; pray do not strain one little, but let us have all the Truth.
Bertram. I don't believe I strain one Bit.
Mr. Mountague. Then tell my Lord why you did not meet him?
Bertram. I did believe it was about seizing and killing the King, and I did think it to be illegal.

Mr. Mountague. Why did you think it was about that?
Bertram. Because Mr. Charnock had told me of it before.
Mr. Att. Gen. How did you know that was what Lowick spoke to you about?
Bertram. I did suppose it to be the same, because he desired me at first to ask no Questions, no more did I; but I took it always to be the same Thing.
Mr. Att. Gen. What did he say to you?
Bertram. He told me he had a Buſiness to propose to me, if I would engage in, that would be for my Advantage, but I must ask no Questions; talk'd of Riding out suddenly, and that the King was to be seized in his Coach; and having heard of it from Charnock, I thought it was the same Buſiness.
Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have one Witness more. Call Capt. Fisher. [He did not appear.] If he does not appear, we shall let them go on, and when he comes in, we can examine him afterwards.
L. C. J. Is he a material Witness?
Mr. Sol. Gen. We do apprehend he is a very material Witness.
L. C. J. If you think him a material Witness, it will not be proper for them to enter upon their Defence, till they have heard the whole Accusation.

The Court staid for Mr. Fisher's coming for near an Hour, and at last he came in and was sworn.

L. C. J. Who is this?
Mr. Att. Gen. This is one Captain Fisher.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray, Captain Fisher, do you know Mr. Lowick, the Prisoner at the Bar?
Capt. Fisher. I have not talked with Mr. Lowick since the 8th of February, and then he talked that he would be ready to serve his Master to the uttermost of his Power.
Mr. Att. Gen. What Master?—Capt. Fisher. King James.
Mr. Att. Gen. What particular Service?
Capt. Fisher. He named no particular Service, but only that he would be ready to serve his Master to the uttermost of his Power.
Mr. Att. Gen. Where was this?
Capt. Fisher. At the Cock in Bow-street.
Mr. Att. Gen. Who was in Company?
Capt. Fisher. There was Mr. Harrison.
Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, give an Account of what you know of this barbarous, bloody Design.
Capt. Fisher. I believe there was a Design to seize the Prince of Orange.
Mr. Att. Gen. What do you know of it? You say you believe it.
Capt. Fisher. I believe it by my Knowledge, because I was concerned in it.
Mr. Att. Gen. By whom was that Design carried on?
Capt. Fisher. By Sir George Barclay and Mr. Harrison.
L. C. J. What was the Design?
Capt. Fisher. We were to fall upon the Prince of Orange.
L. C. J. You called him so, the Prince of Orange?
Capt. Fisher. Yes, my Lord.
Mr. Att. Gen. Well, tell us what happened.
Capt. Fisher. It was to have been done the 15th of February, and we met accordingly the 14th, but the King not going Abroad, it was put off.
L. C. J. Who met on the 14th?
Capt. Fisher. I met only Mr. Harrison and Sir George Barclay, then it was put off till the 22d; upon the 21st, we met at the Three-Tuns in Holbourn, and from thence we came to the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and there was nobody but Mr. Harrison and I together, and Sir George Barclay came to us; I believe there were about 14 or 16 in the House; there Sir George Barclay told me, Mr. Lowick was to meet me and two more at an Inn by St. Giles's Pound, and that we were to go together to seize the Prince of Orange the 22d.
L. C. J. Did you meet him?
Capt. Fisher. I did not meet him, it being put off by the King's not going abroad.
L. C. J. This does not affect Mr. Lowick at all.
Mr. Att. Gen. It does not, we acknowledge; but at that Time which you speak of, the 8th of February, had you any Knowledge of the Assassination?
Capt. Fisher. There was no Assassination at that Time, at least, it was not then declared.
Mr. Att. Gen. What was your Discourse about then?
Capt. Fisher. There was Notice of the King's preparing to come for England.
Mr. Att. Gen. You say Mr. Harrison was there?
Capt. Fisher. Yes, and talked very little about the Matter, but only that there were Preparations for the King's coming.
Mr. Att. Gen. What did Lowick say to you?
Capt. Fisher. I have told you all that Mr. Lowick said to me.
Mr. Att. Gen. Repeat it again.
Capt. Fisher. He said he would be ready to serve his Master to the uttermost of his Power.
Mr. Cowper. Had you no Discourse about an Act of Parliament?
Capt. Fisher. Mr. Lowick said it was not convenient to talk with more than one at any Time, for there was an Act of Parliament on Foot, that under two Witnesses nothing should affect a Man's Life in Treason.
Mr. Att. Gen. The Act of Parliament was then a-making.
L. C. J. When Mr. Lowick said he would serve his Master, what Discourse had you about it?
Capt. Fisher. Mr. Lowick said not a Word within, but at the Door he said he would serve his Master to his Power.
Mr. Att. Gen. What was that, that they would not talk with above one at a time?
Capt. Fisher. Nothing that was thought treasonable Practices should be discoursed before above one at a time; so I understood it.
Mr. Sol. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have done.
Sir B. Shower. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury; I am of Counsel in this Case for the Prisoner at the Bar, and we do hope here is not Evidence sufficient to convict him of High-Treason; the Question is not, Whether there was a Plot or a Conspiracy to Assassinate nate the King, or to prepare for an Invasion; but all that you are to consider, Gentlemen, is, whether the Evidence against Mr. Lowick be sufficient to convince you, that he did design to Seize and Assassinate the King; there are three Witnesses produced; but we think this last Witness, Fisher, his Testimony does not hurt him in the least. We know your Lordship will declare and direct the Jury, that the Evidence in a Case of Treason ought to be plain, not only with respect to the Fact, that it was done, but also of such Facts as are the Evidences of a Man's Intentions; and those are not to be construed by Strains and Intendments, or Implications, unless they be such as Evidently, Naturally, and to common Understanding express the Intention, it cannot be good Evidence in Treason: Now we say, that Captain Fisher has said nothing at all that will affect the Prisoner; for all that he says is, that the Eighth of February he said he was ready to serve his Master to the utmost of his Power, and any Words as well as these may be construed to make a Man guilty of Treasonable Intentions; for it might be a Recollection of Favours received, or it might be a grateful Intent to serve him upon particular Occasions; but that is no Evidence upon this Indictment. Suppose it was to serve him upon the supposed intended Invasion, yet, with Submission, that is not Evidence of the Overt-Act laid here; here is no Overt-Act mentioned of preparing Arms, or Encouraging Men, or Seducing the King's Subjects, in order to the better restoring of the late King James, or the expected Landing of the French, or the like. All that is laid to the Prisoner's Charge is, the Compassing the King's Death, and a Design to Assassinate him in his Coach; and in order to the Assassination, he was to buy Arms and Horses: Now all that he says is quite of another Nature, of a quite different Strain, and has no Tendency to this Matter; and nothing he says that Lowick should say, but is applicable the other Way, and tends more naturally to the Invasion, than to the Assassination. Your Lordship observes, there was some Notice taken of what Mr. Lowick should say, concerning the Act of Parliament, that he would not talk with above one at a Time: How far, when Life is concerned, such loose Discourse ought to be enforced before a Jury, I must leave to your Lordship; though a Man may be innocent, yet he may be cautious, and the more innocent, perhaps the more cautious; but that is applicable to the Invasion too, and has no Relation to the Treason in this Indictment more than any other. It shews he was more wary than others were, but it is not applicable to the Fact that he now stands charged with. Then the whole of the Evidence depends upon the Testimony of Mr. Harris and Mr. Bertram; and we think they are not two Witnesses to one Thing, and what they say must be strained, and intended, and presumed, to make Evidence of Treason; for what Mr. Harris says about the Discourses between him and the late King James, about receiving Orders from Sir George Barclay, and his Passage over from France, and the several Stages he and Mr. Hare travell'd, and the Discourses between Sir George Barclay and him: Your Lordship will acquaint the Jury, that is no Evidence to affect Mr. Lowick, nor what Berkenhead and Hare agreed upon does any way affect Mr. Lowick; for those Things may be all true, and yet Mr. Lowick innocent of what he stands charged with in this Indictment; he says, That upon the first Saturday he saw Mr. Lowick at the Confectioner's, but he cannot say he staid there at all; there was not a Word spoken by Mr. Lowick that he remembers then, but what he says that seems to touch, and the only Thing that touches Mr. Lowick in all this Evidence is, that upon Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday or Thursday, it is a pretty large Time, between the Fifteenth and the Twenty-second, he was talking with Mr. Lowick about the Barbarity of this Business, and that Lowick after all said he would obey Orders: Now with Submission, my Lord, to make that to have Relation to the Assassination must be by a forc'd, strain'd Intendment; he does not declare what the Orders were; nay, he does not affirm there were any Orders for the Assassination, but only that he would obey Orders; here's no Order by Writing, no Order by Parole that Mr. Lowick declared he would obey. As to what Lowick declared about his Intention of Riding out and Seizing the King in his Coach, that cannot be intended; the Order that he was to obey to assassinate the King, that Order does not appear; there are no Footsteps of it in all the Evidence; so that there is nothing in Testimony that will hurt Mr. Lowick: Then upon the Two-and-twentieth, when they dined together, Mr. Harris says, that there was a Discourse of two Men; but it does not appear, nor does the Witness give any Account what those two Men were to be for: 'Tis true, two Men he was to get discharged; but that is not Evidence that these Men were to make a Part of those Forty; neither the Words before nor the Words after can have that Construction; nay, it does not appear it was for any Purpose at all: Now in the Case of Life, where a Man stands at the Bar, we hope such an Evidence shall not be construed to make a Proof of a Treasonable Intention, that these were to assassinate the King, or to make Part of the Forty that were to do it; when it does not appear they were there, nor who they were, nor any Sort of Notice taken or given upon what Account they were provided. And then as to Mr. Bertram's Evidence, it is palpable that his Evidence, and whatsoever he says, cannot amount to make one Witness to prove an Overt-Act within this Statute, and that there must be two Witnesses the Law requires. What does Mr. Bertram say, to prove any Man guilty of Treason, but only by Intendment, Thought or Suspicion? It is true, Mr. Bertram's Evidence would be good enough to commit a Man upon Suspicion of Treason, but to Convict him it cannot be. He says, that in the Beginning of February he spoke to him, and told him he would employ him in a Business that would be for his Advantage, but he must ask no Questions: This is very dark, for the Meaning of it does not appear what was intended by it; it might be one Thing as well as another; it might be to employ him in his Family, or it might be to fend him of a Journey, or it might be the taking of a Farm; but to apply that as an Evidence of a Charge of High-Treason, that we think is very hard, and we hope your Lordship will think so too: But then he comes and tells you further of a Discourse upon the Fourteenth, of his riding out suddenly, and that the King was to be seized in his Coach; but he does not say that he was to seize him, nor that he would be concerned in it, nor that he knew of it, nor did declare at what time it was to be done, nor any thing certain whether it was a Prophecy, or a Dream, or a Story that he related again, or what it was; there is no Connection between the Riding out suddenly, and the other Words of seizing the King in his Coach: Then he says he gave him a Guinea to buy him Necessaries; the Man acknowledges Mr. Lowick several times had given him in Charity-Money Clothes and other Things, and gave his Wife a Guinea, as you observe, in Charity; but he gave him this Guinea on Purpose to buy him Necessaries; and it is hard that a Man's Charity to a Countryman, to a Townsman, to an ancient Acquaintance of Twenty Years standing, to a Person that he had been familiar with formerly, and known to have lived well, should be misinterpreted and strain'd, to make it a giving him Money as Subsistence, and a Reward for the doing such a Mischievous Bloody Act: We say, his Charity to this Man formerly is inconsistent with the Supposition that he could be privy to such a barbarous Design now; and we hope the Jury will consider the Character that that very Man has given to my Client; for the same Witness gives you an Account of his Behaviour all along, that he was not given to Rash and Barbarous Actions, nor guilty of any Malicious Thing; nay, that he prevented Mischief, and the Killing of People in cold Blood. We must leave it to the Jury's Consideration, and your Lordship's Direction. All these Things that they say may be true, and Lowick be not guilty; and the acquitting of Mr. Lowick will be no Reflection upon the Witnesses, nor any Discredit to the Testimony that has been given of this Conspiracy; but we hope 'tis doing Justice to this Man, the Witnesses not coming up to the Proof of what is laid in the Indictment. We must beg your Lordship's Patience a little longer, and call some Witnesses to give you an Account how long they have known Mr. Lowick, and what his real Character is; they will tell you he is a peaceable, good Man, and shew you that his Temper and Inclination was rather to a sober, quiet Life, than to lead him to such Action, and that they cannot think him likely to be tempted to be concerned in such a Design; and then we must leave it to the Jury. Call Mrs. Yorke.

Lowick. I believe there is nobody here that knows me, but will give me that Character. (Mrs. Yorke came in, and was sworn.)

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Mrs. Yorke, how long have you known Mr. Lowick?

Yorke. About a Dozen or Fourteen Years.

Sir B. Shower. What Sort of Disposition is he of?

Yorke. He is a Civil, Honest Man as ever I saw in my Life, or ever knew of; and I never heard otherwise from any one that knew him.

Sir B. Shower. What was he in his Actions? Was he Malicious, or Good-natur'd?

Yorke. As good a natur'd Man as ever I saw.

Mr. Mompesson. Has he the Reputation of a Cruel, Bloody-minded Man?

Yorke. Quite the contrary. He lodged in my House half a Year; it is not quite a Year ago since he lay at my House. He was the most obliging Man that ever lay in my House. He was so civil to all the Lodgers, that they admired him for his Goodness, and made them in Love with him.

L. C. J. How came he to lodge at your House?

Yorke. He came from his other Landlady; they could not agree; his other Landlady was a Sort of a Shrew, and therefore he did not care for staying there; and I desired his Company, because I knew him to be so obliging and civil a Man.

L. C. J. Where is your House?

Yorke. In Bloomsbury.

L. C. J. What is his Way of Living? Is he a Man of an Estate?

Yorke. I cannot tell; I did not enquire into that.

L. C. J. Had he no Employment to get his Living by?

Yorke. I do not know any Thing of that; I never enquired into it; he paid me very honestly for my Lodging, and he is a very good Man, for any Thing I know.

Sir B. Shower. Then call Mrs. Mosely.

(She came in, and was sworn.)

L. C. J. Well, what do you ask this Gentlewoman?

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Mrs. Mosely, will you tell my Lord and the Jury, do you know Mr. Lowick?

Mosely. Yes, Sir, I do.

Sir B. Shower. How long have you known him?

Mosely. Near Twenty Years.

Sir B. Shower. Pray give an Account, upon your Knowledge, what Disposition and Temper he is of, whether he is Rash, Malicious, Bloody, and Ill-natur'd.

Mosely. He is a peaceable, virtuous, honest Man, and a Man that I never heard or saw that Creature that could speak any ill Thing of him in my Life; nor I never heard him speak any Thing maliciously of any Creature in my Life, to do them a Prejudice: So far from that, that he is a Man has a Character, perhaps, above any Man that I could speak or hear of in my Life. I speak it even above my own Relations; they may have some Passions; but I never see that Gentleman in a Passion in my Life. He has lain in my House several Times, and he has had Company come to him, but never any that was Scandalous one Way or other. I never saw him fuddled; nor ever heard him swear, nor any one accuse him of any of those Things.

Mr. Mompesson. Call Dr. William Mew.

(He did not appear.)

Sir B. Shower. The Prisoner has something to say for himself, my Lord; but we must submit to your Lordship's Consideration, and the Jury's, whether there be any Evidence but what is dark, and favours of Suspicion only; suspicious it is; but whether there be any Evidence that is plain and direct as the Law requires in Cases of High-Treason, we must leave it to your Consideration, for we apprehend there is none.

Lowick. My Lord, as to this Business, the Thing that I stand accused of, the Assassination, I know nothing in the World of it, nor never did, directly or indirectly; and if I am convicted, and could, to save my Life, be the Death of the poorest Child in the World, I would not save my Life to do it.

L. C. J.

L. C. J. Look you, I would put you to make Answer to some Things; you were at Sir George Barclay's, at the Confectioner's in Holbourn; and it is sworn he came over upon such a Design. Then you were with Mr. Harris at Red-Lion-Fields, and there he was speaking to you of the Horridness of the Design that was to be executed upon the King's Person the Saturday before, and he told you he did dislike it; and thereupon you answered that you would obey Orders, and that Sir George Barclay had Orders for it, otherwise he would not do it.

Lowick. Sir George Barclay never spoke one Word of it to me.

L. C. J. Every Body knows now upon what Design he came over from France, and when Mr. Harris shewed Dissatisfaction with the Thing, you made that Answer to his Discourse.

Lowick. He never said one Syllable to me of it. I trust to your Lordship's Judgment, and the Jury's Mercy.

L. C. J. And then I would have you answer to another Thing; when you dined together on the Saturday the two-and-twentieth, what were those two Men that could not be discharged without you?

Lowick. My Lord, I know nothing in the World of two Men.

L. C. J. You went to discharge them, for the King did not go abroad that Day.

Lowick. I know nothing of it.

L. C. J. He swears this, and that's as to him; but then as to Bertram, what design was that that you were to engage Bertram in for his Advantage, and he was to ask no Questions?

Lowick. My Lord, he is a poor Man, and my Countryman, and I have at all Times, from time to time, for this seven Years, helped to subvert him and his Family, that he will not deny; and I have several Times given him both Clothes and Money.

L. C. J. Then I would ask you again, When he came to your Lodging on Friday the 14th of February, and you told him the King was to be seized in his Coach, and said that we were to ride out very suddenly, and you appointed him to meet the next Morning; and because he did not meet you blamed him, and said, It would have been the same Thing if the King had been in the Field. Look you, I would have you give Answer to this if you can.

Lowick. I remember nothing in the World of it, not a Word I assure you; and to the best of my Remembrance, I did not see him in two Days after.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I must beg leave to answer to the Objection that the Counsel for the Prisoner have made, that there are not two Witnesses to prove the Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, and so the Law is not satisfied. In Answer to that, I desire your Lordship's Favour to observe how the Evidence is, and then we shall see whether there are not plainly two positive Witnesses of the Overt-Act, by agreeing to assassinate the King. The first Witness is Mr. Harris; your Lordship observes, that Mr. Harris gives an Account that Mr. Lowick was at Sir George Barclay's Lodgings the first Day that it was to have been executed; and that afterwards, between the fifteenth and the two-and-twentieth, those being the first and second Days that this was to be done, when he and Rookwood, and the Prisoner Lowick, were walking together in Red-Lion-Fields; and there had some Discourse about the intended Assassination, and the Barbarity and Bloodiness of it, and Mr. Harris and Mr. Rookwood were averre to it. Mr. Lowick said he would obey Orders, and he was sure Sir George Barclay would not do it unless he had direct Orders for it; that was twice repeated by him, as Harris swears: And afterwards Mr. Harris tells you, that the two-and-twentieth he dined with Mr. Lowick, and Mr. Lowick observed that Mr. Harris came in, in a great Sweat, and asked him how it happened; he said he had been about to get ready Rookwood's Party that were to seize the King; for he was to have one Party. Says Mr. Lowick to him, You need not grudge to do it, you have six Shillings a Day, I have nothing; and yet I, at my own Charge, am to provide two. This is as positive Evidence as well can be of his being privy to the Design; and his engaging People at his own Charge, shews a great deal of Forwardness and Zeal in the Prisoner to the Business. My Lord, I think this is positive and plain Evidence, and not only made out by Inferences and Constructions, as Sir B. Shower says, but plain, positive Proof. The first Day he was with several of them, and when they discoursed of the Thing afterwards, he declared he would obey Orders; and what could those Orders be but for what they were discoursing of? And nothing was discoursed of but this Design they were engaged in, and this was to justify the Thing, and take off the Apprehension of the Barbarity of it: This is Harris's Testimony. The next Witness is Bertram, and he tells you, that the fifth of February the Prisoner sent for him, and when he came to him, he asked if he would engage in a Business that might be for his Advantage, and ask no Questions; so at that Time he did not acquaint him what the Thing was, but that shews it was a Thing that was to be kept secret at that Time, in regard he did not think fit to acquaint him at the first Instance. But the fourteenth of February, when he met him again, the Day before the first Time that it was to be put in Execution, Bertram swears he told him that they were to ride out the next Morning; that must be Lowick and Bertram, for there was nobody else there; and that the Prince of Orange was to be seized in his Coach. Was it possible the Prisoner could be ignorant of it? When he engaged him to go upon a Design without asking Questions; sent for him the Day before, acquainted him they were to ride out the next Morning, and that the King was to be seized in his Coach, and bid him be ready against next Morning, and gave him a Guinea at that Time; the Witness says it was for Necessaries, but he does not pretend that it was for Charity, as formerly. And that must be for Necessaries for that Purpose that they were then discoursing of, when he desired him to be ready the next Day, and gives him Money to buy him Necessaries: What can that be, but Necessaries for what he was to be ready for? And then he did not come the next Day, and he tells you why, because he thought it a very wicked and unlawful Thing, and so he disappointed him; and the next Time Lowick chid him, and told him, he would have served him so if the King had been in the Field. This is plain, though I believe Bertram does speak as tenderly as he can, being his Friend and old Acquaintance, and is willing to say as little as he can of him: So that I believe nobody thinks but what Bertram says against the Prisoner is true, and what he swears is plain and positive. To shew that Lowick did engage in the Design, he acquainted him with it the fourteenth, by telling him the King was to be seized; and they were to ride out; and he was to be ready the next Day.

Vol. IV.

L. C. J. He does not say they were to ride out the next Day.

Sir B. Shower. No, the Words were, We are to ride out suddenly.

Mr. Att. Gen. I think he did say they were to ride out the next Morning.

L. C. J. No, Call him in again.

Mr. Cowper. The Words were, We shall ride out suddenly, and bid him meet him next Morning; and afterwards chid him for not meeting accordingly, and told him it had been the same Thing if the King had been in the Field.

L. C. J. If you cannot agree upon the Evidence, you must call in the Witnesses.

Mr. Mountague. My Lord, we are agreed upon the Evidence, it was suddenly.

L. C. J. Well then, there is no Occasion; have you done on both Sides?

Counsel. Yes, my Lord, we submit it to your Lordship.

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, this Prisoner at the Bar, Robert Lowick, is Indicted of High-Treason, for Compassing and Imagining the Death and Destruction of the King by an Assassination; you have heard what Evidence has been given upon this Indictment. And in the first Place, It is proved to you that there was a Design to assassinate the King, which was to be carried on under the Conduct and Management of Sir George Barclay. The Question that you are now to consider of is, whether the Prisoner at the Bar was concerned or engaged in the Prosecution of that Design? There have been two Witnesses produced, who have given their Evidence, and have been very strictly examined, and Observations have been made upon the Testimony they have given.

The first Witness is Mr. Harris; and he gives you some Account of the Original of this Design. He tells you how he was at St. Germain's, and introduced to the late King James, who did express a great Kindness for him, and told him that he had an Opportunity of doing something for him that would be for his Advantage: And that he and one Hare, who was present at that Time, should go into England, (for it seems they were both together introduced by Colonel Parker) and should be subsisted in England; and thereupon Directions were given them what Course they were to take; which was to go to Calais, and to each of them Ten Livres were given for their Charges; and they were acquainted, that if it happened that if they should lie there so long for Want of a Wind to bring them over hither that their Money was spent, Provision should be made for their Supply there. They had farther Directions, that when they came into England, they should apply themselves to Sir George Barclay, and follow his Orders, with Instructions how to find him; being told that Sir George Barclay would be walking in Covent-Garden every Monday, and every Thursday Night, about the Hours of six or seven o'Clock, and that they should know him by a white Handkerchief that was to hang out of his Pocket.

Mr. Harris further tells you, That they did come to Calais in order to embark for England, and there they happened to stay a considerable Time, even so long that their Money would not defray their Expenses there, and they found it true as it was promised them; for the President of Calais paid the Reckoning for them at the Place where they lodged; and afterwards they came into England, and landed in Kent, and came to Rochester, and from thence to London. About the latter End of January, Old Stile (for it should seem it was the 14th New Stile, which is the 4th Old Stile, they were at St. Germain's), he tells you that he did go, the first Monday after their Arrival, into Covent-Garden, to look after Sir George Barclay, but then mist him. But afterwards his Companion, Mr. Hare, met with one Berkenhead, and complaining that they had not met with Sir George Barclay according to the Directions they had abroad; whereupon, by the Means of Berkenhead, they were brought to the Speech of Sir George Barclay, who gave them Reception, and owned that he had Authority to subsist them; but said he had not then Money, but shortly should, and when he had, they should be sure to receive their Subsistence. He tells you, that after this, Sir George Barclay gave them Subsistence Money, paying them at the Rate of five Shillings a Day when they had no Horses, and when they had, six Shillings a Day: So they put themselves altogether under his Command and Conduct. He has given you an Account what Discourse he had with Mr. Rookwood, from whom he discover'd what the Design was in which he was to be engaged. And the Design to assassinate the King was first intended to be put in Execution on Saturday the 15th of February; at which Day Mr. Harris and others being at Sir George Barclay's Lodgings, Sir George said, they were his Janisaries, and afterwards carest them, and said they were Men of Honour, and told them that they were to attack the Prince of Orange and his Guards; but it seems the King not going abroad that Day, they lost that Opportunity.

Truly, Then Mr. Harris began to be a little troubled, when he understood the Meaning of his being under Sir George Barclay's Conduct. And he says that after that first Saturday the 15th, and before the next Saturday the 22d, he met with Lowick, Rookwood, and Bernard, and he was complaining of his being engaged in such a Design as this was. He called it then the Murder of the Prince of Orange, and said it was a barbarous Thing, and he did not like it, nor Rookwood neither; but as for Lowick, whether he disliked it, or no, I know not, but he made Answer to him, I will obey Orders: Says he, Sir George Barclay has Orders for it, or otherwise he would not do it.

Then you are told further, that after this, on Saturday the 22d, Mr. Harris dined with Lowick at a Cook's at the End of Red-Lion-Street, and being there together, Harris being in a Sweat, and was asked the Reason by Lowick, he said he had been giving of Orders for the getting some Men together that were to go under Rookwood; and Lowick told him he might very well do it, for he had Pay 6s. a Day; but says he, I am to subsist two Men, and have nothing at all. Mr. Harris wished him to go to Sir George Barclay, and complain of it to him, but he said he would not; but it seems, it being then understood by them that the King did not go abroad that Day, Lowick said he must go and discharge the two Men, and went about it. This is the Sum and Substance of Mr. Harris's Evidence against Mr. Lowick.

The next Witness is Bertram, and he tells you, that sometime before the fifteenth of February, which was, as I told you, the very first Day that they did design to assassinate the King, Mr. Lowick sent for him, and told him, that he would put him upon a Business that should be for his Advantage, if he would undertake it without asking any Questions; this was sometime before, but the certain Day Bertram does not remember; but he tells you farther, that on Friday the fourteenth of February, he was with Lowick at his Lodgings, and he said unto him, that the King, he did believe, was to be seized in his Coach, and we are to ride out suddenly; and then he gave him a Guinea to buy him Necessaries, and withal bid him meet him at the Purle-house in Hart-street next Morning; and Bertram tells you, he had understood what this Design was, for he had it before from Charnock, and did forbear to go the next Morning, because he did dislike it. After this Mr. Lowick met him and chid him for disappointing of him, in not meeting him as he directed, for, says he, it would have been the same thing if the King had been in the Field. This is the Sum and Substance of the Evidence that Bertram has given against him.

Now Bertram being cross-examined on the behalf of the Prisoner, says, he hath known him a great while, and that he is a Man of a peaceable and fair Disposition, very charitable, and that he has given him Money before, and particularly a Guinea to his Wife in his Absence.

Indeed I might have mentioned the Evidence of Fisher to you, but that is but circumstantial, and does not come home to the Case; but being given it may be mention'd; and that is, about the Eighth of February, Fisher had some Discourse with Lowick, and it seems there was Notice taken of the intended Invasion, and Lowick said he would serve his Master faithfully; and that the Witness thought was meant of the late King; and he said at another Time, that he would not discourse with above one at a Time, because of the late Act of Parliament that was then a-passing, relating to High-Treason, that required two Witnesses. Now, I say, this is not any Proof against the Prisoner, but it is a Circumstance that may shew his Inclination to the late King.

The Counsel for the Prisoner have insisted upon the Insufficiency of the Evidence that has been given on behalf of the King, and have said, that the late Act of Parliament requires two Witnesses, which is true, but not two Witnesses to any one Overt-Act; but if there be two Witnesses, one to one and another to another Overt-Act, that is sufficient; but they say that it is not so in this Case.

In the first Place, they object against the Evidence that is given by Harris, they say it is short, that must be left to your Consideration; whether the Evidence that is given by Harris concerning Mr. Lowick, does prove to your Satisfaction, that he consented and agreed to the Assassination of the King, you are to weigh the Evidence; when it is sworn that when Harris, Rookwood, and the Prisoner were walking in Red-Lion-Fields, and talking of this horrid Design, and Harris complained that it was a barbarous Thing to murder the Prince of Orange, as they call'd him, you must consider what Answer Lowick did make about obeying of Orders; then his substituting of Men at his own Charge without Pay, and complaining of his having no Pay, and his discharging them the last Day that the Assassination was intended, that I must leave to you, whether or no this is not an Evidence, if you believe the Witnesses, to satisfy you that he was engaged in this Design.

Then, Gentlemen, he has also been desired to give an Answer to this Question, and to tell upon what Design he was to employ Bertram that should be for his Advantage; but he was to ask no Questions; and afterwards whether he did tell him the King was to be seized in his Coach, and they were to ride out suddenly, and bid him meet him the next Morning, and when he did not meet him, he said, It would have been the same Thing if the King had been in the Field. If this be an Evidence of Mr. Lowick's engaging in, and agreeing and consenting to the Design, then here will be another Witness against the Prisoner besides Harris.

Gentlemen, you are to judge of this Matter and of the Evidence. It is true, we are not to put in the Case of a Man's Life, any forced and violent Constructions upon any Words or Discourses; but if the Evidence be plain and clear, though he did not say in express Word, that he did design to assassinate or kill the King; yet, if upon the whole Discourse that pass between them it appears plainly, clearly, and satisfactorily to you that he did consent and agree to this Design, or was engaged in it, here's another Witness, I say, to prove him guilty, besides Harris; you are to consider the whole Evidence, the subject matter of Discourse, and if you are satisfied, I say, that he was engaged in such a Design by the Proof of Bertram, as well as of Harris, then there are two Witnesses, which is as much as the Law requires.

But, indeed, the Counsel have called several Witnesses to prove that the Prisoner has lived very peaceably and quietly; one Woman says, She has known him twelve Years, and that he lodged at her House, and that he was a Man of great Temper and Candour, and not disorderly, but had a general good Esteem and Character: And then there is another, Mrs. Mosely, that proves the like, and says, She has known him these twenty Years, and she says no Man has a better Character: And Mr. Bertram hath said, that he was not of a rash or bloody Temper.

Now, Gentlemen, I must leave it to you, upon the Evidence that you have heard, there are these Witnesses that have been produced, and there are these Circumstances that appear in the Case; if you are satisfied upon this Evidence that has been given, that the Prisoner Mr. Lowick did consent to, and engage himself in that Design of Assassinating the King, then you are to find him guilty; if you are not satisfied, you are to find him not guilty; you have heard your Evidence, and had best consider of it.

[Then an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury, who withdrew, and staid out about half an Hour, and then returned.]

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen of the Jury, answer to your Names. George Ford. Mr. Ford. Here.

Cl. of Ar. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?—Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Ar. Who shall say for you?—Jury. Foreman.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner; how say you, Is he guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, or not guilty?—Foreman. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of Ar. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements had he at the Time of the Treason committed, or at any Time since?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge, we do not find any.

Cl. of Ar. Then hearken to your Verdict, as the Court hath recorded it. You say that Robert Lowick is guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands indicted, but that he had no Goods, Chattels, Lands or Tenements at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since to your Knowledge, and so you say all?

Jury. Yes.

L. C. J. Discharge the Jury.

Cl. of Ar. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Court discharges you, and thanks you for your Service.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, Will you have the Prisoners set to the Bar?

Mr. Att. Gen. Yes, if your Lordship please.

Then the Keeper of Newgate brought Rookwood and Cranburne, and all three were set to the Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordship please to give Judgment against the Prisoners that are convicted.

L. C. J. Ask them what they have to say for themselves in Arrest of Judgment.

Cl. of Ar. Robert Lowick, hold up thy Hand; you stand convicted of High-Treason, in conspiring the Death of the King by Assassination, what can you say for yourself why the Court should not give Judgment against you, to die according to Law?

[Then the Keeper bid him kneel.]

L. C. J. No, no, he need not kneel; if you have any thing to say, Mr. Lowick, we will hear you.

Lowick. I throw myself upon the King's Mercy.

Cl. of Ar. Ambrose Rookwood, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) You stand convicted of the same High-Treason, for conspiring the Death of the King by Assassination, what can you say for yourself, why the Court should not give you Judgment to die according to Law?

Rookwood. All that can be said has been said already, and so I shall say no more.

Cl. of Ar. Charles Cranburne, hold up thy Hand. Thou standest convicted of High-Treason, in conspiring the Death of the King by Assassination, what canst thou say for thyself, why the Court should not give thee Judgment to die according to Law?

Cranburne. I have nothing to say but what I have said already.

Cl. of Ar. Then, Crier, make Proclamation.

Crier. O yes, all Manner of Persons are commanded to keep Silence while Judgment is in giving, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

L. C. J. You, the Prisoners at the Bar, Robert Lowick, Ambrose Rookwood, and Charles Cranburne, you have been indicted, and upon full and clear Evidence have been convicted of High-Treason; a Treason that was advanced to the highest Degree both of Malice and Mischief against the King and Kingdom; you design'd to assassinate the King with an Intent to subvert the State, and by the introducing of a foreign Power to destroy the ancient Liberty and Constitution of England.

Our French and Popish Enemies, by whom you were employ'd in this bloody Enterprize, did very well know, that the Wisdom and Courage of his present Majesty has rescued this Kingdom from that Slavery and Oppression which they often threaten'd to bring upon us; they knew that under his Government we have been protected in the Enjoyment of our Religion, Laws and Liberty for several Years, and that his Majesty is the Head of the Protestant Interest, and the Protector and Preserver of the Liberty of Europe; and that upon the Preservation of his Life, and the Safety of his Person, the Good and Happiness of Multitudes of People do depend, which the French King's Pride and Ambition has been ready to take hold of any Opportunity to enslave and oppress.

Your being engaged in such a horrid Design against so precious a Life, and to be the bloody Instruments to give that dismal Stroke, which would have brought Misery and Desolation upon so many Men, renders you worthy to undergo a greater and more severe Punishment than by the Law of England can be inflicted; but that there is no greater provided for such Criminals, is to be imputed to the ancient Honesty and Integrity of English Men, who, when they fram'd this Constitution of Government, never imagin'd England should produce such degenerate Wretches, as would endeavour by Plots and Contrivances to betray their Country to a foreign Yoke, and subject themselves and their Fellow-Subjects to the slavish Dominion of Strangers.

Your Crime being so great, it is now high time for you seriously to reflect upon it; and though you deserve to suffer the greatest of Punishments, yet I have that Compassion for your Persons, that I with heartily you would make use of that Opportunity which is now put into your Hands, to repent. And since you are adjudg'd by the Law unworthy to live here, that you will make Preparation to appear at another Tribunal, where you must have another Trial, and, without an hearty and sincere Repentance, receive a more severe Sentence. I hope this Calamity, and the Judgment that is to fall upon you, will be an Admonition to you to take better Advice in the last part of your Time which is left you, than you have done in the whole Course of your Lives, and that you will be wiser than to follow the Direction of those Guides whose Principles and Doctrines have so far perverted and corrupted you, as to engage you in such a bloody Design. I shall leave you to make that Preparation for another World, which is proper for Men in your Condition, and pronounce the Judgment of the Court, which the Law hath appointed and the Court does award;

That all of you be conveyed from hence to the Prison from whence you came, and from thence every one of you is to be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you are to be hang'd by your Necks, and to be cut down while you are alive, your Privy-Members are to be cut off, and your Bowels are to be cut out of your Bodies, and burnt in your View; your Heads are to be cut off, and your Bodies to be divided into four Parts, and your Heads and Quarters are to be disposed where his Majesty shall appoint. And I pray God to have Mercy on all your Souls.

Cranburne.

Cran. I humbly desire the Liberty of my Wife and Relations to come to me, and such Divines as I shall desire may have free Recourse to me.

L. C. J. You shall have that Liberty that is allowed to all Persons in your Condition.

Rook. I must beg the same Favour to have some few Friends and Relations come to see me without a Keeper.

L. C. J. You shall have a Warrant for your Friends to come to you.

Rook. I beg your Lordship that you would please to specify it in the Warrant, because they would not grant it hitherto without a Keeper being by.

L. C. J. You mean, you would have your Brother permitted to come to you.

Rook. Yes, and some few Relations.

L. C. J. What is usually done in such Cases, let it be done.

Lowick. My Lord, I desire the same Thing, that my Sister may come to me, and that the little time I have, I may be in private with my Friends.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordship please, they may give the Names of those they would have admitted to them, and then the Keeper will attend your Lordship for your Direction.

L. C. J. That the Keeper must take care of, lest they allow such a Liberty as may endanger an Escape; for their being alone may prove a dangerous thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is reasonable they should tell who they are, before they be admitted.

L. C. J. You allow them, I suppose, to have private Discourse in the same Room, if a Keeper be by.

Cran. No, my Lord, we never had.

Mr. Att. Gen. Such as your Lordship thinks proper to be admitted to them may have Discourse with them in private, if the Keeper be in the Room, but no others but such as your Lordship shall allow; for we know what has been the Effect of a Liberty of Access to some Prisoners.

L. C. J. Let us have a Note of those Names that you would have come to you, and we will give Directions that shall be proper in it.

Cl. of Arr. Sheriff of Middlesex, you must take them into your Custody till Execution is done.

Then the Keeper took away the Prisoners.

On Wednesday, April 29. Ambrose Rookwood, Robert Lowick, and Charles Cranburne, were drawn to Tyburn, where the two former deliver'd the following Papers to the Sheriffs.

Major Lowick's Paper.

IN the Name of the Holy Trinity, Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, Amen. In the first Place, I die in the Religion I was baptiz'd, viz. Roman Catholic, and humbly beg the Prayers of all good People for a happy Resurrection, and of all Catholics for the Good of my Soul.

As for being engag'd in this for which I die, it was never so positive that I had a Horse from the Beginning to the very Last, nor never see any allow'd me, or the two Men I was to provide, as was sworn against me at my Trial; nor had I any on that Account; nor was I at any of their Meetings when they settled any such thing. And as for any Order or Commission from King James, I never see any since I came last into England, which is now about five Years; and I am confident none that knows King James will believe he would give any such Order.

Indeed, I must confess, I believe King James was a-come to assert his own Right; and I should, if on Shore, have done any thing in my Power to have assisted him; and, in order to that, I should have been very glad to have had a Horse, but never had any.

And as for being concern'd in any bloody Affair, I never was in my Life, but have done my Endeavour to prevent, as much as I could, on all Occasions; and if the killing the most miserable Creature in the World, or greatest Enemy, would now save my Life, restore the King, and make me one of the greatest Men in England, I first would choose to die, because against the Law of God.

If any who are now Sufferers on this Account, think I have been too forward, and a Promoter to this Design, I do now declare it was never my Inclination to do any rash thing. However, I beg their Pardons, and of all the World I have offended, either in Thought, Word, or any Action whatsoever, and do freely forgive my Enemies, and hope, thro' the Mercy of my Saviour Jesus Christ, to have Remission of all my Sins. Good God preserve the King, Queen, Prince, and Princess, and all that royal Blood of Stuarts; and may England never want one of that direct Line to govern them, and make them once more happy! I have had the Honour to serve my royal Master in several Commissions, and the last as Major, and strove ever to serve him to the best of my Power, and ever to be just to those whom I had the Honour to command. Lord Jesus, into thy Hands I recommend my Spirit! O Jesus, receive my Soul!

ROBERT LOWICK.

Brigadier Rookwood's Paper.

HAVING committed the Justice of my Cause, and recommended my Soul to God, on whose Mercies, thro' the Merits of Jesus Christ, I wholly cast myself, I had once resolv'd to die in Silence; but second Thoughts of my Duty to others, chiefly to my true and liege Sovereign King James, moved me to leave this behind me.

I do therefore, with all Truth and Sincerity, declare and avow, that I never knew, saw, or heard of any Order or Commission from King James for the assassinating the Prince of Orange, and attacking his Guards; but I am certainly inform'd that he, the best of Kings, had often rejected Proposals of that Nature, when made unto him.

Nor do I think he knew the least of the particular Design of the attacking the Guards at his Landing, so much talk'd of, in which I was engaged as a Soldier, by my immediate Commander, much against my Judgment; but his Soldier I was, and as such I was to obey and act according to Command.

These twelve Years I have served my true King and Master, King James, and freely now lay down my Life in his Cause. I ever abhor'd Treachery, even to an Enemy; if it be a Guilt to have comply'd with what I thought, and still think, to have been my Duty, I am guilty. No other Guilt do I own.

As I beg all to forgive me, so I forgive all from my Heart, even the Prince of Orange, who, as a Soldier, ought to have consider'd my Case before he sign'd the Warrant for my Death. I pray God may open his Eyes, and render him sensible of the much Blood, from all Parts, crying out against him, so to prevent an heavier Execution hanging over his Head, than what he inflicts on me.

AMBROSE ROOKWOOD.

After which they were executed as Traitors, according to their Sentence.

CLIX. The Trial of PETER COOK, at the Old-Baily, for High-Treason, May 9, 1696. 8 WILL. III.

Saturday May 9, 1696.

THIS Day being appointed for the Trial of Mr. Peter Cook, upon an Indictment of High-Treason found against him by the Grand Jury for the City of London, upon the Commission of Goal-Delivery of Newgate, holden for the said City, upon which Indictment he had been arraigned, and upon pleading not guilty, Issue had been joined; and the Court having been adjourned unto this Day for the Trial by publick Proclamation in usual Manner, the Court was refused, and the Names of the Men returned to serve on the Jury having been called over, according to the Pannel, and the Defaulters recorded; the Court proceeded as follows.

Cl. of Arr. Set Peter Cook the Prisoner to the Bar. [Which was done.] You Prisoner at the Bar, those Men that you shall hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and You, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you will Challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak to them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Cook. Sir, I desire you would not name them too fast, for my Eyes are very bad.

Cl. of Arr. John Ewer.

Cook. Who must I apply myself to, Sir? I desire to know whether he is a Freeholder in London?

Cl. of Arr. I know nothing to the contrary, Sir, he is returned as such by the Sheriff; you had best ask him himself, he can best tell.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr. Ewer. Yes, Sir, I am a Freeholder.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Henry Sherbrook.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in London?

Mr. Sherbrook. Yes, Sir, I am.

Cook. I challenge you.—No, Sir, I beg your Pardon, I do not challenge you.

Cl. of Arr. Then hold Mr. Sherbrook the Book: [Which was done.] Look upon the Prisoner: You shall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, whom you shall have in Charge according to your Evidence. So help you God.

Cl. of Arr. Joseph Billers.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, in London?

Mr. Billers. Yes, I am.

Cl. of Arr. John Brand.

Cook. Pray, Sir, don't go too fast; Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr. Brand. I am no Freeholder in London.

L. C. J. Treby. What say you, Mr. Attorney?

* Sir Thomas Trevor. * Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, I would not have any Body that is not a Freeholder serve; so he was set by.

Cl. of Arr. William Hull.

Mr. Hull. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London.

L. C. J. Treby. Why, what Estate have you?

Mr. Hull. What I have, is in Leases.

L. C. J. Treby. What, Leases for Years, or Leases for Lives?

Mr. Hull. Leases for Years, Sir.

L. C. J. Then he cannot serve upon the Jury.

Cl. of Arr. Edward Leeds.

Cook. Hold, Sir, let me see; are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?

Mr. Leeds. Yes, Sir.

[Challenge'd.]

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Clark.

Cook. Hold, Sir, I pray let me look upon my Paper. I challenge him.

A Stander-by. He does not appear.

Cl. of Arr. Nathan Green.

Cook. Where is he, Sir? Are you a Freeholder?

Mr. Green. Yes, I am, Sir.

[Challenge'd.]

Cl. of Arr. Thomas Emes.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?—Mr. Emes. Yes, I am.

Cook. Were you one of Sir John Freind's Jury?—Mr. Emes. Yes, I was.

Cook. Then I challenge you for Cause, and I give you my Reason.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. I pray, let us hear your Reason; give your Reason for your Challenge.

Cook. It is for being of Sir John Freind's Jury.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. Then you challenge him for Cause.

Cook. Yes, that he was of Sir John Freind's Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. Well, Brother Darnall, how is that a Cause of Challenge? You are the Prisoner's Counsel, let us hear what you say to it?

Mr. Serj. Darnall. My Lord, what we have to say to it, is this; Here are some Persons returned upon this Pannel, that were formerly Jurors in a Cause that was try'd for the same Species of Treason that this Gentleman, the Prisoner, is charged with in this Indictment; and I think the Witnesses at that Trial did mention in their Evidence my Client, as being present at those very Consults, about which they gave their Evidence; these Gentlemen gave Credit to those Witnesses, and found the Verdict against the Person then accused. We humbly submit it to your Lordship and the Court, whether we may not for this Cause challenge this Person as not indifferent, it being for the same Cause and Consult that the other was try'd for.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sure Mr. Serjeant is not in earnest in this Objection.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. My Client thinks it a very good Objection, that he is not indifferent, and I desire he should be satisfied in it.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he thinks so, he may except against him; but if he insist upon it as a Cause of Challenge, we desire you would put the Case, and my Lords the Judges determine it.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. I have told you what the Case is.

L. C. J. Treby. But you hear the King's Counsel insist upon it, to have you make it out in Point of Law.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. My Lord, I have stated the Case as my Client desired, and we submit it to you.

L. C. J. Treby. Well, there is nothing in it.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. Then my Client, if he will not have him serve, must challenge him peremptorily; which he did.

Cl. of Arr. Francis Byer.

Cook.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder?—Mr. Byer. Yes, I am. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. James Deneu.---Mr. Deneu. I am no Freeholder.
 Cl. of Arr. Henry Hunter.
 Cook. Hold, my Lord, I challenge him as being one of Sir John Freind's Jury.
 Mr. Baker. Nay, that was not allow'd in Mr. Eames's Case; but you challeng'd him peremptorily, and so you must now, if you have a Mind to it.
 Cook. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Arr. John Hall.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?
 Mr. Hall. Yes, I am, Sir. [Challeng'd.]---Cl. of Arr. John Cullum.
 Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in London?
 Mr. Cullum. Yes, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. John Cox.
 Mr. Cox. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London.
 Cl. of Arr. John Hedges.
 Cook. Hold, I pray, Sir, let me look upon my Paper, Sir; are you a Freeholder in London?—Mr. Hedges. Yes, Sir, I am. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. Thomas James.
 Mr. James. My Lord, my Name is not Thomas.
 Mr. Sher. Buckingham. He is returned, it seems, by a wrong Name; we did not know it.
 Mr. Serj. Darnal. Then you cannot swear him.
 Cl. of Arr. Thomas Poole.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?—Mr. Poole. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge him, as being of Sir John Freind's Jury.
 Mr. Att. Gen. That has been over-ruled already.
 Cook. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Arr. Peter Parker.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London?—Mr. Parker. Yes, Sir, I am.
 Cook. I challenge you, Sir, as being one of Sir John Freind's Jury.
 Mr. Baker. Nay, you can't offer it again.
 Cook. I challenge him.
 Cl. of Arr. George Grove.
 Cook. Where is he? Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?
 Mr. Grove. Yes, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. Nathaniel Wyerfeldell.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London?
 Mr. Wyerfeldell. Yes, Sir, I am. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. Samuel Blewit.
 Cook. Hold, pray, are you a Freeholder, Sir?
 Mr. Blewit. Yes, I am. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. John Wolfe.
 Cl. of Arr. Joseph Wolfe. [He did not appear, and was said to be no Freeholder.]
 Cl. of Arr. William Smith.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?—Mr. Smith. Yes, I am. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. Edward Fenwick.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?—Mr. Fenwick. Yes, Sir, I am.
 Cook. I do not challenge him.
 Cl. of Arr. Then swear Mr. Fenwick. [Which was done.]
 Cl. of Arr. Benjamin Hooper.
 Cook. Stay, Sir, pray stay a little, where is he?—Cl. of Arr. There he is, Sir.
 Cook. Which is the Gentleman? Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?
 Mr. Hooper. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge you.
 Mr. Hooper. I thank you, Sir.
 Cl. of Arr. Nathaniel Long.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?—Mr. Long. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge him as being one of Sir John Freind's Jury.
 Cl. of Arr. The Court has adjudged that no Cause of Challenge; therefore I take no notice of it, but as to a peremptory Challenge.
 Cl. of Arr. Richard Chiswell.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?
 Mr. Chiswell. Yes, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. John Child.
 Cook. Hold, pray, a Moment; I have not cross'd these last in my Paper, but I challenge this Man, being of Sir John Freind's Jury.
 Mr. Baker. You have had that answered over and over again, as no Objection; it is nothing but a peremptory Challenge.
 Cl. of Arr. William Walker.
 Mr. Walker. I was one of Sir John Freind's Jury.
 Cook. I challenge him for the same Reason.
 Mr. Att. Gen. But that is no Reason at all.
 Cook. Then I challenge him.
 Cl. of Arr. John Wells.
 Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder?—Mr. Wells. Yes, Sir, I am. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. John Hibbert.
 Cook. Which is he, Sir?—Cl. of Arr. He stands upon your Left-hand; the Man in the black Peruke.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?—Mr. Hibbert. Yes, I am, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. Daniel Wray.
 Cook. Stay, Sir, are you Mr. Wray?—Mr. Wray. Yes, Sir, my Name is Wray.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?—Mr. Wray. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge you.---Mr. Wray. I thank you, Sir.
 Cl. of Arr. John Petit.
 Cook. Which is he?—Mr. Petit. I am the Man, Sir.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder in London, Sir?—Mr. Petit. Yes, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. John Sherbrook.
 Cook. I challenge him, as being one of Sir John Freind's Jury.
 Mr. Baker. But you have heard that denied to be an Exception over and over.
 Cook. I challenge him.---Cl. of Arr. Stephen Blackwell.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?—Mr. Blackwell. Yes, I am. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. William Hatch.
 Cook. Pray give me time to mark them; pray, who is this Man you now call?
 Cl. of Arr. William Hatch.
 Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder?—Mr. Hatch. Yes, I am. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. Henry Beadle.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?—Mr. Beadle. Yes, I am.

Cook. I do not except against him. [Was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. John Stredwick.
 Mr. Stredwick. My Lord, as I apprehend, I am no Freeholder.
 L. C. J. Treby. Why do you apprehend so?
 Mr. Stredwick. It is my Wife's Estate, not mine.
 Cl. of Arr. Then your Wife has a Freehold, it seems.
 Mr. Stredwick. Yes, she has.
 L. C. J. Treby. That is Freehold enough; for you have an Estate for your Wife's Life.
 Mr. Baker. And after that too; for it is not given over to any body else, and she won't give it from him.
 Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in London, or no?
 Mr. Stredwick. I apprehend, Sir, I am not.
 Mr. Baker. He says he has an Estate for his Wife's Life.
 Cl. of Arr. Then he is a Freeholder, What do you say to him?
 Cook. Are you positive you are a Freeholder in London, upon your Word?
 Mr. Stredwick. I think not.
 Mr. Baker. Why, your Wife's Estate is yours for your Life.
 Cook. My Lord Chief Justice, if your Lordship pleases, here is a Man that says positively he thinks he is no Freeholder; I desire your Lordship's Judgment, whether he be a Freeholder or not?
 L. C. J. Treby. Why, let him put his Case, if he make a Doubt of it.
 Mr. Stredwick. I am not posses'd of an Estate myself.
 L. C. J. Treby. But is not your Wife an Inheritor?
 Mr. Stredwick. Yes, my Lord, she is.
 L. C. J. Treby. Then you are seiz'd of a Freehold in her Right; and, Mr. Cook, your own Counsel will tell you, and satisfy you, that that is a Freehold sufficient for this Service.
 Mr. Baker. His Wife's Father settled it upon her and her Heirs.
 L. C. J. Treby. No question, it is a sufficient Freehold if the Wife be living.---Mr. Baker. Yes, she is.
 Cook. I challenge him.---Cl. of Arr. William Prince.
 Cook. I challenge him, as being one of Sir John Freind's Jury.
 Mr. Prince. I thank you, Sir.
 Cl. of Arr. John Simmons.
 Mr. Att. Gen. We challenge him for the King.
 Cl. of Arr. Robert White.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?---Mr. White. Yes, I think so.
 Cook. Pray tell me whether you are, or not?
 Mr. White. Indeed I think so, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. Edward Brewster.
 Cook. Where is Mr. Brewster? Are you a Freeholder, Sir, in London?
 Mr. Brewster. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge him. Pray, Sir, I desire to know how many I have challenged?---Mr. Baker. You have challenged Thirty-Three.
 Cook. How many besides those that are of Sir John Freind's Jury?
 Mr. Baker. You have but two more to challenge, Sir.
 Mr. Serj. Darnal. I thought you had heard the Opinion of the Court, Mr. Cook, that it will not hold as a Cause of Challenge that he was of Sir John Freind's Jury; therefore those are all reckoned among the peremptory Challenges, and you can challenge but two more in all.
 L. C. J. Treby. Not without Cause, but as many more as you can have good Cause against.
 Cl. of Arr. John Reynolds.---Cook. I except not against him. [Was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Joseph Brookbank.
 Cook. I have nothing to say to him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Adam Bellamy.
 Mr. Bellamy. My Lord, I am no Freeholder.
 L. C. J. Treby. Why, what Estate have you?
 Mr. Baker. He has Estate enough, I know, for Value.
 Mr. Bellamy. I have only a Lease.
 L. C. J. Treby. A Lease for Years?---Mr. Bellamy. Yes, my Lord.
 Cl. of Arr. David Grill.---Mr. Grill. I am no Freeholder, my Lord.
 Cl. of Arr. William Rawlins.---Cook. I accept of him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Samuel Roycroft.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir?---Mr. Roycroft. Yes, Sir. [Challeng'd.]
 Cl. of Arr. Thomas Parker.
 Cook. How many have I to challenge, do you say?
 Cl. of Arr. But one, Sir; What say you to Mr. Parker?
 Cook. I do not except against him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. James Robinson.
 Cook. I have nothing to say to him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Joseph Morewood.
 Mr. Baker. You have challeng'd all your Number now.
 Cl. of Arr. My Lord, we have gone through the Pannel, we must now call the Defaulters again. Thomas Clark.---Mr. Clark. Here.
 Sir B. Shower. Was he here when he was call'd over?
 Mr. Att. Gen. That's nothing, he is here now.
 Sir B. Shower. But if there be a Default of the Jury, and the King's Counsel have challenged any one, they ought to shew their Cause; therefore we desire that they may shew their Cause why they challeng'd Mr. Simmons?
 L. C. J. Treby. The King has Power to challenge without shewing Cause till the Pannel be gone through; but if there be a Default of Jurors when the King challenges, the King's Counsel must shew Cause.
 Sir B. Shower. Here is a Default of Jurors, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Treby. Nobody is recorded absolutely a Defaulter, if he comes in time enough to be sworn.
 Cl. of Arr. Swear Mr. Clark. [Which was done.]
 L. C. J. Treby. When there is an apparent Default of Jurors, then they must shew their Cause: but here his Appearance, it seems, was recorded, and so he was no Defaulter; and you might have challenged him for Cause still.
 Cl. of Arr. James Dry.---Mr. Dry. My Name is not James.
 Serj. Darnal. Then you cannot swear him: Here are Three mistaken in their Names.
 L. C. J. Treby. That is in the Copy in your Brief, Brother, it may be.
 Serj. Darnal. No, my Lord, the Officers admit it.
 Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we desire those Gentlemen, that say they are no Freeholders, may be sworn to that Matter. [Which was accordingly done.] And several of them that had staid, did deny the having of any Freehold upon Oath, and some were gone away. L. C. J.

L. C. J. Treby. Pray take care to estreat the Issues, and return greater Issues the next time.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. Truly, the Court must put some great Penalty upon them for trifling with the Court in respect of their Duty that they owe to the King and Country, in regard of their Estates.

Cl. of Ar. Pray let the Officers be called who summoned this Jury, Mr. Sheriff.

[Which was done.] And they examined concerning their summoning those who made Default, and the Issues of those who were recorded as Defaulters were ordered to be estreated.

Then the Court not being able to proceed for want of a Jury, they ordered another Pannel to be ready against Wednesday next, to which time, at Seven in the Morning, the Court was by Proclamation adjourned.

Die Mercurii Decimo Tertio Maii. Anno Dom. 1696.

The Court being met according to the Adjournment, the Pannel was called over, and the Defaulters Recorded, and several excused for Absence upon Sickness, and being out of Town before the Summons. Then Mr. Serjeant Darnall desired, before the Jury was called, to move something against the Pannel: and made his Motion thus.

Mr. Serj. Darnall. IF your Lordship pleases, I have somewhat to offer to you before you go upon this new Pannel, and I confess I think it is my Duty to the Court, as well as to the Prisoner, to state the Case as it is, and submit it upon the Reason of Law, and the Authorities that I shall offer, whether the Proceedings upon this new Pannel will not be erroneous? My Lord, the Question is, Whether, as this Case is, the Prisoner has had a Copy of the Pannel of his Jury by which he is to be tried, according as the late Law requires? He had a Copy of the former Pannel, and upon that Pannel Nine were sworn, and their Names all entered upon Record, and made Parcel of the Record. Therefore now the Question is, Whether he can be tried upon a new Pannel? We are in a Case that rarely happens; and in a Case of Life and Death, I know your Lordship will be careful not to vary from the ancient Practice, or to make a new Precedent, because of the Consequences. It must be agreed in this Case, that the old Pannel upon which the Prisoner took his Challenges, and of which Nine were sworn, is Parcel of the Record. Now, my Lord, to add a new Pannel, upon which Twelve more shall be sworn, and all this appear upon Record, and the Prisoner tried upon the last Pannel, will not this be Error? I offer this before the Jury be called and sworn, because we desire to be fairly tried; and we design to rest upon the Fact in this Case. If it should appear, That he is tried upon a Pannel that is unduly made and returned, that will be of evil Consequence one way or other. And can this be duly made, if another appear upon Record before it? And can any body say it is quash'd or abated? Or can it be so? My Lord, in Stamford's Pleas of the Crown, p. 155. it is said, If any of the Pannel die after the Return, and before their Appearance, so that there are not enough left to make the Jury, yet the Pannel shall not be quash'd, nor is it abated, but it is Cause to grant a Tales. And certainly, my Lord, it is a stronger Case, when by reason of Challenges, which the Law gives the Prisoner Liberty to make, there are not enough left, that there shall not be a new Pannel, but that a Tales shall be granted; for if a new Pannel might be made, it cannot appear who were challenged, or who were admitted. And if your Lordship pleases to consider, the Intention of the Law in giving the Prisoner Power to challenge, is, that he may have an indifferent Jury; but that would be prevented by such a Practice as this; for when it has been discovered upon the old Pannel whom the Prisoner chose, and whom he challenged upon the new Pannel, the Persons challenged may be set first, and those that were chosen may be omitted, or so postponed, that none of them whom he thought equal to try him, can serve upon the Jury. And truly, my Lord, if I am rightly informed, that is the Case upon this new Pannel; some of those that were admitted and sworn are left out, and most of them, I think, are put last in the Pannel whom he thought equal Men to try him, and all those whom he challenged peremptorily are the first Men in the Pannel. This, my Lord, is the Case before you; and if this be admitted, the Use and End of Challenges, which are in benefit and favour of Life, would be defeated. And for Authorities in this Case, besides the Reason and Ground of the Law, many cannot be expected, because it is a Fact that rarely happens. I find none of the ancient Practisers ever knew it, but I find that a Tales ought to be granted; so it is said in several Books, as in Stamford, 155, 156. when ever upon the Principal Pannel all the Jury does not appear, or so many of them do not, that there are not enough left to make a Jury, which is our very Case; then in such Case the Pannel shall not be quash'd or abated, but a Tales granted; so is 14 H. VII. 7. there the Question was, Whether there should be a greater Number returned upon the Tales than were in the Principal Pannel? And there the Difference was insisted upon, and agreed, That where it is between Party and Party, where Life is not concerned, it shall not; but where Life is concerned, and the Prisoner has Power to challenge 35 peremptorily, there the Judge may award as many upon the Tales as he pleases, that there may be enough to remain after the Challenges; so that if this old Pannel be not abated, and could not be quash'd, and a Tales might be granted to consist of any Number, I conceive the Prisoner cannot be tried upon this new Pannel, but it will be Erroneous: and I humbly submit to your Lordship whether you will proceed upon it.

Sir B. Shower. If your Lordship pleases to spare me a Word of the same Side, with Submission, We think there ought to have been an Habeas Corpora, with a Tales, such as had been before Sworn, being to be Part of the Jury now, and that is the proper Way to bring the Prisoner to his Trial in this Case; the King's Counsel cannot expect we should produce many Precedents, for I believe this is the Second of the Kind that ever happened, at least within Memory, That a Trial in Treason was put off pro defectu Juratorum, though I have a Precedent that I think is express in the Case; but we insist, in the first Place, That a Tales does lie at Common-Law in the Case of Life; and so the Book that Mr. Serjeant cited in Stamford is express; and then we say, that the Answer which we expect, that we are now before Justices of Gaol-Delivery, is not sufficient, because the Justices of Gaol-Delivery, though they do not usually award Process by way of Writ, but before their coming, they command the Sheriff to have his County ready there, and so in fact it is a Parol Precept; yet when it is returned, then it is entered upon Record, either Præceptum est Vice Comiti quod venire faceret; or, Ideo veniat Jurata; and the Jury are entered upon Record: So that take it to be before Justices of Gaol-Delivery, yet the Sheriff having returned a Pannel, and that being upon the File, as appears before your Eyes, in Obedience to your Command, and that Copy of the Pannel being delivered to us two Days before Saturday last, we humbly submit it to your Lordship, whether by Force of the Common-Law, and of the late Act of Parliament, we ought not to be tried by that Pannel: We insist upon it, that the Act intends, and expressly designed, that not only the Prisoner should have a Copy of the Pannel that the Sheriff returned at any time after, but that he should be tried by the Pannel that we had a Copy of at first; for it is not said a Copy, toties quoties the Court shall think fit to award a Precept for a new Pannel, but the Words of the Act are, a Copy of the Jury duly returned by the Sheriff; now this we had, and your Lordship knows it is not a returned Pannel till it be in Court, and then it becomes Part of the Record: My Lord, I do agree, the Justices in some Cases have quash'd and set aside Pannels and Juries, and ordered new ones; and I confess there was an extraordinary Case in the Time of King Charles the Second, which was upon the Indictment against Whitebread, where, after the Jury charged, and Evidence given, the Jury was discharged, and a new Pannel made the next Sessions, upon which Mr. Whitebread was tried and convicted; how just or regular that was, I will not insist upon now, but I am sure there were great Complaints of that Practice, and few Precedents can be shewn of the like: But besides, the Parties themselves waived it there, no Objection being taken against it; but we insist upon it in this Case, that this being upon Record, is Part of the Record, and so appears to the Court: If the Record indeed were to be made up upon a Writ of Error, perhaps it would be no Error, because it may be they would leave it out; but here it appears there was a Pannel of Record before you, and this must either be quash'd, or altered, or continued on by Process; you have Power to quash it, if it be unduly returned by the Sheriff. If there be any evil Practices for procuring the Pannel, either by the Profecutor or the Prisoner; if there be no Freeholders return'd, or the same happen in any other respect not to be legally done according to the Command or Precept of the Court; but because there is a Default of Appearance of Jurors, no Pannel was ever quash'd upon that Account. Then say we, if it be not quash'd, this Pannel must continue; for, What shall become of it? Why should it not continue? It is not within the Act of Parliament that gives the Justices Power to make a new Pannel, as in the Case of a Grand Jury when they are Guilty of Concealments, or refuse to find Bills upon great Evidence, but we have no such Case before you, nor do I know any such Rule as can reach this; so that, we take it, there is no Difference between this Case, as before Justices of Gaol-Delivery, and other Justices; that Process does lie against the Jury that does not appear even in Treason and Felony, there is no Dispute; and it is very properly so, if it be before Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer; first, a Venire facias, and then upon Default, a Habeas Corpora, that is the proper Way; then take it before Justices of Gaol-Delivery, there it is entered upon Record, Præceptum est Vice Comiti, &c. and here is a Pannel returned by Virtue of this Precept, and some of the Jury do not appear, and so there are not enough to Try the Prisoner after a great many Sworn and Challenged, and this entered upon Record. What shall become of that Pannel, it cannot be quash'd nor abated? My Lord, there is a Case that does warrant that Opinion of a Tales in a Case of Felony; and if there may be a Tales, then there may be a Habeas Corpora, and there are Directions how the Jurors shall be Sworn again, upon their appearance on the Habeas Corpora, and that is Wharton's Case in Telverton 23.

VOL. IV.

Mr. Just. Powell, jun. Do not dispute that; it is plain, that a Tales does lie in Felony, upon a Commission of Oyer and Terminer; but can you shew me, Sir Bartholomew, any where, that upon a Commission of Gaol-Delivery a Tales does lie?

Sir B. Shower. Sir, I can only shew the Reason of the Law, and I cannot find that does contradict what we now contend for.

Mr. Just. Powell. I tell you, Sir Bartholomew, there is no Tales but with a Habeas Corpora to bring in the first Jurors, and that cannot be upon a Parol Precept on a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, there goes a Venire facias, which is a Writ upon which the Habeas Corpora may be grounded, but there is no Venire facias upon a Commission of Gaol-Delivery.

Sir B. Shower. Why should there not be a Precept in nature of an Habeas Corpora for a Jury return'd, upon a Precept as well as on a Writ?

Mr. Just. Powell. No, it never was done; the Commission of Gaol-Delivery is a general Commission that does authorize the Sheriff to impanel, and have a Jury ready at the Day appointed for the Delivery of the Gaol, to try the Prisoners; it doth import in itself a general Precept for that Purpose, before Issue joined, which the Sheriff cannot do in the Case of a Commission of Oyer and Terminer, but must have a Writ of Venire facias, after Issue joined.

Mr. Sol. Gen. In all Cases that they cite, there is a Writ of Venire facias, upon which the After-process, by Writ, may be grounded; but here is no Foundation for any future Process by Writ, because it is only by Parol Precept.

Mr. Att. Gen. Sure these Gentlemen don't think what they say; the Pannel is not Part of the Record, and there is no Record of it; nothing but the Clerk's Entry in a Paper, or Note, for his own Memorandum.

5 B

Mr.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. Brother Darnal, have you any Book that says, Justices of Gaol-Delivery must award a Tales upon Default of the Jurors?

Mr. Serj. Darnal. No, my Lord, I cannot say so.

L. C. J. Treby. Suppose all the Jury had been challeng'd, or dy'd.

Mr. Just. Powell. There could be no quashing of it, but it would fall of itself, for want of a Jury.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. If, according to your Doctrine, we must keep to the first Pannel, the Consequence wou'd be, there would be no Trial at all. Sir B. Shower. Stamford makes no Difference that I can see.

Mr. Att. Gen. But these Gentlemen have been told the Difference upon which this Matter is grounded; a Tales cannot be without a Habeas Corpora, and a Habeas Corpora cannot be without a Venire facias; but a Commission of Gaol-Delivery cannot award a Venire facias, because that is not to be awarded till Issue joined.

Mr. B. Powis. The Return of this Pannel before Justices of Gaol-Delivery, is an Act of the Sheriff, by virtue of the Commission, and nothing appears of Record till the Jury are Sworn.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. They object that it is upon Record.

L. C. J. Treby. By the Record, they mean the Clerk's Note.

Mr. Att. Gen. If you please to look upon the Indictment, there is no Entry at all, and that is all the Record before you.

Mr. Just. Powell. Does it appear upon Record, that Nine were Sworn?

Mr. Baker. No, there is nothing upon the Record.

Cl. of Ar. It does not appear till the Record is made up, and nothing is entered till Twelve are Sworn.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. There will be a great Inconvenience, if a Pannel may be changed at any Time.

Mr. Just. Powell. This is a Case that never happened before, and may be never may again.

Sir B. Shower. The Law will hold the same, in case it does appear upon Record, as well as where it does not; But we say, a Pannel return'd in Court is a Record.

Mr. Just. Powell. No, it will not; because, when a Jury does appear, and the Twelve are Sworn, then it becomes Parcel of the Record; and therefore Whitebread's Case * was quite another Case, and was indeed held to be an extraordinary Case; but that comes not up to us, for there a full Jury was Sworn, and Evidence given.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. It may be, the same Jury will not be returned.

Mr. Just. Powell. But if you have a Copy of the Jury, you are at no Mischief.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Some that were in the former Pannel are quite left out.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. There are none left out, but what were not Freeholders, that I know of.

Mr. B. Powis. He says the Fact is not true, as you have alledged it.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. And Mr. Serjeant Darnal has been pleased to reflect upon us, as if we had pack'd this Jury, by altering the Places of the Names, which, my Lord, we do utterly deny, and we only left out those that were not Freeholders.

Mr. B. Powis. The Sheriff says, he has not postponed any of them, and only left out those that were not Freeholders.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. If the Law were as plain with us as the Fact in that Case, we should have a very good Case of it.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. Mr. Serjeant, I have both the Pannels here; they may be compared.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. I said no Harm, Mr. Sheriff, nor meant any Reflection upon you.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. Mr. Serjeant was pleased to say, the excepted Men were put in the Front, and those that were Sworn were put last.

L. C. J. Treby. There is nothing at all in the Objection.

Mr. Just. Powell. Really, because it was opened as a Reflection, it will be proper for the Sheriff to clear it.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. My Lord, the Answer I give to it, is, That particularly one that was Sworn last Time, is now at the very Beginning of the Pannel; and, in general, they are mix'd promiscuously, without any Design or Study in the least. He says we have left out those that served before: I solemnly protest, I know not one Man returned upon the last Pannel that is left out, unless it appeared that he is no Freeholder; and we had no Reason to put in them, that we knew could not serve.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. That can't appear to us, that they are not Freeholders.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. But it appears to him, and therefore he did well to leave them out.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. What I say, I am ready to give upon my Oath.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. I say there is one Henry Beadle left out, and he was one that was Sworn.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. I will not say for a particular Man; I protest that I did not know he was left out; if it be so, it was by Mistake; for I know Mr. Beadle very well, and I take him to be an honest Man, and very well-affected to the Government as any Man.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. We desired to be tried by Men that are honest and well-affected to the Government.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. There you have of them, Sir.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Those that were Sworn are put last of all, and there is not above one of them that is within possibility of coming on again.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. It will appear by Mr. Cook's Challenges, and the other Pannel, that they stood late before; and Thomas Clark, who was Sworn the last Time, stands tenth Man upon the Pannel.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. He was Sworn after we had gone through the Pannel, and took all our Challenges, not appearing at first.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. I tell you, they stand for the most part as they did, for aught I know.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. There is but one in Threescore and Ten, that can be Sworn now, of them that were Sworn before; and there were Nine of them then Sworn.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is a Mistake. Indeed there are a great many added to the Pannel, because there was a Defect the last Time, and therefore now they may perhaps stand later.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. I do not speak to reflect upon the Sheriffs: I go according to my Instructions.

Mr. Just. Powell. If it had been so, it had been well enough; for you must be contented, the Court must take it as the Sheriff returns it, and you have a Copy of it.

Mr. Att. Gen. Here are four of them that were Sworn before, that stood above sixty off in the old Pannel.

Mr. Sher. Buckingham. The first Man that was sworn, Mr. Sherbrook, stands within the first Twelve now, as well as before.

Mr. J. Powell. If they had been all new, there had been nothing in that.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. Truly, I can't see but that the Sheriff hath done like an equal, just, fair, and honest Officer.

Mr. Att. Gen. They may challenge as they will.

L. C. J. Treby. You are to consider, that this happens because you run out as far as your utmost Number, that Time you challenged Thirty-five peremptorily, and divers others for Cause, so as not to leave enough for a Jury; and from that alone arose a Necessity of increasing the Number of the Pannel.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. It was our Client that challenged them, we do not advise him whom to challenge.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. But you must take the Consequence of it, which causes this Addition to the Pannel.

L. C. J. Treby. What do you complain of? They that are returned, are put in the same Order as they were before; they that were Sworn, were (for the most part) late in the Pannel then, and so they are now. I do not find any Thing done to the Prejudice of the Prisoner.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. If the Christian Names had not been mistaken, there had been perhaps enough to have been Sworn.

L. C. J. Treby. That's a good Argument for a new Pannel, because the Christian Names were mistaken before.

Mr. Just. Powell. It was by Defect of Jurors, and therefore there was an absolute necessity of a new Pannel.

L. C. J. Treby. I am of the same Opinion.

Wharton's Case is well known: It was much cited as to another Point in Bushel's Case. It was a Trial at the King's-Bench Bar at Westminster by a Jury of Kent, upon an Indictment of a Murder.

And I think you say the Case of H. 7. was between Party and Party in Appeal. And I believe Stamford's Discourse, in the Place cited, relates chiefly to Appeals.

I shall not deny that a Tales may possibly be upon an Indictment before Justices of Oyer and Terminer; though 'tis not usual, nor do you shew, or our experienced Clerks know any such Precedent. I agree, that in the mentioned Cases a Tales was proper; for in both Cases (viz. of Appeal and Indictment removed into the King's-Bench), the Process for the Jury, was as it ought to be, by Writs of Venire facias, &c. upon which a full Jury not appearing, there must be a Tales. But in proceeding to Trial before Justices of Oyer and Terminer on such Indictment as is here, though I will not say but they may proceed by Writ of Venire facias, yet I do say, that the more known Course is by Precept, in nature of a Venire facias: And the Usage is, that after (and never before) the Prisoner hath pleaded not Guilty, there goes a Precept to the Sheriff, under the Seals of the said Justices of Oyer and Terminer, returnable at such Day as they shall adjourn to, for returning a Jury to Try it; (as was done lately, upon Advice, in the Case of Rockwood, &c.) and upon the Return of that, if, after Challenges, there are not enough left to make a Jury, whether those Justices shall issue a Precept in nature of a Habeas Corpora, or Destringas, with a Tales, or another Precept in the same Form as before, and without taking notice of the former, is a Question not in Judgment before us. For we are about proceeding to a Trial on an Indictment in this Court of Gaol-Delivery, (which is the Court wherein generally all capital Crimes are tried, as well at this Place as at the Assizes) and, I think, here cannot be a Tales; I am sure it is not necessary. For, First, Here is never any Writ of Venire facias, &c. Secondly, Nor ever a Precept for returning a Jury to try a particular Issue: But this Court takes the Pannels of Juries returned by the Sheriff, without any particular Precept to him.

The Course of proceeding by virtue of a Commission of Gaol-Delivery, which is the Law in this Case, is this, viz. There is, antecedent to the Coming of the Justices, a general Commandment or Precept made, in Writing to the Sheriff by the said Justices, to return Juries against their Coming, for the Trying of all and singular Prisoners in their Gaol, whether they have pleaded before, or shall after. And for that Purpose it requires the Sheriff to summon, out of all Parts of his Country whence the Prisoners come, a great Number of Freeholders not a-kin to the Prisoners, to be at the Time and Place appointed for holding the Court. The Sheriff, by virtue of this general previous Precept, summoneth many for Jurors, and prepares diverse several Pannels of their Names, either at first, or afterwards, as appears necessary, and returneth and delivereth in one or more of these Pannels, from Time to Time, as the Court does need, and call for any: This, we know, in Fact, is frequently done where the Sessions of Gaol-Delivery lasts several Days, and there is occasion. Though, in Supposition of Law, all these Pannels are returned, and the Trials thereupon had the first Day of the Sessions; and, in Law, it is intended to be but that one Day only. The Return of this Precept is thus, viz. Executio istius Præcepti patet in quibusdam Pannellis huic præcepto annexis, and the Pannels are annexed, and there are often filed here divers Pannels upon the same general Precept, though sometimes but One. These Pannels are thus delivered into Court, and a Jury taken out of them as there is occasion, only upon a Parol Award, that is, barely the Court's calling for the same, without Writ or Precept in Writing, or giving any Day for the Doing it. For this Proceeding is immediate, for the speedy Delivery of Prisoners; and the Entry, after setting forth that the Prisoner being arraigned pleads not Guilty, is, Ideo immediate veniat inde Jurata, or fiat inde Jurata: And this Court's being instituted for the speedy Delivery of Prisoners, and Warnings being given long before, of their Coming, are the Causes why it has been always held without doubt, that Justices of Gaol-Delivery might inquire and try the same Day.

If it fall out, that by reason of Defaults, Deaths, or Challenges, there cannot be a full Jury had out of a Pannel, (as here there wanted three) which is an Accident that the Court cannot know, till they have gone through the Pannel; I think in this Case, that Pannel goes for nothing, is utterly lost and void, and to be cast away or cancelled: For it does not answer the Award of the Court, which was to have a Jury to Try the Prisoner presently. It is meant an effectual Pannel that should afford a full Jury of Twelve unexceptionable Men; and every Pannel that comes short in this, is to be laid aside as a void Thing; and then the Court takes and makes use of another immediately, which may not be deficient, whereby the Award is observed, and the present Service dispatched.

Objection. It is objected, That the old Pannel is Parcel of the Record in Court, and, upon that, Nine were Sworn, and their Names are all entered upon Record; and now to add a new Pannel, upon which Twelve shall be Sworn and Try the Prisoner; all this appearing upon Record, it will be Error.

Answer. This Objection stands upon two Mistakes, both arising from not observing the Difference between Precepts and Pannels, in a Court of Gaol-Delivery and Venire facias, or Precepts and Pannels in other Courts.

1. It supposes that here will be two Pannels, which will appear to relate to the Trial of this Prisoner, Mr. Cook.
2. It supposes that both these will become Records, or Parcel of the Record in Court.

If either of these Suppositions prove to be a Mistake, it will destroy the Objection. I think both are Mistakes.

1. Here is not, nor will be, nay, there ought not to be any Pannel purporting to be returned for the Trying of Mr. Cook, or any particular Prisoner or Prisoners. For the Precept in this Case is (not like a Venire facias, which always respects a particular Issue between Parties therein named, but) general, requiring the Sheriff to return Jurors enough to Try all the Prisoners, not naming any. And the Return, which is the Answer to it by a Pannel or Pannels, is as General; the Title of every Pannel being Nomina Juratorum ad Triandum pro Domino Rege, and no more; or Nomina Juratorum ad Triandum inter Dom. Regem & Prisoner. ad Barram, without naming any of the Prisoners, and it were absurd if it should be otherwise: For the Precept goes to the Sheriff before the Sessions, and his Return is supposed to be made at the Beginning of the Sessions, when it is not known who of the Prisoners will be indicted; or, if indicted, who will plead not Guilty, or Guilty, or a Pardon, or other Plea.

When, for the Trial of a particular Prisoner (or divers Prisoners that are thought fit to be put upon Trial by the same Jury), a Jury is about to be taken out of any Pannel, the Clerk, as he goes along, may take a Note in Paper of the Name of every one that is sworn; or he may (and usually doth) write Jur. on the said Pannel, against the Name of every one Sworn: But this Note or Mark is no Part of the Record; it is not ex Institutione Legis, it is but a voluntary Memorandum for the Help of his Memory. If he could safely trust to the Strength of his Memory, he need not write at all on this Occasion; I mean, not till a full Jury is Sworn, who try the Prisoner. But then, indeed, the Clerk must (from his Notes or Memory) write the Name of all the Twelve, entering them on the Record of the Indictment, in this manner, viz. just after the ides immediate veniat inde Jurata coram prefatis Justic. &c. adding, & Juratores Jurata illius, &c. Scil. A. B. &c. Dicunt, &c. And it is by this only, that the Names of those that are Sworn, come to be of Record; and it is this Entry upon the Body of the Indictment alone, that is the Record, that shews who were Jurors Sworn, to try this, or that, or other Prisoner or Prisoners.

So that if the old Pannel were filed, and were a Record, as the Prisoner's Counsel would suppose, yet it would not thereby be made appear, that the said Pannel was returned, or used for, or in order to the Trial of this Prisoner.

2. The old Pannel is not filed among the Records of the Court, nor ought to be. When such a Pannel does not produce a Jury, the Clerks may and use to throw it by as a useless thing. But, however they use it, we cannot allow it to be a Record. It was received de bene esse; it is abortive and comes to nothing. And it is not every Thing that passeth in Court in order to a Record, that comes to be so. A frivolous Plea that is rejected, is not recorded. A Presentment or Bill of Indictment, before it is found, is not a Record: And if an Ignoramus be returned upon a Bill of Indictment, it never can be a Record; and thereupon, the Clerks do sometimes throw it away, though sometimes they keep it and put it on the File, only taking care to cross it; but if they do forget to cross it, yet it is not a Record.

By all this it is apparent how great the Difference is between a Precept and Pannels in this Court, and a Venire facias and a Pannel returned thereupon, which is ever issued after Issue joined, and doth always mention the particular Parties and Matter it relates to, and is a Record, and a Ground for an Habeas Corpora with a Talis, to be returnable at a certain future Day.

But, in this Case, in this Court, it is quite otherwise.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, since there is a new Pannel, we hope we stand in the same Condition upon the Act of Parliament, to take Exceptions to the Indictment before this Jury Sworn, as we did before the other Jury Sworn, since all that is quite set aside.

L. C. J. Treby. Yes, truly, I think that may be.

Mr. Att. Gen. But these Gentlemen would have done well to have given notice of their Exceptions.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, I shall not stand upon an Exception which I think I might take to the Word Turmas in the Indictment, which, whether it be Troops of Men, or Horses, or what it is, does not appear;

but, I think, we have an Exception to the chief Overt-Act laid in the Indictment, and that, we presume, if my Brief be right, will be sufficient to set aside this Indictment: That Mr. Cook did agree with other Traitors to send Mr. Charnock into France to the said late King James, and King James is never mentioned before in all the Indictment; that is one Exception that we have, that there is no late King James mentioned in the Indictment before this, if my Copy be right; if it be otherwise, I suppose they will find it: It is laid, That Mr. Cook did agree to send Charnock as a Messenger into France, eidem nuper Regi Jacobo, and no Rex Jacobus is mentioned before. Then there is another Exception, and that's this: They come and say, That whereas there was a War with France, which is only in the Indictment by way of Recital or Rehearsal of an History, Quod cum per magnum Tempus fuit & modo sit, &c. Mr. Cook, the Premises knowing, did compass and imagine the King's Death, and did adhere to the said King's Enemies such a Day. Now, my Lord, I do think that this can never be maintain'd, for that Cum quoddam Bellum, &c. being an historical Narrative, is not positive enough: For adhering to the King's Enemies, being one of the Treasons laid in the Charge, there ought to be a War at the Time of the Adhesion, and of Necessity then that ought to be presented by the Jury; for though your Lordships can judicially take notice of War or Peace, yet you cannot take notice of it at such a particular Time, and the Reason is from the Notion that is in my Lord Coke in his third Institutes, cap. Treason, That Adhesions to Rebels is not Adhesion to the King's Enemies, for a Rebel is not said to be an Enemy; but it must be adhering to such an Enemy, as between whom and the King there was War at that Time; and consequently it ought to be more positively averred in the Indictment than it here is; but as to the Overt-Act of Mr. Cook's consulting and agreeing to send Charnock over to the said late King James, to give him notice of what was agreed upon between them, when King James is not named before, that can never be got over, with Submission.

Mr. Baker. It is a Mistake of your Copy, Sir Bartholomew Shower.

Mr. Att. Gen. I have looked into the Record, and it is Jacobo Secundo nuper Regi, not Disco.

Sir B. Shower. Then, with Submission, my Lord, they cannot try us now, for we ought to have a true Copy of the Indictment.

Mr. Baker. Upon Demand. But you never demanded it.

Sir B. Shower. Yes, it was demanded.

Mr. Baker. Who demanded it?

Sir B. Shower. Our Solicitor Burleigh.

Mr. Baker. No, he did not; I gave it him officiously.

Mr. Att. Gen. With Submission, my Lord, it is no Objection at all, that their Copy is wrong. That should have been before the Prisoner had pleaded; for the Words of the Act are, That he shall have it so many Days before, to enable him to plead, and he cannot be put to plead unless he have a Copy of the Indictment so long before: And at Rookwood's Trial it was said by the Court, it could not be alledged after Plea pleaded.

Mr. Burleigh. The Copy was given to me publicly in Court.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Why did not your Solicitor compare it with the Indictment?

Mr. Att. Gen. They might have compared it by the Clerk's reading it to them; but they will not admit the Prisoner's Solicitor to see the Original, because the Act expressly says they shall not have a Copy of the Witnesses Names.

Sir B. Shower. The Officer is to deliver a true Copy of the Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. No: the Party is to demand it by himself or his Agent, and then he is to have it; and if he be denied, he ought to apply himself to the Court, who will order the Delivery of it; but we stand upon it, that they cannot take this Exception now after they have pleaded, for the Intent of the Copy is to enable him to plead.

L. C. J. Treby. The Copy, by the Act of Parliament, is to be delivered to the Prisoner, his Attorney, Agent, or Solicitor, if they require the same; and here it seems there was no requiring of it, but it was voluntarily given; and now you have lapsed your Time of making the Exception of wanting a Copy, by having pleaded to the Indictment, whereby you have in effect admitted and declared, either that you had a true Copy of it, or that you did not think fit to require one; for the Use of the Copy is to better enable the Prisoner to plead. But when you did plead, you took upon yourself to be well able to plead without the Help of a Copy, which you might have had upon the asking for.

Sir B. Shower. Then, my Lord, there is another thing in the Indictment, That in this Overt-Act there is a new Time, and a new Place, and a new Verb, and a new Fact alledged, and no Nominative Case: It is alledged, That Peter Cook, at first, with others, did so and so: and then the first of July to bring the Treasons aforesaid to effect, there & alibi, &c. (which is very loose, for I know not whence the Venue must come) did traitorously with Charnock, Freind, &c. consult to procure Diversas Turmas & Legiones, &c. to join with them in England, and then it comes & ulterius such a Day, Year, and Place, did traitorously agree so and so, and not say who: Now this is neither by express Words, nor Rule of Grammar to be referred to the Prisoner at the Bar; it does not say ipse idem Petrus Cook; now, my Lord, that the King's Counsel thought it necessary in every Overt-Act is plain, because those Words are put in every other Clause of the Indictment, in those Clauses that go before, and those Clauses that come after; then if they will take it, that this Clause must refer to the next Antecedent, that will not do, for the next precedent Nominative Case is either Freind or Charnock: So that this is without a Nominative Case, and the Precedents in my Lord Coke's Entries 361, and all the other Books have the Nominative Case repeated, where there is a new Time, and a new Place, and a new Fact alledged: Now it might be true, that the Prisoner at the Bar might be present, and this same Treason might be discoursed of and agitated, and there might be a Consult about this Business; and yet it is not necessarily implied that he must consent and agree to send Charnock into France, upon which the great Stress of the Indictment lies: Therefore we say, these Words having no Nominative Case, the Indictment cannot hold.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as to this Objection, it will receive a very plain Answer. Our Indictment begins and sets forth, that Peter Cook, the Prisoner at the Bar, did imagine and compass the King's Death, and did adhere to the King's Enemies, and these are the Treasons: And then it sets forth the Overt-Act, that in Execution of the traitorous Compassings, Imaginations, and Adhesions aforesaid, Ipse idem Petrus Cook, together with Sir William Parkyns, Mr. Charnock, Sir John Freind, and others, did propose and consult to procure from the French King Forces to invade this Land; & ulterius, he and they did agree to send Charnock to the late King James.

Mr. J. Rokeby. There's the first naming of James the Second, late King of England, and there is no videm Jacobo, I promise you.

L. C. J. Treby. Well, that Mistake is over. Pray go on, Mr. Attorney-General.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, as to this Objection of Sir Bartholomew Shower, he would have ipse idem Petrus repeated over again; and he says, that we lay a distinct Overt-Act with a different Time and Place: Now that is a Mistake too; it is not a different Time and Place, but the same Time and Place: And it mentions that cum R. Charnock, J. Freind, &c. & cum aliis Proditoribus conveniebat, consultabat, &c. which he says may refer to Sir John Freind or Charnock: But if you look into the Frame of the Sentence, that can never be.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Petrus Cook is the Nominative Case that governs all the Verbs.

Mr. Att. Gen. And there is no other Nominative Case in all the Indictment, but Petrus Cook, except it be in a Parenthesis, and that saves the Rule of Grammar, if there were any Thing in it, that it must refer to the last Antecedent.

Sir B. Shower. When it comes to the Clause that he did procure Horse and Arms, there the Nominative Case is repeated.

L. C. J. Treby. It would not have made it worse, if they had made it so here; but the Question is, Whether it be necessary?

Sir B. Shower. Indictments ought to be precisely certain; but this we say is not so.

Mr. Att. Gen. But here is as much Certainty as to the Person, as can be, that he did consult with such and such about such Things; and further, the same Day did agree with the same Traitors to do so and so.

Mr. J. Powell. Indictments, it is true, ought to be plain and clear; but I do not see but here is as much Certainty as can be, that he did such a Day consult, and further, the same Day did agree with the same Persons.

Sir B. Shower. Who did agree, my Lord?

Mr. J. Powell. He that did consult with them before, and that is Peter Cook.

Mr. Att. Gen. You'd have had us to put it to every Verb, I believe.

Sir B. Shower. In Indictments no Presumption ought to be used, but the Facts ought to be directly and positively alledged.

Mr. J. Powell. It's true, there should be no Presumption; and there is none here, for certainly this is a plain Assertion of Fact.

L. C. J. Treby. Here are two Things that are set forth: First, That Peter Cook did meet with Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns, and others, and then and there did consult with them, and consent to procure an Invasion, and join an Insurrection thereto. And, Secondly, Further with the said Traitors did agree to send Charnock into France. Now, what is the Nominative Case to this Agreement? Is it Sir John Freind, and Sir William Parkyns? That's impossible: For they could not be said properly to meet and consult with themselves, every one of them with his own self and the rest. And then the Number, if it had referr'd to them, should have been plural; but here it is singular, [agereavit] and the Sense is no more than this: That then and there Mr. Cook did meet with such Persons, and did consult with them about such and such Matters; and further, did agree with them to do thus.

Sir B. Shower. The Meaning is not to be forced and strained by Inference or Presumption, but it ought to be express and plain.

L. C. J. Treby. Nay, you cannot express it better; you may make a Tautology of it, if you will.

Sir B. Shower. The Paragraph is long, my Lord, and therefore requires the more Care to have those Repetitions that are necessary.

L. C. J. Treby. Your Objection to this Paragraph is, that it is too long; but repeating the same Nominative Case to every Verb would make it much longer.

Sir B. Shower. It cannot be understood to mean Peter Cook without Presumption, which ought not to be in an Indictment.

Mr. Att. Gen. And as to Sir Bartholomew Shower's first Objection, his Copy is right too, and he mistook the Place.

Sir B. Shower. You should have given me that for an Answer.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nay, you should have taken more Care, and not have made the Objection.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, I think it is hardly possible to have made this better, if it had been otherwise than it is.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. My Lord, we think we have a good Fact of it, which we rely upon, and therefore do not so much insist upon these Exceptions; tho', in Duty to our Client, we mention that which we think is necessary, and we submit to your Lordship.

Cl. of Ar. Set Peter Cook to the Bar. (Which was done.) You, the Prisoner at the Bar, these good Men which you shall hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and you, upon Trial of your Life and Death; if therefore you would challenge them, or any of them, your Time is to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be sworn, and before they be sworn.

Cryer. Call Sir John Sweetapple.

Sir John Sweetapple. Here.

Cook. My Lord Chief Justice, if your Lordship please, I am advised----

L. C. J. Treby. Pray, Sir, speak out, that we may hear what you say: And let the Cryer make Proclamation for Silence. (Which was done.)

Cook. My Lord, before the Jury is called, I am advised, that if any of the Jury have said already that I am Guilty, or they will find me Guilty, or I shall suffer, or be hanged, or the like, they are not fit or proper Men to be of the Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. You say right, Sir, it is a good Cause of Challenge.

Mr. J. Rokeby. That will be a sufficient Cause, if when they come to the Book, you object that, and be ready to prove it.

Cook. Which is Sir John Sweetapple?

(He was shown to him.)

Cl. of Ar. There he is.

Cook. I challenge him.

Cl. of Ar. William Walker.

Cook. Sir, have you said any such Thing, that you believe me Guilty?

Mr. Walker. No, Sir.

Mr. Baker. My Lord, he is asking of the Jurymen the Question.

Mr. J. Rokeby. That's a Fact the Prisoner should prove upon him.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, he must not ask the Jury that Question, Whether they have declared before, that they will find him Guilty; that is to make them guilty of a Misdemeanor.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Is it any Misdemeanor for me to say, I think or believe such a Man is Guilty?

Mr. Att. Gen. If he be summon'd to be of a Jury, and declare his Opinion before-hand, it is a Misdemeanor.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. But suppose it be before he was summon'd?

Mr. Att. Gen. If you make any such Objection, you must prove it, and not out of the Jurymen's own Mouth.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. I think any Man, my Lord, that comes to serve upon the Jury, may be ask'd any Question that does not make him guilty of any Offence or Crime, or liable to any Punishment: Now if any of these Gentlemen that are return'd upon this Pannel, before the Summons have declar'd their Opinion that the Prisoner is Guilty, or ought to suffer; with Submission, the Prisoner may ask such a Question, Whether he have said so, yea or no?

Mr. J. Powell. He cannot upon a Voyer Dire be ask'd any such Question.

Mr. J. Rokeby. It is not denied to be a material Objection, but it must be made out by Proof.

L. C. J. Treby. You put it too large, Brother Darnal; you may ask upon a Voyer Dire, whether he have any Interest in the Cause; nor shall we deny you Liberty to ask whether he be fitly qualified, according to Law, by having a Freehold of sufficient Value; but that you can ask a Juror or a Witness every Question that will not make him criminous, that's too large: Men have been ask'd, Whether they have been convicted and pardon'd for Felony, or whether they have been whipp'd for Petty Larceny; but they have not been obliged to answer; for, tho' their Answer in the Affirmative will not make them Criminal, or subject them to Punishment, yet they are Matters of Infamy; and if it be an infamous Thing, that's enough to preserve a Man from being bound to answer. A pardon'd Man is not guilty, his Crime is purged; but merely for the Reproach of it, it shall not be put upon him to answer a Question whereon he will be forced to forswear or disgrace himself. So Persons have been excused from answering whether they have been committed to Bridewell as Pilferers or Vagrants, or to Newgate for Clipping or Coining, &c. yet to be suspected or committed is only a Misfortune and Shame, no Crime. The like has been observed in other Cases of odious and infamous Matters which were not Crimes indictable. But to keep to our Case, 'tis true, a Juror may be challenged being an Alien, or being a Villain; but where the Matter apparently carries Crime or Shame, it should be proved; the Outlawry should be proved, and so should the being a Villain. Yet that is no Crime, tho' it be an Ignominy.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. But, my Lord, I take this to be no Manner of Infamy at all; there is nothing of Crime, nor nothing of Reproach, but only a declaring of a Man's Opinion.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, I think otherwise; I take it to be at least a scandalous Misbehaviour, and deservedly ill-spoken of, for any Man to pre-judge, especially in such a heinous Matter. I think it is a very shameful Discovery of a Man's Weakness and Rashness, if not Malice, to judge before he hears the Cause, and before the Party that is accused could be tried. But it seems, by what the Prisoner says, that he would ask all the Jurors, whether they have not said that he was guilty, or that they would find him guilty, or that he should be hanged, or the like: Which (presuming him innocent) is to ask, whether they have not defamed and slandered him in the highest Degree; and to force them to discover that they have a mortal Hatred to him, and come with a malicious Resolution to convict him: Which, admitting they are not punishable by our Law, yet are Things so detestably wicked and so scandalous, as are not fit to be required to be disclosed by and against themselves.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray, my Lord, what is more common than for a Man to say, before he is summoned to be upon a Jury, when he hears a Fact reported concerning such a one, to say, I believe he is guilty, or, I am of Opinion he is, and I am sure he will be hanged? And yet there is no Crime in this.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, Brother Darnal, I know not how you may approve of such a Man, but I'll assure you I do not. I take the Question not to be concerning a Man's discoursing suppositively; as, if upon hearing News, or a Report of clear Evidence, a Man should say, Supposing this to be true, such a Man is guilty, and I should find him so if I were of his Jury. This might not be sufficient to set aside a Juror: For this has been a general Discourse among the Subjects upon Occasion of this Conspiracy; and it imports, that if evidence should not be true and clear, he would acquit him. And so he is, as he should be, indifferent. But if a Man qualified for a Juror, affirm positively that such a Prisoner is guilty, and that he will find him so, whatever Evidence or Proof be given or made to the contrary; I think that may be a Misdemeanor punishable as an owning and encouraging of Falshood, Perjury, and Injustice, and a Contempt and Scandal to the Justice of the Kingdom: Tho' I hope and believe that no Man hath so demeaned himself.

Mr. J. Powell. In a Civil Case it would be a good Cause of Challenge. If a Man have given his Opinion about the Right one way or other, may you not upon a Voyer dire ask him whether he hath given his Opinion one way or other? I believe it may be ask'd in a Civil Cause, because he may have been a Referee; but if you make it Criminal, it cannot be ask'd, because a Man is not bound to accuse himself; now the Difference lies in the Nature of the Cause; it is not Criminal in a Civil Case for a Man to say he was an Arbitrator in such a Case, and, upon what appeared before him, he was of such an Opinion.

Mr. Att. Gen. But, my Lord, it is a different Case to give an Opinion about the Right between Party and Party, where a Man has been an Arbitrator and so in the Nature of a Judge, and where a Man is to go upon a Jury in the Case of Life and Death, and before the Evidence given, he declares his Opinion without hearing the Cause.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we know several of the Trials have been printed, and the Names of several Persons mentioned, and upon reading of the Trials, or conversing about them, Men are apt to give their Opinions one way or other.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. It is only an Objection in Case he has done it.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. But, Brother, how can you ask him the Question?

Mr. Serj. Darnal. If the Court are of Opinion that it is such a Crime that it cannot be ask'd, as tending to make a Man accuse himself of an infamous Crime, then we submit it to you, and I confess we must not ask it; but we cannot apprehend that there is either Crime or Infamy in it, though we think it is an Objection, and a good Cause of Challenge.

Mr. B. Powys. I think, tho' it be not such a Crime as infamous upon which a Man is not to be credited, for that is Infamy in the Eye of the Law, whereby a Man is prejudiced in his Credit; yet however, it is a shameful Thing for a Man to give his Judgment before he hath heard the Evidence; and therefore I think you ought not to ask him it, to make him accuse himself, if it be an opprobrious Matter upon him.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Truly, my Lord, I always took it to be the Rule, if the Thing asked to the Person returned be not criminal nor infamous, the Party that is ask'd ought to answer to it.

L. C. J. Treby. I would fain know, if you should ask any of the Jurymen this Question, whether he be guilty of all the Crimes that are pardoned by the last Act of Grace, he be bound to answer it?

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Undoubtedly we cannot ask any such Question; no, not to any one of the Things therein mentioned.

L. C. J. Treby. But yet you will force him to discover a Crime (if it be one) that is unpardoned.

Mr. Just. Powell. Certainly you go too far, Brother, for no Man is obliged to charge himself with what is Criminal; but whether this be Criminal to say, I believe such a one will be hanged, is of another Consideration.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. But I think it must be proved upon him, if any Objection be made.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, it will be no easy Thing to bring Witnesses to prove this matter, and therefore we would have it from his own Mouth.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. And it is a very hard matter for a Man to be put upon proving every Discourse that he has had about the publick Affairs of the Time.

Mr. Recorder. The Reason of your Exception is, that he has declar'd his Opinion before-hand, that the Party would be hanged or would suffer, that's a Reproach and a Reflection upon a Wise Man so to do; and if they can prove it upon him, let them do it: But whether you should ask him such a Question, Whether he be a Fool or a Knave for the giving an Opinion one way or other, that's the Question before us.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. My Lord, we do not offer it to the Court as an Objection that he is not a wise Man.

Mr. Att. Gen. But what a Man does utter imprudently, may occasion a Prejudice against him, and therefore ought to be proved, and not he to prove it himself.

L. C. J. Treby. Especially being a Freeholder of London, and taking notice of what is done in London; and if he does take notice of the Fact, and does previously give his Opinion of a Matter which he may be called upon a Jury to try, this is an Indiscretion and a Reproach to him, and I think a Misdemeanour.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. My Lord, I acknowledge it is ill done of him, that is, indiscreetly and not wisely, and we would have discreet and wise Men upon our Jury.

Mr. Cowper. My Lord, Mr. Serj. Darnal will make it so little a Thing at last, that it will amount to no Cause of Challenge, if it were even prov'd against him, which we insist it ought to be, it being their Objection, and the Party not being bound to prove it against himself; but truly we think there is more in it than so, because it is an unjust prejudging of a Man before he is tried and heard; and if so, it is a Thing that he ought not to accuse himself of, and therefore we oppose the asking any such Question.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Our Objection is not because it is an Offence to declare a Man's Opinion upon a Fact reported, but because it shews he has a settled Opinion against the Person of his Guilt, and so he is not so equal a Man to try him.

L. C. J. Treby. And is that like an honest Man and a Freeholder of London, (who ought to be indifferent) to come with a settled Opinion against a Man, when he is to be one of his Jury?

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Well, my Lord, we have been heard, and submit it to the Judgment of the Court.

L. C. J. Treby. Truly, I think it reflects both Dishonesty and Dishonour upon him, and therefore these Questions ought not to be ask'd. The Question is not, Whether a Man (if ever such a Man there were) that hath so resolved and declared shall be sworn? No; he is not fit to serve upon a Jury. But the Question is, How this shall be discovered, by his own Oath or by other Proof? I think it ought to be made appear by other Proof, if true. A Man attainted of Felony, Forgery, false Verdict, or Perjury, ought not to serve on a Jury, yet he shall not be examined concerning the same on a Voire dire. And if there be in Court a Copy of such Judgment carefully examin'd and kept by himself, he shall not be forced to answer whether it be a true Copy; though his Answer could not subject him to any further Penalty.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. My Lord, I hope no Gentleman of the Jury has done it.

L. C. J. Treby. I hope no Freeholder of London is so indiscreet or so unjust. But if any Man in this Pannel have any particular Displeasure to the Prisoner, or be unindifferent, or have declared himself so, I do admonish and desire him to discover so much in general; for it is not fit, nor for the Honour of the King's Justice, that such a Man should serve on the Jury.

VOL. IV.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. We hope so too. We hope that all that are returned upon the Jury are discreet and impartial Men.

Cl. of Ar. Well. Sir, what say you to this Gentleman, Mr. Walker.

Cook. I challenge you, Sir.

Cl. of Ar. Nathanael Long.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we think he may ask if they have a Freehold or no; because the Law requires that Qualification, and the Prisoner not being able to prove the Negative, it puts the Proof of the Affirmative upon the Person himself.

Mr. Att. Gen. What does Sir Bartholomew mean? Would he have the Jury-men bring their Evidences with them to prove their Freehold?

L. C. J. Treby. No, sure, Mr. Attorney; but to ask the Question was allowed him the last Time, and we will not deny him the same just Favour now.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, in London of the Value of 10 l. a-Year?—Mr. Long. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury when the Bill was found against me?—Mr. Long. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you, Sir.

Cl. of Ar. William Carbonell.

Mr. Carbonell. My Lord, I am no Freeholder.

L. C. J. Treby. What, does he say he has no Freehold?

Cl. of Ar. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. Then he must be set aside.

Cl. of Ar. Joshua Foster.

Mr. Foster. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London neither.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we desire they may be sworn, whether they have a Freehold or not.

Cl. of Ar. Hold Mr. Carbonell and Mr. Foster the Book. [Which was done severally.] You shall true Answer make to all such Questions as shall be asked you by the Court. So help you God.

Mr. Att. Gen. Ask him if he hath not a Freehold in London?

Mr. Carbonell. No, I have not.

Cl. of Ar. Have you, or any Body in Trust for you, a Freehold in London of the Value of 10 l. a-Year?

Mr. Carbonell. No, Sir.

Cl. of Ar. Joshua Foster. have you, or any in Trust for you, any Estate of Freehold in London of the Value of 10 l. a-Year?

Mr. Foster. No, Sir.

Cl. of Ar. Joseph Billers.

Cook. I desire they may be called in the Order as they are in the Pannel; you have not called John Ewen, who is next.

Cl. of Ar. I do call them in Order: As for Mr. Ewen, one hath made Oath that he is sick, and is not able to come hither. What say you to Mr. Billers? There he stands.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder of 10 l. a-Year within the City of London?—Mr. Billers. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Was you of the Grand-Jury, Sir, when the Bill was found against me?—Mr. Billers. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.—Cl. of Ar. John Child.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London?

Mr. Child. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Of 10 l. a-Year?—Mr. Child. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury when the Bill was found against me?—Mr. Child. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.—Cl. of Ar. Edward Leeds.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10 l. a-Year?—Mr. Leeds. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?

Mr. Leeds. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.

L. C. J. Treby. What Question was that he asked him?

Cl. of Ar. Whether he were one of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill.

L. C. J. Treby. A very proper Question: For an Indicter ought not to be a Trier.

Cl. of Ar. Thomas Clark.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10 l. a-Year?—Mr. Clark. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?

Mr. Clark. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.—Cl. of Ar. Nathan Green.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, within the City of London of the Value of 10 l. a-Year?—Mr. Green. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?

Mr. Green. No, Sir.

Cook. I challenge you.—Cl. of Ar. Henry Sherbrooke.

Cook. I have nothing to say against him.

Cl. of Ar. Then hold Mr. Sherbrooke the Book. [Which was done.] Look upon the Prisoner. You shall well and truly try, and true Deliverance make between our Sovereign Lord the King and the Prisoner at the Bar, (whom you shall have in Charge) according to your Evidence. So help you God.

[Then Mr. Sherbrooke was put into the Place appointed for the Jury.]

Cl. of Ar. Henry Dry.

Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder in the City of London of the Value of 10 l. a-Year?—Mr. Dry. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?

Mr. Dry. No, Sir.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.—Cl. of Ar. Joseph Morewood.

Cook. Sir, Have you a Freehold in London of the Value of 10 l. a-Year?

Mr. Morewood. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?

Mr. Morewood. No, Sir.

Cook. Sir, I challenge you.—Cl. of Ar. Richard Greenway.

Cook. Are you a Freeholder of 10 l. a-Year in London?

Mr. Greenway. Yes, Sir.

Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?

Mr. Greenway. No, Sir.

Cook Sir, I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. John Sherbrook.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Sherbrook. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Sherbrook. No, Sir.
 Cook. Sir, I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Thomas Emmes.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, within the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Emmes. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Emmes. No, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Samuel Jackson.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Jackson. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Jackson. No, Sir.
 Cook. Sir, I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Henry Hunter.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, in London, of the Value of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Hunter. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Hunter. No, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. John Deacle.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder within the City of London of the Value of 10l. a Year?—Mr. Deacle. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Deacle. No, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. John Cullum.
 Cook. I accept of him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Thomas Shaw.
 Cook. I accept of him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. George Joyce.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Joyce. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Joyce. No, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Richard Young.
 Cook. I have nothing to say against him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. John Hedges.
 Cook. Sir, are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Hedges. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Hedges. No, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. John James.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. James. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. James. No, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Thomas Poole.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Poole. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Poole. No, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Peter Parker.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder in the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Parker. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Parker. No, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. William Wilkinfon.
 Mr. Wilkinfon. My Lord, I am no Freeholder in London.
 [To which he was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Henry Mitchel.
 Cook. Hold, Sir, here Thomas Man in my Pannel is next.
 Cl. of Arr. There is Oath made that he is sick in Bed. What say you to Mr. Mitchel?
 Cook. Sir, Have you a Freehold of 10l. a Year in the City of London?
 Mr. Mitchel. No, Sir. [To which he was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Richard Ryder.
 Cook. Sir, Have you a Freehold of 10l. a Year in the City of London?
 Mr. Ryder. Yes, I have, Sir; but I live in a Parish that never served upon any Juries, nor ever did in the Memory of any Man.
 Cl. of Arr. But have you a Freehold of 10l. a Year?—Mr. Ryder. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Ryder. No, Sir.
 Cook. Sir, I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Richard Temple.
 Mr. Temple. My Lord, I am no Freeholder. [To which he was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Peter Walker.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Walker. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Walker. No, Sir.—Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Thomas Pistol.
 Mr. Pistol. I am no Freeholder. [To which he was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. John Hunt.
 Mr. Hunt. My Lord, my Name is mistaken; my Name is William Hunt.
 L. C. J. Treby. Then you must go on to another.
 Cl. of Arr. John Hardret.

Mr. Hardret. I am no Freeholder of 10l. a Year. [To which he was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. John Hammond.
 Cook. Are you a Freeholder, Sir, of 10l. a Year in London?
 Mr. Hammond. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Hammond. No, Sir.—Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. John Cooper.
 Cook. I accept of him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Joffelin Roberts.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Roberts. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Roberts. No, Sir.—Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Jonathan Micklethwait.
 Cook. I have nothing to say against him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Richard Chiswell.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder within the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Chiswell. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Chiswell. No, Sir.—Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Joseph Thompson.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Thompson. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Thompson. I was returned upon the Grand-Jury, but did not serve.
 Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Eduard Brewster.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Brewster. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Brewster. No, Sir.—Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. George Gooday.
 Mr. Gooday. My Lord, I am no Freeholder. [To which he was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Abraham Hickman.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Hickman. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Hickman. No, Sir.—Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. George Grove.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Grove. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Grove. No, Sir.—Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Nathanael Wyersden.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Wyersden. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Wyersden. No, Sir.
 Cook. I challenge you. My Lord, I desire to know how many I have excepted against.—Cl. of Arr. One-and-Thirty.
 Mr. Burleigh. Write, write.
 Cl. of Arr. Samuel Blewitt.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Blewitt. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Blewitt. No, Sir.—Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. John Wolfe.—Cook. I accept of him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. William Smith.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Smith. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Smith. No, Sir.—Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. John Bickley.
 Mr. Bickley. My Lord, I don't look upon myself as a Freeholder.
 L. C. J. Treby. Why so, Sir?
 Mr. Bickley. I have a Lease for One-and-Fifty Years, my Lord, of my House, and there is a very little Piece of Ground adjoining to it that was very convenient for me to lay to my Lease; there is no way to it but through my House; it is a Thing that never was lett for any Thing, and it is not worth the Building.
 L. C. J. Treby. What Estate have you in it? Do you pay a Ground-Rent for it?—Mr. Bickley. My Lord, I bought that little Piece of Ground for the Convenience of my Lease.
 L. C. J. Treby. But did you purchase it for a Term of Years, or to you, and to your Heirs?—Mr. Bickley. Nay, I bought it for ever, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Treby. Then you have a Freehold in it. What's the Value of it?
 Mr. Bickley. Truly very little, my Lord.
 L. C. J. Treby. I don't know any Body can judge of the Value of it but yourself. Is it worth 10l. a Year?—Mr. Bickley. My Lord, I can't value it at 10l. a Year, it never cost me 40l.
 L. C. J. Treby. Then for Estate you are well enough, but for Value you are a little under.
 Cl. of Arr. Thomas Collins.—Cook. I accept of him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. John Watson.—Cook. I do not challenge him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. Benjamin Hooper.—Cook. I accept of him. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr. John Wells.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Wells. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Wells. No, Sir.—Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. John Hibbart.
 Cook. Sir, Are you a Freeholder of the City of London of 10l. a Year?
 Mr. Hibbart. Yes, Sir.
 Cook. Were you of the Grand-Jury that found the Bill against me?
 Mr. Hibbart. No, Sir.—Cook. I challenge you.
 Cl. of Arr. Mr. Cook, you have challenged your full Number. Call Daniel Wray. [He was sworn.]
 Cl. of Arr.

Cl. of Arr. John Pettit. [He was sworn.] Crier, Countez.

Henry Sherbrook.

Crier. One, &c.

Cl. of Arr. John Pettit.

Crier. Twelve good Men and true, stand together, and hear your Evidence.

The Names of the Twelve sworn are as follow :

*Henry Sherbrook,
John Cullum,
Thomas Shaw,
Richard Young,*

*John Cooper,
Jonath. Micklethwait,
John Wolf,
Thomas Collins,*

*John Watson,
Benjamin Hooper,
Daniel Wray, and John Pettit.*

Cl. of Arr. Crier, Make Proclamation.

Crier. O Yes, If any one can inform my Lord, the King's Justices, the King's Serjeant, the King's Attorney-General, or this Inquest now to be taken of the High-Treason whereof Peter Cook, the Prisoner at the Bar, stands indicted, let them come forth and they shall be heard, for the Prisoner now stands at the Bar upon his Deliverance; and all others that are bound by Recognizance to give Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar, let them come forth, and give their Evidence, or they forfeit their Recognizance.

L. C. J. Treby. You must make room for those Twelve Gentlemen that are sworn, that they may be at Ease; and for those that are not sworn, their Attendance may be spared.

Cl. of Arr. Peter Cook. Hold up thy Hand. [Which he did.] Gentlemen, you that are sworn, look upon the Prisoner, and hearken to his Cause. He stands indicted in London, by the Name of Peter Cook, late of London, Gentleman; For that whereas an open and notoriously publick and most sharp and cruel War, for a great while hath been, and it is by Land and by Sea carried on and prosecuted, by Lewis the French King, against the most Serene, most Illustrious and most Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God, of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. All which time, the said Lewis the French King, and his Subjects, were, and yet are Foes and Enemies of our said Lord the King that now is, William the Third, and his Subjects; he the said Peter Cook, a Subject of the said Lord the King that now is, of this his Kingdom of England, well knowing the Premises, not having the Fear of God in his Heart, nor weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as a false Traitor against the said most Serene, most Mild, and most Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, now King of England, his Supreme, True, Rightful, Lawful, and undoubted Lord, the cordial Love, and true and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of the said Lord the King that now is towards him our said Lord the King should bear, and of Right is bound to bear, withdrawing; and utterly to extinguish, Intending, and Contriving, and with all his Strength purposing, and designing the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our said Lord the King that now is of Right duly, happily, and very well established, altogether to subvert, change, and alter, and his Faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and miserable Servitude to the aforesaid French King to subdue and enthrall; the First Day of July, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our said Lord the King that now is, and divers Days and Times, as well before as after, at London, in the Parish of St. Peter Cornhill, in the Ward of Lime-street, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traitorously did compass, imagine and contrive, Purpose and intend, our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, then his Supreme, True, Rightful, and Lawful Lord, of and from the Regal State, Title, Honour, Power, Crown, Empire, and Government of this Kingdom of England to depose, cast down, and utterly deprive, and the same our Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to bring, and the aforesaid Lewis the French King, by Armies, Soldiers, Legions, and his Subjects, this Kingdom of England to invade, fight with, conquer and subdue, to move, incite, procure and assist, and a miserable Slaughter among the Faithful Subjects of our said Lord King William, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to Make and Cause. And further, That the said Peter Cook, during the War aforesaid, to wit, the aforesaid First Day of July, in the seventh Year above said, and divers other Days and Times before and after, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, to the said Foes and Enemies of the same our Lord the King, did adhere and was assisting: And his aforesaid most wicked and devilish Treasons, and Traitorous Compassings, Contrivances, Intentions, and Purposes aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, and in Prosecution, Performance, and Execution of that traitorous adhering, he the said Peter Cook, as such a false Traitor, during the War aforesaid, to wit, the same First Day of July, in the Year above said, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elsewhere in London aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, advisedly, secretly, and traitorously, and by Force and Arms, with one Robert Charnock, Sir John Freind, and Sir William Parkyns, Knights, (which said Robert Charnock, Sir John Freind, and Sir William Parkyns, were lately severally duly Convicted and Attainted of High-Treason, in Contriving and Conspiring the Death of our said Lord the King that now is) and with divers other false Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propose, treat, consult, consent, and agree to procure from the aforesaid Lewis the French King, of his Subjects, Forces and Soldiers, then, and yet, Foes and Enemies of our said Sovereign Lord William, now King of England, &c. great Numbers of Soldiers and Armed Men, this Kingdom of England to invade and fight with, and to Levy, Procure, and Prepare great Numbers of Armed Men, and Troops, and Legions against our said Lord the King that now is, to rise up and be formed, and with those Foes and Enemies, at and upon such their Invasion and Entry within this Kingdom of England, to join and unite, Rebellion and War against our said Lord the King that now is, within this Kingdom of England, to make, levy, and carry on; the same our Lord the King so, as aforesaid, to Depose, and him to Kill and Murder: And further, with the said false Traitors, the same First Day of July, in the Year above said, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, traitorously did consult, consent, and agree to send the aforesaid Robert Charnock as a Messenger from him, the said Peter Cook, and the same other Traitors, as far as, and into the Kingdom of France, in Parts beyond the Seas, unto James the Second, late King of England, to propose to him, and to request him to obtain from the aforesaid French King, the aforesaid Soldiers and Armed Men for the Invasion aforesaid to be made, and Intelligence and Notice of such their traitorous Intentions and Adherings to the said late King James the Second, and the said other Foes and Enemies, and their Adherents, to give and shew, and them to inform of other Things, Particulars and Circumstances thereunto referring, for the Assistance, Animating, Comforting, and Aid of the said Foes and Enemies of the said Lord the King that now is, in the War aforesaid: And to stir up and procure those Foes and Enemies the readilier, and more boldly this Kingdom of England to invade; the Treasons, and traitorous Contrivances, Compassings, Imaginings, and Purposes of the said Peter Cook aforesaid to perfect and fulfil; also the same first Day of July, in the Seventh Year above said, at London aforesaid, in the Parish and Ward aforesaid, He the said Peter Cook, divers Horses, and very many Arms, Guns, Muskets, Pistols, Rapiers, and Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and Warlike Matters, and Military Instruments, falsely, maliciously, secretly, and traitorously, did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure; and to be bought, gathered together, obtained and procured, did cause, and in his Custody had and detained to that Intent, to use the same in the said Invasion, War, and Rebellion against our said Lord the King that now is, him our said Lord the King, of and from the Regal State, Crown and Government of this Kingdom of England to depose, cast down, and deprive, and him to Kill and Murder; and the Designs, Intentions, and all the Purposes of him the said Peter Cook aforesaid to fulfil, perfect, and fully to bring to effect, against the Duty of his Allegiance, and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord that now is, his Crown and Dignity, as also against the Form of the Statute in such Case made and provided.

Upon this Indictment he has been arraigned, and thereunto has pleaded Not Guilty, and for his Trial hath put himself upon God and his Country, which Country you are; your Charge is to inquire whether he be guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands Indicted, or not Guilty; if you find him Guilty, you are to inquire what Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements, he had at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since; if you find him not Guilty, you are to inquire whether he fled for it; if you find that he fled for it, you are to inquire of his Goods and Chattels as if you had found him Guilty; if you find him not Guilty, nor that he did fly for it, you are to say so, and no more; and hear your Evidence.

Mr. Mompesson. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen that are sworn, this is an Indictment for High-Treason against Peter Cook, the Prisoner at the Bar, and the Indictment sets forth, That whereas there has been an open and cruel War for a long Time, and still is between his Majesty King William and the French King; the Prisoner at the Bar not weighing the Duty of his Allegiance, the first of July in the Seventh Year of the King's Reign, did compass and intend to depose and deprive the King of the Title, Honour, and Dignity of the Imperial Crown of this Realm, and likewise to put the King to Death, and did adhere to the King's Enemies; and to fulfil these Treasons, he did consult with Charnock, and several other Traitors who were mentioned there, and some of whom have been found guilty of Treason, and executed for it, to send over to the late King James, to persuade the French King to send over Soldiers and Arms to invade this Kingdom, and to raise an Insurrection and Rebellion in it, and to deprive and put the King to Death; and to compleat these Treasons, it further sets forth, That the Prisoner at the Bar did provide several Arms and Horses, and this is laid to be against the Duty of his Allegiance, against the King's Peace, Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in that Case made and provided; to this he has pleaded not Guilty, and for Trial put himself upon the Country; and, Gentlemen, if we prove these Facts laid in the Indictment, it is your Duty to find him Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar stands indicted for High-Treason.

Cook. My Lord Chief Justice, if your Lordship pleases, before the Witnesses are examined against me, I intreat you that they may not be both in Court together, that one may not hear what the other swears, tho' I suppose it is the same thing; for they have been together both now and the last Day.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr. Cook. I must tell you, it is not necessary to be granted for asking; for we are not to discourage, or cast any Suspicion upon the Witnesses, when there is nothing made out against them; but it is a Favour that the Court may grant, and does grant sometimes, and now does it to you; though it be not of Necessity: They shall be examined apart, but at present this is not the Time of Examination; for the King's Counsel are now to open the Evidence before they examine the Witnesses; but when the Time comes for the Witnesses to be call'd and examined, the Court will, in favour to you, take care that your Request be complied with.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it please your Lordship, the Prisoner stands indicted for High-Treason, in compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of his Majesty, and likewise in adhering to his Majesty's Enemies; these are the Treasons specified in the Indictment: The Overt-Acts that are laid to prove these Treasons are, That he, with several other Traitors named in the Indictment, did meet and consult and agree to send over Charnock into France, to invite the French King to make an Invasion upon the Kingdom, and did provide Arms for that Purpose.

Gentlemen, the Nature of the Evidence that you will have produced to prove the Prisoner guilty of these Treasons lies thus: It will appear to you, that there has been for some Time a Conspiracy carried on by several Traitors, and wicked Persons, to subvert the established Government of this Kingdom, and destroy the Constitution of England, by a foreign Invasion of the French. You will hear that this Conspiracy was laid wide, and consisted of several Parts; one Part was that of Assassinating his Majesty's Royal Person, and that was to be done first, as a Preparation tion and Encouragement to the French to invade the Kingdom: The other Part was the inviting the French King to invade us, and the Prisoner at the Bar is accused of being concerned in that Part that relates to the Invasion of this Kingdom by a French Power; and though it may be the other Part, that of assassinating the King, be the blackest Part of the Conspiracy, yet if the Prisoner at the Bar has been engaged in the inviting a foreign Power to invade the Kingdom, my Lords the Judges will tell you, in Point of Law, that is as much an Overt-Act of the compassing the Destruction of the King and the People of England, and the Subversion of our ancient good Constitution, as if he had been concerned immediately in the other Part, the Assassination.

But now, Gentlemen, that the Prisoner was engaged in inviting the French to invade us, you will hear proved by several Witnesses, that there having been a Design last Year, just before his Majesty went to Flanders, to expose his own Person for our Protection, and the Protection of the Liberties of Europe, there was a Conspiracy to murder him before he went to Flanders, which, it seems, they were not ripe for then; but immediately after he was gone to Flanders, you will hear there were formal Meetings of several Gentlemen and Persons of Quality, among whom the Prisoner at the Bar was one: There was a Meeting in May, last Year, after the King was gone to Flanders; and this was at the Old King's-Head in Leaden-hall-street; and there were present my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Freind, Mr. Charnock, (all which three last have suffered the Punishment of the Law for their Treason already) and there were also Mr. Cook, the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Porter and Mr. Goodman; these Men did meet together, to consider of the best Ways and Means of encouraging and inviting the French King with an Armed Force to invade this Kingdom; they considered that that was a proper Opportunity, and did treat of several Arguments that might persuade to it: First, That the King was gone to Flanders, and so was not in Person here to defend us; and that the Troops, to make good such Defence, were in a great measure drawn thither, to assist the Allies against the French Power; they did think likewise that at that Time there was a great Discontent and Dissatisfaction in the Nation, though I think in that they were greatly mistaken; and I believe and hope they will always find themselves so, to think that the People of England are so little sensible of that which is the Means of their Preservation, as to hearken to any Discontents to encourage a French Power to come into England to destroy our Religion and Liberties; that indeed they did apprehend, though they were mistaken, and I believe they always will, when they go upon that Ground.

Gentlemen, These Persons thinking this a proper Opportunity, did agree to send a Messenger into France upon this Message, To go to the late King James, and persuade him to desire and prevail with the French King to assist him with Ten Thousand Men, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons; and to encourage him, they promised their Assistance here, as soon as he came over; and undertook, that between them they could furnish, and would raise 2000 Horse to meet him at his Landing, and join upon such an Invasion.

Gentlemen, At this Meeting this was agreed upon by all that were there, whereof the Prisoner was one; and they did agree to send Mr. Charnock; (who has since been executed, and a principal Encourager of the Design, and Actor in it) he was the Messenger that was appointed to go upon this Errand, and Mr. Charnock was resolved to go; but desired another Meeting of these Gentlemen, to know if they continued in their former Resolution, that he might have all the Assurance that was reasonable to give the French King Encouragement to make the Invasion: Accordingly another Meeting was had of most of the same Persons that were at the Meeting before; particularly the Prisoner at the Bar was at that Second Meeting, which was in Covent-Garden at one Mrs. Mountjoy's, who keeps a Tavern next Door to Sir John Fenwick's Lodgings; there they met upon the same Design, and upon Consultation had, and the Question ask'd, they did agree to continue in the former Resolution; and upon that immediately Mr. Charnock went into France, to solicit Forces from thence to invade us; but it happened, as it seems, that the French King's Forces were otherwise employed, so that he could not spare so many at that time; and this Return was brought by Charnock to the Gentlemen that employed him; that he had spoke with the late King, who gave him that Answer, That the French King could not spare so many Men at that time, but he thank'd them for their Kindness.

Gentlemen, this will be the Nature of our Evidence, to shew, that the Prisoner at the Bar was concerned in that Part of the Conspiracy which relates to the French Invasion; and if he be guilty of that, in Point of Law, he is as much guilty of the Conspiracy to depose and murder the King, as if he had been concerned in the other Part of Assassinating his Royal Person; and I believe nobody can think, that those that were to act in the Assassination, would have attempted to engage in such a desperate Design, if it had not been for the Encouragement of the French Invasion that was to second them afterwards, if they succeeded; so that nobody can extenuate the Crime of the Invasion, because as to the Horridness of the Attempt, it is less black than the other; they are both Crimes of a very high Nature, and equally High-Treason; and if we prove the Prisoner guilty of this Part, we hope you will find him guilty.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, we will call our Witnesses and prove the Matter, as it has been opened. Call Captain Porter and Mr. Goodman.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Now, my Lord, we must desire that that may be done which our Client desired before, and which your Lordship was favourably pleased to promise, that the Witnesses may be examined apart.

L. C. J. Treby. Let it be so: Who do you begin with?

Mr. Sol. Gen. We begin with Captain Porter, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. Then let Mr. Goodman withdraw.

Mr. Baker. Let Mr. Goodman go up Stairs, and we will call him presently.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Swear Captain Porter: [Which was done.] Captain Porter, Do you know Mr. Cook, the Prisoner at the Bar?

Capt. Porter. Yes, my Lord.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember a Meeting of some Gentlemen at the King's-Head-Tavern in Leaden-hall-street?

Capt. Port. Yes, I do, Sir.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then pray, give an Account of the Company that were there, the Time when, and what pass'd?

Capt. Port. My Lord, the last Year we had two Meetings; the First was in May, the other was the latter End of May, or the Beginning of June; the First was at the King's-Head in Leaden-hall-street; there were my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns, Mr. Charnock, Mr. Cook, and myself; Mr. Goodman came in after Dinner; at this Meeting it was consulted which was the best Way and the quickest to restore King James, and hasten his Return into England; several Discourses and Proposals there were; at last it was agreed to send Mr. Charnock to the late King, to borrow of the French King Ten Thousand Men, 8000 Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons, to be sent over into England to assist the King's Restoration. Says Mr. Charnock thereupon, This the King can do without your sending, and I would not go upon a foolish Errand. What will you do to assist in this Matter? The Company desired him to promise King James, that if he would send Word when he Landed and where, they would be sure to meet him at his Landing with a Body of 2000 Horse.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was the Prisoner at the Bar in the Company, and present at this Resolution?—Capt. Port. Yes, he was.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did all the Company agree to it?

Capt. Port. Yes, they did.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Signs were there of their Agreement? Did they stand up severally and declare their Agreement, or how?

Capt. Port. My Lord of Aylesbury and Sir John Fenwick did rise up, and desired Captain Charnock, that he would go upon this Errand: And when the Question was ask'd severally of all there present by Mr. Charnock, whether he might assure the King of what they had told him? every one said, Yes, you may; and Mr. Cook kneel'd indeed, upon a Chair, and said, Yes, you may.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he give his Consent to it?

Capt. Port. Yes, he answered in those very Words.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Do you remember any Meeting of any Company at Mrs. Mountjoy's?

Capt. Port. Yes, that was a second Meeting.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Pray tell my Lord and the Jury how you came to meet there then, what Company were there, and what pass'd?

Capt. Port. Mr. Charnock desired another Meeting, to see if the Gentlemen kept to their former Resolution; and we met at Mrs. Mountjoy's eight or ten Days after, and there were most of the Company that was at the first Meeting, and there all that were present did assure Mr. Charnock that they kept to their first Resolution, and would abide to what was agreed upon at the former Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who were present at the second Meeting?

Capt. Port. The Prisoner at the Bar was there at that second Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. What was that second Meeting for, do you say?

Capt. Port. It was to give Mr. Charnock Assurance, that we were agreed to stand by the Resolution taken at the first Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. What did Mr. Charnock do afterwards?

Capt. Port. I went away from them; there was Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Freind and Captain Charnock went to the Queen's-Head-Tavern in Fleet-street, and Captain Charnock told me he would go in two or three Days, and I believe did so.

Mr. Att. Gen. When did you see him afterwards?

Capt. Port. When I was a Prisoner upon the Account of the Riot in Drury-Lane; about two or three Days after I came to Newgate he came to see me, and said he had been in France; and that King James thank'd us for our kind Offer, but the French King could not spare so many Men that Year; and he told me he had been with my Lord of Aylesbury, and the rest of the Gentlemen that had employ'd him to go over, and had delivered them the several Messages that he was ordered to from the King.

L. C. J. Treby. Captain Porter, who were present at the second Meeting, do you say?

Capt. Port. My Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns, Captain Charnock, Mr. Cook, and myself; I cannot tell whether my Lord Montgomery or Mr. Goodman were at that second Meeting, or no.

Mr. Att. Gen. Captain Porter, I would ask you another Question: You were concerned in the Assassination with those other Persons that engaged in it; Pray, what Safety did you propose to yourselves after the Assassination was over?

Capt. Port. My Lord, I asked Sir George Barclay what we should do after the Fact was committed; Says he, You need fear nothing, I will go away that Night, I have a Ship ready, and the King will be Landed in five or six Days afterwards; if you'll but keep yourselves close for so many Days, all will do well.

Mr. Sol. Gen. If the Prisoner or the Counsel will ask him any Questions, my Lord, they may do it.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Sir, can you recollect what Time of Day this was that this Debate and Resolution were had at the Old King's-Head in Leaden-hall-street?

Capt. Port. Truly, Sir Bartholomew, I can't tell.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, by what means do you recollect that this was in the Month of May?

Capt. Port. Because Capt. Charnock was absent at the Dog-Tavern Riot, which was the Tenth of June.

Sir B. Shower. Was it not in April?

Capt. Port. No, Sir, to the best of my Remembrance it was in May.

Sir B. Shower. What makes you think it was in May rather than April?

Capt. Port. I have told you, Sir, because both Meetings were before the Dog-Tavern Riot, the Tenth of June, and Mr. Charnock was not there at that Time; but he told me afterwards he had been in France, and there were eight or ten Days Difference between the two Meetings.

Mr.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if they have done with him, I would ask him one Question, to settle this Matter in point of Time. Capt. Porter, Was the King gone to Flanders when you had these Meetings?

Capt. Porter. The King was gone, Sir, before the first Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. The King did not go till several Days in May; was Mr. Goodman there?

Capt. Porter. He was at the first Meeting, but I can't tell whether he was at the Second or no.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray, what Time was Mr. Goodman there at the first Meeting?

Capt. Porter. He came up after Dinner at the first Meeting.

Mr. Baker. Then call down Mr. Goodman. [Who came in and was sworn.]

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Goodman, Pray, will you give my Lord and the Jury an Account what you know of an intended Invasion upon this Kingdom; what were the Circumstances of it, and who were concerned in it.

Mr. Goodman. My Lord, about the Middle of May last, or thereabouts, Captain Porter sent to me, and told me there was a Meeting of some Gentlemen of our Acquaintance at the King's-Head in Leaden-hall-street; and he desired me that I would be there, because it was about Business: I told him I did not know whether I could be there at Dinner; but however, I would not fail of coming thither after Dinner; and accordingly I came. When I came into the House, I sent up my Name to Capt. Porter, and he came down and brought me up Stairs, and there I saw my Lord Montgomery, my Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Freind, Mr. Charnock, and that Gentleman at the Bar, Mr. Cook: When we were there, the Discourse was, that we did think King James's coming was retarded, and we would do any thing to facilitate his Restoration.

Cook. My Lord Chief Justice.

L. C. J. Treby. What say you, Mr. Cook?

Cook. My Lord, If your Lordship pleases, I desire the Jury may not be talk'd to by any Body; and I understand there are some talking with the Jury.

L. C. J. Treby. Fy upon it! We will lay any Body by the Heels that do so; they must neither be disturbed, nor instructed by any Body.

Cook. My Lord, I am informed there was somebody talking to them, and telling them this was the same Case with Sir John Freind.

L. C. J. Treby. Do you but shew us the Man, and we will find another Place for him; we will send him to the Gaol, I'll assure you.

Mr. Burleigh. This Gentleman, my Lord, did hear such a Discourse to the Jury (pointing to a Gentleman there) who stood up.

My Lord, I cannot positively swear to the Man, but I did hear some Discourse that it was the same Evidence as in the former Trial.

L. C. J. Treby. If you can shew us who it was, we will take care to punish him: I suppose he stands Corrected; and if we knew who he was, he should stand Committed.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Mr. Goodman, begin again, and tell what pass'd at that Meeting, because the Jury were interrupted from hearing by People's buzzing about them.

Mr. Goodman. My Lord, When Captain Porter brought me up into the Room, I told you what Gentlemen I found there; after we were set down, there was a Consultation, that considering the French King's Wars retarded the Affair of sending back King James, and the Means of restoring him to the Crown, it was fit we should find out some Way or Method to facilitate his Restoration, and it was thought convenient to have a Messenger to send over to King James with Proposals for that Purpose; to this effect, as near as I remember, That if King James could prevail with the French King to furnish Ten Thousand Men, whereof 8000 to be Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons, we would endeavour to meet him at the Head of as many Horse as we could raise, to sustain those Forces at their Landing: This was debated in order to come to a Resolution; and much Difficulty there was how many the Number should be; the Man pitched upon to be sent, was Mr. Charnock; and after some Debate, how many Thousand Horse could be raised: Says Mr. Charnock, don't let me go over upon a foolish Errand, but let me know what I have to say exactly: Thereupon it was concluded by all, that Two Thousand Horse should be the Number we could promise, and the King might depend upon them; and if we brought more, so much the better; and Sir John Freind said, I believe he has so many Friends here, that if he came himself, he might be welcome; but that we did not think fit to trust to; and nobody would advise any such Thing. When the Resolution of the Thing and the Number was thus fixed, Mr. Charnock ask'd, Whether it were with all our Consents? and that he might assure the King, that this was our Resolution thereupon? We all rose up, and said to him, Yes, you may, yes, you may, every one particularly; and I remember one Thing particularly concerning the Prisoner Mr. Cook, That he kneel'd upon the Chair when he said, Yes, you may; and his Elbows were upon the Table: This is all that I know of that Meeting. There was to be another Meeting, as Captain Porter told me; but I had Business in the City; but whatsoever he promised on my Behalf, as to the Quota of Men, I would be sure to make it good; and I was not at the second Meeting.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see Mr. Charnock afterwards?

Mr. Goodman. Yes, I did, when he came back; and he told me the Thing was not accepted, for the French King could not spare Men, and that he had been with the several Gentlemen to carry them the Compliments that he had in Charge from King James, who returned them Thanks for their good Affection; and, among the rest, he did me the Honour to return me Thanks too.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Mr. Goodman, let me ask you a Question: When was it that you saw Mr. Charnock after this?

Mr. Goodman. It was in Arundel-street, at his Lodgings.

Sir B. Shower. But I ask you, Sir, when it was? Was it before or after the Tenth of June?

Mr. Goodman. It was after the Tenth of June, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. How long after, pray?

Mr. Goodman. I believe it was a Month after the Tenth of June.

VOL. IV.

Sir B. Shower. Did you see him here in England before Mr. Porter was discharged from the Riot, and came out of Newgate?

Mr. Goodman. I believe I did see him before Captain Porter was discharged, long.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Who were the Persons that were present at that Meeting?

Mr. Goodman. My Lord Montgomery, my Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, Sir William Parkyns, Mr. Charnock, Captain Porter, and the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Cook.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Were you at Dinner with them, Sir?

Mr. Goodman. No, I came in after Dinner.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray, what House was it, do you say, this Meeting was at?—Mr. Goodman. It was at the King's-Head in Leaden-hall-street.

Sir B. Shower. Can you tell what Day of the Week it was?

Mr. Goodman. No, nor the Day of the Month.

Sir B. Shower. Was you ever in the Company of these Gentlemen at any other Time?

Mr. Goodman. No, this was the only Time that I heard of this Consultation; I was not at the second Meeting.

Cook. If your Lordship pleases, may I ask Mr. Goodman any Questions?

L. C. J. Treby. Yes, by all Means ask him what you will.

Cook. Mr. Goodman, You are upon your Oath: but did you ever hear me speak ten Words in your Life? Was you ever in my Company in any House, before or since?

Mr. Goodman. Yes, Sir; I was in your Company at the Cock in Bow-street, where you came in accidentally.

Cook. Did you ever hear me talk of the Government, or any Thing of that Nature?

Mr. Goodman. What the Discourse was of, I cannot particularly say, but I am certain you was there: And as to the Consultation that I now speak of, I remember very well you gave your Consent in that Manner as I have told the Court.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, we have done at the present.

L. C. J. Treby. Then, Brother Darnal, what say you for the Prisoner?

Mr. Serj. Darnal. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury: I am of Counsel, in this Case, for the Prisoner at the Bar Mr. Cook, who stands indicted of a very great Offence, no less, Gentlemen, than High-Treason; and if he be Guilty, his Punishment will be as great; but because the Punishment and the Offence are both very great, the Law requires exact positive Proof, and that by two credible Witnesses. There have been two indeed that have been produced to you; and if you believe both of them, after what we shall offer to you against them, and if what they swear be true, the Prisoner is Guilty: But if we satisfy you that either of them is not to be credited, so that you do not believe both of them, he must be acquitted.

There is no doubt, Gentlemen, but there has been a Villainous Horrid Plot; there is no question of it; and it was, as it has been opened, basely to Assassinate one of the bravest Men living; and to make the happiest People in the World, if they know when they are so, the most miserable People upon Earth, by bringing them under French Tyranny and Slavery. Many of the Traitors have been brought to just Punishment for this Treason; nay, they have own'd the Fact at their Deaths, so that there is no question of the Truth of it; and therefore, Gentlemen, every honest Man will endeavour to bring such as are plainly guilty of such an abominable Conspiracy, to just Punishment; but yet they will be as careful not to let an innocent Man suffer; that, Gentlemen, every honest Man will take care of, and especially such as are upon their Oaths: It concerns a Jury highly to be satisfied that he is not innocent, whom they bring in guilty; for it is better that Twenty guilty Men should escape, than one innocent Man suffer.

But, Gentlemen, if my Brief be true, we shall give you such an Account of one of these Witnesses: first, as to the Man himself; that he is not a Man to be credited as a Witness; and then besides that, as to the Evidence he gives in this Case, (I say, if my Brief be true) it is false, and we shall prove it so; and when you have heard our Evidence, if you are satisfied that one of these Witnesses is not to be credited, or that what he swears is not true, you are to acquit the Prisoner.

Gentlemen, Here has been one Mr. Goodman produced as a Witness, one that never was produced before at the Trial of any of those that have suffered, so that the Truth of their Guilt does not at all depend upon his Evidence, nor does it give any Credit to it. This is this Gentleman's first Entry upon this Stage; and yet (if my Brief be true) this is not the first bloody or cruel Part that he has acted; for we have a Record of Conviction against him, whereby it will appear to you, that he was indicted (for Endeavouring to poison two great Dukes) for giving forty Guineas to an Italian Empirick, one Amydei, and promising two Hundred Pounds more when it was effected, to poison the late Duke of Grafton, and the present Duke of Northumberland; and we shall shew you, that he was convicted of it, and fined a Thousand Pound for the Offence; which, considering the Meanness of his Circumstances at that Time, was as much as Twenty Thousand Pounds; for he could as well have paid Twenty as One then; and it appears too, that Mr. Goodman (nay, it will not be denied by him himself) was in this horrid Plot; and he that would be concern'd to poison two Dukes in a Family, to which he had so many Obligations—

Mr. Good. My Lord, I desire leave to speak to this Matter that the Serjeant mentions.

Mr. Serj. Dar. Pray, Sir, let me go on; you may talk anon; I have seen the Copy of the Record of Conviction, and have it ready to produce.

Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Goodman, be quiet, and stay till by and bye; you will be defended, no Doubt on it; but in the mean time let them go on, and don't interrupt them.

Mr. Serj. Dar. I say, my Lord, he that would be concerned in so vile an Act, as a Contrivance to take away the Lives of two great Dukes, (who were, in effect, his young Masters) that he should go to poison them in a Family to which he had been so much oblig'd; and then, he that would be concerned in so horrid a Plot as this was, to destroy his Country, and take away the Life of the King; sure it will be no difficult Thing to think that this Man will not stick little at the Prisoner's Life at the Bar, especially when he has so great a Temptation to it, as to save his own Life by it.

But perhaps some of you may doubt whether it is to save his own Life or no: But I believe there are none of you would give any Credit to him, if you thought so: Therefore, to satisfy you of that Fact, we shall produce you Evidence of his own Opinion of that Matter, beside the general known Circumstances he lay under: As, That he was long in Prison before he charged the Prisoner with any Thing, and the Prisoner was at Liberty, went every Day abroad for a Week after Mr. Charnock's Trial, and never absconded one Minute, but lived publicly, openly, and visibly to all his Friends, and all Strangers: But besides, Gentlemen, that Mr. Goodman knew he must die, and justly and deservedly for this horrid Plot and Treason himself; and had no other Way left to save his Life, but to come in thus as an Evidence and Accuser, which we think will shake his Credit with you.

I say, besides all this, (if my Brief be true) we shall prove that he has said himself, That either he must hang Peter Cook, or he must be hanged himself. Thus, Gentlemen, he swears to save his own Life, by taking away another's.

This, Gentlemen, is as to the Man himself, that he is not to be credited. But now further, as to the Evidence that he has given: He tells you that he came into the Tavern in Leaden-hall-street, and that there he found such Company; he owns he came in after Dinner; and that the other Gentleman, Mr. Porter, owns too; he says there were present at this Meeting, my Lord Montgomery, my Lord of Aylesbury, Mr. Cook, and several other Gentlemen; but (if my Brief be true) we shall prove by three Witnesses, that he was not there till they were gone; and that will make an End of all the Pretence of his Evidence.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nay, then we shall never have done.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. I'll assure you, Sir, I have the Names of three Witnesses in my Brief, to prove that my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and Mr. Cook, were gone before he came in, tho' if any, or either of them were gone, it destroys his Testimony; and if we prove this to you, I would be loth to be one of the Jury that should take away the Prisoner's Life upon this Evidence; no, if he were the vilest Man alive, and much less the Life of the Prisoner at the Bar; for we shall prove (if my Brief be true) he is a Man of Morals, a Man of Virtue, one that has a great Love for his Country; and this we shall prove by Evidence undeniable, Persons of Quality in their Country, such as serve their Country in Parliament, as their Representatives; we shall shew it by such Evidence, that there will be no Room to doubt of it: He is a Man without any Stain or Blot upon him, 'till this Accusation; he is the eldest Son of his Father, and Heir to a great Estate; his Father is a great Officer, and a great Getter under this Government; and can it be imagin'd, or believ'd, that such a Man would be guilty of the worst of Treasons, to destroy the Religion he professes, to overturn the State, to ruin his own Estate, himself and his Posterity, which must be the Consequence of it? Nay, if two good Witnesses cou'd be produc'd to testify it, and if we had not had so much to take off the Credit of Goodman, I cou'd hardly believe it of any Man that was in his right Senses; he must have been a Mad-man if he had done it, one that stood so well with the present Government, and of a Family never tainted with Disloyalty.

Certainly, Gentlemen, when we make out this to you against Mr. Goodman, the Prisoner can be in no Danger of his Life, from Mr. Goodman's Evidence, though he is an unfortunate Man to come under such an Accusation; but I cannot believe that any Jury, upon such a Man's Evidence, will brand an honest Family with the foulest, vilest, blackest Treason that ever was hatch'd; no, Gentlemen, you are Men of Ability and Understanding, and that is it we rely upon; we doubt not but that you will consider the Evidence, and consider your Oaths, and not let the Prisoner's Blood lie at your Doors; therefore we shall go on and call our Witnesses to make out what I have open'd.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we desire to call our Witnesses, and I shall reserve myself to make some Observations after we have given our Evidence: Mr. Serjeant has open'd as much as we can prove, and we will now produce our Evidence; First, we will shew the Conviction of Goodman: Mr. Burleigh, where is the Conviction?

Mr. Burleigh. Here it is, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Where had you it, Sir?

Mr. Burleigh. Out of the Treasury at Westminster.

Sir B. Shower. Is it a true Copy, did you examine it there?

Mr. Burleigh. Yes, it is a true Copy, I did examine it with the Record.

Sir B. Shower. Then read it, Mr. Tanner.

Cl. of Ar. [Reads]—Michaëlas Term: Tricesimo secundo Caroli Secundi.

L. C. J. Treby. Read the Record in English to the Jury.

Cl. of Ar. [Reads.] Be it remember'd, that Sir Robert Sawyer, Knight, Attorney-General of our Lord the King that now is, who for the same our Lord the King in this part sueth, came here in the Court of our said Lord the King, before the King himself at Westminster, on Thursday next after three Weeks of St. Michael, the same Term; and for the same our Lord the King, brought here into the Court of our said Lord the King, before the said King, then and there, a certain Information against Cardell Goodman, late of the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Gentleman, which Information follows in these Words, scilicet, Middlesex scilicet, Be it remember'd that Sir Robert Sawyer, Knight, Attorney-General of our said Lord the King that now is, who for the same our Lord the King, in this Behalf sueth, in his own proper Person came here into the Court of our said Lord the King, before the King himself at Westminster, on Thursday next after three Weeks of St. Michael that same Term, and for the same our Lord the King gives the Court here to understand and be inform'd, That Cardell Goodman, late of the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, Gentleman, being a Person of a wicked Mind, and of an ungodly and devilish Disposition and Conversation, and contriving, practising, and falsely, maliciously and devilishly intending Death, and Poisoning and final Destruction unto the Right Noble Henry Duke of Grafton, and George Duke of Northumberland, and that the aforesaid Cardell Goodman, his most wicked, most impious, and devilish Intentions, Contrivances and Practices aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, the Thirtieth Day of September, in the Six-and-thirtieth Year of the Reign of our Lord Charles the Second, now King of England, &c. and diverse other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Martin in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, with Force and Arms, &c. falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, wickedly, and devilishly, by unlawful Ways and Means, did solicit, persuade, and endeavour to procure one Alexander Amydei to prepare and procure two Flasks of Florence Wine, to be mix'd with deadly Poison, for the Poisoning of the aforesaid Right Noble Henry Duke of Grafton, and George Duke of Northumberland; and his most wicked, most impious, and devilish Contrivances, Practices and Intentions aforesaid, to fulfil, perfect, and the more to bring to Effect, the aforesaid Cardell Goodman, the Day and Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsely, unlawfully, unjustly, maliciously and devilishly, did promise and agree to give unto the aforesaid Alexander Amydei forty Pieces of Guinea-Gold, of the Value of forty Pounds, of lawful Money of England, if he the said Alexander Amydei wou'd prepare, procure and provide two Flasks of Florence Wine, to be mix'd with deadly Poison, for the Poisoning of the aforesaid Right Noble Henry Duke of Grafton, and George Duke of Northumberland; and if the aforesaid Poison with the Wine aforesaid to be mix'd, shou'd effect the Death of the aforesaid Henry Duke of Grafton, and George Duke of Northumberland; that then he the said Cardell Goodman wou'd give unto the said Alexander Amydei the Sum of one Hundred Pounds, and that beyond Sea he wou'd maintain the said Alexander all the Days of him the said Alexander, to the evil and most pernicious Example of all others in the like Case offending, and against the Peace of our said Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, &c. — Then here is Process pray'd by the Attorney-General against Mr. Goodman, who comes, and by his Attorney pleads Not Guilty, and here is Issue join'd.

Sir B. Shower. Well, see for the Verdict.

Cl. of Ar. There was a Trial at Nisi Prius, and the Jury find that the said Cardell Goodman is guilty of the Premises in the Information specify'd, as by the Information is supposed against him.

Sir B. Shower. Now read the Judgment.

Cl. of Ar. Thereupon it is consider'd, that the said Cardell Goodman do pay to the King the Sum of One Thousand Pounds for his Fine, impos'd upon him for the Occasion aforesaid, and that the aforesaid Cardell Goodman be committed to the Marshalsea of this Court, in Execution for his Fine aforesaid, that he be safely kept there, till he pay his Fine aforesaid; and before that the said Cardell Goodman is deliver'd out of the Prison aforesaid, he shall give Security to behave himself well, during his Life, and also shall give Security for the Peace to be kept towards the said Lord the King, and all his People, and particularly towards the Right Noble Henry Duke of Grafton, and George Duke of Northumberland.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. So, you hear the Record of the Information, Conviction and Judgment, for a very horrid, abominable Crime.

Mr. Att. Gen. But I desire they may now go on, and read the whole of the Record.

Cl. of Ar. [Reads.] And afterwards, to wit, on Friday next after eight Days of St. Hilary, in the thirty-sixth and thirty-seventh Years of the Reign of our said Lord the King that now is, before our said Lord the King at Westminster came the aforesaid Sir Robert Sawyer, Knight, Attorney-General of our said Lord the King that now is, and acknowledged that the said Cardell Goodman has satisfy'd to our said Lord the King that now is, of the Judgment aforesaid against him, in Form aforesaid given, therefore the said Cardell Goodman is thereof acquitted; And so forth.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Call Mr. Charles Edwards, William Cock, Christopher Crawford, Mary Crawford, and Mr. Huntley.

[Edwards appear'd upon a Habeas Corpus, directed to the Keeper of Newgate, where he was a Prisoner.]

Mr. Baker. Where is the Warrant of his Commitment? What is he committed for?—Takefield. He is committed for Suspicion of Treason, and treasonable Practices.

Mr. Baker. Is he not committed for High-Treason?

Takefield. No, Sir, he is not.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. What Discourse had you with Mr. Goodman concerning the Prisoner at the Bar? What did you hear him say?

Mr. Baker. He is not sworn yet; it seems this Gentleman was Dundee's Chaplain in Scotland.

Mr. Att. Gen. If he be not sworn, he can give no Evidence.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. My Lord, we desire he may be sworn.

L. C. J. Treby. Swear him. [Which was done.]

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray, Sir, will you tell the Court and the Jury, what you know of any Discourse of Mr. Goodman's concerning the Prisoner at the Bar.

Edwards. My Lord, I desire to know, being ignorant of the Law, whether I am brought here by the common Course of Justice or not?

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Sir, we have Subpœna'd you for the Prisoner at the Bar, to give Evidence of the Truth of your Knowledge here upon Oath.

L. C. J. Treby. Would you have us tell you how you came here? We suppose you came by due Process of Law, as a Witness.

Edwards. Then, my Lord, I desire to speak but one Word; that 'tis a strange Thing to me to consider, how Words should be carried away that were privately spoken; as if it were to expose me to the Reproaches of all my Friends; it is a Thing that I did never expect to hear of again: However, seeing I am called here, and obliged upon my Oath to declare what I know, I by God's Grace will, to the uttermost of my Power, tell what has pass'd in this Matter.

L. C. J. Treby. Don't make any Apology for telling the Truth: You are obliged by your Oath to do it, and the Court expects it from you.

Edwards. Among other Discourses that pass'd betwixt Mr. Goodman and me, I ask'd him when Mr. Cook was to be arraigned, and when he was to be tried: Says he, He is to be arraigned upon Monday, and he is to be tried upon Thursday. I asked him, whether it was for the Assassination-Plot, and he told me No. For what then? said I: As being concerned in sending Mr. Charnock into France? Who are the Evidences against him? said I. Said he, Captain Porter and myself. Said I, I believe two Witnesses will be found Good, or by Way of Demonstration in Law; and I pity the poor Gentleman's Case. Says he, He swore against me. How comes it then, said I, that he is not come off, and has not a Pardon, and would divulge Nobody else?

L. C. J. Treby. Who had not a Pardon do you mean?

Edwards. Mr. Cook. I ask'd, how he had not a Pardon? Says he, He would give an Account of Nobody else but me, and that was the Reason he had no Pardon. Said I to him, Who are the Evidences against him? Says he, Captain Porter and myself. And after this, says he, He or I must perish; or, He and I must suffer; I believe the Word was Suffer. But, says he, 'tis a foolish Thing to be hang'd. All that's said of a Man that is hang'd, is, That he hang'd handsomely, or he dy'd bravely. That's all the Discourse that I can remember.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. He said it was a foolish Thing to be hang'd; and Mr. Goodman, it seems, had no Mind to be hang'd; and I believe so too: But he must not hang my Client, to save his own Life.

Edwards. Now, by the same Oath that I have sworn, I knew nothing of being brought hither, till my Words were carry'd away privately from me, and has been consulted of, and returned to me back again; and I was far from suborning or carrying away a Discourse privately, to make any Advantage of it.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. Now we will call Crawford, and Huntley, and Cock.

Mr. Att. Gen. I desire that Gentleman that was last examined may not go away.

(Crawford, Huntley, and Cock were sworn.)

Sir B. Shower. Set up Mr. Crawford (Which was done). Pray, Sir, will you recollect yourself? Do you remember when my Lord of Aylesbury and Captain Porter dined at the King's-Head?

Crawf. Yes: It was about a Twelvemonth ago.

Mr. Serjeant Darnal. What Company was there?

Crawf. My Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Freind, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Parkyns, Captain Porter, and two or three more, I did not know their Names.

Sir B. Shower. How many were there that din'd there?

Crawf. I think about Eight in all.

Sir B. Shower. Was the Room shut while they were there, or did the Servants and Drawers go up and down commonly?

Crawf. Yes, they did go up and down commonly.

Sir B. Shower. After Dinner, did any body come to them while they were there?

Crawf. No, not during my Lord of Aylesbury's Stay, and my Lord Montgomery went away with him.

Sir B. Shower. About what Time did my Lord of Aylesbury go away?

Crawf. I think it was about Four o'Clock.

Sir B. Shower. How can you tell it?

Crawf. I did attend upon them the most Part of the Time.

Sir B. Shower. Did you see him go away?—Crawf. Yes, I did.

Sir B. Shower. Was that Gentleman, Mr. Goodman, there when they went away?

Crawf. I did not see him there, to my Remembrance: Nobody came in there before they went away, saving their own Servants.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Do you know Mr. Cook, the Prisoner at the Bar? Was he one of the Gentlemen that were at your House?

Crawf. Yes; I did not well remember or recollect, till I saw him on Saturday last.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was he one that went away?

Crawf. I do not remember, truly, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, how long was it after Dinner that they went away?

Crawf. I think it was not an Hour.

Mr. Att. Gen. Was you there all the Time, from the Time of the Dinner?

Crawf. No; not all the while I was not in the Room, but going to and fro.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. You say Mr. Goodman did not come up till after they were gone?—Crawf. No, I did not see him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you see him at all?

Crawf. No, I did not see him at all.

Mr. Att. Gen. Just now it was said, he did not come till they were gone, and now it seems he did not see him at all.

Crawf. I do not know that he was there at all.

L. C. J. Treby. But, Brother Darnal, you open'd it, that Mr. Goodman came after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone, and now you will prove it that he came not at all.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we do not pretend to falsify his Evidence for any thing more than is material for the Prisoner: We say Mr. Goodman was not in the Room where they din'd till those Persons went away; if in any Particular we disprove him, it is sufficient for us: If we can shew that he was not there till three of those that he has nam'd were gone away, that answers our End. We are not concern'd if he came at Four, Five, or Six o'Clock, and discours'd with Charnock till Twelve o'Clock at Night.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray reserve your Remarks; but only observe now what he says, that Mr. Goodman came not at all thither; and that is more than you pretended to open.

Mr. Conyers. How many were there that were there at Dinner?

Crawf. About Eight.

Mr. Conyers. How many do you name that you know?

Crawf. My Lord of Aylesbury, Sir John Freind, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Parkyns, and Captain Porter; there were several others, two or three more, but I did not know their Names.

Mr. Conyers. Did you see Mr. Goodman come in at any Part of the Day afterwards?

Crawf. I do not know that Mr. Goodman.

Mr. Cowper. Mr. Crawford, you say, that for an Hour after Dinner you were sometimes in the Room; and sometimes out; when you were out of the Room, were you always in the Passage up to the Room?

Crawf. No, I was not.

Mr. Cowper. Could any Man come in or out without your seeing?

Crawf. I should have known him above Stairs when I came in again.

Mr. Cowper. Why, you say, there are two or three above that you did not know.

Crawf. I knew them by Sight, if not their Names.

Mr. Cowper. Were you always in Sight then?

Crawf. No, Sir, I tell you I was up and down.

Sir B. Shower. Was there any Body came in before my Lord of Aylesbury went out? that is, any Body besides those that dined there?

Crawf. No.

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we are not contending now about a Man's coming up without his Knowledge; but whether any such Man as Mr. Goodman came up and staid there during the Consultation; and we insist upon it, there was Nobody there till my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and Mr. Cook were gone, but those that din'd there: Now I would ask a Question again of him, Was there any Body but who din'd there, till my Lord of Aylesbury went away?

Crawf. No, there was not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why do you say so? How do you know that?

Crawf. I did not see any Body.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you attend upon other Rooms, as well as that, at the same Time?—Crawf. Yes, I did.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Then how is it possible that he can swear that Mr. Goodman was not there?

Sir B. Shower. Do you remember when my Lord of Aylesbury and they went away?—Crawf. It was about Four o'Clock.

Sir B. Shower. Were you there in the Room when they went away?

Crawf. I went out with my Lord to the Coach.

Sir B. Shower. Did you see him come down Stairs, or did you go up Stairs then?

Crawf. I went up Stairs when the Coach was called.

Sir B. Shower. Was then any Body there but such as din'd there?

Crawf. I did not see any Body there but those that din'd there.

Mr. Cowper. But, my Lord, he does not know all that din'd there, neither.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr. Crawford, you say my Lord of Aylesbury and others went away about Four o'Clock: Pray how long did the rest of the Company stay there?

Crawf. I cannot remember. They staid there pretty late: It is a pretty while ago.

L. C. J. Treby. About what Hour did they part?

Crawf. I cannot remember what Time the rest went away: Our House is fuller at Night than at Noon; and I waited upon other Companies. It was pretty late before they went away, that I am sure.

L. C. J. Treby. But he cannot remember whether it were Five, or Six, or Twelve, that they went away; only he can remember the Hour of Four, that my Lord of Aylesbury and they went away.

Mr. J. Rokeby. Was it Light, or was it Dark when they went away?

Crawf. It was Dark.

L. C. J. Treby. Did you attend the Company after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone?

Crawf. I went up and down into that Company as I did into others.

L. C. J. Treby. Was you there several Times after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone?

Crawf. Yes, I was there once or twice after my Lord of Aylesbury was gone, I am sure.

L. C. J. Treby. And did you never see Mr. Goodman there?

Crawf. No; I never saw Mr. Goodman in my Life before I saw him on Saturday last.

Sir B. Shower. Which is Mr. Huntley?—Huntley. Here I am, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Pray recollect yourself, and tell my Lord and the Jury what you remember of any Company that were with Mr. Porter, at the King's-Head, and who din'd there.

Huntley. My Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Freind, Mr. Porter and Mr. Charnock.

Sir B. Shower. That was the Company, you say, that din'd there: Did Mr. Goodman dine there?

Huntley. No, Mr. Goodman did not dine there.

Sir B. Shower. Pray, Sir, recollect yourself: When did any of this Company part, or go away?

Huntley. My Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away about Four o'Clock.

Sir B. Shower. Sir, how do you know that?

Huntley. I went down Stairs after them; I was above Stairs when they parted from the rest of the Company.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray mind, Sir: Was Mr. Goodman there at that Time before they went away?—Huntley. No, he was not.

Sir B. Shower. Are you sure of that, upon the Oath you have taken?

Huntley. Yes, I take it upon my Oath he was not there.

Sir B. Shower. Did you attend them at Dinner?

Huntley. Yes, I did attend them at Dinner.

Sir B. Shower. Did you attend them all the while they were there?

Huntley. I was call'd frequently, and was in and out of the Room very much after Dinner.

Sir B. Shower. Do you think, if a fresh Man had come in after Dinner, you should not have known him?

Huntley. Yes, I should have known him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Friend, let me ask you one Question: Was Mr. Goodman there at all that Day?

Huntley. That I don't know; I did not see him at all.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Did you attend upon any other Rooms that Day?

Huntley. No; I attended only upon that Company.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Were you in the Room all the Time?

Huntley. No; I went up and down.

Mr.

Mr. Sol. Gen. What Time did the last of the Company go away?
 Huntley. It was about Darkish; it was pretty late, to the best of my remembrance.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, did any Body come to those Gentlemen after Dinner?—Huntley. No, Sir.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Did you ever see Goodman before now?
 Huntley. Never in my Life, to my Knowledge.
 Mr. J. Rokeby. Did all the Company, but my Earl of Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery, stay 'till it was Darkish?
 Huntley. That I don't know.
 Mr. J. Rokeby. Did you know all the Company that was that Day at Dinner?—Huntley. I knew all but One.
 Mr. J. Rokeby. And who was that?—Huntley. That was Mr. Charnock.
 Mr. J. Rokeby. And yet you can't tell whether there was any body else that you did not know, how then can you tell that Goodman was not there?
 Sir B. Shower. He did not know him at that Time, but he might remember him afterwards.
 Mr. Conyers. Did not the same Company use to meet at other Times, at your House?—Huntley. Not to my Remembrance.
 Mr. Conyers. How then came you, if they never had us'd to meet there, to know all these People's Names?
 Huntley. I have seen Sir John Freind there, and Sir William Parkyns.
 Mr. Conyers. Was Sir John Freind there, or no?—Hunt. Yes, he was.
 Mr. Conyers. My Lord, he was the only Man that was not nam'd before: You did not name Sir John Freind before, as I heard: But pray, did you ever see Mr. Charnock there but at that Time?
 Huntley. No, I did not.
 Mr. Conyers. How came you to know it was Mr. Charnock?
 Huntley. I knew very few of them before that Time; and I ask'd their Servants the Names of all those Persons that were there?
 Mr. Conyers. Did you know Mr. Porter, pray?
 Huntley. Not before that Time: I did see Mr. Porter, and I knew him again when I saw him; his Black told me his Name that Day.
 Sir B. Shower. You, Huntley, I would ask you one Question more: Was the Door shut, or no?—Huntley. No, it was not.
 Sir B. Shower. Did the Servants go up and down as they us'd to do?
 Huntley. Yes, Sir.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Sir Bartholomew would make it that there was no Consultation at all.
 Sir B. Shower. They were mad Folks if they would consult at that Rate with the Door open. Pray call Mr. William Cock. [Who was sworn.]
 Mr. Att. Gen. Sir John Freind has own'd it, that's dead.
 Sir B. Shower. Sir John Freind's Confession is nothing to the Prisoner.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Mr. Serjeant Darnal did open, that the Confession of those that dy'd was an undeniable Proof of the Conspiracy: But go on with your Evidence.
 Mr. Serjeant Darnal. Pray, Mr. Cock, will you recollect yourself, about the Time when Captain Porter and some other Gentlemen din'd at your House.
 W. Cock. Yes, very well.
 Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray, Sir, can you tell who din'd there at that Time?
 W. Cock. There were my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, Mr. Charnock, Captain Porter, and Mr. Cock.
 Mr. J. Rokeby. Was that all the Company?—W. Cock. Yes, it was.
 Mr. J. Rokeby. One of them said there were Eight.
 L. C. J. Treby. And he has nam'd Eight, Brother.
 Mr. Serj. Darnal. Can you remember when any of the Company went away, and who went away first?
 Cock. My Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away in a Hackney-Coach; and their Servants were frequently in the Room, and waited afterwards in another Room, after that they had waited at Table at Dinner; and tho' the Door was shut, as it used to be when any Company is there, yet nobody was forbid to come there at all.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember when Mr. Goodman came there?
 Cock. I never saw Mr. Goodman in my Life before To-day.
 Mr. Serj. Darnal. Did any Body come to this Company before my Lord of Aylesbury went away that did not dine there?
 Cock. I did not see any Body there at all: And my Lord of Aylesbury was about buying a Hoghead of White-wine, but we could not agree about the Price: And when my Lord of Aylesbury went away, I went down with my Lord, and waited upon him to the Coach; and I told my Lord, I hoped he would buy the Wine still. But he answered, he could not tell whether he should or no.
 Mr. Serj. Darnal. Who else went with my Lord of Aylesbury?
 Cock. My Lord Montgomery. I don't remember any Body else.
 Mr. J. Rokeby. Did all the rest of the Company go away at once?
 Cock. Truly, my Lord, I can't say they did.
 Mr. J. Rokeby. By what time did the rest go away?
 Cock. I believe it might be Eight or Nine o'Clock.
 Mr. Serj. Darnal. You saw my Lord of Aylesbury when he parted: Was Mr. Goodman there then?—Cock. I did not see him.
 Mr. B. Powis. Did Mr. Cook stay till the last?
 Cock. That I can't tell, truly.
 Mr. B. Powis. I find they all Swear to Four o'Clock of my Lord Aylesbury's going, and go no further.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Pray, Sir, let me ask you a Question or two: Did you ever see Mr. Goodman before now?
 Cock. No, I do not remember I did.
 Mr. Att. Gen. When you went into the Room after Dinner, did you look about the Room to see whether there were any new Company?
 Cock. I did look about the Room several Times, and so did my Servants, to see if there were any Thing wanting.
 Mr. Att. Gen. Can you take it upon your Oath, that he was not there whilst my Lord of Aylesbury staid?
 Cock. I do: And can take it upon my Oath, he was not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, if you can, pray distinguish the Time when he came in.

Cock. I do not remember that ever I saw him in my Life before To-day.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why are you not as positive that he was not there at all, as that he was not there before my Lord of Aylesbury went away?

Cock. He might come in, and I not see him.

Mr. Att. Gen. Might he not as well come in before they went away, as after, to come in and you not see him?

Cock. No, I do not think he could.

Mr. Att. Gen. Why do you think so?

Cock. Because the Servants were all about, and they did not go to Dinner 'till Two o'Clock: And I believe those Gentlemen that I named, came in a Quarter of an Hour's Time to Dinner.

Mr. Att. Gen. We do not say he came there before Dinner: But could he not come in after Dinner, before my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away, without your seeing him?

Cock. Yes, Sir.

Sir B. Shower. Then, heark ye, Sir, I would ask you one Question: Did you see him, upon your Oath, or not?

Cock. No, I did not.

Sir B. Shower. Might not Mr. Goodman come in to them without your seeing him?

Cock. It is possible; but I don't think it was so.

Mr. J. Rokeby. How then can you be positive that he was not there 'till my Lord of Aylesbury went?

Mr. Sol. Gen. You say you may be positive he was not there before my Lord of Aylesbury went: Can you be as positive now, that he was not there before Mr. Cook went?

Cock. I do not know when Mr. Cook went.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How can you be then positive he was not there before my Lord of Aylesbury went?

Cock. There were no more than what dined there when my Lord of Aylesbury went away.

Mr. Conyers. Pray, Sir, let me ask you a Question: Were you in the Room at any Time after Dinner?

Mr. Conyers. Pray, Sir, How many Times after Dinner, were you there?

Cock. I believe half a dozen Times.

Mr. Sol. Gen. And yet you do confess that Mr. Goodman might come in after Dinner before my Lord of Aylesbury went, and you not see him?

Sir B. Shower. Ay, but he could not stay there without his seeing him, if he was so often in the Room: You don't take Mr. Cock's Evidence right.

Mr. Att. Gen. You named eight Persons that dined at your House: Did you know them all personally before that Day?

Cock. Yes, my Lord, the most of them at least.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did they use to meet at your House?

Cock. Commonly Sir John Freind did once a Week. Mr. Charnock I knew when I was Drawer, and so I did Sir William Parkyns: The Rest I knew by hearing their Names.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did you know them before that Day, Sir, I ask you?

Cock. I had seen Captain Porter several Times before that Day; but I cannot say at my own House.

Sir B. Shower. Do you remember the Treaty about the Hoghead of White-wine?—Cock. Yes, Sir, very well.

Sir B. Shower. Were you by when my Lord of Aylesbury went away, and spoke with him about it?

Cock. Yes, I was; and told him, I hoped he would buy the Wine still.

Sir B. Shower. Can you be positive that any Body was there before my Lord of Aylesbury went away, that could stay there any Time, and did not Dine there?

Cock. I believe not, Sir; for I came in half a dozen Times after Dinner, and I believe if I had heard Mr. Goodman's Name, or seen him there, I should have remembered it; but I did not see any body but those that dined there.

Mr. Cowper. Where was you, when my Lord of Aylesbury went away? Where did you meet him going away?

Cock. Upon the Stairs: Seeing my Lord of Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery coming down, I met them.

Mr. Cowper. Where did you meet them? At the Middle, or the Top of the Stairs?

Cock. My Lord of Aylesbury was at the Top of the Stairs.

Mr. Cowper. Did you meet him just coming out of the Room?

Cock. Yes, Sir, I saw the Coach that was called for my Lord; and so I went up Stairs, and met my Lord at the Top of the Stairs coming down.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Now, how can you be positive who was in the Room when he came out of the Room?

Cock. I went up in the Room after my Lord of Aylesbury went away.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long after my Lord of Aylesbury went away?

Cock. It was presently after.

Mr. Sol. Gen. How long before my Lord of Aylesbury went away had you been in the Room?

Cock. I had been there just before.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Call Thomas Peachy. [Who appeared, and was sworn.]

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we shall prove that after the Plot broke out, and after Mr. Porter had made his Discovery, there was no Disturbance of Mr. Cook till a good while after Charnock's Trial; and Mr. Cook was so far from being sensible, or conscious of any Guilt, that he never absconded, but continued for three Weeks in his Father's House, where he was taken by a Messenger. Pray, Mr. Peachy, will you tell my Lord and the Jury, where Mr. Cook was taken, and when, and by whom?

Peachy. He was taken at his Father's House by a Messenger, about Seven o'Clock in the Morning.

Sir B. Shower. What Day of the Week was it he was taken?

Peachy.

Peachy. Upon a Sunday Morning, in his own Room, in his Father's House, at Seven o'Clock in the Morning.

Sir B. Shower. Did People come to him as they used to do?

Peachy. Yes; and he went frequently abroad as he used to do, and did never abscond from his Father's House.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray swear Mr. Treganna. [Which was done.]

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Treganna, Pray do you remember how long after the Plot broke out did you see Mr. Cook?

Treganna. After Mr. Charnock's Trial, a Week, he was at my Chamber; after the Plot broke out, he was concerned in a Trial at Winchester Assizes, upon an Issue out of Chancery, Mr. Nicholls was the Clerk in Court, and went down to manage it at the Assizes; and Mr. Cook came to me a Day or two after Winchester Assizes was over, and ask'd me if I had any News from the Assizes? This was long after the Plot broke out; And I remember particularly, that I saw him twice after the Plot was discovered, at my Chamber.

Sir B. Shower. Swear Mr. Nicholls. [Which was done.]

Sir. Pray will you tell my Lord and the Jury, what you know of Mr. Cook's appearing abroad after the Plot was discovered?

Mr. Nicholls. I was sent down to the Trial: I was present, and did attend at two Trials indeed, and I suppose Mr. B. Powis may remember that I attended at two Trials at Winchester Assizes.

Mr. B. Powis. Possibly you might, Sir: I can't tell all the Attendance at the Assizes.

Mr. Nicholls. And after my Return from Winchester Assizes, Mr. Cook was with me several Days, both at my Office and Chamber, and at his Father's Office: And I remember particularly, that he threatened me that I was in Trouble when I was at Winchester, and therefore I remember it very well.

Sir B. Shower. Mr. Nicholls, you know Mr. Cook very well; pray what are his Morals?

Mr. Nicholls. Upon Occasion of the Cause in Chancery that went to Trial, I have had the Knowledge of Mr. Cook five or six Years; I always believ'd him to be as temperate a Man as ever I met with: I think in five Years Time I was not above once with him in a Tavern.

Sir B. Shower. Did you ever hear him Swear?

Mr. Nicholls. No, never; nor vent a Curse: I believe he drank as little as any Man, and was as godly a Man. I never heard him speak a foul Word.

Sir B. Shower. How do you know that, Sir, that he was so godly a Man?

Mr. Nicholls. Upon Occasion of this Cause, I was several Times at Sir Miles Cook's, and at Mr. Cook's Lodgings there, and we were to go about Business, and after he was dress'd, he has made me stay while he went into his Closet and said his Prayers. And he told me further, that he never went out of his Father's Doors without saying his Prayers; and I was forc'd to stay at the Door while he perform'd his Devotions, as he told me, and I believe he did.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Now, my Lord, we will call some other Witnesses to prove his good Affection to his Country; how he continually desired Success to the Fleet, and to the Army.

Sir B. Shower. So that really he had an Aversion to it.

Swear Mr. Hamond. [Which was done.]

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Pray, Sir, will you give an Account what you know of the Prisoner, concerning his Judgment, and concerning his Morals?

Hamond. I have been for some Time acquainted with Mr. Cook the Prisoner at the Bar, and to the best of my Observation, I always took him to be a conscientious Man, and I have heard him declare great Detestation of a French Force: And three or four Days before he was taken into Custody, I ask'd him what he heard of Intelligence? He said he heard what was in the publick Prints, and heard no more, and knew no more; and he had a great Abhorrence of the Conspiracy, and thought it a very monstrous Thing. I never heard him speak a disrespectful Word of the King's Person or Government in my Life. And I say again, I have heard him several Times declare, in common Conversation, that he had an Aversion to French Power, and he had a dread of it.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. What have you heard him say about our Fleet, or Army?

Hamond. My Lord, I have heard him very much wish Prosperity and Success to our Fleet.

Mr. J. Rokeby. What Fleet, pray, Sir?

Hamond. To our Fleet, King William's Fleet against the French. Things to this Purpose he frequently said.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Then Swear Mrs. Hunt. [Which was done; but she was not examin'd.]

Sir B. Shower. My Lord, we leave it here. But I must beg the Favour, that if they give any new Evidence, and there be Occasion, we may have Liberty to answer it. And I have an Observation or two to make when the Evidence is over.

Mr. Att. Gen. My Lord, if they have done with their Evidence, I beg leave to observe, that there is something arises upon that Evidence that will give us occasion to call a Witness or two more. My Lord, the first Witnesses which they call'd was Edwards, and he is in Custody upon Suspicion of High-Treason in Newgate, and he gives an Account of some Discourse that he had with Mr. Goodman; and for that, it will be necessary for us to call Mr. Porter again and Mr. de la Rue, to shew that this Edwards, the Witness, as he is committed for Suspicion of High-Treason, so he was in the Conspiracy for the Assassination; he was one in the List that was brought back by Cranburne from Mr. Charnock to Captain Porter, as one of Charnock's Men, and he is in Custody for it. Then as to the other Matter, they have called three Witnesses to prove, That Mr. Goodman was not in this Place at this Time. The Counsel indeed opened it, that he was not at the Tavern till after my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery were gone away; but their Evidence goes further, That he was not there at all: And the Master of the House says, he was not there to his Knowledge at any Time. So that if their Evidence prove any Thing, they prove that he was not there at all; they do not remember that they saw him there: So that the Question will be, whether Mr. Goodman was there at that Time? And it will be necessary to call Mr. Goodman again, and Mr.

Porter, to confront these Witnesses, who will tell you when he came in: And particularly as to my Lord of Aylesbury, that he went with him to the Stairs-head, and my Lord would not let him go further, but he went back again when my Lord of Aylesbury went down Stairs. We will begin with the Witnesses, as to this Edwards.

Swear Mr. De la Rue. [Which was done.]

Mr. Conyers. Mr. De la Rue, Pray do you know Mr. Edwards that was here?

Mr. De la Rue. He goes by several Names; I know him by the Name of Douglas: And last Monday I came into the Press-Yard, and saluted him by the Name of Douglas, and he said he had taken his own Name again, by which he was known at St. Germain's, and that was Edwards or Richards, as I remember, or some such Name.

Mr. Conyers. When was he at St. Germain's?

Mr. De la Rue. About three or four Years ago.

Mr. Conyers. Pray look upon him, see if you know him.

Mr. De la Rue. I know him very well, there he stands, that is the Person in the black Wig; he was reputed at St. Germain's to be my late Lord Dundee's Chaplain.

Mr. Att. Gen. What Name did he go by at St. Germain's?

Mr. De la Rue. I can't very well tell: But he said he had taken his own Name again; and I think he said it was Edwards or Richards.

Mr. Conyers. Did he go formerly by the Name of Douglas?

Mr. De la Rue. Yes, here in England; Mr. Porter knew him to go by that Name.

Mr. Att. Gen. What else do you know of him?

Mr. De la Rue. The List that Mr. Cranburne carried from Mr. Porter to Mr. Charnock, and which he brought back again from Mr. Charnock to Mr. Porter, had in it, among the other Names, the Name of Douglas, which I understood to be that Gentleman.

Mr. Att. Gen. Did he go by that Name at that Time?

Mr. De la Rue. Yes, he did.

L. C. J. Treby. Pray repeat that again, Sir, that we may understand it, and see whether it be Evidence.

Mr. De la Rue. Why, Sir, the List that Mr. Cranburne brought from Mr. Charnock to Mr. Porter, at the Foot of the List which Mr. Porter had sent to him, there were other Names written, as I believe, in Mr. Charnock's Hand; and among those Names there was the Name of Douglas, which I understood to be this Mr. Edwards, as he calls himself. And moreover, when Mr. Porter went out of Town, going to Doctors Commons I call'd at Mr. Charnock's, and he had a great deal of Company with him, four or five Troopers, and among the rest this Edwards or Douglas was there sitting by him. Here is a Gentleman that I see upon the Bench, I think he is a Scotchman, that knew him at St. Germain's as well as I. I think his Name is Macdonnell.

Mr. J. Rokeby. What Countryman did you take this Edwards to be?

Mr. De la Rue. A Scotchman, and Chaplain to my Lord Dundee that was killed in Scotland.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. Did you see this Gentleman in France, Sir?

Macdonnell. I never was in France in my Life.

Mr. Att. Gen. You can't ask him the Question: You know it tends to make him either accuse or excuse himself of a Crime. Pray, call Mr. Porter again. But in the mean time, till he comes, we'll examine Mr. Goodman, because he is here. Mr. Goodman, you were by, and heard what these Drawers said concerning your being at the Old-King's-Head in Leaden-hall-street that Day. Pray, give an Account when you came in, whether you saw my Lord of Aylesbury, and what passed between you at my Lord of Aylesbury's going away?

Mr. Goodman. Mr. Porter brought me up; and when I came in they were all sitting; and after Salutation I sat down: And when they had consulted some Time, they came to a Resolution, as I have told you already. The Fellows are so far in the Right of it, that my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away first; for I took my leave of them at the Head of the Stairs. Says my Lord of Aylesbury to me, Pray avoid Ceremony, we will go away privately as we came, in a Hackney-Coach. And as to the Master of the House, who says, he does not know me, I have dined several Times there; four or five Times with Sir John Freind; And one particular Day above all the rest, I remember I was not well, and I went down Stairs to the Bar, and said, I pray, can you get me a little Brandy? He said, Yes; he would help me to some of the best in England. And he brought me up some which I liked very well; and thinking he had a Quantity of it, I ask'd him what I should give him a Gallon for a Parcel. But he said, he had but a little: And I am sure he has seen me there five or six Times.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then set up that Master of the House, Cock, again.

[Which was done.]

Come, Sir, You hear what Mr. Goodman has Sworn, and mind it; you are upon your Oath. You said just now, that you never saw Mr. Goodman before.

Cock. No, upon my Word, Sir, I don't know that ever I saw him before.

Mr. Att. Gen. Do you remember nothing of his being with Sir John Freind at your House?

Cock. No, upon my Word, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Nay, you are upon your Oath. Nor do you know nothing of your giving of him Brandy?

Cock. No, upon my Oath, I do not remember any such Thing.

Mr. Att. Gen. That is a very safe Way of Swearing, I profess,

Mr. Conyers. He remembers the particular Time when he was Sick, and you offer'd to sell him some Brandy.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, he ask'd him what he should give him for it a Gallon. But, Mr. Cock, did you ever see Goodman in your House since my Lord of Aylesbury and they were there?

Cock. No, upon my Word, Sir, I did not; And I never had but two Gallons of Brandy in my Life at a Time: And I never had any Cask, or any Thing of that Nature, to sell any out of.

Mr. Att. Gen. Who used to be with Sir John Freind at your House?

Cock. There used to be Mr. Richardson, and Justice Cash, and Col. Cash. Mr. Goodman. Mr. Richardson was there that Day: I could almost have remembered the particular Day, but I cannot be positive; only we were in the same Room where the Consultation was, at the further Part of the Room.

Mr. J. Roakeby. You Friend, the Master of the House, you hear what Mr. Goodman says: He says he was with Sir John Freind at your House, and being not well he ask'd for some Brandy, and you told him, you'd give him some of the best in England. And he propounded to you then to sell him some of it; but it seems there was no Bargain made. Do you remember any such Thing of one that was with Sir John Freind, that spoke of buying of Brandy when he was sick?

Cook. No, upon my Word, I do not.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then set up Mr. Porter. [Who stood up.] Pray, Mr. Porter, look upon that Man in the Black Peruke; what Name did he use to go by?

Mr. Porter. He used to go by the Name of Edwards.

Mr. Att. Gen. Had he any other Name?

Mr. Porter. Yes, Douglas.

Mr. Att. Gen. He has so many Names, that we don't know which is his true Name. Mr. Porter, pray what else do you know of him touching his being concerned in the Conspiracy?

Mr. Porter. I know not any thing of my own Knowledge; but his Name was put down in the List that Mr. Charnock sent me of his Men, and Mr. De la Rue read his Name there.

Mr. Sol. Gen. Mr. Porter, you were a Witness upon the Trials of Sir John Freind, and Sir William Parkyns; did you give Evidence that Mr. Goodman was in the Room at the same Time when the Consultation was?

Mr. Porter. Yes, Sir.

Mr. Att. Gen. Well, you hear that these People have sworn, that Mr. Goodman did not come till my Lord of Aylesbury went away; nay, indeed, that he was not there at all.

Mr. Porter. My Lord, upon my Oath he was there before my Lord Aylesbury went away, and Mr. Goodman bowed, and took leave of my Lord as he went out of Doors.

Mr. Att. Gen. What time did my Lord of Aylesbury go away?

Mr. Porter. It was about an Hour and a Half, or two Hours after Dinner, and he was in the Room when my Lord went away, for he took his Leave of him at the Door.

Mr. Cowper. Do you remember the Manner of Mr. Goodman's coming in?

Mr. Porter. Mr. Goodman sent up his Name to me, and I told the Company, and promis'd for him, that he was a very honest Man, and much in King James's Interest; and then with their Consent I went down and brought him up.

Mr. Just. Powell. How long time do you think there was between Mr. Goodman's coming in, and my Lord of Aylesbury's going away?

Mr. Porter. I cannot tell that, I do not remember exactly how long it was.

Mr. Just. Powell. Was it a quarter of an Hour, or half an Hour?

Mr. Porter. A great deal longer, for we had discoursed of the whole Business after Mr. Goodman came into the Room.

Mr. Conyers. How long were they there after Mr. Goodman came in?

Mr. Porter. It was very near two Hours after he came in, before they went away; they did not go away till Six o'Clock, and he came in at Four, as near as I can remember.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we have done.

Sir B. Shower. Then I beg the Favour of a Word or two, my Lord. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the Prisoner at the Bar, and I must beg your Lordship's Patience, and your Favour, Gentlemen, to make a few Observations upon the Evidence that has been given; for we humbly insist upon it in point of Law, that here is not sufficient Evidence before you to convict the Prisoner. You are, Gentlemen, to have respect and regard to your Consciences and the Oaths which you have now taken, to give a Verdict, and make true Deliverance between the King and the Prisoner; you are not to go according to your own private Opinions, nor according to publick Fame, nor according to common Report, nor according to the Verdicts in other Cases, nor according to the Confessions or Dying Speeches of Criminals who have been Executed, whether made by themselves, or by others for them, but you are to go by the Testimony of Credible Witnesses, and if you have not the Evidence of two Credible Witnesses before you, my Lords the Judges will inform you how the Law stands. That by the Statute of Edward the Sixth, and the new Statute for Trials of Treasons, there must be two Witnesses to prove the Prisoner guilty of the Overt-Act of the Treason that is laid in the Indictment; and whether there have been two Credible Witnesses produced before you, is the Question that you are to consider upon your Oath and Conscience; that is, whether you are satisfied here be two such as the Law requires. The Question is not merely whether Mr. Cook be guilty, but whether in your Consciences he be legally proved guilty; whether there be Evidence to satisfy your Consciences, according to the Laws of the Land, that he is guilty; and we insist there is not; and therefore I beg leave to recapitulate what has been sworn against him, that we may see how far it reaches, and wherein it is defective.

Gentlemen, Mr. Porter he swears, that about the Beginning or Middle of May, he cannot tell which, there was this Meeting at the Old-King's-Head Tavern in Leaden-Hall-street; in which, I would observe to you, that he confines himself to a certain Month; the Reason is very plain, and therefore I asked him whether it was not in April; for if he had said it had been then, there had been no danger to the Prisoner, because of the Act of Indemnity, therefore he was careful to fix it in May; and he would not lay it in June, for the Tenth of June is a famous Day; and then, or soon after, Newgate had him; he was confined there for a Riot on that Day, and so they have restrained it to a Month, and the only Month that he is capable of swearing to, as to any Act done the last Year till they came in January to the Assassination Plot, which the Prisoner is not accused to have had any Concern in; but it shou'd seem he cannot tell what Day of the Week, or of the Month, but about the Beginning or the Middle of May Eight Persons dined at this Place, and then after Dinner Mr. Goodman came in, and they discoursed about this Matter.

First, Gentlemen, we insist upon it, that it is very improbable that English Protestants of pious Conversation and good Morals should agree, as he says, to send such a Message to the late King, to invite over a French Popish Force; we may easily see the horrid and mischievous Consequences that wou'd have followed such a Practice, such as must affect every Englishman with a Concern, so that it is improbable a Man of Virtue and Piety cou'd engage in such an Enterprize; and if it be improbable, you will never believe it, unless the Conviction or Proof be irresistible: And if you have any other Reasons to distrust this Man's Truth, then we hope you will go upon the Side of Probability; and not let popular Prejudice, common Fame, or any Thing else but legal and undeniable Evidence have the Ascendant over you. If you are not satisfied that Mr. Cook did assent (as from the Character of the Man it is not probable he shou'd) to send Charnock into France, to persuade King Lewis and King James to send Ten Thousand Men to invade our Country, then he is not guilty.

In the next Place, Gentlemen, he is not guilty we say in the Eye of the Law, if they have not two Witnesses; and for that we say you have but one, or but one that is to be believed; and if you have but one that is to be believed, that in Law is but one, and consequently my Client is not guilty; so the King's Counsel agree, that if there be but one Witness, he cannot be convicted, the Law is plain in the Case. Now to make it out that here is but one Witness at most, we have offered you several Objections, and made them out by Evidence, against the Testimony of Mr. Goodman; that he is not a Person fit to be believed; and if he be out of the Case, then does Mr. Porter stand alone, and all will amount but to one Witness, suppose it shou'd be granted that his Testimony were true.

First, We have read a Record of Conviction against him, of a Crime, one of the Greatest next unto Treason, that is known in our or any other Law. That he hired a Man to poison two Dukes, Branches of a Noble Family, to which he had such great Obligations, as all Mankind do know, and he himself cannot but acknowledge; and if there were not that Aggravation in it, of his Obligations to that Family, yet to lie in wait to Murder and Poison, is such an Offence as any Age can seldom shew the like. And the Objection is not so very easily answered as they would have it; nor can it be so soon passed over as they think, by saying He is a Witness of a Confederacy with which the Prisoner is accused, a Crime greater than the Thing objected. It is true, none can bear Testimony in such a Business but he that is a Party: But, we say, if these Persons who come and set up themselves for Witnesses, were not probi Homines, and did not appear to be Persons of indifferent Credit between Man and Man, and did not stand impartial in the Eye of the World in other respects before, then they are not to be believed, as to what they charge themselves and others to be guilty of. Now, if Mr. Goodman stand convicted of such an Offence as this that is alledged against him, though he is pardoned by the Act of Parliament, or Satisfaction acknowledged upon the Record, though it be even the very next Term, yet that does not purge him from the Infamy and Disgrace, or from the Imputation of being concerned in so Villainous a Design. It is impossible that he should be a good Witness that wou'd be engaged in such a Matter, especially when we have those various Witnesses, and such a concurring Testimony, that what he has Sworn is absolutely false.

Gentlemen, If there were nothing but his own Testimony in the Case, there would be no Question at all in it: And as to Capt. Porter's Testimony about his being there, we have produced three Witnesses, who, if they be of Credit, then Mr. Goodman is not to be believed, but is falsified throughout; for it is not the Question, whether Mr. Cook went away before the Consultation and the Resolution; for if my Lord of Aylesbury or my Lord Montgomery went away, Mr. Goodman is falsified in that, and consequently you ought not to believe him in the rest; for he actually swears, that my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and those other Gentlemen, were all present, and at the Consult, and did consent and agree to the Resolution, by using these Words; Yes, you may; Yes, you may. Now, we say, there are three Witnesses that swear, That my Lord of Aylesbury was gone before he came there. I do not care whether he came there or not; that is not material: For if there were nobody there when my Lord of Aylesbury was there but those that were at Dinner, then Mr. Goodman was not there at any such Consultation, as they would insinuate was at that Time, in that Place, and that Company.

My Lord, we have proved to you Mr. Cook's Abhorrence and Declaration, which, we think, ought to go a great Way in Satisfaction of his Innocence, at least to induce you to the favourable Side; for, Gentlemen, you are not brought hither to Convict a Man only, but to Try and Examine him, and it is your Duty to Acquit, as well as Convict, according as the Evidence stands: It is your Duty to go according to your Consciences, and to declare whether he be Guilty or Not Guilty, upon the Evidence you have before you: You are to examine the Truth of the Fact in all its Circumstances, and upon your own Consciences to declare, whether he is Guilty or Not Guilty; now we propose it to you, and submit it to your Consciences, that here are three Witnesses that speak upon their Oaths, against whom there is no Objection, that ever they were guilty of lying in wait to Poison any Body, nor in any Plot for an Assassination, nor any Conspiracy for inviting an Invasion from France, nor any other Objection against them, but they stand upright in the Face of the World, and they three swear, That he was not there at that Time. The Answer that we expect, is, That he might be there, and they not see him: And because it was possible he might be there, and they not see him, therefore it is no Evidence: But, my Lord, because it may be so, is no Evidence that it is so; that's no Objection; for you will take it as the Nature of the Thing will afford, and the Matter itself allow. Now there can be no better Evidence than this; that they went in and out continually; the Drawers, and the Master of the House five or six Times himself, were in the Room, and they say, there was no such Person there. Why then it is very improbable, if not impossible, that any such Man should be there. The one swears, he came down from my Lord of Aylesbury just before he went away; and another says, he followed him out of the Room; and the Master says, that he met my Lord of Aylesbury at the Stairs-head. All which falsifies Mr. Goodman in that Particular, that he was with my Lord of Aylesbury at the Stairs-head, when he went away. These are incompatible; and if we falsify him in any one Thing, he is not to be believed in any other.

Then,

Then, Gentlemen, we offer to your Consideration an Answer to another Objection: They say these Witnesses seem to swear, that he was not there at all. We are not concerned whether he was there afterwards, or not: If you are satisfied, that he was not there, as our Witnesses swear, while my Lord of Aylesbury was there, that's enough. But then they make an Objection, How comes the Master of the House to remember my Lord of Aylesbury's going away, more than any Body else? Gentlemen, you know the Nature of the Thing shews, not only that it was more probable the Master of the House should make his Observations near the Time of Dinner, rather than afterwards at Night, when there is more Hurry: But it is more probable he should take notice of it from the Quality of the Person, from the Discourse he had with him about the White-wine, which was a good Medium to refresh a Vintner's Memory, it being a Matter in his own Trade, and that might make him call it to mind.

Therefore, Gentlemen; we think these three Witnesses stand free and clear in their Credit; and being so, are inconsistent with Mr. Goodman's Testimony; and we hope, in favour of Life, the Credit inclines on their Side, especially when the Question is, whether a Man shall be excused for Treason who never fled for it, who was never charg'd with any Treason or Treasonable Practices before; nay, not so much as with any particular Crime or Immorality: And whether three Witnesses shall be believed against whom there is no Objection, rather than Two, against One of which there are such Objections.

My Lord, we are not now debating or attacking the Evidence of the Plot, or arraigning the former Judgments against the Conspirators that have suffer'd; but, Gentlemen, we are putting you upon a serious Enquiry, (as God and your own Consciences shall incline you) whether our Client be guilty or not guilty upon this Evidence; that is, whether Mr. Goodman swears true, or not. We hope that we have given you sufficient Satisfaction, that upon Mr. Goodman's Part the Evidence is insufficient; and we hope you will accordingly find our Client not guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. If Mr. Cook have any thing to say himself, I desire he may say it now, before we begin.

Sir B. Shower. No, pray go on, Sir.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr. Cook, would you say any Thing yourself, before the King's Counsel sum up?

Cook. The little I have to say, my Lord, I'll speak now, or by and bye, which you please.

L. C. J. Treby. You must do it now, because after they have summ'd up, there is nothing more to be said by you.

Cook. My Lord, I thank God, I have lived a Life, I hope, as good as any Man, and have often received the Blessed Sacrament; I have done it constantly, and shall do it speedily, by the Grace of God, as soon as I can have a Minister come to administer it to me. I did offer it to my own Father, when he came to me, and told me, If I would confess this Thing I should not come to Trial: I told my Father, I would not for Ten Thousand Worlds take away the Blood of an innocent Man to save mine. I thank God, I am in a very good Way to die; I have, for at least this last Year, frequently received the Blessed Sacrament; and how I have liv'd, every Body in the Court that knows me can tell my Life and Conversation has been as regular as any Man's, and I am as ready to die to-morrow, if Occasion was for it (I thank God) as any one; I will receive the Blessed Sacrament upon it; and it is not for Life that I would do any Thing that is wrong or unjust: I do love my Nation, and I love the Quiet of the Nation; I never was for disturbing the Government that now is; and I ever was against Foreign Forces or an Invasion, for I never thought of one, or heard of it, but with Abhorrence and Detestation; And I do assure faithfully, I shou'd be sorry to disparage Mr. Porter's Evidence, because I would have every Body that was concerned in that Horrid and Barbarous Crime to suffer; in God's Name, let them all suffer. I thank God, I never knew any thing of it, nor of a French Invasion: And I would say more of it, but that I would not hurt Mr. Porter's Evidence, whose Discovery of that bloody Business has done so much Service. As for Mr. Goodman, as I hope to receive the Blessed Sacrament, and may I perish when I do it, if I speak an Untruth; I would not for any Thing, no, not for the Good of my Country, have innocent Blood spilt; I would lay down my Life to serve my Country, but I would not have my Blood be lightly lost; and how little a Man soever I am, my Blood will lie as heavy upon the Nation as any the weightiest Man's can do. I do not doubt your Lordship's Justice, nor the Jury's; but I pray, my Lord, observe, though it is usual not to own Things at the Bar, yet do not make this Denial as of Course, but out of Truth; and I do assure you, in the Presence of the whole Court, if I should suffer for this, I must at my last Moments either confess or deny something: And, I say, I do assure, in the Presence of the whole Court, and I will take the Blessed Sacrament upon it, that I must, at my Death, deny this whole Matter, and that ever I did see Mr. Goodman at all there; I do not think I saw him: I do not remember I saw Mr. Goodman at all, except once in Germain-street, when the Coach broke, and that must be but in passing by neither, and he would have hurt or kill'd the Coachman, and we kept him from it; and I walk'd with him half the length of Germain-street, before I knew who Mr. Goodman was. If ever a one of those Gentlemen, that are Men of Credit and Honour, can say I was any ways so inclined, or that they ever saw me, or knew me, that I ever bought a Pistol or a Blunder-buss, or the like, may God sink and strike me dead; and the Blessed Sacrament, which I intend to receive, be my Curse and Damnation, if I knew of King James's Coming, till after the whole Town rang of it: I had no Hand in the Invasion; and, besides my Abhorrence of introducing foreign Force, I desire your Lordship and the Jury to consider the Circumstances of my Case, that I had but a very small Allowance from my Father, and therefore it is not probable I shou'd take upon me to join with my Lord of Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery, and those other Gentlemen, to send Mr. Charnock into France to invite over a Foreign Force: And I call God to witness I had no Hand in it. I beg your Lordship's Pardon for all this Trouble; I would not hurt Mr. Porter's Evidence, for the Reasons that I have told you; but this is for my Life, and I don't so much value that as I do Truth and Sincerity; and I shall receive the Blessed Sacrament, if I die, that I never did do so. Indeed I never did take the Oaths, nor did I ever refuse them, because they were never offer'd me; but I would take the Oaths now if they were offer'd me. My Lord, I beg your Pardon for this Trouble.

L. C. J. Treby. Have you done, Sir? Have you said all you would say?

Cook. Yes, my Lord.

L. C. J. Treby. Then, you Gentlemen of the King's Counsel, will you conclude?

Mr. Sol. Gen. May it please your Lordship, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counsel in this Case for the King, and I could have been very glad this Gentleman's Defence that he has made had been stronger than in Truth it has been: And I should have been very glad too, that his Counsel had been able to have made it better for him; but that he and they may be satisfied, as much is done as the Case will bear; they have had all the Liberty in the World to make his Defence they could desire, nay, more than in Strictness could be allowed them.

Gentlemen, our Evidence is very positive against the Prisoner at the Bar, and for the highest Crime that the King's Subjects can be guilty of, by the Confession of the Gentleman himself and of his Counsel. We have, I say, two positive Witnesses against him; they say they are not legal ones: I must own, if we have not two Witnesses, we have never an one; for whatsoever falsifies Mr. Goodman's Testimony, falsifies whatsoever Mr. Porter has sworn. Now, the Evidence that Mr. Porter has given against him is this: He says, There was to be a Meeting at the King's Head-Tavern in Leaden-Hall street, and there they consulted of the Methods to bring back King James hither; and it was thought the best Way to send to King James to invite the French King to send 1000 Horse, 1000 Dragoons, and 8000 Foot, to Land here in this Kingdom, where they would meet him with 2000 Horse. They pitch'd upon a very proper Messenger, Mr. Charnock, a Person that has been attainted, and has suffer'd for High-Treason; he was to be sent into France upon this Errand; Mr. Cook, the Prisoner at the Bar, was one of the Persons that were there at that Time, and he was consenting to this Message; and Mr. Porter gives you a particular Token relating to the Prisoner, for he remembers the Prisoner did kneel upon the Chair, and lean'd his Elbows upon the Table when he consented.

Mr. Porter goes further, and tells you, That Mr. Charnock would have another Meeting, to know and see whether all the Company were of the same Mind they had been; and, That afterwards they met at Mrs. Mountjoy's House, and there the Prisoner at the Bar was present, and consenting to the same Thing: Thereupon Mr. Charnock went into France, and came back again, and said, The French King could not spare so much Force. Mr. Goodman gives the same Evidence that Mr. Porter had given; It's true, he was not at Mrs. Mountjoy's Tavern, but he tells you withal, he spoke with Mr. Charnock when he came back from France, and Charnock return'd him the same Answer he did to Mr. Porter, That the French King could not spare so many Forces. This is the Evidence in short, Gentlemen, that is given against the Prisoner; and if this Evidence be true, then he is guilty of the Crime for which he is indicted.

Against these Witnesses they have produced, first, a Record of Conviction against Mr. Goodman, and that was for Hiring one Anydei to poison the Duke of Grafton and the Duke of Northumberland: They have produc'd the Record, whereby it appears, he was Convicted, and Fined 1000*l.* and was to find Security for his good Behaviour during Life; and he was to lie in Prison till the Fine paid, and Security given: But it happens, in that very Record it appears there was Satisfaction acknowledg'd upon that, even the very next Term; and that gives a great deal of Suspicion to believe, that the Evidence that was given was not much credited; for, though the Counsel for the Prisoner has said, that it was the Payment of the 1000*l.* that was the Satisfaction; no, it is not so, it is a Satisfaction of the whole Judgment, for finding Security as well as the Fine. They say he was not able to pay the Fine, and there is nothing appears of the other Parts of the Judgment being complied with, but the whole Judgment is set aside.

But all this does not make a Man no Legal Witness; if they thought this Conviction tended to set aside his Evidence, they would have produc'd it at another Part of the Trial, than where they did: That is, when Mr. Goodman was first call'd to be sworn as a Witness, then they should have produced this Record, and said he had been no Witness: But they knew well enough that that was no Exception against the Legality of his Evidence, but tends only to his Credit, and nothing else. Now, though it be a black Crime to endeavour to poison another, yet that does not totally destroy any Man's Credit; if it did, then the other Gentleman, Mr. Porter, has confess'd himself guilty of a greater Crime than that for which Mr. Goodman is convicted by this Record; for he owns himself one that was in that Design of Assassinating the King. And Mr. Goodman owns himself too guilty of a greater Crime than what's objected to him, which is that of High-Treason; and, I hope, if he may be believed, when he owns himself guilty of High-Treason, which is a greater Crime than Poisoning a private Subject; or guilty of such a Design as the Assassination of the King, which Mr. Porter has charg'd himself with, and notwithstanding which, they have not offer'd that as an Exception against Mr. Porter's Evidence, (for they very well know his Evidence has been receiv'd, and credited:) Mr. Goodman may be credited, though guilty of the Crime objected to him: And the constant Practice in all Trials of this kind hath been, that it does not take away the Witness's Evidence, however it affects his Credit, which in this Case is supported by the concurrent Testimony of Mr. Porter. And so then, I say, we have two legal Witnesses (notwithstanding all the Exceptions) to prove Mr. Cook guilty of the Crime for which he is indicted.

Then they go on further, and produce other Witnesses: First, they produce one Edwards, a Person that is committed for High-Treason himself, and under Suspicion of his being to be one of those that was to have a Hand in the Assassination; but his Evidence goes no further, than that

Mr.

Mr. Goodman told him he was to be a Witness against Mr. Cook, and either he the Witness, or Mr. Cook must suffer; and, That it was a foolish thing to be hang'd. My Lord, there is nothing at all in this Matter that takes away Mr. Goodman's Evidence: It is very plain Mr. Goodman had forfeited his Life, and must do something to save it, and I think he could not do a better Service to entitle himself to the King's Mercy, than to discover those that were equally guilty with himself. 'Twas his Duty to have done it, if he had not been in Danger; and if he hath done no more than what was his Duty, I hope that is no Objection against his Testimony.

They have produced likewise a Drawer of the King's-Head Tavern, one Crawford, and he says he attended in this Room while this Company was there. But then he goes a little further than the Counsel, or the Prisoner would have had him; for they called him to prove that Mr. Goodman was not there when my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, and Mr. Cook were there. But when the Drawer comes, he knows nothing of Mr. Goodman's being there at all: He says, Mr. Cook was there, but not Mr. Goodman; and yet he does acknowledge, that Mr. Goodman might be there, and he not see him come up. He acknowledges he attended upon other Company as well as this; so that it is plain in the Nature of the Thing, and his own Confession, that Goodman might be there. This cannot take off the positive Evidence of Mr. Goodman, and Mr. Porter, who both swear, That Goodman was there.

But then they produce another Drawer, and that is one Huntly; and he gives the same Account; only indeed he says, He was there all the while they were at Dinner: But that is nothing, because it is acknowledg'd both by Mr. Porter and Mr. Goodman, That he was not there at Dinner-Time, but he might be there after Dinner, and yet Huntly could not see him at Dinner: He tells you likewise, he pass'd up and down in the Room afterwards, and did not see Mr. Goodman there; but yet he might be there, and he not see him.

Then they produce the Master of the House, and he gives much the same Evidence in Effect which his Servants do, That he did not see Mr. Goodman there all the while; but he says something that is a little incredible; He can be positive that Mr. Goodman was not there while my Lord of Aylesbury was there, but he cannot be positive he was not there afterwards. He tells you, he met my Lord of Aylesbury, and my Lord Montgomery upon the Middle of the Stairs coming down, and he is sure Mr. Goodman was not in the Room at that Time. Now, is that possible that he can be sure of that, when he owns, (and cannot but own) That Mr. Goodman might go into the Room, and he not see him: So that he has made a strain in his Evidence that it is very little to be credited, which was not designed so much for the Advantage of Mr. Cook as for the Advantage of somebody else: And, in itself, it is almost an impossible Thing that it should be true, by what he offers as the Reason of his Evidence.

But then, Gentlemen, you are to consider, that all these three Witnesses, if they swear true, do falsify not only Mr. Goodman, who swears, That he was there; but they likewise falsify the Evidence of Mr. Porter; and for that Reason I ask'd Mr. Porter the Question, Whether he did not give the same Evidence against Sir John Freind? And if what he swears now be not true, neither was it true when Sir John Freind was try'd, for he was the only Witness at that Time against Sir John Freind, for this Meeting; and therefore these Men's Testimony tends to overthrow both Witnesses as well as one: And I must tell you, that if Mr. Goodman be not a legal Witness, because he has sworn a Thing that is not true, then Mr. Porter is not a good Witness, who has sworn the same Thing, viz. That Mr. Goodman was there; and then you ought to acquit the Prisoner, because there is no Witness against him at Law; for there is the same Evidence against Mr. Porter, that there is against Mr. Goodman as to this Matter.

Then, Gentlemen, as for the Character of Mr. Cook, they say he is a good English Protestant, I hope he is so; but it is plain, that Religion does not vary the Case: 'Tis within the reach of every Man's Memory that is here, that the same Things have fallen upon other Gentlemen that have had the same Character, particularly Sir John Freind, and Sir William Parkyns, who both said the same Things, in the same Place, That they were True Protestants of the Church of England. But that is no Manner of Evidence that will be Weight against positive Oaths.

Now, Gentlemen, it is fit likewise you should reflect upon another Thing: What is it that should engage Mr. Porter, and Mr. Goodman, or invite either of those two Gentlemen to give a false Evidence against the Prisoner at the Bar? It does not appear that there was any Injury done by him to them, to provoke them to it; so that it could be for nothing but for the sake of Truth.

It has been further said on the behalf of Mr. Cook, That he abhorred the French, and any Invasion upon his Country, and the like: It is a Matter that is easily said; and it has been said by others that have been in the same Place where he now stands, That they hated all Plots, and they might punish them if ever they caught them. But these are only Sayings, and nothing else. If there can be any Constructions made of the Evidence given by these two Witnesses, that does not directly prove the Indictment, then the Prisoner ought to be acquitted: But if there can be no other Construction made, but only, That there was a plain Design to send Charnock into France to King James, to persuade him to prevail with the French King, to come and invade us with a Foreign Force: And if our Witnesses are legal Witnesses, (as, I doubt not, my Lords the Judges will tell you they are; if there be no Exception to the Credit of Goodman, but only that he was in such a Design of Poisoning the two Dukes, which is really no Objection of Discredit to his Testimony;) then, with Submission, I think there is no Room left for you, Gentlemen of the Jury, to doubt, but that the Prisoner is as guilty of this Crime laid to his Charge, as any others that have been try'd and condemn'd for the same: And so, Gentlemen, I leave it to you.

L. C. J. Treby. Mr. Conyers, and Mr. Cowper, will you say any Thing to this Matter?

Mr. Conyers, and Mr. Cowper. No, my Lord, we submit it entirely to your Lordship's Direction; we have done on all Sides, we think.

L. C. J. Treby. Gentlemen of the Jury, the Prisoner at the Bar, Mr. Cook, stands indicted here for High-Treason; there are laid in the Indictment two Sorts of Treason; the one is Compassing and Imagining the Death of the King, the other is adhering to the King's Enemies. The Evidence to prove these Treasons seems to be joint; for, as to that of Compassing and Imagining the King's Death, as well as to the other, the Overt-Acts are meeting and consulting about the Treason, and then agreeing and resolving to invite and procure an Invasion from France, and to meet that Invasion with an Insurrection here. And the Evidence is apply'd entirely to prove these Acts.

Gentlemen, that these are proper Overt-Acts of Compassing the King's Death, I need not inform you, the Law is very well known; and the Prisoner's own Counsel do acknowledge, that these are sufficient Overt-Acts of Compassing and Imagining the King's Death: So that all which they defend him by is, the Improbability of the Testimony given against him.

Now, Gentlemen, you are to consider and weigh well the Evidence that has been given. By Law, it is true, as they observe, there must be two Witnesses. Here is no Defect of Number; that's acknowledg'd too, here are two Witnesses; but the Question is, Whether here be two Witnesses that deserve Credit, and upon whose Testimony you can find that the Prisoner is guilty? The Witnesses, Gentlemen, are Mr. Porter and Mr. Goodman.

First, For the Matter of their Testimony, it is positive from them both; that you'll do well to observe. Mr. Porter tells you, That in May last, (which is now just a Twelvemonth) there was a Meeting of eight Persons, that is, my Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Freind, Mr. Charnock, Mr. Cook the Prisoner at the Bar, and the Witness himself, Mr. Porter; and this was at the King's-Head Tavern in Leaden-hall-street, and there these Eight dined, and this was in order to consult about an Invasion, together with an Insurrection intended to be made for the Restoring of the late King. After Dinner comes in Mr. Goodman, he says, and then they pursued this Consultation, and came to a Resolution to send Mr. Charnock into France, and the Message was agreed upon which he should carry; and he was to go to the late King, and solicit him to obtain 10,000 Soldiers from the French King, whereof 8000 should be Foot, 1000 Horse, and 1000 Dragoons. These were to make up the 10,000 Men to invade this Kingdom. And they resolved also, when this Force should land, they should meet and assist this Invasion with a joint Force, that should consist of 2000 Horse. And to acquaint and assure him of this, was the Message. But, he says, That Mr. Charnock was very cautious in it, and would not presently go upon this Errand, but he would have further Assurance that they were in earnest, and would make good what they did send him to propose, therefore he would have a second Meeting; and a second Meeting was had, and that was at Mrs. Mountjoy's Tavern, and there they did renew the same Resolution; and there were present my Lord of Aylesbury, Sir William Parkyns, Sir John Fenwick, Sir John Freind, Mr. Charnock, the Prisoner at the Bar, and himself; he does not know or remember whether my Lord Montgomery, or Mr. Goodman was there. He says, Mr. Charnock did accordingly go into France, and he did return and bring back King James's Thanks to them, but their Desire could not be comply'd with; and he had his Share of the Compliments.

Now comes Mr. Goodman, and he says, That about the same Time, viz. Mid-May, Mr. Porter acquainted him, there would be a Meeting of some of King James's Friends, at this Tavern in Leaden-hall-street. He says, That he did tell Mr. Porter, he doubted he should not be there at Dinner, but he would come as soon as he could after Dinner; and according to Appointment, he did come after Dinner, and there was this Consultation and Resolution that Mr. Porter speaks of, and says, That Mr. Charnock afterwards told him, he had been in France with the late King, and brought back the same Answer that Mr. Porter speaks of; and he had the Honour of Thanks from the late King too.

Gentlemen, I must observe one Thing to you, which does go very much towards the Confirming what these Witnesses say, and that is the Agreement in their Testimonies, tho' they were examin'd apart at the Desire of the Prisoner: You will find they agree in these several Circumstances, in the Time, that it was this Time twelve-months; in the Place, that it was at this Tavern; in the Number of Persons that were there, which was Eight before Mr. Goodman came in; in the Number of Horse, Foot, and Dragoons that were to be brought from France, and in those Horse that were to meet them here: and besides, in those Words of Discourse upon the Consultation and the Resolution. And there is one Circumstance more in which they do agree, and which is very particular: That when they came to deliver their Consent to this Message that Mr. Charnock was to carry, the rest sat, and Mr. Cook the Prisoner did kneel upon the Chair, and lean'd upon the Table. And this both of them do agree in. And after all the many Questions ask'd in their separate Examination, I do not find they disagree in any Part of their Evidence. So that, Gentlemen, there can remain no Question now, but whether these two Witnesses are Men of Credit? or, whether there has been oppos'd to them any such Evidence as will make you believe, that (if not both) at least one of them has forsworn himself? They do produce nothing against Mr. Porter, whatsoever may have been produc'd at former Trials against his Credit: Perhaps what has been before has satisfied the Objectors, and there is nothing appears against his Credit; but he is not only a competent, but a very clear, good, credible, and undoubted Witness.

But against Mr. Goodman they offer several Things, which they say amount to a violent Presumption that he is not to be look'd upon as a credible Witness: And first, they produce a Record of a Conviction upon an Information against him, for attempting to poison two Noble Dukes: This he was convicted of, and fin'd 1000*l.* and ordered to find Sureties for his good Behaviour during his Life. But to this it is answered, that it appears in the same Record, that Satisfaction was acknowledged of the 1000*l.* and all the rest of the Judgment the very next Term, and he was forthwith discharged, and that without paying the Money, which ('twas observ'd) the Prisoner's Counsel said Mr. Goodman was not able to pay at that Time, no more than he could 20,000*l.* and thereupon the King's Counsel say, that the Government was convinc'd that he was wrong'd by a causeless Prosecution, and the Evidence against him was found not to be credible. And besides, Mr. Goodman stands pardoned by several Acts of Pardons, as well as other Subjects.

Then they produce one Edwards, who is a Prisoner here, and committed for Suspicion of High-Treason, and for Treasonable Practices: He is, no doubt of it, a Witness for all that: For that is but an Accusation upon him, and does not take away his Credit. He tells you of a Discourse that he had with Mr. Goodman, and that Goodman ask'd him when the Prisoner was to be try'd; and he told him he wou'd be try'd such a Day; and when it was ask'd what it was for, it was answer'd, Not for the Assassination, but for sending Mr. Charnock into France. He ask'd then who were the Witnesses against him? Mr. Goodman said, Mr. Porter and himself. And further said, That he understood that Mr. Cook had sworn against him (though he would give an Account of nobody else) and had no Pardon, and either he must hang, or himself. And then he talk'd lightly of the Business of Hanging, and said it was a foolish Thing to be hang'd, for all that People would say, was, that such an one hang'd himself, or dy'd bravely. This indeed is a Sort of Discourse as if Mr. Goodman did apprehend himself in Danger from Mr. Cook's Evidence; and yet I cannot see that it does at all falsify the Evidence of Mr. Goodman: He may be a true Witness, and yet he might say he was to give Evidence against Mr. Cook, and it was in Mr. Cook's Power to give Evidence against him, and that truly; and if both were in the Guilt, they were in Danger of one another. But for a further Answer, the King's Counsel have produc'd Mr. De la Rue, who says, That he knew Mr. Edwards, and that he was a Scotchman, and reputed Chaplain to the Viscount of Dundee; that he went formerly by the Name of Douglas, and by that Name he was set down and described in the List that Mr. Charnock sent to Captain Porter; and to that Name he answer'd in the Presi-Yard lately. Now it is certain, that Mr. Charnock's putting of his Name in that List, is no Evidence of his being guilty in Mr. Charnock's Treason. But his going by two Names doth justly lay him under some Suspicion. But the Evidence that the Prisoner seems to rely upon most, is what Evidence has been produced against Mr. Goodman in that Point of Fact, by the Master and the two Drawers; the first of the Drawers Name was Crawford, and he does tell you, that about twelve Months ago there was this Company at Dinner there: My Lord of Aylesbury, my Lord Montgomery, Sir John Freind, Sir John Fenwick, Sir William Parkyns, Captain Porter, Mr. Charnock, and the Prisoner, though he did not then know his Name, or the Name of one or two more of them. I observe, by the Way, that his Testimony so far does verify theirs, that there were eight of them there, but he says he did not see Mr. Goodman there, nor any but those that dined there. And my Lord of Aylesbury went away, as he thinks, about Four o'clock. He cannot say that the Prisoner was there, or was gone at that Time before Mr. Goodman came in; for he did not see Mr. Goodman there at all, he was not in the Room all the Time, but he was to and fro attending till my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away in a Coach that was called, and when they were gone, the rest of the Company staid there a good while; being urged to tell how long, at last he said it was dark; and that agrees with Mr. Porter, who says, it was about nine o'clock when they went away. He says he was there once or twice after my Lord of Aylesbury went away, but he never saw Mr. Goodman that he remembers at all, till last Saturday, in all his Life. As to this, the King's Counsel say, that it is only a negative Evidence, and in which a Man cannot be absolutely positive, but can only speak according to his Observation and Memory, which might not be perfect, and Mr. Goodman might be there in the mean time of his going in and out: That is possible; and so it must be left to you to consider of it.

Then there is Huntley the other Drawer, and he says my Lord of Aylesbury went away about that Time, and that he did not see Mr. Goodman there at all, nor ever in his Life till now; neither does he remember that any Body came to them after Dinner, and if any fresh Man had then come in, he thinks he should (going often in to them) have known him; and says, that he attended this Company only: And he had seen Sir John Freind and Sir William Parkyns there before.

Then Mr. Cook, the Master of the House, was produced, and he names all the eight Persons that did dine there; and so far he confirms the King's Evidence: He thinks that my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away privately (as it seems they had come) in a Hackney-Coach, and that it was about Four o'clock; and he says, he did not see Mr. Goodman there, and he does not know that he ever saw him till now: But when he was cross-examined by the King's Counsel, he does acknowledge that he might possibly come in after Dinner, and before my Lord of Aylesbury went away, and he not see him, because he was not there all the Time; he says, Sir John Freind used to dine at his House, and came to his House once a Week; and he had seen some of the rest, but they did not frequent his House as Sir John Freind did: He says, the Company din'd about Two o'clock, and the last of them staid till about Eight or Nine, and that the Door was shut as is usual when Company is in a Room, but nobody was forbid to come there.

But to establish the Credit of the Evidence on the King's Part, they did produce Mr. Goodman and Mr. Porter again: Mr. Goodman does acknowledge so far to be true, that my Lord of Aylesbury went away first; but says, that himself was not wholly a Stranger to this House, for he had dined there four or five Times with Sir John Freind; and particularly one Time, he being sick, and asking for some Brandy, the Master of the House said he would help him to some of the best in England, and Mr. Goodman would have bought some of him. But the Master seems not to own that, and says, he does not remember any Thing of it.

But then comes Mr. Porter again, and he says positively, that Mr. Goodman was there, and that he did speak with the Company, and complimented my Lord of Aylesbury when he went away, and went Part of the Way towards the Stairs with him; and he does well remember it by this Token, that when Mr. Porter was told Mr. Goodman was below, he mentioned him in the Company as a trusty Man, that was fit for the Conversation, and then Mr. Porter went and fetch'd him up; and Mr. Goodman was there near two Hours, and they discoursed all this Matter in that Time, in the Presence of the Prisoner and the rest; and he says it was about six o'clock before my Lord of Aylesbury and my Lord Montgomery went away, and then there was Opportunity enough for this Discourse and Consult that they speak of.

The Prisoner has offered another Sort of Evidence: First, the Confidence of his own Innocence, that he was abroad three Weeks after this Conspiracy was discovered; and they have produced Mr. Treganna, Mr. Peachy, and Mr. Nicholls, who prove that he never absconded, but was abroad, and appeared openly (for three Weeks after) till such Time as he was taken. This the King's Counsel say is no Proof that he is not Guilty, and their Evidence untrue. They say he might have a Confidence, and the rather because he is not charged with the Assassination; for at that Time these Witnesses speak of, nothing was discovered and publick but the Assassination; for it was before Sir John Freind's Trial; and then was the great Discovery of the Secret of the Invasion.

Then he shews farther as to his Conversation, that he is a Man of a very sober Life, never was known to swear, that he drinks but little, and is a Godly Man; and often says his Prayers. As to that, the King's Counsel on the other Side tell you, that has been pretended to by other People too; and the Question is not about Religion, but this Fact that you are now to try. Whether he be so Religious, or no, as he pretends, or whether he be sincere in his Devotion, that is not so much the Matter now; but the Question is, Whether he has offended in this Kind as he stands accused? They produce a Gentleman, one Mr. Hamond, and he says that he is a very Conscientious Man, and particularly is a great Lover of his Country; and he has often heard him declare a Detestation of an Invasion by a French Force, and wish Success to the Fleet; but that which he remembers chiefly, was about the Time of the Discovery of this Plot. The King's Counsel answer to this, that a Man may use such kind of Expressions, perhaps, to cover his Guilt; and in the Reply to Sir Bartholomew Shower's Observations, it was taken notice of by Mr. Solicitor, (what we all cannot but remember) that the like Evidence was given as to Sir John Freind, that he did detest an Invasion, and was present at the Common-Prayer when King William was pray'd for, and declar'd against Plots; and that if they catch'd him in the Corn they might put him in the Pound. These Things a Man might say, and it is the lightest Evidence that can be given, being Discourses out of Men's own Mouths, who will never proclaim their own Guilt; and therefore it is the weakest Defence that can be offered. But, Gentlemen, you are to consider the other Evidence that has been produced by the Prisoner, given by several Witnesses, and who are upon their Oaths now as well as the King's Witnesses. And his Counsel say their Witnesses, but particularly the three upon whom they chiefly rely, have no Objection made out against them; and no Man's Testimony ought to be presumed to be false. And it must be taken notice of, that they can speak only according to their Belief, grounded on their Observation and Memory, that they did not, so far as they observed, or remember, see Mr. Goodman there, as 'twas most probable they should if he had been. But 'tis possible they might overlook, or forget; the rather for that they were not of the Company, but in and out, up and down; and Mr. Goodman was not there at Dinner, when their Attendance was fix'd and constant.

It ought to be considered also, that here are several Circumstances, some of which seem very pregnant. It is agreed on all Hands, that the Prisoner dined there with those other seven Persons, concerning Four of whom we must conclude nothing; but concerning Three of them we in this Court may take notice, they are Attainted of High-Treason, and so it is evident that the Prisoner was for a long Time a Companion of three Traitors, and had a Conversation with them. I do not find that he had any Occasion to be there; nor any of the rest of the Company. Concerning my Lord of Aylesbury, indeed, it is said he proposed to treat about a Hoghead of White Wine. But that seems to be casual, and not the End of his Coming, and Dining with this Company there. But be that how it will, that relates to his Lordship alone. But for the others, I do not find they do pretend any Occasion of Meeting there; and therefore it leaves it the more suspicious: And 'tis the more so, because it was managed so privately and cautiously. They were not attended according to their Qualities. The Lords went away together in a Hackney-Coach that was called, as they had come thither in another. The rest thought fit to stay there till it was dark; and as soon as it was so, went away. There was some extraordinary Cause for all this. It did import the Prisoner to shew, that it was for some good Cause and Purpose.

And further, it is observable that this House was a Place which, as the Master says, none of this Company did use to resort to except Sir John Freind; which makes it probable (this being a House that Sir John Freind frequented, and none of the others) that He bespoke this Place, and brought the rest thither: And if it were so, that makes it more probable that there was such a Treason there to be hatch'd, as is evidenced by the King's Witnesses; for you may remember, and it appears by the Record in this Court, that Sir John Freind was indicted and attainted (not for the Assassination, but) for the Treason for which the Prisoner is now a Trying, an Invasion that was to be supported with an Insurrection. Now if Sir John Freind was chiefly acquainted with this House, and brought this Company together, it is very probable it was about this Business which Sir John Freind was so concerned in. And that he is Attainted for it, appears upon the Record before us; which should be read; but that the Prisoner's Counsel admit it, and are so far satisfied in it, that they won't Arraign the Verdict; nay, they did acknowledge that there was a Plot; and there was no Doubt of it, there was such a Plot.

Now then, Gentlemen, here it is certainly proved by these two Witnesses, (and not gain-said by the Prisoner's own Witnesses) that there was such a Meeting, and that the Prisoner was there; and they both have positively sworn that this Treason was committed there. You have heard what has been objected to their Credit; they have delivered their Testimony upon their Oaths, and so, Gentlemen, you are upon your Oaths: If you are satisfied, and can take it upon your Consciences, that these two Witnesses are, or any one of them is, (if such Distinction can possibly be made in this Case) then you are to acquit the Prisoner; but if you are satisfied, and think they have sworn true, you are to find him Guilty.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. Nay, if one be forsworn, both are; for the Evidence is intirely in all Parts the same; and if Mr. Goodman be perjured, Mr. Porter is so too.

Sir B. Shower. Forsworn and Perjured are hard Words; we only say mistaken.

Mr. Just. Rokeby. Well, that Objection goes to one as well as t'other.

L. C. J. Treby. It must be so, since they speak of the same joint Matter, viz. their being together in Company. If Mr. Porter says true, when he swears that Mr. Goodman was there with him and the rest, Mr. Goodman must say true when he swears that he was there with Mr. Porter and the rest. There was one Thing that I forgot: Sir B. Shower observed, that it might be an Invention of Captain Porter, because he fixeth it in Point of Time to the Month of May, that he does not say it was in April; for that then it would be within the Pardon, which extends to April 29, last Year; nor would he lay it in June, for then he was in Newgate, and others of them were dispersed by reason of a Riot committed in Drury-Lane; and this Sir Bartholomew Shower alledges, was a Piece of Skill and Contrivance: But, really, this is a Piece of Ingenuity in himself: For, besides that the King's Witnesses affirm positively that it was in May, and remember it by a certain Token, viz. That it was within a very few Days after the King went beyond Sea, one or two of the Prisoner's Witnesses (Crawford I am sure) did say that this Meeting was this Time Twelve-month, and you know we are now near Mid-May.

Mr. Serj. Darnal. If you believe our Drawers for part, you must believe them for all.

Mr. Att. Gen. No, not so: My Lord speaks only where they concur with our Evidence. It were strange to expect we should disbelieve, or doubt what the Witnesses on both Sides affirm to be true: But I do not think it would be to the Advantage of the Prisoner, if what his Counsel proposeth were agreed to, viz. That the Drawers (and their Master too) should be believed for all they say, provided equally the King's Witnesses should, in like manner, be believed for what they say. For the main thing controverted, is, Whether Mr. Goodman were at this Meeting? These Witnesses for the Prisoner say, they did not see him there; at least they do not remember it. Mr. Porter, and Mr. Goodman himself says, he was there. Now, these Things agreed, and admitted, would make a very consistent clear Evidence, that Mr. Goodman was there, tho' the Master and Drawers did not observe, or do not remember his being there.

[Then an Officer was sworn to keep the Jury, who withdrew to consider of their Verdict, and about Three Quarters of an Hour after returned into Court.]

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, answer to your Names. Henry Sherbrook.

Mr. Sherbrook. Here. And so of the rest, &c.

Cl. of Arr. Are you all agreed of your Verdict?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Who shall say for you?

Jury. Our Foreman.

Cl. of Arr. Set Peter Cook to the Bar. (Which was done.) Peter Cook, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Look upon the Prisoner; how say you, Is he Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands Indicted, or Not Guilty?

Foreman. Guilty.

Cl. of Arr. What Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements had he at the Time of the Treason committed, or at any Time since?

Foreman. None to our Knowledge.

Cl. of Arr. Then hearken to your Verdict as the Court has recorded it: You say that Peter Cook is Guilty of the High-Treason whereof he stands Indicted, but that he had no Goods or Chattels, Lands or Tenements at the Time of the High-Treason committed, or at any Time since to your Knowledge; and so you say all?

Jury. Yes.

Cl. of Arr. Gentlemen, the Court dismisses you, and thanks you for your Service.

(Then the Court adjourned 'till Five o'clock in the Evening.)

POST MERIDIEM.

About Six o'clock, the Court being by Proclamation resum'd, the Prisoner convicted was brought to the Bar in order to Judgment.

Cl. of Arr. Peter Cook, Hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thou stand'st convicted of High-Treason, for compassing and imagining the Death of his Majesty King William the Third, and for adhering to the King's Enemies: What can'st thou say for thyself, why the Court should not give thee Judgment to die according to the Law?

Cook. My Lord Mayor, my Eyes are very bad, therefore I desire your Lordship would be pleased to take this Paper, and that it may be read.

Cl. of Arr. Have you any Thing to say in Arrest of Judgment?

Cook. I desire my Paper may be read.

[It was handed up to the Court, and then delivered down to Mr. Attorney General, and the King's Counsel, but not openly read.]

Mr. Recorder. [Sir Salathiel Lovell.] Mr. Cook, the Court have read your Paper you sent up, and have communicated it to the King's Counsel; if you have any Thing to move in an Arrest of Judgment, this is your Time, and we will hear you; but as for any Representation of your Case to any others, that must be considered of afterwards; you are now called to your Judgment.

Cook. I did not know that I might offer any thing afterwards; but if your Lordships think fit to communicate that to my Lord Justices, I submit it to you.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Cook, there is nothing appears upon this Paper that is Matter of Law, and so not serviceable to you now, and therefore what you desire in it the Court will consider of afterwards.

Cook. I do not understand the Law, my Lord, but I have heard the Court ought to be of Counsel for the Prisoner, and I desire I may not suffer by my Ignorance.

Mr. Recorder. I declare it, for my part, I know nothing that you can have any Advantage of in Arrest of Judgment; if I did, you should not lose the Benefit of it, and you have had your Counsel assigned, who have pleaded for you without restraint; and if there had been any Matter of Law that would have availed you in the Arrest of Judgment, no doubt they would have laid hold of that Advantage for you.

Cook. I can't tell, my Lord, what is Matter of Law.

Mr. Att. Gen. Your Lordship observes, they took all the Objections that they could to the Indictment, but there was none that they could fix.

Cl. of Arr. Then, Crier, make Proclamation. (Which was done on both Sides of the Court.)

Crier. O yes. All manner of Persons are commanded to keep Silence while Judgment is in giving, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

Cook. My Lord, may I have my Paper again?

Mr. Recorder. If you think it may be any Service to you to leave it with the Court, you may do so; or if you desire it, you shall have it again.

Cook. I desire your Lordship to keep it.

Mr. Recorder. I will receive it, and it shall not be buried, I assure you.

Cook. I don't hear what the Court says.

Mr. Recorder. You say you did not hear what was said to you: If you desire to have your Paper again, you shall have it; but if you desire to have it communicated Above, the Court will consider it, and take care of that too.

Cook. I desire your Lordship would do it.

Then the Recorder proceeded to give Judgment.

Mr. Cook, I think it useful to the Publick, and also at this Time to you, to observe, That the Reign of the late King James was, throughout, one intire Delign and Project form'd, in conjunction with the French King, totally to subvert our Religion, Laws, and Liberties; which grew so apparent to the Subjects of these Nations, in so many Instances of fatal Consequence, manag'd in such a Method, and advanc'd so far, that the People of these Kingdoms, of all Qualities, Ranks, and Degrees, did find it absolutely necessary for the Preservation of themselves and the neighbouring Nations now in Alliance with us, to pray in Aid of the then Pr. of Orange, as a Person not only nearly allied to this Crown, but also intirely in the Interest of these Kingdoms, and those neighbouring Princes, and Countries that lay exposed to the Violence and ambitious Insults of France. And the Love which that noble Prince did bear, not only to us but to our Neighbours also, disposed him to embrace that Invitation; upon whose Arrival here, that Predecessor, from Motives that were invisible, declin'd the Kingdom and the Government, and left the People to themselves; whereupon his present Majesty was necessarily and rightfully placed upon that Throne he so well deserved: And this is now that King, for whose Preservation all good People have associated, and spare neither Lives nor Treasure to support and to continue in the Government; and this is that King whom you have traitorously conspired, not only to dethrone, but also to destroy; and this is that People that you would have to swim in Blood, and lose their Religion, Liberty, and Property. These Matters need a History to relate at large; I only touch them shortly, to move good Men to rejoice in their Deliverance, and to move you seriously to reflect upon the Heinousness of your Crime.

Mr. Cook, you are an English Man, and must needs know, that in this Place we frequently condemn to Death Clippers, Coiners, Thieves, and Robbers, and other such like Criminals, and that justly and necessarily too, for the Preservation of the Innocent, and for the common Good. Of what Condemnation must you, and such as you, be worthy then, who have so horridly endeavour'd and design'd the fatal Ruin and Destruction of your own native Country, and to render your Fellow-Subjects a miserable Prey, and at the best to become Slaves and Vassals to a foreign Prince?

Let me also mind you, that nothing is more sure, than that after this, you must receive a Judgment in another World; and if that pass against you too, that Sentence will be most Terrible, and your Sufferings without End: And therefore I do advise you to employ the few Days you have yet to live in Preparation for your future Happiness, which cannot be duly done without a full Confession of this, as well as other Crimes you have been guilty of: I therefore charge it to you as your Duty, and leave it with you at your utmost Peril, that you honestly and faithfully discover all you know of this inhuman and traitorous Conspiracy, and all the Persons that you do know to be guilty of it: This will be the greatest Service you can do in this World, and will be the best preparatory Step that you can take towards a better.

And, Sir,

There now remains no more for me to say, but to pronounce that Sentence on you which the Law directs: And that is this:

That you, Peter Cook, be taken hence to the Place from whence you come, and thence be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution, where you are to be hanged by the Neck, and cut down before you be dead; that your Bowels be taken out, and your Privy-Members cut from your Body, and both burnt in your Sight; that your Head be cut off, and your Body divided into four Quarters, which Head and Quarters are to be at the King's Disposal; and God Almighty have Mercy upon your Soul.

Cook. I beg, if your Lordship please, that I may have my Relations and Friends come to see me, and some Divines, the better to prepare me for another World.

Mr. Recorder. Mr. Cook, if you'll give the Names of those that you would have come to you to the Officer, Care shall be taken in it; and you will not be denied any reasonable Helps that may be had for your Preparation for Eternity.

Mr. Att. Gen. It is not fit he should be deny'd any reasonable Help; but in the mean time there is Reason for the Government to be cautious, upon the Account of what has notoriously pass'd in the Case of some others.

Mr. Recorder. If he give in the Names, it will be consider'd of, and Care taken that nothing be done but what is reasonable and safe.

Then the Prisoner was taken from the Bar, and the Court proceeded to what was remaining of the Business of the Sessions.

He was afterwards pardon'd, upon Condition of transporting himself, and never returning any more to England.

CLX. The Trial of ALEXANDER KNIGHTLEY, at the King's-Bench, for High-Treason, May 20, 1696. Paschæ 8 WILL. III.

Thursday, April 30, 1696.

THIS Day the Keeper of Newgate brought to the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench Alexander Knightley, by Virtue of a Writ of Habeas Corpus, issuing out of that Court for that Purpose, to be arraigned upon an Indictment of High-Treason found against him at the Sessions of Oyer and Terminer, holden for the County of Middlesex; which Indictment by Writ of Certiorari was removed into the King's-Bench. The Return of the Habeas Corpus was delivered, and then the Prisoner was arraigned thus.

Cl. of Ar. Alexander Knightley, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thou standest indicted by the Name of Alexander Knightley, late of the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middlesex, Gent. For that you, not having the Fear of God in your Heart, nor weighing the Duty of your Allegiance, but being moved and seduced by the Instigation of the Devil, as a false Traitor against the most Serene, most Illustrious, and most Excellent Prince, our Sovereign Lord William the Third, by the Grace of God of England, Scotland, France and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, &c. Your supreme, true, rightful, lawful and undoubted Sovereign Lord, the cordial Love and true and due Obedience, Fidelity, and Allegiance, which every Subject of our said Lord the King that now is, towards him our said Lord the King should bear, and of Right ought to bear, withdrawing, and utterly to extinguish, intending and contriving, and with all your Force purposing and designing the Government of this Kingdom of England, under him our said Lord the King that now is, of Right, duly, happily, and very well established, altogether to subvert, change, and alter, as also the same our Lord the King to Death and final Destruction to put and bring, and his faithful Subjects, and the Freemen of this Kingdom of England, into intolerable and most miserable Slavery to Lewis the French King to subdue and intral; the Tenth Day of February, in the Seventh Year of the Reign of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, and divers other Days and Times as well before as after, at the Parish of St. Paul Covent-Garden, aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, falsely, maliciously, devilishly, and traitorously you did compass, imagine, and contrive, purpose, design, and intend our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is to slay, kill, and murder, and a miserable Slaughter among the faithful Subjects of our said Lord the King, throughout this whole Kingdom of England, to make and cause; and your said most wicked, most impious, and devilish Treasons, and traitorous Compassings, Contrivances and Purposes aforesaid to fulfil, perfect, and bring to Effect, you the said Alexander Knightley afterwards, to wit, the same Tenth Day of February, in the Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, there and elsewhere in the same County, falsely, maliciously, advisedly, secretly, traitorously, and with Force and Arms, with very many other Traitors to the Jurors unknown, did meet, propose, treat, consult, consent, and agree him our said Lord the King that now is, by lying in wait and deceit, to assassinate, kill, and murder; and that execrable, horrid, and detestable Assassination and Killing the sooner to execute and perpetrate, afterwards, to wit, the same Day and Year, and divers other Days and Times, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, traitorously you did treat, propose, and consult with those Traitors, of the Ways, Manner, and Means, and the Time and Place where, when, how, and in what Manner, our said Sovereign Lord the King, so by lying in wait, might be slain and killed; and that you did consent, agree, and assent with the same Traitors, that forty Men on Horseback, or thereabouts, of whom you the said Alexander Knightley were to be one, with Guns, Muskets, and Pistols, charg'd with Gunpowder and leaden Bullets, and with Swords, Rapiers, and other Arms armed, should lie in wait and be in ambush, the same our Lord the King in his Coach being when he should go abroad to attack; and that a certain and competent Number of those Men so arm'd, upon the Guards of our said Lord the King, him then attending, and being with him should set upon, and should fight with them and subdue them, whilst others of the same Men so armed, him our said Lord the King should assassinate, kill, slay, and murder; and you the said Alexander Knightley, your Treasons and all your traitorous Intentions, Designs, and Contrivances aforesaid to execute, perform, fulfil, and bring to effect, afterwards, to wit, the aforesaid Tenth Day of February, in the Seventh Year aforesaid, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, diverse Horses, and very many Arms, Guns, Muskets, Rapiers and Swords, and other Weapons, Ammunition, and warlike Things, and military Instruments, falsely, maliciously, secretly, and traitorously you did obtain, buy, gather together, and procure, and to be bought, obtain'd, gather'd together, and procur'd, did cause, with that Intent to use, employ, and bestow them in and about the detestable, horrid, and execrable Assassination, Killing, and Murder of our said Lord the King that now is, as aforesaid; and the same Premises the more safely and surely to execute, do, and perform, you the said Alexander Knightley, with one Edward King, late for High-Treason, in contriving and conspiring the Death of our said Lord the King that now is, duly convicted and attainted, by the Consent and Assent of divers of the Traitors and Conspirators aforesaid, in the said Tenth Day of February, in the Seventh Year aforesaid, traitorously did go and come to the Place proposed, where such intended Assassination, Killing, and Murder of our said Lord the King, by lying in wait, should be done, performed, and committed, to view, search, and observe the Conveniency and Fitness of the same Place for such lying in wait, Assassination, and Killing there to be made, performed, and committed; and that Place so being seen and observed, afterwards, to wit, the same Day and Year, your Observations thereof to some of the said Traitors and Conspirators you did relate and impart, to wit, at the Parish aforesaid, in the County aforesaid, against the Duty of your Allegiance, and against the Peace of our said Sovereign Lord the King that now is, his Crown and Dignity, and against the Form of the Statute in this Case made and provided. How say'st thou, Alexander Knightley, art thou Guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or Not Guilty?

Knightley. Not Guilty.

Cl. of Ar. Culpit, How will you be try'd?

Knightley. By God and my Country.

Cl. of Ar. God send you a good Deliverance!

Knightley. With Submission to your Lordship, I did not expect, in this weak Condition that I am in, to be brought at this Time to the Bar; That having taken me off extremely from the Application that I should have otherwise made of myself to my Defence; but seeing there is no Mercy to be had here, I will endeavour to have Patience, and undergo my Fate as well as I can.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Knightley, you have no Reason to find Fault; for when I was acquainted you were ill, and desired a Physician, I ordered one to be sent to you; and Yesterday in the Afternoon you sent Word you were so sick, that you could not be brought hither To-day; but your Doctor was with me last Night, and upon Discourse with him, I did apprehend you were not so ill, but that, especially considering the Weather, you might very safely be brought to the Bar To-day.

Knightley. The Gentleman that brought me the Copy of the Indictment found me very ill, and I have been ill ever since this Day Seven-night.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, now let us see what Time we shall appoint for the Trial.

Mr. Att. Gen. [Sir Thomas Trevor.] When your Lordship pleases to appoint.

L. C. J. Holt. I think you cannot try it till Wednesday Fortnight.

Mr. Clark. That Day is free, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. It being upon a Certiorari, the Venire facias must be returnable upon a common Day; and there must be fifteen Days between the Teste and the Return.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it not be Tuesday, then, that the Jury appear?

L. C. J. Holt. You cannot have it before Wednesday, for that is the Return-day.

Mr. Clark. Tuesday Fortnight is appointed for the Trial between Pride and the Earl of Bath.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then it must be upon Wednesday, for there must be fifteen Days between the Teste and the Return.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, take back your Prisoner, and bring him here again on Wednesday Fortnight; you shall have a Rule for it.

(Then the Prisoner was carried back.)

Die Mercurii Vicesimo Maii, 1696. In Banco Regis.
Dominus Rex versus Knightley.

THIS Day being appointed for the Trial of the Prisoner, he was brought to Westminster-Hall, and the Jury were call'd over as soon as the Court appeared in the Hall, and the Defaulters recorded; and about Eleven of the Clock the Prisoner was brought to the Bar.

Clerk of the Crown. Alexander Knightley, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Those good Men that thou shalt hear called, and personally appear, are to pass between our Sovereign Lord the King and thee, upon the Trial of thy Life and Death: If therefore thou wouldst challenge them, or any of them, thy Time is to speak unto them as they come to the Book to be sworn, before they be sworn.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Knightley, I perceive you have a Desire to speak something; let us hear what you have to say.

Knightley. I humbly beg your Lordship's Leave, that I may speak before the Jury be called. What I have to say, I beg I may have your Leave to read, because I have a bad Memory.

(Reads.) MY Lord, I hope to save the Jury and the Witnesses against me a great deal of Trouble, and design to take up very little of your Lordship's Time: But in the first Place, I think myself obliged to thank your Lordship for your great Indulgence, in granting me so much Time between my Arraignment and Trial; the greatest Part of which I have employed to appear before the great Tribunal of Heaven.

I speak in the Face of the World here, That I am convinced I cannot hope to be happy hereafter, without a just Abhorrence of, and a sincere Repentance for that Crime for which I here stand indicted.

And since Confession is an essential Part of Repentance, I do acknowledge I was to have been concern'd in some Part of the barbarous Assassination, and was unhappily surpris'd into a Consent to act in it, though in my Heart I did abominate the Fact as much as any Man living; but under some honourable and fair Pretences I was drawn in at first, and then of a sudden became so far engaged, that by a mistaken Notion of Honour, I thought I could not retreat without the Infamy of Cowardice.

My Lord, I humbly crave your Lordship's Permission to acquaint you, how that some Time since I was brought before some of the Lords of his Majesty's Majesty's most Honourable Privy-Council, where I do assure your Lordship, I did freely own and fully discover my being concerned in that horrid Design: and I here openly confess the same, with that Sorrow and Repentance as becomes a Man of Honour and Conscience.

My Lord, there is one Circumstance particular in my Case, I most humbly beg leave to insist upon, and urge to your Lordship in my behalf; which is, that it was upon my Confession (as I conceive) that Mr. Harris, now a principal Evidence against me, was first discovered; so that my own Confession has been a great Means to take away my Life.

I expect after a few Words now in this solemn Court to receive from your Lordship the Sentence due upon the Conviction, from my own Mouth, of a Crime for which I cannot in Modesty hope, so much above my Deserts, the King's most Gracious Pardon; yet the Greatness of my Offence does not rob me of all Thoughts of Mercy, whilst I throw myself absolutely and entirely at his Majesty's Feet for it; and I humbly beg of your Lordship as a Privy-Councillor, that you would represent my unfortunate Case to their Excellencies the Lords Justices of England, as an Object of his Majesty's Favour.

And now, my Lord, I shall not detain your Lordship and the Court any longer, but my next Words convict and lay me under the just Sentence of Death: So to my Indictment I beg Leave to plead Guilty, and throw myself entirely upon the King's Mercy, and do desire my former Plea to my Indictment may be withdrawn.

Cl. of the Crown. Thou hast been indicted and arraigned of High-Treason in compassing and imagining the Death and Destruction of the King; how say'st thou, Alexander Knightley, art thou Guilty of the High-Treason whereof thou standest indicted, or Not Guilty?

Knightley. Guilty, my Lord.

Cl. of the Crown. Art thou content to withdraw thy Plea Not Guilty?

Knightley. Yes, Sir.

Cl. of the Crown. Do you plead to the Indictment Guilty or Not Guilty?

Knightley. I am Guilty.

Mr. Att. Gen. Then, my Lord, we desire, since he relinquishes his Plea of Not Guilty, that you will record his Confession; and since he has confessed the Indictment, we have nothing more to do but wait the Judgment of the Court.

L. C. J. Holt. We shall not give Judgment now.

Mr. Att. Gen. If the Prisoner have any Thing to say for himself, your Lordships, I suppose, will hear him to it.

L. C. J. Holt. But I say, we cannot by the Course of the Court give Judgment now; for after a Person is convicted here, whether by Confession or Verdict, he ought to have four Days from the Time of such Confession or Verdict, to move in Arrest of Judgment, if there be so many Days of the Term remaining; if not, then the longest Time that can be had in the Term is allow'd: In (Trial 74.) Staley's Case it was otherwise practised, Judgment was given the same Day; that was in the Time of the Popish Plot, and is a Case not to be imitated, because not justified by any Precedent before that Time or since; but it has been always observ'd to have four Juridical Days for moving in Arrest of Judgment, if so many remain of the Term.

Die Lunæ Vicesimo Quinto Die Maii, An. Dom. 1696.

Being the last Day of the Term, the Prisoner was brought from Newgate to the King's Bench Bar.

Mr. Att. Gen. If your Lordship please, I desire the Judgment of the Court to be pronounced upon Mr. Knightley upon his Conviction.

Cl. of the Crown. Alexander Knightley, hold up thy Hand. (Which he did.) Thou hast been indicted and arraigned for High-Treason in compassing and imagining the Death of the King, and adhering to the King's Enemies; what can'st thou say for thyself, why Judgment should not be given against thee to die according to the Law?

Knightley. I have nothing more to say, my Lord, than what I have said.

Cl. of the Crown. Crier, make Proclamation for Silence.
(Which was done on both Sides the Court.)

Crier. Oyez: Our Sovereign Lord the King doth fully charges and commands all manner of Persons to keep Silence whilst Judgment is in giving, upon Pain of Imprisonment.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Knightley, You are by your own Confession convicted of High-Treason in designing the Murder of the King, and the Subversion of the whole State of England, in promoting an Invasion from the French, its most antient and inveterate Enemies.

It hath appeared before your Arraignment, not only by the Evidence that hath been given at former Trials, but even by the Signs of the Times and the Manner of some Men's Actions, that there hath been for some Years last past a Train of Plots and Conspiracies against this Government; and when the various Means which the Conspirators did project among themselves for its Ruin proved ineffectual, it was at last resolved among some of the Conspirators to assassinate the King, as the most certain Way of accomplishing their End.

In which Design you were deeply engaged, and was an active Instrument in the carrying it on, being sent to view the Ground on both Sides the Water, and with others that were sent with you reported your Opinion, which was the most convenient Place to attack the King and his Guards.

And though you did, the last Time you were at the Bar, urge by way of Extenuation of your Crime, that you being engaged in the Interest of the late King, and thereby supported, you was surprised into this barbarous Design, which being proposed to you, you thought yourself obliged in Honour to engage in it; which is so far from an Extenuation, that it is an high Aggravation: For Men of honourable Principles, tho' most zealously disposed to the Advancement of any particular Interest, yet always detest the Use of base and vile Means. Therefore when the Assassination of the King was proposed, you had an Opportunity to have retreated with Honour, and might have refused to be further concerned, but you rather pursued this wicked Enterprize with great Zeal.

And tho' you are by your Profession a Roman Catholic, and may for that Reason think that your Crime is mitigated, because you acted in the Behalf of a Prince of your own Religion, which you hoped thereby to introduce: Notwithstanding all which, your Offence is highly aggravated in respect of the Ingratitude and Folly with which it is attended. For there is no English Papist that is Master of any Property, but he is interested in the Preservation of this Government, to which the whole Party of them hath been, and still are continually obliged for its Moderation and Justice; for instead of being exposed to the Severity of those Laws to which they are obnoxious, they have had the same Indulgence in the Enjoyment of their Religion, and the same Protection, and as much Benefit in the Distribution of the Common Justice of the Realm, as any other of the King's Subjects; therefore none of them could ever expect to mend their Condition under a French Domination. But the contrary is foreseen by all considering Men; for the English Papist, as well as Protestant, would have been reduced to a most dismal State, if you had obtained your End.

For it is against all the Rules of Reason, and the Experience of all Ages, to imagine, that the French King would spare English Papists more than Protestants; for it is not Zeal to Religion, or Affection to the Interest of the late King, that hath excited him to invade England, but it's his Pride and Ambition to conquer the Three Kingdoms, and to reduce this to be a Province to France: Indeed the Pretence of restoring the late King, and introducing the Papish Religion, may serve to delude some warm and unwary Zealots to engage in his Assistance, who do not consider, that if they should be successful, they would be as certainly destroyed as others, but with more Disadvantage to themselves. For after they shall have survived the Liberty of their Country, have embroiled their own Hands in their Countrymen's Blood, they will be at the Mercy of their Conqueror, who can never think it his Interest to trust them, but will despise them for being such villainous Traitors to their own Country. Nay, rather, these Englishmen, who by their Courage and Resolution shall endeavour to defend their Country, though they should be unfortunately vanquished, will meet with a much better Reception, for they will have given Assurances that they may be confided in, when the others have by such a wicked Treason given a Demonstration to the contrary.

There being then nothing to be said that can palliate such a Crime as that of which you are convicted; but you having taken a different Course the last Time you were at the Bar from what you took at first, you have relinquished your Plea of Not Guilty, and have confessed the Indictment; I wish out of Charity to your Person, it was as sincere as (I think it) it was prudent in you; for after several Convictions of others that were your Accomplices, you could not be a Stranger to the Evidence upon which they were grounded; you must therefore in all Probability have expected to have undergone the same Fate. If your Confession be a real Effect of your Repentance, you will reap the Advantage of it in the next World; but what Consequence it will have in this, I cannot say: For the Heart of the King is in the Hand of the Almighty, which, as the Rivers of Water, he turneth whithersoever he will. Live therefore for the Time to come in Expectation of a speedy Death, and prepare yourself to appear before another Judgment-Seat; to the making of which important Preparation I shall dismiss you, first discharging the Court of the Duty now incumbent upon it, in giving that Judgment which the Law hath appointed. And the Court doth award,

That you be conveyed from hence to Newgate, the Prison from whence you came, and from thence you are to be drawn upon a Hurdle to Tyburn; where you are to be hanged by the Neck, and while you are alive to be cut down, your Privy-Members are to be cut off, and your Bowels to be cut out of your Body, and burnt in your View; your Head is to be cut off, and your Body is to be divided into four Parts, and your Head and your Quarters are to be disposed where his Majesty shall appoint. And I pray God to have Mercy upon your Soul.

Knightley. My Lord, I am truly sorry for what I have done, and I humbly thank your Lordship and the rest of the Judges for your Favour to me.

Then the Prisoner was carried back to Newgate, and afterwards was graciously pardoned.
